St. Paul's Chapel, St. Louis, Mo., Rev M M Clark

Asbury Chapel, Louisville, Ky., Rev L. Ross

Quinn's Chapel, Louisville, Ky, Rev. A Woodfork

Leavenworth Station, Kansas, Rev. John Turner.

Alton Circuit, Ills., Rev. Page Tyler.
Chester Circuit, Rev B. L. Brooks
Shawneetown Circuit to be supplied
New Orleans' Stations to be supplied
Louisville Missions, Ky., to be supplied
Kentucky Mission to be supplied
Lawrence Mission, Kansas, Rev. J. M Wilkerson.
Jefferson Mission, Mo., Rev. J M Wilkerson.
Wabash " " "

Conference then adjourned to meet in 1863, by singing the Hymn,—

"Father, I dare believe thee merciful and true."

We must not forget to speak of the very excellent arrangement made by Brother Turner and Church, which was to have all the ministers and visiters, and many of the members, to take dinner and supper in the basement story of the church. The table was furnished with everything that could be desired, and equal to any of our hotels. In connexion with this, we wish to say, that a committee of ladies, with Sister Turner (the wife of Rev John Turner) at its head, set a table on the evening of the 3d inst., which reflects great honor upon them. We will mention some of the delicious things, viz.: a variety of pound cakes, sweet meats, peaches and cream, watermelons, canteloupes, mushmelons, &c. Our readers may imagine for a moment that they can just see the luxuries and the taste that the people of St Louis have for the cause of Christ and his ministers The Rev J. P. Campbell, when at Trenton, prompted his people to do likewise during the sitting of the Philadelphia Annual Conference The Missouri Conference is not so large in number, but it should be known that it is largely augmented by their actions I have not been at a more pleasant Conference anywhere. The Lord be praised for his mercies and goodness

MR. EDITOR.—Somehow the hordes of Secesh have made their way so near as to menace this city, and infest Maryland, and the probability is, that before this shall have reached you, they may be in the city of Baltimore. How this can be in the providence of God, I know not, unless, as the Rev. James Lynch once very eloquently, and I now think, appropriately remarked, "That the head of this rebellion was in the South, and its tail in the North, and that God intended to punish the whole as due to its unnumbered crimes," for the contest has been attended with a circumvolution of retreats and re-retreats ever since it commenced

The whole affair appears to be nothing more nor less than a national scourge. To-day we are gaining great victories, to-morrow we are losing, to-day we are taking prisoners, to morrow we are being taken prisoners. To-day we are before Richmond, to-morrow the rebels are before Washington. And thus it is so good a man, and so good a boy, all the time, and the war is no nearer to an end now than when it first began; indeed, the South is stronger now than ever; more disciplined, and more cemented together, in the diabolical traffic

I was noticing yesterday the goddess of Liberty standing at the foot of the Capitol of the United States, with her face directed toward Virginia, as though she were looking at the progress of freedom. Her features appeared to be enlivened with hope, but bearing a physiognomy held by a peculiar anxiety that borders on sadness itself One could hardly but feel, when viewing this noble statue, that the great ensign of this and every other nation's pride, was vacillating between the hope of victory and the fear of despair. But when looking at how all great achievements have been wrought for the elevation of mankind, at any period in the world's history, it seems to be the economy of Providence to disenthrall every perverted principle and violated law of nature, slowly, tediously, and at great length.

For in whatever part of this stupendous universe any violation, in harmony, or abnormity, exists the discordancy and conflicting action of its native operations will grate harshly in her onward career until they shall have been resuscitated by the gradual, but sure process of those immutable ordinary and reactionary forces which are constitutionally warped in its primeval nature, and freedom is one of these grand principles, yea, the chief itself, which shall soon assert its original claims and bid defiance to the hand of oppression.

The people in Washington do not seem to be excited. Almost all believe that the city would be secure though ten hundred thousand rebels harass her suburbs.

Contrabands are coming into the city in great droves, and of all the horrible reports that ever was told, they tell. It appears that many of the contrabands in making their escape, (I speak from what they say) threw their little children into the river and drowned them, to facilitate their flight. And there are two intelligent contrabands sitting down now in my house, who tell me that somewhere near Richmond, Va., there is a large coal mine, where several hundred colored people are at work, very low under ground, and a quantity of combustible materials are prepared and placed in it, and that a cannon is situated at a respectable distance, so that should the Union forces take Richmond, this cannon is to be fired, which will ignite these combustibles and destroy every one in the coal pit. They further believe that it was God's mercy that prevented Gen. McClellan from taking Richmond, for had he taken it, the lives of thousands of colored people would have been instantly destroyed. But it is needless to try to particularise the horrid, hideous, shocking and inconceivable scenes of suffering which are reported by some of these poor dejected sons of humanity Oh God, were I not confident that thy mercy endureth forever, I would despair for my people, but still we ask Thee, O thou Prince of peace, in wrath remember mercy! A few weeks ago, there was a great excitement in this city, which arose from a false apprehension that certain parties were trying to expatriate the contrabands from the country It is to be hoped that equally as high a feeling for these homeless human beings, will animate them to give of their substance, and divide their comforts, and open their doors, so that these almost friendless souls may find shelter, "Let thy love speak through thy works," was an ancient maxim.

Rev Henry Taite, for many years a venerable preacher in the A. M E. Israel Church, and is said to have been one of the most zealous Christians of the age, died on Saturday morning, at 4 o'clock, and was buried Sabbath afternoon, at 3 o'clock. Rev. Jno. Reed speaks of him as being a man whose power of faith was beyond all human conception, and he was among the very best in the world—a man that believed he talked with God word for word: he would speak of what God told him, in the same manner as I would of what the Bishop told me; and the probability is, that there are none or but few who now live, that can remember when father Taite did one wicked act. It was remarked by Rev. Jas Reed, when speaking about his funeral services, "that brother Taite preached his funeral sermon as he lived, and all that was then required, was for angels to chant the requiem." Yet father Taite was an old and afflicted man, and had some previous ways, that persons not acquainted with human nature, might have regarded, at times, as a fretful disposition; but no man was readier more resigned to Providence than he. If his church brothers visited him, well; if not, well; always looked to God for His aid and support. Israel church has lost a bright star

The protracted meeting still progresses gloriously in Zion Wesley Church. Many converts are being made and added to the church—such, I trust, as shall find eternal life.

Rev J P. Hamer, pastor of the John Wesley Church, has also been carrying on a gracious revival ever since the 25th of July. God has blessed his efforts with near fifty converts. He is a minister whose character stands clear before the world, and takes a prominent position on the side of intelligence

Last Thursday night, a society of ladies and gentlemen gave a festival at the Presbyterian Church, for the benefit of the contrabands, which was presided over by Mrs. Elizabeth Trekly, a lady distinguished both by beauty and intelligence. The [illegible] were Mrs. [illegible] Cook, Miss Margaret Cokely, Mr Jas Wormly, [illegible] and Wm Stahl. There were others whose names I do not recollect. Though they had the disadvantage of a city somewhat excited in consequence of the army's retreat, to contend with, they nevertheless did remarkably well. Such manifestations of our sympathies as this, for the contrabands, are worth a thousand galliders, in whose sight a quarter looks as big as a wagon-wheel. H. M. T.

Washington, Sept 8, 1862.

FROM LYNN

Lynn, Sept. 4th, 1862

MR. EDITOR:—Dear Sir,—I have been a long time trying to compose my mind to write a letter to the Recorder, but in consequence of the press of business I have been hindered till this time; and now, I cannot do justice to you nor my letter, for want of a well regulated mind, and should I fail to accomplish my design, you must take the will for the deed

I was at the camp meeting which the Rev. W W. Grimes spoke of in his letter, and I can bear testimony to the truth of his statements in reference to the God of love being in our midst, for it did seem that the King himself was there, and feasted with his saints, making the place of his feet glorious. And I bless the Lord my own heart was refreshed and made strong in the Lord, and in the power of his might

Now to the scenes of Plymouth Rock, the landing of the pilgrim fathers, and place of renown I have long heard of it by the hearing of the ear, but now mine eyes have seen it. I visited that venerable spot, in company with Revs. Shreeves, Grimes, and twelve ladies, all of whom desired to take something for a token of remembrance, and as they were not allowed to take any of the rock, the most of them took some of the sand that was on the rock, and thus they satisfied themselves with this. The rock is covered with a board box, with a heavy weight on the top, to prevent any one from getting any of the stone. The box is about six feet square, making it about twenty-four feet around. There is a hole in the top of the box; so you can stand on the bare stone with your feet, if you wish, which we all did, and then bade it adieu.

We then proceeded to a hall, which was about a quarter of a mile distant, which we found to be a neat, plain building, the dimensions of which I am not able to give, but should judge it to be about 45 by 65 feet. There is an iron fence in front, and inside of the fence is an enclosure with the names of all the fathers, a list of which I will now give you. It is as follows:

J Tilley	English
Fletcher	Chilton.
Cook	J Allerton.
Billington.	Morton
Lester.	Priest
Doty	Ridgedale
Goodman.	Brewster.
Standish	Fuller
Carver.	Warren
Bradford	White
E Winslow.	Clark.
Olden	Crackston
Hopkins.	Gardner.
Turner.	Margeson
Mullins	Buttrage
Tinker	Soule
Eaton	E Tilley.

Having now finished the list, we enter the hall, and notice in the first room a desk with a large book open—that's for visitors to put their names, ages, and places of residence. Next is a large case with a lot of old Plymouth rock stone inside, and a few other things. We pass on into the larger hall. Here is presented to our view large paintings of all the fathers and families, and a card with their names and numbers as they are on the paintings. On each side of the hall stands a large case with different things that were brought over from England by the fathers. In another corner stands an old English clock, going her regular rounds with the sun. The clock was brought by the fathers. We leave the large hall and go into a small room at the west-end of the building, in the east corner of which there is a large library for persons to read and pass away the time. Next we go up stairs, and here we see many attractions to divert the attention, and a matter of curiosity to visitors. We have now given you a synopsis of this interesting scene, so we will close this part of our letter.

Mr Robert Brown and Miss Susan Harris, of Lynn, were, by me, joined together in holy matrimony on Thursday evening, Sept. 4, 1862, at my residence in Hacker St

Yours in Christ,
W H CHASE

(For the Christian Recorder)

WHAT CONSTITUTES A GENTLEMAN

Woodbury, Sept 5th, 1862

We often hear and use the word Gentleman. I saw Mr. G., sitting out on the verandah to-day, and his children playing around him. I think that he is a perfect gentleman. Why do you inquire, my friend? Well, because he is very rich and lives luxuriously, his house is handsomely and conveniently furnished, and he studies the comforts of all the inmates of his dwelling, and has such a graceful appearance in the street, his independent style of walking reminds me of a prince Your outward description of Mr. G., is very good, says my friend, but you have not said much to constitute him a perfect gentleman? I am well aware that it takes internal qualities, as well as outward accomplishments, to make a gentleman. Mr. G. possesses these qualities: his polite manners are exemplary. What is his character? says my friend. Some people think that money and manners are all that are required to complete the gentleman; I think those acquirements are necessary, but they are not all that are requisite. It takes an unspotted character, good principles, an intelligent mind, and educated manners, a dignified disposition, politeness to all at home or abroad, a life governed by truth, honesty, and equity. And are such as Mr. G. the only ones that possess this conspicuous character? I don't think they are. There are numbers who do possess it, both rich and poor. I do not believe that these amiable qualities are excluded from any, or that they have any bounds. I think that every one of Adam's race can possess them. The sable sons of Africa can be elevated upon those qualities, and they will stand ever; and if our European friends will not take them as fellow partners, they cannot help admiring their character, and thinking that the time is fast approaching when Ethiopia shall stretch forth her hand, and kings and princes shall come out of Egypt

I do not see anything to prohibit many of the present generation from being perfect, genteel men. There are colleges and schools of every [illegible] for the instruction and improvement of the mind and character, and many are benefited by these advantages—and those who have originally inherited a good character and good principles, and have these improving opportunities afforded them, can graduate, and demand respect, and they will receive it

MARY MANLY

Woodbury, New Jersey

For the Christian Recorder.

THE DRAFT IN MASSACHUSETTS

It is not yet certain whether or not there will be a draft in Massachusetts. The Governor of that State has postponed the time until the 17th inst. Most of the small towns have filled both quotas, but the cities are generally behind Boston lacks 500 on the first quota. It is generally believed that if a draft is made, colored men will have to take their chances with the rest, except in the city of Boston, where the Mayor (who does not agree with the Governor) has intimated that the draft will be made in accordance with the militia laws of Massachusetts which are the only laws in that State that proscribe men on account of their color To ascertain whether or not colored men will be drafted, John S. Rock, Esq., has addressed a letter to the Mayor of Boston, the concluding portion of which is as follows:—

"We are willing to bear our proportion of the National burden; and though debarred the privilege of being soldiers, I learn from some of the assessors we are not behind others in the proportion of men we have contributed to the war; some of whom have gone as servants, but the greater portion have enlisted in the navy We are not surprised that when there were large bounties, and provisions made for the families of the soldiers, we were not permitted to volunteer; but when it is universally known, that, up to this time, the National Government has not recognised us as soldiers, and the State has declined to accept us as volunteers, we do not understand why it is that we are prohibited from going out of the State, unless we make oath that we are not leaving to avoid the draft! If we are to be drafted in this city, your Honor will please inform us, so that if any desire it, they may avail themselves of the legal privileges granted to others."

It seems that our brethren in Boston are awake. They do not think it right to force them by a draft when more than double their proportion have signified their willingness to volunteer

For the Christian Recorder

FROM ELLICOTT'S MILLS, MD

MR. EDITOR—Rev. and Dear Brother: I must confess that I am more than ever pleased with your respectable sheet—and it is my desire to do all that I can for its continuation. I did think that I would be able to get some subscribers on this circuit, but the people have learned the old song, and that is, "Hard Times."

Now, dear brother, I will give you a specimen of what they are pleased to denominate "Hard Times:"

I called the officers of the church together, and I told them that if they would stop singing that old, unwelcome song, "Hard Times," we would try to collect some money for the churches, and they agreed to stop. I appointed a day's meeting at Mount Gilboa, on the 15th of June. Brother H Brown preached at eleven o'clock, A. M., and Brother A. Wheeler at three o'clock, P. M, and we collected at the two appointments seventy-five dollars; and I made an appointment from that day four weeks for another day's meeting at the Mission Chapel, distant one mile and a half from Mount Gilboa

Rev G T. Watkins preached at eleven o'clock, A. M., and at three o'clock, P. M. Two very able sermons they were. At this time we collected one hundred and thirty-six dollars. I then made another appointment at Mount Gilboa on the tenth day of August, at which time the Rev H G Brown preached two very interesting sermons, and we collected on that day seventy-two dollars and thirty-seven cents.

So, dear brother, you can tell to your people what they call hard times on this circuit, at least so far

Now, Brother Weaver, I send you one six months' subscriber, and one dollar. You will please send the paper to Mr. Rhemus Adams, Catonsville, Baltimore county, Md

Dear Brother, do not think, because I have not written to you, that I have forgotten you. Please write soon

I am still your friend and brother in the bond of Christian love,

JOHN G. HERBERT

Ellicott's Mills, Maryland

For the Christian Recorder

NEW BEDFORD, MASS

MR EDITOR—Sir: I read a letter in the 35th number of the Recorder, headed from Harrison's Landing, but written in Baltimore, Maryland, in which the missionary charges the brethren in the East with neglecting his dear family. The brethren have done their duty According to the resolution of the Conference they collected in days for the support of the missionary's family. The brother has been to Providence, Boston, Newport, and New Haven, and received all the moneys collected to support his family, besides the twenty-six dollars he received in this city, put the same in his pocket, and started for the mission without paying up his rent! and knowing that he had received the last dollar collected for that purpose—then writes to the Trustees for money for his family; there was none there, nor had there been; it could not get there—for the missionary had his hand under the table to get it as soon as it was laid down!

Dear brother, when we are doing the best we can for you and your family, don't lay your sins on us, for we have enough of our own to answer for. Yours for the truth always,

WM W GRIMES.

New Bedford Mass, Sept. 7, 1862.

CORRECTION IN MY LETTER

Mark: Plymouth Comp; the closing sentence should be as follows: May the good Lord bless the citizens of Plymouth. The Rev. William H Chase has promised to notice our visit to Plymouth Hall

THE BLACK MEN IN THE REVOLUTION AND THE WAR OF 1812

We copy the following from the Delaware County American of August 9th, 1862

Of the services and sufferings of the colored soldiers of the Revolution, no attempt has, to our knowledge, been made to preserve a record. They have had no historian. With here and there an exception, they have all passed away, and only some faint tradition of their campaigns under Washington, and Greene, and Lafayette, and of their cruisings under Decatur and Barry, lingers among their descendants. Yet enough is known to show that the free colored men of the United States bore their full proportion of the sacrifices and trials of the Revolutionary War

The late Gov Eustis of Mass, the pride and boast of the Democracy of the East, himself an active participant in the war, and therefore a most competent witness; Gov. Morrill of N. H., Judge Hemphill of Pa., and other members of Congress, [illegible] the speech of admitting Missouri as a slave State into the Union, bore emphatic testimony to the efficiency and heroism of the black troops. Hon Calvin Goddard of Conn, states that in a little circle of his residence, he was instrumental in securing, under the act of 1818, the pensions of nineteen colored soldiers. "I cannot," he says, "refrain from mentioning one aged black man, Primus Babcock, who proudly presented to me an honorable discharge from service during the war dated at the close of it, wholly in the hand writing of George Washington; nor can I forget the expression of his feelings when informed, after his discharge had been sent to the War Department, that it could not be returned. At his request it was written for, as he seemed inclined to spurn the pension and reclaim the discharge." There is a touching anecdote related of Baron Steuben, on the occasion of the disbandment of the American army. A black soldier, with his wounds unhealed, utterly destitute, stood on the wharf just as a vessel bound for his distant home was getting under way

The poor fellow gazed at the vessel with tears in his eyes, and gave himself up to despair. The warm-hearted foreigner witnessed his emotion, and inquiring into the cause of it, took his last dollar from his purse and gave it to him, with tears of sympathy trickling down his cheeks. Overwhelmed with gratitude, the poor wounded soldier hailed the sloop and was received on board. As it moved out from the wharf, he cried back to his noble friend on shore, "God Almighty bless you Master Baron!"

"In Rhode Island," says Gov Eustis, in his able speech against slavery in Missouri, 12th of Twelfth Month, 1820, "the blacks formed an entire regiment, and they discharged their duty with zeal and fidelity. The gallant defence of Red Bank, in which the black regiment bore a part, is among the proofs of their valor." In this contest it will be recollected that four hundred men met and repulsed, after a terrible and sanguinary struggle, fifteen hundred Hessian troops, headed by Count Donop The glory of the defence of Red Bank, which has been pronounced one of the most heroic actions of the war, belongs in reality to black men; yet who now hears them spoken of in connection with it? Among the traits which distinguished the black regiment was devotion to their officers. In the attack made upon the American lines near Croton River, on the 13th of the Fifth Month, 1781, Col. Greene, the commander of the regiment, was cut down and mortally wounded; but the sabre of the enemy only reached him through the bodies of his faithful guard of blacks, who hovered over him to protect him, every one of whom was killed. The late Dr Harris of Dearborn, New Hampshire, a Revolutionary veteran, stated in a speech at Francestown, New Hampshire, some years ago, that on one occasion the regiment to which he was attached was commanded to defend an important position, which the enemy thrice assailed, and from which they were as often repulsed. "There was," said the venerable speaker, "a regiment of blacks in the same situation—a regiment of negroes fighting for our liberty and independence, not a white man among them but the officers—in the same dangerous and responsible position. Had they been unfaithful, or given way before the enemy, all would have been lost. Three times in succession were they attacked with most desperate fury by well disciplined and veteran troops, and three times did they successfully repel the assault, and thus preserve an army. They fought thus through the war. They were brave and hardy troops"

In the debate in the New York Convention of 1821 for amending the constitution of the State, on the question of extending the right of suffrage to the black, Dr. Clarke, he delegate from Delaware County, and other members, made honorable mention of the services of the colored troops of the Revolutionary army.

The late James Forten of Philadelphia, well known as a colored man of wealth, intelligence, and philanthropy, enlisted in the American Navy under Capt. Decatur, of the Royal Louis; was taken prisoner during the second cruise, and, with nineteen other colored men, confined on board the horrible Jersey prison ship. All the vessels to the American service at that period were partly manned by blacks The old citizens of Philadelphia to this day remember the fact that when the troops of the North marched through the city, one or more colored companies were attached to nearly all the regiments

Gov. Eustis, in the speech above quoted, states that the free colored soldiers entered the ranks with the whites. The time of those who were slaves was purchased of their masters, and they were induced to enter the service in consequence of a law of Congress, by which, on condition of their serving in the ranks during the war, they were made freemen This hope of liberty nerved them with courage to oppose their breasts to the Hessian bayonet at Red Bank, and enabled them to endure with fortitude the cold and famine of Valley Forge.—The anecdote of the slave of Gen Sullivan of New Hampshire is well known When his master told him that they were on the point of starting for the army to fight for liberty, he shrewdly suggested that it would be a great satisfaction to know that he was indeed going to fight for his liberty. Struck with the reasonableness and justice of his suggestion, General S. at once gave him his freedom

The late Ira Stram Burges of Rhode Island, in a speech in Congress, First month, 1828, said. "At the commencement of the Revolutionary War, Rhode Island had a number of slaves. A requirement of them were enlisted in the Continental service, and no braver men met the enemy in battle; but not one of them was permitted to be a soldier until he had first been made a freeman"

The celebrated Charles Pinckney of South Carolina, in his speech on the Missouri question, and in defence of the slave representatives of the South, made the following admissions:

They (the colored people) were in numerous instances the pioneers, and in all, the laborers of our armies. To their hands was owing the greatest part of the fortifications raised for the protection of the country. Fort Moultrie gave, at an early period of the inexperienced and untried valor of our citizens, immortality to the American arms; and in the Northern States, numerous bodies of them were enrolled, and fought side by side with the whites at the battles of the Revolution.

Let us now look forward thirty or forty years, to the last war of Great Britain, and see whether the whites enjoyed a monopoly of patriotism at that time.

Martindale of New York in Congress, 22d of First Month, 1828, said, "Slaves, or negroes who had been slaves, were enlisted as soldiers in the war of the Revolution; and I myself saw a battalion of them, as fine martial-looking men as I ever saw, attached to the Northern army in the last war on its march from Plattsburg to Sackett's Harbor."

The Hon Charles Miner of Pennsylvania., in Congress, Second Month, 7th, 1828, said, "The African race made excellent soldiers. Large numbers of them were with Perry, and helped to gain the brilliant victory of Lake Erie A whole battalion of them were distinguished for their orderly appearance."

Dr. Clarke, in the convention which revised the Constitution, of New York, in 1821, speaking of the colored inhabitants of the State, said—

"In the late war they contributed largely toward some of your most splendid victories. On Lakes Erie and Champlain, where your fleets triumphed over a far superior number and engines of death, they were manned in a large proportion with men of color. And in this very house, on the [illegible] passed unanimously the act of probation of all the branches of your Government, authorizing the Governor to accept the services of a corps of two thousand free people of color. Sir these were times which tried men's souls. In those times it was no sparing matter to bear arms.

These were times when a man who shouldered his musket did not know that he bared his breast to receive a death wound from the enemy or he laid it aside; and in these times these people were found as ready and as willing to volunteer in your service as any other, They were not compelled to go: they were not drafted. No! your pride had placed them beyond your compulsory power. But there was no necessity for its exercise; they were volunteers; yes, Sir, volunteers to defend that very country from the inroads and ravages of a ruthless and ruthless foe, which had treated them with insult, degradation and slavery."

On the capture of Washington by the British forces, it was judged expedient to fortify, without delay, the principal towns and cities exposed to similar attacks. The Vigilance Committee of Philadelphia waited upon three of the principal colored citizens, viz., James Forten, Bishop Allen, and Absalom Jones, soliciting the aid of the people of color in erecting suitable defences for the city.—Accordingly, 2,000 colored men assembled in the State House Yard, and from thence marched to Gray's Ferry, where they labored for two days almost without intermission. Their labors were so faithful and efficient that a vote of thanks was tendered them by the Committee. A battalion of colored troops was at the same time organized in the city under an officer of the United States Army, and they were on the point of marching to the [illegible] when peace was proclaimed.

Gen Jackson's proclamations to the free colored inhabitants of Louisiana are well known In his first, inviting them to take up arms, he said: "As sons of Freedom, you now called upon to defend our most inestimable blessings; as Americans your country looks with confidence to her adopted children for a valorous support; as fathers, husbands, and brothers, you are summoned to rally round the standard of the Eagle, to defend all which is dear in existence"

The second proclamation is one of the highest compliments ever paid by a military chief to his soldiers:

"TO THE PEOPLE OF COLOR.

"Soldiers! When on the banks of the Mobile I called you to take up arms, inviting you to partake the perils and glory of your white fellow-citizens, I expected much from you; for I was not ignorant that you possess qualities most formidable to an invading enemy I knew will, what fortitude you can endure hunger and thirst and all the fatigues of a campaign. I knew well how you loved your native country, and that you, as well as ourselves, had to defend what man holds most dear—his parents, wife, children and property. You have done more than I expected. In addition to the previous qualities I before knew you to possess, I found among you a noble enthusiasm which leads to the performance of great things

"Soldiers! The President of the United States shall hear how praiseworthy was your conduct in the hour of danger, and the representatives of the American people will give you the praise your exploits entitle you to. Your General anticipates them in applauding your noble order"

It will thus be seen that whatever honor belongs to "the heroes of the Revolution" and the volunteers in "the second war for Independence," is to be divided between the white and the colored man

"What right, I demand," said an American orator some years ago, "have the children of Africa to a homestead in the white man's country?" The answer will, in part, be found in the facts which we have presented. Their rights, like that of their white fellow-citizens, dates back to the dread arbitrament of battle. Their bones whiten every stricken field of the Revolution; their feet tracked with blood the snows of Jersey; their toil built up every fortification south of the Potomac; they shared the famine and nakedness of Valley Forge, and the pestilential horrors of the Jersey prison-ship. Have they, then, no claim to an equal participation in the blessings which have grown out of the national independence for which they fought? Is it just, is it magnanimous, is it safe, even, to starve the patriotism of such a people, to cast their hearts out of the treasury of the republic, and to convert them, by political disfranchisement and social apprehension, into enemies?

Whittier's Works.

CHARITY AMONG OURSELVES.

In times of excitement, when men's feelings are aroused, it is but natural that their language should be strong and earnest; and this is right, provided wisdom and justice are not unheeded. Harsh and bitter denunciations are never admissible, for they spring from unkind and malevolent feelings. It becomes the duty of all, and especially Christians, under the terrible pressure of present troubles, to guard well their tongues, and to try as far as possible to cherish a spirit of confidence and brotherly love; to be charitably disposed towards others, and to judge only as we would wish to be judged It is not possible that all men should see alike or think alike; and because others should differ with us in the exercise of the same independence of judgment which we claim, is no reason why we should suspect their motives, and denounce them as false or wicked. In reference to the policy and management of such a huge and unparalleled rebellion as we have upon our hands, there must be great difference of honest opinion, and any attempt to suppress this difference by denunciation and brow-beating, will not only fail, but must inevitably engender alienation and strife among those who ought to be, and under wiser treatment would be, brethren

No good, but immense harm, has been done within the past year all over our country by forgetting that charity which thinketh no evil. If a newspaper editor should criticise sharply any act of those in authority, he is denounced as an enemy, without first having the truth and justice of his strictures even thought of for a moment, when in reality it was pure love for his country that moved his pen; and in not a few instances the future vindicated his judgment. Two individuals, in discussing the policy of some civil or military movement, may differ, and the party that first runs out of arguments will resort to denunciation and call the other a traitor, when there is not a particle of evidence of treason, unless it be a superiority of logic or of facts A military leader fails to accomplish some very desirable object, and at once, without knowing anything of his ability or his difficulties, he is denounced as being disloyal, when in truth he simply failed to perform an impossibility. Now, what good has been done by all this? Simply none. While, on the other hand, great evil has resulted. Friends have been alienated, communities have been divided, positive opposition to the administration has been produced, a spirit of rancor has been engendered, confidence is able and loyal officers has been shaken, and that unity of feeling and concert of action which ought to exist have been prevented.

We can easily understand how a difference of opinion as to the policy of government can exist in the North, but we are utterly at a loss to know how any difference of loyalty could possibly exist. We all have the same interests at stake; and if the government should fail, then we all lose alike our everything. If pure patriotism and sacred love for country will not make the whole North loyal, surely self-interest must, for the government is freighted with the fortunes of all, and survive or perish, we must make or lose alike. Instead of cherishing bitter feelings and hurling taunting epithets, let us try to keep our own conscience void of offence, and remember that of faith, hope, and charity,

PRESIDENT BENSON IN ENGLAND

The two months' sojourn of this eminent man in Great Britain appears to have been a complete ovation. Of course, Africans lionized every place, Mr. Benson has shown himself equal to the emergency of every social position, displaying talents and virtues. Taken by his parents, in 1822, when but six years of age, from Cambridge, Dorchester Co., Maryland, he rapidly became a merchant, Senator, Judge, General and President of Liberia during the last six years.

The following interesting and gratifying account of President Benson's reception abroad is from the pen of Edward Roberts, Esq., formerly an esteemed citizen of Philadelphia, but for some years past an honored resident of England.

"LONDON, JUNE 2, 1862.

"MY DEAR SIR:—You have no idea with what courtesy and kindness President Benson has been received by the high and low, and all grades of the community in this country. Dinner and evening parties, public meetings, and invitations into the country, and all kinds of hospitable attentions have been showered upon him. He is treated with the greatest respect and regard as a negro gentleman of distinction. The President and I walked in the procession for the opening of the International Exhibition. We each had a silver star upon the left breast of our black coats, which is the Liberia uniform. Mr Benson was the observed of all observers, "the cynosure of all eyes," he being a fine man of upwards of six feet, and a negro; the only one of that color in an assembly of forty thousand persons. He was treated with great consideration as President of Liberia."

LONDON, JUNE 21, 1862.

"The most extraordinary kindness and courtesy is shown to President Benson by the highest and lowest of society. I accompanied him in the procession on the grand ceremony of opening the International Exhibition. Indeed, he was the observed of all observers, 'the cynosure of all eyes'—the only black man present in the vast assembly of forty thousand persons of the best dressed people that could be assembled. So, also, at Lady Charlotte Denman's 'reception' at the residence, in the Parliament House, of her husband—the Speaker of the House of Commons—where eight magnificent rooms were filled by some twelve hundred ladies and gentlemen, the elite of Society of England. So, also, at Lord Granville's 'fete champetre,' at Chiswick House, in the country, where all the principal nobility and gentry, and distinguished foreigners were present. Also, the convocation of the Royal Society, evening party and concert at the Lord Mayor's,) and numerous other public meetings, as well as private dinner parties and evening parties, where such men as the Bishop of London, Sir John Bowring, Sir Rowland Hill, and the first ladies of the land, come up and shake hands with the President, and address some suitable conversation to him. In taking him to church to listen to the most eminent preachers, I find that ladies and other respectable persons come up and shake hands with him, and say something complimentary to him. In the United States, when Mr Benson goes to our country, he will be a 'nigger,' while here he is the black 'gentleman,' received everywhere with the distinction he deserves from being the chief of a nation of respectable people on the coast of Africa. I hope I may be disappointed in regard to our country's reception of Mr. Benson.

I am happy to say that the address to him, of which I enclose a copy, which is already signed by several hundred most worthy Englishmen, and will be further signed by many Scotchmen and Irishmen, will be presented to him at a public banquet, to be presided over by that eminent homme des soirs, Lord Brougham. This address is beautifully engrossed on vellum. The banquet will be given at Willis' rooms, on Friday, the 27th of June, 1862, at 9½ o'clock, P. M. Tickets for gentlemen twenty-five shillings; for ladies ten and a half shillings. There will probably be one hundred ladies, and two hundred gentlemen present at this meeting, many coming from Leeds, Halifax, Bradford, Liverpool, Manchester, and other remote places in the country. It will be altogether a most complimentary occasion for the President of Liberia.

"President Benson, ex-President Roberts, Secretary Johnson, and I, have just returned from the Admiralty, where, in an interview with Admiral Washington, we have been settling the Liberian boundaries contemminous with British possessions. Everything most satisfactory. What a kind people the British are to little Liberia!"

LONDON, JUNE 28, 1862.

"Last evening, the magnificent banquet to President Benson, came off at Willis' rooms, presided over by Lord Brougham, and assisted by Samuel Gurney, Dr. Hodgkin, and a number of other kind friends of Liberia. Nothing could exceed the success, and the entire triumph of this festive occasion, and its utility to Africa will be great, as it will show to Americans that the first people of England are forward in doing honor and paying respect to the first real negro President of Liberia—for Mr. Roberts, his predecessor, has much more of white man's blood in his veins than of black man's. The friendly feeling manifested to President Benson and his black nation are certainly of the most gratifying kind, and all of us any way connected with Liberia ought to be grateful. How rejoiced I would be if my countrymen, laying aside the prejudices—in which they have been born, and therefore, I fear, invincible—against color, could treat Mr Roberts and Mr Benson with a tenth part of the consideration and respect to which they are entitled, and which they receive everywhere they move in England. Mr. Roberts goes to America in the Great Eastern on the 2d July, and President Benson will probably follow in a few days—say five or six days—later.

LONDON, JULY 10, 1862.

"President Benson left London on the 5th inst. for Hamburg and the Continent—expecting to be absent some five or six weeks. It is therefore unlikely that he will visit the United States. Everywhere in England he has been treated with the greatest possible kindness, courtesy, and respect. The last three invitations he had before his departure from London were, to breakfast with the Duchess of Argyle—to dine at the Lord Mayor's Banquet, where the Viceroy of Egypt was, and to a magnificent evening party at Miss Burdett Coutts. He had innumerable invitations, more than he physically could accept."

RELIGIOUS INTOLERANCE IN SWITZERLAND

In many respects Switzerland is the happiest and freest country of Europe, but, by a singular inconsistency, it has been more slow than almost any other in making concessions to the spirit of religious liberty. It has at its universities and colleges many professors who are avowed atheists, and even in the ranks of the clergy of the National Church there is a numerous party which rejects the belief in the personality of God and the immortality of the soul. But few cantons as yet have granted absolute freedom of religion, and even evangelical denominations, like the Methodists and Baptists, are still being subjected to persecution in a number of places. The most intolerant spirit is in particular displayed toward the Jews. So rigorous were the laws against them in most of the cantons, that up to the present most of them have no Jewish population at all, and the majority are living in two communities of the canton of Aargau.

This canton, in political matters a standard-bearer of liberalism, resolved a few years ago to place the native Jews of the canton not wholly, yet partly, on an equality with the Christians. On the whole, the liberal press of Switzerland seems to have applauded this measure. The Jews of Aargau have in every respect shown themselves worthy of this final recognition of their right. They are as intelligent and as orderly citizens as the Christians. One of their rabbis, Mr. Keyserling, is a respected historian, and undoubtedly one of the most prominent scholars the canton can at present boast of,—yet, notwithstanding all this, a fanatical leader of the Liberal party, Professor Schleuninger, has stirred up an agitation for repealing the laws of emancipation, and for re-establishing the oppressive legislation of former centuries, and from present appearances it would seem that he will be successful.

There is a law in the canton of Aargau that if a certain number of voters demand the revocation of the Grand Council, (the House of Representatives,) the question of dissolution must be submitted to a direct vote of the people. Some Schleuninger agitators succeeded in causing a sufficient number of votes to be given, and the question is now directly before the people. The leaders of the intolerant party had recourse to every means they could devise to stir up the prejudices and hatred of the populace against the few hundred Jews in their midst. In a proclamation of Schleuninger, which was distributed among the people on the day of voting, he says: "He who will vote against the revocation of the Grand Council votes against himself and his posterity by admitting to citizenship Judeism, which hates Christianity, and is irreconcilable with the dignity and honor of the banner of a Christian confederacy, bearing the glorious sign of a white cross." The fanatical appeal to the passions of the populace has been unfortunately successful. On Sabbath, July 27, the people of the canton decided, by a vote of 25,000 yeas against 16,237 nays, in favor of a dissolution of the present, and an election of a new, Grand Council. Aargau is a predominantly Protestant canton, having, in 1850, a population of 107,194 Protestants, and 91,096 Catholics. No canton has hitherto more steadfastly opposed the schemes of the Ultramontane party, whose success, on this occasion, is therefore all the more deplorable. The vote of the majority embraces, of course, a large portion of the Protestant population, probably mostly the congregations of ministers of the Evangelical party, who, in Switzerland as well as in Germany, are generally using their influence for maintaining or restoring the privileges of the state churches.

CHURCH MEMBERS AND THE SABBATH SCHOOL.

The second resolution of the Pennsylvania State Convention touches upon a subject of vital importance. Has a church member, as such, any necessary relation to the Sabbath-school? In this cause, one which a professing Christian may, or may not, at his option, support? Is it, in short, in the present state of the church and the world, something which affects the question of personal duty of every professed follower of Jesus? No one can fail to see that this question goes to the very quick. On the answer which the church shall give depends mainly the success of the Sabbath school cause. The resolution of the Convention in these words:

Resolved, That as the consecration of all Christians to God requires them to be ready to every good work, they are therefore under obligation either to engage personally in the religious instruction of children, or to encourage and support those who are thus actively engaged.

The true child of God cannot feel entire indifference to any effort of benevolence affecting the welfare of man. There are some enterprises, however, which touch him only remotely and indirectly, and in common with others who are not Christians. It would be difficult, for instance, to establish a claim of universal obligation upon every Christian, as such, to join in the establishment and supervision of a Soup Society, or a Prison Discipline Society, or of very many other things which affect mainly mere temporal wants, and the interests of society. It might be difficult to establish such a claim even for the Sabbath-school, taking it to be merely such an institution as was in the mind of its benevolent founder, Robert Raikes. But in the providence of God, the Sabbath-school has become one of the leading agencies of the church in carrying forward the work of evangelizing the world. It is no longer a mere plan for keeping poor neglected children out of the street, and teaching them to read and spell on the Sabbath day. It aims indeed to do this, but it aims also to do a hundredfold more. Temporal benefits undoubtedly flow from the Sabbath-school, especially to the poorer classes. Wherever it flourishes, there order prevails, manners are improved, decorum, industry, economy, thrift, a desire to become respectable, a love of reading, and a general thirst for knowledge, gain ground. But these are the incidental results of the Sabbath school teacher's work. They are not his chief aim. What he mainly and primarily seeks is the conversion of his scholars. He seeks to make them true Christians, knowing that if this point be gained, all other needed things "will be added." Conversion is the need of every soul, of the rich as well as of the poor. Here is a want which includes all. Hence the Sabbath-school seeks to gather into its fold the children of all classes. No children are too high, none too low, to be beyond its benefits. As a matter of fact, a large part of those now converted to God and brought into the church on profession of their faith, come from the Sabbath-school. At the late Convention in Lawrence, Mass., the question being moved, with a view to bring out this significant fact, all those persons were requested to rise who had been converted while attending Sabbath school. Almost the entire assembly rose. At least nine-tenths of the Convention were on their feet.

It is not claimed, from such facts as these, that the Sabbath school by itself, as an independent agency, apart from the church and the ministry, is an institution to be relied upon for the conversion of the world. What indeed makes the Sabbath-school, what gives it life and being, but the church and the ministry working in that particular way? Christ's ministers and his people find that a given amount of labor in the larger country, when put forth among the young than when put forth among the old. The young are more tender hearted; they are more easily influenced; they have fewer evil habits to be broken up; their habits are not so stubborn; the world has not yet such a controlling influence over them; appeals to conscience, exhibitions of the love of Christ, arguments from the glories or the terrors of the world to come, have more hold upon them. Hence labor for their conversion is more hopeful. The minister does not indeed despair of the aged. He labors and he prays for the old as well as for the young. But he finds his chief encouragement among the latter. Here too, more than elsewhere, he can have the co-operation of his people. Almost every godly man and woman in his flock can help him to his labor among the little ones. But among the adults, among the parents of those very children, he must work almost alone. Scarce may he be found in every church, able and willing to preach Christ to the child of the hardened worldling. But who shall be found with the courage and discretion to go with the same message to the father himself, to the ungodly lawyer, physician, or merchant?

If such, then, be the aim and object of the Sabbath-school, if it be in fact, not some outside, philanthropic association, but the church itself working in a peculiar way, for the better husbanding of its resources, there can be no doubt of the duty of every professing Christian to give it his support. As a member of Christ's church, he is consecrated to its service, and here is that particular service in which the church finds her labors towards the conversion of the world most efficient. There are undoubtedly some professing Christians who are not required to engage personally as Sabbath-school teachers. Bodily infirmity, more imperative duties in the family or elsewhere, and other causes, may forbid such a service. But the cause of the Sabbath-school, because of its magnitude and proportions, in the grand aggressive movements of the church, that the fact of entering the church should be considered prima facie evidence of an intention to enter the Sabbath-school, if one is not already there. Every one proposing to join the church, should distinctly propose to himself the question, what shall I do for the Sabbath-school? Ministers and sessions, in admitting persons to the church, should ask the candidate, what are you going to do for the Lord in this part of his vineyard? The question of personal duty in the matter should be presented and pressed to a conscientious and deliberate decision. It should not be, it is not, a matter about which [illegible]

S. S. Times

AIM to be in all things acceptable to God, and you need trouble yourself but little about the opinions of men.

RELIGION IN THE ISLAND OF ELBA.

We lay before our readers, a letter from the Rev. Mr. Hall, of Florence, Italy, Missionary of the American and Foreign Christian Union, giving a deeply interesting account of the progress of the Gospel in the Island of Elba. The Union has now two missionaries and a colporteur in the Island, and two mission stations; one at Portoferraio, and one lately established at Rio Marina. It is to this latter station that reference is made in the letter. We encouraged friend to the cause responded to the appeal for books and tracts for the new school at Rio Marina, and from there it at once found its way to Florence, for it is the boast of our brother Hall, that from there, it at once became a centre of light and influence, and it entered a house, old women sprinkled the footsteps of the chair in which he sat with "holy water." These persecutions for a time seriously threatened the success if not the existence of the mission.

But God heard the prayers of his people especially offered for the restoration of quiet and peace in the religious services. After repeated complaints the civil authorities interposed and arrested several boys who were the main instruments of the priests and others who opposed the mission. These persons were brought before the Court in Portoferraio, and were admonished that a repetition of the offence would subject them to certain and severe punishment. Since then the Sabbath and other services have been peaceful and uninterrupted, and the brethren who at one time feared they should lose the Evangelist through persecution have wept tears of joy and gratitude at being able to worship God according to their consciences, with none to molest or make afraid.

Meetings are held four or five evenings in the week for the study of the Scriptures. They are attended by about thirty adults. A passage of Scripture is read, questions are freely asked and explanations offered, and, as far as possible, the lessons interpreted by reference to other portions of the Bible. Thus these persons to whom the Word of God has been a "sealed book," and who for truth have been taught to receive the doctrines and commandments of men, begin at once to "search the Scriptures" to see "whether these things are so." This method of studying the Bible has been attended with the best results, and the minds of the people all interested in the book which can benefit them more than any other, and of which it has been the policy of the Church of Rome to keep them in ignorance. They will never be likely to lose the benefits secured by these Bible classes.

Another important work has been begun at Rio Marina. A school for girls has been established—a pious and well-instructed woman, a member of the congregation at Rio, and who has formerly taught a few children privately, is the teacher. The school now numbers sixteen scholars; it only wants good class-room, books and a few maps to insure its prosperity and great usefulness to the Evangelical families of that town.

The Mission at Rio has been the means of bringing to our knowledge a young man of promise, intelligent, and of good character, the only son of an excellent brother of the Church, who desires to study for the Ministry. The father, who had hoped to have the aid of his only son in his business as a master mason, has given his consent, allowing him to give himself to study, and prepare himself for preaching the Gospel. So rarely are young men found in this part of Italy who desire to devote themselves to the Ministry of the Word, that I have desired, after consultation with Professor Comandi, to assume the responsibility of supporting this young man in the prosecution of his studies. Arrangements will be made for send the brethren at Turin, and from there, it at please God, he will come to Florence for the [illegible] course. I dedicate a name of Elba and send him among his countrymen as a preacher of the Gospel will, with the Divine blessing, be of the greatest spiritual interest and advantage to this island. Is there not some one of your readers who would regard it as a privilege to bear the expenses of this young man's education, and in time give to Italy the great blessing of an educated minister? If the American and Foreign Christian Union had done nothing more in Italy than to establish the Mission in the Island of Elba, that would repay a thousand-fold the money expended on the field the past year.

J. EDWIN HALL

COCHIN-CHINA.

The kingdom of Cochin China is composed of the once Independent States of Cochin China and Tong king, which were united under one sceptre [illegible] together with a large portion of the neighboring kingdom of Camboje. Its length from north to south is about nine hundred miles, with a breadth varying from one hundred and fifty at the south to four hundred or five hundred on the north. The population of the entire kingdom is very differently estimated, from seven to twenty-seven millions, while one French bishop, lately resident in the country, placed it at sixteen millions; and another, still there, at twenty millions. Probably fifteen millions would not be far from the truth. Of this population, the bishops state that six hundred and thirty thousand belong to the Romish churches, to which, in one year, not long since, five thousand three hundred and seventy converted adults were added. Since 1820, seventy converted adults were added. Since 1820, which bloody king ascended the throne, and a persecution commenced which has continued to the present day, no less than 140,000 pagans have renounced their idols and entered the Romish church—a marvellous and almost unexampled fact, as the Catholics proclaim it, provided conversions are with them something more than form. At any rate the fact is striking, and encouraging to the hope of something better. The Romish "church establishment" embraces seven apostolic vicariates or archbishoprics, seven bishoprics, seven coadjutors, of whom four are French and four Spanish European missionaries, and more than two hundred and forty native priests. A seminary educates nine hundred youth for the priesthood, while six hundred and fifty catechists render aid to the priests in teaching their flocks, and about [illegible] six hundred native nuns are engaged in instructing the women and children at home in various works of charity. Such is the force of the Romish church missions in Cochin China, embracing [illegible] thousand four hundred and sixty four individuals of different classes and ranks, who engage at the cost of any sacrifice—life itself included—to instruct and aid in the Christian life five hundred and thirty thousand professed converts, and pro- [illegible] the [illegible] among a population of sixteen or [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible]

[illegible] Bartholomew Ruiz, in the year 1593. Though he obtained permission to reside there, he made no converts. 1615, or thirty-two years after, the work [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible]

THE METHODIST MINISTRY

Is our ministry less effective than it formerly was, and is there a better method of training for it than we now have? These questions have lately been discussed in the [illegible] We have shared somewhat in the discussion, and have been disposed to take the negative of both questions. That we have undergone some modifications of our methods of doing [illegible] but has the change been moral; has it been such a change as [illegible] has required and legitimately produced? This is a precedent question in the discussion We take the affirmative of it

Our Church has had its initial period; it was necessarily a period of rapid, energetic movements, and these naturally produced a correspondent spirit in its ministry Long circuits, incessant preaching, the heralding of the truth rather than the disciplining of the people by pastoral labor, were the characteristics of this period. But which are the most important, the earlier or the later characteristics? That may be an interesting inquiry; but there is a more fundamental question, namely, are both legitimate—both normal stages of our development?

We assume the affirmative of this question.

We believe, indeed, that the most urgent necessity of Methodism now, as regards its ministry, is in the churches. By the very growth of our societies they have become congested. Hundreds of them have become in fact [illegible] as important as whole circuits used to be, so far at least as numbers of members are concerned. Now, this being the case, the question presents itself, is the pastoral training of this condensed circuit, if we may so call it, this society in one place, instead of a society or more places, as important as the old plan of preaching every day to its members in a score of places, with meanwhile little or no pastoral training? We believe it is; and we believe that this is substantially the change that has taken place in our conditions. With this change of labor has come of course a modification of ministerial qualifications. The moral fitness of the preacher must, in a general sense, always be the same; but more study, higher intellectual training, in a certain time preaching, are necessary. Our fathers preached often, but preached few sermons. The most elementary theology made up their discourses. Repentance, faith, justification, holiness, etc.; these were repeated from place to place; but the application of these to the minute and varied conditions of the Christian life are a necessary, a most necessary department of ministerial labor, especially in established and large societies And this more minute labor requires, we repeat, correspondent intellectual capacity, and therefore correspondent ministerial training.

If this view is correct, it implies the answer of the second question as to methods of ministerial education. Our methods, we think, have been advancing in healthful, we say in Providential correspondence with our advancing necessities. First come, and still continues, our Conference course of study—a very decided indication of a felt intellectual necessity and of a disposition to meet it. Next, and for some years, academic education was sought by many of our ministerial candidates. Then, university, or at least collegiate education became recognised as at least desirable, and we can now point to some conferences in which about a third of the members are collegiate graduates. Finally, the training of theological schools has been provided, and promises to become in better times, a most effective provision.

The stages of development, we affirm, are legitimate, healthful, and most encouraging for the prosperity of the denomination. Let us not distrust the course of Divine Providence, but courageously follow it. Let us especially never fear education; it is the twin sister of piety The school and the church should always go together. The Church is the citadel of the truth, the school the redoubt of the Church. The plan, suggested in some quarters, for the training of our ministerial candidates under the care and in the families of our older preachers, may look well enough in theory; it has a very pleasant, a quite venerable aspect of paternal simplicity and prudence, but we believe it would turn out to be a preposterous experiment. We doubt whether many of our veterans would feel prepared courageously to undertake the training of our young men for the peculiar intellectual as well as moral demands of the times, however heroically they could, like Goldsmith's old soldier, shoulder the crutch and show how battles once were fought and won.

We are, in fine, in a transition state; and we must expect, in any such state, temporary inconveniences; but let us have patience, prayer, hopefulness, and faith. Accepting our necessities as Providential calls, let us be assured that they will issue in good results, if we are faithful to our actual duty.

The future, it is often said, is known only unto God. It is not so. Men, churches, States, may determine the future for themselves, by the help of God. Let us stand firm to our mission as a Church, the revival and spread of primitive Christianity; let us maintain unswervingly our effective theology and moral discipline; let us be sure that education, of people and preachers, will be, must be a blessing; let us cheerfully accept Providential modifications of matters of mere ecclesiastical economy, looking sharply that they be Providential; let us do thus, and meanwhile press forward without fear of the future.

DR. McCLINTOCK.

A gentleman now travelling in Europe, writes a short account to one of the secular papers of the labors of our corresponding editor, at the American chapel, Paris. It will be seen that the writer is neither an Episcopalian nor a Methodist:

"Rev. Dr. McClintock, an eminent Methodist of New York, is now the successful pastor and preacher. The experiment appears to have passed into a permanency. There is still a petty rivalry in an American Episcopal Church, but happily it fades under stupid ministrations. Dr. McClintock is quite popular; but it was as curious as it was refreshing to see the joiner-work he makes of the service in order to realise Paul's injunction to be all things to all men.' First, we have the regular Episcopal liturgical service, somewhat shortened of course, but performed by the Rev Doctor with as much grace as though he fully believed he could count upon his fingers the number of legitimate removes he was from the original apostles; and then follows a fresh, Methodistic, outpouring prayer, delivered with unction, and leading to a sermon of like stamp, hearty, strong, and intellectual, pounded in a trifle at the close, as the brethren do at home. There is nothing to make Christians tolerant and liberal toward each other like a little isolation and hard necessity."—Methodist.

GERMAN MISSIONS IN NEW HAVEN.

I have recently had the pleasure of visiting the beautiful city of New Haven, and of spending two Sabbaths in the midst of our German church in that place. This city numbers about 40,000 inhabitants, of whom 4,000 are Germans. There is a large field open to us here. A German population of 4,000, with no preachers but one Methodist and one Baptist, whose congregations are small, and even smaller than ours, seems to offer to us a most encouraging inducement to sustain this mission.

There is one difficulty connected with this station, namely, finding an adequate support for the minister. The members contribute, some very liberally, while others are rather limited in their means. Besides these, there are hardly any donations from the Congregational and Episcopal churches, the former contributing $200 annually, and the latter supplying a place of worship, with fuel throughout the winter. Notwithstanding the expensiveness of living in this place leaves the present salary quite inadequate.—C. F. Ruyer in Mercurian.

A GOOD WAY.

Nathaniel Howe, of Hopkinton, an eccentric clergyman of the Calvinistic school, once made on [illegible] prayer [illegible] ing valuable hint as to the best mode of dealing with theological opponents:—"O Lord, may thy young servant put down the Methodists, and Baptists, and Episcopalians, and Universalists, by preaching better, and praying better, and living better than they!"

THE SONG OF SARATOGA

BY JAMES M SAGE

"Pray, what do they do at the Springs?"
The question is easy to ask,
[illegible]
Were rather a serious task,
And yet in a bantering way,
As the magic of music has sway,
I'll venture a bit of a song,
[illegible]
Tra-la-la-la-la-la-la-la-la-la!
The waters so sparkling and cool,
Though the flavor is none of the best,
And the ether exceedingly queer;
[illegible]
With some wholesome medicinal things,
So they drink and they drink, and they drink—
And that's what they do at the Springs!

Then with appetites keen as a knife,
They hasten to breakfast and dine;
(The latter precisely at three,
[illegible]
Ah, then—what a rush and rush
When the eloquent dinner bell rings!
Then they eat, and they eat, and they eat—
And that's what they do at the Springs!

Now they stroll in the beautiful walks,
Or loll on the shade of the trees:
Where many a whisper is heard
That never so told by the breezes;
[illegible]
Regardless of conjugal rings;
[illegible]
And that's what they do at the Springs!

The dressing-rooms now are a-blaze,
And music is shrieking away,
Terpsichore governs the hour,
And fashion was never so gay!
An arm round a [illegible]
[illegible]
So they waltz, and they waltz, and they waltz—
And that's what they do at the Springs!

In short, as it goes in the world—
They eat, and they drink, and they sleep,
They talk, and they walk, and they woo;
They sigh, and they laugh, and they weep;
They read, and they ride, and they dance;
(With other unspeakable things:)
They play—and they pay—and that's pay—
And that's what they do at the Springs!

IDLING ON THE SEA SHORE

"I fear the visitors here lead a very idle life," said a worthy man to me one day, as we had a stray chat on a beach. Being an energetic resident, he did not see that that was the very life they came there to lead. Don't judge a man by his phrase of [illegible] There is a fine [illegible] station at the bottom of the street, close to one of the great thoroughfares of London. When I leave my house, and put out into the great human stream, I always see one man at rest there. He wears a cleaned up, official sort of undress, and sits on a low stool outside the equine house door, generally smoking a long, new clay pipe. There is nothing more calm than the repose of a fireman But a breathless householder, with a mob of link boys at his heels, comes round the corner. In two minutes our friend is driving fourteen miles an hour against the stream of Regent street, like a flash of brass and red paint

Therefore, do not hastily judge the idler by the sea side; he is reposing But he can work, at the right time. Last week he fought the fiercest counsel on circuit. Last week he hushed a mob The day before yesterday he sent in tenders for the construction of a steam-engine seven hundred thousand horse-power, and will have it all hammered and rivetted within sound of his office Yesterday he extracted the diaphragm of a brick layer's laborer before the College of Surgeons, in one minute and twenty-three seconds. The newspaper that gentleman offered him he saw printed this very morning (he came by a mid-day train) amid a crowd of machines and dexterous compositors With sweat of brain he wrote the rousing novel over which that lady bends and weeps. He has come for a holiday; and falls into the telescopic pebble gathering world with grateful acquiescence.

Now your busy man, or rather your man who really works hard in his profession, will, if he be wise and brave, leave the wonders of the seashore alone when he comes to rest. Lying on the rounded shingle, he lets his mind uncoil and gather unconsciously suppleness and strength; he lets it stretch and sun itself without interruption And as he is no loser, for so surely as he is content and not ashamed to sit maybe for a whole, bright forenoon, doing nothing, thinking of nothing, the unfolded mind will have filled itself like a sleeping net; and when afterwards it gropes within for thought and illustration, he will find good store. The dusty, faded chambers of his brain will have become wholesome and free He will return to the operating-room, the court, the editor's den, with an atmosphere of salt and sunshine about him. Of course, some active minds must grub about the rocks and sand, and in the clear pools of brine left by the tide but we beg once for all to protest against the sweeping condemnation so uttered by some people, who would employ every idle sauntcrer on a fruitful beach

Once a Week

VENTILATION

The method I now use is simple, economical quite free from draught, and does not get out of order. Raise the lower sash of the window, and place in front of the opening, at the bottom rail, a piece of wood of any approved depth; this leaves a corresponding space between the meeting rails in the middle of the window, through which the current of air is directed upwards towards the ceiling; heavy blasts cannot ascend with the air which is driven so high as to be warmed before it descends. The principle may be modified in various ways, making the bottom frame of wire blinds supersede the strip of wood; in a word open the lower sash of the window two or three inches, and block it up anyhow, and the air enters the space in the middle, and is carried to the ceiling. It will be seen that this simple plan is adapted for the cottages of the poor and the mansions of the rich; in the latter, however, the draperies must be arranged so as not to interfere with the current of air towards the ceiling; it may be used in any weather, day and night, summer and winter; indeed, in the house of a medical friend, to ensure constant action, the window of his reception-room has been nailed open.

THE DEPTH FOR SETTING MILK.

A correspondent of the Homestead relates the following experiment:—"On the 8th of April we set two pans of milk, weighing forty-seven pounds two ounces, in two tin pails ten inches deep The next day we set the same quantity of milk from the same cows two inches deep in pans. These were placed on the same shelf with the first, and of course in the same temperature, which was near fifty degrees. In four days the first milk was sour and skimmed, yielding three pounds ten ounces of cream, which, being allowed to stand one day made one pound eight ounces of butter. The other milk standing the same length of time, yielded four pounds eight ounces of cream, making two pounds one ounce of butter—a difference of nine ounces in favor of setting the milk shallow. This is a gain of 37½ per cent. over the depth of two inches

THE FATAL TREASURE

It is related that once the city of Piaura stood in a quiet valley of the Alps, beneath the shadow of the snow crowned summits, a pleasant and prosperous town. Above it hung the avalanche, threatening [illegible] One night a watchful man heard the ominous sound breaking on the still air which heralds the descending mass of ice Starting from his repose, he awoke his daughter, and with her hastened to the city gate. There she recollected that her casket of jewelry had been left in the house, and turned back to secure the treasure. In another moment, the overwhelming [illegible] with the noise of thunder between father and daughter, burying the city beneath it. When the morning dawned, the spires of the churches alone rose above the cold, white grave of the just before busy town The maiden perished with her idol while he who sought to save her escaped

Family Circle.

A NICE GIRL

"There is nothing 'half so sweet in life,' half so beautiful, or delightful, or so loveable, as a nice girl' Not a pretty, or a dashing, or an elegant girl, but a nice girl One of those lovely, lively, good tempered, good-hearted, sweet-faced, amiable, neat, natty, domestic creatures met within the sphere of 'home,' diffusing around the domestic hearth the influence of her goodness, like the scent of sweet flowers.

"A nice girl is not the languishing beauty, dawdling on a sofa, and discussing the last novel or opera; or the giraffe like creature sweeping majestically through a drawing-room. The nice girl may not even dance or play well, and knows nothing about using her eyes, of coquetting with a fan. She never languishes; she is too active. She is not given to 'sensation novels,' she is too busy. At the opera, she is not in front, showing her bare shoulders, but sits quiet and unobtrusive at the back of the box, most likely. In fact, it is not often in such scenes that we discover her. Home is her place.

"Who cares betimes, and superintends the morning meal? Who makes the toast and the tea, and buttons the boy's shirts, and waters the flowers, and feeds the chickens, and brightens up the parlor and sitting-room? Is it the languisher, or the giraffe, or the elegants? Not a bit of it; it's the nice girl.

"Her unaided toilet is made in the shortest possible time, yet how charmingly it is done, and how elegant her neat dress and plain collar! What kisses she distributes among the family; no presenting a cheek or a brow like a fine girl, but an audible smack which says plainly, 'I love you ever so much.' If I ever outvoted anything, it is one of the nice girl's kisses.

"Breakfast over, down to the kitchen to see about dinner; and all day long she is up and down; always cheerful and light-hearted. She never ceases to be active and useful until the day is gone, when she will polka with the boys, and sing old songs, and play old tunes to her father, for hours together. She is a perfect treasure, is the 'nice girl.' When illness comes, it is she that attends with unwearying patience to the sick chamber. There is no rub, no fatigue, that she will not undergo; no sacrifice that she will not make. She is all love, all devotion. I have often thought it would be happiness to be ill, to be watched by such loving eyes and tended by such fair hands

"One of the most strongly marked characteristics of a 'nice girl' is tidiness and simplicity of dress. She is invariably associated in my mind with a high frock, plain collar, and the neatest of neck ribbons, bound with the most modest little brooch in the world. I never knew a 'nice girl' who displayed a profusion of rings and bracelets, or who wore low dresses, or a splendid bonnet.

"I say again, there is nothing in the world half so beautiful, half so intrinsically good, as a 'nice girl.' She is the sweetest flower in the path of life. There are others far more stately, far more gorgeous; but these we merely admire as we go by. It is where the daisy grows that we lie down to rest."

"I DON'T CARE"

Yes you do, too, and there's no use in trying to deceive yourself with the sophistry of those words. The best and noblest, the truest and most generous, part of your nature does care for the unkind, cutting words you have uttered to one that you loved in a moment of pique.

You may carry yourself ever so proudly and defiantly, you may never drop by look or word the sweet dew of healing on the wound you have made, in a nature as proud, as sensitive and exacting as your own; but to your honor be it said, you are better than your words, and away down in your heart lurks shame, and repentance, and sorrow for them

You may carefully hide them both, and in a very little while they will be gone, for oh, it is very easy to make one's self bitter, and proud, and cold,—very hard to keep one's self sweet, and meek, and humble, but there must be some pain and struggling before you can do a mean, ungenerous thing to one who loves you, and have your heart endorse your "I don't care."

And how often these words are uttered when conscience sternly refutes them; and how often they harden the heart and keep the feet in the way of evil!

Be careful, reader, when you say, "I don't care!"

THE POND.

There is something quite charming in the stillness and quiet that reigns in the little world which is formed by the lilies and bulrushes, and other such plants, rejoicing so exceedingly in the warm water that fills the little cove and indentations of the shore in such a pond as this, while the frogs, and pollywogs, and turtles and little fishes paddle and play and swim about all day long among the floating stems, and under the green leaves which lie upon the surface. The leaves of the pond lily are quite large, and they lie floating upon the water, all the time as it were breathing the air from the upper side and drinking in the water, so far as they get thirsty, from the lower The reason why these leaves are called lily-pads, is, I suppose, because they lie so flat upon the water They grow upon long stems, which come up from the bottom, and which curl a little as they grow, so as to form a spiral, like a corkscrew, and thus the stem can be stretched out or drawn in as the water in the pond rises and falls, so that the leaf can always lie floating on the surface.

The reason why the water in the pond rises and falls is on account of the rain. In times of long rain, storms or heavy showers, a great quantity of water falls over all the country around the pond, and this water runs swiftly down in all the little brooks and streams, and when it reaches the pond, it spreads over it in every direction, and makes it fuller than it was before. Then all the lily-pads floating on the surface are lifted up, and their spiral stems are uncoiled a little.

Afterward, when, for a great many days or weeks there is very little rain, but when instead of this the sun is shining all the time upon the pond, and drying up the water, and perhaps some of the water is running away all the while through an outlet stream,—then the surface of the pond subsides, and lets the lily-pads down a little, and so the stems curl up again.

All this time, the leaves lying on the surface are drawing nourishment from the air above, and from the water below, and forming sap which passes down the stem to the root, and there a little bud is developed, which gradually pushes its way up through the water, forming and lengthening its stem as it grows, until it reaches the surface. Then it opens its cup and blooms into a lily, and the yellow anthers and pistils, as they are named by the botanists, or the yellow giggles, as the children call them, in the centre of the flower, go to work to form seeds, from which to produce new lilies the next year. When the seeds are fully formed, the little giggles wither away and die, and the white leaves about them fall off, and the seeds, when they are ripe, sink to the bottom of the pond, and there, when the time comes, they sprout and grow.

All this time too, the frogs, and the turtles, and the little fishes are enjoying themselves very much in swimming about among the lily stems, and laying their eggs in places where the sun and the warm water could hatch them. When the frogs are hatched they become pollywogs. These pollywogs swim about in great numbers, just by wriggling their tails. They are propellers at first, though [illegible] more like side wheel steamers at last, for they grow larger and larger all the while, until at length, when they get pretty big, little sprouts, as it were, come out from their sides, which in the end grow into legs, with webbed feet at the end of them. As soon as the legs and feet are grown, the pollywogs swim with them and give up their tails Thus they become frogs, just like their father and mother.—Jacob Abbott in S. S. Times.

Note. Mr Abbott gives the name of pollywog [illegible] what is called with us the tadpole.

LITTLE CHARLEY

Charley is only three years old, a restless, active little fellow, with soft silky curls and bright [illegible] always busy, and now under that sometimes he gets into mischief, as boys often do; but he feels sorry when he does injury to any thing, and cannot rest until he has told all

His grandmother loves him very much, and is very kind and very patient with Charley; but once in a while, if he breaks the plants in her conservatory, lets the canary bird out of his cage, or sets the water running in the bathing tubs, or jumps in himself without taking off his clothes, she can't help trying to teach him that such things are naughty, and once or twice she has punished him just enough to make him remember.

His grandmother has a beautiful oleander-tree, which she has taken great care of for many years It was full of rich pink blossoms, and looked very finely. One day grandmother had gone across the garden to visit her brother's family, and Charley thought it would be a good time to enjoy the oleander, as it stood on the piazza; so he jumped up on the tub in which it was growing, put his curly head in among the branches, and looked through with his roguish blue eyes; but in turning quick, his ringlets caught in one of the finest branches, and broke it off It dropped on the floor of the piazza just at Charley's feet

Now what do you think little Charley did? Did he run and hide? Did he intend that his grandmother should think that pussy did it, and let pussy get a whipping? or did he think, Of course she will think the wind broke it off? No, no. Charley's heart was full of his little trouble He jumped down quick. "I must go and tell grandmother," he said So he ran, without stopping to think, through the garden into uncle James' parlor. "Please, grandmother, come home quick, quick" "Why, what is the matter, Charley? Is baby sick?" "Please come, grandmother." So Charley took his grandmother by the hand, and hurried her away, until he came to the oleander. There lay the branch of blossoms. "Grandmother," he said, "I did it. This curl caught right in here while I stood on the tub looking through. Am I not a naughty Charley?"

Grandmother felt sorry that he had broken her oleander, but she was glad that Charley was so honest and willing to own his fault, and she kissed him, and he promised never to do so again

When his grandmother told me the story, I thought, If all children were as willing to acknowledge a fault, how many untruths would be avoided If through accident or carelessness you break or injure what belongs to another, go at once and tell what you have done. Above all, go to your heavenly Father, and acknowledge your daily faults "Father I have sinned against heaven and in thy sight. Forgive me, for Jesus' sake, and let me still be thy child." God will hear your sincere prayer, and forgive you.

C. E. R. P.

The Child's Paper

BOZ

Boz is our dog's name. He has a little brown mug to drink from. When he goes to the corner of the sidewalk and finds it empty he seizes it by the handle, and carries it to somebody to be filled with water. If you offer him ale, or beer, or cider, he turns away very much hurt. "You may drink such stuff," his looks seem to say, "but for my part, I like the drink God made for us best."

Boz sometimes finds his dinner platter pretty full. He eats as much as he needs, and no more; the rest he puts in his cupboard. Does Boz have a cupboard? He makes one. He takes the bone left over, digs a hole in the ground with his two forefeet, tucks the bone in, and covers it carefully over with his nose, there to stay till he is hungry again That is his cupboard. Boz is not a glutton. He never crams down more of a good bone than is necessary, and is saving and prudent of the rest.

Tom and Jessie were out to play. The wind blew Tom's hat into the water, and the water was fast running off with it. "Boz," says Tom, "save my hat" The moment he understood the matter he plunged into the river and swam after it.

Boz loves to go errands.

I often think there are little boys who might learn something from Boz [illegible]

Child's Paper

GENTLENESS OF ADDRESS.

It is a very great and fatal mistake in persons who attempt to convince or reconcile others to their party when they make the difference appear as wide as possible; this is shocking to any person who is to be convinced—he will choose rather to keep and maintain his own opinions, if he cannot accept yours without renouncing and abandoning everything that he believed before. Human nature must be flattered a little, as well as reasoned with, that the argument may be able to come at his understanding, which otherwise would be cast off at a distance. If you charge a man with nonsense and absurdities, with heresy and self-contradiction, you take a very wrong step towards convincing him.—Waits' Posthumous Works

LIFE OUT OF DEATH.

In Landseer's celebrated picture of Peace, the artist, among other significant emblems of the happy time when nations shall [illegible] learn war any more," represents the lambs as feeding from the mouth of an overturned mortar, which in battle belched forth fire and death. An exact equally truthful and significant picture actually occurred in Washington. On the pillars at the entrance of the President's mansion are two bombshells, in one of which a pair of wrens have built their nest, having crept through the fuse-hole into the gloomy hollow designed to be filled with death-spreading implements, rather than as the birthplace of "fluttering life and song."

COALS OF FIRE

In the memoir of Rev. Dr. Bedell, at one time rector of St. Andrew's church in Philadelphia, it is stated that when a little child he had a very forgiving spirit. This was illustrated upon one occasion in a remarkable manner. One of his playmates, in a fit of anger, threw some hot coals upon his neck. Some of them falling between his dress and flesh, burned him severely, so that he did not recover from the wounds for several months. When, however, the boy who injured him so severely was to be punished, he entreated he might be forgiven. So affectionately did he plead for this, that his request was granted.

WANT OF COURAGE.

Sydney Smith, in his work on moral philosophy, speaks in the wise of what men lose for the want of a little brass, as it is termed:

"A great deal of talent is lost to the world for the want of a little courage. Every day sends to their graves a number of obscure men, who have only remained in obscurity because their timidity has prevented them from making a first effort; and who, if they could only have been induced to begin, would in all probability have gone great lengths in the career of fame. The fact is, that in order to do anything in this world worth doing, we must not stand shivering on the bank, and thinking of the cold and danger, but jump in and scramble through as well as we can. It will not do to be perpetually calculating risks, and adjusting nice chances; it did all very well before the flood, when a man could commit his friends upon an intended publication for a hundred and fifty years, and then live to see its success for six or seven centuries afterwards; but at present a man must [illegible] and [illegible] brother, and his uncle, and his first cousin, and his particular friends, till one fine day he finds that he is sixty five years of age, that he has lost much time in consulting first cousins and particular friends, that he has no more time left to follow their advice There is so little time for over-questionableness at present, the opportunity slips away, the very period of life at which a man chooses to venture, if ever, is so confined, that it [illegible] calculation."

Advertisements.

THE DAUGHTERS OF HOPE GRAND UNION Temperance Society met, it being the thirteenth convention, April 16th, 1861. Representatives from Lodges are as follows:—

From Garnet Union No. 4, D. of T.; from Phœnix Union, No. 8, D. of T.; from Northern Union, No. 14, D. of T.; Webb's Union, of Chambersburgh, Pa.; from Dr. Rice' Union, of Carlisle, Pa.; from Mount Olive Union, No. 19, D. of T.; from Vanbrackle Union, No. 15, D. of T., of Norristown, Pa.

Officers installed to their several positions are as follows:—

Grand P., Sister Bennet; Grand Associate, Sister Borris; Grand Treasurer, Sister Fearett; Grand Conductress, C. Thompson; Grand Sentinel, A. E Dubbart. Grand Chaplain, Sister Hall.

G. P. P., Sister E. Bennet, G. P. P. Sister Ashmead,
" " E. Burris, " " J. F. Black,
" " M. H. Dudy, " " E. A. Crann,
" " S. Newman, " " White,
" " S. Davis, " " S. Hall.

THE DAUGHTERS OF CORNISH SOCIETY.

The Stated Quarterly Meetings of the Society are held on the first Wednesdays of February, May August, and November

The meetings of the Board are held on the Wednesday previous to the regular stated meetings of the society.

Mrs. Sarah Carter, President
Mr L. R. Seymour, Sec'y

THE BOOK DEPOSITORY
OF THE
AFRICAN M. E. CHURCH,
No 619 Pine Street,
PHILADELPHIA.

We keep on hand, in connexion with our other books Sabbath School books of various kinds Question Books Catechisms, No. 1, 2, and 3 We have a good assortment of such books as are generally used in the Public Schools Also, Stationery, Inks, Pens, Paper, Envelopes and Blank Books.

THE DEATH-BED OF THE REV. JOHN WESLEY

Wanted Canvassing Agents to sell this splendid large engraving which should be in every home of all denomi'ns of that great and good man. The most liberal inducements are offered to those getting this print. Send for Catalogue and instructions

W. W. SMITH, Publisher
702 South Third Street, Philadelphia

WANTED.—The charge of a Public School. Reference as to ability can be given. Apply to
J. W. A., 1641 Belmuth St.

ONE-PRICE CLOTHING,
OF THE LATEST STYLES,

Made in the Best Manner, expressly for RETAIL SALES Lowest Selling Prices marked in Plain Figures All Goods made to order warranted stationery Our One Price System is strictly adhered to. All are thereby treated alike. JONES & CO.,
Dec23-1y 604 Market Street

GOOD NEWS

To Tailors, dress makers, and to those wishing to be such Also, [illegible] sewing machines, wire hoops, and large families, to be in one day (by persons' directions which each Deliverer has) you can have a fit out and $1 per day. Ladies Dresses, Boys' and Men's Pants, Vests, Jackets, Sack and Over-coats

Local and Travelling Agents Wanted.

Address REV WM BRADBURY,
Carrollville, Scioto Co., Pa.

Or, apply to Mrs Mary C. Wester, (wife of the Editor of this paper,) 619 Pine St., Philada., Pa. Jan18—1y

MRS. E. A. PALMER'S
DRY GOODS AND TRIMMINGS STORE.
NO. 105 NORTH FIFTH STREET.
PHILADELPHIA.

A General Assortment of Hosiery, Trimmings. Dry Goods, &c

Dress, Shirt making, and Plain Sewing, promptly attended to. Jan18—1y

COAL! COAL!! COAL!!!

The subscriber is selling the best quantities of Lehigh and Schuylkill Coal at the following very low prices:

Lehigh Stove Coal, per ton, $6 25
" Egg " 6 00
" Broken and Screened, per ton, 6 25
" Nut " 6 00
Schuylkill, Stove, and Egg, and Broken, and Chestnut, 6 25
" Nut, " 5 50

Orders left at the Store Store, No. 107 North Fifth St., will be promptly attended to. WM. STILL.
Jan1—1y 107 N. Fifth St., Philada.

KELLY'S PHOTOGRAPH GALLERY
N. W. corner Fifth and Coates.
Picture Gallery and Frames on the First Floor.
Strangers should not fail to call and examine.
Admission Free.

JAMES DOWNS,
DEALER IN
NEW AND SECOND HAND
CLOTHING,
No 225 South Second Street,
No 17—3mo. PHILADELPHIA

WILLIAM STILL'S
STOVE STORE,
107 NORTH FIFTH STREET, PHILADELPHIA.

The subscriber would respectfully inform his friends and all in want of good stoves, that he has now on hand a general variety of excellent PARLOR Cooking and CHAMBER STOVES including two burning as well as other patterns, which he is selling at very low rates He hopes entirely for cash, of the best workmanship and of course can sell much cheaper than those not on the usual credit system. At any rate he hopes [illegible] to give him a call and examine for themselves since purchasing elsewhere as he feels that they would be convinced that it would be to their interest to give him their patronage. Coal orders can stantly be sent. WM. STILL.

JOSEPH H COLE,
CONTINENTAL RESTAURANT,
NO. 717 LOMBARD STREET, PHILA,
(Above Seventh St., under Philadelphia Institute,)

Where he continues to keep always on hand the very best assortment of OYSTERS and other refreshments—hoping that all his friends and the public in general will favor him with their patronage.

☞ Meals served at all hours. Families supplied with Oysters of the best quality and flavor at the short est notice

☞ Also, public and private waiting done on the most reasonable terms. 1y

Mrs. S. Shorter Hawkins
HAS NOW OPENED
NEW SPRING GOODS,

consisting of Delaines, Brilliants, Calicoes, &c Hoop Skirts of all sizes, from 12 cents to $1 25. A large lot of linen Bibbs, from 8 to 50 cents. Also, cheap Hosiery and Gloves.

N B—Mantuamakers are invited to examine my assortment of Dress trimmings of the latest styles all will be sold cheap for cash at the Old Establishment,

615 Lombard Street

THOMAS CHARNOCK,
GENERAL FURNISHING UNDERTAKER
NO 427 SOUTH 8TH ST.
Second Door Below Bethel Church.

For the Christian Recorder

BUCKS COUNTY SS.—TO ALL TO WHOM THESE PRESENTS MAY COME.

I, the subscriber, a Justice of the Peace, in and for the county of Bucks, do hereby certify that I am acquainted and know Emily Johnson, [illegible] who was married to Stephen Johnson, who was married before William Hawk, Esq., of Bristol, Bucks County, as appears by record on his docket; and after carefully enquiring into the character of the said Emily, as to her conduct in regard to the said Stephen Johnson, I feel myself fully authorized to say that I have the confidence of Daniel Kemmond (local preacher of the Methodist Episcopal Church) Charles Emmons, (Class leader) and Benjamin Cummings, (who is authorized) that he had one or more wives living at the time he married the said Emily Johnson; and that [illegible] of the time she married him and [illegible] calculation.

Witness my hand and seal this [illegible] day of [illegible] 1861.

Wm Hawk J P [illegible]

REV. LEWIS S. LEWIS'
FAMILY LINIMENT
IS PREPARED WITH GREAT CARE,
EXPRESSLY FOR FAMILY USE.

Its composition is very simple, containing nothing that is injurious in any form and there is no danger in its use from exposure to the weather. No family should be without it Having a wide spread reputation in general, and those afflicted in particular and having had recourse to the same in several cases of rheumatism, bunions chilblains and the like, assurances of its being a remedy in every case I therefore recommend it to the public

CERTIFICATES

Providence, R. I., Nov 17, 1861

Rev. L. S. Lewis—Dear Sir: I have been afflicted with the rheumatism, eleven years during which time I tried almost everything but found no cure, until the last four months my limbs and joints were so lame, that at times I could not walk or use my fingers. I procured a bottle of your Liniment and in the first application it was [illegible] After using one or two bottles, I was enabled to enjoy the free use of my limbs

Rev GEORGE A. RUE

Newport, R. I., October 29, 1861.

Rev. L. S Lewis—Dear Sir: I have been affected for a number of years, more or less, with a pain and weakness in my chest arising from some cause unknown to me. I made two applications of your Liniment, and was relieved. I was attacked with the diphtheria, and was cured by using your Liniment its worth has proved itself ten times its cost. ANTHONY RAMSDELL

Newport, R. I., Nov. 19, 1861

Rev. L. S Lewis—Dear Sir: I have been cured of stiffening in my joints by using your Liniment I recommend it to [illegible] who are troubled

RICHARD WHITE

Newport, R. I., Nov 17, 1861.

Rev. Mr Lewis—Your Liniment is, truly, all that it is recommended to be I have tried it and it has successfully cured my bunions. SOPHIA TAYLOR.

Newport, R. I., Oct 7, 1861

Mr Lewis—Dear Sir: I have had a pain and stiffness in my neck and back for some time I procured a bottle of your Liniment, and applied it twice, which effected a cure. I recommend it to the public

Mrs EVELINA DESMOND

Providence, Dec 10, 1861

Rev. L. S Lewis—Dear Sir: For upwards of three years I have been very lame at times, arising from a sprain I have tried a great many things, without any definite results. I procured a bottle of your Liniment, and was effectually relieved. Mrs PHEBE A. MORSE.

Newport, R. I., Oct. 10, 1861.

Rev Mr Lewis—I have been afflicted with the rheumatism for some time. I used your Liniment, which has removed it successfully It has also cured my swelled joints. Mrs ELIZABETH THOROUGHGOOD

Newport, R. I., Nov. 9, 1861,

Rev. Mr. Lewis—My boy was troubled with the chilblains I applied your Liniment a few times, and it cured him. Mrs. ADELINE JONES

Bellevue Place, Sept 3, 1861.

Rev. Mr Lewis—I have used your Liniment for rheumatic pains of long standing, also soreness in the feet &c It is a perfect cure in every case that I have tried Mrs SUSAN GARDINER.

Providence, Rhode Island, Aug. 19, 1861

Rev. L. S Lewis—I have been afflicted for upwards of seven years with swelled joints. I have tried almost everything, without the desired effect At last I obtained a bottle of your Liniment, which relieved me successfully. Mrs. MARY A. JEWITT.

Providence, Nov., 1861.

Mr L. S Lewis—I had a very severe attack of rheumatism last fall, during which time I tried almost everything—but nothing so effectual as your Family Liniment I would not be without it Mrs LUCY WATERMAN.

MANUFACTURED BY
REV. LEWIS S. LEWIS,
No. 115 Meeting St., Providence, R. I.,

TO WHOM ALL ORDERS SHOULD BE ADDRESSED

PRICE, 25 CTS. PER BOTTLE.

☞ Sold in Newport by Mrs. MARTHA J. RANDOLPH, No. 1 Spring Court. 1y

GEORGE G. EVANS'
ORIGINAL GIFT BOOK STORE,
No. 439 Chestnut Street.

NEW BOOKS! NEW GIFTS FOR THE NEW YEAR!

Call and look at our immense collection of BOOKS and PRESENTS for the season of 1862!

All the latest and best Publications, and a Gift with each Book purchased Beautifully and appropriately bound copies of the purest and poetical writings of all the standard British and American authors, together with an extensive and superb array of Miscellaneous Books, all embracing the choicest cullings from the fields of Literature!

Magnificent and costly presents, consisting in part of WATCHES, JEWELRY, AND SILVER WARE of the newest styles, and most exquisite finish. All Books are sold at the Publisher's regular prices, and every purchaser to the amount of $1 00, or more, is presented with a Gift, commencing strictly with ornament, varying in value from

[illegible]

Citizens' Strangers' Friends! Bear this fact in mind and make your purchase of Books at

GEORGE G. EVANS,
HANDSOME GIFT BOOK EMPORIUM
Mar 9 6mo No. 439 Chestnut Street, Phila

LEARY, GETZ, & CO.,
PUBLISHERS AND BOOK SELLERS,
No 294 North Second Street,
(Between Race and Vine,)
Philadelphia Mar 9 6mo

DEAN & CO.,
No 330 Chestnut Street,
Philadelphia,

Sell Silver-Plated Castors, with bottles, for $1 00 Also Silver-Plated Waiters, Forks, Patent Tea Bells, Spoons, Ice Spoons, Cups, Engraved Mugs. Also all kinds of Solid Gold and Plated Jewelry—Vest, Guard, and Neck Chains Medallions Gold Pens, and Silver Holders, Counting House Pens, &c.

We sell every article in our store for $1 00. You can take your choice out of our immense stock for $1 00 each

DEAN & CO.,
ORIGINAL 1 00 DOLLAR STORE,
No 330 Chestnut Street Mar 9-1y

MRS. H. S. DUTERTE,
General Undertaker and Furnisher,

Respectfully informs her friends and the public, that she still continues the Undertaking business at the old establishment, No 634 Lombard St., and being thankful for past favors, hopes still to obtain a share of the patronage of the public.

Ready made Coffins always on hand. Also a handsome Hearse and Carriages with careful drivers, that attend funerals on the most moderate terms

G. M. ELKINTON & SON,
MANUFACTURERS OF
SOAP AND CANDLES,
110 MARGARETTA STREET, Philadelphia

OLIVE SOAP,
YELLOW "
PALE " BROWN " WHITE " CASTILE " HONEY "
PALM " ROSELINE " Marseilles "

SPERM CANDLES,
ADAMANTINE " HOUSE "
KINGSFORD'S STARCH, BARRELLED "
WAX,
TALLOW,
SAL SODA
SODA ASH

FINE CAKE BAKERY.
CONFECTIONERY AND ICE CREAM SALOON,
No. 804 South Street.

Ellis Jones would announce that he keeps constantly on hand a general assortment of all kinds of Cakes, Creams, Jellies, and Pastries

Festivals, Balls, and Private Parties served upon the shortest notice, and warranted to give general satisfaction Jan 19 1m. *

REIMER'S PHOTOGRAPHIC GALLERY,
No. 615 & 617 N. Second St.,
PHILADELPHIA.

All kinds of Photographic Pictures and

THE CHRISTIAN RECORDER.

Published by the African Methodist Episcopal Church in the United States, for the Dissemination of Religion, Morality, Literature and Science.

Rev. Elisha Weaver, Editor. PHILADELPHIA, SEPTEMBER 20, 1862. Vol. II.—No. 38.—New Series.—Whole No. 89.

THE CHRISTIAN RECORDER

Is published every Saturday on behalf of the

AFRICAN METHODIST EPISCOPAL CHURCH,

BY

REV. ELISHA WEAVER,

General Book Steward,

No. 619 Pine Street, Philadelphia.

NOTICE.—All letters and matters pertaining to the Book Concern subscribers, sale of papers, and all matters connected therewith must be sent post paid; and all communications for the paper, and matters connected therewith must be directed to E. Weaver, No. 619 Pine St.

All articles intended for the Christian Recorder must be directed to E. Weaver, Box No. 619, Philadelphia.

TERMS

Two Dollars a year, payable in advance. Single copies five cents.

ADVERTISEMENTS

We solicit Advertisements of six lines or less, that are suitable for a religious newspaper, and it will be published as follows

Cards or Advertisements, inserted for one year, provided they do not exceed eight lines, ten dollars, per insertion; not exceeding eight lines without the paper, six months for each line; paper to be sent three months, four dollars,—one month, $1 50, paper in each case included

CORRESPONDING EDITORS OF CHRISTIAN RECORDER

Rev. J. P. CAMPBELL, Rev. A. W. WAYMAN,
" J. M. WILLIAMS, " P. T. WILLIAMS,
" G. H. GRAHAM, " C. BURCH,
Rev. L. ROSS.

Poetry.

USE ME

BY H. M'NAIR.

Make me of use, my God!
Let me be not forgot;
A broken vessel cast aside—
One whom thou needest not.

I am thy creature, Lord,
And made by hands divine;
And I am part, however mean,
Of this great world of thine.

Thou canst all thy works—
The weakest things that be;
Each has a service of its own,
For all things wait on Thee.

Thou canst the high stars,
The tiny drops of dew,
The great, vast, the little hill,
My God, O use me too!

Thou canst tree and flower,
The rivers vast and small;
The eagle great, the little bird
That sings upon the wall.

Thou canst the wide sea,
The little hidden lake,
The pine upon the Alpine cliff,
The lily in the brake.

The huge rock in the vale,
The sand-grain by the sea,
The thunder of the rolling cloud,
The murmur of the bee.

All things do serve Thee here—
All creatures, great and small;
Make use of me, of me, my God,
The weakest of them all

TO THE COLORED PEOPLE OF THE UNITED STATES.

Men, Brethren, Sisters:

A crisis is upon us, which no one can enable us to meet, conquer, and convert into blessings for all concerned, but that God who builds up one nation and breaks down another.

For more than one generation associations of white men, entitled Colonization Societies, have been engaged in plans and efforts for our expatriation. These have been met sometimes by denunciations, sometimes by ridicule, often by arguments; but now the American Government has assumed the work and responsibility of colonizing us in some foreign land within the torrid zone, and is now maturing measures to consummate this scheme of expatriation.

But, let us never forget that there is a vast difference between voluntary associations of men and the legally constituted authorities of a country; while the former may be held in utter contempt, the latter must always be respected. To do so is a moral and religious, as well as a political duty.

The opinions of the Government are based upon the ideas that white men and colored men cannot live together as equals in the same country; and that, unless a voluntary and peaceable separation is effected now, the time must come when there will be a war of extermination between the two races.

Now, in view of these opinions and purposes of the Government, what shall we do?

My humble advice is, before all and first of all, even before we say yes or nay, let us seek counsel from the mouth of God. Let every heart be humbled, and every knee bent in prayer before Him. Throughout all this land of our captivity, in all this house of our bondage, let our cries ascend perpetually to Heaven for aid and direction.

To your knees, I say, O ye oppressed and enslaved ones of this Christian republic; to your knees, and be there. Before the throne of God, if no where else, the black man can meet his white brethren as equals, and be heard.

It has been said that "He is the God of the white man, and not of the black." This is horrible blasphemy—a lie from the pit that is bottomless; believe it not—no, never! Murmur not against the Lord, on account of the cruelty and injustice of man. His almighty arm is already stretched out against slavery; against every man, every constitution, and every Union that upholds it. His avenging chariot is now moving over the bloody fields of the doomed South, crushing beneath its massive wheels the very foundations of the blasphemous system. Soon slavery shall sink like Pharaoh; even like that brazen-hearted tyrant, it shall sink to rise no more forever.

Hasten ye, thee, O hasten to your God; pour the sorrows of your crushed and bleeding hearts into his sympathising bosom. It is true that "on the side of the oppressor there is power;" the power of the purse and the power of the sword, that is terrible! But, listen to what is still more terrible. On the side of the oppressed there is the strong arm of the Lord, the Almighty God of Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob. Before his redeeming power the two contending armies, hostile to each and hostile to you, are like chaff before the whirlwind.

Fear not, but believe. He who is for you is more than they who are against you. Trust in him; hang upon his arm. Go, hide you beneath the shadow of his wings

O God! Jehovah jireh! will thou not hear us? We are poor, helpless, unarmed, despised. Is it not time for thee to hear the cry of the needy?—to judge the poor of the people?—to break in pieces the oppressor? He O he unto us what thou wast unto Israel in the land of Egypt, our counsellor and guide—our shield and buckler—our great deliverer—our pillar of cloud by day our pillar of fire by night.

Stand between us and our enemies, O thou Angel of the Lord! Be unto us a shining light; to our enemies a cloud and impenetrable darkness. Stand between us till this Red Sea be crossed, and thy redeemed, now sighing, bleeding, weeping, shall shout and sing for joy the bold anthem of the free.

PAYNE

Xenia, Ohio, Sept. 7, 1862

(For the Christian Recorder.)

DEAR RECORDER:—In my last communication I informed you that mobocracy reigned supreme in the Queen city. It is with mingled shame and sorrow that I now inform you that the spirit of violence is still abroad in this city; and, indeed, in the west and south west generally, if newspapers are to be relied on. I learn, from reliable source, that in the following places the rowdy cowards have destroyed considerable property, Hamilton, Rochester, Ohio, Albany, Indiana; and, on last Sunday night, stoned quite a number of houses in this city, making perfect wrecks of them, turning some twelve families out of doors. We have repaired the windows of our church, which were broken in the first riot, but we deem it imprudent to hold night meetings. These riotous proceedings have seriously interfered with our arrangements, causing a great falling off in our finances. I fear this quarter's collection (two each) money will be small.

I read, with pleasure and profit, in the Recorder, number before last, an article entitled, "How to Destroy a Congregation."

Our city is under martial law. The rebels threaten our State, and every able-bodied man is ordered to work on the intrenchments. The entire population of able colored men have gone to work, under Col. Dickson. Our people were perfectly willing to go, when they heard what was wanted to be done, but, as they had not been included in the first order for laborers, they felt indignant when arrested by the guard. However, when the matter was explained, they were rejoiced to do something to help on the good cause. Quite a number of our old men were arrested, but were exempted. Your humble servant was in the ranks some time. They formed two regiments, consisting of five hundred men, called the Black Brigade. They have been highly commended by their commanding officers. They, at this present writing, are still in the trenches, though a battle is imminent.

There are many causes of sorrow in our community. O pray for us, that our faith fail not.

On last Sunday Brother E. Weaver filled our pulpit. May the Lord continue his favor with him. Brother J. M. Brown passed through on Wednesday morning, but we did not have the pleasure of seeing him. I learned that he was looking well.

I must close. Again we ask of the church, pray for us. Very near all the men of our church are in the army, and I fear that, when it moves South, many of us will be taken with them, as conditions, teamsters, &c. There are many things that should be written, but I cannot do it now

Most truly yours, ALEPH

Cincinnati, Sept. 11, 1862

For the Christian Recorder

AN ADDRESS BY GEORGE B. WEDLEY

DELIVERED JULY 32D, 1862, IN ST. LOUIS.

Being called upon, by the ladies of the Preachers' Aid Society, to address them, I felt it my duty to say something to them; but the notice which they have given me being so short, I feel myself wholly unprepared to say anything of interest to you. But the noble cause in which you are engaged, is, of itself, of sufficient interest to engage the mind of every thinking man and woman. You are engaged in a work of benevolence, in giving aid and comfort to the veterans of the cross of Christ. How noble and generous are the acts of benevolence when viewed in a temporal sense! But how infinitely nobler must be the acts of benevolence when those acts of benevolence have for their purpose the advancement of the cause of Christ!

Ladies of the Preachers' Aid Society, I would say to you, never did laborers more deserve, yet less frequently received their reward, than the humble preachers of the gospel of Christ. Humble in habit, moderate in desire, indefatigable in well doing, pure in practice and intention, without pretence or ostentation of any kind, they have gone freely and fearlessly into places the most remote and perilous, with an empty scrip, but with hearts filled to overflowing with love to God and good-will to man, preaching the doctrines of Christ with a simple and unstudied eloquence mostly characteristic of them; day after day, week after week, and month after month, finding them still laboring for the welfare of souls, never slumbering, never reposing from the toil they have engaged in until they have fallen almost literally into the narrow limits of the grave, their last resting-place unprotected by any other mausoleum or shelter than the broad canopy of heaven, which has witnessed their devotion, their names and worth unmarked by any inscription, their memories, however, closely treasured up and carefully noted among human affections, and within the bosoms of those for whom their labors have been taken, and their reward with a high ambition cherished well is their lives, found only in that better abode where they are promised a cessation from their labors,—but their works shall follow them. Then you, the members of the Ladies' Preachers' Aid Society, will be identified with the veterans of the cross of Christ by your laudable efforts in endeavoring to elevate and relieve the temporal wants of the ministers of Christ. It is not only in this present time that the work of love and benevolence was begun by the ever thoughtful exertions of women. No; we find them first at the tomb of our Saviour, first to carry the glad tidings of His resurrection. The pages of history teem with woman's self denial, love, and benevolence to mankind. In all ages of the world she has ever been the strong arm of the Church of Christ. We find them frequently leaving homes of luxury and opulence, kind friends, and all that is dear to them on earth, to tread the burning sands and endure the scorching sun of Africa's barren shore, there to publish the truths of Christianity, and to alleviate the sufferings of a heathen nation. I see before me members of this Society—young ladies—who have hardly yet attained the age of womanhood. Who knows but that, from the bosom of this Society may go forth some female who may have first learned the principles of charity and benevolence within this Society, to publish the truths of Christianity to some far off heathen nation? I would then say, in conclusion, to the ladies of the Preachers' Aid Society, go on [illegible] and if your labors be not recorded on the pages of history, they will be recorded by that all seeing eye, who never allows any good acts to go unrecorded, and you will ever be remembered and cherished in the hearts of those grateful ministers whose welfare you have ever been mindful of.

For the Christian Recorder

"Perhaps you have been living [illegible] all your lives. Your race are suffering, in my judgment, the greatest wrong inflicted on any people. But even when you cease to be slaves, you are yet far removed from being placed on an equality with the white race. You are cut off from many advantages which the other race enjoy. The aspiration of men is to enjoy equality with the best when free, but on this broad continent not a single man of your race is made the equal of a single man of ours. Go where you are treated the best, and still the ban is upon you."—President Lincoln.

"Give me a lever and a place to stand upon," said Archimedes, "and I will move the world." The want of a place to stand upon has saved the world from being turned upside down by many an ambitious man since the death of that great man; and it is well that they have not found a stable place to fix a lever, happy for the world that God has so ordered this world's affairs that men cannot have their own way. Otherwise humanity would be called to mourn the loss of all its birthright. The misdirected goodness of great men's hearts would often plunge the world into grief and lamentation, because great men are not always wise, neither do they understand all things. God has wisely reserved to himself the distribution of the races of men, and he will have it as it pleases him, Abraham Lincoln to the contrary notwithstanding.

History does not record an event so full of interest to a single despised and downtrodden people, in all its annals. Nor does it furnish another example of a great and free, powerful and independent people, by its accredited head, calling to the few oppressed to deliver them from their troubles by migration from their native land. Nor does history inform us that a nation ever existed with all the advantages of government, growth, wealth, and power; with its intelligence, industry, and boasted freedom of thought, and great principles of free institutions, with such an anomaly as slavery in its midst—with the great heart of the masses struggling to be free.

It is prognostic of the future to see the chief Executive of the nation calling into his presence a number of the despised race, and proposing to them means for the deliverance of at least a part of their brothers in bondage. Over three thousand years ago God commissioned his servant to go and demand of the chief man of the then ruling nation, to let his bondmen go that they might serve their God. But how changed the scene now! the chief of the nation calls the poor despised to offer them means of emancipation, and prays them to depart that his brothers may stop cutting each others throats.

The cry is not from the messengers of the poor who are to be free by God's appointment, but from the enslavers, the masters—O people, let us alone, and depart from us and ours! No calling for ten plagues by the hand of a Moses to make the hard heart of the ruler sensible of his danger, but from another source comes the cry—Let these people go. The woes of the nation, the dismemberment of the States, the destruction of commerce, the paralyzation of the resources of wealth, the wails of the dying, the grief of widows and orphans of the million cry to the chief magistrate—Let these people go! Politicians, who for years have been crying peace, peace, compromise, concession, concession, to the nation, have discovered that they were only preparing a volcano which has burst upon the country and is sweeping away all their strongholds, and destroying the very system they have so studiously sought to foster and support. The cries of four millions of bondmen have had audience before the throne of the Eternal, and he has come down to deliver them. He hath had respect to their tears, to their long-suffered wrongs. They have been imploring his interference in their deliverance. These have gone up from the sugar plantations, the rice swamp, the cotton field, the cane break, and from the accursed slave pens in the Southern cities. From the heart-broken mother and robbed cradle, from fathers whose offspring and dear companions have been ruthlessly torn away by the bloody tyrants of the slave States. And in all these years the dominant race has been at ease; they have not been troubled about the poor and despised slave's wrongs.

A few philanthropists have been pleading their cause, but they have been derided, cursed, stoned, egged, and mobbed by the masses of the people. At least these things have been tolerated to such an extent that there has been a tacit acquiescence in these outrages. The rights of humanity have been overlooked by the nation. Wealth, honor, distinction, and national greatness, has been their ruling passion. Hence their utter disregard of righteousness, justice, love, and mercy, in their dealings with their fellow man in his misfortunes. The rapid march to greatness which has been their boast for years, has so intoxicated them that they have not stopped to see where the chariot of state was driving, but in a moment when they least expected, they have found themselves amid thrones and principalities and powers [illegible] and desolate homes, awakes the nation to the reality of the truth that war, stern, death dealing war, is in the land. And why? Because they have strenuously disregarded the plain teachings of the Bible; they have not loved justice, nor done righteously, they have not had compassion on the stranger within their land when they have seen him standing ready to perish; but in the pride of their hearts have oppressed them, and provoked Heaven's displeasure. Hence their humiliation in the eyes of all nations. May Heaven be propitious before they are destroyed forever.

A PERSIAN FABLE

A Persian had a pet parrot, and, previous to going to India, he asked Poll what present he should bring her. "No present," said the parrot; "only when you see my brothers dancing on the greenward, tell them how I pine in a little prison." The merchant journeyed and delivered his message, and a parrot immediately fell dead from a tree. The merchant returned, and immediately told his parrot, who fell dead from his perch on hearing the news. The merchant, with tears, picked up the body and cast it out; when, to his [illegible] saying, "The Indian parrot taught me to die to [illegible] and the seed should spring and grow up, he [illegible]

INCREASE OF FAITH

If a traveller were passing through a vast reach of country to gain a destined point, to arrive at some great city where his business is to be accomplished, what would be thought of his conduct, if, happening upon a barren tract of landscape, a desert, or a rocky ridge of mountains, he should say, I will give up my journey for the present, till the country becomes more favorable? or if he should conclude and say, This cannot be the right road to the city; it is not possible that the path can lead through this desert, or over this mountain? or if he should argue and say, If this were the right path, it would certainly lead through a more interesting region, and I should find the landscape more delightful? He would be thought to have taken leave of his senses if he should stop travelling till the road became more interesting. But the Christian traveller is still more inconsiderate and foolish who says within himself, every time that the spiritual landscape wears to him an uninteresting aspect, every time that prayer becomes a burden, and the reading of the Bible a leaden duty that has lost its charm, every time that his soul meteth for heaviness, and cleaveth unto the dust, or wandereth in darkness, or in stormy weather, or over craggy mountains,—who says within himself, I cannot be in the right way; if I were, it would be more interesting; this cannot be the way to the city; there must be some other way; this cannot be God's way. If a soul should pause and argue in this way, what would become of it? But no! the soul is bound to make progress over rough places as well as smooth ones, and through uninteresting landscapes, and in dark and stormy weather. It is God's way, though these feelings of despondency, or impatience, or discouragement, or unbelief, are not God's feelings. The way of duty is the way of God's appointment; but the feelings that throw their own coloring over it are the feelings of an imperfect and distrustful or discontented human heart; the Christian pilgrim is not to give way to them, but to resist them; and for him the discipline of faith is to go forward, notwithstanding these feelings, looking to the end.

"Ye have need of patience, that, after ye have done the will of God, ye might receive the promise." The way itself may in reality be a wilderness; and there have been memorable cases in which, the souls of the pilgrims being much discouraged because of the way, they have turned aside to seek a better way. But the way that for the present seems easier, leads to the end to a place that is infinitely worse than all the evils in the way through the wilderness. The Castle of Despair receives the pilgrims at the end of the wrong way, the way that seemed easier; and the evil experienced in that castle is incomparably worse to bear than all the discouragements which made the soul of the pilgrim to faint within him in the right way. The discouragements themselves afford a discipline to faith. How, indeed, should faith be disciplined, if there were not difficulties to be overcome, discouragements to be struggled with? The enjoyment of serene weather, perpetual sunshine, and a flowery path, may be a discipline for gratitude, but leaves no opportunity for the trial of faith.

Faith itself, the habit of faith, gained by doing duty, is one of the rewards of faith. To him that hath, and that putteth his money in active use for the Master, shall be given the more: but from him that hath not shall be taken away even that which he seemeth to have. From the discourse of Christ following the prayer of the apostles, it would seem probable that they had been looking for the rewards of faith beforehand. It may have been a miraculous faith, which they desired for present exercise, for present power in Christ's service. But our blessed Lord told them that they could not receive so great a gift, except through and after a course of faithful obedience. They must do their work of faith for their Lord and Master, and then they should eat and drink. Then this faith should be completed, and in its very completion they should have their reward. But they could not claim it as a debt, and they must not indulge beforehand in any thought that their works of service, or the faith wherewith already they wrought them, were, or could be, works of merit, on the ground of which they could claim acceptance, or step into office in Christ's kingdom. For after they had done all they could do, they could not have done any thing which they were not bound to do; any thing, the neglect of which, or the refusal of which, would not have been a sin. Does a parent lay claim to great merit because he provides for his children food which is not injurious, or because he takes the proper steps to have his children taught the rudiments of common knowledge necessary for their existence? Does a servant deem that he lays his master under obligations because he does not neglect to perform the daily common duties of his station? Does he claim, when he has spread the table for his master, and waits upon him while he is at meat, to have done a service of great merit, on the ground of which he may claim an extraordinary reward? When he goes upon a common errand, which not to do would be rebellion, and disobedience, and unfitness for his place, does he think to have brought his master under obligations for a service of profit to him, of which he can boast, as if it were something above a mere simple, unavoidable duty, something supererogatory? I trow not.

Such was the instruction of our blessed Lord to his disciples. They were to remember that faith itself was of gradual growth. If they had the seeds of it, the beginnings of it, the true principles of faith, and would go forward in a course of simple obedience for the service, the honor, the glory of their Master, their faith would grow into great power and glory, and in that very increase would bring both its fruits and its rewards. But they must not seek for it as a selfish thing, or as a grace of power for self-aggrandizement or mere personal comfort and enjoyment, but as a grace to be used for Christ, and a fitness for his service. No! they must they seek for it under the impression that by it they could gain heaven on the ground of merit, or a place in the Redeemer's kingdom on the ground of great attainments or great services, for that was to pervert the way in which the soul could be justified. It would be a great mistake to use faith as a kind of justifying works—a mistake into which the apostles themselves were then in danger of falling. Lord, I have so much faith, they would, under the influence of this mistake, have been thinking within themselves; and I claim to be made prime minister, or grand councillor, or first regent in thy kingdom. Or, under the same mistake, and the same mixture of worldly misapprehension, a mother might have come and said, Lord, my sons have so much faith—my two sons: grant that they may sit, the one on thy right hand, the other on thy left, in thy kingdom. But no! they knew not what they asked. And in asking for an increase of faith, they did it all under such darkness, such misapprehension—and it is very likely they did,—they needed great reproof, correction and instruction in righteousness. They needed just such an answer as the Saviour made, appealing to their own common sense, in regard to the business of a servant, and the work of faith as a service.

They had not yet learned that the grace of faith was a gradual discipline, not a mere sudden, supernatural or miraculous endowment. It was the gift of God, but a gift in his own way, not theirs. So is the kingdom of God, and so is faith, which individually is men is the very nature of that kingdom; so if a man should cast seed into the ground, and should sleep and rise night and day, and the seed should spring and grow up, he [illegible] not how. For the earth bringeth forth fruit of herself; first the blade, then the ear, after that the full corn in the ear. And again, the kingdom of heaven, and faith, the essence of that kingdom, is like to a grain of mustard seed, which a man took and sowed in his field; which, indeed, is the least of all seeds; but, when it is grown, it is the greatest among herbs, and becometh a tree, so that the birds of the air come and lodge in the branches thereof. Now, then, if ye have faith as a grain of mustard seed, if ye have the true germ of this grace, this growing germ, and will go forward in its development, by a course of persevering, self forgetting obedience to God,—obedience to your divine Master for his glory, out of love to him, and not regard to yourselves, this seed and principle of faith shall spring and grow, [illegible] you not how, and it shall become a great tree, that no tempest can uproot or shake.

Ye come to me, my disciples, as for a supernatural, miraculous endowment; but I tell you that faith is a discipline of your souls; it is a life, not a miracle; and it springs up, first the blade, then the ear, after that the full corn in the ear. Ye come to me for a miracle; I tell you it depends also upon yourselves; upon your own humility, and persevering simple hearted, single hearted obedience; it depends upon your own life for your Lord and Master. I cannot give you this faith before you have learned this discipline, and formed this habit of humble service, in dependence upon me. It would be like giving a servant his reward before he has performed the duties of his station. It would be like a master telling his servant to take his place at the table, and to eat and drink, before the master himself has been served, or his wishes and commands attended to. Your faith will grow by the patient exercise of that which ye already have. To him that hath shall be given, and he shall have more abundantly. But it is a habit, a life, a discipline of the soul, and cannot be a mere miraculous endowment. If ye cultivate its beginnings, and thus by grace make the germ and the gift of grace pass, into a life, a habit, then ye shall be able to do any thing, and nothing shall be too hard for you. But a life of faith is necessary for the growth of faith, and ye will meet with trials of your faith which nothing but the habit of your faith will be able to carry you through; and ye shall have works of faith to do, evil spirits to overcome, in which I shall have to tell you, This kind goeth not out but by prayer and fasting. Pray, fast watch, labor, strive, discipline yourselves as God leads you on, and [illegible] operate with him, while he is working in and upon you, and ye shall have a living faith, and a habit of faith that [illegible]

G. B. Cheever, D. D.

DISTRUST IN PRAYER

The great majority have little faith in prayer. This is one of those causes which may produce a habit of mind in devotion, resembling that of impenitent prayer, and yet distinguishable from it, and consistent, often, with some degree of genuine piety. Christians often have little faith in prayer as a power in real life. They do not embrace cordially, in feeling as well as in theory, the truth which underlies the entire scriptural conception and illustration of prayer, that it is literally, actually, positively, effectually, a means of power.

Singular as it may appear, the fact is indisputable, that Christian practice is often at a discount by the side of heathen habits of devotion. Heathen prayer, whatever else it is or is not, is a reality to the heathen idea. A pagan suppliant has faith in prayer, as he understands it. Grovelling as his notion of it is, such as it is he means it. He trusts it as an instrument of power. He expects to accomplish something by praying.

When Ethelred, the Saxon king of Northumberland, invaded Wales, and was about to give battle to the Britons, he observed near the enemy a host of unarmed men. He inquired who they were, and what they were doing. He was told that they were monks of Bangor, praying for the success of their countrymen. 'Then,' said the heathen prince, 'they have begun the fight against us; attack them first.'

So any unperverted mind will conceive of the scriptural idea of prayer, as that of one of the most downright, sturdy realities in the universe. Right to the heart of God's plan of government it is lodged as a power. Amidst the conflicts which are going on in the evolutions of that plan, it stands as a power. Into all the intricacies of Divine working and the mysteries of divine decree, it reaches out silently as a power. In the mind of God, we may be assured, the conception of prayer is no fiction, whatever man may think of it.

It has, and God has determined that it should have, a positive and appreciable influence in directing the course of human life. It is, and God has purposed that it should be, a link of connexion between human mind and Divine mind, by which through His infinite condescension, we may actually move His will. It is, and God has decreed that it should be, a power in the universe, as distinct, as real, as natural, and as uniform, as the power of gravitation, or of light, or of electricity. A man may use it, as trustingly and as soberly as he would use either of these. It is as truly the dictate of good sense, that a man should expect to achieve something by praying, as it is that he should expect to achieve something by a telescope, or the mariner's compass, or the electric telegraph.

This intense practicalness characterizes the scriptural ideal of prayer. The Scriptures make it a reality, not a reverie. They never bury it in the notion of a poetic or philosophic contemplation of God. They do not merge it in the mental action of prayer by action in any other or all other duties of life. They have not concealed the fact of prayer beneath the mystery of prayer. The scriptural utterances on the subject of prayer admit of no such reduction of tone, and confusion of sense, as men often put forth in imitating them. Up, on the level of inspired thought, prayer is PRAYER—a distinct, unique elemental power in the spiritual universe, as pervasive and as constant as the great occult powers of Nature.

The want of trust in this scriptural ideal of prayer often occasions [illegible] of a Christian. They only [illegible] It is in the nature of [illegible]

Of course, for a moment the philosophy of the Mind is made, that [illegible] of desire, no man will make persistently, with no hope of gaining an object. Despair of an object is speechless. So, if you wish to enjoy prayer, you must first form to yourself such a theory of prayer,—or, if you do not consciously form it, you must have it,—and then you must [illegible] trust in it, as a reality, that you shall feel the force of an object in prayer. No mind can feel that it has an object in praying, except in such degree as it appreciates the scriptural view of prayer as a genuine thing.

Our conviction on this point must be as definite and as fixed as our trust in the evidence of our senses. It must become as natural to us to obey one as the other. If we suffer our faith to drop down from the lofty conception of prayer as having a lodgement in the very counsels of God, by which the [illegible] prayer as the Scriptures teach it, and as prophets and apostles and [illegible] and in that proportion [illegible] motive to prayer [illegible] We cannot [illegible] such faith in prayer, with any more heart than a man who is officered with double vision can feel in obeying the evidence of his eyes. Our supplications cannot, under the impulse of such a faith, go, as one has expressed it, "in a right line to God." They [illegible] the [illegible]

From the Christian Instructor

LITTLE SINS

Sometimes, as we look back over our past life, we are apt to think that some particular action, or word or thought, was of little account, inasmuch as in that action, or word or thought we were guilty of a very little sin—a sin of very little importance; as if any sin could be of little importance. If we have been flattering ourselves with such a falsehood as this, these words of our Saviour to his disciples, "He that is unjust in the least, is unjust also in much," should come to us with all the fearfulness of a solemn warning. In them we are taught that there is, in reality, no such a thing as a little sin—that every sin is of infinite importance.

Now I know we are taught that "some sins in themselves, and some by reason of several aggravations, are more heinous in the sight of God than others;" yet, so infinitely great are they all, it is not for us to compare them or measure their magnitude. We know that the fixed stars are not all at the same distance from our solar system, we know that some of them are untold millions of millions of miles further from us than others; yet the nearest of them all is separated from us by such an immensity of space, that the astronomer even, with all the modern inventions for annihilating distance, is compelled to regard them as equally removed from the stand-point of his observations. So it is with our sins. Some of them are more heinous than others in the sight of God, but the least of them all is so infinitely great, so far beyond the reach of our comprehension, that, in our sight, the little must appear as the great, and the great must appear as the little. As far as we are concerned, therefore, there can be no little sins. "He that is unjust in the least, is unjust also in much."

That every sin is of great importance may be proved from the fact that every action is but an index of the heart. Actions are as nothing morally, except as they are the outward manifestations of the inward life. As the tree is known by its fruits, so the soul is known by its actions, and words, and thoughts. We need but a single apple from the tree—and it matters not whether that apple is large or small—to enable us to judge very correctly of its species; so we need but a single action of the man to judge very correctly of his character. If a fountain is poisoned, the chemist can detect that poison in a single ounce of the water, as well as though whole hogsheads were brought to him for chemical analysis. If the stream of life is poisoned at the very fountain, a single cup of the water will reveal its true character. Sinful actions do not make the soul sinful, any more than holy actions make the soul holy. The thing done is but the banner on the battlement—the colors borne at the head of the army. The banner does not make those hostile who defend the battlement; the colors do not make those enemies who meet on the field of deadly strife, they but show the character of those who fight beneath their folds. And can it make any difference whether the flag is large or small? In our own land, in these days of wicked rebellion, an ensign of our country's independence, of the size of a man's hand, will indicate loyalty just as true as the broadest banner that has ever been given to the breeze. So a single action is but the flag—the outward symbol of a host of vitiated appetites and ungovernable passions. And is not a little sin as truthful an index as one which the world calls great? It tells of deep corruption, of horrible profanity, of fearful enmity to God, of loathsomeness greater than that of corrupting humanity, and of death more repulsive than that of the grave.

That so-called little sins are of great importance may also be proved from the fact that [illegible] Continued growth is a law of almost universal application, through out the government of God. In nature, there is the acorn, the sapling, and the oak. In grace, there is the origin, the development, and the perfection. And in sin, as in nature and in grace, there is the seed, the tender sprout, the bent twig, the gnarled and knotted tree. No man ever reached the summit of high attainments in divine [illegible] gradually, step by step, his advances are made. So no man ever reached the foulest depths of actual transgression by one or two sinful actions. Revelation, history and experience all concur in [illegible] direct tendency of every transgression to lead to greater; no greater guilt, who will dare to say that any sin is of little importance? Is it a light thing to endure all the [illegible] of body, all the anguish of mind, all the [illegible] of soul, which is sure to follow a course of transgression? Is it a light thing to be covered, [illegible] seeking loathsomeness of sinful impurity? Is it a light thing to be tossed forever [illegible] the angry waves of Jehovah's indignation? How can [illegible] light thing, [illegible] small it may be, which introduces us into a course of ruin, and exposes us to the horrors of an everlasting death?

That little sins, falsely so called, are of great importance may be proved still further, when it is remembered that they are produced by little temptations. We should judge of the guilt of our fellow men by the greatness of the provious temptation. When Satan employs all his ingenuity and exhausts all his cunning to destroy the faith of [illegible] we can not [illegible] wonder that [illegible] for a time; and if such a one falls, we are ready to cover his shame with the mantle of forgetfulness. But if a man gives way before a little temptation, if he yields before the least wicked influence, we can regard him only with contempt.

Now, I do not say that little sins and little temptations are always companions; there are exceptions on both extremes. But I do say this is the general rule. Of this any one can have sufficient proof, during every hour of self-examination. Little sins have little excuse. If anything can aggravate our guilt, it is the fact that we went astray without any cause. Little sins have, therefore, a double curse resting upon them. They are sins in themselves, and therefore accursed. They are sins without the palliation of a great temptation, and therefore doubly accursed. They tell of a fall without a trial; of a victory without a battle; of a surrender without resistance; of a crime without incentive; of a sin without temptation.

Another argument might be drawn from the very nature of sin; but enough has been said to establish the truth of our position. Every sin is of infinite importance; and whoever trifles with one, however insignificant it may seem to be, is guilty of trifling with the best interests of his soul, of toying with the blessings of an endless life. That man is in imminent danger who is building his hopes of future happiness upon any distinction he may make between great and little sins. "He that is faithful in that which is least, is faithful also in much; and he that is unjust in the least, is unjust also in much." "For, whoso ever shall keep the whole law, and yet offend in one point, he is guilty of all."

R.

THE DAISY.

Not worlds on worlds in phalanx deep,
Need we to prove a God is here:
The daisy, fresh from winter's sleep,
Tells of his hand in lines as clear.

For who but he that arched the skies,
And paints the day-spring's living flood,
Wondrous alike in all he tries,
Could rear the daisy's purple bud?

Mould its green cup, its wiry stem,
Its fringed border nicely spin,
And steep the gouache—not gum,
That, set to silver, gleams within?

Then fling it, unrestrained and free,
O'er hill and dale, and desert sod,
That man, where'er he walks, may see
In every step, the stamp of God.

GOD'S PROVIDENCE.

Now, there may be some here who have friends far away: let me comfort them. The eye of God is looking on them. There may be some here who are about to part with beloved ones, who are going to distant countries. Wherever they are they will be as much in the keeping of God as though they were here. If one part of the world is not as near the sun's light as another, yet they are all equally near the eye of our God.

Transport me where you please, wherever the cloudy pillar of Providence shall guide me, and I shall have God with me. That thought comforted the great traveller, Mungo Park, when he was in the desert of Sahara. He had been robbed and stripped of every thing, and was left naked. He suddenly saw a little piece of moss, and taking it up, he saw how beautiful it was. He said: "Then the hand of God is here; here is one of his works. Though I call loudly, none can hear me, for there is nothing but the prowling lion and the howling jackal; yet God is here." That comforted him. Wherever you may be, whatever may be your case, God will be with you. Whatever period of your life you may now be in, God is with you. His eye is at the bridal and at the funeral, at the cradle and at the grave. In the battle God's eye is looking through the smoke; in the revolution there is God's hand managing the masses of men who have broken loose from their rulers.

In the earthquake, there is Jehovah manifest; in the tempest, there is God's hand, tossing the bark, dashing it against the rocks, or saving it in his hand from the boisterous waves. In all seasons, at all times, in all dangers, and in all climates, there is the hand of God.—Spurgeon.

A PRAYER FOR THE REBELS.

"Let the angel of the Lord chase them."—PSA. XXXV. 5.

While our excellent President is calling for more fighting men, would it not be well for the Church, through her organs, to call for more praying men? Among the great exploits recorded in history we find none more brilliant than those performed by Asa and Hezekiah. Both of them conquered on their knees. The alien armies were driven back because "the angel of the Lord chased them." They had no cannon, but the praying batteries did mighty execution. The prayer above recited is not for all the dwellers of the sunny South. May the Lord deal tenderly with the thousands of them who are innocent of the great transgression, and speedily extricate them from the sea of trouble into which they have been plunged by ungodly men. This prayer is for rebel chiefs. "Let the angel of the Lord chase them, scatter them as chaff before the wind; make them afraid; fill their faces with shame, that they may seek thy name, O Lord." This is an Old Testament prayer, but it ends with the New Testament spirit: "That they may seek thy name," etc. We have no right to pray that the worst of sinners, even traitors, may be sent to the devil; but we have a right to pray that God would feed them on the bread of sorrow, and give them the wine of astonishment to drink until they will submit themselves; then, I dare say, they will find mercy.

THE BLOOD OF CHRIST.

What avails the blood of Christ? It avails, what mountains of good works heaped up by us—what columns of the incense of prayer curling up from our lips toward heaven—and what streams of tears of penitence gushing from our eyelids, never could avail. "The blood of Jesus Christ, his Son, cleanseth us from all sin." "Helps us to cleanse ourselves, perhaps?" No, cleanseth us. "Furnishes the motive and the obligation for us to cleanse ourselves?" No, it cleanseth us. "Cleanseth us from the desire to sin?" No, cleanseth us from sin itself. "Cleanseth us from the sin of inactivity in the work of personal improvement?" No, from all sin. "But did you say the blood does this?" Yes, the blood. "The doctrine of Christ you must mean?" No, his blood. "His example it is?" No, his blood, his blood. O, what hostility the world still betrays toward this essential element of Christianity! Can any thing be stated more plainly in language than the entire Word of God declares that our redemption from sin is by the blood of Christ? And yet what strenuous efforts are constantly made to set aside this plain, essential, wonderful, and most glorious truth, that the blood of our Lord Jesus Christ cleanseth us from all sin!

LITERARY

The public life of Lord Macaulay, by Rev. Frederick [illegible] is the first attempt at a regular biography of the great essayist. The materials for the work have been collected, with care, from all accessible sources. The work contains [illegible] from sources unknown or inaccessible to the general reader.

The new [illegible] biography of Charles V. gives a [illegible] of the [illegible] expeditions, and of his visits to England, [illegible]

A [illegible] of Shakespeare's [illegible] has been republished in this city, by the new process of photography, [illegible] to the library [illegible] House.

The Christian Recorder.

Philadelphia, September 20, 1862.

HOME.

Through the ever-merciful providence of a kind and indulgent Father, we again find ourself at home, safe and sound. We would just say that we found a number of letters awaiting us, the most of which has been attended to as far as necessary.

Business of every kind is dull now in Philadelphia. We find many of the business places shut up, and many of their occupants gone to the seat of war.

QUARTERLY MEETING.

The Fall series of Quarterly Meetings for West Chester circuit will commence at Media, Chester county, Pennsylvania, on Saturday, September 21st, 1862.

The members of Quarterly Meeting are hereby notified to meet in the church at Media, at two o'clock precisely, on Saturday afternoon. Preaching at 8 o'clock, P. M.

Also, preaching three times on the Sabbath, with the Sacrament of the Lord's Supper in the morning.

By order of the Elder, Rev. J. P. Campbell.

J. STEVENSON,
Preacher in Charge

QUARTERLY MEETING.

The second quarterly arrangements of the Norristown circuit; the quarterly conference at Zion Mission, Philadelphia, September 20, 1862, at 3 o'clock, P. M.

Q'ly M'g,	Sept	21, Zion Mission, Phila.
"	"	28, Norristown.
"	Oct.	5, West Philadelphia.
"	"	12, Old Chester.
"	"	19, Horstown.
"	"	26, Germantown.
"	Nov.	2, Tea Chester.

W. D. W. SCHUREMAN, Elder in Charge.
T. H. COOPER, Subordinate.

NOT PUBLISHED.

The following letters to the Christian Recorder will not be published until we can obtain further information: One from Baltimore, Md., signed "ALPHA," which is a well-written piece, but there are some things in it which we cannot be responsible for. The author must send his full name, so that we may be in possession of it—then he may sign himself whatever he pleases. Also, one from Brother Hart, of Detroit, Mich.; he should get the signature of the preacher who has the charge where he lives. One from Washington, D. C., signed "CERBERUS." We have his full name, but the language is too personal in reference to one of our correspondents. As we have been away from home for some time past, we do not, really, know what correspondents have been saying in the paper. There may have been cause for a reply—and, as soon as we can find a little time to search for the paper which contains the article referred to, we can judge better what kind of a reply we would be most justified in admitting to our columns.

The columns of the Recorder are always open to friendly discussion on any question or subject concerning our people's welfare—religiously, morally, intellectually, or touching the arts and sciences, &c. We love to see kindly discussions upon subjects of general interest—but we cannot indulge a vicious taste for personal flings and feuds, let them come from whatever quarter they may—not even from our regular correspondents or subscribers—unless, indeed, there shall really appear a sufficient cause to justify us in so doing. Whether or not any article shall be admitted, we alone must be the judge, and our decision shall be final.

We have, also, one from Terre Haute, concerning which the author shall receive a note apprising him of the cause of its not appearing.

BISHOP PAYNE.

We call our readers' attention to a splendid article written by Bishop Payne in relation to the colored race in this country. Let every body read it.

ACKNOWLEDGMENTS.

Thomas E. Knox,	$1 00
Mrs. Julia Brady.
Miss Martha E. Anderson.
Mr. John W. Haskins,	1 00
Mr Peter H. Harberson,	2 00
Miss Amelia Williams.
Mr. Lloyd Johnson,	1 00
Mr. George Peterson,	1 00
Mr. Edward M. Jones,	1 00
Miss Sarah E. Gray,	1 00
Mrs. Margaret Burley,	1 00
Miss Mary Jordon,	2 00
Miss Fariba Pulliam,	1 00

WALNUT HILL, OHIO.

Mr. John G. Mitchell.

XENIA, OHIO.

Mr. E. T. Page,	1 00
Mrs. Eliza Carry,	2 00
Mr. James E. Newby,	1 00
Mr. John Cousins,	2 00
Mr. John W. Howard,	1 00
Mrs. Ann E. Harris.
Miss Lizzie S. Morris.
Rev. Wm. Davidson,	1 00
Mr. W. A. Clement,	1 00
Mr. Cyrus Vens,	2 00
Mr. Anthony Davis,	1 00
Mr. Josiah Maxwell,	1 00
Mrs. Nancy Riddle.
Miss A. M. Smith.

STEUBENVILLE, OHIO.

Rev. M. M. Smith,	1 00
Mr. David Malber,	1 00
Mr. George Snowden,	50
Miss Jane Ann Bruce,	1 00
Miss Martha Snowden,	1 00
Miss Catherine Malber.
Mrs. Hannah Dorsey.

SALEM, NEW JERSEY

Mr. Thomas G. Harris,	1 00

ALLEGHENY CITY

Mr. M. Howard,	1 00
Mr. Thomas Roach,	1 00
Mr. Thomas Highgate,	2 00
Mrs. Elizabeth Moore.
Mrs. Elizabeth Wilson.
Miss Ann C Sorrell.
Miss Flora Braden
Mr. John Turley,	2 00

NEW BEDFORD

Rev. William W. Grimes, on account for papers,	1 00
Rev. H. J. Johnson, for Recorders,	1 00

EDITORIAL CORRESPONDENCE.

Leaving St. Louis—Our arrival in Cincinnati—Great excitement among the whites—Cruel treatment to colored people—The Church, &c.

We left St. Louis, Mo., on Thursday, the 4th inst., at 4½ o'clock, P. M., for Cincinnati, on our way home, to fill an appointment we had made. We had a very pleasant trip. We arrived in Cincinnati at 3.45 P. M., the next day, and found but few persons on the streets, except those who were drilling for soldiers, to battle against their inveterate foe. All business places were shut up, and the apparent condition of the city would remind one of what they have read of the desolate condition of Jerusalem, when abandoned or forsaken by all the citizens, with the exception of a few wandering Jews, and those of the female sex. When meeting with them, they would seem to say, from the expression of their countenances, that we are cast down, and expecting every moment to be invaded by the foe, our fine mansions broken into, all of our fine, well decorated parlors ripped up and destroyed, our banks, fine stores, grocers, &c., pounced upon; the enemy taking what he wants, and destroying the rest. What shall we do? Trust in the Lord, not in man. We arrived at the house of Brother and Sister Jones, and found them at home. Mrs. Jones was in deep sorrow and trouble; the cause of which we shall speak shortly. It is really singular how a city can become panic-stricken in so short a time as to almost lose its presence of mind.

A council was held among the whites in relation to the employment of the colored people. Some thought they would not work, but would run and hide from being taken, and the best way would be to go and snatch them by force wherever they could find them. They know it was a false or erroneous view of the matter, but the Mayor and nearly all of his police were Irish, and we could not expect anything else from them. They decided, however, to put the colored people to work on the fortifications, and then sent the enemy of the colored people to hunt them up, and bring them dead or alive, without telling them what they wanted with them. The Irish, and many of them, too, among the lowest, were so proud of their office or sub-position, that they would go into the colored people's houses, and ask for the men or men, and if they were told that there was no man about the house, they would not believe them, but take the bayonet off their guns, and ram it through their beds. Day or night, they would do this to the colored people. There were some exceptions to this practice among the officers. The colored people were taken by the officers and thrust all into a place called the city lot, and kept in there without their breakfast and dinner. The reason assigned for such cruel treatment was, because the Irish said they would not go unless they made the colored people go too. In order to have them go, who have all the rights of citizenship, it was necessary to pounce upon those who are deprived of all the laws and rights of citizenship in this country only on account of their color. But did the colored people work after receiving such inhuman treatment? Yes; it was only for the proper authorities to say to them, "Gentlemen, our city is in danger, and every able-bodied man is called upon to defend it in behalf of the Government," and, like obedient children, they responded, and did it freely, too. They went out to the fortifications, or rather to build fortifications, in Kentucky, beyond Covington. His Honor, Judge Dickinson, is thereby convinced of the loyalty and willingness of the colored people to work for the Government; and, it is said by good authority, that the colored people would do more in one day than the same number of Irish would do in two days. It is really a pleasant sight to see three hundred or more meet on Broadway, arranged after the order of companies—A, B, C, &c.

On the 9th inst., we being in the city at 7 o'clock, A. M., some three hundred were in the ranks to go to work, and they were presented a splendid flag by the captain, who made a speech to them; and, in his very telling remarks, he said that he believed they would protect that flag, for they had as much right to protect it as he had, or any one else, and that they had as much right to be protected under it as he or any one else had. After he had finished his speech, he received three cheers from the whole company, and they were then marched down to the river, and conveyed over on the Covington ferry boat, headed by General Dickinson. It is but just for us to say, that the Government pays them $1.00 per day and board, and sees that their families do not suffer for anything. There is one other thing we ought to say; that is, as soon as the city was put under marshal law, the Provost Marshal and his men put the Mayor and his Irish police to one side, and stopped their cruelty to the colored people. The Irish were more or less mobbing and racking the churches of the colored people, but the Provost Marshal and his men soon put a stop to that, thank God. We hope that our people will go on and worship God, and not be discouraged; for the Lord is for Israel, and who shall stop him now? Our prayer is, that the good Lord may ever protect the oppressed and cast down.

We were at Allen's Chapel in the morning, and heard Fowler, a local preacher, who gave us some plain talk about our duty, &c.; and, at 3 o'clock, we preached. We must say that the church looked to us as though it were memberless, forsaken, and without funds. Many, it seems, have lost all sight of God and his Church, and some were afraid to come for fear of being mobbed, and others did not know (so they say) that there would be any church at all, as Brother Graham had gone to work upon the fortifications; but he returned, and it was published in the papers that clergymen were all exempt from labor. His members, of course, were glad to hear of that. We hope that the members will cheer up, and look to God, for he will protect them.

WORDS.

I have known a word more gentle
Than the breath of summer air,
In a listening heart it nestled,
And it lived forever there.
Not the beating of its prison
Stirred it ever night or day;
Only with the heart's last throbbing
Could it pass away.

Words are mighty, words are living;
Serpents with their venomed stings,
Or bright angels, crowding round us
With heaven's light upon their wings;
Every word has its own spirit,
True or false, that never dies,
Every word man's lips have uttered
Lives on record in the skies.

Household Words

WHAT WE ARE DOING IN BURLINGTON.

BRO. WEAVER:—Our church seems to be in a prosperous condition, and in fact all the churches and Sabbath Schools on this circuit, under the supervision of Elder Smith, and Bro J. H. Long, assistant. On the evening of the 10th inst. the young ladies and gentlemen surprised Bro. Long with a giving visit, at which time he was presented with Three dollars and twenty eight cents in money, and more than double that amount in groceries and other donations. Bro Smith was present, and returned thanks on the part of Bro. Long. He stated that he felt encouraged by such acts of charity bestowed on one of his co-workers in the Gospel, and he was confident that Burlington will do her portion in supporting two ministers. Bro. Long was very thankful and much gratified. Bro. Stevens made the presentation remarks, in which he said:—"Bro. Long, we have met here this evening, actuated by pure motives, to aid you in the good work of the Lord; and I now present you a work that Conference has recommended you to study, and you will receive it with my best wishes; and my paramount desire is, that you may become a proficient in this and all the works you have to study, and that you may more than come up to the requirements of the examining committee, and pass from this to other and higher degrees in the ministry. And on behalf of the ladies and gentlemen, the donations that you are about to receive, you will do so with their most esteemed regards for you as a minister; and their fires resolve in, in the midst of war and tumult the Gospel shall be supported, and its ministers maintained; as an evidence of this fact, they have, some months ago, organized an Aid Society, that meets once every month for the benefit of Elder Smith. With these remarks, I present you with Fifty cents that were given to me by a gentleman who could not be here himself.

A. C. S.

For the Christian Recorder.

FROM BRIDGEPORT, CONN.

DEAR BROTHER WEAVER:—Permit me to make a few remarks in your paper, for the first time. I am glad that the Recorder yet lives and comes to our city every week—and I hope it may live long, with the same intelligence at the head of it. These are days of improvement. I wish to inform the people that Bridgeport is not dead yet, though the Committee left it as dead. I don't know how long it will live, but we live to-day, thank God. It is a little strange how the publishing committee forgot Bridgeport. They all know E. B. Davis. The next day after I got the Minutes, I received a letter from one of the committee. He wanted to inform me about some money. He found Bridgeport omitted in the Minutes.

We had quarterly meeting on the 17th, and the good Lord was with us. On Sabbath afternoon we tried to preach from Luke, 24th chapter and part of fifth verse—"Why seek ye the living among the dead?"

Pray for us, that the word of the Lord may run and be glorified. The good Lord did not forget Bridgeport, though the committee did. I have many things to say, but not now. I would say a word here of the duty which men owe to God. Temperance: This might be strictly comprehended under the topic that might be discussed. I would say, temperance, meaning by it, abstinence from all excess.

I remain yours in Christ, E. B. DAVIS.
Bridgeport, Conn.

NOTICE.

TO THE DISTRICTS OF PHILADELPHIA, NEW ENGLAND, OHIO, INDIANA, AND MISSOURI, OF THE A. M. E. CHURCH MINISTERS.

Dear Brethren:—As we have a number of superannuated ministers on the list in said Districts, therefore it will be expected that the ministers and preachers, on their circuits and stations, will do all they can to collect the two cent money; and we also recommend that the Class leaders be instructed to collect and set the amount on the Class book opposite each member's name, as also all the collections called, per Discipline, for the Annual Conference, and publish the same once every quarter, that it may be seen who they are that work for God and his cause. We think it is time to give credit to those of our people who do work, so that God's name may be glorified.

FIRST GENERAL ASSEMBLY OF THE GUSTAVUS ADOLPHUS SOCIETIES OF AUSTRIA.

Protestantism in Austria begins at length to give promising signs of vitality. On July 26 the first General Assembly of the Gustavus Adolphus societies of Austria met in Vienna. The Austrians, being until recently without the right of association, have had but little experience in the organization of voluntary religious societies, and the success of the Gustavus Association is therefore all the more gratifying. The permission to found branch societies was given by the Austrian Ministry a few years ago. Last year the representatives of Austria appeared for the first time at the annual General Assembly of all the German societies, where they were, of course, received with great cordiality and enthusiasm. Since then the local societies have been organized into provincial associations in Lower and Upper Austria, in Silesia, in the Tyrol, in Carinthia, Moravia, Bohemia, and in Trieste. The organization has now been completed by the convocation of a General Assembly of all the Austrian societies. Numerous delegates were present from all the provincial associations, as well as from the local societies of Gallicia. Only one of the crown-lands, Syria, was unrepresented. The Assembly organized itself by electing Superintendent Franz of Vienna President, and Senior Schneider of Silesia (a member of the Austrian Parliament) Vice-President. Next to the adoption of by-laws, the most important topic of discussion was the use to be made of the annual contributions, and, in particular, the question whether they were to be divided between a few or between many poor congregations. The latter view prevailed, and, accordingly, not only the congregations of the German and the Slavic provinces of Austria, but also those of Hungary, Transylvania, and several non-Austrian countries, receiving a share. The total receipts of the Austrian congregations were ten thousand florins, a part of which, according to the peculiar constitution of the Gustavus Adolphus Association, will be paid over to the Central Committee at Leipsic. Delegates were then elected to the General Assembly of the German societies, which is to meet this year at Nuremberg.

As this meeting at Vienna was the first of its kind in Austria, it has attracted considerable attention on the part of the Austrian press. The delegates enjoyed it as one of the happiest days they had ever seen; for it was the first time that the Austrian, the Silesian, the Tyrolese, the Carinthian, the Moravian, the Gallician, had met together in a Protestant assembly. They all went home with the joyous expectation that the Protestant churches of Austria will never relapse into that lethargy from which they are now emerging, and that they will some take an honorable place beside the other great Protestant bodies of Christianity. Many of them, moreover, indulged the hope soon to meet again as delegates to the first general Synod of the Protestant churches of the German and Slavic provinces of Austria.

THE EARLY PIETY OF SOLOMON.

He had been favored with the pious, though far from perfect example of his illustrious father, who had been careful to instruct him most religiously. The prophets and pious priests, it is fair to presume, took the deepest interest in his religious education. When David was about to resign the throne to him, he addressed a most affectionate and earnest exhortation to him to know the God of his father, and to serve him with a perfect heart, and a willing mind; adding, "If thou seek him, he will be found of thee; but if thou forsake him, he will cast thee off forever."

These instructions and entreaties, it is evident, were not lost upon the prince. His marriage, shortly after he ascended the throne, with an Egyptian princess, is not to be interpreted, as has sometimes been done, to his disadvantage. If we are to suppose that he resided in Egypt for a season, in the process of his education, we may also suppose that he then became acquainted with this princess, and that, through his instruction and influences, she embraced the religion of Israel. Immediately after his marriage, it is distinctly mentioned that "Solomon loved the Lord, walking in the statutes of David his father." On the altar in Gibeon, a favorite place of worship, he offered a thousand burnt-offerings. It was there that God appeared to him in a vision, saying, "Ask what I shall give thee," and, in answer to his prayer, promised to give him an understanding heart. The zeal with which he prosecuted the great work of building the temple, and ordering its worship, attests the correctness of his early piety. Read his prayer at the dedication of the temple. The ark had been deposited in the designated place, and the priests had withdrawn from the apartment. On the east of the altar the vast choir had taken its station, all of them dressed in white linen. One hundred and twenty priests, with silver trumpets, stood with them. When they sounded, the voices of the multitude were lifted, accompanied with cymbals, psalteries, and harps:

"PRAISE THE LORD, FOR HE IS GOOD; FOR HIS MERCY ENDURETH FOREVER."

Suddenly a cloud of glory, the symbol of the presence of DEITY, filled the temple, so that the priests could not stand to minister because of the cloud. The King addressed the people, recapitulating the leading events in the erection of the edifice, and then, ascending the brazen platform, prepared for the occasion, offered his sublime and memorable prayer of dedication. At the close of the solemn benediction he pronounced on the people, there was another manifestation of the Divine presence. Fire descended from heaven, and consumed to ashes the sacrifices which had been prepared and laid upon the altars. Thus did God signify his acceptance of the temple of Solomon, and of the nation, in this great public transaction.

SOLOMON'S POWER AND THE EXTENT OF HIS DOMINION.

David, as before observed, had quelled the enemies of the nation, and made several of them tributary to his kingdom. Syria, Moab, and Ammon, were little more than provinces of Israel. Solomon succeeded to the same power. The territory over which he swayed the sceptre, extended eastwardly to the Euphrates, westwardly to the shores of the Mediterranean, and southwardly to the frontiers of Egypt, in breadth about three hundred, and in length four hundred miles. David having been severely punished for taking a census of the people, no census was taken during the reign of Solomon; and therefore it is impossible to state the actual population of the country; but we are told that "it was like the sand which is by the sea in multitude." The national importance of the Israelitish nation, during the reign of Solomon, appears from his commercial treaties, and the enterprises he carried on in connexion with the Tyrians, the great maritime people of early antiquity. He had control of the trade of the immense caravans from India, which annually traversed the desert to the Euphrates; and by way of the Red Sea he had access to the precious metals and rare productions of the east African coast. He made a treaty with Hiram, by which he undertook, conjointly with the Tyrians, an expedition from Ezion-Geber on the Red Sea, through the straits of Babel-Mandel to Ophir. The articles of commerce which were brought from Ophir, were gold and silver, sandal wood, precious stones, ivory, apes, and peacocks. It would appear highly probable that the Phenicians must have visited the eastern coasts of the Indian peninsula. But as it appears difficult to form an idea of western India as a fruitful source of gold, it is probable that these expeditions visited southern Arabia, and the auriferous coast of Sofala, in eastern Africa. The inhabitants of India from the earliest times had made settlements in the eastern part of Africa, and on the coast immediately opposite the coasts of their native country; and the traders to Ophir might have found in the basin of the Erythrean and Indian Seas other sources of gold besides India itself.

Macdonald.

THE JEWS.

SOCIAL POSITION OF JEWS IN EUROPE.—They are beloved for the fathers' sake, and all the friends of Jesus Christ take a deep interest in their well-being. When all Israel is brought in, then shall we realize what in desire we sing.

"His name like sweet perfume shall rise
With every morning sacrifice."

In Austria, which, next to Russia, has the largest Jewish population of any of the European states, the Jews wield a great influence. Several of their prominent bankers have been raised to the rank of nobles, and one of them, Baron von Rothschild, has been called by the emperor into the senate of the empire. A large number of Jews have been elected members of town councils and of provincial diets, and the province of Upper Austria has sent two Jews to the lower house of the Legislature. The Czechs, of Bohemia, who, like all the Slavi, have been noted as fanatical persecutors of the Jews, have now made the full equality of Jews and Christians a part of their programme. In Gallicia, where until 1848 the Jews had to pay a disgraceful "Jews tax," amounting to over a million thalers annually, the leaders of the National party have boldly opposed the strong national prejudice against the Jews, and three of the latter have been elected members of the Gallician Diet. Strange to say, Hungary alone has been more slow than any other portion of Austria in meeting the just demands of the Jews, although Teleky, Pulsky, Klapka, Eotvos, Deak, and other leading patriots, warmly espoused their cause. In 1861 a Jew was for the first time appointed ordinary professor at an Austrian university, (Dr. Wesley at Prague,) and another (Dr. Ertael) was appointed extraordinary professor at the University at Vienna.

In Prussia a Jew (Dr. Veit) was a prominent and influential member of the House of Deputies. The Minister of Justice decided, in 1861, that Jews could be appointed as Judges. The educational statistics of the kingdom showed the remarkable fact that, in proportion to the aggregate population, the Jewish attendants of the colleges were five times the number of the Christian scholars.

In Bavaria an intolerant law, which restricted the settling of Jews to a number of places, was unanimously abolished by the three chambers, and the rights of the Jews warmly advocated by the Archbishop of Munich, the Bishop of Augsburg, and the President of the Protestant Supreme Consistory.

In England there are now five Israelites in the House of Commons. A Jewish mayor was elected at Rochester, and a Jewish high sheriff for Bucks. The Jewish Board of Deputies, under the presidency of Sir Moses Montefiore, continues to display a great activity in behalf of the general interests of Judaism.

In France a considerable number of Jews are professors of universities and colleges, and their influence on literature is great. They have, for a population of only about eighty thousand souls, four weekly and monthly papers, all of which are well edited. A society, established at Paris in 1860, under the name of "Alliance Israelite Universelle," bids fair to become, to a higher degree than any other association, a centre for the common interests of Judaism. The able Jewish financier, (M. Fould,) to whom the emperor is to apply for help, has been appointed Minister of Finance.

In the first National Parliament of Italy, which country has only a Jewish population of only forty thousand souls, there are six Jewish members; and two Jews have been appointed, in 1861, ordinary professors at the Universities of Bologna and Pisa.

In the kingdom of Poland, where formerly the Jews were more bitterly hated than in any other country in Europe, the national movement seems to have put an end to all mutual animosity. The Jews have actively taken part in the patriotic demonstrations, and very recently seven Jewish students were exiled, together with eight Christians, to Siberia. On the one hand, the merchants and manufacturers of Warsaw adopted, by acclamation, a resolution which abolishes all distinction between Jews and Christians, and the Archbishop of Warsaw, in a circular, enjoins toleration toward the Jews.

In the Mohammedan countries of Northern Africa the Jews show themselves much more accessible to the Christian civilization than the Mohammedans, and their progress is likely to facilitate the success of Christian missions. In Morocco, where they were cruelly persecuted shortly before the war with Spain, they now number about one hundred and twenty thousand, and the emperor has recently given strict orders to protect the Jews in future from any attacks of the populace. In Tunis the Bey has appointed a Jewish brigadier general, and the Italian residents have elected a Jew their president. The emancipation of the Jews from oppressive and cruel laws has improved their social position, and diminished their hostility to Christianity.—Independent.

LETTER FROM ENGLAND.

MAYNOOTH COLLEGE, for which, as a nursery for the Romish priesthood—not for the United Kingdom only, but also for America and our Colonies—Parliament has settled to give so large a sum annually without a vote, has come afresh into light, in connexion with a Return made (extorted, let me rather say,) in response to a motion by Mr Whalley, M. P. This gentleman has succeeded Mr Spooner as the opponent of the Maynooth Endowment. The Return contains the names, ages, and number of students attending the College of Maynooth since the 31st day of August, 1844, and the names and number who left College during that period who have not completed their education, with the date of leaving.

It appears from the Return that the number in the College at the end of the Academic year in 1844, was 409. The next year the number that entered was only 24; but in 1846 there were 141, and in 1847 the number was 94. That was about the average during subsequent years. The total number that entered during the eighteen years was 1,559. Of the students attending the College in 1844—that is, 409—a considerable proportion, 163, left without completing their education; of those who entered since that time, 654 left without completing their education, leaving only 905, out of 1,559, who had continued during the prescribed course. This gives an average of fifty priests a year coming out of Maynooth, with their education completed according to the system of the institution. The Return does not state what proportion of the students whose education was incomplete entered the priesthood, or how many abandoned the profession, and engaged in secular pursuits.

INCOME AND PROPERTY TAX is a subject which now (alas!) will be coming home to your own homes and houses in the United States. The following, as to the amounts collected last financial year from suffering Britons, (who have not yet "got quite used to it," as the Irishwoman said of the eels which she skinned alive,) will be perhaps interesting to your readers. The net amount of property and income tax for the year ending April 5th, 1860, was £9,617,817; of which Scotland paid £819,097, and Ireland £777,673. For 1861 the total was £10,764,604. Of the amount Scotland paid £920,626, and Ireland £862,027.

CHURCH MISSIONARY STATISTICS are as follows: It commenced without patronage, and had no ordained missionaries. The expenditure the first year was less than £100. It has now the patronage of forty Bishops, (some of them very cool towards it;) it has 148 stations established throughout the world, employs 192 European clergy, and 66 ordained natives. It has 2,171 lay helpers; it disseminates the gospel in twenty languages; it has gathered 36,000 scholars into its 800 mission schools; records 21,000 recognised members of the Christian Church as communicants, and has received and employed three and a half millions sterling for mission purposes.

THE ROMISH PROPAGANDA—as appears from the Report for 1861, just published—had receipts to £138,000, 1s, 10d. Toward this total, the British Isles, in the one year, gave £8,986; of this amount Ireland gave £5,933, leaving £3,053 for Great Britain. The Romish Diocese of Westminster and Southwark (London,) gave together £490. The Diocese of Beverly, Birmingham, Clifton, and Hexham supply another £100. The Liverpool Diocese sends only £221, and Salford (Manchester,) only £163. The Sees of Northampton, Nottingham, and Plymouth, gave respectively £12, £20, and £28. Eighty pounds is all that Scotland has been induced to part with for the conversion of the world to the Romish faith. And, in truth, the £7,053 indicated above, includes £1,489 belonging to 1860; so that the real sum is very little more than £1,500 for the year 1861 from England and Scotland. What is the real explanation of this? Why, that the Romanists in both countries are receiving rather than giving; that the Propaganda, for years, has been sinking gigantic efforts to stick the roots of Popery deep, once more, into our soil; that it is thus that cathedral-like chapels, convents, monasteries, and schools are rising over the land, wherever a little nucleus of Romanists—Irish laborers and railway navvies—are congregated. London itself, I doubt not, receives largely in this way.

The sums received by the Propaganda appear to include the sale of publications. What this is, it is difficult to say; probably the Romish newspapers—Tablet, Register, Dublin Mission, News, &c.—receive help. There are also small books and tracts.

Under the head "Missions of Europe," we have the allowance of "Alms" (grants,) among the different missions for 1861.

As to Scotland, three sums are mentioned, amounting to £2,440; England comes next, receiving £8,228, £400 of which goes to Cardinal Wiseman. Dr Grant, of Southwark, takes almost £1,000, and so forth. Hence it appears that nearly £10,700 came back to England and Scotland to return for the £1,500 contributed. This abundantly confirms what I have stated above, (written before I had noticed this last fact,) and also entirely accords with, and fully explains, what I myself, during the last twelve months, have seen both in England and Scotland. Ireland has to be content with less than she gives, for, while she gives £5,998, she only receives £2,240. Ireland, however, is pretty well supplied with Romish missionary already, and the people are so priest-ridden that they give out of their deep poverty for every demand made upon them.

But you ask, What about America? I answer, that she gives £6,106, and receives £42,560; so you perceive what a sore for your Protestant and heretical souls is cherished by the Propaganda De Fide, and how anxious the Society is to bring you within the orbit of True Faith.

THE BIBLE AT THE LONDON EXHIBITION

A space is to be accorded to the Bible Society, for the display of Bibles in various languages, in the gallery of the eastern dome of the Exhibition at London. Two cases are being put up, which will contain about half the versions printed by the Society, each book being labelled so as to distinguish the country to which it belongs, the people who use it, and the number of copies hitherto issued. Between the two cases is to be a large open English bible, with this motto inscribed over it—"The Source of all National Greatness;" the whole to be surmounted by a scroll, containing the following texts:—"Search the Scriptures, for in them ye think ye have eternal life, and they are they which testify of me." John v. 39. "Heaven and earth shall pass away; but my words shall not pass away." Mark xiii 31.

☞ In the northern gallery may be seen the New Testament printed on a single sheet of paper, exhibited by Collins, of Glasgow. The print is, of course, exceedingly small, but wonderfully clear. Mackenzie, of Glasgow, on the other hand, shows a magnificent illustrated Bible, of the largest size. This work has been set up entirely by a type-composing machine; the paper and print are both beautiful, and the illustrations are furnished by Frith's admirable photographs of the Holy Land.

Mr. Fry exhibits a fac simile reproduction of the only known copy of the first edition of Tyndale's first translation of the Testament in English. This curious fac simile contains six hundred and ninety-two pages of close small type. The copy has been made by tracing on transfer paper, placing this on lithographic stones, and then printing in the usual way, so as to ensure perfect correspondence with the original. The paper on which it is printed has also been expressly manufactured by hand labor, the fine and cross wires being placed in the paper maker's mould, so as to produce the same wire-marks as appear in the paper used by Schoeffer, in the old book; and in the same way all the irregularities in printing, orthography, and punctuation are faithfully copied. Only one hundred and seventy-seven copies of this curious reprint are issued.

An open gallery, decorated something after the manner of a shrine, has been erected opposite to the Exhibition, for the purpose of a gratuitous distribution of the Holy Scriptures, in seven different languages. The plan is not to give out the Bible in a complete form, but to divide it into little tracts, each containing a "book" or a chapter, promising the recipient that when he has read that, he shall be presented with another.

THE PROTESTANT THEOLOGICAL FACULTY OF VIENNA.

One of the most important measures for which the Austrian Protestants are indebted to their Government is the reorganization of the Protestant Theological Seminary, or, as it is called, the "Protestant Theological Faculty" of Vienna. Until the reign of the present Emperor, it seems to have been the design of the Austrian Government to exclude from it every eminent scholar. Only native Austrians were appointed; and so little liberty and encouragement was given to the professors, that not one of them occupies an honorable place in the annals of German theological science, while every other German university is represented by a number of names. Since the accession of the present Emperor, no less than four new professors have been called to the Theological Faculty of Vienna, each one of whom is favorably known by several works to the literary world. Recently the Theological Faculty and the Protestant churches in general have applied to the Government to incorporate the Faculty with the University of Vienna. This petition, as was to be expected, has met with the most violent opposition on the part of the Catholic bishops and the Ultramontane party, and the Archbishop of Vienna has even threatened to prohibit all students of Catholic theology from attending the lectures of the University, in case the Protestant Theological Faculty should be recognised as a part of the University. But his threats and opposition have had little effect. The most numerous of the Faculties of the University, that of Philosophy, has at its last meeting voted, with an immense majority, in favor of admitting the Protestants; and little doubt is felt that the Government will soon pronounce the incorporation.

St. Paul, Sept. 5th, 1862.

MESSRS EDITORS:—I place at your disposal the following notes on our Minnesota war. I had postponed writing for some days in order to get something like facts, as the first rumors that came were of the most wild and conflicting kind.

The Sioux, or Dakotahs, as they are more generally called, are the most powerful of North American Indian tribes. They number, in all, it is estimated, from 30,000 to 36,000 warriors. They occupy a territory of some 200,000 square miles, from the sources of the Minnesota and channel of the Red river of the North on the east, to the "Black Hill" on the west, and from the forks of the Platte on the south, to Devil's Lake on the north. They are divided into a number of nations or councils, and these again into bands. Four of these have had a reservation given them by Government, in Minnesota, and from this are known as the Minnesota Sioux numbering about 1200 or 1500 warriors; while all west of the Minnesota boundary are known as the Sioux of the plains.

On Sabbath, the 17th of Aug., a few, probably ten or twelve, Indians made an attack on the inhabitants of Acton, Brown Co., killing five persons, firing a number of houses, and driving off all the horses and cattle they found. These were of the Wide-warkan tonum band. Also, the next day, they made an attack on the Agency at Redwood, (this is known as the Lower Agency,) breaking open the warehouses and stores, and killing a number of persons; a few escaped to the woods.

News of this reaching the Upper or Yellow Medicine Agency, where the entire Minnesota Sioux were assembled to receive their annuities, and the commissioners being expected the next day, a council of war was immediately called. In this council there were three parties. One wanted a war that would exterminate the whites entirely; another wanted to destroy all their property, take their horses and cattle, but shed no blood; a third party, with Other Day, a distinguished Christian Indian, counselled peace and good behaviour. But the voice of this last party was not heard in the clamors for war, nor was the opinion of the second party. But having now the scent of blood, the multitude thirsted for more—arguing that all the white warriors were down South putting down the rebellion, and they would find nothing but women and children to fight in all the Minnesota valley; also, that they all would have part in the punishment, if any should come, for the injury already done, and might as well have part in the spurt and spoil as they would in the punishment and hesitancy to begin the bloody work.

Other Day, and his friends, finding such to be the determination, stole away, determining to rescue all the whites in their power. Other Day, himself, warned an entire settlement, and collected all who would go with him, sixty two in number, and piloted them in safety to Shacopee—himself coming on to St Paul to hasten forward assistance. Two others of his company went to the missionaries, Dr Williamson and Rev. Mr. Riggs, collecting them and their families and friends, to the number of forty-two, and led them, for six days and nights through forests and prairies, in continued peril of their lives, to a place of safety.

In the meantime, news of the disturbance was taken to Fort Ridgley. Captain Marsh, who was in command immediately started with 51 men for the Lower Agency, but was surrounded by a large body of Indians and cut to pieces; only 20 men escaped, three of these mortally wounded. He had left but 20 men at the Fort, under command of Lieut Gere. Lieut Sheehan, who had left the Fort a few days before for Ripley, discovered by some means that there was a disturbance among the Indians, turned immediately, and by a forced march went 42 miles to the Fort in nine hours. He had with him about 80 men. About the same time Major Galbreath, with about 50 recruits that he was taking to Fort Snelling, reached the Fort. All this was most providential; for they were scarcely in quarters till a large body of Indians made their appearance and commenced the attack, but were repulsed with heavy loss. This was on the 20th. On the next day they made an attack, and, on the 22d, a most furious assault,—each time to be repulsed, for the little band fought with desperation.

On the 18th the town of New Ulm was attacked by about 300 Indians; but the inhabitants rallying immediately, drove the Indians back, losing not more than four or five persons, though a number of houses on the outskirts of the town were burned by the Indians. A second attack was on the 23d. The fight was most determined on both sides. Ten whites were killed, and fifty one wounded. The Indian loss here is estimated at about 70, as they were seen carrying away their dead. The town was abandoned on the 25th, all moving to Mankato.

In that melancholy cortege were mothers weeping for children slaughtered before their eyes; strong men in a moment bereft of wealth, of wife, of family; little children who, when their parents had been attacked, had fled to the graves and bushes, and so escaped—all bowed down and overwhelmed with grief, producing, in two instances, actual insanity. In that melancholy train, halting along on hand wagons, were eighty wounded persons, among them many little children packed in the most barbarous and cruel manner.

But the most heart sickening part of the horrid work can never be described—the massacre of individuals and families along the frontier, who could not be removed in time to escape. House after house is entered, its inmates butchered, and it set on fire. Refugees say that they have travelled miles at night by the light of burning houses. They have kindled the entire frontier, from Fort Abercrombie to Pipestone Quarry, into a conflagration of savage war, vague and exaggerated reports, circulating with astonishing rapidity through all the country, produced the wildest panic. Every road was full, by day and night, of men, women, and children, fleeing—they hardly knowing why or where. Never was there a more sorry or hasty flight. There were many instances in which women, with infants in their arms, travelled six or seven days without food. But I attempt no description.

Of the number killed, we can at present form no correct estimate. Names of 382 have been collected, though a few of these may be prisoners and yet come to light; but there are many more, doubtless, to be added. To this we may add from 100 to 150 wounded, many of whom cannot live.

At the earliest possible moment a regiment of troops was sent to the scene of disturbance, and many small companies rushed forward from different parts of the State. Another regiment has followed. The Indians fled at the approach of the troops, who were in hot pursuit at latest accounts.

Some days ago, it was thought that this outbreak was instigated by Rebel Agents from Missouri, as strangers of suspicious character were seen among them some days past. This was the more readily believed, as there was some disturbance among the Chippewas about the same time, and a panic stricken people could see a line of gleaming tomahawks and swinging knives from Lake Superior to Texas, advancing with savage haste to act in concert with the Rebels. But the Chippewa trouble seems to be all settled; and we learn, from reliable sources, that the whole offence has come from the work of a dozen Indians at Acton,—one of those sad affairs which may happen at any time on the frontier. The whole tribe, however, were exasperated by waiting on their annuities after they should have been paid, and the little spark has burst forth in this terrible slaughter and conflagration.

But all are inquiring, "What is to be the result of all this?" To this we may answer, positively, that the work, on the part of the Indians, is now done. They can make no further advance for the present. Their failure at Fort Ridgely and New Ulm has consequently arrested their progress. We may answer, conditionally, that

Domestic Items

Important from the Potomac.—

Lee was commanding in the direction of Harper's Ferry all day yesterday, ceasing at four o'clock, P. M. The result has not been ascertained.

General Burnside passed through Frederick early on Saturday morning, and the whole army pushed on after the enemy by every road, and even crossing the fields.

The people turned out to welcome Burnside with the wildest enthusiasm, including men, women and children, and when Gen. McClellan came, the people blocked up the streets so that it was difficult for him to reach his headquarters. The scene is described as most exciting, the people waving flags and handkerchiefs, and even the women screamed words of welcome at the top of their voices.

The advance guard entered Frederick on Friday evening at 5 o'clock, and had a skirmish in the streets with Stuart's cavalry. Several were killed on both sides, and Colonel Moore, of the loyal Virginia Cavalry, was captured by the rebels and carried off, but was afterwards rescued.

A rebel train of one hundred ammunition and subsistence wagons was captured by General Franklin, and about 150 rebel prisoners had been sent into Frederick

The War in Maryland.—We make the following extracts from General McClellan's official despatches.

HEADQUARTERS ARMY OF THE POTOMAC,
Three Miles beyond Middletown,
Sept. 14, 9 40 P M.

After a very severe engagement, the corps of Generals Hooker and Reno have carried the height commanding the Hagerstown Road. The troops behaved magnificently. They never fought better.

General Franklin has been engaged on the extreme left. The firing indicates progress on his part.

The action continued till after dark, and terminated leaving us in possession of the entire crest.

It has been a glorious victory.

I regret to add that the gallant and able General Reno is killed.

THE REBELS IN FULL RETREAT.

Headquarters Army of the Potomac,
September 15, 8 A. M

The enemy is making for the river in a perfect panic, and General Lee last night stated publicly that he must admit they had been shockingly whipped.

FRANKLIN'S MOVEMENT A COMPLETE SUCCESS.

Headquarters Army of the Potomac,
September 15, 3 A M

I am happy to inform you that Franklin's success on the left was as complete as that on the centre and right, and resulted in his getting possession of the Gap, after a severe engagement in all parts of the line.

The troops, old and new, behaved with the utmost steadiness and gallantry, carrying, with but little assistance from our artillery, every strong position defended by artillery and infantry.

I do not think our loss is very severe. The corps of A. S. Hill and Longstreet were engaged with our right. We have taken a considerable number of prisoners. The enemy dispersed during the night. Our troops are now advancing in pursuit of them.

Headquarters Army of the Potomac, at Boivar,
September 15 10 A. M

Information has this moment been received completely confirming the rout and demoralization of the rebel army. General Lee is reported wounded, and General Garland killed.

General Hooker alone has over one thousand more prisoners, seven hundred having been sent to Frederick.

It is stated that General Lee gives his loss at fifteen thousand. We are following as rapidly as the men can move.

Reported Surrender of Harper's Ferry.—

DEATH OF COL. MILES.—Baltimore, Sept. 16.—Passengers arrived from the Monocacy report seeing paroled prisoners from Harper's Ferry, who report the surrender of Harper's Ferry on Monday morning, after a most gallant defence, and the death of Colonel Miles, who was killed by a shell cutting off one of his legs. According to the report, Colonel Miles evacuated Maryland Heights on Saturday evening, after exploding one of his heavy guns and throwing the others down the rocks.

The officers were allowed to go out with their side arms and horses, and the men with their personal effects, which indicates that the surrender was conditional.

The intelligence from the front this morning is of the most cheering character, notwithstanding the bad news from Harper's Ferry. General McClellan was pushing them with a vigor most destructive to the enemy.

He pursued the enemy on Monday morning with his Reserves and a large body of fresh troops. The enemy took the road towards the river at Harper's Ferry and at Shepherdstown, and he was pursuing and shelling their retreat, causing great loss.

In several contests, on Monday, where they made a stand, our troops charged on them with such vigor that they fell back from point to point in great haste.

The battles and advantages obtained on Monday are thought to be superior in importance to those of Sabbath.

Drayton's South Carolina Brigade is entirely gone, either killed, wounded, or prisoners. The Seventeenth Michigan, one of the new regiments, did up this brigade, first with bullets, and finally with the bayonet.

General Howell Cobb was wounded and taken prisoner. He will be back to Frederick sooner than he boasted he would.

General McClellan was pushing on them last evening, however, very closely, and had already sent to the rear eight thousand prisoners and four batteries.

HARRISBURG, Sept. 16, 10 P.M.—A despatch just received at Headquarters, says that Stonewall Jackson has recrossed the Potomac, and General McClellan has engaged him with tremendous force this side of Sharpsburg.

Latest—Great Victory for the Union Army.—HAGERSTOWN, Sept. 17.—A battle has been raging furiously for the past two days on the Antietam creek, a tortuous stream, having its source in the mountains, and running down to the Potomac midway between Robertsville and Sharpsburg.

The rebels, cut off from the iron bridge at Harper's Ferry by the advance of General Franklin's corps, and fearing to cross the Potomac at any of the fords, with General McClellan pushing down hard upon them, took this creek for a line of defence.

During yesterday the battle raged with great spirit, and the firing on either side was very heavy until towards sundown, when the rebels were flanked by Hooker and Porter, and were being severely punished. Their firing became desultory, and it was evident that their ammunition was giving out.

This morning the battle was renewed by the rebels with redoubled vigor; they acted as if they had been reinforced and furnished with fresh ammunition.

The battle lasted until four o'clock this afternoon, when the rebels retreated, leaving General Longstreet and the remnant of his division in our hands as prisoners of war.

Our victory is sure, but it has cost us many officers and men. Major-General Hooker was wounded in the foot by a Minie ball while leading a second brilliant bayonet charge to-day, and General Mansfield is either killed or taken prisoner. He fought most heroically during the entire affair to the time he was missed

General Burnside has taken possession of Harper's Ferry, and is advancing on a special mission with his corps,

Revolutionary Patriots.—There are only 63 revolutionary patriots alive, viz.: In Massachusetts, 3; Maine, 9; Vermont, 3; Connecticut, 2; New York, 13; Pennsylvania, 1; Ohio, 4; Michigan, 2; Illinois, 1; Indiana, 2; Wisconsin, 2; Kentucky, 1; Tennessee, 6; North Carolina, 2; Georgia, 5; Missouri, 1; Virginia, 3; District of Columbia, 1; Arkansas, 1; There are none in the States of Rhode Island, New Jersey, New Hampshire, Iowa, Louisiana, Alabama, Florida, Mississippi, California or South Carolina.

Our patriot fathers—where are they? The above statistical paragraph shows that the last soldier of the Revolution has passed away from our own State, and that only about three-score can now be ranked among the living in the whole country. Those were the men who saw "the fair temple of American independence rising like an exhalation from the soil." Of those men who witnessed the great drama of the American Revolution closed at Yorktown, how few are left to see the second conquest of that town in 1862! It may be well that they are not left to have the bright prospect, in which the most of them closed their latter days obscured by the wide-spread wings of that vampire, now feasting on the life-blood of the nation, which they should have strangled in its infancy.

Our patriot fathers have now gone from us, and their praises will be held in increasingly dear remembrance as years flow on.

> "How sleep the brave, who sink in rest,
> By all their country's wishes blest!
> When spring, with dewy fingers cold,
> Returns to deck their hallowed mould,
> She there shall dress a sweeter sod
> Than fancy's feet have ever trod.
> There honor comes a pilgrim gray,
> To bless the turf that wraps their clay,
> And Freedom shall a while repair,
> To dwell a weeping hermit there."

In a most emphatic manner does the epitaph apply to the many thousands who in the present unnatural war have gallantly poured out their blood for the fog of their country, following the call of duty in the spirit of their revolutionary fathers. Noble men, your blood flows in a righteous cause, and sacred be your memory in the American heart.—Portsmouth (N. H.) Journal.

Four Days' Experience with the Rebels in Frederick.—We took yesterday a correspondent with a good man who was in Frederick when Bradley Johnson and his Rebel followers came into the city, and remained there four days, not leaving until Tuesday evening. We append the substance of the conversation:—

Q. What is the number of the Rebels?

A. It would be impossible to say. They are, however, in large force. I should suppose not less than 70,000 men, though they claim to be over 100,000. One of the most intelligent of them told me that nearly the whole force who fought Pope are with them.

Q. Do they interfere with the people?

A Not in the least. I missed among them after General Lee's proclamation was issued, and spoke my sentiments very freely. They took it all in good part, and treated me as they thought proper

Q How did the storekeepers fare?

A. They have sold everything, and been compelled to give good money in change. They were ordered to open their stores by Bradley Johnson, and did not dare to refuse the money offered. Mr. A. J. Delashman, one of the leading Secessionists, had a large stock in boots and shoes, and, whilst dealing them out for Rebel scrip, fairly gnit his teeth in silence when some of his Union friends congratulated him on the fine business he was doing. Mr Delashman was one of the committee of citizens who went out to welcome the Rebels to the city.

Q. Have any of the houses of the Union citizens who absented themselves been invaded?

A. The only houses occupied by the Rebels is that of Gen. Cooper, and it is not abused. A party of soldiers, incited by some of the Secession town people, broke into the Frederick Examiner office, and commenced to destroy the office furniture, when a Secession lawyer, named Sloan, interfered, and the Provost Guard, coming up soon, dispersed the party. Bradley Johnson told them that any attempt to renew the outrage on private property would be punished by death.

Q. Did they obtain many recruits in Frederick?

A. Not many in Frederick, but there were about five hundred came in from Baltimore, Anne Arundel, Montgomery, and Carroll counties, and some from Baltimore city. After seeing the character of the army and the life which the men led, many of them refused to join, and were getting home again. When leaving myself I met a young men from Carroll county, and pointed them to Westminster. They acknowledged that they had been to Frederick to join the army but after "seeing and smelling" it, had concluded to return home

Q What sort of men have they in it?

A. They meant exactly what they said. I have never seen a mass of such filthy strong smelling men. Three of them in a room would make it unbearable, and when marching in column along the street, the smell from them was most offensive. There are some of the better class of men among them, but the great mass are men of low cast, and although under strict discipline, the filth that pervades them is most remarkable. Their sympathizers at Frederick have been greatly disappointed in the character of the army, and most of them are now as anxious for them to disappear as they were for them to come. Their coming to Frederick has been a sad visitation to the middling classes, many of whom have lost everything in exchange for Rebel scrip, especially the storekeepers. They have no uniforms, but are all well armed and equipped, and have become so inured to hardships that they care but little for any of the comforts of civilization

Q. What was the general appearance of the Rebel soldiers?

A. They were the roughest looking set of creatures I ever saw; their features, hair, and clothing matted with dirt and filth, and the scratching they kept up gave warrant of vermin in abundance. The Secession ladies of Frederick used to call the troops of General Banks "nasty, dirty creatures," and the Unionists had adopted a species of signs to remind them of their old taunts. Whenever a Unionist met a Secessionist on the street, he would commence to scratch, which all understood.

Q. What do you think of the purpose of the Rebel army?

A They admit that their coming into Maryland was a question of starvation or food. They were almost famished for food when they reached the Potomac, and say that for three days they had lived principally on green corn and apples.

Q But what is their purpose now?

A. They are in full force, and undoubtedly prepared when they crossed the river to meet General Pope and serve him as they did on the other side of the river, and capture Washington But when they heard that General McClellan was before them in full command, they became more cautious in their movements.

Q What is their opinion of Gen McClellan?

A. They respect him and fear him. In fact, they laugh at Pope and McDowell, and say that they advanced on them with the fullest confidence of defeating them and destroying their army. Had they found Pope in command on the Maryland side, they think they would have been in Washington in a few days.

Q But what is their purpose now?

A. Well, when I left Frederick on Tuesday evening, it was under the conviction that they were about to leave, and I feared that they might desire to take me with them. I had mixed among them so much, and talked so freely that I feared they would think I knew too much to be left behind. There was every indication that they had become alarmed at the systematic movements of General McClellan, and were backing well to secure a safe line of retreat back to Virginia. The starting of General Jackson, with his immense division, estimated at from 15,000 to 20,000 men of all arms, towards Hagerstown, was looked upon as the first indications of a backward movement. There were also evidences of trepidation among the troops, who began to think they were not on safe ground.

Q. Do you think they had any expectation of reaching Baltimore?

A. Not unless they had first succeeded in defeating McClellan and capturing Washington. They would never leave the line of the Potomac so long as General McClellan was at hand to move in their rear.

Q. Do you think they intend to enter Pennsylvania?

A. Not unless they defeat the army of General McClellan; then, of course, they will be able to go where they choose. The movement of Jackson up towards Hagerstown in with the intention of making raids into Pennsylvania; but if General Lee receives from the line of the Monocacy by General McClellan, Jackson will hasten back into Virginia by way of the ford at Williamsport. A heavy rain storm might also hurry their movement back across the river without making a fight.

Q. Do the Rebel soldiers look to be in good health?

A. Yes, generally speaking. They are gaunt and hardened by exposure, though many of them were suffering with diarrhœa on account of the food they had been eating.

Q. Did you meet many Baltimoreans among them?

A. No, not many. I questioned them with regard to the Maryland troops, and they generally answered that there were but few of them left. They had been in so many hard fights that they were either in their graves or in the hospitals. The Maryland regiments had been so diminished in numbers that they were disbanded. Those that are still in the service are acting as substitutes in the various regiments.

Q. Are there many Irish and Germans among them?

A. Yes, there is pretty much the same proportion of foreign element as in our army. They are not so bitter as the native born, but all boast of their prowess over the Yankees.

Q. Do they think that they are superior soldiers to the Federal troops?

A The men do, though the officers candidly admitted that our soldiers fought well, but that their Generals were not equal to those of the Southern army. They said that their victories were obtained by outgeneraling our Generals. Both officers and men admitted that if General McClellan were out of the way they would soon be in Washington.

Q. Were there any church services at Frederick on Sabbath last?

A. Yes; there were services in most of the churches, and some of the soldiery attended. At the Methodist Church, the Rev. Robert Carlton prayed most fervently for the success of the Union army, and for the President of the United States, and all in authority.

Q What do you think of the Rebel cavalry?

A. They were quite numerous, but their horses presented a poor appearance. They have the evidence of hard usage and scarcity of provender.

Q. How many leading Generals were in Frederick?

A. Generals Lee, Jackson, and Longstreet were all there; Roger A. Pryor is there, and has all the appearance of an accurate fiend. Bradley Johnson as Provost Marshal gave no offence to the Union men, and seemed desirous of securing their good opinion.

Our Navy.—The Philadelphia Inquirer recently published a list of the names, tonage, character, and present location and services of all but about fifty of the vessels of our navy; these fifty or sixty, the names and particulars could not be ascertained. The list published sums up thus:—

Sailing Vessels.		Steam Vessels
Ships of the Line,	8	Screw Frigates,	9
Frigates,	5	1st Class Screw Sloops,	6
Sloops of War,	16	" Side Wheel,	15
Brigs,	3	2d Class Screw,	10
Store Vessels,	3	" "	5
Receiving Ships,	7	2d " Side-Wheel,	4
Gunboat Ships,	18	Steam Tenders,	2
Gunboat Barques,	18	Iron Plate Frigates,	4
Mortar Boats,	25	Iron Clad Gunboats,	21
	—	The Ram Fleet,	9
	90	Side Wheel Gunboats,	37
		Screw Gunboats,	42
			166

Making a total of not less than 350, including those whose names and characters could not be ascertained. A few of these, particularly a majority of the iron-clad, are not finished and in service yet, but all will be within three months

THE CHRISTIAN COMMISSION.

The following letter from G S Griffith, Esq., Chairman of the District Committee of the Christian Commission for Baltimore, will show the need of the Hospitals in that city. All contributions sent to George H. Stuart, Chairman Christian Commission, 13 Bank Street, Philadelphia, will be thankfully received and promptly forwarded. Boxes should be marked distinctly No. 1, 2, 3, &c., and have the name of the place in one corner. Invoice of articles to be sent by mail. This will save much trouble

Baltimore, September 8th, 1862.

G H. STUART, Esq. Philadelphia:

Dear Sir—We are very thankful that you have anticipated our necessities in Baltimore at this important crisis.

Our hospitals are crowded and new ones established, wounded are continually transferred to us, and our Union Relief Associations labor harder than any hired persons. All donations that you send can be used to much advantage, for we need large supplies for the large number we have to nurse and cherish

The seven boxes of goods which came to hand yesterday and to-day were immediately distributed among the various hospitals in this city. The ladies of the Relief Association were delighted to receive this timely assistance from Philadelphia, and will return their thanks to you in due season.

We expect soon to write another letter to you, accounting more particulars of our work, &c. To-morrow we will acknowledge the receipt of your goods in the public paper.

We are informed that the convalescents in our hospitals suffer for the want of pantaloons—many are obliged to remain in bed longer than is necessary, and be deprived of proper exercises, on account of not having these indispensables. A chaplain informed us that some of his men even come out to the meetings in their dressing gowns. When the soldiers arrive, many are in a very distressing condition, and what little clothing still covers them is unfit for further use. Many are without shoes, and this is another article much in demand by convalescents. Also, woolen shirts, drawers and stockings.

I believe these goods are not furnished by Government, but very necessary to those invalids suffering from rheumatism and other pains contracted from lying in the swamps. Many formerly able-bodied men are now entirely helpless from sleeping in wet, marshy places, and a great many more are sick and dying with the fever. Our very interesting young man died yesterday evening, while we were at the hospital; but we believe that he was conscious of his state to the very last minute, and departed this life with a blessed hope of immortality Another was watched by a weeping sister, and as we looked on them we felt that it would be the last watch and the last day they would spend together on earth—that his spirit would soon be with a blessed Saviour, and another grave be marked for a young soldier

We should also be very glad to receive more tracts and books. We have furnished them to chaplains and others, and our stock is almost out. We liked the kind sent to us before—such as are especially published for soldiers—and, the "Silent Comforter." We would also like to have some small note-books, or time-books. I believe there is such as we have called for published by the Young Men's Christian Association of New York.

Yours in Christian bonds,

G. S GRIFFITH.

The Social, Civil, and Statistical Association of the Colored People of Pennsylvania open a subscription list to aid the freed men at Port Royal and other points where they may be located, and respectfully ask the co-operation of the colored citizens and others in this city, or elsewhere, in money or clothing.

Any amount of value received will be acknowledged, with the name of the donor, in the Recorder, where a constant record will be kept.

Subscriptions may be sent to Jacob C. White, at the office of the Lebanon Cemetery, 711 Lombard Street, and also to William Still, 107 North Fifth Street, and to Rev. E. Weaver, 619 Pine Street.

PAID.

Statistical Society,	$50 00
Clayton Miller,	2 00
William Still,	5 00
Robert Adger,	2 00
Henry Minturn,	2 00
Catherine Johnson,	2 00
Yeatl Locke,	2 00
Wm. Warricke,	2 00
Harriet Sheriter,	1 00
Sarah S. Hawkins,	1 00
Rev. Jonathan C. Gibbs,	1 00
James P Clay,	1 00
Benjamin F Hill,	2 00
S M. S.,	2 00
Elizabeth Gordon,	1 00
F. J. Dreer,	5 00

It affords us pleasure to acknowledge the receipt of ten dollars, the proceeds of Miss Anna E. Dickinson's lecture at Concert Hall for the contrabands, contributed to the S. C. and Statistical Association, to be applied as intended. WM. STILL.

Cor. Sec. of S. C. and Statistical Association of the Colored People of Penna

ADVERTISEMENTS.

WANTED.

One or two respectable colored men in a quiet and respectable family to lodge, where they can secure all the comforts of a home, with a furnished room.

INQUIRE,
No. 424 South 7th St, Phila.

MISS JANE JOHNSON,

Respectfully informs her friends and the public, that she continues laying out and shrouding the dead.

☞ All orders will be immediately attended to.

RESIDENCE,
613 South 8th St

"UNION COTTAGE,"

ATLANTIC CITY, NEAR THE INLET

The subscriber will always be happy to welcome her numerous friends, and the public in general.

TERMS

Board per week,	$4 00
" a day,	1 25
Single meals,	50

S H WARDS Proprietress

BOARDING
IN BROOKLYN.

MRS. S. PLANT (formerly Richardson) respectfully announces that she has opened a first-class BOARDING & LODGING HOUSE at No. 97 HIGH STREET, Brooklyn—where she is prepared to accommodate the public on the most reasonable terms

Her house being located in a very pleasant part of the city and within five minutes walk of Fulton Ferry, it needs thus a very desirable and convenient place.

BOARDING.

MRS. AMIA WILLIAM, of Cape May, will open the Beaker House for the season, for the accommodation of all who wish to spend the season there and she will spare no pains to make all comfortable. Those wishing to spend one, two, or three days, will find the Beaker House the right spot. Prices very reasonable. 1 wyr

COAL, STOVES, &c., &c.

The subscriber respectfully informs his friends and the public generally, that he has taken the store,

NO. 107 NORTH FIFTH STREET,

formerly occupied as the Anti Slavery Office, (where he has been engaged for the last fourteen years,) to occupy it henceforth as a place of business for the sale of

COAL, STOVES, &c.

Having made arrangements with one of the first Coal Dealers in the city, to furnish the best qualities of Lehigh, Schuylkill, &c., at the lowest Cash prices, he hopes to give full satisfaction in this branch of his business

He will also keep constantly on hand a general assortment of good NEW and SECOND-HAND STOVES, FURNACES, &c.

Persons wishing Stoves taken down, stored away, put up, or cleaned, can be promptly accommodated by applying as above.

He hopes by energy and strict attention to business to obtain a fair share of patronage

WM. STILL,
107 North Fifth Street, Philadelphia

REFERENCES.

J M M'Kim,	Dr Caspar Wistar,
Samuel Emlen,	James Mott,
Dillwyn Parrish,	Thomas Williamson,
Prof. C. D. Cleveland,	W.H. Furness.

MRS. MARTHA COLLINS
730 Russell Street, above Fitzwater.

Begs leave to inform her friends and the public generally, that she has opened an INFANT SCHOOL, for Boys and Girls, to whom she will pay special attention in teaching the primary departments of Reading, Writing, and Arithmetic, also Singing, upon the most reasonable and accommodating terms. She does not hesitate to say that she will be able to please all who may give her a trial

Advertisements.

THE DAUGHTERS OF HOPE GRAND UNION

Temperance Society met, it being the thirteenth convention, April 10th, 1861. Representatives from Lodges are as follows —

From Garnet Union No. 4, D. of T.; from Phœnix Union, No. 8, D. of T.; from Northern Union, No. 16, D. of T.; Webb's Union, of Chambersburgh, Pa.; from De Bias' Union, of Carlisle, Pa.; from Mount Olive Union, No. 19 D of T; from Vanbrakle Union, No. 15, D. of T., of Norristown, Pa.

Officers installed to their several positions are as follows

Grand P., Sister Bennett; Grand Associate, Sister Burris. Grand Treasurer, Sister Fawcett, Grand Conductress, C. Thompson; Grand Sentinel, A. E Dunbart, Grand Chaplain Sister Hall

G. P. P.,	Sister M. Rosters,	G. P. P.	Sister Anderson,
"	" E. Bowers,	"	" J. F Black,
"	" M. M. Bonny,	"	" E. A Clark,
"	" S. Bannas,	"	" White,
"	" S Davis,	"	" S. Hall.

THE DAUGHTERS OF CORNISH SOCIETY.

THE SIXTH QUARTERLY MEETINGS of the Society are held on the first Wednesdays of February, May, August, and November.

The meetings of the Board are held on the Wednesday previous to the regular stated meetings of the society.

Mrs. SARAH CARTER,
President.
Mr. L. R. SEYMOUR, Sec'y.

THE BOOK DEPOSITORY
OF THE
AFRICAN M. E. CHURCH,
No. 619 Pine Street,
PHILADELPHIA.

We keep on hand, in connection with our other books, Sabbath School books of various kinds, Question Books, Catechisms, Nos. 1, 2, and 3. We have a good assortment of such books as are generally used in the Public Schools. Also, Stationery, Inks, Pens, Paper, Envelopes and Blank Books.

THE DEATH-BED OF THE REV JOHN WESLEY.

Wanted Canvassing Agents for this splendid large engraving which shall be sixteen inches (or thereabouts) that great and good man. The most liberal inducements offered to those selling this print. Send for Catalogue and terms.

WM. SMITH Engraver,
702 South Third Street, Philadelphia

WANTED.—The charge of a Public School Reference as to ability can be given Apply to
J. W A, 1611 Helmuth St

ONE-PRICE CLOTHING,
OF THE LATEST STYLES,

Made in the Best Manner, expressly for RETAIL SALES Lowest Selling Prices marked in Plain Figures. All Goods made to order warranted satisfactory. Our One-Price System is strictly adhered to. All are thereby treated alike.

JONES & CO.,
Dec 25 1y 604 MARKET STREET.

GOOD NEWS

To Tailors, Dress-makers, and to those wishing to be such Also to owners of sewing machines, sleeve-boards, and large bunches—for in the new patent (1862) Sewing Machine Needle, you can use it first and fit perfectly. Ladies' Dresses, Vests and Men's Pants, Vests, and coats, cut and fitted with

Local and Travelling Agents Wanted.

Address REV WM BRADLEY,
Carversville, Bucks Co., Pa.

Or, apply to Mrs Mary C Weaver, wife of the Editor of this paper, 619 Pine St., Phila. Pa. Jan 25 1y

MRS. E A. PALMER'S
DRY GOODS AND TRIMMINGS STORE.
NO. 105 NORTH FIFTH STREET.
PHILADELPHIA

A General Assortment of Hosiery, Trimmings. Dry Goods, &c.

Dress, Shirt making, and Plain Sewing, promptly attended to. Jan 25 1y

COAL! COAL!! COAL!!!

The subscriber is selling the best qualities of Lehigh and Schuylkill Coal at the following very low prices:

Lehigh Stove Coal, per ton,	$4 25
" Egg "	4 25
" Broken and Screened, per ton,	4 25
" Nut "	4 50
Schuylkill, Stove, and Egg, and Broken, and Screened, Nut,	4 50

Orders left at the River Store, No. 107 North Fifth St., will be promptly attended to. Sept 13 1y WM STILL.

107 N. Fifth St., Philada.

KEELY'S PHOTOGRAPH GALLERY.

N W. corner Fifth and Cortes.

PICTURE GALLERY AND PARLORS ON THE FIRST FLOOR.

Strangers should not fail to call and examine.

Admission Free

JAMES DOWNS,
DEALER IN
NEW AND SECOND HAND
CLOTHING,
No 225 South Second Street.
No 17—3mo. PHILADELPHIA

WILLIAM STILL'S
STOVE STORE,
107 NORTH FIFTH STREET, PHILADELPHIA.

The subscriber would respectfully inform his friends and all in want of good stoves, that he has now on hand a general variety of excellent PARLOR, Cook and CHAMBER STOVES including Gas burning, as well as other patterns, which he is selling at very low rates. He buys entirely for cash, of the best wholesale foundries, and of course can sell much cheaper than those buying on the usual credit system. At any rate his friends are invited to give him a call and examine for themselves before purchasing elsewhere, as he feels that they would be convinced that it would be to their interest to give him their patronage. Coal orders constantly on hand. WM STILL.

JOSEPH H. COLE,
CONTINENTAL RESTAURANT,
NO. 717 LOMBARD STREET, PHILA.,
(Above Seventh St., under Philadelphia Institute,)

Where he continues to keep always on hand the very best assortment of OYSTERS and other refreshments hoping that all his friends and the public in general will favor him with their patronage.

☞ Meals served at all hours. Families supplied with Oysters of the best quality and flavor at the shortest notice.

☞ Also, public and private waiting done on the most reasonable terms. 1y

Mrs. S. Shorter Hawkins
HAS NOW OPENED
NEW SPRING GOODS,

consisting of Bonnets, Brilliants, Caliconi, &c Hoop Skirts of all sizes, from 15 cents to $1 25. A large lot of linen Hdkfs., from 6 to 25 cents. Also, cheap Hosiery and Gloves.

N B.—Mantuamakers are invited to examine my assortment of Dress Trimmings of the latest styles: all will be sold cheap for cash at the Old Establishment,

615 Lombard Street.

THOMAS CHARNOCK,
GENERAL FURNISHING UNDERTAKER
NO. 427 SOUTH 6TH ST.,
Second Door Below Bethel Church

For the Christian Recorder

BUCKS COUNTY SS.—TO ALL TO WHOM THESE PRESENTS MAY COME.

I, the subscriber, a Justice of the Peace, in and for the county of Bucks, do hereby certify that I am acquainted and know Emily Johnson—formerly Binkley, who was married to Samuel Johnson, who was married before William Hawk, Esq., of Bristol, Bucks County, as appears by record on his docket; and after careful examination and mature reflection, I feel myself fully safe in saying that the said Johnson had a wife living at the time he married the said Emily Binkley; and further say that I have the evidence of Daniel Emmond (local preacher of the Methodist Episcopal Church) Charles Emmons, (Clay dealer) and Benjamin Jennings, (white waiter) that he had one or more wives living at the time he married the said Emily Johnson; and the evidence, on affirmation, of the said Emily Johnson, that he had a wife living at the time she married him, which, at the time she married him she had no knowledge of

Affirmed and subscribed before me May 6th, 1862.	her Emily M Johnson mark
Wm Bickey J P

GEORGE G. EVANS'
ORIGINAL GIFT BOOK STORE,
No. 439 Chestnut Street.

NEW BOOKS! NEW GIFTS FOR THE NEW YEAR!

Call and look at our immense collection of BOOKS and PRESENTS for the season of 1861!

All the latest and best Publications, and a Gift with each Book purchased. Beautifully and appropriately bound copies of the prose and poetical writings of all the standard British and American authors, together with an extensive and superb array of Miscellaneous Books, all embracing the choicest sellings from the fields of Literature!

Magnificent and costly presents, consisting in part of WATCHES, JEWELRY, AND SILVER WARE, of the newest styles, and most exquisite finish. All Books are sold at the Publisher's regular prices, and every purchaser to the amount of $1 00, or more, is presented with a Gift, combining utility with ornament, varying in value from

FIFTY CENTS TO ONE HUNDRED DOLLARS!

Citizens! Strangers! Everybody! Bear this fact in mind, and make your purchase of Books at

GEORGE G. EVANS',
MAMMOTH GIFT BOOK EMPORIUM,
Mar 8 6mo No 439 Chestnut Street, Phila.

LEARY, GETZ, & CO.,
PUBLISHERS AND BOOK SELLERS,
No. 224 North Second Street,
(Between Race and Vine,)
Philadelphia Mar 9 6mo

DEAN & CO.,
No 345 CHESTNUT STREET,
Philadelphia,

Sell Silver-Plated Castors, with bottles, for $1 00 Also Silver Plated Waiters, Forks, Patent Tea Bells, Spoons, Salt Spoons, Cups, Engraved Mugs. Also all kinds of Solid Gold and Plated Jewelry, Vest, Guard, and Neck Chains, Medallions, Gold Pens, and Silver Holders, Counting House Pens, &c.

We sell every article in our store for $1 00 You can take your choice out of our immense stock for $1 00 each.

DEAN & CO.,
ORIGINAL ONE DOLLAR STORE,
No 345 Chestnut Street Mar 9 1y

MRS. H. S. DUTERTE,
General Undertaker and Furnisher,

Respectfully informs her friends and the public, that she still continues the Undertaking business at the old establishment, No. 634 Lombard St., and being thankful for past favors, hopes still to obtain a share of the patronage of the public

Hearse made Coffins always on hand. Also a handsome Hearse and Carriages, with careful drivers, to attend funerals on the most moderate terms.

G. M. ELKINTON & SON,
MANUFACTURERS OF
SOAP AND CANDLES,
116 MARGARETTA STREET, Philadelphia.

OLIVE SOAP,	SPERM CANDLES,
YELLOW "	ADAMANTINE "
PALE "	HOTEL "
BROWN "	KINGSFORD'S STARCH,
WHITE "	DANSKLITE "
CASTILE "	WAX,
HONEY "	TALLOW,
PALM "	SAL SODA
PONLINE "	SOFT SOAP.

March 4—1y.

FINE CAKE BAKERY.
CONFECTIONERY AND ICE CREAM SALOON,
No 804 South Street.

Ellis J. Peer would announce that he keeps constantly on hand a general assortment of all kinds of Cakes, Creams, Jellies, and Pastries

Festivals, Balls, and Private Parties served upon the shortest notice, and warranted to give general satisfaction. Jan. 19—1m. *

REIMER'S PHOTOGRAPHIC GALLERY,
No. 615 & 617 N. Second St.,
PHILADELPHIA

All kinds of Photographic Pictures and Ambrotypes at prices to suit everybody. No establishment more extensive. March 8—1y

NOTICE

To the friends of Religious Literature and human progress of the City and County of Philadelphia:

This certifies that Miss Mary Still is a legally authorized agent for the City and County of Philadelphia, Penna., to solicit subscribers and donations for the Christian Recorder of the African Methodist Episcopal Church of America

We, therefore, take great pleasure in recommending Miss Still to the citizens and friends as a lady every way worthy of such a position, as well as trustworthy, and we do hope, as the enterprise is commendable, that those to whom she may present this writing will not turn her away without either subscribing or contributing to this great cause.

(Signed) ELISHA WEAVER.
Editor & Corresp. Book Steward.
No. 619 Pine St., Phila.

REV. LEWIS S. LEWIS'
FAMILY LINIMENT
IS PREPARED WITH GREAT CARE,
EXPRESSELY FOR FAMILY USE.

Its composition is very simple, containing nothing that is injurious in any form, and there is no danger in its use from exposure to the weather. No family should be without it. Having a wish to benefit mankind in general, and those afflicted in particular—and having had recourse to the articles in several cases of rheumatism, bunions, chilblains, and other ailments, it proving to be a remedy in every case—I therefore recommend it to the public.

CERTIFICATES

PROVIDENCE, R. I., Nov 27, 1861

Rev. L. S. Lewis—Dear Sir: I have been afflicted with the rheumatism eleven years, during which time I tried almost everything, but received no sure relief. For the last four months my limbs and joints were so swollen, that at times I could not walk or use my shippers. I procured a bottle of your Liniment, and at the first application was instantly relieved After using one or two bottles, I was enabled to enjoy the free use of my limbs

Rev GEORGE A RUE

NEWPORT, R. I., October 29, 1861.

Rev. L. S. Lewis—Dear Sir: I have been afflicted for a number of years, more or less, with a pain and weakness in my chest, arising from some cause unknown to me I made two applications of your Liniment, and was relieved. I was attacked with the diphtheria, and was cured by using your Liniment. Its worth has proved itself ten times its cost ANTHONY RANDOLPH

NEWPORT, R. I., Nov. 19, 1861.

Rev. L. S. Lewis—Dear Sir: I have been cured of stiffening in my joints by using your Liniment. I recommend it to all who are thus troubled.

RICHARD WHITE.

NEWPORT, R. I., Nov. 17, 1861.

Rev. Mr. Lewis—Your Liniment is, truly, all that it is recommended to be. I have tried it and it has successfully cured my business. SOPHIA TAYLOR.

NEWPORT, R. I., Oct 7, 1861.

Mr Lewis Dear Sir: I have had a pain and stiffness in my neck and back for some time I procured a bottle of your Liniment, and applied it twice, which effected a cure. I recommend it to the public

Mrs EVELINA DEMOND

PROVIDENCE, R. I., Oct. 10, 1861

Rev L S Lewis Dear Sir For upwards of three years I have been very lame at times, arising from a sprain I have tried a great many things, without any definite results I procured a bottle of your Liniment, and was effectually relieved Mrs PHŒBE A MORSE

NEWPORT, R I., Oct 10, 1861

Rev Mr. Lewis I have been afflicted with the rheumatism for some time I used your Liniment, which has removed it successfully It has also cured my swelled joints. Mrs ELIZABETH THOROUGHGOOD

NEWPORT, R I., Nov 20, 1861,

Rev Mr Lewis—My boy was troubled with the chilblain. I applied your Liniment a few times, and it cured him Mrs ADELINE JONES

STEAMER PERRY, Sept. 3, 1861.

Rev Mr Lewis—I have used your Liniment for rheumatic pains of long standing—also, lameness in the foot, &c. It is a perfect remedy where other things have failed. Mrs SUSAN GARDINER

PROVIDENCE, RHODE ISLAND, Aug 19, 1861

Rev. L. S. Lewis—I have been afflicted for upwards of seven years with swelled joints. I have tried almost everything, without the desired effect At last I obtained a bottle of your Liniment, which relieved me successfully. Mrs. MARY A. JEWITT.

PROVIDENCE, Nov., 1861.

Mr L S Lewis—I had a very severe attack of rheumatism last fall during which time I tried almost everything—but nothing so effectual as your Family Liniment. I would not be without it

Mrs LUCY WATERMAN.

MANUFACTURED BY

REV. LEWIS S. LEWIS,
No. 115 Meeting St., Providence, R. I.,

TO WHOM ALL ORDERS SHOULD BE ADDRESSED.

PRICE 25 CTS PER BOTTLE

☞ Sold in Newport by Mrs. MARTHA J. RANDOLPH, No. 1 Spruce Court. 1y

OUR OWN BOOK-STORE.

Catalogue of Books for Sale at the Book Depository of the A M E Church located at No. 619 Pine St., Philadelphia, Pa.

	Retail prices
Pronouncing Bible,	$2 75
Watson's Biblical and Theological Dictionary,	2 50
Watson's Theological Institut

LIBERTY.

God's first gift—the blessed spirit
Which he breathed o'er the earth.
'Tis that which nerves the weak and stirs the strong,
Which makes the peasant's heart beat quick and high,
When on his hill he meets the uprising sun,
Throwing his glad beams o'er the freeman's cot,
And shouts his proud soul forth—'tis Liberty!
We will demand
All that just nature gave and they have taken!
Freedom for the bond! and justice in the clearing
Of the soil given by heaven to all, the right
To worship without bribing a base priest
For entrance into heaven; and ALL that makes
The poor man rich in Liberty and Hope!

MANUFACTORY OF FIREARMS

BY REV. M. E. ELLISON.

In these days, when muskets and bayonets are deciding great natural questions, I thought a short article upon the manufacture of muskets by Timothy Fields, Esq., in Trenton, N. J., would be interesting to your numerous readers.

THE MATERIAL

The best charcoal pig iron is used; this is rolled to the thickness of half an inch, full, cut into plates 14 by 6 inches; one of these is sufficient for a barrel.

HOW THE BARREL IS FORMED.

The plates are subjected to seven heatings in a furnace, and as frequently passed through powerful rollers. The first gives a crescent shape to the plate, each subsequent rolling brings the edges closer together, until a cylinder is formed having the edges to overlap; this is heated, and before passing under the rollers a steel rod is inserted in the tube which welds the barrel as it is passed through the rollers. When the barrel is completed in the rolling mill it is 41 inches long, with three eighths of an inch bore, having the appearance of a rough tube, larger at one end than the other.

THE SECOND FACTORY

This stands near the canal, and is fitted up with $280,000 worth of the best machinery for the work.

The first thing done here is to weld on the cone cast into which the tube is to be fitted; this is done by powerful steam trip-hammers.

THE ANNEALING—OR TEMPERING.

This is done by placing 600 barrels in an oven at a time, where they are heated red-hot, and suffered to cool gradually.

THE BORING.

The barrels are placed in lathes and undergo three borings. The first is called the cut bore, the second the quick, the third the smooth. A stream of water falls on the outside following the borer, to keep the proper temperature in the metal

THE STRAIGHTENING PROCESS.

This is the most particular and peculiar of all the work; each time the barrel is bored it must be straightened. The workmen have an upright piece of wood by their side on which are seats for the barrel; the barrel is brought to the eye in range with a piece of ground glass in a frame of twenty inches square hanging on the window some twenty feet off. Across this frame is a narrow strip of wood, probably an inch wide; the shadow from this strip falls through the barrel if it is straight, but if crooked it stops at the crook. The operator senses a barrel, brings it up to his eye as he stands erect, sights it, turns it rapidly, detects every defect, and straightens the barrel by striking it with a heavy hammer on an anvil, in less time than I have described it.

This work is very severe on the eyes, and cannot be followed but a few hours at a time—all the old operators have slight cross-eyes caused by testing. Twenty men can bore and straighten 200 per day.

THE OUTSIDE FORMATION.

This is done by one turning in a lathe from the muzzle to the breech, giving it the due shape and proportions.

TESTING THE STRENGTH OF THE BARRELS.

A small house made of brick expressly for this purpose, with frame and sand, is used as follows: A steel plug is put in the breech, and twenty-five barrels are fitted in a frame having strong screws to force the plug and keep it in its proper place in the breech. A charge of two hundred and eighty grains of military powder and ball is then discharged from each barrel at the same moment, by means of a wire attached to a flint lock in the hands of an operator in a secure place some distance off.

A second charge is given of two hundred and fifty grains of powder and ball. If the barrels stand these charges, many times greater than those in active service, the government agent stamps them with the letter P. But few barrels burst under the severe ordeal. The balls are flattened when shot into the mud, as if rolled.

The screw from the breech pin is cut by machinery, six at a time. The cone seats for the nipple are now finished, after which the finishing bore and straightening is given.

POLISHING THE BARREL.

This is done by placing the barrels in an upright frame, six at a time—all and every are used—twelve are polished in fifteen minutes.

The last work here is to cut the screw for the nipple and sight.

Each barrel passes through thirty hands before it goes to Bridesburgh, Pa., to be rifled, stocked, and locked. Eighty men can make two hundred barrels in twenty-four hours. Every part of the gun is made uniform, so that locks, stocks, and barrels can be changed without difficulty when any one part is broken.

Mr. Field has 70,000 to make.

I was astonished to learn from Mr. Field that such great destruction of fire-arms takes place in active war. He said one of the best judges told him, in a war of eighteen months, each soldier in active service would average three muskets by wear, casualties, etc.

AFRICAN HOUSES AND HOMES.

MO TAPPAN, AFRICA, Dec. 31, 1861.

Dear Young Friends:—The houses which the people of this country build would seem very odd to you. What do you think they are made of? Not boards, for they have no saws to cut them. Not logs, as they sometimes build cabins in America. Not stones, for they have no tools to split and hew stones. But all the houses of the people are built of sticks, grass, and mud. Let me tell you how they do it. Their houses are all small compared with the houses where you live; many having only one room, others two, and a few three rooms. Many are circular in form, others are longer than wide. They first mark on the ground the shape and size of the house they want to build; then having cut sticks as large as a man's wrist or arm, and as long as they wish the sides of the house to be high, they place them standing firmly in the ground so near as to touch each other. In this way they set a row of sticks on the line they have drawn, and so enclose a small space of ground, which afterwards becomes the floor of the house. Others cut larger sticks, and place them about two feet apart instead of close together, and then bend smaller sticks between them, and so fill up the space. Other sticks are then tied to the top of these for rafters to support the roof. If the house is circular, the rafters are gathered at the top in one bunch, as the ribs of an umbrella or parasol are fastened to the handle. If the house is longer than wide, the rafters of each end are tied in a bunch, and those of the side supported by a ridge-pole. Small sticks are then tied to the rafters a few inches apart, reaching quite around from the eaves to the top of the roof

No nails nor pins are used; all are tied with rope which is only a vine split into slender strips, like the cane used in bottoming chairs. But it can be tied like a string, and is very strong and durable. Bunches of grass or palm leaves are then tied upon the small sticks in such a way as to cover the entire roof, giving it much the appearance of a haystack. Then earth of an adhesive nature is obtained which is mixed with water and well worked with feet and hands, for the people have no shovels, and no hoes suitable for such work.

This makes mud plaster. The sides of the house, made of sticks, as I told you, are then plastered inside and outside with this mud. It is put on thickly with the hand, and is left very rough, and covered with finger-marks. In a few days it dries hard, and then another thin coating of the plaster is put on and rubbed smoother than before

After this is dried, it is rubbed again, and so made smooth. The ground inside is raised and levelled, covered with mud, and then pounded hard. This, when dry, becomes the floor. A space has been left for a door and another for a window. Shutters are made for these by splitting bamboo and tying the thin pieces side by side, till it is wide enough to fill the space. They have no hinges or latches, but when they wish to close the door or window, they set the shutter in its place, and fasten it with a stick. Others have nothing but a mat for the door, rolling it up as we do curtains, whenever they wish to open the door.

So they build their houses. They afford much protection from rain and the intense heat of the sun. It is all done quickly, but the houses do not last long. The heavy rains wash the mud from the sides, and strong winds blow the grass from the top. Rats, worms, and bugs gnaw the grass, and in a little time the roof must be covered anew

Ants eat the sticks that are set in the ground, and soon they fall to decay. If a house is not repaired, it becomes poor within two years of its erection; but if repaired frequently, it may last from five to seven years

So, you see, African children can know but little about the sweet word home. The house they are born in soon falls to decay, and another is built afterward in a different situation.

So little do they reside in one place, that the people never ask, Where do you live? but, Where do you sit down? Children, after they have grown to maturity, can never come back and revisit the house where together they passed their early days The pleasing associations which many of you find at grandfather's old house, these children can never enjoy. Changes are frequent and abundant. If a village is deserted, it soon falls to ruins, and grass and bushes conceal the spot. As you look upon the large, beautiful houses in which you dwell, and think how many years they may remain, remember it is God who has made you to differ from the children in this land about whom I write

Yours truly,
G. P. CLAFFIN
The American Missionary.

SYRACUSE, NEW YORK.

Its streets are broad, straight, well paved, and mostly crossing each other at right angles. Its principal thoroughfares and business streets are built up with handsome and costly buildings. Its public edifices are numerous, tasteful and conspicuous. There are several large and well-managed hotels, eight handsome public school buildings, twenty three churches, several of which are remarkable for architectural beauty and costliness There is also an immense hall, capable of seating twenty five hundred persons comfortably. The streets of private residences are numerous and delightful. Comfort, neatness, and cultivated taste are everywhere apparent.

Syracuse is situated at the southern end of Lake Onondaga. It is one hundred and forty-eight miles west of Albany by rail, and eighty miles east of Rochester. Being more nearly central to the State of New York than any other large town, and having most convenient railroad connexions in every direction, nearly all the State conventions of political and other associations are held here. The city has splendid facilities for intercourse and trade. Besides the direct connexion formed by the Central Railroad, with Albany to the eastward, and Rochester and Buffalo to the westward, it has another railroad running westward to Auburn and Geneva, one southward to Binghampton on the New York and Erie Railroad, and one northward to Oswego on Lake Ontario. The great Erie canal also passes through the city, and is crossed by numerous light and handsome iron bridges. On this canal there is a remarkable level seventy miles in length, and this city is at its termination.

Syracuse is yet a new city. In 1820 it contained only 250 inhabitants; it now has over 30,000. The most interesting thing about it, to a stranger, is the salt manufacture, which is more extensive and valuable than any other in the United States; and to this manufacture Syracuse owes mainly its growth and prosperity. Just westward of the city, one sees immense ranges of wooden sheds, with shallow reservoirs constructed of planks. In these reservoirs, or large wooden pans, the salt water is exposed to the rays of the sun until the water is evaporated, leaving the salt, in large quantities, behind. The fine salt, however, is prepared by boiling. The lands from which the salt water is raised, are owned by the State of New York. The wells are dug and the pumps are worked at the expense of the State, which receives its remuneration from a duty of one cent per bushel. Some of these wells have been sunk to a depth of over four hundred feet. The quantity of salt manufactured in this vicinity was, some years ago, over 5,000,000 of bushels, and it has greatly increased of late. The manufacture and trade in salt is, since the war commenced, more than ever brisk and remunerative It is a singular fact that the salt water has been raised in places from under the bed of Lake Onondaga by boring down through strata upon which it lies. Scientific tests, applied under the direction of the United States Government, are said to have fully established the fact that salt manufactured at Syracuse is equal in value to the best Turk's Island and other foreign salt.

CORN STARCH.

Who has not eaten of it, and what housekeeper has not used it in her laundry? Yet who knows its history, or how it is made? Spending a few days last week most agreeably in the family of T. Kingsford, Esq., at Oswego, N. Y., we obtained information on the subject which was certainly very agreeable to us, and may be partially to others. This gentleman is entitled to the entire credit of having invented the process for making this beautiful and useful article. Prior to 1842 starch was made from wheat and potatoes. In that year Mr. Kingsford instituted a series of experiments to see if he could not make it from Indian corn. At length he succeeded, and in 1848, in connection with several other gentlemen, he built a large factory at Oswego, and commenced the work under the title of T. Kingsford & Son, manufacturers. The excellence of the article produced has created a demand for it which has required various enlargements from time to time, swelling the capital involved in the business from $150,000 to $450,000. It is now the largest establishment of the kind in the world, embracing 510 feet front, and extending back over the Oswego river 250 feet. It has 250,000 feet of flooring, or more than sufficient to cover two acres. It is lighted by 158 sky-lights. It has 625 cisterns or vats, containing an aggregate of 2,200,000 gallons The length of conductors for conveying the starch while suspended in water is more than three miles. It employs 33 force-pumps to supply the building with water, capable of raising to the top of the building 5,888 gallons of water per minute These pumps are so arranged as to drench every part of the building in case of fire. Fifteen pairs of burr-stones and six pairs of large, heavy iron rollers are used in grinding the corn, connected with which and the other machinery are 8,500 feet of shafting and 834 gear wheels. More than 20,000 feet of steam pipe are used for drying and warming purposes. And to prevent stopping when the river is low, a steam engine of 150 horse-power has been added.

The company use about 600,000 bushels of corn annually, and produce about 6,000 tons of starch, to pack which requires 160,000 pounds of wrapping-paper, 3,500,000 feet of lumber, and 70,000 pounds of nails. It employs 300 operatives.

The purity of the starch made by this firm is said to be unequalled. They received the prize medal from the Great Exhibition of Nations at London; the prize medal of the American Institute in the city of New York; the gold and silver medal from the New York State Agricultural Society; and from Boston, Philadelphia, Baltimore, and Montreal the first premium. This explains why the starch of T. Kingsford & Son is so generally called for all over the country where the best article is wanted, and why so many other manufacturers have tried to imitate their packages, labels, and stencil marks

The process of manufacture is a curiosity. In the first place the corn is steamed, then soaked in pure water for some eight days, then ground wet, with a stream of water running through the burrs, then passed through metallic rollers weighing several tons. This done, it is pumped into bolts made of fine wire cloth and bolted, when it is pumped up again, and passed through fine silk bolts. From this point it moves on from vat to vat of pure water, growing whiter and cleaner as it goes, until it reaches the still water of its destination, where it settles at the bottom to await the hand of the workmen to remove the incumbent food and dip it into boxes or moulds. Here commences the drying process, which is long and wonderful. This completed, the starch which is for the laundry stands before you, apparently in solid blocks, some seven inches square, looking for all the world like a block of the whitest marble. Lay your hand on it and it falls open before you, presenting innumerable columns of pure white starch as over the eye beheld ready for use.

I have heard the ladies complain of some starch "sticking to the flat-irons;" but I never knew why it should or should not do so. In going through this establishment I learned the difference in starch in this particular. This sticking business is a reform of the ladies. It is a veritable reality. Mr. Kingsford understands the matter. The starch goes through one process in its watery course from the bolts which I have not named, and am not fully able to describe, that takes all the stick out of it. I think it is about the nicest part of the business, and less understood by manufacturers generally than any other. Mr. Kingsford explained it to me fully, but I know he would not like to have me divulge the secret, and I could not if I would.

On the whole the Oswego starch factory is a grand concern, creditable to its owners, to the manufacturers, to the city where it is located, and to the whole country. Its sales of starch amount to over $600,000 per annum. We wish them the largest success. How much better to use our corn in this way than to distil it into whisky.

THE HORSE'S PETITION.

In the days of John, King of Atri, in an ancient city of Abruzzi, there was a bell put up, which any one that had received any injury went and rung, and the king assembled the wise men chosen for the purpose, that justice might be done. It happened that after the bell had been up a long time, the rope was worn out, and a piece of wild vine was made use of to lengthen it. A knight of Atri had a noble charger which was become unserviceable through age, so that to avoid the expense of feeding him, he turned him loose upon the common. The horse, driven by hunger, raised his mouth to the vine to munch it, by which the bell was sounded. The judges assembled to consider the petition of the horse, which appeared to demand justice. They deemed that the knight whom he had served in his youth should feed him in his old age—a sentence which the knight was obliged to faithfully perform.

If, in our day, all the supernumerary animals could by such means make known the ill treatment of their masters, there would be no end to the "horse-trials" held

DAUVID'S PERPLEXITY.

The fishermen of the north of the Frith of Forth have always been looked upon by those of the south shore as little more than savages, and very unpolished. At one time a heavy north-easterly storm drove a Buckhaven boat toward the Dunbar coast, and during the detention of several days one of the north shore boys fell violently in love with a strapping damsel of Dunbar, whom he ultimately married. The young bride did her best to instruct her husband in the purer language and less jaw-breaking dialect of the aristocratic south shore; but to the shame of the semi-savage Buckhaven boy, he was a very slow pupil, as the sequel will serve to show.

In process of time a son was born to the loving pair, amidst the usual observances peculiar on such occasions; and all in due order a second youth, the very image of his brother, made his case known in the house of his father, shortly after which the following colloquy was held:—

"Now, Dauvid, ye're gawn to the minister's to see about the baptism; but mind, ye're no to speak about the bairn; that's a vulgar word—just like ye folk of Fife. Eh, man, gin I had ye ower Dunbar I wad mak a man o' ye! But Dauvid, my man, ye're to say to the minister, 'Gin ye please, Maister I'————k, will ye come doun this e'enin' and bapteese the infant.' Mind, noo, Dauvid, no the bairn but the infant!"

David looked with wonder on his young wife at her learning and good breeding, and he loved her more than ever. But the word infant was new to him; it was too soft and sweet for his untutored lips to lisp; but, true to his love, he tried it, and promised faithfully to try again, and muttering the word over and over—infant, infant, infant—and wondering at the pauses, at his wife's fear, he took his way towards the minister's house But, ere he reached it, David had lost the flow of the syllables, and before he had recovered his presence of mind, he found himself in the minister's hall The worthy minister, half suspecting what had brought the fisherman along so early, said:

"Well, David, how are ye all down the way?"

David answered, "Brawly, sir, thank ye, we're as weel as can be expected."

"Ah!" said the minister, "has there been anything i' the wind, David?"

"Ou ay, sir, the wife's been doun."

"Ay, David! It'll be a lassie this time?"

"Nu, sir," replied David, "it's no a lassie."

"Hoot, man," said the minister, "anither laddie! Ye'll be made up wi' laddies if ye gang on at this rate"

"Weel a wat, no," said David; "it's no a laddie either."

"David! David!" asked the minister, in sore astonishment, "what is it man, if it's neither a laddie nor a lassie?"

"Weel, sir," replied David, "as sure as death I dinna mind, but I think the wife ca'ed it an elephant!"

The worthy minister would fain have been relieved from the arduous duty of baptizing the young elephant; but the law of the Church and the law of the land alike demanded that it should be done, and so, being a dutiful son of the Church, and a still more loyal obedient subject of the British Crown, the minister went down the way and baptised the wondrous stranger

ALPHABET OF PROVERBS.

A grain of prudence is worth a pound of craft.
Roasters are cousins to liars
Confession of faults makes half amends.
Denying a fault doubles it.
Envy shooteth at others, and wounds herself.
Foolish fear doubles danger.
God reaches us good things by our hands.
He has hard work who has nothing to do.
It costs more to avenge wrongs than to bear them.
Justice overtakes many a rogue.
Knavery is the worst trade.
Learning makes a man fit company for himself.
Modesty is a guard to virtue
Not to hear conscience is the way to silence it.
One hour to-day is worth two to-morrow.
Proud looks make foul work in fair faces.
Quiet conscience gives quiet sleep.
Riches is he who wants least.
Small faults indulged are little thieves that let in greater
The boughs that bear most hang lowest.
Upright walking is sure walking.
Virtue and happiness are mother and daughter.
Wise men make more opportunities than they find.
You never lose by doing a good turn.
Zeal without knowledge is fire without light.
And a good newspaper is a well-spring of knowledge.

The eaglet must have time. The beak that, in due season, will cleave a vault, at first has merely power to chip the egg

PUTTING KNOWLEDGE TO A GOOD USE.

A certain nobleman, very proud of the extent and beauty of his pleasure-grounds, chancing one day to call on a small squire, whose garden might cover half an acre, was greatly struck with the brilliant colors of his neighbor's flowers. "Ay, my lord, the flowers are well enough," said the squire, "but permit me to show you my grapes" Conducted into an old-fashioned little green-house, which served as a vinery, my lord gazed, with mortification and envy, on grapes twice as fine as his own. "My dear friend," said my lord, "you have a jewel of a gardener; let me see him" The gardener was called—the single gardener—a simple-looking young man under thirty. "Accept my compliments on your flower-beds and your grapes," said my lord, "and tell me, if you can, why your flowers are so much brighter than mine, and your grapes so much finer. You must have studied horticulture profoundly" "Please your lordship," said the man, "I have not had the advantage of much education; I don't no scholar; but as to the flowers and the vines, the secret as to treating them just came to me, you see, by chance."

"By chance? explain."

"Well, my lord, three years ago, master sent me to Lunnon on business of his'n; and it came on to rain, and I took shelter in a mews, you see."

"Yes; you took shelter in a mews;—what then?"

"And there were two gentlemen taking shelter too, and they were talking to each other about charcoal."

"About charcoal?—go on."

"And one said that it had done a deal o' good in many cases of sickness, and specially in the first stage of the cholera, and I took a note on my mind of that, because we'd had the cholera in our village the year afore. And I guessed the two gentlemen were doctors, and knew what they were talking about."

"I dare say they did; but flowers and vines don't have the cholera, do they?"

"No, my lord; but they have complaints of their own; and one of the gentlemen went on to say that charcoal had a special good effect upon all vegetable life, and told a story of a vine dresser, in Germany, I think, who made a very sickly, poor vineyard, one of the best in all those parts, simply by charcoal-dressings So I naturally pricked up my ears at that, for our vines were in so bad a way that master thought of doing away with them altogether. 'Ay,' said the other gentleman, 'and see how a little sprinkling of charcoal will brighten up a flower-bed.'

"The rain was now over, and the gentlemen left the mews; and I thought, Well, but before I try the charcoal upon my plants, I'd best make some inquiry of them as aren't doctors, but gardeners; so I went to our nurserymen, who has a deal of book-learning, and I asked him if he'd ever heard of charcoal-dressing being good for vines, and he said he'd read in a book that it was so, but had never tried it. He kindly lent me a book, which was translated from some foreign one. And after I had picked out of it all I could, I tried the charcoal in the way the book told me to try it; and that's how the grapes and the flower-beds came to please you, my lord. It was a lucky chance that ever I heard those gentlemen talking in the mews, please your lordship"

"Chance happens to all," answered the peer, sententiously; "but to turn chance to account is the gift of few."

His lordship, returning home, gazed gloomily on the hues of his vast parterres; he visited his vineries, and scowled at the clusters; he summoned his head gardener—a gentleman of the highest repute for science, and who never spoke of a cowslip except by its name in Latin. To this learned personage my lord communicated what he had heard and seen of the benignant effects of charcoal, and produced in proof a magnificent bunch of grapes which he had brought from the squire's.

"My lord," said the gardener, scarcely glancing at the grapes, "Squire————'s gardener must be a poor ignorant creature to fancy he had discovered a secret in what is so very well known to every professional horticulturist. Professor Liebig, my lord, has treated of the good effect of charcoal-dressing, to vines especially; and it is to be explained on these chemical principles"—therewith the wise man entered into a profound disputation, of which his lordship did not understand a word

"Well, then," said the peer, cutting short the harangue, "since you know so well that charcoal-dressing is good for vines and flowers, have you ever tried it on mine?"

"I can't say I have, my lord; it did not chance to come into my head."

"Nay," replied the peer, "chance put it into your head, but thought never took it out of your head."

My lord, who if he did not know much about horticulture, was a good judge of mankind, dismissed the man of learning; and, with many apologies for seeking to rob his neighbor of such a treasure, asked the squire to transfer to his service the man of genius. The squire, who thought that now the charcoal had been once discovered, any new gardener could apply it as well as the old one, was too happy to oblige my lord, and advance the fortunes of an honest fellow born in his village. His lordship knew very well that a man who makes good use of the ideas received through chance will make a still better use of ideas received through study He took some kind, but not altogether unselfish, pains with the training and education of the man of genius whom he had gained to his service. The man to now my lord's head forester and bailiff. The woods thrive under him, the farm pays largely. He and my lord are both the richer for the connection between them. He is not the less practically painstaking, though he no longer says "hen't" and "his'n;" nor the less felicitously theoretical, though he no longer ascribes a successful experiment to chance.—Sir E. B. Lytton in "Ben Caxton"

MOISTURE IN THE AIR.

BY DIO LEWIS, M. D.

The atmosphere always contains water. Most people think its presence a misfortune. They say the atmosphere of California is very healthy, because it is so dry. This is an error. The air of California has a great deal more moisture than that of New England, and this is one of the principal reasons of its superior healthfulness In New England the dry air sucks the moisture out of a man's air passages, and he has consumption If he could breathe the moist atmosphere of the Pacific coast, he might recover. In their influence upon consumptives, I do not mean to say that the only difference between the Atlantic and Pacific coasts is found in the amount of atmospheric moisture. But I do say that this is one of their most essential sanitary differences. A man who, in New England, is ever suffering with dry and cracked skin, has in California a moist and healthy skin. What is true of the skin, is true of the lining of the lungs, with which the same atmosphere is in constant contact; the dry air sucks out the moisture and produces disease.

All other things being equal, the moister the air, the healthier it is. Of course this law ceases to hold whenever the moisture becomes sensible, and the clothing is thereby saturated.

My practical suggestion is this. As during more than half of the year, in this climate, we live in artificial heat, we should use some means to supply the needed moisture. In as air as dry as that of New England, we should make the entire top of the furnace or stove a boiler, from which many gallons are daily evaporated. An ordinary sitting-room heated with a stove, might have from five to ten gallons of water diffused in its atmosphere daily. With such management, the dry throats and hacking coughs would be alleviated or cured.—Independent.

THE French Government contributes to the International Exhibition a statue of Adam. It is described as follows:

"Adam sits on the stump of a tree, his eyes fixed on vacancy. His arms rest upon a sapling In front of him lies an enormous apple, and around the stump on which he sits is coiled a three inch [illegible] How it is known that Adam was a rope-maker, and what are he made of three-inch ropes, are questions as yet unanswered. People are now going in shoals to see the fac simile of the first rope. If there is a subtle meaning in it, the bulk of the public would be glad of an explanation.

MR RENNIE.

Mr. Rennie, in the good old times, was travelling in Scotland in a stage-coach. The axle-tree broke near a blacksmith's, and the son of Vulcan being out, Rennie himself lit the fire, and welded the axletree in a masterly style. His fellow passengers, who had been very communicative and friendly during the earlier part of the journey, now became very reserved, and the "respectables" especially held themselves aloof from the man who had so clearly revealed his calling by the manner in which he had mended the broken axle Arrived at their journey's end for the day, the travellers separated, Mr. Rennie proceeding onwards to Eglinton Castle. Next morning, when sitting at breakfast with his noble host, a servant entered to say that a person outside desired to have a word with the earl. "Show him in." The person entered, and he proved to be one of Mr Rennie's fellow travellers, whose surprise and confusion at finding the "blacksmith" of the preceding day breakfasting with my lord may be very easily imagined. The earl was much amused when Mr Rennie afterward described to him the incident of the broken axle

FIRST NEW TESTAMENT PUBLISHED IN NEW HAMPSHIRE.

The following is believed to be a true account of the first edition of the New Testament published in New Hampshire about the year 1814:—A young man in New Ipswich, near the mountain and near to the borders of Rindge, by the name of Simeon Ide, who had done something in a printing office in Windsor, Vt., purchased a small two-pull Ramage press and a second-hand font of Bourgeois type. This press he placed in his father's blacksmith's shop, and, assisted by a sister about twelve years old, in setting type, he printed a duodecimo edition of the New Testament of 5,000 copies. To secure accuracy, he engaged the assistance of Rev. Dr. Payson of Rindge. One thousand copies of this edition was sold to the New Hampshire Bible Society in 1815, for $280:—less than cost—to obtain means to purchase more paper. The rest of the edition he sold for 50 cents a copy. Mr. Ide, it is thought, removed to Claremont about the year 1817. He is believed to be now living. In 1818, Mr. Isaac Long purchased stereotype plates for the New Testament. Of him the N. H. Bible Society frequently made purchases. An edition of the New Testament was early published in Sanborton.—Congregational Jour.

Family Circle.

THE FIRST DISAPPOINTMENT.

There's wisdom, music, poetry,
In the prattle of a child,
When the murmuring fountains of the soul
First well forth bright and wild.

I heard a girl, a gentle girl,
Thus to her mother say:
"How slow to-morrow is, mamma!
When comes to-morrow, pray?"

"When you have slept and waked, my child,
Then will to morrow be"
"So you have said, mamma, yet no'er
To-morrow came to me.

"I've slept and waked, oft and again,
And still it was to-day.
I've watched and watched for morrow,
But it always flew away.

"You said that when to-morrow came,
'Twould come as bright and gay;
I woke, and thought—sure, now 'tis here!
But still it was to-day."

Alas, too early wise! I hoped
Bright years ere you would know,
To-morrow spans the dark to-day,
A cheating promise bow!

It is a fair and fleeting hope
To gild our misery given
The only morrow bright and sure
Is that which dawns in Heaven!

OSCAR THE SPENDTHRIFT

ADAPTED FROM THE GERMAN OF AUGUSTUS MOLITZ

Oscar was a young man who lived in Paris He spent hundreds of dollars to no purpose, and still wanted to spend more. He had a number of evil companions, who did him much harm, and made him a great deal more of a spendthrift than he would have been without them.

When Oscar was out of money, he would write to his uncle for more His uncle was a wealthy man, who lived in a very large house. He loved Oscar so much, that as soon as he received his letter he enclosed him some bank-bills, and wrote him to try and be a little more economical than he had been. But soon Oscar would tell him that he had no more money, and that he must really have some more very soon.

Finally, his uncle threatened him, telling him, that if he was not more saving than usual, he would not give him any more. But still Oscar continued to be as much of a spendthrift as formerly, and his kind uncle ceased sending him any more money than he had done when he first went to Paris.

How did Oscar receive such treatment? At first he wrote back the most gloomy and complaining letters you ever saw. Then he would go and get in debt at the splendid tattooing establishments and wine stores, and would have his bills sent to his uncle to be paid

One day he received a letter from his uncle stating that he would once more send him some money and pay all his debts, but that it was the last time he would do it. He also said that if Oscar made any more debts, and continued to be as great a spendthrift as ever, he would cast him off altogether, and not even continue his acquaintance with him

But this threat only made Oscar smile. He said: "The old man loves me too much to carry such a threat into effect. He knows too much to do that, for he would not like to have me turn against him." But, on thinking the matter over, he remembered that his uncle had never told him he would do anything which he did not afterwards perform He began to tremble, therefore, lest he would carry his resolution out But he said to himself: "I will be economical for a little while The old man cannot live forever He will soon die; and then I will have money enough to last me all my life."

So Oscar commenced a new way of living, and for a whole year he did not spend a cent more than was right. His uncle could not say the first word of complaint against him. One of the men of whom he had formerly borrowed a sum of money, came to him and begged him to pay him back, as he had not enough to supply his family with bread. Oscar told him to be quiet, that his uncle was then sick, and would very soon die, and then he would pay him again, with a very large interest

The second year proved that Oscar was not completely cured of his very evil habit, for he borrowed several sums of money privately. But still he waited patiently for his uncle to die, and almost every day went to the post-office expecting to hear that he had really died and left him all his property

At last the news came, and I will tell you how, on the same day, he received two letters which made him happy beyond measure. One was from the lawyer who had been in the habit of attending to his uncle's business, and the other from the executor of his uncle's estate. Both letters informed him of the death of his uncle by heart disease, and that Oscar must hurry off to his mansion to take possession of all the property.

He was almost beside himself with joy. He hardly knew what to do, so perfectly carried away was he with his great good fortune. So he sat down and wrote to the executor these words:—

"Make everything ready in the mansion for my reception. I shall have some of my intimate friends with me, and I want you to have six of the best carriages in the country at the depot to take me to my great estate. I want you also to have a dinner prepared for me that will be the richest and most costly ever known. The wine must cost ten dollars a bottle—not less than that—as much higher as you please. Travelling, you know, makes one hungry. Besides, I want you, by return of mail, to send me 16,000 francs. Attend to these matters promptly, and I will reward you as you will deserve."

After Oscar had sent the letter, he hastened to his comrades and informed them of his large fortune. He invited them to go with him and partake of his hospitality and see his great estate. Of course they were very willing to go, and they rejoiced with him over his fine success.

When Oscar received the 16,000 francs, and, in company with his friends, had come to the end of their journey on the cars, they found the six splendid carriages, all drawn by white horses, standing ready at the station to take them to the great mansion. The country through which they passed was very beautiful. By and by the carriages drove up in front of the marble house. The executor came out to the door, and after congratulating Oscar on his good fortune, told him that his orders had been strictly obeyed, and that everything was ready for his reception.

Oscar smiled, and soon had the pleasure of inviting his gay friends into the great dining-hall What a sight! I never saw such a scene, nor did any of my young friends who are reading these lines with such interest. It was dazzling The dishes were of silver, and gold, and they were so bright as almost to blind every eye. Every one flattered and congratulated Oscar, and complimented the executor for preparing such a magnificent dinner. It was a gay company at first, but when the rich wine was handed around, their happiness knew no bounds. They gave toasts to Oscar and to one another. Finally, Oscar himself rose up, and after drinking still another glass of wine, made a little speech to his companions:—

"My friends, as it is to-day in this house, it shall always be so long as we live. Now, I am rich enough You are all my guests; let us then be very happy! Say, now, don't you think my uncle a splendid old fellow to die just now? What a dance he would have been to live a dozen years longer! Fill all your glasses again, and let us drink with the hope that he may rest in peace. This is my toast: 'Good rest to the old man who died at the right time!'"

"I thank you!" said a trembling voice from a secret door in one corner of the dining-hall. All eyes were turned in the direction whence it came. Oscar let his glass fall from his hand, and he became as pale as death. Then the door opened, and out walked a tall, pale old man, with his hands folded on his breast

"Oh! my uncle!" exclaimed Oscar with an excited voice; and, as he said it, his hair stood up on end from fright.

"The dead man!" all shouted out at the top of their voices. They knew not where they were, knew not what to do. They started to run out of the door; and so did Oscar too, but he fell back in his chair, and had not strength enough to get up again.

"Yes, I am your uncle," said the old man fiercely, and with his usual strong, manly voice. "But I am not dead, but living. This is the first time I have ever resorted to a stratagem, but I did it to test you. But I hope the Lord will forgive me. Now I am perfectly convinced that, notwithstanding all my kindness to you, you are still the same spendthrift as ever; and that, when you heard I was dead, you thought it the best news you had ever received. You know that I acquired all my property by strong exertion, and you would spend it in luxury and dissipation! Away from my sight! Away, or I shall have to cane you! In future you are no longer my nephew. If you and your companions stay another hour here, the police will arrest every one by my order, and put you in prison. Away! You will find six carts standing before the front door. They will take you to the cars in one day. You may ride in them, or you will be compelled to walk."

These words were spoken in great earnestness. The old man then retired to his room. Oscar called to him to come back, but he would not do it. The spendthrift nephew then told his friends to stay longer in the house; and as soon as he said it, thirty policemen appeared in their midst in shining uniforms. They had to go; and so the six carts took Oscar and his gay friends back to the railroad depot.

When Oscar got back to Paris, he wrote his uncle a very good letter, begging him to forgive him all his offences. But no, it was too late now. His uncle adopted another worthy and temperate young man as his son, and educated him. In the course of three years Oscar's uncle died, and this young man entered into possession of his great estate I must tell you how he spent the first day at his large marble house. He made a great feast to all the poor people in the country. They came for miles around, and partook of a good dinner under the fine elms on the lawn. Each one of them found under his plate a five dollar gold piece. Now, was not that a good way to use money? Every little girl and boy will say, "Yes." I am very sure.

The police visited Oscar in his lodgings the third week after his return to Paris He was taken to prison, and there he staid four months. Not one of his companions visited him, or sent him a nice loaf of bread. This shows that they did not care for him, but only for his money.

When he was released from prison, he left the city. It is said that he begged in the outskirts of the city for about six months; but the last I heard of him was that he had turned sailor on a boat that went to Australia, so that when he got there he might go to digging for gold in the great mine.

Methodist.

LITTLE CHARLEY.

Charley is only three years old, a restless, active little fellow, with soft silky curls and bright blue eyes; always busy, and no wonder that sometimes he gets into mischief, as boys often do; but he feels sorry when he does injury to any thing, and cannot rest until he has told all.

His grandmother loves him very much, and is very kind and very patient with Charley; but once in a while, if he breaks the plants in her conservatory, lets the canary bird out of his cage, or sets the water running in the bathing tubs, or jumps in himself without taking off his clothes, she can't help trying to teach him that such things are naughty, and once or twice she has punished him just enough to make him remember.

His grandmother has a beautiful oleander tree which she has taken great care of for many years. It was full of rich pink blossoms, and looked very finely. One day grandmother had gone across the garden to visit her brother's family, and Charley thought it would be a good time to enjoy the oleander, as it stood on the piazza; so he jumped up on the tub in which it was growing, put his curly head in among the branches, and looked through with his roguish blue eyes; but in turning quick, his ringlets caught in one of the finest branches, and broke it off. It dropped on the floor of the piazza just at Charley's feet.

Now what do you think little Charley did? Did he run and hide? Did he intend that his grandmother should think that pussy did it, and let pussy get a whipping? or did he think, Of course she will think the wind broke it off? No, no Charley's heart was full of his little trouble. He jumped down quick. "I must go and tell grandmother," he said. So he ran, without stopping to think, through the garden into uncle James' parlor. "Please, grandmother, come home quick, quick." "Why, what is the matter, Charley? Is baby sick?" "Please come, grandmother." So Charley took his grandmother by the hand, and hurried her away, until he came to the oleander. There lay the branch of blossoms. "Grandmother," he said, "I did it. This curl caught right in here while I stood on the tub looking through. Am I not a naughty Charley?"

Grandmother felt sorry that he had broken her oleander, but she was glad that Charley was so honest and willing to own his fault, and she kissed him, and he promised never to do so again.

When his grandmother told me the story, I thought, If all children were as willing to acknowledge a fault, how many untruths would be avoided. If through accident or carelessness you break or injure what belongs to another, go at once and tell what you have done. Above all, go to your heavenly Father, and acknowledge your daily faults. "Father, I have sinned against heaven and in thy sight. Forgive me, for Jesus' sake, and let me still be thy child." God will hear your sincere prayer, and forgive you

The Child's Paper.

KNOCKING AT THE DOOR.

A TRUE STORY

The glowing sun of midsummer afternoon poured through the curtainless windows of the little village school, and small curly heads drooped like the delicate flowers in the languid air. Among them all, little Katie's sunny ringlets fell the lowest, and if you had lifted the golden veil, you would have seen that the weary eyes had forgotten to con the long line of hard words in the worn spelling book, and that the silken fringes of the drooping lids were pillowed lovingly upon the sweetest little cheeks in the world.

Yes, in the heated air, soothed by the lazy drone of the hungry flies, and the restless hum of young student voices, Katie had fallen asleep. She was dreaming, too. She was dreaming of the little brother, darling Charley, who, in the bright springtime, when the violets were just opening their sweet blue eyes after their long sleep, had strayed away from earth, and passed through those gates of gl

THE CHRISTIAN RECORDER.

Published by the African Methodist Episcopal Church in the United States, for the Dissemination of Religion, Morality, Literature and Science.

Rev. Elisha Weaver, Editor. PHILADELPHIA, SEPTEMBER 27, 1862. Vol. II.—No. 39.—New Series.—Whole No. 90.

THE CHRISTIAN RECORDER

Is published every Saturday on behalf of the

AFRICAN METHODIST EPISCOPAL CHURCH

BY

REV. ELISHA WEAVER,

General Book Steward,

No. 619 Pine Street, Philadelphia.

Notice.—All letters and matters pertaining to the Book Concern subscribers, sale of papers, and all business connected with the Book room or the paper, must be directed to Rev Elisha Weaver, No. 619 Pine St. Also Philadelphia; and all matters sent by steamer, and to our city, must be directed to E. Weaver No. 619 Pine St.

All articles or matter for the Christian Recorder must be directed to E. Weaver But No 630, Philadelphia

TERMS

Two Dollars a year, payable in advance. Single copies, five cents.

ADVERTISEMENTS

We solicit Advertisements of all descriptions suitable for a religious newspaper, which will be published as follows;

Cards or Advertisements, inserted for one year or under, provided they do not exceed eight lines ten dollars, per square; for twelve lines, or eight dollars without the paper; six months for ten lines paper to be sent three months, four dollars, one month, $1 50; paper to each name included.

CORRESPONDING EDITORS OF CHRISTIAN RECORDER.

Rev. J. P. CAMPBELL, Rev. A. W. WAYMAN,
" J. M. WILLIAMS, " B. T. WILLIAMS,
" G. H. GRAHAM, " C. BURCH,
Rev. L. ROSS

Poetry.

For the Christian Recorder

DEATH OF THE FIRST-BORN.

A wail in the palace, a wail in the hut;
The midnight is shivering with dread,
And Egypt wakes up with a shriek and a sob,
To mourn for the first-born and dead.

The morning glad voices greeted the light
As the Nile with its splendor was flushed;
'Tis midnight, and silence has melted their tones,
And their music forever is hushed.

This morning the satrap of palace and court
To the heir of the kingdom bowed down;
'Tis midnight, and pallid and stock in his shroud
He dreams not of kingdom nor crown.

This morning the bridegroom bent o'er his fair bride,
And dreamed of long hours of bliss;
'Tis midnight, she bends o'er his unanswering lips;
But they heed not her agonized kiss.

AM I THE ACHAN?

Written on hearing a Sermon preached by Dr Hawes, Jan. 20, 1862. Subject—" An Appeal to Christians—Self examination."

Lord, is it I? Ah, shall I be
An Achan in the camp!
A clog to Israel—false to thee—
Bearing thine awful stamp!

Am I at ease in Zion still?
Does no sad thought arise!
No secret tear of mourning fill
My down-cast weeping eyes!

Have I no burden on my heart—
No errand at thy throne!
In Zion's griefs have I no part!
Does she unheeded moan!

Ah! can I pierce thee—Saviour dear,
And reckless, view the wound!
Can no deep, mourning, bitter tear
Of anguish here be found!

Spirit of grace! O search me through!
Detect my latent sin;
Bring my exceeding guilt to view;
Strike sorrows deep within.

Then shall salvation's waters flow,
When thou the rock dost smite;
Then soon shall bold transgressors know
How marvellous thy light.

N. Y. Observer.

THE GENESEE ANNUAL CONFERENCE

Mr. Editor:—Permit me to furnish you some extracts from the Genesee Conference, which will interest your readers. I will not be able to give you the whole at once, as time will not permit, so I shall have something to say, more than I can conveniently now; I defer it until the last.

The Twelfth Session of the Genesee Annual Conference of the African Methodist Episcopal Zion Church, convened in Montrose, Pa., Zion Church, Sept. 6, 1862, Superintendent Rt. Rev. J. J. Clinton presiding.

The Superintendent organized the conference by reading the portion of scripture from 1 John fifth chapter, and singing the following hymn, which was sung with much spirit. Prayer was offered by Rev. J. W. Loguen, who fervently invoked the blessing of God upon our suffering race, and mankind universally; for his presence in our midst during the conference session, and the spread of the gospel.

"Where shall the gospel tidings spread,"

The Superintendent then celebrated the conference, in which he referred to the divine providences of God, in permitting us to meet again after the labor and trial of the past year, for which we have reason to feel grateful; that death had visited our number, by calling one of our brethren from labor to reward; and one, too, who had by exemplary character and conduct, won the esteem and confidence of the brethren, hence his loss would undoubtedly be felt. He urged the members to use courtesy in deliberation, and let no word or expression fall from their lips that might cause any unpleasant feelings among them That decorum and intelligence was essential, and wished it to be evinced upon all matters relating to the conference, especially in the pulpit, aiming to win souls. To better prepare the mind for the observance of the regulations suggested, there would be a conference prayer meeting every morning anterior to business, and urge the attendance of every member, suffering nothing to hinder them but sickness.

The cordial reception of the address was evinced by a hearty response of "Amen." Rev. W. Sanford was elected Recording Secretary, who proceeded to enroll the members. The remainder of the session was occupied interchanging sentiments respecting the different churches.

SECOND SESSION

The conference convened at the hour appointed, an hour which was spent in prayer. Subsequently the house proceeded to business.

After the disposition of some ordinary matters, the following committees were appointed.

Finance—J. W. Loguen, J. Thomas, J. H. Smith

Credentials—James H. Smith, Richard T Eastep.

Devotional Exercises—J. W. Loguen, John Thomas

Complaints—B. Mackall, Thos. James, W. A. Cromwell.

Holy Orders—Thomas James, Beall Mackall, W. A. Cromwell.

Education—W. Sanford, W. A. Cromwell.

Literary Fund—S. M. Giles, J. W. Loguen, J H Smith

Monitorial Studies—Thomas James, James H Smith.

Temperance—John Thomas, B. Mackall, John Tappan

Missions—Thos. James, R T. Eastep, J W Loguen

Slavery—J. W Loguen, George Busley

Sabbath Schools—J. H Smith, J. Thomas

Eulogy—George Busley, Thomas James, S. M Giles

Business—J. W Loguen, Thomas James, B. Mackall

Mission Fund—T. James, J. H. Smith, S. M. Giles.

Conference Messenger—Hezekiah Butler.

Reporter—Samuel M. Giles

Rev. John Thomas presented to the conference $6 from the United Sons and Daughters of Bishop of Ithaca, New York, and $6 from the Juvenile Daughters of Ross of the same place, for the benefit of the conference. A vote of thanks was returned to each society, and the names of the officers were ordered to be printed in the minutes

The discipline questions were then entered upon, and answered in order. The announcement of Rev. Christopher Benjak's death, drew forth some appropriate remarks, respecting his life, conduct, and usefulness by the Superintendent, followed by Rev. Loguen, Smith, Thomas and others; who spoke in praise of his ministerial career.

James J. Scott, owing to the neglect of duties, was expelled from the connexion.

A new organization from Bath, New York, was represented by T. James; another from Corning, New York, by J. H. Smith; both were received in due form

For the Christian Recorder.

EPISCOPAL VISITS.

I have just paid a debt in visiting my western brethren and sisters, or the western portion of the A. M E Church; a debt that I was not aware was due. I rejoice to be favored with an opportunity of making payment. It is reasonable to suppose, that a stranger as I was, about which so many false statements were spoken and written, as recently has been circulated about me, would have expected frowns and cold shoulders. But I found things the reverse of such an expectation, for it seemed as if all hearts were human and sympathetic, and many doors were unbarred to hear and receive some word from the stranger For their Christian philanthropy I am grateful, and rejoice in a privilege to acknowledge the very kind treatment I received, both from preachers and people. From experience I can say, that there is nothing more congenial to the happiness and comfort of a stranger, than the manifestations of friendship from those he meets when far from home. In the city of Indianapolis, the seat of the Indiana Conference, was one continued movement of war troops, and some of the soldiers very unruly and disorderly. I have not heard the word nigger as often before in the last ten years, as I did in one week in my stay in Indianapolis. In St. Louis, the behaviour was much better; I did not hear the word nigger once. The conferences were ably sustained in both places, and I must confess that I never saw a conference better sustained, than in the latter place. When I compare the conference held at St. Louis, with those held in Taunton, New Jersey, and New Bedford, Massachusetts, I am not prepared to say which was the most nobly sustained; they each show in the superlative degree

I am more than ever convinced of the necessity of a good weekly paper being circulated among our people, for by this means I find that when our bodies are far distant from each other, our hearts and minds are brought nigh in weekly communication. I also rejoice to find our people so hopeful amid adverse circumstances of the present crisis, and I am encouraged to wait patiently for the final issue of the great struggle now going on between slavery and freedom.

N. B. I will be in New Bedford, Mass., on the 3d of October, and shall leave on the 7th for Newport, R. I., where I shall remain until the 10th From thence I shall proceed to Providence, R. I., and remain there until the 14th. I shall then leave for New Haven, Conn., and be there until the 20th, from thence to Bridgeport, Conn, and there remain until the 22d. If I should miss the connexion of cars, and fail to be at any of the above appointments at the time appointed; I will be there the next day, if no preventing providence.

N. B. Brother W. Winder, preacher in a charge of Freehold circuit, is hereby notified to write me word while in Providence, from the 10th to 14th of October, where I shall start from in New York to reach his circuit, and to what point of his circuit I may meet him. I will then inform him at what time I will be on said circuit.

N. B. I call attention to a resolution, of the Philadelphia Annual Conference held in Trenton, New Jersey, 1862, relative to Sabbath Schools, viz.

Resolved, That we recommend to this conference, that it would be highly important for a Sabbath School Convention, to be held in the Philadelphia District, consisting of the Bishop, or Bishops, Ministers having charge, Superintendents, Teachers, and delegates not exceeding two from each circuit or station, and that the Bishop be requested to appoint the time and place of holding said convention.

According to the resolution, I here give notice that said "convention" will be held in Bethel Church, Sixth St., Pa., on Wednesday, the 12th of November, 1862

Willis Nazrey

For the Christian Recorder

MRS. FRANCIS E. WATKINS HARPER ON THE WAR AND THE PRESIDENT'S COLONIZATION SCHEME.

Let me refer to the great topic of the day—the war. You ask my opinion, I think, in one of your letters. To me the times are gloomy, and though I stand not in the valley of vision, and my lips neither tremble nor thrill with the prophet's ecstasy or agony, yet if I can read the fate of this republic by the lurid light that gleams around the tombs of buried nations, where the footprints of decay have lingered for centuries, I see no palliation of her guilt that justifies the idea that the great and dreadful God will spare her in her crimes, when less favored nations have been dragged from their places of pride and power, and their dominion swept away like mists before the rising sun. Heavy is the guilt that hangs upon the neck of this nation, and where is the first sign of national repentance? The least signs of contrition for the wrongs of the Indian or the outrages of the negro? As this nation has had glorious opportunities for standing as an example to the nations leading the van of the world's progress, and inviting the groaning millions to a higher destiny; but instead of that she has dwarfed herself to slavery's base and ignoble ends, and now, smitten of God and conquered by her crimes, she has become a mournful warning, a sad exemplification of the close connexion between national crimes and national judgments

This lesson she should have learned amid the wrecks of ancient empires, buried beneath the weight of their crimes. She should have learned it from Egypt, seared with the wrath of God, and weeping over her first-born and her dead. She should have read it on the tombstone of proud Babylon, who said in her fancied security, I sit a queen and shall see no sorrow, when destruction was preparing its mines beneath her feet, and ruin brooding over her head. You wonder at the blindness of the nation in refusing the negro's aid, in rejecting the services of men acquainted with both the enemy and the country, who might have, ere this, led their stumbling feet to victory. I a most surprised. It looks as if the nation, stultified by its crimes, with the loss of its moral power, had also parted with its mental perceptions.

The North, if I understand her position aright, lacks one great element of success, and that is enthusiasm. In this battle she lacks the enthusiasm of love and the fanaticism of hate. The South has the latter—a terrible fanaticism that has given vigor to their arms and strength to their labors. If the age would only give another Peter, the hermit, to set every heart to throbbing with a hatred of oppression and a love of freedom, then we might witness another crusade, not to rescue the sepulchre of our once dead Saviour, but temples of a living Christ, from the great Mausoleum of American oppression.

The country needs a leader, high and strong, and bold and brave; his heart the home of great and noble purposes, who would count the greatest victory worse than a shameful defeat if resubjugation of the South should only mean a reconstruction of the Union on its old basis.

As to the colonization scheme, give yourself no uneasiness. If Jeff. Davis does not colonize Lincoln out of Washington, let him be thankful. The President's dabbling with colonization just now suggests to my mind the idea of a man almost dying with a loathsome cancer, and burying himself about having his hair trimmed according to the latest fashion. I anticipate no fresh trouble to our people from this new movement. Let the President be answered firmly and respectfully, not in the tones of supplication and entreaty, but of earnestness and decision, that while we admit the right of every man to choose his home, that we neither see the wisdom nor expediency of our self-exportation from a land which has been in a measure enriched by our toil for generations, till we have a birth-right on the soil, and the strongest claims on the nation for that justice and equity which has been withheld from us for ages—ages whose accumulated wrongs have dragged the present wars that overshadow our head. And even were we willing to go, is the nation able to part with us? What Christian land under heaven is able to part with four millions of its laboring population? And should this country ever emerge from this dreadful war, with its resources diminished, its strength crippled, and industry paralyzed, will it not want our labor to help rebuild the ravages of war and the wastes of carnage? Did not cruel persecutions drive from Spain and France some of their best workmen and artisans, and what has been the result? All the gold gathered from the new world, that glittered in the coffers of Spain, have not saved her from decay, and does not. France, till this hour, misses the strong current of Protestant blood from her veins.

O, be hopeful, my friend! Upon our side of the controversy stands God himself, and this gives us a solemn and sublime position. A people thus situated may lift up their heads and take courage in the hope of a sure and speedy redemption F. E. W. Harper.

Notice.—We are not responsible for this article in any sense; the author alone will be.—Ed

For the Christian Recorder

Mr. Editor:—I see a great deal said nowadays upon the subject of colonization. That subject, or scheme, was originated so corruptly, as I have means and every reason to believe, that I have never liked much to hear the subject mentioned. However, I suppose it is right to investigate all subjects, in order that we may see what they are. But to come at the matter short, I would just say that I have examined closely what has been said on that subject, as far as I have been able, and I am not willing to subscribe to much that has been said in favor of colonization, in any shape, as now talked of, from the fact that I most candidly believe that every white person in this nation who favors the colonization scheme, does so, not because he is so deeply interested in our welfare, but from deep-seated prejudice of his heart which he has contracted against the colored man. I repeat that he has contracted it against the colored man; it is not natural, as I think I am prepared to prove.

President Lincoln may have uttered the convictions of his mind honestly in his address to the colored committee, but to say that he came honestly by such convictions is more than I could say I honestly believed; for how it is true that the colored people of this country are the cause of the present great rebellion and war, is what I cannot understand. Now I believe that the existence of slavery is what brought the war about, and I am sure that the colored people are not the authors of slavery. So I think the charge incorrect, and a slander, and amounts to a perfect outrage; for I cannot conceive how the colored people have caused the war any more than I could conceive how slavery could be the author of its own existence. I cannot understand the one any easier than I can the other.

No; it is the existence of American slavery that has done the mischief, and though "I am not a prophet, nor the son of a prophet," yet I will venture here to deliver a piece of prophecy; that is, that this rebellion will never be crushed until this nation agrees in its sovereign capacity to make restitution to the colored people of this country, and to restore to them "their God given rights, of which they have been now so long robbed."

But to return to the subject of colonization. On that subject I know that I can speak for myself as an individual I feel that this is my own native country. Indeed, I have the means of knowing that it is, over and above that my sires and race have shed a great deal of blood in defence of the liberties of this country, and to make this country what it is, for which reasons I am contumaciously opposed to any scheme of colonization. It is my preference to remain here on what I claim as my own native soil, at least until I make it up in my own mind to do otherwise, and that, too, without any persuasion by my enemies; for a man who has so much prejudice against me that he is not willing for me to settle nearer than from three to five thousand miles from him is my enemy, it matters not who he is. I style him my enemy, and therefore I cannot be a subject of his influence in any way whatever.

In this great matter I hope our people will be like men; speak their mind freely, and not suffer "themselves to be carried about with every wind of doctrine" with which they may chance to come in contact. Could I reach the whole of them with my voice or pen, I would say to them as Moses said to the children of Israel, while hemmed between their enemies and the Red Sea: "Fear not, stand still and see the salvation of the Lord which he will show you" before long. It does not matter what any body may say, that which the Lord is going to do he will do. It does not matter how many laws are passed, or how many are not passed, it is all the same with him. As it regards my sympathies, they are with the general Government, but I am sorry to say that my sentiments are not, as far as colonization is concerned. Now as far as loyalty is concerned, I am free to state that I feel it to be my indispensable duty, as well as privilege, to be loyal to the Government under which I live T. Strother.

Terre Haute, Ind., Sept., 1862

(To be continued)

For the Christian Recorder

AFFAIRS IN WASHINGTON.

Mr Editor:—We are in the midst of an anxious suspense still for the nation's safety. Fierce and terrible have been the battles fought almost at the door of the Capitol for the last two weeks. Days and nights pass away leisurely even to the most unconcerned, but to those who are to any extent interested in the war affairs, and are hungering for the evening and morning papers, hours appear to creep slower than days formerly.

The streets of Washington, which were thronged with straggling soldiers two weeks ago, now presents quite a different state of things Those wandering soldiers have been taken up and properly assigned to a more useful sphere of action, though every public rendezvous is still beleaguered with more captains, lieutenants, and other coat-strapped gentlemen than I have ever seen before. How it is that such fierce battles can be raging on the very suburbs of the United States capital, and so many idle officers promenading the streets, loitering around hotels, and lolling in every kind of saloon at the same time, is a mystery to me. However, it is a very instantaneous thing that is of no use at all, and the only use their appearance upon the streets is, that it has a tendency to keep down excitement, for the great mass of the people are led to suppose, that as long as the soldiers are so easy and unconcerned, there is but little danger to be feared. And strange to say too; but there is the greatest difference in the world between the last soldiers called for by the President and the first. The first or former soldiers who came to the defence of their country, seemed to have had nothing at heart but their great and glorious mission, and every other consideration appeared to be a matter of contempt, or regarded as undeserving attention; they passed to and fro among the people and treated every one respectfully; such were the manners and becoming courtesy of every northern soldier that the colored people delighted to render every assistance in their power; they would take them to their houses and give them the best to eat the market could afford, and divide the last penny they had to make them comfortable, and it was almost unnatural to hear a harsh word spoken by any of them to a colored person. But these last recruits which are coming into the field, are all the time cursing and abusing the infernal negro, as some say, nigger. In many instances you may see a regiment of soldiers passing along the street, and knowing them to be fresh troops, you may (as it is natural) stop to take a look at them, and instead of them thinking about the orders of their commanders, or Jeff. Davis and his army, with whom they must soon contend, they are gazing about to see if they can find a nigger to spit their venom at. And I believe it is to kill off just such rebels as these that this war is being waged for, one in rebellion to their country, and the other in rebellion to humanity, for that man who refuses to respect an individual because his skin is black, when God himself made him black, is as big a rebel as ever the devil or any of his subalterns were, if James Gordon Bennet is one, he not excepted.

We had the pleasure of visiting Baltimore last Sabbath, and found every thing very agreeable in our churches. Sabbath morning we heard the Rev. S. L. Hammond preach one of his heart-searching sermons from the text, "O taste and see that the Lord is good." Rev. Hammond preached in his pathetic style; he drew largely upon the Scriptures to prove his points, and so blended the various attributes of the Almighty as to show a line of goodness all through them. His words flowed free and easy, and fell impressively upon his audience. At night we visited Bethel church, and heard Rev. A. W. Waymen, who preached from the simple phrase, Eternity. I here had my attention particularly called to notice, that though the Rev. A. W. Wayman had spent so many years in Baltimore, and to all probability, had preached a thousand sermons in Bethel church, he nevertheless, held the entire audience, 2000 of white and colored, utterly spellbound; every one seemed to be intent upon the theme of his discourse, and in his glowing profusion of ideas. He invited all nature, the dancing stars, the rolling surges of the ocean, the flying cloud of heaven, the shining sun, the silver queen of night, the snow-capped mountains, the blooming forest, the soaring eagle, the crystallized rocks of a thousand eyes, the cherubim, the seraphim, the tall archangels, and all the intelligences that populated every planet, every cluster, every sphere, and every constellation in all God's dominions to define the length of eternity, and all proved abortive. He then attempted to measure it by the drops of the ocean, the sand upon the earth, the leaves of the forests, the atomical particles, until he, as it were, drifted away into the untold, unmeasured, and inconceivable cycles of eternity itself, but yet there were no bounds, it was endless, endless, endless.

We also had the pleasure of seeing the Rev. Mrs. James Lynch, who is not only a beautiful lady, but one whose physiognomical features bespeak the highest degree of intellectuality. She is also modest, sedate, and very reserved, a choice thinker, and a splendid writer, and in every respect the equal of her husband, and will in time make one of our first literary contributors, which is an inestimable excellence in a preacher's wife.

I also visited the office of the Repository, and find that our people, like unto nearly everything else, are growing weary in well doing. When the Repository first began to be published monthly, there was a considerable amount of zeal manifested in its behalf, but like the old bell cow, it has now become common, and hence the people are becoming careless. The secret of it is, I do not believe that the ministers manifest any interest in it, with some few exceptions, for I am certain if its claims were held up before the thousands that compose our congregations, Sabbathly, that we could dispose of at least 5000 per month, and here we can barely get rid of one thousand. I heard Bishop Quinn say in New York, that the ministers of the A. M. E. Church preached Sabbathly to over 75,000 human beings, and out of that vast number, we can hardly sell one thousand Repositories, and it puzzles almost the whole connection to understand how Weaver does to keep the Recorder alive, but the ones that are the most puzzled are those who do the least for it. If 75000 persons, professors and non-professors, who are supposed to compose our congregations through the entire connection, cannot keep up one weekly paper and one monthly periodical, (the Repository) we ought to go down South and work for old Jeff. No one can find any fault with either the Repository or the Recorder; their literature is of the best style, indeed, history, art, science, divinity or politics, or anything else heart could wish, are found in their pages as efficiently as in any other in this country No excuse under God's heaven, but indifference, or an indisposition to work for our own benefit. God of mercy wake up the people to a knowledge of their stupidity and to a sense of their danger, for I really believe that it is dangerous to trifle with the means that God has put in our hands to elevate unborn generations, for a man that will oppose literature is no more than any other sinner if he has the means of exerting its blessed power either upon himself or other persons. And the man that will neglect it, commits a sin second only to neglecting his prayers.

I was informed that there was a meeting held in the 15th street Presbyterian church on last Monday evening, to consider the propriety of calling a pastor, and that the Rev. Mr. Gibbs of Philadelphia, was one among the proposed. I trust they may succeed in getting some good man to lead them, as there are many young intelligent persons connected with that branch of Zion who need a spiritual adviser.

Professor A. M. Green is in the city, and contemplates delivering some of his telling lectures in Washington before leaving.

The committee who waited upon the President, and to whom he delivered his Central American address, have not yet taken any action. I hear they are preparing a reply, which they contemplate submitting to the people, and if approved of, then submitting it to the President. I hope they will make it speak in power, for if we do not speak now, at a time when the chief magistrate is bound to hear us, I very much doubt another opportunity being offered. May God teach them what to say H. M. T.

Washington, Sept. 19th, 1862.

REV. JAMES H. THORNWELL, D. D., OF SOUTH CAROLINA.

The man whom John C Calhoun styled the greatest of living Americans has just gone down into his grave without leaving behind him—in any record that we have been able to consult—the date of his birth. Among the newspapers of the church to which he belonged, neither The Observer, nor The Presbyterian, nor The Journal of Commerce, has succeeded in giving it, though his age is mentioned as about fifty years. Not even his name has place in the "Men of the Time." The late report states that he died of typhoid pneumonia, in Charlotte, N. C., August 1st. But as this report comes from "rebel sources," and as a similar rumor concerning Dr. Hugo (who is still living,) not long ago gained currency, some acquaintances of Dr. Thornwell in this city express a belief that he is not yet dead. Yet as the journals just named have given him their usual obituary record, we add our own. Even if he be alive, and shall see these notices, he will not be the first man who has read his own epitaph.

By common fame, Dr. Thornwell was the most brilliant minister in the Old School Presbyterian Church, and the most brilliant debater in its General Assembly. This reputation he early gained, and never lost. Whenever he was present in the Assembly, he was always the first person pointed out to a stranger. Nor was his appearance more likely to be forgotten than when visitors at the House of Representatives used to ask, "Which is John Randolph of Roanoke?" In not a few traits, both physical and mental, the two men bore each other a resemblance

A grave-looking, elderly gentleman, with a boy's stature—pale and cadaverous face—hair black as a raven, and floating about his neck almost like a woman's—shoulders round, and crowding his chest forward—a frail frame, plainly carrying the burden of an over-active brain:—this is the exterior portrait of the little great man, who, after the death of Calhoun, was esteemed the first citizen of South Carolina

The most singular point in his history is the earliest—his origin. For, strange as it may seem, the chiefest of South Carolinians sprang, not from the "first families," nor from the blood of the Cavaliers, but from the lowest class in the social order of the South—from a level even beneath the black man's—known in the social scale as the strata of the White Trash. He was born not in a house, but in a cabin; not under a roof, but under a thatch. Not that this is any discredit to him;—not at all! Only, when he afterwards turned unrighteously against those of his fellow-creatures whom God likewise had set in obscure and lowly stations, he ought not to have forgotten the "rock whence he was hewn, and the hole of the pit whence he was digged."

A happy accident early brought good fortune to this young piece of friendless White Trash South Carolina having no common schools where a poor lad might find a gate opening to a career, he was caught up by a rich planter in the neighborhood, who, enamored of his fine eyes and fair forehead, sent him as a charity scholar to South Carolina College at Columbia—all because of his handsome looks. Here he began immediately to make a young man's fame; devouring books with passionate appetite, outstripping his mates in all studies, conquering in all debates; running through his course with such distinction that the student left the college to return as professor, and to remain as president

The presidential chair—the chief literary post in the whole range of Southern institutions—he kept until a few years ago, when he resigned it for the Professorship of Theology in the Old School Presbyterian Seminary, which stood as neighbor to the College, in the same town. This change his friends always regarded as unfortunate; for, after exerting an unbounded influence on each succeeding company of students—so that even yet they imitate the tones of his voice—he found, on entering a second class seminary, that his sphere of activity was abridged. Nor did the students of the College quietly submit to the vote which transferred him to the Seminary. When were South Carolinians ever in the habit of submitting quietly to disagreeable votes? Before a successor could come to sit in the vacant chair, the young men rose in rebellion, armed themselves with pistols, drew a cannon to face the front door, and undoubtedly would have begun a bombardment, had not Dr. Thornwell suddenly appeared, and by his personal influence persuaded the chivalry to retire! However, on the breaking out of a rebellion more threatening and disastrous, whose calamities are national and world-wide, Dr. Thornwell ranked himself among the rioters!

The theological professorship included, on Sundays, the pulpit of the First Presbyterian Church, a double office, in which he served till his death. It was in the pulpit that his abilities had their best display. His voice, though hardly well modulated, was, nevertheless, so fascinating as a song; his gestures, though consisting of little else than throwing out both arms and drawing them back again, were never ungraceful, and always impressive; his eyes, which he never took off his audience to look upon a manuscript, and seldom to glance at a note, had a strange power of riveting attention, his whole manner of speech had the peculiarity, that while seldom exciting the speaker to any apparent enthusiasm, it always kindled the assemblage into a glowing fervor of feeling.

He took the palm for conversation. He was the talking centre of almost every circle where he entered. His confident manner, his facility of expression, his ability to seize an idea and make the most of it on the spot, compensated largely for a natural barrenness of humor. He was master of a peculiar sarcasm which, somewhat like Shelley's, was sharp on occasion, yet which, to use clean, needed to be edged with wit. But in describing something which he had seen, he was a rare narrator. For instance, in telling some friends in this city of Blondin's feats on the tight-rope at Niagara, which he had just witnessed, he made every body in the parlor shudder and tremble.

Of his publications, the best known is his volume of Discourses on Truth, consisting of a series of sermons on Christian ethics; besides which, he wrote with great learning and vigor against Popery; and, from time to time, during the last twenty-five years, has printed sermons, pamphlets, tracts, political essays, reviews, his latest production being a vindication of the New Southern Old School Church, of which he laid the corner-stone, as Dr Ross laid it for the New School. His style is vigorous, direct, unimaginative, devoid of illustration or ornament, carefully weeded of unnecessary words, never needing a second reading to make the meaning clear; on the whole resembling Brownson's more than any other writer's, though less rigidly Saxon than that fine, brave English which puts such spirit and fire into the pages of The Quarterly Review.

Speaking of Dr. Thornwell's habits of mind, The Presbyterian says:

"Dr. Thornwell's favorite studies (outside of theology) were in the departments of metaphysics, logic, and moral science. An unfortunate remark, smacking somewhat of a boast, that he possessed the best private library on the subject of logic in the country, brought upon him the laugh of many, but we doubt not that it was true, as his fondness for this study was remarkable. The writer chanced to go at one time into a room which he had occupied for two days, at some distance from his home, and seeing scraps of paper lying upon the carpet, picked some of them up. To his astonishment they were covered with logical symbols, the work, evidently, of a few leisure moments, and of a character which showed the writer to be perfectly at home in the most difficult parts of the science."

This extract furnishes the key-note to Dr. Thornwell's intellectual character. His chief power of mind—a power which he was constantly strengthening, like a gymnast, by exercise in these studies—was, logical deduction. He constructed an argument with rare skill, and presented it to an audience with winning fervidness. This was his forte. Beyond this, we do not see that he possessed any quality of greatness. Certainly he was not, in any broad sense, an original thinker. In all that he said, he said nothing new: at least, in all that he published, we have seen nothing new. Taking away from the Discourses on Truth their fine precision of statement, their carefulness in covering the whole ground, and their pure English, what remains—that is, the actual substance of the book—is not the author's own, but is to be found (where he found it) in other writers. In Moral Philosophy, he corrects Paley; in Mental, he corrects Locke; but everybody nowadays corrects both Paley and Locke, even without evincing profound originality of thought. It seems to us that Dr. Thornwell has not discovered any new truths, nor led any new ideas into the world—chiefly for a lack of a quality of mind which, in place of a better name, is called the intuitive faculty. So, with all his fine parts, he was not a man of genius.

In the General Assembly, he usually made more speeches, and gained fewer votes, than any other man on the floor. The reason for this was two-fold: first, because he was always bringing forward some narrow, abstract, technical solution, to which the great majority of less acute but more practical minds attached no importance, and then because—unlike all other South Carolinians since the world began—he had neither taste nor ability for ecclesiastical strategy. If he had a measure to introduce, he consulted [illegible] mittee beforehand; he arranged no programme of tactics. He always expected to carry his point unaided, except by his own speech. Often in a debate he was so sanguine of the success of his measures, that when the final vote left him in a lonesome minority, his surprise was ludicrous to see. Thus, two years ago in the Assembly at Rochester, when he sought, by a grand assault, to demolish the organized Boards of the Old School Church, and to substitute committees in their place—arraying Dr. Hodge in battle against him—he made a long, brilliant, and absurd speech at the close of which he remarked to a friend, "I think I have made the subject so clear, that I will have no overwhelming majority." "You will get," says his friend, "about 50 votes out of 325." On the count, he had 47! Many South Carolinians have said that, were he not a clergyman, he would have followed Calhoun to the Senate. But he had one virtue too great for a politician. He despised canvassing! We say it to his honor!

But this man chose to cast an ineffaceable shadow upon what might have been a shining name Born to no inheritance but poverty, to no station but obscurity—shaking from his small clothes the dust of the Dirt Eaters before he could step into respectable society—belonging to a low class who looked up from their degradation to envy the negro above them—he afterwards rose to the level of the oligarchy only to look down with ungenerous contempt upon the dusky multitudes who once were his superiors by social caste.

While South Carolina was organizing the Great Outbreak, such was Dr Thornwell's influence among the masses of the people, such was the prestige of his name, such was his power of appeal, that, during the few critical days before the ordinance of Secession, it is hardly an exaggeration to say that he held in his own hands the decision of peace or war for the whole land. For if South Carolina had not rebelled, no other state would have followed: and one man might have saved South Carolina. But when the Legislature met to pass the treasonable ordinance, who was the man who rose in the capitol to inaugurate the revolution with public prayer? It was Dr. Thornwell!

Independent.

FASHIONABLE DRINKING

Say what you may of the rumseller, as being the cause of the rapid increase of intemperance in our land, we think that to the fashionable drinker is due a vast amount of the responsibility. The trafficker has the semblance of an excuse. His family is dependent upon him for a support; his education has been such that he does not see clearly the enormity of the offence he commits. But the man of influence in society, who has wealth, a good name, and perhaps occupying a high position in church or state, who, with others of like standing, gives tone and character to society, he is the man of all others, whose influence sometimes tells for evil upon all around.

Now, we have hosts of just such men in the West. They are called moral, upright men; so far as overt acts of crime are concerned, no exceptions can be taken to their conduct. But they give the sanction of their presence, their smiles, their equivocal tokens of approbation, to the habits of the fashionables in regard to the use of the milder drinks; and some of these men use and furnish the same themselves. We look upon such persons as more blameable than some rumsellers, for they sin against greater light

Should a minister of the gospel set the example of using intoxicating beverages, who does not see that such influence would be sadly pernicious? If the leading members of his denomination should be guilty of the same, all the preaching of their lives would not counteract their acts. Even when those who make no profession, but are looked up to as examples of morality, give the influence of their words and deeds to the so-called harmless sipping of the fashionable beverages of the day, an untold amount of evil is fastened upon society It is a fact which cannot be disputed, that thousands copy their morals and habits from those who are above them in social position. If the rich man deems it right to drink his costly wine, the youth will not deem himself in the wrong when he patronizes the bear shop. If the latter is blameable, the former is criminal. We believe the fashionable drinker, next to the rum traffic, is the greatest obstacle which the temperance cause has to encounter. Let it be denounced as it deserves.

DO THE RIGHT THING.

Whenever you are in doubt which of two things to do, let your decision be for that which is right. Do not waver, do not parley, but square up to the mark and do the right thing. You may not always hit the mark; but you should, nevertheless, always aim at it, and with every trial your skill will increase. Whether you are to be praised or blamed for it by others; whether it will seemingly make you richer or poorer, or whether no other person than yourself knows of your action, still always, and in all cases, do the right thing. Your first lessons in this will grow easier, until finally, doing the right thing will become a habit; and to do a wrong, will seem an absolute impossibility.

ABOUT BOASTERS.

The kinds of boasters are as numerous and as troublesome as the Egyptian frogs. There is the irreligious boaster, full of offensively adored wit; the pious boaster, meek as a cat licking stolen cream from her whiskers; the working brag, puffing like a tired locomotive short of water; and the lazy, good-for-nothing brag, easy as an elephant's toe; the literary brag, mouthing great nothings about little nothings, and the unlearned brag spouting about his own culpable ignorance and stupidity; but every one of them shows a short-sighted, a vain, and an ill-balanced mind. If you have any qualities, good friend, on which you pride yourself, cannot you allow the world to possess a trifle of discernment and find out for itself what you are worth? Can you not work out—without speaking it—a deed, a life, or a character, as the painter makes a picture, and let it show for itself? Did you ever notice that men are apt to think that he who is always blowing his own trumpet, cannot have a great deal else to do, and that he must be conscious of having something defective in him, which will reveal itself to his discredit if he does not forestall public opinion by enormous boasting?

REUNION IN HEAVEN.

How short is the earthly history of a family! A few short years, and those who are now embraced in a family circle will be scattered. The children, now the objects of tender solicitude, will have grown up and gone forth to their respective stations in the world. A few years more, and children and parents will have passed from this earthly stage. Their name will be no longer heard in their present dwellings. Their domestic loves and anxieties, happinesses and sorrows, will be a lost and forgotten history. Every heart in which it was written will be mouldering in the dust. And is this all? Is this the whole satisfaction which is provided for some of the strongest feelings of our hearts? How can such transitory beings, with whom our connection is so brief, engage all the love we can feel? Why should not our feelings toward them be as feeble and unsatisfying as they? But, blessed be God, this is not all. Of this, he has given us perfect assurance in the Gospel of his Son. Though to the eye of unenlightened nature the ties of domestic love seem scattered into dust; the spiritual eye of faith perceives that they have been [illegible] to be assumed in far happier circumstances, in the region of everlasting love and bliss. Though the history of a family may seem to be forgotten when the last member of it is laid in the grave, the memory of it still lives in immortal souls, and when the circle is wholly dissolved on earth, it is again completed in heaven.

Understanding the Word.—Few American missionaries gained so high a reputation as soon as the Rev. Walter M Lowrie, of the Presbyterian Board, who was early cut off and called on high. Once he was comforting a companion in his work under circumstances of great affliction, and said to him that these trials were God's necessary preparations for missionary life and usefulness. He observed that there were some passages of Scripture which he never understood till he read them through tears. There are few of the Lord's afflicted ones who will not corroborate this. The fast-falling tears which dim the bodily eyes only clearly the spiritual vision.

CRITICISM RIGHTLY UNDERSTOOD.

Marie and Leon Escudier tell a story of Mme Gavaudan, which deserves to be read by every public performer, and weighed well.

She had played, one evening, in le Petit Chaperon rouge, in the most charming style, and on her return to the green room was surrounded by her friends, who congratulated her on her success Among those present was a journalist, who alone kept silent. Some time before he had criticised Mme Gavaudan severely, and he seemed to be uneasy, walking about in evident agitation. Finally, yielding to the general excitement, he approached the actress and said

"Madame, can you pardon me for having misjudged your admirable abilities?"

"Sir," replied Mme Gavaudan, "I can only return you thanks. Your severe animadversions have given [illegible] to the success of this evening."

Mme [illegible]

The Christian Recorder.

Philadelphia, September 27, 1862.

NOTICE.

TO THE DISTRICTS OF PHILADELPHIA, NEW ENGLAND, OHIO, INDIANA, AND MISSOURI, OF THE A. M. E. CHURCH MINISTERS

Dear Brethren:—As we have a number of superannuated ministers on the list in said Districts, therefore it will be expected that the ministers and preachers, on their circuits and stations, will do all they can to collect the two cent money, and we also recommend that the Class leaders be instructed to collect and set the amount on the Class book opposite each member's name, as also all the collections called, per Discipline, for the Annual Conference, and publish the same once every quarter, that it may be seen who they are that work for God and his cause. We think it is time to give credit to those of our people who do work, so that God's name may be glorified.

APPOINTMENTS.

On Sunday, the 28th inst., at 10 A. M., in the Wesley A. M. E. Church, Hurst Street, a discourse will be delivered by the pastor. Theme, "Seven Upward Steps." In the evening, at 7½ o'clock, a discourse entitled, "Seven Downward Steps."

QUARTERLY MEETINGS.

The Quarterly Meetings for Bridgeton Circuit. The Quarterly Conference at Back Neck, September 27th, 1862, at 10 o'clock, A. M

October 5th, at Springtown.
" 19th, at Gouldtown.
" 26th, at Bridgeton.

JOSHUA WOODLIN,
Elder in charge

My next Quarterly Meeting will be held on next Saturday and Sabbath, the 4th and 5th of October. PETER GARDINER,
Preacher in charge.

QUARTERLY MEETING.

Last Sabbath the Rev. W. D. W. Schureman held his Second Quarterly Meeting for the Norristown circuit, in Zion Mission, Philadelphia. Love feast early in the morning. The Lord was there, and a good time you may imagine. At 11 o'clock preaching commenced. Brother Burly preached, and we must say that it was one of the young man's best efforts. We were not there in the after portion of the day, but it is said they had a good time all through the day.

In the afternoon we crossed over the river to Camden, N. J., to the Quarterly Meeting of Rev. Peter Gardiner, and heard him preach. He also gave us one of his deep logical discourses. We had a good time, the Lord be praised. At night we were sent for to preach for the congregation of Rev. A. L. Stanford, as Bro. Stanford preached for Bro. Gardiner at night. We went, and the house was crowded from the stairs close up to the altar.

The Methodist, Presbyterian, Baptist, and Episcopalian Churches, are all getting along pretty well.

EXCHANGES.

We acknowledge the following exchanges which came to our office during our absence, and with which we neglected to shake hands in our last. But we will now promptly welcome. We found on our table the Monroe Democrat and American, published every week by A. Strong & Co. We have number 34 of Vol. XXXV. before us, and we wish them a long and peaceful life. Also the New York Herald; its long standing is a better puff than we are able to give it. We will be glad to receive it in exchange for the Recorder. Also the Christian Church Advocate—a paper which appears to be well conducted. We shall be happy to exchange for it, and wish it great success, and that its counsels may be fraught with justice to all men.

The proclamation of the President of the United States will be read with interest by all of our people, and all true lovers of freedom, irrespective of clime or caste, will give three hearty cheers for Abraham Lincoln, President of the United States of America. Now if every man would work and throw down prejudice, the country would soon be redeemed and restored back as it was in the days of the Puritan fathers. We know that old England will shout to hear that her sons and daughters have at last agreed to do as they have had to, and that is to let every body be free. Amen, Amen.

THINGS IN AND ABOUT PHILADELPHIA.

There is a sense of feeling in Philadelphia about the war. Many are looking with anxious hearts for the triumph and victory of General McClellan, and there are some, and no small number, too, for the success of Jeff. Davis, and his men. Others are in favor of a universal emancipation, and putting down this rebellion by using all able bodied men; while others are saying there is a negro in the wood pile, and it must not be torn down for fear he will jump out and interfere with the Constitution. And others are saying let him come out, for those for whom that part of the Constitution was, as they say, intended to keep the negro in the wood pile, have insulted the flag of the Union because the Union would not consent to the wood pile being built any higher; they have themselves torn down the wood pile so that the negro could jump out and go. But says the Union, no, we will surround the wood pile and keep him in, to see if you will lay down your arms of rebellion and come back, and we will give you your negros south of Mason and Dixon's line.

ACKNOWLEDGMENTS

Rev. H. Davis, for Jas. E. Hall,	$1 00
Albert H. Hall,	1 00
Rev. A. Johnas, of Johnstown, Pa., for two subscribers at Richmond, Pa.,	2 00
Miss Margt. Steward, of Bridgeton, N. J.,	50
Rev. H. M. Turner, on account,	4 00
Mr. Daniel Davidson, of Alexandria, Va.,	1 00

NOTICE.

We have received from two brethren a special request to preach for them out of the city on Sabbath. We would just say that a collection is to be taken up in Bethel Church on the following Sabbath for the contrabands, and Brother Campbell announced to his Board that we would preach for him at 3 o'clock on Sabbath, the 25th inst. On their account I stay to fill the appointment, to do all the good I can for suffering humanity.

THE simple inherit folly; but the prudent are crowned with knowledge.

FROM THE WEST.

INQUIRY.

"To the Rev. E. Ross,

DEAR SIR:—Will you please to answer the following questions?

1. The Repository, as sometimes seen in your paper, and often in the Annual Conferences, in connexion with the Recorder—is it or is it not the property of the general connexion of the A M E Church?

2. If it is the property of the connexion, why is it not under the jurisdiction of the General Editor and Book Steward?

3. Why is it so sectional in its circulation?

INQUIRER."

ANSWER

By the interrogatories made by "INQUIRER," we suppose he considers it our our duty to know (if, perchance, we should profess ignorance) all about the several publications belonging to our connexion, or for our connexion—that we are put here for that purpose, and, as such, should always give a prompt, forward and square answer. Then, first, in relation to the Repository, I would say that in 1857 the Indiana Conference Literary Society felt the need of some kind of a religious periodical, whereby we could have some place to communicate our thoughts, &c., and whereas, the connexion had failed to keep one in the field for the benefit of her ministry, members and friends, I introduced the subject in our Conference—that the members of the Literary and Historical Society respectively take our own money out of our pockets and publish a quarterly magazine. But that in no sense whatever was it to interfere with the publications of the general concerns of the connexion.

That was our argument upon the floor at the Annual Conference held in the city of New Albany, Indiana, in the fall of 1857. With this understanding, it was agreed to publish one in the city of Chicago, Ill, and the Rev. N. M. Clark was appointed the executive, and Bishop Payne the Chief, &c. They failed to carry out our decrees. I ought to state, however, that we secured the co-operation of the Missouri and Baltimore Literary Societies of the Conference. As there had been a failure on the part of those who were to execute the matter, I being stationed at the city of Indianapolis, Ind., the Revs. John M. Brown and W. R. Revels, both members of the Missouri Conference, were in my (then) charge, which was in March, 1858, I remarked that as there had been a failure on the part of the said persons, I would publish it myself in the city of Indianapolis, Ind.

We at once held a consultation, and hence agreed to call upon the printing firms of the city, &c., which we did to our satisfaction—and all was now right if we could procure the approbation of Bishop Payne. The Rev. J. M. Brown wrote to Bishop Payne immediately. He at once agreed that I should conduct the publication, &c., and sent on to me the matter he had on hand for publication and his ratio of the money, and I commenced the first publication on the first of April, 1858, and took some thirty dollars of my own money to give it a start. I continued its editor as aforesaid for some two years—and, the office of Editor and General Book Steward being vacant by the resignation of the Rev. J. P. Campbell, the Philadelphia Conference, which at that time had the jurisdiction over said Book Concern, elected me to fill that position until the sitting of the General Conference, which was a year from the time they voted for me. So, when the Indiana Conference met, they voted or consented for me to act for the connexion, which I did for a few months, until the General Conference met, in the city of Pittsburgh, 1860, at which time the General Conference, by their own act, placed me where I now am; and in January, 1861, I revived the Christian Recorder to its present size, and have kept it in the field ever since. Therefore, it never was intended that the Repository should interfere the least with the organ of the Church—but our own pecuniary affairs, outside of the General Concern, and never intended to come in collision with the general concern whatever. But when the General Conference appointed its officer or officers, that all matters belonging to the General Concern should always have the pre-eminence—and, after that, any other good thing might follow and do what it could. Therefore, the Repository is not the property of the general connexion.

This answers your first and second interrogatories. The third interrogatory I will leave you to judge from the answer to the other two questions.—ED.

CONTRABANDS IN WASHINGTON

We have read a letter from the President of the National Freedman's Society, of Washington, giving a graphic description of the condition of the poor, oppressed contrabands who are coming into Washington, more or less, all the time, moneyless and clotheless, of course. There are about 2,500 there now, if not more, who are, it seems, almost wholly dependent upon the Freedman's Society for support, according to the letter which the President of the Society sent to our friend, Mr. Still, of this city. It calls upon the colored people of Philadelphia to aid our brethren in their suffering condition. We ask our people here, Will you respond to the call? Yes; I know you will. The S. C. Statistical Association of the State of Pennsylvania, have gone to work immediately, and sent letters to the ministers and churches, all of whom, we hope, will act, and act promptly, too. Let everybody give something, either in money or clothing—second-hand. Yes, let every colored lady and gentleman do their duty.

On last Tuesday night we were at Bethel Church, attending the meeting called by the pastor, Rev. J. P. Campbell, the object of which was to take into consideration the urgent call for aid. The Rev. J. P. Campbell was appointed Chairman, and Mr. R. L. Seymour was appointed Secretary. On motion, a committee of three was appointed to draw business for the meeting. Rev. Elisha Weaver, Rev. Stephen Smith, and Bro. Abraham Field, were the committee, who went out, and returned in a short time with a preamble and series of resolutions, which were all approved by the meeting. The purport of these resolutions was, to respond to the call by raising money forthwith, and recommended that there be a collection taken up through the day, on Sabbath, in Bethel Church, expressly for that purpose. Mr. E. M. Thomas was introduced to the meeting, who arose and gave a statement of what he was an eye-witness to, as a citizen of Washington. There were some resolutions passed, as follows:—A vote of thanks was tendered Mr. Thomas for the information given. On motion, a committee of seven was appointed, (three males and four females,) as follows: Males, Rev. J. P. Campbell, Rev. S. Smith, and Brother Hall; Females, Mrs. Jane Johnson, Mrs. Mary C. Weaver, Mrs. Mary S. Jones, and Miss Esther Armstrong. On motion, it was resolved that all goods and moneys be paid over into the hands of the committee to be sent or brought to their addresses, as follows:

Rev. J. P. Campbell, No. 832 Carpenter St.
Rev. Stephen Smith, No. 921 Lombard St.
Mr. Morris Hall, No. 1022 Lombard St.
Mrs. Jane Johnson, No. 618 South St.
Mrs. Mary C. Weaver, No. 619 Pine St.
Mrs. Mary L. Jones, No. 919 South St.
Miss Esther Armstrong, No. 704 Lebanon St.

On motion, it was resolved that the doings of this meeting be published in the Christian Recorder, and that the names of the committee and their addresses be published in the Recorder until recalled.

A collection of $35 50 was taken up at that small meeting—some paying 25, and some, $1, &c. The meeting adjourned, subject to the call of the chairman of the committee, Rev. J. P. Campbell. We look for a large collection through the day, on Sabbath, especially in the afternoon, and at night.—ED.

EXTRACT OF A PRIVATE LETTER ON THE TIMES FROM MISS SARAH A. LESTER OF VICTORIA V. I.

I read with interest all matters relative to the prosecution of the noble cause of the amelioration of the condition of American bondmen; bondmen I hope they will not long remain. I feel sure that the outcast will burst his chains, that the air which has long been filled with his sighs of oppression, will soon rise with shouts of Liberty.

I really wish no foreign interference in this contest, but that my nation may, as it were, purge itself of its fearful crimes, and be re-established upon the sure foundations of Truth and Justice.

I was reading a synopsis of Dr. Rock's lecture, (I forget when and where, the paper is not here, so I cannot refer to it.) I remember he said something to this effect, that in the event of a foreign invasion, if the negro's manhood was recognised, he would bravely defend the land that gave him birth. The sentiment went right to my heart ever since I have given the subject any serious consideration. I have had no real sympathy with the opinion that would lead me to seek in a stranger's land, that redress which is denied in one's own. No! I would rather battle with the wrong, and tho' perhaps I failed to accomplish my purpose, I should at least have the satisfaction of knowing, that I had paved the way for others.

America's my home, and I believe the dawn of that day is approaching when her "woods and templed hills" will re-echo with the soul-stirring strain of true freedom. Had her churches been faithful to God, the carnage that now desolates her soil would have been unknown, and slavery with all its horrors would have been buried in oblivion.

The present reflections of her clerical sons must be anything but pleasant. There are not many among them at whose door the sin may not be laid. Alas! that a body designed by the All-wise Father to be the "light of the world," should be so leagued with the powers of darkness, that its influence in the world is almost lost.

(For the Christian Recorder.)

FROM LOUISVILLE, KY.

MR. EDITOR.—Dear Brother: I have delayed writing to you for the want of something of interest to communicate.

I would just say that, before I leave this city, that is, if I can leave, for I am not sure that I can do so yet—for it is very hard for any one to leave at this time, either white or colored—I shall say a few words.

Our city is in a state of great excitement, and they fear an attack from the enemy, and are preparing for it. They are throwing up intrenchments all around the city. They called for one thousand negroes to work on the intrenchments. They are taking men everywhere they can get them—on the streets or at their houses. They came to my house this morning, between 1 and 2 o'clock. They found no male about the house but myself—and, seeing that I was very lame, they let me be for the present, and said perhaps they would call for me to-day—so that, if I should get to Chester soon, you may know the reason. There is now not less than ten thousand soldiers working on the fortifications, a portion of which is not more than fifty yards from my door. Things present a war appearance here now. I don't know how churches will get along, for they have all the ministers of color working on the intrenchments.

B. L. BANNEKA.

Louisville, Ky, Sept. 18, 1862.

FAMILY PRAYER.

There is not on earth a scene more interesting than a family thus bending before the God of heaven; a collection of dependent beings, with tender feelings, with lively sympathies, with common hopes, fears, joys, blending their bliss and their woes together, and presenting them all to the King of kings, and the great Father of the families of mankind. There is not on earth a man more to be venerated, or that will be more venerated, than the father, who thus ministers at the family altar. No other man, like that father, as reaches all sources of human action, or so greatly controls his powers, yielding their first years, and following the direction of his moulding hand, that is soon to control all that is tender and sacred in the interests of the Church and state. No Solon or Lycurgus is laying the foundation of codes of law so deep, or taking so fast a hold on all that is to affect the present or future destiny of man. We love, therefore, to look at such venerable locks; and to contemplate these ministers of God, who stand between the rising generation,—feeble, helpless, and exposed to a thousand perils—and the Eternal Parent of all. They stand between the past and the coming age, remnants of the one and lights of the other; binding the past with that which is to come, living lights of experience, to guide the footsteps of the ign rant and erring, to illuminate the coming generation, to obtain for it blessings by counsel and prayer, and then to die. And if the earth contains aught on which the eye of God reposes with pleasure, it is the collected group, with the eye of the father raised to heaven, and the voice of faith and prayer commending the little worshippers to the protecting care of Him who never slumbers nor sleeps.

THE WAR.

The darkest hour which the country has yet seen since the beginning of the war, is here. On every side disasters to the Union cause are multiplying. The enemy is at Frederick, Md., and an invasion of the border counties of Pennsylvania, Lancaster County included, is imminent.

Let the people, in this extremity, perform the two great duties of the hour, namely to pray and to act.

Deep repentance and humbling ourselves under the mighty hand of God; faith and trust in Him; and earnest intercessions on behalf of our rulers, that they may have and exercise energy, courage and wisdom;—these are the things for which the nation, and every man individually, must pray.

To stand up for their homes, to quit themselves like men, to "play the men for their people," to do all that patriotism and religion demand;—these are the acts which each citizen owes his country and his God.

The Moravian.

CHINA.

Letter from a Missionary.

"Under date of February 14th, I wrote you, and gave expression to the hesitation which we felt on account of the threatening aspect of the troubles which were gathering about the benevolent resources of the Church. Afterwards, on the 24th of April, I informed you of my determination to "go forward." The way then seemed to be through deep waters, and even now our position is much straitened. But faith in God foretells that a way "on dry ground" will sooner or later be prepared. In pursuance of my purpose, I have visited Fat Shan, some twelve miles up the river, or rivers, I might say; for there are at least three different and immediate approaches to the city, and to each of these there are many entrances. Following the usual course taken by small boats, we pass many tens of villages and hamlets before arriving at what has been regarded a city of a larger population than Canton, with its 700,000 to 1,000,000. There are also many of the brethren here who still contend for at least 800,000 as the probable estimate for Fat Shan. But my observation and investigation lead me to place it at a much lower number. I have taken particular pains to inquire of the Chinese, themselves, as to what they consider to be the population of the place, and find their highest estimate to be about 300,000. When I visited the city, I walked through it from end to end, and from side to side, and afterwards went out to and ascended a hill which is about one mile distant from the suburbs. I should estimate the height of the hill at about 250 feet above the level of the river. From this elevated position a good view of the extent of the city proper was obtained, and unless my eyes deceived my judgment, I have no hesitancy in accepting the statement of the natives as being much nearer the truth than that which is commonly received. I have also visited a large town called Tai Shek, some six or eight miles to the south and east of Canton. Here we find at least 15,000 souls, whilst around the place, in a circuit of less than four miles, upwards of fifteen villages and towns are visible, and of easy access. From this point not less than 50,000 inhabitants could be reached by comparatively a small effort. A few days since I also had the pleasure and satisfaction of a short visit to Ch'an Ts'ün, which is located some fifteen miles (by the winding river,) to the southward. We had but two hours to spend in looking about and distributing tracts; so that in one sense the trip was not attended with a satisfactory result. I expect to return next week, and spend two days in making the visit. The population is not far short of 150,000, whilst several contiguous villages will swell the amount to about 200,000 or more. If it at all seem practicable and desirable, I shall in all probability try to make a settlement at this point. Besides the size of the place, its character as a market or fair leads many persons to visit it, from distant points, for purposes of trade. Whatever conclusion may be reached, it will be laid before you, with full details.

"To think of striking out into this country, so long shut up, and to enter upon a station alone, without a neighbor within less than twelve or fifteen miles (as we would say at home) is in some respects rather trying—more so for Mrs. N than for myself. The real work of doing so, may also be even less attractive. But we did not come here to seek and enjoy society; and we both feel that, as God gives an opportunity and strength, we will push on and seek to be faithful in our work. Our faith will be tried; but we neither shrink from the trial nor feel a single regret. The thought of home sometimes comes in upon the heart, and the faces——, but then it is momentary—one of our trials—and we remember with joy that our "Home" is above. You must not think from this that we are ever down-cast because we are alone. No; far from it. The Devil would have us despond, but our Saviour requires and helps us to hope. Pray for us, then, as we do for ourselves, that we may gird on our armor and manfully continue the conflict here begun and being waged between darkness and light."

CHRISTIAN EDUCATION.

THE TEACHER AND PUPIL BOTH POOR.

Since the commencement of the New Testament dispensation, it has been a distinguishing feature of the gospel that it has been preached to the poor. Nor has it been a less distinguishing feature that it has been preached by the poor.

The great Leader was a poor man; his apostles were poor men, and his followers generally were of this class. To the poor the gospel was preached—Luke vii. The invitation to come and receive the benefit was general, "Ho, every one that thirsteth, come ye to the waters; and he that hath no money."

The greatest of all teachers taught the most important doctrines, in the most effectual manner, without asking from his disciples and followers any compensation for his service.

The apostles followed his example, and sometimes, after they had been fully commissioned to preach the gospel, they worked with their own hands that they might not be burdensome to any.

In view of this freedom from expense connected at first with the dispensation of the gospel, various modes have been adopted for obtaining funds, in order to give instruction without charge to the poor, who devote themselves to the cause of Jesus Christ.

LABOR A PART OF CHRISTIAN EDUCATION.

While much good hath been done by the establishment of professorships and scholarships, the importance of labor, as a part of Christian education, has been, perhaps, too much overlooked.

It, therefore, appears desirable and important that, in a Christian education, while instruction should be free to the poor, labor on their part should be encouraged, that they might eat their own bread, and that after finishing their education and entering into active service they might occasionally, if need be, work with their own hands.

OUR FIRST PARENTS AN EXAMPLE.

The example of our first parents, before sin came into the world, is in favor of connecting labor with Christian education. They were directed to dress and keep the garden of Eden, to cultivate the posies, the fruit, the vegetables, while their constant and delightful study was the character and works of the great Creator.

ELISHA AN EXAMPLE.

A successor is to be appointed to take the place of Elijah the prophet. A laborer, a man accustomed to the plow and to driving the ox is chosen as the person properly educated for that important office. 1 Kings, 17.

OUR LORD AND MASTER AN EXAMPLE.

The great Teacher, our Lord and Master labored with his own hands from his youth till the time of his public ministry. "Is not this the carpenter's son?" "Is not this the Carpenter, the son of Mary?" are interrogatories which not only show that he was a laboring, industrious man, but that on this account, notwithstanding his manifested wisdom and power, many in his own country were offended at him.

Coming out from the laboring department, having had experience in all the difficulties and wearisome labors of an industrious life, his intercourse in society was the more acceptable and edifying among the lower and laboring classes. This great man made labor honorable. He worked with his own hands; he earned his own bread. He was a poor man. He is the friend of the poor. He associates with and instructs all classes of men. He talks with the woman at the well. He speaks in language of kindness to the publican on the tree, and goes with him to his house. He reasons with the ruler of the Jews who came to him by night. He teaches the poor fisherman to become a fisher of men. He excels all teachers and preachers who went before him; yet asks no money for his labor. He standeth in the top of high places, by the way in the places of the paths; he crieth at the gates, at the entry of the city, at the coming in of the doors; unto you, O men, I call; and my voice is to the sons of man. O ye simple, understand wisdom, and, ye fools, be of an understanding heart.

When he and Peter were called on for tribute money, he sent Peter to procure the money by fishing. Had Peter been of another occupation, we may reasonably suppose that he would have been directed to perform some service in connexion with that occupation in order to obtain the money. But he was a fisher, and the Lord makes his trade honorable; and, by directing Peter to go and fish for the tribute money, he makes it the duty of ministers, in certain circumstances of debt, to labor at their former trade to make payment.

On another occasion, when Peter and Thomas, and Nathanael, and the sons of Zebedee, and two other of his disciples were fishing, he showed himself to them, and thus encouraged them at their work, and furnished them with a meal of fish and bread of the choicest kind. John 21. This took place after the resurrection of our Lord, when these disciples were fully commissioned to preach the gospel to every creature. And it stands as a proof that labor is a part of Christian education which qualifies the minister for independent usefulness in the world.

PAUL AN EXAMPLE.

The apostle Paul was a learned man, brought up at the feet of Gamaliel, and taught according to the perfect manner of the law of the fathers. But he had also learned a trade which was useful to him as a part of his education. When his own wants were not supplied by others, and an open door was presented for preaching the gospel, he entered into that door, trusting in the Lord and laboring with his own hands to supply his own wants. When he came from Athens to Corinth, he found a certain Jew named Aquila with Priscilla his wife, and came unto them. And because he was of the same craft he abode with them and wrought (for by their occupation they were tent-makers) and he reasoned in the synagogue every Sabbath, and persuaded the Jews and the Greeks.

It is fairly inferred here that Aquila was a poor man, and unable to bear the expense of boarding and lodging the apostle. Paul knowing this and not anticipating a compensation for his ministerial services at so early a stage of his work in Corinth, chose rather to work with his own hands and earn his own bread, than to be prevented from preaching the gospel to the people of that city.

And this is another proof that labor should constitute a part of Christian education, that the knowledge of some trade or of some branch of business ought to be attained, in all ordinary cases, especially by candidates for the holy ministry who design to be missionaries.

As one of the fruits of Paul's laboring and preaching at the same time at Corinth, Aquila and Priscilla became his helpers in the work of the gospel (Rom xvi 3.)

And when they were in Ephesus, and Apollos, an eloquent man and mighty in the Scriptures came to that city, they took him unto them and expounded unto him the way of God more perfectly. By this we see the divine purpose in sending Paul to live and labor with Aquila and Priscilla. It was that they, being taught by Paul, might become teachers of others, and, although not ordained to preach the gospel yet that they as helpers and pioneers might accomplish much good in the holy work.

The above are some of the proofs and examples to show that, in a Christian education, while instruction should be free to the poor, except as each one may willingly give according to that he hath, labor on their part should be encouraged, that they may eat their own bread, and that, after finishing their education and entering into active service, they may occasionally, if need be, work with their own hands.

This appears to be the system of education "built upon the foundation of the apostles and prophets, Jesus Christ himself being the chief corner-stone."

GOD'S PROMISES.

"Give me where to stand," said Archimedes, "and I will move the world." The child of God has that "where to stand," and does move the world; not with physical fulcrum and lever, but by faith in Christ, and prayer to God, standing upon the "exceeding great and precious promises of God." The Christian has a foothold outside and above the world, a place of security and rest, where we may find refuge in this life when the waves of trouble surge high; and which shall endure when the world itself shall pass away. The promises of God are facts and realities. They present solid footing; they are abundant; they are immutable, and suited to every exigency. God is so munificent with his gifts that he cannot find room for them all in the present, and so he fills up his book with promissory notes, to which he signs his name; and his truth, his love, and his unmeasured bounty in the present, are a sufficient guarantee for their fulfillment. These promises apply to us in all our needs. They cover us at every point, relating to this world, and the world to come. They anticipate every phase in life, every condition of mind, every change in existence, and nothing pertaining to us is unprovided for. They are practical promises, taking hold of man as he is, and not simply as he ought to be. They are made to us as sinners, and not upon the supposition that we are angels. They stoop to our degradation; they come to our sore and tried spirits; they take notice of our conflicts and struggles with sin and self; they appreciate our inherent weakness. They are not bits of etherealized sentimentality, or like the ambiguous utterances of ancient oracles. They are rather like strong and loving arms thrown about us to lift us out of the mire, and place us upon the rock. They go with us into the scenes of every day life, into our workshops and stores, into the midst of exciting tumults, and in our secret hearts, where cares may be gnawing away the life. The Bible is a bundle of promises. God appeals by them to every motive, and attacks every point in the heart's citadel. He surrounds and hems us in with promises, to force us from our sinful refuges and sweep us into the kingdom. The sinner who goes to destruction has again and again to stumble over God's promises, and is lost only by hard struggling against them.

Not only are the promises in God's own words, but he gives full liberty also to the Bible writers to promise for him. It is as if he had given them blank forms, and said, "Whatever you see my people need, and in whatever variety of expression the promises will make the deepest impressions on their hearts, so fill them up over my name, and I will honor them all." This same privilege he seems to give to his people. Said a Christian brother, "I thank God for his 'blank promises.' I read, 'Ask and ye shall receive,' and 'Whatsoever ye ask in my name, I will do,' and Jesus does not say what I shall ask, and so I am at liberty to fill up the blank myself. I insert whatever blessing I need. I put in the names of my children and friends, and call upon God to honor his promises."

The Christian, the inquiring soul, the impenitent can wander nowhere this side of eternity, where, feeling a desire to return to God, he can say, "Here God's promises cannot reach me." Blessed be God for his promises! They include the gifts of Repentance, and Faith, and Salvation from sin. They include also growth in grace, and sanctification through the Holy Spirit; peace and triumph in death, and an abundant entrance into eternal life. The promises never leave us from the beginning, until having led us through all the trials of life, and down through the grave, they land us safely with God. Then let the child of God dismiss his anxieties and go fearlessly forward, surrounded and provided for at every step by these immutable promises. No accident can break them. No tide of earth can sweep them away. The gates of hell shall not prevail against them.

Exchange.

RELIGION is not a thing which spends itself. It is like a river which widens out nobly, and is never so broad or so deep as at its mouth, where it rolls into the ocean eternity.

SIGNS OF THE TIMES.

"Watchman! what of the night?"

Certainly the signs of the times are full of encouragement. The world has seen nothing like it in all the history of the past. On all hands, obstacles which had hindered, and even prevented all successful effort to spread the gospel, are removing in the most remarkable manner. Access to the entire heathen world now exists. This may be said almost without qualification. India, China, Japan, Madagascar, the Coasts of Africa, the Islands in the Pacific and Indian Oceans, savage tribes in North America, may now be approached, and even entered by prudent and persevering missionaries, with good prospect of success. And nearly all this change in the state of the heathen world has occurred within the memory of the present generation. We do not mean to assert that there are not still many difficulties to be overcome in all parts of heathendom. "The carnal mind" now, as in ages past, "is enmity against God." Ignorant and wicked rulers, and besotted priests, interested in upholding idolatry and even the basest superstitions, still live, and are ready to oppose. Even monsters in human shape are not wanting, as is seen in the land of Dahomey. But whatever the obstacles which still exist to impede the gospel in pagan lands, they are not to compare with those which Christianity had to encounter in the earliest ages of its career. The vast power and far-reaching influence of the great maritime Christian nations, England, France, Russia and the United States, have been felt in a salutary manner over all the continental and insular world that is still heathen. And thus "the way of the Lord is preparing," even a highway for the Word of our God, in the outlying nations of the earth, even the remotest of them.

A similar change is going on in the Mohammedan world. The respect, and dread, in which the great Christian powers are held by the Turks, the Persians, the Moors, and other Mohammedan nations, has led them to shrink from displaying the Moslem fanaticism and ferocity which they did even long since the present century opened upon the world.

The progress of the great principles of civil and religious liberty among the nations of Christendom has opened a large portion of the Papal world, and bids fair to open all the rest before many years pass away. The nations which did the most to give birth and add strength the papacy are just those Roman Catholic nations which are now the most prepared to receive the gospel of our Lord. Italy and France have known by bitter experience the nature of Romanism, and are now receiving the glorious gospel. So have Spain and Portugal, and the countries which they have colonized. Let us hope that their turn will soon come to hear the tidings of a free salvation, salvation through grace, not through the wretched penances and degrading and useless rites of Christianity for which they are indebted to Rome.

Even the day of Israel's redemption is evidently drawing nigh. Portions of the "Diaspora" of that wonderful nation which exists now only in its "dispersions" are evidently more disposed to listen to the story of Jesus of Nazareth than ever before. We can but hope that the time will not be long before "the blindness will be taken away" from the hearts of the descendants of Abraham, the Friend of God, and their return to the fold of the Saviour whom their fathers crucified to be the signal for an amazing outspread of the gospel in all directions, as well as the epoch of the outpouring of the Spirit from on high, by whose mighty influences nations will be born in a day.

These are glorious times in which to live, and labor, and give and pray. O that we were better fit to live in them, and more worthy of the high privilege! The heathen world, the Mohammedan world, the Papal world, the Jewish world, all opening for the gospel which they so much need! And which is also cheering, the resuscitation of a real Christianity is going forward in the Protestant world, and obstacles are removing which long had hindered the progress of the truth. Let us hope and pray that even the distressing war that is still going on within our borders may not only be brought to a speedy and happy close, but overruled by the Saviour for the decided furtherance of his kingdom.

Christian World.

(From the New York Observer.)

BRAZIL.

Rio de Janeiro, July 14, 1862.

How few there are who are aware that Rio de Janeiro is the third city in the Western World, and that there are but few cities of Europe larger. New York and Philadelphia in the United States, London, Paris, Naples, Vienna, St. Petersburgh, and, perhaps, one or two other capitals of Europe exceed it in population. One of the latest statisticians places it at 800,000, another at 390,000. However this may be, it is assuredly the most happy city in its natural surroundings that I have ever seen. I have lived two years in Europe, and have travelled nearly around the world, and I can truly say that it is only in the most glorious parts of Switzerland that I have found the outlines of Nature equal to those which I see around me each time that I lift my eyes from this paper. But when we come to the detail, Switzerland dwindles into insignificance. There is now before me scenery which will, so far as mountains, precipices and rocks are concerned, rival the Ohio land, although no mountain will pierce the regions of eternal snow. Here, however, is a garb of Nature, as radiant and graceful as the Alps are cold and severe. Hundreds of palm trees I see before me, waving their majestic plumes. The wide-leafed banana (called the fig tree of the Garden of Eden by the Portuguese, and, assuredly, three leaves will make a dress of the days of Josephine,) the bright aoja, the scolloped bread-fruit trees, creeping vines covered with flowers, seem, to the Northerner, strange sights outside of a hot-house, and yet they form the common and the richest garniture that you can conceive of. The nature here is so exciting to the contemplative mind that it is hard to come down to man, and find such a strong contrast. Nevertheless, the condition of the genus homo is better here than in any other portion of South America. Here there is a stable Government, institutions almost democratic, a model ruler in that true man, the Emperor, Don Pedro II., and, best of all, religious toleration.

Why is it that Brazil, which contains one-half the population of all South America, is so far in advance of all the States of this beautiful half of the Western hemisphere? Why is it that I have been permitted to-day to hear the Gospel plainly preached in English and Portuguese? Why is it that scarcely a communion season goes by in the Presbyterian Mission church here without some soul converted from Rome, professing, without let or hinderance, the simple religion of Christ? It is because this land was baptized in prayer and in blood by the Huguenots more than three hundred years ago, and by the Dutch Reformed missionaries more than two centuries in the past.

But let me go back a few days. It is not yet four weeks since I left New York in the Pacific Mail Steamship Company's magnificent vessel, the "Constitution." All that I have to say of that steamship is that seven times around her deck is exactly one mile; that Capt Oliver Eldridge is her commander; that we went to Rio de Janeiro in the unprecedented time of eighteen days and a half, and that the vessel has caused the greatest sensation in Rio that has existed for many years. Not less than twenty thousand persons have visited the good ship Constitution. The very first noblemen and statesmen of the Empire have wondered and admired, and the Emperor, who has been kept away by the severe indisposition of the Empress, has taken the deepest interest in this model ship. He told me, at a private audience, that it was his sincere regret that he could not go, but he hoped that when the Company despatched a consort of the Constitution he might be allowed to visit a specimen of the finest naval architecture of the United States.

In coming hither we had preaching each Sabbath, and Capt Eldridge afforded every facility that a clergyman could desire. I am usually very sea sick upon the ocean, but this time I escaped, thanks to a vessel of 4,000 tons, which cut smoothly through the water, notwithstanding that we had ten days of adverse winds.

But let me return to Brazil. There have been a vast improvement since I was last here, in the roads opened, streets paved, horse cars running, &c., &c.; but the noblest and highest undertaking has been the various missionary enterprises. Last night I met, at the Mission chapel of the (O. S.) Presbyterian Board, between twenty and thirty Brazilians and Portuguese, who have been brought from Rome's darkness to the knowledge of the truth as it is in Jesus. Rev. Mr. Blackford preached to them in Portuguese, on Jesus the light of the world. It was a touching sight to witness three new children of the light in this place of spiritual indifference and darkness. There was another meeting held at the same time in another portion of the city, where even more were accustomed to meet and sing to the Lord and "praise his holy name." I shall write you soon more fully in regard to this, only let me say that this field is most encouraging—indeed, I should say that the Presbyterian Board has not a more important mission anywhere. I have counted up some eight or nine regular missionaries, and as many colporteurs were at work in the Empire. There are three in this city (if we count Rev. Mr. Simonton, temporarily absent,) four German missionaries from the Society in Basle, Switzerland, Rev. Mr. Sneider, (O. S. Presbyterian Board) in San Paulo, and Rev. Rowland Holden, of the U. S. Episcopal Board of Foreign Missions, in Para. This last brother is of the truest stamp, and has done great service for the Bible and the Church of the living God in his discussion with the Bishop of Para. Rev. Mr. Blackford is faithfully at his labors here, and God has crowned those labors with precious first fruits.

Yours, &c. J. C. F.

AN OLD LETTER FROM JERUSALEM.

December 5, 1857.

To-day two of us have explored a most stupendous and marvellous cavern under the city. We crept in by a very small opening under the North wall, outside, on our hands and knees. Having passed in, the opening enlarged. Having lighted candles, we went under the city at least the eighth of a mile, passing through amphitheatres and spacious rooms from 20 to 70 feet wide, and from 10 to 40 feet high. Masses of rock have been left at intervals to support the rock ceiling that bears the city overhead. This is certainly one of the most interesting places about the city. It is not a natural cavern but evidently a quarry, as no eye can fail to see at the sides. I have no doubt this is the place from which the huge stones were obtained for the construction of the temple and its monstrous walls. Here, doubtless, those stones were dressed, and the mystery is removed that the sound of the hammer was never heard in the city. This wonderful cavern was closed till within the last few years, and on account of it will, therefore, be found in books of travel written more than three years ago.

I bathed in the Jordan, at the place where the Christians of the Greek Church say Christ was baptized by John. I was not satisfied to go merely to the middle of the stream, but went "to the other side of Jordan." The river at that point, at the time of my visit, was about four feet deep, and about 60 feet wide, and very rapid, so that in crossing I was compelled to lean against the current at an angle of about 45 degrees. I went up on the bank on the other side, and have brought a small bottle of the water with me from the middle of the stream, but whether I shall be able to bring it to America I do not know. I should be very glad to do so. It might be useful some time. You are, perhaps, wondering how I found the Dead Sea. It was exceedingly salty and bitter, and so heavy that I floated in it like a cork. When I raised my feet from the bottom and steadied myself with my hands, (using them for fins) the water came only to within about two inches of my neck, and you know I am rather lean. It was one of the greatest luxuries thus to float upon the water. I had always believed the stories of travellers about the weight of these waters exaggerated, and I made the experiment myself.

Not far from the place where I bathed in the Jordan, possibly at the same spot, the Israelites crossed under the command of Joshua, shortly before the fall of Jericho, "the city of palm trees," once the crown of the whole valley, now a dirty, insignificant village, of 300 inhabitants, containing nothing but hovels and dirt, and surrounded by a wall of brush. In the modern Jericho, there is no house in which we could lodge: we, therefore, pitched our tent outside, near the brook that flows from the spring, believed to be the one that was miraculously healed by the prophet Elisha.

On the 1st of December, we made our noon-day meal at the fountain itself, and drank of its refreshing waters. During the evening of our encamp

WASHINGTON.

The correspondent of the New York Independent writes thus, Sept 5

"This city is a vast hospital. Go up to the Capitol itself, and you will see cots in the corridors, in the committee rooms, in the halls of the Senate and of the House of Representatives. One can't for a step without literally setting the seat formerly occupied by Jefferson Davis. Another covers the space occupied by Breckinridge's desk. If such a fact could have been foretold three years ago, how the politicians and the legislators would have stared! Yet the Southern conspirators were even then at work to produce present results in that very Senate Chamber, and infamous, selfish, and utterly corrupt Northern politicians carried them on their devilish work. Doubtless this is one reason why God does not prosper our cause. As a people, we of the North were equally guilty with the South for a long term of years. We were as willing to make money out of slavery as the South out of the slaves. For the sake of pelf, we submitted to the demands of the slave power, and even yet we fear to commit ourselves to the principles of universal justice and freedom.

"The people evidently are not satisfied with the conduct of the war. They accuse the Government of incompetency in some of its departments. Prominent men from the South-west, the West, and the North, crowd to Washington in delegations to protest against the imbecility of the past—to beseech for brains and vigor in the future. On Saturday I was greatly surprised to notice Cassius M Clay on the avenue. The last known of him here he was fighting down in Kentucky. Now, he is here with certain other prominent gentlemen, asking for a different policy in the South-west. 'We need generalship more than anything else,' said a Western man to a Government officer. 'We have been ruined by the tactics of our military leaders. The rebels are knocking at our doors; they threaten to cross the Ohio; and yet Gen Buell is down at Nashville with his lagging columns, holding a hundred different points in the rear of rebel armies!"

I quote this merely as a specimen of the complaints urged, and not as endorsing the criticism upon the conduct of the war in the South-west. Civilians are supposed to know nothing about military tactics. They probably do not; but they can certainly judge of results. The cry from the West is very deep and meaning. Governors, senators, judges, and representatives from that section of the country who are here, say that they cannot endure this state of things much longer. Yet Mr. Lincoln seems to be doing all in his power. No one blames Mr Chase or Mr Welles. It is not that any accusation is brought against any particular man, but the dissatisfaction is with the general conduct of the war The President has been heard to say that it is not in his power to make a general. That is certainly true in one sense, though he has made many brigadiers.

Personal.

Major-General Philip Kearney was born in New York on June 24, 1815. He was of Irish descent. He was the grandson of Hon. John Watts, founder of the Leake and Watts Orphan Asylum in this city. At an early age he joined the United States Dragoons, commanded by his uncle, Stephen Watts Kearney. He was sent to Europe to report upon the cavalry tactics of the French, and entered the military school at Saumur. He afterwards joined the Chasseurs d'Afrique, and served a three-years' campaign in Africa, under Marshal Valée. In this service he greatly distinguished himself by his skill and courage. He served during the Mexican war as Captain of Dragoons. He lost his left arm in one of the battles before the City of Mexico. When the rebellion broke out, Kearney was in Europe. He immediately offered his services to the Government. They were accepted, and, immediately after the battle of Bull Run, he was appointed to the command of the New Jersey Brigade. From that time he has been in nearly every battle that has been fought in Eastern Virginia, till that of Chantilly, in which he was killed.

The Rebel. Mason. at Glasgow.—Unable to effect any of his proposed measures with Parliament or with the Government direct, Mr. Mason, the Southern Commissioner, has started on a tour through the Kingdom, with the evident hope of making capital on which to trade at the next session, if not before. His first appearance in his new character has been at Glasgow, where, as a private letter informs me, he was, on Tuesday last, the guest of a distinguished citizen, and met a company invited especially to do him honor. The Lord-Provost and one of the members of Parliament stood aloof, from motives of policy, but the latter invited him to dinner the next day. A meeting of the Chamber of Commerce was also called, as one of the results of the occasion, with the avowed purpose of petitioning the Government to recognize the Southern Confederacy. I learn that Mr. Mason's reception was of the most flattering character, and that he has, so far as Glasgow is concerned, produced an impression very favorable to his cause, thus accomplishing the object of his mission. I learn, also, that the very parties who are now most active in this movement, are the very ones who headed the deputation to Mrs. Harriet Beecher Stowe, and also lionized Fred. Douglass, when these personages respectively visited Glasgow. They compose the leading Abolitionists in that city and we thus witness the strange spectacle of people of that class glorifying the author of the Fugitive Slave Law, and one of the firmest supporters of the American institution that has hitherto received their bitterest denunciations. I have before told you that English Abolitionism was a precious humbug, and here is a pertinent confirmation of my words.

Death of Count De Gasparin.—Count De Gasparin, formerly Minister of the Interior under Louis Philippe, died a few days ago at Orange (Vaucluse) France. He is best known in this country as the author of "The Great Uprising of the People," and other writings in defence of our Government and the war against Rebellion.

Domestic Items.

A Proclamation:—I, ABRAHAM LINCOLN, President of the United States of America, and Commander-in-Chief of the Army and Navy thereof, do hereby proclaim and declare that hereafter, as heretofore, the war will be prosecuted for the object of practically restoring the Constitutional relations between the United States and each of the States and the people thereof, in which States that relation is or may be suspended or disturbed.

That it is my purpose, upon the next meeting of Congress to again recommend the adoption of a practical measure tendering pecuniary aid, support to the free acceptance or rejection of all the Slave States, so called, the people whereof may not then be in Rebellion against the United States, and which States may then have voluntarily adopted, or thereafter may voluntarily adopt the immediate or gradual abolishment of slavery within their respective limits, and that the effort to colonize persons of African descent, with their consent, upon the continent or elsewhere, with the previously obtained consent of the Governments existing there, will be continued.

That on the first day of January, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and sixty-three, all persons held as slaves within any State, or designated part of a State, the people whereof shall then be in rebellion against the United States, shall be then henceforth and forever free—and the Executive Government of the United States, including the military and naval authorities thereof, will recognize and maintain the freedom of such persons, and will do no act or acts to repress such persons, or any of them, in any efforts they may make for their actual freedom.

That the Executive will, on the 1st day of January aforesaid, by proclamation, designate the States or parts of States, if any, in which the people thereof respectively shall then be in Rebellion against the United States, and the fact that any State or the people thereof, shall, on that day, be in good faith represented in the Congress of the United States, by members chosen thereto at elections wherein a majority of the qualified voters of such State shall have participated, shall, in the absence of strong countervailing testimony, be deemed conclusive evidence that such State and the people thereof are not then in Rebellion against the United States.

That attention is hereby called to an act of Congress entitled "An act to make an additional article of war," approved March 13th, 1862, and which act is in the words and figures following:—

"Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, that hereafter the following shall be promulgated as an additional article of war for the government of the Army of the United States, and shall be observed as such.

"Article.—All officers or persons in the military or naval service of the United States are prohibited from employing any of the forces under their respective commands for the purpose of returning fugitives from service or labor, who may have escaped from any person to whom such service or labor is claimed to be due; and any officer who shall be found guilty by a Court-martial of violation of this article shall be dismissed from the service.

"Section 2. And be it further enacted, That this act shall take effect from and after its passage."

Also to the Ninth and Tenth Sections of an Act entitled "An Act to suppress insurrection, to punish treason and rebellion, to seize and confiscate the property of Rebels and for other purposes" Approved July 17, 1862, and, which sections are to the words and figures following:—

"Section 9. And be it further enacted, That all slaves of persons who shall hereafter be engaged in or in rebellion against the Government of the United States, or who shall in any way give aid or comfort thereto, and captured from such persons and taking refuge within the lines of the army, and all slaves captured from such persons or deserted by them and coming under the control of the Government of the United States, and all slaves of such persons found on or being within any place occupied by Rebel forces and afterwards occupied by the forces of the United States, shall be deemed captives of war, and shall be forever free of their servitude, and not again held as slaves.

Section 10. And be it further enacted, That no slave escaping into any State, Territory or the District of Columbia from any other State, shall be delivered up, or in any way impeded or hindered of his liberty, except for crime or some offence against the laws, unless the person claiming the said fugitive shall first make oath that the person to whom the labor or service of such fugitive is alleged to be due is his lawful owner, and has not borne arms against the United States in the present Rebellion, nor in any way given aid and comfort thereto.

No person engaged in the military or naval service of the United States shall, under any pretence whatsoever, assume to decide on the validity of the claim of any person to the service or labor of any other person, or surrender up any such person to the claimant, on pain of being dismissed from the service. And I do hereby enjoin upon and order all persons engaged in the military and naval service of the United States to observe, obey and enforce within their respective spheres of service in the acts and sections above recited.

And the Executive will, in due time, recommend that all citizens of the United States who shall have remained loyal thereto throughout the Rebellion, shall, upon the restoration of the Constitutional relation between the United States and the people, if that relation shall have been suspended or disturbed during the rebellion, be compensated for all losses by acts of the United States, including the loss of slaves.

In witness whereof I have hereunto set my hand, and caused the seal of the United States to be affixed.

Done at the city of Washington, this the 22d day of September, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and sixty-two, and of the Independence of the United States the eighty seventh.

ABRAHAM LINCOLN.

By the President,
WM. H. SEWARD, Secretary of State.

Patriotism at Saratoga.—A week ago last 8th inst., notice was given in the churches at Saratoga that a War Meeting would be held in the Grove at four o'clock in the afternoon. The announcement drew together a large assemblage, including a large proportion of ladies. One of these rose to the platform a diamond ring as a bounty for the first recruit, another, a gold chain, another, a watch, the three others offered their watches in quick succession; then a gentleman sent his pocket-book, containing a handsome sum of money. The enthusiasm was wrought up to such a degree that seventy recruits came forward and signed their names, thus filling the town's quota for both calls! This was a war-meeting worthy of the historic Saratoga of the Revolution!

Slavery in the Indian Territory.—We have often called attention to the fact that by the peculiar system of management practised with the so-called civilizing efforts among the Indians west of Arkansas, slavery has been established there; but we could never get any exact information on the subject until the report of the census of 1860 brought it to hand. We give the figures:

Tribes.	Slaves.	Owners.
Choctaws, - - - -	2,297	305
Cherokees, - - - -	2,504	204
Creeks, - - - -	1,651	207
Chickasaws, - - - -	917	118
Total, - - - -	7,369	1,151

One of the Choctaw planters is the owner of 227 slaves, and ten of the largest planters of that tribe average 64 each. Among the Cherokees the largest planter owns 57 slaves, and the ten largest average 35 each. Among the Creeks two planters hold 75 each, and the ten largest average 43 each. Among the Chickasaws the largest planter owns 61 slaves and the ten largest average 27½ each. Nor is this all. The strict prohibition provided for by the intercourse law, does not seem to have been enforced at all against any but Northern people. The census gives detailed statistics, showing that there are 1,983 white people in the territory, and 404 free colored persons. Of the whites, 1,316 are males, and 672 females. They are settled in nearly every district in the territory, have established villages, and no doubt would a preponderating influence in affairs. The free colored people are unquestionably those who accompany the white settlers. The Indian population of this territory is 65,690.—Philadelphia American.

Preachers' Regiment.—The 7th Rhode Island Regiment, now in Kentucky, is known as the "Preachers' Regiment." It contains 91 preachers, nearly all Methodists; and 640 members of the Methodist Church are in its ranks.

A Relic.—A gentleman from Longmeadow has shown us an old English watch, which was purchased of Joseph Story, Clerkenwell street, London, in 1676, by Benjamin Andrews, then about the first hardware merchant in Boston. It was given to the father of the present owner for good behavior and attention to business in his eighteenth year, on condition that he would never dispose of it. He died in 1803, and the present owner has had it in his possession ever since. The first time it was cleaned, there were but two watch makers in Boston, and one of them was unwilling to take it in hand lest he should injure the fine work The watch was then sent to London, where it remained a year, and was cleaned at a cost of $5. The original watch paper still remains in the case with the date of its purchase The venerable relic keeps as good time as ever, and seems likely to hold good for a hundred years more.

Chinese.—There are some two hundred Chinamen in New York city. Of these about half a dozen have received Protestant baptism, and thirty or forty, being married to Irish women, have received Romish baptism. They are, in the main, prosperous. Not a few of them are stewards of ships, in which capacity they are quite popular on account of their shrewdness, thrift, and diligence, in which they are far superior to the people of color. Some of them have been reached by occasional efforts on the part of returned missionaries, and others have drifted at times under the means of grace used in the down-town churches, but the converts made thus far have been few. There seems to be a call for more specific effort and more fervent prayer in this direction.

Princeton Seminary.—The Theological Seminary at Princeton opened on the 4th inst. Sixty new students were matriculated the first day, and some others are expected to come.

University of Vermont.—Rev. Dr Torrey was, on 3 Month) last, elected President of the University of Vermont. Professor Torrey has been acting President since the resignation of President Perse last winter. Dr. Torrey has been connected with the University from the year 1827; from that date until 1842, as professor of Greek and Latin Languages, and from 1842 until this time, as professor of Moral and Intellectual Philosophy.

Oberlin College, Ohio.—The attendance this year has been probably less than usual, but not less than, in view of the war and its results, we had expected. The great house was full.

Figures are given in the rebel newspapers showing the present indebtedness of the Confederate Government to be $410,000,000. Of this amount $15,000,000 is due to soldiers; $50,000,000 to banks; $85,000,000 for property seized; $45,000,000 for State aid to be reimbursed; $1,000,000 on Treasury notes, War loans, $65,000,000.

A young lady of Hartford, a few days ago, lost the sight of one eye, and will most probably lose the other, by working on blue army cloth. Her eyes were somewhat inflamed from the effects of a cold, and it was while in that state that she rubbed them with her fingers, which were discolored by the blue cloth.

The New Orleans Advocate figures up a loss to that city of $250,000,000, as the effect of secession already experienced. Of the amount $150,000,000 is set down as the value of agricultural productions now in the possession of that port, by the suspension of trade. This is paying dear for the whistle.

Frightful Calamity Explosion at the Pittsburg Arsenal Eighty Persons Killed and Many Injured

One of the most horrible and appalling casualties with which any community has ever been visited occurred this afternoon, at the United States Arsenal [illegible]. Our readers are aware that, ever since the commencement of the present war, a large number of hands have been employed extensively at the arsenal in putting up fixed ammunition for the army. At first the work was done by boys, but bearing, from their careless habits, that no such accident as that which has just occurred would follow their employment, they were, some months ago, discharged, and young women and girls, as being more tractable and careful, employed in their stead. About one hundred and fifty of these, together with a few men, were engaged to-day in putting up cartridges in the laboratory buildings lying on the side of the hill [illegible] Butler street and the Lawrenceburg pike, when, from some cause or other, as yet unexplained, an explosion took place which was distinctly heard in the city. The buildings were blown to atoms, and the bodies of the inmates carried high into the sky. The greater number, however, perished by fire while lying under the ruins of the shattered buildings. Altogether, about eighty lives are reported to have been lost, but it is impossible at the time we write (4 o'clock) to arrive at anything like an accurate estimate of the extent of the calamity. How many were injured could not be ascertained, as they were carried away as fast as found, to be cared for by their friends.

The Hospitals in Philadelphia.—The following statement shows the condition of the Military Hospitals [illegible] up to yesterday:

	No. Beds	No. Patients
Pennsylvania [illegible]	150	77
Summit House, 24th Ward [illegible]	150	4
South Street [illegible]	250	189
St Joseph's [illegible]	70	62
Germantown	150	110
Fifth and Butt wood	300	255
West Philadelphia	300	257
Race Street [illegible]	400	306
Hestonville [illegible]	150	124
Episcopal [illegible]	350	296
Catharine Street	85	76
Fifth and Master [illegible]	284	271
Wood Street [illegible]	200	162
Seventeenth and Filbert	600	515
Fourth and George [illegible]	415	315
Christian Street [illegible]	321	270
Broad and Cherry	800	728
Turner's Lane (G Hosp [illegible]	250	208
	5006	4242

Information was received on Friday, by Dr. King, to have preparations made for the reception of 1,000 wounded soldiers, from the late battle fields—and directions were sent to the following hospitals to prepare to accommodate the following number of patients: Turner's Lane Hospital, 67—Summit House, 60—Germantown, 60—West Philadelphia, 150—South Street, 150—Episcopal, 27—Broad and Cherry, 100—Sixteenth and Filbert, 30—Wood Street, 50—Hestonville, 41—Catharine Street, 18—Race Street, 50.

Battles of the Week.

WEDNESDAY—SEPTEMBER 17

At daybreak the fight was renewed suddenly and vehemently, both sides opening fire together. The number of pieces of the rebel batteries the evening before had declined that they were in great force on the right, and word had been sent by General McClellan to advance Sumner's corps during the night. It did not arrive on the field till 9 o'clock in the morning.

At 4 o'clock McClellan sent orders to Burnside to cross at once, at all hazards, and capture or silence the battery in front. The bridge was captured in gallant style, but with a loss of Col Kingsbury and 500 killed and wounded. Burnside, when once across, advanced on the rebel right, along the Sharpsburg road and up the slopes of the hill A position of great importance was carried at first by his impetuous attack, but was afterwards abandoned, as the rebels were able to bring ten heavy masses of troops from the centre and left to oppose Burnside.

Our attack on the left having ceased for the time, Sumner and Franklin were ordered by McClellan to hold their own, and the advance of Burnside was rolled on to decide the day. Darkness was near before he was over the creek, and the forces against him were too strong for his numbers. He therefore was obliged to content himself with defending the bridge and his position beyond, and the final attack was postponed till to-morrow. The fire on both sides died away gradually, and at 7 o'clock the battle was over for the day. Its re-ults I have stated above. It was everywhere very desperately contested, and the loss on both sides is very large. Ten Generals on our side are killed and wounded

McClellan and Lee were engaged for fourteen hours. Two hundred thousand men have fought with the utmost determination on both sides. Neither can claim a complete victory, but McClellan has partially carried the rebel position, holding most favorable ground for renewing the attack, and holding all the ground which was gained at any time during the fight.

All our own dead and wounded, and many of the enemy's, are in our hands.

On the left of the rebel position, Hooker, Sumner, and Franklin have crossed Antietam creek, and have driven the enemy from the ground they chose to cover their flanks in front of our batteries, and troops have steadily advanced, and occupy, to-night, a range of hills considerably beyond those first taken.

On the rebel right they have lost the bridge over the creek, which was carried after a hard fight, and Burnside has crossed with all his forces.

The result of the day's fight, therefore, is, that the rebels have every where lost ground, their position is contracted, both flanks attacked with success, and their rear and only line of retreat seriously threatened.

THURSDAY, SEPT. 18TH.

Headquarters Army of the Potomac, }
Sept 19 1862 8 o'clock A. M }

To Major General Halleck, General-in-Chief:

But little occurred yesterday, except skirmishing and artillery.

The enemy abandoned his position, leaving his dead and wounded on the field. We are again in pursuit.

I do not know whether he is falling back to an interior position, or crossing the river. We may safely claim a victory. GEORGE B. MCCLELLAN, Major General.

FRIDAY, SEPT 19TH.

At daylight this morning it was found that the enemy had changed their position. Whether their whole force has crossed the river, or taken up a new position near the river, is not at present known. Had they remained, a general engagement would have been had this morning.

Headquarters Army of the Potomac, }
September 19, 10 A. M. }

To Henry W Halleck, General-in-Chief:

Pleasanton is driving the enemy across the river. Our victory is complete.

The enemy is driven back into Virginia.

Maryland and Pennsylvania are safe.

GEORGE B. MCCLELLAN, Major General.

Summary of Results.—The drama of last June is being re-enacted. Stone wall Jackson is again retreating along the Shenandoah valley. He has crossed the Potomac, leaving thousands of prisoners, and half his baggage trains and artillery in the hands of the victorious Union army. The exultation of September 1st has become the dismay of September 20th. Twenty days of General McClellan's military skill has saved Washington, relieved Pennsylvania, and redeemed Maryland. On Thursday last the rebel junta at Richmond were giving thanks to God for their defeat at General Pope, and at the very moment, their discomfited army was morrowfully leaving the battle ground of the previous day. Never, perhaps, was a campaign more terribly unfortunate for those who planned it than this ill-started invasion of the North. Troops, fresh from victorious fields, thirsting for spoil and ravenous for the plenty which blesses the beautiful valleys of Pennsylvania, enter Maryland. They enter the latter as invaders the enemy's country. At once all the energies are aroused, and placing their best general at the head of the army, it is sent against the invader, and it has come to the deepest interest of the people of the north. The two columns meet. They test their strength upon the summit of the Alleghenies, and again upon the banks of the Antietam. The invader gives way. The defeat of the mountains becomes a rout in the valley. His hopes are broken, his generals killed and wounded, and his soldiers lay by thousands dead and dying. He secures Harper's Ferry, and now his broken ranks are flying down the valley, which for ages will tell of the renowned deeds done upon its soil.

It is impossible for us to estimate the results of the [illegible] at Sharpsburg. But we can [illegible] until we have learned from reliable sources the condition of the rebel forces, and the effect of our victory upon the people of the Southern Confederacy. I hear many persons denounce McClellan for what they consider his tardiness and incapacity in not capturing the rebel army or driving it into the Potomac river. A charge like this may be specious by and generally made, but to me it seems to be extremely unjust. I have watched the last campaign of General McClellan with great interest, and, on reviewing it with calmness and candor, I do not see how it is to be condemned, [illegible] I consider as a consummate military skill. To have taken the Army of the Potomac, which [illegible] and [illegible] and [illegible] and [illegible] and [illegible] and [illegible] greater part of Maryland, fought the most hotly contested and sanguinary battle of the war, defeated the combined rebel armies, and driven them across the Potomac, is to have accomplished one of the most magnificent achievements of modern war. It is not many days since those who denounce McClellan were trembling for the safety of Washington. It is not many days since the greatest army on the face of the earth was huddling round the forts of the capital, and a dread of the advancing rebel hosts filled every breast. All this [illegible] McClellan [illegible] get, and saved Maryland and Pennsylvania. Let us thank Providence for what has been done for us, and cease repining. Let us accept the services McClellan has rendered the State, and pray that his hands may be [illegible] for further triumphs.—Press

Important from Harrisburg.—HARRISBURG, Sept. 21.—By authority of Gov. Curtin, the public is informed that those in the Cumberland Valley will also [illegible]

The Social, Civil, and Statistical Association of The Colored People of Pennsylvania open a subscription list in aid the freed men at Port Royal and other points where they may be located, and respectfully ask the co-operation of the colored citizens and others in this city, or elsewhere, in money or clothing.

Any amount of value received will be acknowledged, with the name of the donor, in the Recorder, where a constant record will be kept.

Subscriptions may be sent to Jacob C. White, at the office of the Lebanon Courtier, 711 Lombard Street, and also to William Still, 107 North Fifth Street, and to Rev. E. Weaver, 619 Pine Street.

PAID.

Statistical Society, [illegible]	$50 00
[illegible] Meeting, [illegible]	5 00
William Still, [illegible]	5 00
Robert Adger, [illegible]	2 00
Henry Minturn, [illegible]	2 00
[illegible]	1 00
[illegible]	1 00
Wm Warwicks	1 00
Harriet Shorter, [illegible]	1 00
Sarah S Hawkins,	1 00
Rev. Jonathan C. Gibbs, [illegible]	1 00
James P. Clay, [illegible]	1 00
Benjamin F Hill, [illegible]	2 00
S M [illegible]	2 00
Elizabeth Gordon, [illegible]	1 00
F. J. Drear, [illegible]	5 00

It affords us pleasure to acknowledge the receipt of ten dollars, the proceeds of Miss Anna E. Dickinson's lecture at Concert Hall for the contrabands, contributed to the S., C. and Statistical Association, to be applied as intended. WM STILL

Cor. Sec. of S., C. and Statistical Association of the Colored People of Penna.

ADVERTISEMENTS.

WANTED.

One or two respectable colored men in a quiet and respectable family to lodge, where they can secure all the comforts of a home, with a furnished room.

INQUIRE
No. 424 South 7th St, Phila.

COAL, STOVES, &c., &c.

The subscriber respectfully informs his friends and the public generally, that he has taken the store,

NO. 107 NORTH FIFTH STREET,

formerly occupied as the Anti-Slavery Office, (where he has been engaged for the last fourteen years,) to occupy it henceforth as a place of business for the sale of

COAL, STOVES, &C.

Having made arrangements with one of the first Coal Dealers in the city, to furnish the best qualities of Lehigh, Schuylkill, &c., at the lowest Cash prices, he hopes to give full satisfaction in this branch of his business.

He will also keep constantly on hand a general assortment of good NEW and SECOND HAND STOVES, FURNACES, &c

Persons wishing Stoves taken down, stored away, put up, or cleaned, can be promptly accommodated by applying as above.

He hopes by energy and strict attention to business to obtain a fair share of patronage.

WM. STILL,
107 North Fifth Street, Philadelphia

REFERENCES.

J. M. M'Kim,	Dr. Caspar Wistar,
Samuel Emlen,	James Mott,
Dillwyn Parrish,	Thomas Williamson,
Prof. C. D. Cleveland.	W. H. Furness

MRS MARTHA COLLINS

730 Russell Street, above Fitzwater,

Begs leave to inform her friends and the public generally, that she has opened an INFANT SCHOOL for Boys and Girls, to whom she will pay special attention in teaching the primary departments of Reading, Writing, and Arithmetic, also Singing, upon the most reasonable and accommodating terms. She does not hesitate to say that she will be able to please all who may give her a trial.

PERRY & FITZGERALD'S

PROCESS FOR MAKING LIGHT, NUTRITIOUS, AND UNADULTERATED BREAD, WITHOUT FERMENTATION.

The new process of bread-making, patented by Perry & Fitzgerald, removes all the obstacles which have hitherto rendered it impossible to manufacture perfectly pure, sweet and wholesome bread. The entire process is performed by mechanical means, and is eminently cleanly.

The process consists in mixing the flour in a closed vessel, and the application of pure carbonic gas under pressure by which the dough mass is made thoroughly light and ready to be discharged into pans for baking, in the brief space of fifteen or twenty minutes. The "change" is usually 200 pounds, and each machine occupies the position, in all its details, in the building in which it is to do the discharging of the dough, in from twenty five to forty minutes. The invention of Perry & Fitzgerald effects a revolution in the preparation of bread by establishing a system of wholesome manufacture not subject to the objections and evils of fermentation, both short and certain in its results.—1. Because, by the substitution of mechanical for manual labor, and in the superior value of the artic'e produced, it promises large profits upon the capital employed. 2. Because such employment of capital as well as the protection afforded by the patent, gives adequate security against competition. But whilst protecting manufacturers against unwholesome bread of the evils of a monopoly, because it leaves the consumer at all times in possession of his former means of supply, to be resorted to, should the monopoly become prejudicial.

The application of pure carbonic acid gas, under pressure, to a mechanically kneaded dough-mass, as to the invention of Perry & Fitzgerald, did not occur to Dr Cre, though he seems to have had a clear foreshadowing of the importance of the artificial use of the gas, since he stated, [illegible] that "if easier, slightly impregnated with carbonic acid gas, he used for kneading the dough, the resulting bread will be more light and spongy (would a light article), he [illegible] his proposal in this way. Then, as the sugar would remain undecomposed, the bread would be as much the sweeter and more nourishing."

What, Dr Dick, was artificially comprehended theoretical truth, has been practically developed by the brilliant invention of Perry & Fitzgerald. Patiently all hail their names in grateful remembrance, as among the most eminent benefactors of mankind

ITS SUPERIORITY.—The superiority of unfermented bread to by no means new. Dr. Cullen, who wrote more than seventy years ago, says:—

"In Scotland nine-tenths of the lower class of people, and that in the greater part of the whole, live upon unfermented bread, and unfermented farinaceous to other forms, and there are not a more healthy people anywhere to be found. In the course of fifty years, that I have practised among them, I have had occasion to know this, and have hardly met with a disease, of any consequence, that I could impute to the use of unfermented farinaceous.

At a later period, Professor The ompson, of Glasgow, in his work on the "Food of Animals," after alluding to the facts referred to above by Dr. Cullen, and other kindred facts, observes:—

"So far, then, as [illegible] is for all the whole purposes of [illegible] it [illegible] in point to the [illegible] that unfermented bread differs from fermented bread. The result gained by this process (fermentation) may be considered to be merely the expulsion of the particles of which the loaf is composed, so as to render the mass more readily divisible by the [illegible] organs of digestion. But, as this object is gained at a sacrifice of the invaluable [illegible] it becomes a matter of interest to ascertain the amount of the loss sustained in the process."

The result of Professor Thompson's experiments showed a difference in favor of unfermented bread of nearly seven per cent over that made by the ordinary process. In other words, there was a loss of over one-fifteenth of the nutritive properties of the flour, which, by the process of fermentation, was driven into the air and lost.

We come now to a more particular consideration of the superiority of the bread made without fermentation, or the new "chemical process, over the bread made by those processes. Although, from what has already been said, this superiority appears in most vivid contrast, yet the public will be better satisfied to have the points stated specifically, for it only needs that the advantages secured by this method be clearly understood in order to its universal introduction in the manufacture of bread

I. Its Cleanliness.—Instead of the dough being mixed by the naked hands or feet of the bread, from the wetting of the flour to the completion of the baking, is not, and scarcely can be touched by any one. "One skeptic attained to its manufacture," says Dr Wilard Parker, "in his entire completion." Says Dr Wardrop, "The process is not only purely scientific, but preeminently cleanly."

II. Its Preservation of all the Nutritive Properties of the Flour.—By the raising of the dough is by the mechanical introduction of pure carbonic acid gas, under pressure, in a closed vessel, or receiver, it takes a perfect vesicular or spongy texture. All the constituents of the flour remain wholly unchanged while the process of raising bread by fermentation inevitably carrieses some of them, as has been already shown

III. Its Purity and Cheapness.—Bread made by the New Process is uniformly light, sweet, and nutritious. The condition being simple, and not liable to variation, an future can never be always producing bread of the same quality. It retains its moisture much longer than fermented bread, and may be eaten warm with impunity. The process also insures a perfect freedom from all acidity, even in the hottest weather. Says the London Review:—

"The [illegible] of Messrs. Perry & Fitzgerald, [illegible] and the consequent [illegible] of the flour are left both unchanged and unaccompanied, the resulting loaf being absolutely pure."

IV. Its Wholesomeness.—Being free from the defects of the substances which are the product of fermentation or chemical reaction, by the old modes the bread made by the New Process is easy of digestion and agrees with the most delicate stomach. "In dyspepsia," says Dr Cox, (editor of the N. Y. Medical College,) "it will be found to be one which will be able to use it, when the [illegible] manufactured bread has been found to have signally failed as an article of diet." Says the London Medical Times and Gazette:—

"Since the introduction of the new unfermented bread, there have already been received from members of the medical profession who have recommended it in their practice as well as from private individuals, accounts of the really astonishing results that have followed its use in cases of deranged digestion and constipation. [illegible] after many [illegible] and others, by the simple use of the bread as a diet. Many cases have also been reported by medical men in addition to this remedy, decreasing doses of [illegible] which had [illegible] to be [illegible] and [illegible] be [illegible] at length, if not entirely, abandoned."

"The beneficial effects of the new bread are attributable in two ways. The one is the absence of the prejudicial matters imparted to ordinary bread by the process of fermentation, and the other by the presence in the bread, unchanged, of those elements which are the essential agents of digestion and assimilation."

"The most eminent members of the medical profession, both in Great Britain and in the United States, and only speak in the highest terms of the ease with which it is digested, and of its rich, nourishing qualities, but especially of its peculiar palatableness, and wonderful keeping properties. The absence of acidity and other strong flavors, which in a greater or less degree are there [illegible] of fermented bread, renders the new bread peculiarly delicate to the taste.

V. Its Economy and Keeping.—By the use of mechanical means instead of manual labor and [illegible] [illegible] [illegible]

SHOULDER ARMS!

BY C. G. [illegible]

There's a dry sweeps o'er the land—
Shoulder arms!
Who will now a coward stand,
While the country needs his aid!
Cowardice for fools was made,
Shoulder arms!

Who's afraid to meet the foe!
Shoulder arms!
Who would see the flag laid low
In the dust by traitors base!
Let him ever hide his face.
Shoulder arms!

Who would win the soldier's fame!
Shoulder arms!
Who would bear a hero's name!—
Let him raise his strong arm high,
Now to strike or now to die—
Shoulder arms!

See the rebel ranks advance:
Shoulder arms!
Wake, man, from your guilty trance;
This is the time for action deep,
Not the hour for sloth or sleep!
Shoulder arms!

Voices call you from the grave—
Shoulder arms!
Voices of the martyrs brave,
Who, amid the shock of wars,
Battled for the stripes and stars,
Shoulder arms!

By the names of heroes dead—
Shoulder arms!
Precious hearts as yours have bled
To maintain the Union's might.
Now it is your turn to smite—
Shoulder arms!

Onward! Onward to the van!
Shoulder arms!
Onward like a fearless man!
Stand not like one deaf and dumb
While you hear th' appealing drum.
Shoulder arms!

God will bless the work you do—
Shoulder arms!
He will lead you safely through
Every peril, while you fight
'Gainst the wrong t' uphold the right.
Shoulder arms!

N. Y. Commercial Advertiser.

THE ADVENTURES OF A REBEL EMISSARY.

THE STORY OF SKEDADDLE SANDERS.

NIAGARA FALLS, Aug. 29, 1862.—There have been several brief accounts of the successful passage across the Canada frontier of GEORGE N SANDERS, Rebel emissary to Europe, but the following statement gathered from those who personally witnessed the adventure in its various stages, gives the fullest details.

SANDERS AT THE BRIDGE.

A few days ago a man dressed in well-worn working clothes presented himself to the United States Provost Marshal on the United States side of the Suspension Bridge. He wore a pair of very short trowsers of striped Kentucky jean, and a seedy coat of the same material. A coarse, not over clean shirt, and a jagged straw hat completed the costume. The man had no collar or cravat, and his face was apparently greatly tanned by exposure to the weather.

He wanted to go over the river, he said, but had no pass and did not know that any would be needed. He stated that he was an Englishman from Cornwall, and a miner by trade. He had been working some time in Pennsylvania, but had lately received a letter from his brother, a farmer, near London, Canada West, stating that he was short of help and urging his miner relatives to come on to his assistance, at least till the harvest time was over.

The miner held his tools in one hand, and in the other carried an old carpet bag of the black glazed style in common use. The glazing in many places had come off, and the outside was moreover spotted and soiled with dirt.

The carpet bag was more valuable than the famous one of JOHN BROWN; for it contained the papers, despatches and money of the Rebel emissary SANDERS.

THE PASSAGE ACROSS.

The Marshal pondered awhile, but the poor miner gave such a consistent story, and seemed so disappointed at his unexpected trouble in crossing, that the official's heart was melted, and he gave him the required pass.

The toll man of the Suspension Bridge then demanded a quarter dollar toll.

"Two shillings," said the miner, "why I can't give it. I've only got one shilling."

This plea of poverty completely disarmed whatever shadow of suspicion may have existed in regard to the poor workman; after the proper degree of hesitation the "fellow" was allowed to pass over at half price

Thanking the toll-keeper for his liberality, the miner walked on wearily across the bridge. As he neared the Canada side his step became lighter—just as Christian (pardon the comparison) felt when the burden dropped off his back. A decided burden had dropped off of GEORGE N. SANDERS' mind—he was safe in Canada.

AT THE HOTEL IN CANADA.

Arriving at the Canada side of the bridge, the miner with his tools and carpet-bag, jumped into the Clifton House omnibus and was quickly driven to that famous hotel. He went to the desk and registered on the book the initials S. N. G.—his own initials reversed.

The clerk looked at the shabby working-man a moment, and then coldly said:—

"We can't give you a room here, sir."

"But I must have a room," said SANDERS.

"None to spare to-night," replied the clerk.

The miner thrust his hands in his pocket and drew forth a great "roll of green backs."

"Here," said he to the clerk, "take these as security. Put them in your safe; but give me a room at once."

Of course money has its effects in Clifton House as everywhere else. Still the clerk hesitated.

"Is there any place about here where I can get a respectable suit of clothes?" asked the miner, dropping his Cornish dialect.

There was no place nearer than the Bridge, a mile distant. So the miner again insisted on having the room, and as it was obvious that "things were not as they seem," he was shown to a suitable apartment.

HOW HIS FRIENDS KNEW IT.

A few minutes afterwards a guest strolled out on the piazza, where ex-Governor MOREHEAD, of Kentucky, was sitting. "By the way, Governor," said he, "what a singular old fellow that was in the office. He registered his name on the book only in initials."

"(n initials!" cried MOREHEAD, starting up, "he's come, then;" and rushing past the astonished guest, he demanded to be shown to the room of the mysterious S. N. G.

Other Secessionists also hastened thither. SANDERS was provided with a suit of clothes at once, the clerks and servants altered their department, the quondam miner, and the guests had a rare piece of gossip to talk about. SANDERS is by this time half way across the ocean, and whatever is thought of him or his cause, it is generally acknowledged that his journey from Richmond to Canada is one of the "cutest" specimens of Rebel "strategy" the war has produced. It shows that our blockade is so stringent that a Rebel embassy prefers a long land journey in disguise to attempting to break it.

Of course the adventure has been the chief topic of gossip in the Niagara hotels; and miners will henceforth be viewed with a very profound suspicion in the neighborhood of the Suspension Bridge.

W. F. W.

THE LOCUST FOR BEE PASTURES.

A correspondent of the Bee Journal: "In setting out ornamental trees, it is surely worthy one's attention to have regard to their honey-producing power, and to select, with this end in view, those blooming at different times, rather than one kind, or those blooming at the same time. In Southern Ohio, bees, some years, gather a large portion of their surplus honey from the locust. Their industry during the yield from the locust is surprising. Where the tree grows in great numbers, they almost abandon all other sources of supply."

WHY SALT IS HEALTHFUL.

From time immemorial it has been known that without salt man would miserably perish; and among horrible punishments, entailing certain death, that of feeding culprits on saltless food, is said to have prevailed in barbarous times. Maggots and corruption are spoken of by ancient writers as the distressing symptoms which saltless food engenders; but no ancient, or unchemical modern, could explain how such sufferings arose. Now we know why the animal craves salt; why it suffers discomfort, and why it ultimately falls into disease if salt is for a time withheld. Upward of half the saline matter of the blood (57 per cent.) consists of common salt; and as this is partly discharged every day through the skin and kidneys, the necessity of continued supplies of it to the healthy body becomes sufficiently obvious. The bile, also, contains soda as a special and indispensable constituent, and so do all the cartilages of the body. Stint the supply of salt, therefore, and neither will the bile be able properly to assist the digestion, nor the cartilages to be built up again as far as they naturally waste."—Prof. Johnson.

CHEERY KITCHEN.

A writer in the Country Gentleman puts in a plea for the kitchen:—

"Very much is written and said about pleasant and tastefully furnished parlors, but the kitchen is left quite in the background, except as it is described in stories of the olden time, "with ponderous beams over head, from which hung festoons of dried pumpkins, apples, &c." It is too important a part of home to be neglected, yet it surely is neglected. The parlor must be cool and airy, and sunshiny, but the kitchen may be wherever there is room for it, with a view, from curtainless windows, of barnyard and woodpile—no paint nor carpet on the floor, no paper on the walls—furnished with chairs and tables, and also with clothes frames and wash tubs, a line of dish towels over the stove, and a row of old hats, coats and frocks for ornaments. This is a picture of too many of our farmers' kitchens—of the place where we housekeepers expect to spend a considerable portion of our time. No wonder mothers looks careworn, and farmers' wives and daughters complain of their field of labor. No wonder that soiled morning dresses are seen; for clean calico, white collars, and smooth hair, could never feel at home in a dingy, cheerless kitchen, and the man who will not provide a pleasant one, deserves to take his breakfast every morning opposite a slovenly-looking wife.

HOW MIST IS GENERATED.

The production of mist is the subject of a note by the veteran, Dr. John Davy, (brother of Sir Humphrey,) in the Edinburgh Philosophical Journal. The cause usually assigned for mist is the access of cold air, and its admixture with warm air, saturated, or nearly saturated, with moisture (such as that resting on the surface of large bodies of water,) and strikingly exemplified in our autumnal and winter fogs, when the water, owing to the heat absorbed during summer, is of a higher temperature than the inflowing air. Dr. Davy, however, refers to another cause, not so much noticed, viz.:—a mild, moist air coming in contact with a colder air, equally humid, resting on cold surfaces, whether of land or water, about the end of winter or beginning of spring. He describes mists which he considers to have been thus formed in the lake district of Cumberland. To a similar cause, also, he refers the phenomenon termed sweating, which is the precipitation of moisture on walls and flagged floors excluded from the influence of fire. He also attributes to a warm south wind succeeding a very cold north wind, the deposition of a large quantity of moisture in the gallery of a nobleman in Devonshire, and quotes the saying in Homer, "The south wind wraps the mountain top in mist."

THE SLEEPLESS NIGHT.

The following well authenticated anecdote of the late Sir Evan Nepean carries the mind back to the sleepless night of Ahasuerus, in the palace of Shushan. Sir Evan, when Under-Secretary of State, related to a friend of his that one night after retiring to rest he experienced an unaccountable degree of wakefulness. He was in perfect health, had dined early and moderately, had nothing to brood over, and was perfectly self-possessed. Still he could not sleep, and from eleven till two in the morning never closed an eye. It was summer—twilight was far advanced; and, to dissipate the ennui of his wakefulness, he resolved to rise and breathe the morning air in the park. There he saw nothing but sleepy sentinels, whom he rather envied. He passed the Horse Office several times, and at last, without any particular object, resolved to let himself in with his pass-key. The book of entries of the day before lay open on the table, and in sheer listlessness he began to read. The first thing appalled him—"A reprieve to be sent to York for the coiners ordered for execution the next day." It struck him that he had no return to his order to send the reprieve, and he searched the minutes, but could not find it. In alarm, he went to the house of the chief clerk, who lived in Downing street, knocked him up, (it was then long past three,) and asked him if he knew anything of the reprieve being sent. In greater alarm, the chief clerk could not remember.

"You are scarcely awake," said Sir Evan "Collect yourself; it must have been sent."

The chief clerk said he did now recollect; he had sent it to the Clerk of the Crown, whose business it was to forward it.

"Good!" said Sir Evan; "but have you his receipt and certificate that it is gone?"

"No."

"Then come with me to his house; we must find him, though it is so early."

It was now four, and the Clerk of the Crown lived in Chancery Lane. There was no hackney coach, and they almost ran. The Clerk of the Crown had a country house, and meaning to have a long holiday, he was at that moment stepping into his gig to go to his villa. Astonished at the visit of the Under-Secretary at such an hour, he was still more so at his business

With an exclamation of horror, the Clerk of the Crown cried, "The reprieve is locked up in my desk!"

It was brought. Sir Evan sent to the post-office for the trustiest and fleetest express, and the reprieve reached York as the prisoners were ascending the cart.

THE MOTHER DOVE.

The old meeting-house was to come down, so that the new one might stand on the same spot. It had a high, very high steeple, which could be seen a great way off, and to which many eyes had often been turned to see which way the golden rooster on the top was looking, for he always kept his eye directly on the wind, however hard it might blow.

The first thing was to get the high steeple down safely without crushing the building. So a man climbed far up toward the top and fastened a strong rope to it. The rope, too, was a very long one. Next day they went into the belfry, and sawed off several of the strong timbers on which the steeple stood. They seemed like logs, and were probably as high as two men would be if one stood on the shoulders of the other.

Now, then, then the street is full of men and boys, a great many of whom take hold of the long rope to pull the steeple over. But they must go off a long distance or it will fall on them.

"All ready!" cries the master carpenter.

"All ready," shout a score of voices

"Pull carefully."

So they all began to pull, the man to give the word, and the boys to shout. Soon the poor old steeple began to tremble on its legs.

It seemed almost to shudder at the awful fall it must make. It made one almost feel sorry for it. Just then there came a beautiful solitary white dove, and flew round and round the steeple, not daring to fly into it, and not able to leave it. She was evidently aware that some great evil was about to befall the steeple.

"See that dove!" said a hundred voices

"Poor thing! she must have young ones up in the steeple!" said a few voices.

Again they pulled, and again the old steeple reeled and tottered. The distress of the poor bird was now so great that all shouts were hushed Every one felt sorry for her. Not a voice was heard; and now they pulled the rope, and the steeple again reeled, the timber cracked, the bird hovered a moment on her wings, and just at the instant the steeple began to fall she darted up into it, out of sight. For one instant more the lofty spire poised and trembled, and then fell with a crash that crushed every timber in it, and made the ground tremble. I went to it, and there I found the poor dove lying between her two little white children, all three dead.

Alas! poor dove! You were willing to die for and with your children, but you could not save them

But, O! when Jesus Christ died for men he saved them. He came up out of the grave, and will bring all his people out of death, and make them alive forever. He did not die in vain, like the poor dove.—Rev. John Todd, D. D.

FOOLISH THOUGHTS.

We are apt to believe in Providence so long as we have our own way; but if things go awry, then we think if there is a God he is in heaven, and not on earth. The cricket in the spring builds his little house in the meadow, and chirps for joy, because all is going so well with him. But when he hears the sound of the plow a few furrows off, and the thunder of the oxen's tread, then the skies begin to look dark, and his heart fails him. The plow comes crunching along, and turns his dwelling bottom side up, and as he is rolling over and over without a home, his heart says, "O the foundations of the world are destroyed and every thing is going to ruin!" But the husbandman who walks behind his plow, singing and whistling as he goes, does he think the foundations of the world are breaking up? Why he does not so much as know there was any house or cricket there. He thinks of the harvest that is to follow the track of the plow; and the cricket, too, if he will but wait, will find a thousand blades of grass where there were but one before. We are all like the crickets. If anything happens to overthrow our plans, we think all is gone to ruin.—Beecher.

THE VICEROY OF EGYPT.

Mohammed Said is the fourth son of the famous Mehemet Ali, who founded in Egypt an almost independent sovereignty, under the patronage of the Ottoman Porte. He was born in 1822, and was educated by French masters. His studies initiated him into the ideas and customs of Europe. He has remained faithful, doubtless to the religion of Mahomet; it was the religion of his family and the condition of his wearing the crown of Egypt; but there is nothing bigoted in his belief; on the contrary, he is very tolerant towards Christians.

Mohammed Said assumed the reins of government in the old country of the Pharaohs, July 18th, 1854, and he has devoted all his time and energies to carry on the work of civilisation, begun by his father, Mehemet Ali. He has introduced wise reforms in the laws, public finances, military system, &c., choosing European agents to execute his orders

At the time that he ascended the throne of Egypt, no person could hold territory as personal property. The Viceroy was the sole possessor of all the land, like Pharaoh of old. The fellahs, or Egyptian peasants, were in a condition similar to that of the serfs under the feudal system of the middle age; they cultivated the soil for the Pacha, who was the only one who could buy and sell any of the agricultural products. Mohammed Said perceived that this servile system discouraged the common people and impoverished the country He divided all the unoccupied land among the people, and now many fellahs are land-holders. They can dispose of their persons as they please, and have the full enjoyment of the fruits of their labor. This is a great change in the civil and social state of things. Already its happy effects begin to show themselves; and they will become more and more apparent as years roll by.

Military service, which used to be imposed exclusively on the members of the lower classes, is now incumbent on all, without distinction of rank or fortune; this general system of recruiting is copied from the French. Besides, the Viceroy of Egypt has endeavored to abolish the old abuses in the expenses of the public treasury; he has faithfully fulfilled his pecuniary engagements In this way he has established the credit of his government upon solid bases. The fact was clearly proved by the success of the loan of forty million francs which he lately took in London. English capitalists, who require good security for their money, did not hesitate to open their purse to Mohammed Said.

FACETIAE.

Hercules, 3000 years ago, in Greece, wrote or gathered the following and many other facetiæ The old Greeks were as fond of joking as young Americans:

A young man, meeting an acquaintance, said, "I heard that you were dead." "But," says the other, "you see me alive." "I do not know how that may be," replied he: "you are a notorious liar; but my informant was a person of credit."

A man wrote to a friend in Greece, begging him to purchase books. From negligence or avarice, he neglected to execute the commission; but, fearing that his correspondent might be offended, he exclaimed, when next they met, "My dear friend, I never got the letter you wrote to me about the books."

An irritable man went to visit a sick friend, and asked him concerning his health. The patient was so ill that he could not reply; whereupon the other, in a rage, said "I hope that I may soon fall sick, and then I will not answer you when you visit me."

A speculative gentleman, wishing to teach his horse to live without food, starved him to death. "I suffered a great loss," said he, "for just as he learned to live without eating, he died."

A robust countryman, meeting a physician, ran to hide behind a wall, being asked the cause, he replied, "It is so long since I have been sick that I am ashamed to look a physician in the face."

A curious inquirer, desirous to know how he looked when asleep, sat with closed eyes before a mirror.

A man, hearing that a raven would live two hundred years, bought one to try.

One of twin brothers died: a fellow, meeting the survivor, asked, "Which is it that's dead, you or your brother?"

A man who had to cross a river entered a boat on horseback: being asked why, he replied, "I must ride because I am in a hurry."

A foolish fellow, having a house to sell, took a brick from the wall to exhibit as a sample.

A man, meeting a friend, said, "I spoke to you last night in a dream." "Pardon me," replied the other; "I did not hear you."

A man that had nearly been drowned while bathing, declared that he would never enter the water again till he had learned to swim

A student in want of money sold his books and wrote home, "Father, rejoice; for I now derive my support by literature."

During a storm, the passengers on board a vessel that appeared in danger seized different implements to aid them in swimming; and one of the number selected for this purpose the anchor.

A wittol, a barber, and a bald-headed man travelled together. Losing their way, they were forced to sleep in the open air; and, to avert danger, it was agreed to keep watch by turns. The lot fell first upon the barber, who, for amusement, shaved the fool's head while he slept; he then woke him, and the fool, raising his head to scratch his head, exclaimed, "Here's a pretty mistake! Rascal, you have waked the bald-headed man instead of me."

A gentleman had a cask of fine wine, from which his servant stole a large quantity. When the master perceived the deficiency, he diligently inspected the top of the cask, but could find no traces of an opening. "Look if there be not a hole in the bottom," said a by-stander. "Blockhead," he replied, "do you not see that the deficiency is at the top, and not at the bottom?"

The eaglet must have time. The beak that, in due season, will cleave a skull, at first has merely power to chip the egg

A SMART RETORT.

Mr. Court, who has been addressing large open-air meetings in Edinburgh, Scotland, evinces the happiest tact in parrying off drunken interruption from "victims" staggering from "over the way." A very drunken fellow vehemently interrupted him by asking, "What will you substitute for the pair man's drink?" "Substitute!" said Mr. Court; "I would substitute that shocking bad hat you wear with a better one—that shabby coat on your back with a better one—a miserable meal of food which you take with a good one—and I would substitute your present ignorance with useful information."

A QUIET JOKE.

The celebrated John Wesley, with all his ministerial gravity, was addicted to joking once in a while. His servant, Michael Fenwick, complained that his name was never mentioned in the published Journal. Wesley, in the next number, said: "I left Epworth with great satisfaction, and about one preached at Clayworth. I think none were unmoved but Michael Fenwick, who fell fast asleep under an adjoining hayrick."

At a concert which took place in a town that shall be nameless, a gentleman in the audience rose up just as the third piece on the programme had been performed, and said:—"Mr. Conductor, will you oblige me, sir, by requesting your vocalists either to sing louder or to sing in whispers, as there is a conversation going on close by where I sit that is conducted in such a loud tone as to entirely hinder my enjoyment of the music. I prefer, certainly, to hear the concert; but if I cannot be so privileged, I desire to hear the conversation." There was an extremely quiet and attentive audience in the hall during the rest of the evening.

A woman who always used to attend public worship with great punctuality, and took care always to be in time, was asked how it was she could always come so early. She answered, very wisely, "That it was a part of her religion not to disturb the religion of others."

SMOKING.

The Emperor of the French, having found that the students in the colleges of France who smoke, are decidedly inferior in their scholastic attainments to the non-smokers, he has prohibited this injurious habit in the colleges. It is said that the Emperor put out "thirty thousand pipes in one day!"

Would it not be a good thing for the rising generation of America, if some power could put out all the cigars which American boys are in the habit of puffing? Boys, be emperors over yourselves, and put out the cigars! Let us declare war against tobacco! Let our war-cry from Baffin's Bay to the Gulf of Mexico be, Away with tobacco! Away with tobacco!

FARMERS' WIVES.

The farmer's wife is, or at least should be, the most cheerful, happy being in existence. Surrounded as she is by everything beautiful in nature, wakening every morning by the joyful carolling of the birds in the trees around the house, soothed all day by the whispering winds and balmy breezes, laden with sweet perfumes stolen from clover-fields or apple blossoms, how can she be otherwise than happy? O, how from my heart have I pitied poor, pale, uneasy-minded women, living in large villages or cities, where every inch of ground was precious, and not a bird sang, but with a sort of wheezy, choking music, and the very trees looked dusty and dim!

How often in the morning, as throwing open my doors and windows to the cool morning air that came bustling in, filling every breath with pure, sweet odors from the budding trees and springing grass, have I wished my city friends could stand in the door by my side, and gaze upon the lovely scene spread out to my admiring view.

With everything so beautiful around her, woman can work hard, harder, perhaps, than she really ought, but with willing hands. Everybody and everything works in the country. You cannot look even for a moment, out at the open door, without seeing some little bird very busy getting straws to build her nest, worms to feed her little fledglings, or working industriously to teach them the use of their tiny wings, that scarce can bear their weight, or perhaps you see some merry, chirruping squirrel, adroitly stealing his stock of grain, for the winter he knows must come, sooner or later, and hiding it wisely in the decayed trunk of a neighboring apple tree.

The spirit of action is contagious. The hours glide by and so does the work, and when dinner time arrives, instead of the pale, languid countenances you find in the city wife, as she sits down to her luxurious table, loaded with over-cooked meat, under-cooked vegetables, stale fruits and baker's bread, a brisk, cheerful face meets you at table, whereon you find ham and eggs, and Indian meal pudding and molasses, perhaps, but good, light, sweet, wheat bread, and tempting dishes of fruit, fresh from the garden, that would completely upset the equanimity of the guests at the aforesaid city table

A farmer's wife can concoct such dishes as city folks know nothing of. With plenty of milk and eggs, there is always something in the house to eat. You can never take her so much by surprise that she will give no invitation to stop at tea, and she is never so full of apologies because the tea is not nice enough, as to render you uncomfortable.

With a mind evenly balanced, a home made happy by her presence, a contented disposition, wishing no change, a quiet, easy way of turning off work, the farmer's wife is a woman to be envied and still some poor, foolish mortals presume to pity her! Pity, indeed; better bestow it where it is needed! The highest, noblest lot of woman is her home mission, and the most superior place for the exercise of her power is in the quiet home in the country, 'mid the soul-stirring beauties of nature, the handiwork of nature's God.—N. E. Farmer.

FUTURE WIVES AND MOTHERS.

BY MRS. MARY A. DENISON.

Sweet sixteen! They must have been that; perhaps more. They were rather elegant girls and had an air. If my readers don't know what I mean by that, let them go up Broadway and watch the first bellounced young lady with a gold bracelet on her arm.

I followed them—couldn't help it. Perhaps some might say because they were pretty—well, they were pretty—there is no denying it. One had blue eyes, light curls, bewitching lips; the other darker hair, brighter eyes, as fascinating a smile as I ever saw. I had passed them once, as I knew. Presently they come to an ice-cream saloon.

"Siddy, let's get a cream," said the light curls to the dark. "It's awful warm, and I'm thirsty"

I judged that Siddy was thirsty, too, for she followed her friend in—so did I. It was managed adroitly—a curtain between us—I could see and hear even if I didn't try to listen. They pulled their gloves off. What beautiful white hands they had, and how full of rings, costly rings.

"Yes, dear, if you please, certainly; I am very fond of Madeira."

"Nice beginning," thought I. "Probably the brothers suck mint-juleps."

A splendid fan, tipped with feathers, was now opened, and made languid and graceful use of

"Wasn't it hot in church yesterday?"

"Yes, indeed, Siddy. O, did you notice that new surplice? Wasn't it pretty? How pale Mr De Lancy looked?"

"Going to be married, you know."

"Good mercy! how you startle me; who to?"

"To that white Miss Jane Seaver. He'll get money with her, too. Her father is rich, and her uncle's a millionaire."

"Pshaw! well, I wouldn't have him"

"Nor I either. Why, don't you think he used to wait on Ad. Shaw, and he never gave her anything but one gold bracelet, and that couldn't have cost more than forty dollars. He's a dreadful mean man, I suspect.

"Dear! he must be. Why I wouldn't look at a beau who wouldn't give me a present as often as once a month, and something worth having, too What are they good for, I should like to know, the men, all of them, but to take us riding, to carry us to balls, and to give us presents?"

"Nothing, to be sure. I don't intend to marry any one who can't keep a carriage"

"Nor I "O, did you see Mollie Grey's children in church? Ain't they beauties? I know what the embroidery cost on their frocks—lemon color, wasn't it? Miss De Lancy did it; she has, O, frightful sum, by the foot. What good taste Mollie Grey has got, hasn't she? And ain't the children dear little darlings? What a manner, what a step. It's worth while to train such little children independent things. I've heard that they won't look at Carrie Leslie's children because the Leslies don't keep a carriage. Did you ever?"

"Never in my life; but one must draw the line somewhere. I haven't spoken to sister Lu since she married that book clerk. Mamma scolds me dreadfully—but I hope I have a proper pride!" And here the pretty lips gave an extra screw as they imbibed the delicate cream.

"Did you hear that the Lanes have only four servants now?"

"I know; isn't it shocking? They say she dresses her own children—isn't this good wine?"

"I suppose the other acquiesced," said the young gentleman who reported this conversation to me as a fact. "As for me—in a fit of thorough disgust—I am a clerk on five hundred—I quit the place, and always shudder at the sight of wide hoops, small bonnets, and fair faces, that without a touch of sentiment or soul in them, still often win the regards of poor young men who marry and are ruined."—Mother's Journal.

MAKE THEM HAPPY.

A pastor in Connecticut, in a recent sermon, gave this as an all-important element in good government and training. He says:

The great art in child-culture is to keep the little ones happy, having all things as pleasant and bright about them as possible. Children will have trials enough in spite of you. God will try them. And you yourself will be compelled to try them now and then. It cannot be helped. That is life. But the less the better. The worst men began early, and had tumults and angers and shames when they were little, and ought to have been just laughing the days away. Homes of discontent, sour homes, cloudy homes, irritable, fawing, andvious homes, make rebellious and rustless and unsuccessful lives.

Family Circle.

A MOTHER'S ANSWER.

"I've kissed him and let him go."

[The following touching poem, which we copy from the Springfield Republican, is in the reply to the beautiful poem entitled, "Kiss me, mother, and let me go."]

He's my only boy, and this is my plea:
Perhaps it is foolish and weak,
But mothers, I'm sure, will have pity on me,
And some word will tenderly speak.
The light of my home—my tears fall like rain—
Is it wonder I shrink from the blow?
That my heart is crushed by its weight of pain?
But I've kissed him, and let him go.

There are some, I know, who feel a strange pride,
In giving their country their all,
Who count it a glory that boys from their side
In the strife are ready to fall.
But I, sitting here have no pride in my heart;
(God forgive me that this should be so!)
For the boy that I love the tears will still start,
Yet I've kissed him, and let him go.

Last night, with soft steps, I stole to his bed,
As oft in his childhood I'd done;
On his pillow I bowed my poor, stricken head,
Till out of the East rose the sun.
His dreams were of me; for he turned in his sleep,
And murmured "dear mother," so low!
I bit my pale lips, lest they'd cowardly speak
"O, my darling, I can't let you go!"

This morning I blessed him; I stifled with pain;
I bade him be true to his trust;
To stand by the flag till his country again
Should raise its proud head from the dust.
I know by the light in his beautiful eyes—
By his face with true courage aglow—
He'd fight to the last. I choked back my sighs,
While I kissed him and let him go.

But O, sitting here this desolate day,
Still there comes no feeling of pride;
But One knows my need, and to Him will I pray,
I can trust Him whatever betide.
And if he shall fall—(O, faint heart, be still!)
I know he would soften the blow,
And I yet may feel a patriot's thrill
That I kissed him and let him go.

Springfield, Mass., Aug. 15, 1862.

THE FLY.

To be recited to a Little Child.

BY THEODORE TILTON.

Baby By,
Here's a fly!
Let me watch him, you and I.
How he crawls
Upon the walls—
Yet he never falls!
I believe, with such legs
You and I could walk on eggs!
There he goes
On his toes
Tickling baby's nose!

Spots of red
Dot his head;
Rainbows on his back are spread.
Two small specks
In his necks;
See him nod and beck!
I can show you if you choose,
Where to look to find his shoes;
Three small pairs
Made of hairs;
These he always wears!

Black and brown
Is his gown;
He can wear it upside down.
It is laced
Round his waist;
I admire his taste.
Yet, though tight his clothes are made,
He will lose them, I'm afraid,
If I caught
He gets aught
Of the candle light.

In the sun
Webs are spun;
What if he gets into one!
When it rains
He complains
On the window-panes.
Tongues to talk have you and I;
God has given the little fly
No such things;
So he sings
With his buzzing wings.

He can eat
Bread and meat;
There's his mouth between his feet.
On his back
In a sack
Like a peddler's pack.
Does the baby understand!
There the fly shakes his fore hand!
Put a crumb
On her thumb
Maybe he will come!

Catch him! No!
Let him go.
Never hurt an insect so.
But, no doubt,
He flies out
Just to gad about.
Now you see his wings of silk
Drabbled in the baby's milk!
Fie! oh fie!
Foolish fly,
How will he get dry!

Flies can see
More than we—
So how bright their eyes must be!
Little Fly,
One year's eye—
Spiders are near by!
For a secret I can tell,
Spiders never treat flies well!
Then away!
Do not stay—
Little fly, good-day!

MAKE YOUR MARK.

Charles and Robert were two boys who went to their good grandfather's place in the country. It was a beautiful farm, with broad green meadows and great shady trees, and the hayfields were full of strawberries, and the pastures covered with sheep and lambs. The grandfather was a kind old man and very fond of children, and he let the boys do pretty much as they pleased. And so Charlie trampled down a great deal of grass in pursuit of flowers and berries, and chased the sheep and lambs, just for the fun of seeing them run, until they became frightened whenever they saw him, and one poor little lamb, when he saw Charlie behind him, ran off in such great alarm, that he did not stop to see where he was going, and he fell from a high rock and was killed. One day Charlie saw a robin redbreast with a worm in her bill which she was carrying to feed her little ones, and he caught up a stone and threw it with all his strength at the poor little mother, and she fell to the ground, and when Robert picked her up she was dead. Robert was a kind-hearted boy, and he made the pretty robin a grave under a wild rosebush; and all night long he heard the little hungry birds up in the elm tree calling, "Mother, mother!" but she never came to feed them any more.

There was a beautiful spring under an oak tree in one corner of the meadow, where the two boys used often to sit when the weather was warm, and when their visit was over and their clothes and playthings were all packed for home, Robert planted a lily by the side of the spring; it was the last thing he did before he set out for the station. The two boys were walking slowly along, for there was plenty of time before the train would come, and their hands were full of fruit which their grandfather had given them when he bade them good by.

"What were you doing there by the spring?" asked Charlie of his brother.

"I was setting out a lily, so that grandfather might see it sometimes, and have something to remember me by when I am gone."

"Nonsense!" replied Charlie. "There's something to make him remember me," and he lifted a large stone from the wall, and aimed it at the little mound on the margin of the spring. It did not touch the lily, but it sank into the soft earth by its side, and the beautiful green moss that grew there was ashamed of it, and finally covered it up; so that in a few years it looked like a green velvet cushion, and not like a stone. But Robert's lily grew and blossomed a great many years, and made the air sweet with its fragrance, and the mowers were careful not to cut it down. Now, which, do you think you are planting, stones or lilies?—Springfield Republican.

MARRIAGE.

To marry one man while loving and loved by another, is about the most grievous fault that a woman can commit. It is a sin against delicacy, against kindness and truth. It involves giving that to legal right which is guilty and shameful when given to any thing but reciprocal affection. It involves double treachery and cruelty; it involves wounding the spirit, withering the heart, perhaps blighting and soiling the soul—of the one who is abandoned and betrayed. It involves the speedy disenchantment of the one who is mocked by the shadow where he was promised the substance, and who grasps only the phantom, soulless beauty, and the husk, the shell, the skeleton of a dead affection. It entails ceaseless deception, at home and abroad, by day and night, at our down-sitting and our uprising; deception in every relation—deception in the tenderest and most endearing moments of our existence. It makes the whole of life a weary, degrading, unrewarded life. A right-minded woman could scarcely lay a deeper sin upon her soul, or one more certain to bring down a fearful expiation.

A MOTHER'S INFLUENCE.

"My mother asked me never to use tobacco, and I have never touched it from that time to the present day," said the Hon. Thomas H. Benton. "She asked me not to game, and I never gamed. She warned me against hard drink; and whatever usefulness I may have attained in life, I owe to having yielded to her wishes. When seven years old, she asked me not to drink, and I made then a resolution of total abstinence. I formed an abstinence society at a time when I was the sole member of it; that I have adhered to it, I owe to my mother.

THE MOTHER.

It has been truly said: "The first being that rushes to the recollection of a soldier or a sailor, in his heart's difficulty, is his mother. She clings to his memory and affection in the midst of all the forgetfulness and hardihood induced by a roving life. The last message he leaves is for her, his last whisper breathes her name. The mother, as she instills the lesson of piety and filial obligation into the heart of her infant son, should always feel that her labor is not in vain She may drop into the grave, but she has left behind her influences that will work for her. The bow is broken, but the arrow is sped, and will do its office."

MANAGEMENT OF CHILDREN.

It is a popular belief with mothers, that washing young children daily, in cold water, makes them hardy. This is a grave mistake; the feeble circulation of some children requires the aid and assistance of warm water and warm clothing. The greatest medical man who ever lived—John Hunter—recommended three rules for the management of children, and they express the substance of a volume; he says—"Give them plenty of milk, plenty of sleep, and plenty of flannel."

A NICE GIRL.

"There is nothing 'half so sweet in life,' half so beautiful, or delightful, or so loveable as a 'nice girl.' Not a pretty, or a dashing, or an elegant girl, but a nice girl One of those lively, lively, good-tempered, good-hearted, sweet-faced, smiable, neat, natty, domestic creatures met with in the sphere of 'home,' diffusing around the domestic hearth the influence of her goodness, like the essence of sweet flowers.

"A nice girl is not the languishing beauty, dawdling on a sofa, and discussing the last novel or opera; or the giraffe-like creature sweeping majestically through a drawing-room. The nice girl may not even dance or play well, and knows nothing about 'using her eyes,' or coquetting with a fan. She never languishes; she's too active. She is not given to 'sensation novels,' she is too busy. At the concert, she is not in front, showing her bare shoulders, but sits quiet and unobtrusive at the back of the box, most likely. In fact it is not often [we should say never,] in such scenes that we discover her. Home is her place.

"Who rises betimes, and superintends the morning meal? Who makes the toast, and the tea, and buttons the boy's shirts, and waters the flowers, and feed the chickens, and brightens up the parlor and the sitting-room? Is it the languisher, or the giraffe, or the elegante? Not a bit of it; it's the 'nice girl.'

"Her unaided toilet is made in the shortest possible time, yet how charmingly it is done, and how elegant is her neat dress and plain collar! What kisses she distributes among the family! no presenting a cheek or a brow like 'a fine girl,' but an indubitable smack which says plainly, 'I love you ever so much.' If I ever coveted any thing, it is one of the nice girl's kisses.

"Breakfast over, down in the kitchen to see about dinner; and all day long she is up and down, always cheerful and light-hearted. She never ceases to be active and useful until the day is gone, when she will jest with the boys, and sing old songs, and play old tunes to her father, for hours together. She is a perfect treasure, is the 'nice girl.' When illness comes, it is she that attends with unwearying patience to the sick chamber There is no risk, no fatigue, that she will not undergo; no sacrifice that she will not make. She is all love, all devotion. I have often thought it would be happiness to be ill, to be watched by such loving eyes, and tended by such fair hands.

"One of the most strongly marked characteristics of a 'nice girl' is tidiness and simplicity of dress. She is invariably associated in my mind with a high frock, plain collar, and the neatest of neck ribbons, bound with the most modest little brooch in the world. I never know of a 'nice girl' who displayed a profusion of rings and bracelets, or who wore low dresses, or a splendid bonnet.

"I say again, there is nothing in the world half so beautiful, half so intrinsically good as a 'nice girl.' She is the sweetest flower in the path of life There are others far more stately, far more gorgeous; but these we merely admire as we go by. It is where the daisy grows that we lie down to rest"

BIRDS IN AUTUMN.

After July, most of our birds grow silent, and, but for the insects, August would be almost the stillest month in the year,—stiller than the winter, when the woods are often vocal with the Crow, the Jay, and the Chickadee. But with patient attention one may hear, even far into the autumn, the accustomed notes. As I sat in my boat, one sunny afternoon of last September, beneath the shady western shore of our quiet lake, with the low sunlight striking almost level across the wooded banks, it seemed as if the last hoarded drops of summer's sweetness were being poured over all the world. The air was full of quiet sounds. Turtles rustled beside the brink and slid into the water, as we plashed in the shallows—fishes leaped from the placid depths,—a squirrel sobbed and fretted on a neighboring stump,—a katydid across the lake maintained its hard, dry croak,—the crickets chirped pertinaciously, but with little fatigued pauses, as if glad that their work was almost done,—the grasshoppers kept up their continual chant, which seemed thoroughly melted and amalgamated into the summer, as if it would go on indefinitely, though the body of the little creature were dried into dust. All this time the birds were silent and invisible, as if they would take no more part in the symphony of the year. Then, as if by preconcerted signal, they joined in: Crows cawed unanimously afar; Jays screamed in the woods; a Partridge clucked to its brood, like the gurgle of water from

THE CHRISTIAN RECORDER.

Published by the African Methodist Episcopal Church in the United States, for the Dissemination of Religion, Morality, Literature and Science.

Rev. Elisha Weaver, Editor. PHILADELPHIA, OCTOBER 4, 1862. Vol. II.—No. 40.—New Series.—Whole No. 91.

THE CHRISTIAN RECORDER

Is published every Saturday on behalf of the

AFRICAN METHODIST EPISCOPAL CHURCH,

BY

REV. ELISHA WEAVER,

General Book Steward,

No 619 Pine Street, Philadelphia.

Notice.—All letters and matters pertaining to the Book Concern or Recorder, such as subscribers, sale of papers, and all moneys belonging to Book Concern or Recorder, must be directed to Rev. Elisha Weaver, Book Room, Philadelphia; and all matters sent by express, and in our city, must be directed to E. Weaver, No. 619 Pine St.

All articles or matter for the Christian Recorder must be directed to E. Weaver, Book No. 619, Philadelphia.

TERMS.

Two Dollars a year, payable in advance. Single copies, five cents.

ADVERTISEMENTS.

We solicit Advertisements of all descriptions suitable for a religious newspaper which will be put in the Recorder.

Church or Societies, Annual Meetings, Lectures, Sermons, Camp Meetings, Excursions, Anniversaries, Fairs, Festivals, Lost and Found Articles, Wanted Agents, Wanted Situations, Boarding and Rooms, Schools, Colleges, Seminaries, Medical, Dentistry, Boots and Shoes, Clothing, Dry Goods, Hats and Caps, Groceries, Hardware, Jewelry, Miscellaneous, Real Estate, Publications, Patent Medicines, Insurance, Steamboats, Railroads, Stages, Auctioneers, Lawyers, Physicians, Dentists, Undertakers, Carpenters, Masons, Painters, Plasterers, Tinners, Gas Fitters, Plumbers, Blacksmiths, Coopers, Tailors, Barbers, Hairdressers, Shoemakers, Saddlers, Harness Makers, Coachmakers, Wheelwrights, Boat Builders, Ship Builders, Sail Makers, Rope Makers, Block Makers, Ship Chandlers, Grocers, Butchers, Bakers, Confectioners, Fruiterers, Florists, Nurserymen, Seedsmen, Gardeners, Milliners, Dressmakers, Mantua Makers, Hoopskirt Manufacturers, Corsetmakers, Glovers, Furriers, Hosiers, Shirtmakers, Umbrella Makers, Parasol Makers, Cabinetmakers, Upholsterers, Chairmakers, Looking Glass Manufacturers, Picture Frame Makers, Bookbinders, Booksellers, Stationers, Printers, Lithographers, Engravers, Daguerreotypists, Photographers, Ambrotypists, Artists, Sculptors, Architects, Civil Engineers, Surveyors, Conveyancers, Notaries Public, Commission Merchants, Brokers, Pawnbrokers, Importers, Exporters, Manufacturers, Agents, Clerks, Porters, Watchmen, Gentlemen's Servants, Coachmen, Footmen, Grooms, Hostlers, Waiters, Waitresses, Cooks, Chambermaids, Nurses, Housekeepers, Laundresses, Laundry Maids, Scullery Maids, Housemaids, Kitchen Maids, Dairymaids, Milkmaids, Seamstresses, Governesses, Tutors, Teachers, Professors, Musicians, Music Teachers, Dancing Masters, Fencing Masters, Riding Masters, Gymnasiums, Circuses, Theatres, Concert Halls, Lecture Rooms, Museums, Menageries, Aquariums, Panoramas, Cosmoramas, Bazaars, Exhibitions, Shows, Amusements, Games, Sports, Pastimes, Toys, Dolls, Perfumery, Cosmetics, Hair Dyes, Tobacco, Snuff, Cigars, Pipes, Fancy Goods, Trimmings, Buttons, Pins, Needles, Threads, Cottons, Silks, Woollens, Linens, Furs, Skins, Leather, Canvas, Oilcloth, Carpets, Rugs, Mats, Matting, Oil, Candles, Soap, Starch, Blacking, Brushes, Combs, Glass, Earthenware, Crockery, Cutlery, Plated Ware, Britannia Ware, Tinware, Woodware, Willowware, Basketware, Cordage, Twine, Paper, Twine, Wrapping Paper, Envelopes, Blank Books, Pocket Books, Portfolios, Writing Desks, Work Boxes, Bags, Purses, Pocket Knives, Scissors, Razors, Razor Strops, Shaving Soap, Shaving Brushes, Perfumery, Cosmetics, Hair Dyes, Tobacco, Snuff, Cigars, Pipes, Fancy Goods, Trimmings, Buttons, Pins, Needles, Threads, Cottons, Silks, Woollens, Linens, Furs, Skins, Leather, Canvas, Oilcloth, Carpets, Rugs, Mats, Matting, Oil, Candles, Soap, Starch, Blacking, Brushes, Combs, Glass, Earthenware, Crockery, Cutlery, Plated Ware, Britannia Ware, Tinware, Woodware, Willowware, Basketware, Cordage, Twine, Paper, Twine, Wrapping Paper, Envelopes, Blank Books, Pocket Books, Portfolios, Writing Desks, Work Boxes, Bags, Purses, Pocket Knives, Scissors, Razors, Razor Strops, Shaving Soap, Shaving Brushes.

CORRESPONDING EDITORS OF CHRISTIAN RECORDER.

Rev. J. P. CAMPBELL, Rev. A. W. WAYMAN.
" J. M. WILLIAMS, " E. T. WILLIAMS,
" G. H. GRAHAM, " C. BURCH,
Rev. L. ROSS.

Poetry.

THE SINNER'S BURIAL.

Wrapt in a Christless shroud,
He sleeps the Christless sleep;
Above him the eternal cloud,
Beneath the fiery deep.

Laid in a Christless tomb,
There bound with felon chain,
He waits the horrors of his doom,
The judgment and the pain.

Oh, Christless shroud, how cold!
How dark, oh, Christless tomb!
Oh, grief that never can grow old!
Oh, endless, hopeless doom!

Oh, Christless sleep, how sad!
What waking shall them know?
For thee no star, no dawning glad,
Only the lasting woe!

To rocks and hills in vain
Shall be the sinner's call;
Oh, day of wrath, and death, and pain,
The last soul's funeral!

Oh! Christless soul, awake,
Ere thy last sleep begin,
O Christ! the sleeper's slumbers break;
Burst thou the bands of sin!

(For the Christian Recorder.)

Beloved Bishop, brethren, and friends, I come again to greet you in the name of the Lord.

1. The condition of our people in Virginia, those who are under the watch-care of the Federal army. Their condition is deplorable. The able-bodied men work like heroes for the Government, which pays them for the same. About 7 o'clock, A. M., they are drawn up in line and marched from their tents to their work, guarded by their overseers. Sometimes the soldiers with their guns guard them from their work to their tents, and if one of them seems to be obstinate, the overseer does not fail to cuff him. Many of them say they work harder than they did with their former masters. They are meanly clad, but their food is just what the soldiers have, and they get plenty of it. The women generally work as they please. Some hire themselves out to cook and wash for officers. They have many children, and the weather being very warm, and their tents small, for the want of prudence they suffer much from disease, which causes many of them to die. Some are jubilant, while others are in despondency. Some sing, pray, and shout, while others curse, swear, and dance. About one-third of the poor contrabands at Harrison's Landing appear to be religious. There are, or, at least, there was, before I left, 3000 contrabands at that place, including children. Their virtue is suspicious. I will now speak of their intelligence.

2. They have what we call mother-wit. Their acquired knowledge in literature is very scant. You know the cause. Out of this vast number, I could not find twenty who could spell their names. After finding out the amount of their intelligence, I could judge better how to address them. O, my people, what shall I do for thee? O, that my head were waters, and mine eyes fountains of tears, I would weep day and night for thee, O my people! I obtained permission to preach and teach them. They hailed with joy the proclamation that the gospel of the Son of God was sent to them. They shouted, "Brem God for de black preacher!" Some said they never saw one before. Thank God, I have the dear-bought privilege of preaching to them that same Jesus who said—Loose him and let him go. The labor was not in vain, for the Lord gave us a few trophies, who, if faithful till he signs their release from earth, will find equality around the throne of our God in glory. We collected two hundred and forty-three of them, and formed a school which was taught during the week. It is not strange to say that out of this number only two could spell in one syllable. In the course of four weeks, sixty of them could spell intelligently in two syllables. I ask my readers if this does not give the lie to those who say the African is not susceptible to education? Their unsettled state is a great hinderance to their elevation in this particular point. When the army changes its position the contrabands must follow, for Pharaoh and his host are after them.

On the night of the 30th of July, the rebels on the opposite side of us on the James River, threw shells and cannon balls among our camps, killing some of the soldiers and two of the contraband women. The women were shot while running. The writer also ran, the Lord being a shield to my back. I succeeded in getting to the swamp unharmed. I chose a large pine tree as a refuge. In this state of things but little good can be done for them, for the missionary and his people are flying from the devil. On the 14th of August General McClellan gave orders to march, but he did not tell me where; so the same night the army started for the Rappahannock, and me for Point Lookout, in St. Mary's county, in company with a sick officer. On the 21st of August, I landed in Baltimore, glory be to God, though I then had the ague and fever. I tried to get a pass from General Wool to go to North Carolina, but he refused, the rebels being then in Maryland, so I returned to the passenger with Rev. Wayman, and laid me down to die. Not making it out, common sense taught me to go home and wait till more of the Egyptians be taken out of the way. Having no means to pay my passage home, I was obliged to tarry awhile. I left the city and kind friends on Saturday, the 6th inst. On my way home I stopped at Havre de Grace, from there I went to Darlington, Md. On Sabbath, the 7th inst., under the Lord, I preached. It was a bush-meeting, some coming from Port Deposit and other places far off. After laboring twice that day, in my feeble state of health, I walked five miles that night. I believe the preaching and walking did me good. On Monday, the 8th inst., I walked two miles more, which brought me to the depot at Havre de Grace. Bro. W. H. Hopkins, the minister in charge, paid my fare to Philadelphia. I arrived about five o'clock, P. M. Bro. Weaver not being home, his wife gave me to eat. After returning thanks, I went to the residence of Rev. A. L. Stanford, who gladly received me. With him I staid two days and two nights. On Tuesday morning I was invited by Bro. Stanford to accompany him to the preacher's meeting at Bethel Church. Bro. Burly being also in company, I was highly gratified at their criticisms. My case being of a delicate nature, Bro. Stanford gave me a push toward home. May the Lord bless him. Elder Campbell invited me to dine at his house on Wednesday, the 10th inst. I accepted. He also asked me to stay all night, which I did. I was in a very feeble state, having cold night sweats, but dear sister Campbell did all she could to make me comfortable. Before I retired to rest, she, like the good Samaritan, took out two quarters and gave them to me in the name of Jesus. As I was to leave the next morning, she prepared my breakfast, which I placed in my haversack, so that by the time I got to Bordentown I had eaten my breakfast. Thursday morning I left for New York. Before doing so, elder Campbell, like a father, gave me half a dollar, and said, Take this, my son, and may the good Father continue to bless you. I thought more of the prayer than of the money, yet I am thankful for both, for I am in need of both. Such acts as these to a poor missionary shall not be hid. May they never want for any good thing.

I arrived in New York safe, but I was very sick, for about that time the ague took hold of me and gave me a bad shaking. On the 12th inst. I arrived at home, and am now under the kind treatment of my family and the doctor. Thank God, I am improving fast.

Mr. Editor, permit me to say a word in my defence. By the truth I am trying to live, and by it I expect to die. In number 37 of the Recorder, the 13th inst, I find a letter, the caption of which is, New Bedford, Mass., signed, Wm. W. Grimes. In it he refers to the missionary sent to Virginia and North Carolina. I think it due on my part to stand up for my religious and moral character. I was not aware that the New England Conference made the Rev. the exponent for the East. I will only say that his reverence referred to my letter written on the 25th of August, headed, Harrison's Landing, where I commenced to write. He made four assertions, which are errors in his judgment. 1. I went to Providence and received all the money collected to support my family. 2. I received twenty-six dollars in the city of New Bedford. 3. Started for the mission without paying up my house rent. 4. I wrote to the trustees for money to support my family. All which are the opposite to truth. I hope he will repent of this wicked act, and let me alone, and not wake up Rue till he pleases, if he be for the truth always this is the first time he took the back track. With all due respect, I now ask brother, what is truth?

I close this letter by appealing to my young brethren in the ministry. Brethren, let us continue united in one phalanx, holding up each other, looking forward to the day which will soon appear when we shall go and unfurl the blood-sprinkled banner of King Jesus, and with a trumpet voice cry, "Behold the Lamb of God who taketh away the sin of the world!" I tell you, my brethren, some of us must preach this very same Jesus to the now enslaved, but then God's free people, in their native country. Then the stony lips of God's poor shall speak forth from every mountain top, while distant mountains catch the dying joy, shouting, Hosanna, Hosanna! Blessed is he that cometh in the name of the Lord! Hosanna in the highest! I will not, I cannot rest, till this is done, while I live on earth. The Lord helping me, I will have a part in this work. At present your brother missionary will tarry around Jerusalem. I am, dear brethren and friends, yours for the spread of the Redeemer's kingdom, and the salvation of my dear, blood-bought people,

GEORGE A. RUE.

Newport, R. I., Sept. 23, 1862.

For the Christian Recorder.

THE GENESEE CONFERENCE.—Concluded.

THIRD SESSION.

Conference assembled pursuant to adjournment. After the usual devotional exercises, Superintendent Clinton resumed his seat, and the house proceeded to business.

The committee on Ministerial Studies reported favorably of the graduates, the adoption of which was followed, with some remarks from the Superintendent, respecting the necessity of an intelligent ministry.

Mr. C. H. Green, lay delegate from Binghampton Circuit, presented the sum of $7 from a Conference auxiliary in Binghampton, N. Y., for the benefit of the Conference. A vote of thanks was returned, and the names of its officers ordered to be printed in the minutes. The remainder of the Session was occupied in reading a series of letters.

FOURTH SESSION.

Conference reassembled at the appointed time. Subsequent to the usual exercise the house resumed its business.

Rev. S. M. Giles, of the New England Conference, Book Agent, solicited assistance from the Conference to aid the Book Concern, which was embarrassed in its operations. The subject was favorably discussed by the Conference, and responded to by a subscription of $16, a portion of which was paid. The subject was laid over for further consideration.

He then introduced the request of the New England Conference through their Board of Mission, desiring a correspondence between the Board or Mission Society of the Genesee Conference and that of the New England Conference. He gave a brief account of the Mission field of New England Conference, and read some extracts from their annual report. The propriety of such correspondence was discussed, and considered essential, and referred to a committee to make arrangements for the same.

The Superintendent examined the members respecting their literary advancement, and [illegible] the arrangement of the [illegible] ing which the house adjourned.

FIFTH SESSION.

Conference met at the usual hour. The preliminary exercises being concluded, the Conference proceeded to business.

The examination pending was resumed, and resulted very satisfactorily, with a view of its continuance the ensuing year.

Rev. Giles made some remarks of the necessity of publishing a work on the utility of conference auxiliaries, which contributed to the support of the Conference in sending the Gospel. After some deliberation by way of explanation, the Conference gave their co operation, and promised to lend its aid in procuring the required information.

Rev. Tappan, of the New York Conference, made a demand of $9 with interest, money retained from him by this Conference in 1852. After a lengthy discussion, the validity of his claim being satisfactorily proved, the secretary was authorized to give him an order on Rev. Wm. H. Bishop, for the amount.

SIXTH SESSION.

Conference convened pursuant to adjournment. After the usual exercises proceeded to business. Some ordinary matters which caused a protracted discussion being disposed of, the Business Committee was called upon to report progress.

The following was presented and read, prefaced with the preamble and first two resolutions emanating from the Allegheny Conference.

National Affairs.

Whereas, As an enlightened and humane people, we cannot but sympathize with the advancement of the principles of liberty and equality, whether it be in the disenthrallment of the slave in the British West Indies; the liberation of the serfs in Russia; the emancipation of the slaves in the National Capitol, or the confiscation of the slaves of those Southern rebels whose patricidal hands are lifted up to strike down the best constitution ever established by man. Therefore,

Resolved, That while we recognise the hand of the God of universal liberty who has raised philanthropists and humanitarians in villages and places, we are not unmindful of our obligations to those whose indefatigable exertions have done so much for the amelioration of the condition of mankind.

Resolved, That while the first of August shall remain memorable in the history of our neglected and oppressed race as giving liberty to 800,000 souls, we are, nevertheless, bound by birth, sentiment, education, and a common feeling of patriotism, to hold in the highest esteem those several periods which have recently given freedom to so many of our brethren in the land of our birth and the home of our affection.

Resolved, That we, as a Conference, do deeply sympathize with the North in the present war, because we believe that in securing their own liberty they are compelled to secure ours and that of our enslaved brethren.

Resolved, That we, as ministers, advise our brethren to take no part in this war on either side until they can do it as men, as freemen, and citizens. When that time comes, as come it must, let them be ready to prove themselves true lovers of God and liberty, nobly acting their part.

Resolved, That we with all our hearts do thank God for what has been done for our brethren in the District of Columbia, and in other parts of the South, and we humbly pray that it may be the bringing of the glorious end of slavery.

Resolved, That we do not want to see the war stop until it uses up slavery root and branch, and fully restores to the colored man all his God-given rights.

On the adoption of this report there was considerable discussion, originating from the words, "Best Government," in the preamble. The debate was long and interesting. Some sublime illustrations were produced on both sides, with some very able arguments. The preamble was finally amended by striking out the word "Government" and substituting the word "Constitution." It was thought by some that the amendment was no better than the original, but the majority favoring the amendment, it was adopted as amended without any further debate.

SEVENTH SESSION.

Conference convened at the usual hour. The session being organized according to rule, proceeded to business.

The time was chiefly occupied in hearing the reports from the various committees, some of which not being satisfactory, elicited considerable debate, but were finally referred back to the several committees to report progress at the next session.

WASHINGTON CORRESPONDENCE.

MR. EDITOR:—Much of the harmony that used to pervade the city has returned. The rebel raid in Maryland being at an end, the doubts for the safety of the Capitol are change I into a confidential reliance in the power of Federal protection.

The greatest intelligence we have had about Washington is the President's proclamation, which proposes to give freedom to so vast a quantity of our people. I suppose anything in the shape of a review from one so humble, would be an intrusion upon your columns, but I must say that I differ with a large portion of our people in not believing that the President wrote his proclamation in good faith. I believe Mr. Lincoln enbodied his conscientious promptings when he wrote that proclamation. Nevertheless, I do not doubt but that he has been worked up to it by a series of events which have transpired, but these events have only worked him out of an unnecessary caution, and a useless prudence, and not any love for slavery, because I do not believe he ever had any. And I will further say, that Mr. Lincoln is not half such a stickler for colored expatriation as he has been pronounced, (I am responsible for the assertion) but it was a strategetic move upon his part in contemplation of this emancipatory proclamation just delivered. He knows as well as any one, that it is a thing morally impracticable, ever to rid this country of colored people unless God does it miraculously, but it was a preparatory nucleus around which he intended to cluster the raid of objections while the proclamation went forth in the strength of God and executed its mission. I do not wish to trespass upon the key that unlocks a private door for fear that I might loose it, but all I will say, is, that the President stood in need of a place to point to. But suppose the president did not deliver his proclamation in good faith? What need I care? Or suppose he was driven to it by force of circumstances. What of it? That is nothing to cavil over. Let us thank God for it, for to him be the glory forever and ever. But such suppositions are not founded upon any tangible ground of truthful considerations but are conjured up by some ironical, faulting, evil constructed hearts, for Mr. Lincoln loves freedom as well as any one on earth, and if he carries out the spirit of his proclamation, he need never fear hell. GOD GRANT HIM A HIGH SEAT IN GLORY.

Another very fine demonstration come off at Israel church on Monday night, 22d inst. The object of it was to raise money to assist the trustees in paying for certain repairs on said church. Mr. Thomas Cephas was the President of the Association; Mrs. Josephine Over and Mrs. Emeline B. Hillery, were the chairmen of the committees. They cleared a handsome sum of hard down cash. Mr. A. M. Green was present and delivered an address which will live in the memory of Washington people for a long time. Rev. B. T. Tanner read an allegory, which bore the mark of a superior genius, and was universally acknowledged to be a masterly production.

Rev. J. P. Hamer of the Zion A. M. E. Church, preached in Israel Church on Sabbath evening to an immense congregation. The theme of his discourse was, the divinity of Christ. He utterly riddled his text in gleaning its theological bearings upon the subject then under consideration. If his text had had life in it, he would have certainly killed it, for he picked it all to pieces. It was the sermon for the Christian, the intelligent person, and the muser.

Mr. Maxey, a member of Rev. Caleb Woodyard's Church, died on the 26th inst. Mr. Maxey for many years was a member of the Baptist Church, and while he was a strenuous advocate of the faith of his denomination, he possessed views much more liberal than is known to generally characterize that branch of Zion.

He measured men's Christianity by their walk and not by whether or not they had been immersed under the water. He could be frequently seen at the Methodist Churches, worshipping with the same holy zeal and Christian animation, as if at his own.

He was well known in Washington, by white and colored, and respected by every one. His gentlemanly deportment, and Christian reputation, has won for him an undying memory.

Mr. Elias Lomax, another old citizen, died the same day. His manners, habits, economy, and thriftiness, none will nor dare question; but, we are sorry to say, he died a sinner.

Rev. H. M. Turner requested his congregation to observe Thursday, Oct. 2d, as a day of thanksgiving to God, for the glorious proclamation of President Lincoln.

Mr. Joseph E. Williams, of Central America notoriety, is preparing to leave for that place by the 10th of October. He is highly gratified at the prospect, having secured a home for his race, where such a profusion of wealth may be acquired. If Central America ever becomes any thing, Mr. Williams' name will be immortal; for if he has not worked against wind and tide to bring that country to the attention of the people, no one ever did.

H. M. T.

Washington, Sept. 18th, 1862.

A CALL TO ACTION.

BY REV. H. M. TURNER

MR. EDITOR:—The time has arrived in the history of the American African, when grave and solemn responsibilities stare him in the face. The proclamation of President Lincoln promising in the short space of a hundred days, to liberate thousands, and hundreds of thousands of human beings, born under, and held in subjection to the most cruel vassalage that ever stained a nation's garment, has opened up a new series of obligations, consequences, and results, never known to our honored sires, nor actually met with through the long chain of a glorious ancestry. We live in one of the most eventful periods of the world's revolutions—a period virtually speaking, that "kings and prophets waited for, but never saw."

A generation has passed from among the living since men upon this continent first dared to speak in the defence of human rights. But generations have passed since the God of heaven was first besieged by billions of entreaties, despatched from the earnest hearts of millions of tortured souls, from every vale, hill and dale, where defrauded humanity felt the grind of oppression's wheel. And amid all the din and dash of legislative and congressional enactments, determined upon the consummate extension of its transitive duration, a circle of darkness shrouded the scheme, and hurled the traffic to the ground, amid a dense rolling fog of dismal confusion, for which a parallel is not to be found.

But now, while many of those warm-hearted philanthropists, prompted by considerations purely divine, are lying in their graves, and while thousands of thousands of prayer offering saints, whose supplications were heard in the skies as a mixture of anxiety, torture, want and grief, have passed from the troublesome scenes of earth to the land of immortal birth, their labors, toils, and efforts combined, have, by gradual incursions upon the powers of injustice, through the instrumentality of their continuous and circumfluent lash, pushed on despite the oppositions, the dawn of freedom and the morn of liberty.

And now, we are verging upon a time very unlike the previous days of our American existence. The great quantity of contrabands, (so called,) who have fled from the oppressor's sod, and are now thronging Old Point Comfort, Hilton Head, Washington City, and many other places, and the unnumbered host who shall soon be freed by the President's proclamation, are to materially change their political and social condition. The day of our inactivity, disinterestedness, and irresponsibility, has given place to a day in which our long cherished abilities, and every intellectual fibre of our being, are to be called into a sphere of requisition. The time for boasting of ancestral genius, and prowling through the dusty pages of ancient history to find a specimen of negro intellectuality is over. Such useless noise should now be lulled, while we turn our attention to an engagement with those means which must, and alone can, mould out and develop those religious, literary, and pecuniary resources, adapted to the grave expediency now about to be encountered.

Thousands of contrabands, now at the places above designated, are in a condition of the extremest suffering. We see them in droves every day perambulating the streets of Washington, homeless, shoeless, dressless, and moneyless. And when we think of the cold freezing days of a coming winter, at which time the surface of the earth not unfrequently will be converted into a solid mass of congelation, our sensibilities of humanity sink under the dreadful apprehensions consequent upon such direful privations.

Every man of us now, who has a speck of grace or bit of sympathy, for the race that we are inseparably identified with, is called upon by force of surrounding circumstances, to extend a hand of mercy to bone of our bone and flesh of our flesh. And no one can now screen himself behind the nice matured scrupulosities which have in many instances redounded to a plausible excuse, to the ever garrulous but never performers, in that, after giving assistance to the contrabands, they would again be returned back to slavery, and thus we would be found as having lavished our charitable expenditures upon a human chattel, destined to a state of perpetual vassalage; the morality of that thing, however, has not only been questionable but grievously condemnable.

But the proclamation of President Lincoln has banished the fog, and silenced the doubt. All can now see that the stern intention of the Presidential policy is, to wage the war in favour of freedom, till the last groan of the anguished heart slave shall be hushed in the ears of nature's God. This definition of the policy bids us rise, and for ourselves think, act, and do. We have stood still and seen the salvation of God, while we besought him with teary eyes and bleeding hearts; but the stand-still day bid us adieu Sept 22, 1862. A new era, a new dispensation of things, is now upon us—to action, to action, is the cry. We must now begin to think, to plan, and to legislate for ourselves.

Washington, Sept 26th, 1862.

(TO BE CONTINUED.)

UNION RELIEF ASSOCIATION.

Pursuant to notice, a portion of the members and congregation of Union Bethel Church, Washington, met in said church on Wednesday evening, 10th inst., to take into consideration the forming of an association for the relief of the contrabands. The meeting was opened with singing and prayer by the Rev. James A. Handy. Mr. Thomas E. Green was called to the chair, and Mr James L. Thomas elected Secretary. The object of the meeting was briefly stated by the Chair, and all persons present were invited to come forward and enroll their names—the contributions to be voluntary. Fifty-three ladies and gentlemen enrolled their names and contributed the sum of fifteen dollars and seven cents.

A permanent organization was then effected by the election of the following officers to serve for one year:—President, Thomas E. Green; Vice President, Mrs. Susan Tenny; Secretary, James L. Thomas; Assistant Secretary, Wm. L. Freeman; Treasurer, Mrs. Margaret Tilghman; Executive Committee, Mrs. Mary Gooden, Miss Elizabeth Smith, Mrs Anna M. Dorsey, Miss Caroline B. Simpson, Mrs. Laura Quinn, Miss Cecilia A. King, Mrs. Emily B. Freeman, Miss Harriet Stewart, Mrs. Anna Coakley, Miss Caroline Loudon.

Rev Mr. Handy, Messrs. John A. Simms and William L. Freeman were appointed a committee to draft rules for the government of the Association, to report at an adjourned meeting of the association to be held Wednesday evening next, the 17th inst.

THOMAS A. GREEN, Prest.
JAMES L. THOMAS, Sec.

Washington, D. C., Sept. 12, 1862.

For the Christian Recorder.

MR. EDITOR:—It does seem, sir, like mockery in President Lincoln to say, as he does, that he wishes to colonize the colored people of this country in Central America. Has President Lincoln made any arrangements with President Martinez, the President of Central America, for a colony of colored people from the United States? I would suppose that no understanding of this kind had taken place between these two chieftains. I see an extract from a private letter from Martinez, stating that not only he himself is opposed to the scheme, but that his people are bitterly opposed to any thing of the kind. Where, then, are the grounds of President Lincoln's plan for a colored colony to be taken to Central America? Now, seeing that this is the case, as two other letters from two reliable gentlemen, (one living in Nicaragua, the other in Chinandega, towns of Central America,) fully establish, does it not seem like mockery to offer to colonize colored people in any number in such a region? It is but to add insult to injury.

But it is asked—What shall we do with the negros? I would answer—Give them their rights, and they will do for themselves. To me, there would be just as much reason and sense in asking what the Almighty made them for. I believe that there would be just as much presumption in asking one of these questions as the other. Where is it written that the Lord heads the white man accountable for the welfare of the colored man, after that the white man shall have done justice to the colored man? Is it anywhere so written? How I have never been so fortunate as to find it. Then why should the whites put themselves to so much trouble about the country in which we shall live? Let them but give us justice, and Providence and we will attend to the balance. I do not suppose it will be asked our white friends in the great strife, whether they had done their duty in selecting good countries for us, and in colonizing us in them, and in shifting us from one place to another in order to have us conveniently and happily situated. I do not suppose that any such question will be asked, but rather—Did you do unto the colored man as you would have him do unto you? This will be the great question which will be asked. And where does the white friend live in this whole nation, that will be able to answer this question in the affirmative? Because of injustice, which has been so alarmingly practised toward the colored man by those who consider themselves his superiors, is it that the judgments of the Almighty have at last been let loose in this nation. We need not be at a loss to know why these have been let loose, for when we notice who they are upon whom these judgments are falling, we are satisfied about the cause of their coming. The colored race does not seem to be the object of the thunderbolts displayed in the judgments which are now abroad in the land, but the so-considered superior race, who have lived so long on the unpaid labor of the colored man, is feeling now these awful fulminations from East to West, and from North to South; and it seems strange that with all these heavy judgments which now are extant throughout this doomed nation, that the very people who are suffering under the awful weight of these scourges, should be anxious still to inflict additional wrongs upon the very people that the Almighty is now punishing them for having wronged. I say this, because it would be an everlasting wrong, in my opinion, to throw any number of colored people into a colony in Central America; because, in the first place, the Central American people do not want us there, for I see by private letters from responsible and intelligent gentlemen living in that country, that the Government there is so opposed to President Lincoln's colonization scheme, that they are determined to take steps against it, and I am not the least surprised at it. Why drive us from North America, or urge us in any way to leave here, after having sucked our life-blood for more than two hundred years?

T. STROTHER.

Terre Haute, Ind.

MAN'S INSIGNIFICANCE AND GOD'S SUPREMACY.

We see in the record which God has given of his dealings with our race a series of illustrations of man's inefficiency and God's supremacy. He has seldom used the means to accomplish an end that man would have selected or supposed. What pains has he taken to show his own independence and to "hide pride from man? Does he save the whole kingdom of Egypt from perishing by a seven years' dreadful famine? It was by a young, falsely accused slave, wrongfully cast into prison. Does he save the proud Syrian general from his leprosy and restore him to soundness? it was by the ministration of a little Hebrew maid, and simply by washing seven times in the waters of the Jordan, "and his flesh came again like unto the flesh of a little child, and he was clean." (2 Kings v. 14.) Would the Saviour open the eyes of the man who was born blind? he simply makes clay with his spittle and anoints the eyes of the man, and bids him go wash in the pool of Siloam, and he washed and came seeing. Here was no mighty and imposing parade of circumstance; here was no trick, nor jugglery, nor patting of any awful machinery into requisition to create illusion and captivate the sense. It was simply a word, a touch, an act of obedience, prompted by faith in the power of the Commander, and the work was done.

But here I see another assertion of the divine supremacy triumphing over human agencies, and showing how God operates in these affairs. The Israelites are cruelly oppressed by the rapacious Midianites. God summons Gideon to the rescue, who, like a sagacious general, sounded the alarm of war, and summoned a large army out of Abiezer and Manasseh, and Asher, and Zebulon, and Naphtali. But what said God unto him? "The Lord said unto Gideon, The people that are with thee are too many for me to give the Midianites into their hands, lest Israel vaunt themselves against me, saying, Mine own hand hath saved me." So Gideon is commanded to proclaim, "Whosoever is fearful and afraid, let him return;" and twenty-two thousand men left him, leaving an army of ten thousand. Still there were too many; and God commanded him to bring them down to the water for another test, and every man that drank the water out of his hand was to be set by himself, and the entire number was three hundred. These were selected for the enterprise, and the others sent away. And how were three hundred men to contend against a mighty army with well-appointed officers, and all completely equipped for war? Humanly speaking, it was a forlorn hope, a desperate venture. But it was God's cause, and "if God be for us, who shall be against us?" For there is no restraint to the Lord to save, "whether by many or by few." Gideon had faith in God, and what does he do? See, he divides his little company into three bands. He adopts a simple but unlooked for device. He puts into every man's hand, each having his sword by his side, a trumpet, and in the other a lighted lamp covered by an earthen pitcher. The bands were to approach the army of the Midianites from three distinct points at midnight. At a signal from Gideon, a terrific blast from three hundred trumpets pealed from different quarters upon the ears of the astounded sleepers. Waking up in confusion from deep slumber, they ran hither and thither in uncertainty and terror, engulfed in profound darkness. Another signal from the leader, and in an instant the three hundred pitchers crash and three hundred lamps flash their light upon the dazzled eyes of the vast multitude just aroused from midnight sleep. In their bewildered astonishment there breaks from the three hundred throats in the three divisions the grand rallying cry, "The sword of the Lord and of Gideon!" and the work is done. A terrible fright, an awful panic seized the mighty host of the enemy, and they ran and cried and fled, and in the darkness and confusion, not distinguishing friend from foe, they "set every man's sword against his fellow throughout the host." The battle was gained, the victory was complete, for who and what can stand against a panic in an army? It is the most uncontrollable of all things, and quite fatal to those who are subjected to it.

Lift now the vail that hides the invisible from our sight, and you see exactly the same principle in operation, the same infinite Being working to the same way. What are the great battles of the world but contests between right and wrong, truth and falsehood, good and evil? True, what seems right to us does not always triumph; but this is because we only see the outside of things. Could we look to the end, could we see as God sees, we should, no doubt, discern the reason and approve the issue. But very generally we do see clearly the triumph of truth and right as we also see the hand of God. Papal Spain determines to subject Protestant England. A prodigious fleet, such as had not in that age been heard of, is prepared, and with an immense military as well as naval force, threatens to overwhelm her devoted victim. Proudly, if not impiously, it is called the Invincible Armada. The navy of England seemed no match for her enemy. But see how God can order things. One of the most important of the Spanish vessels takes fire, and while the hands are busy extinguishing the flames, she is captured with a large portion of the funds of the expedition on board. Another important vessel springs her mast, and is captured too. The smaller and more manageable vessels of the English contend successfully against the larger, more unwieldy vessels of the foe. Fire-ships are sent through the hostile fleet, which create another panic. The admiral cuts his cables in alarm and stands out to sea; and finally a terrific tempest strikes the proud Armada, and more than half the vessels are destroyed, the miserable remnant reaching their native coast shattered and mangled beyond all recovery.

Take the great battles of the world. Nearly all of them turn upon some unforeseen circumstances not provided at all in the programme, which can in no way be guarded against. The great Wellington declared that he never could foresee the issue of a battle, as it depended upon so many things which he could neither foresee nor control. Bonaparte never could understand how he lost the battle of Waterloo, which by all the rules of war, he ought to have gained. That General Washington gained the battle of Trenton can be explained only on the ground of a sort of fatality that seized the mind of the British general; and that he saved his army in the city of New York, when the enemy were encamped on Long Island, waiting to pounce down upon and seize it, was owing to a heavy fog which the Invisible Hand drew over the East River just in time to hide Washington from view and give him time to escape. Surely there is "no king saved by the multitude of a host; a mighty man is not delivered by much strength;" for "the battle is the Lord's." "The race is not to the swift, nor the battle to the strong," but "thine, O Lord, is the greatness, and the power, and the glory, and the victory, and the majesty." Why, then, will not men, in their successes, cry out with the Psalmist: "O sing unto the Lord a new song, for he hath done marvellous things; his right hand and his holy arm have gotten him the victory." Remember how the good Hezekiah, when he heard of the immense host brought against him by the proud and insolent Sennacherib, spake comfortably to his captains, (2 Chron. xxxii. 7, 8.) "Be strong and courageous, be not afraid nor dismayed for the king of Assyria, nor for all the multitude that is with him: for there be more with us than with him. With him is an arm of flesh; but with us is the Lord our God to help us, and to fight our battles. And they rested themselves upon the words of Hezekiah king of Judah." Sennacherib defied the power of God, asserting the sufficiency of his force to overwhelm the foe. But the Lord sent an angel, which cut off all the mighty men of valor and the leaders and the captains in the camp of the king of Assyria. So he returned with shame of face to his own land. And there his own sons, probably mortified and disgusted at his defeat, slew him with their own hands.

Dr Holdich.

THE OLD CONGREGATION.

The members of the old congregation have gone to lottier courts, and we shall see them no more. The grandmothers in sober black, that came tottering in with their white handkerchiefs smoothly folded and laid on their arms; the fair-browed girls that sang the alto and the air; the children with the sprigs of caraway and dill; the deacon whose beard blossomed like an almond tree hard by the pulpit door; the woman that in Winter time brought the tin-footed stoves for a solace; the little paper fans that waved when days were Summer like so many little wings about the church, as if the old minister had a family cherubim for the audience; the old doxology they used to sing last in the afternoon; the trembling benediction, like the blessing of a patriarch, they received—these we shall never see and hear again as they were.

No longer, in Sabbath noons, do they sit upon the grass beneath the old poplars, and talk in tones subdued, while taking their frugal meal; no longer do they linger among the old gray gravestones of the burying-ground, that is since a "cemetery," and contemplate the stone willows that never put forth a leaf; for the times have changed, and there is but one sermon a day, and those who brought their dinners of old, have sat down, the most of them, to the feast of the Lamb, where the tree of life, the true tree of heavens, and no poplar, is blooming forever.

The deaf who sat on the pulpit stairs in these old times, can hear the waving of a seraph's wings to-day; for the "daughters of music," have been lifted from the dust wherein they were lying. The old blind man whose doubtful feet young eyes did guide lives now in morning light. And old black Jonah, that stole softly in, and sat down in a pew beside the door, has been made white as last and bidden to come up higher.

We think it ought to be set down upon a map somewhere, the old church was very near the "house not made with hands"—only the graveyard's breath removed. We think it ought somewhere to be written, "The house that they builded of old, let it remain forever."

Give to time the silvering of the wall they have hallowed; let the wind and the songs the dead singers began, and the rains gently fall on its echoless threshold.—Benjamin F. Taylor.

THE MARRIAGE OF PRIESTS

The Christian Recorder.

Philadelphia, October 4, 1862.

NOTICE

TO THE DISTRICTS OF PHILADELPHIA, NEW ENGLAND, OHIO, INDIANA, AND MISSOURI, OF THE A. M. E. CHURCH MINISTERS.

Dear Brethren:—As we have a number [illegible] therefore it will be expected that the ministers and preachers, on their circuits and stations, will do all they can to collect the two cent money; and we also recommend that the Class leaders be instructed to collect and set the amount on the Class Book opposite [illegible] collections called, per Discipline, for the Annual Conference, and publish the same once every quarter, that it may be seen who they are that work for God and his cause. We think it is time to give credit to those [illegible] so that God's name may be glorified.

QUARTERLY MEETING

There will be Quarterly Meeting in the Wesley A. M. E. Church, Hurst Street, viz:

Quarterly Conference on Thursday, the 9th of October, at 5 o'clock, P. M.

Preaching on Friday evening, the 10th, at 8, P. M.

General Class on Sabbath, the 12th, commencing at 9 o'clock, A. M.

Preaching at half-past 10, A. M., by Rev. J. P. Campbell.

At 3, P. M., a Sacramental discourse by Rev. E. Weaver.

At half past seven, P. M., a discourse by Rev. Henry Davis.

A. L. [illegible] Pastor

NOTICE

Quarterly meeting in the A. M. E. Union Church.

Quarterly Conference on the evening of the 16th.

General Class on the evening of the 17th.

Preaching on the evening of the 18th, and preaching in the morning, afternoon and evening of the 19th, and, also, on the evening of the 20th.

At 7 o'clock, the doors will open for love-feast, the Lord being willing.

HENRY DAVIS, Elder.

October, 1862.

QUARTERLY MEETING.

The Rev. Peter Gardiner's Quarterly Meeting for the Camden Circuit, comes off at Woodbury, N. J., to-day and to-morrow, Sabbath, the 4th and 5th inst.

SPECIAL NOTICE.

We wish all our subscribers who owe for this year to send us their money.

NOTICE.

To all persons who will send us fifty cents we will send the Recorder from now till the first of January, 1863. Let everybody strike while the iron is hot, for the pleasure of reading the Recorder from now till the first of January for fifty cents.

NOTICE.

There will be a stated meeting of the United Beneficial Sisters of the Rev. Joshua Woodland Society, held at their Hall, Rodman street, below Tenth, north side, at the house of Mr. Hammond Dorsey, on Thursday evening, October 9th, 1862, at half-past seven o'clock.

☞ Punctual attendance is requested of every member, as business of great importance will be transacted.

By order of the President

ELIZA STOKELY, Secretary.

THERE is considerable sickness about Philadelphia. The small pox is pretty bad in some neighborhoods.

THE PACIFIC APPEAL.

"We see from the "Pacific Appeal" of August 30th, published in San Francisco, that the Rev. John Jenifer, of New Bedford, Mass., has arrived out there. We are glad to hear it. The Rev. T. M. D. Ward, our missionary, will receive his assistance in the work. We are glad to hear from our missionary through the "Pacific Appeal." We hope brother Ward and his people had a fine time at his fruit festival.

CONTRABAND COMMITTEE

OF BELLE PLAINE.

Rev. J. P. Campbell, No. 832 Carpenter Street
Rev. Stephen Smith, No. 921 Lombard St
Mr. Morris Hall, No. 1022 Lombard St.
Mrs. Jane Johnson, No. 618 South St
Mrs. Mary C. Weaver, No. 619 Pine St.
Mrs. Mary L. Jones, No. 910 South St.
Miss Esther Armstrong, No. 704 Lebanon St.

Mrs. MARY CAMPBELL, Secretary.

ACKNOWLEDGMENTS

From Mr. Solomon Cooper, of Towanda, Penna.,	50
From Rev. Theodore Gould, Princeton, on act for paper,	1 50
From Miss Elizabeth Chambers, Flemington, N. J.,	50
Do. two-cent money,	2 00
From Rev. William Dumond, of Newport, Rhode Island, by the hands of Miss Brown,	2 00
Rev. William H. Winder, Freeland, Pa.,	$2 50
Mr. E. D. Brown, Fairhaven, N. J.,	50
Rev. Jas. A. Handy, Washington, D. C.,	4 00

DIED.

Mr. GARRISON JAMES, the chorister of Union Bethel Church, has departed this life. He has gone to his long and happy home, we trust,

"Where the wicked cease from troubling,
And the weary are at rest."

He leaves behind him an affectionate companion to mourn his loss.

The Church, from all that we have learned of our departed brother, has lost a firm and tried friend.

The Bishop of Honolulu sailed from Southampton in the Tasmanian on the 13th of August, for the Sandwich Islands, via Panama. With him were his family [illegible]

1000!

One thousand annual and five hundred semi-annual subscribers between now and the first [illegible] ministers on their circuits and stations to say. But is it a fact, that three-fourths of the ministers of the A. M. E Church have not sent a single subscriber for the paper? Yes; it is the honest truth! There are fully that number who have not sent us a single subscriber. We ask, [illegible] because you do not feel called in reality to preach the gospel of the blessed Jesus, and work for the cause of his Church and people? or is it because you have not zeal nor the welfare of the Church at heart? It surely cannot be the fault [illegible] and ignorant as not to want to know and learn about our Church, Bishops, and ministers in all our connexion, we say most emphatically, that it is time spent in vain, and the sooner the [illegible] a preacher or preachers from the midst of said people, the better it will be for the minister and them too. But we cannot believe [illegible] enlightened day, that there is not one or more found who is always ready and willing to support the Church and all appertaining to her welfare. We have been at some places where the impression was left upon our mind that nothing could be done—they would not subscribe for the paper—but when we were permitted to lay the claims of the Book Concern and paper before them, we have got from 8 to 10, and as high as 15 subscribers. Some would say that they never heard that the connexion had a paper before! Now, how comes it that they subscribe to us? Again, when we were in charge of any circuit or station, we always tried to manage so that no one could exercise as much influence over the congregation as we could for the time being; therefore, we took great delight in presenting the claims of the church to the people. From the first time we ever heard that there was a paper published by the A. M. E Church, we felt a disposition to want it to live, and were willing to give it our support as far as we were able, and did so whenever we were called upon to [illegible] by the first day of [illegible] Surely we can, if the brethren will all go to work, and keep it before the minds of their congregations. There is every reason why we should have a paper in the field. The present crisis demands it, if there were nothing else. But here is the General Conference, which will soon be on us again, and more than likely we may have to elect one or more Bishops, and we shall want to discuss the propriety and the impropriety of another one or more. Then we say again, shall we have one thousand six hundred subscribers? Who will be the first minister, steward, class-leader, or trustee, to swell the number? Let us hear from you, my brethren. No one need fall back upon the past for an excuse, that you did not formerly get your paper regularly, but try us. And see, now, we do not ask too much when we call for this number, for just consider the membership of the A. M. E. Church, somewhere near 45,000. We shall only charge 50 cents each until the first of January, 1863.

COLORED DENTISTRY OF PHILADELPHIA

Dr. Longfellow, residing in Rodman Street, above Eleventh, claims, under this head, special attention from the public as a gentleman highly skilled in the duties of his profession. There are several colored dentists in this city, but, in our estimation, Dr. Longfellow is certainly one of the best now residing in Philadelphia. He has no superior, if, indeed, an equal in his line. His treatment of his patients is made as pleasant and easy as circumstances will permit. There is nothing uncouth or rough about him. On the contrary you will find him at once the dignified and [illegible] with more credit than did nine-tenths of the whites.

I [illegible] much distinction, that he knew Dr. Longfellow to perform an operation upon a French lady who had called upon a number of our white doctors, who all concurred in the opinion that such an operation could not be performed. Of course, after that, her confidence was placed in the colored doctor.

We can also say that he did a fine job for us. Go to him. Give him a trial. Dr. Wilson, Medical Physician, in Lombard street, just below Tenth—his fame and reputation as a scholar and a skilful physician are far better than what we could say of him—but we can say this much: that we would as soon risk our life in his hands as in any other doctor's we know of. He is kept most constantly on the run. There are quite a number of colored doctors in this city.

HARD AT WORK

The Committee which was appointed to receive contributions, in money or clothing, and to buy and make up goods for the benefit of the contrabands in and around Washington city, are getting along finely. They are at work in connexion with a large number of ladies and gentlemen, who are giving their assistance. They work day and night to give aid to those whose rights have been taken from them, and now left without bread and butter, and even left entirely destitute of necessary clothing.

Bethel Church alone raised one hundred and twelve dollars or more, aside from clothing, and contributions are coming in to them every day. Mrs. Mary Campbell, the wife of Rev. J. P. Campbell, is the secretary of the Committee. This most estimable and truly Christian lady is well-known to be a faithful and untiring worker in the discharge of any duty she puts her hands to. The Lord bless all the dear friends for their acts of charity and comfort to those poor and needy brethren.

BUSINESS ENTERPRISE

A good illustration of the old maxim—"God helps those who help themselves,"—may be found in the business success of our old friend, Mr Still, No. 107 North Fifth Street, just above Arch, where stoves, ranges, furnaces, and sheet iron work, of every description, to suit purchasers, may be found. Among the finest and best assortments of coal in this city, are sold by our friend, and we hazard little in saying that he has already sold more coal during the past two months than any two of his white competitors in this city, from [illegible] are sent to all parts of the State, and has [illegible] ago is one that any man might be put out of [illegible] those trades so much to [illegible]

[illegible] pave the way to intelligence and respectability? [illegible] shops, trades and stores, properly conducted [illegible] chasers, few care who the Mr Still a face is white or black; the question is, do his stoves or his coal suit them?—and they act accordingly. Set it down as a fixed fact, that the whites will patronize the blacks in any branch of business if the blacks have what is wanted. Away with the false notion that white people will not patronize stores kept by colored people. Have good articles, be prompt in business, deal fairly, and success will come. Business habits are the result of discipline, training—no chance about it. Look at the Jews beginning to peddle in childhood. Why not start out our children with baskets and a few articles, and let them begin the life of a trader or merchant? A merchant with warehouses and ships is only a peddler with a big basket. Put your children to trade and barter, and do not wait to get a large store.

The same that we have said about friend Still, [illegible] those who help themselves."

MR. EDITOR:—I drop these lines to inform you and the public of the state of things here. Living, as I do, upon the borders of freedom and slavery, you must know we suffer both as ministers and people—both in body and mind. I am here on the Ohio river, where excitement prevails often in the first degree. On my last visit in Brown County, the excitement prevailed to such an alarming extent, that many were afraid to leave their homes. [illegible] meetings at the different points, and it was found dangerous for them to stay at home. On and near the road leading from the northern part to [illegible] battle, if any better than those rebels they professed to be going to fight. They shaved and shot into the houses of poor, defenceless colored people, and no one on earth to interpose for them. Will they God who spoke in thunder tones from the smoking [illegible] My faith tells me, no; He will awake in judgment pretty soon. When I arrived at this point, I found, about the same the above named excitement prevailed here to such an extent, that many families, white and colored, left their homes and fled to the country; and some from Kentucky, driving their stock and fleeing to our side of the river for refuge. All this was owing to the rebel army being within seven miles of us. Know from this that there is but little money in circulation here, and as for piety, still less. D COOPER.

New Richmond, O., Sept 23, 1862.

For the Christian Recorder.

THE WESTERN INQUIRER.

THE REPOSITORY VS. THE RECORDER, AND THE RECORDER VS. THE REPOSITORY.

Office of the Repository, No 44, Henrietta St., Baltimore, Sept. 27th, 1862.

MR. EDITOR:—The Recorder of this date indicates, by certain inquiries made by a person who signs himself "Inquirer," a disposition to revive an old feud, which I had hoped had well nigh died out, about the rightful existence of the only two periodicals in the African M. E. Church—the Repository and Recorder. For my own part, I have avoided noticing anything which has been said about the Repository in the Recorder, and would not even now, but because "Inquirer" has put three questions, and you have given them a careful answer. Strange to say, he has hid himself behind a mask. I wonder why he hides himself behind a masked battery? Why not unmask himself, and let us see who he is? Why not let us know if he is a worker in the A. M. E. Church?

I hope you will not consider me out of place to say a few words to "Inquirer," and others of his like, about this little pest—The Repository. Your Western querist propounds what he regards as three grave questions. I may be permitted to answer them in my way as you did in yours:—

Query No. 1.—"The Repository, as is sometimes seen in your paper, and often in the Annual Conferences in connexion with the Recorder, is it, or is it not the property of the general connexion of the A. M. E. Church?"

Reply.—I have never mentioned the "Repository" "in your paper" in connexion with the "Recorder." The friends of the "Repository" have done so occasionally. They have our thanks, not for mentioning it in connexion with the "Recorder," but because they mentioned it at all kindly. Kind words are at all times refreshing, for I have been so accustomed to kicks and cuffs since my connexion with the "Repository," that I am almost tempted to say as Dryden did:—

"They, with their quills, did all the hart they could,
And cuffed the tender chickens from their brood."

2. The Repository, by the urbanity of Bishop Quinn, was, for the first time, by me, presented before the Indiana Conference at the last session; and, at that Conference, I aimed as clearly as I was capable to state, the objects, intentions, aims, and purposes which the "Repository" [illegible] "Inquirer" [illegible] mainly be a member of that Conference, (he may be of another a little further East) for there I explicitly stated that I came not there by right but by permission.

3. The Repository was not authorized by the General Conference, but is approved of and supported by nearly every member of that body and most of the Bishops; one of whom (Bishop Quinn) is [illegible]

4. The [illegible] are stated in four words: [illegible] Science, and Art. To diffuse [illegible] highest ambition, and, to this hour, it has proved itself the fast friend of the African M. E. Church, aiming to develop the doctrine as well as the principles of its government, to stir up its ministers and [illegible] a deeper piety, and at the same time developing the great resources which she has within herself. Most of her editors and contributors are men of talent, and some of deep learning and piety. Their praise is in all the churches. They are no strangers. If they have done anything to create a love for God and humanity, for religion and literature, for the arts and sciences; if they have aroused either in their own church or elsewhere a deeper love for either or all, they will feel most happy. If "Inquirer" loves such [illegible] and [illegible] his best to extend the circulation of "your paper," we shall be most happy to admit him amid the galaxy of the lovers of [illegible] [illegible] treat with others than [illegible] We can at [illegible] fond to differ about the modus operandi while all work, but we have no patience with fault-finders and drones.

[illegible] connexion, why is it not under the jurisdiction of the General Editor and Book Steward?

Reply.—1st. Because the functionary named has quite as much to do as can well attend to.

2d. He, by the Discipline, has specified duties to perform, and it would be out of place for him to do other than that which the law, made by the General Conference of the A. M. E Church, directs for the government of his special office. He has no more right to interfere with matters outside of this specified and special line of duty than any other officer of the church.

3d. To place the Repository under his jurisdiction would be its destruction; not because he would wish its cessation, but because he is pecuniarily unable to keep it in existence. He has now to struggle night and day to keep all ends in motion in his special field.

[illegible] 3.—Why is it so sectional in [illegible]?

Reply.—I scarcely know how to answer this interrogatory, because "Inquirer" does not define what he means by "sectional." Does he mean that it circulates in a certain defined district? or does he mean that it is partial? If the former, I deny the allegation; and the latter, I deny that also. The Repository is not confined to any one region. It circulates as far East as Massachusetts, and as far West as Iowa, and North as far as New York, and South as far as Virginia. If he means that it is partial, then its partiality consists in attending to its specified duties viz: extension of Religion, Literature, Science, and the Arts.

3d. If he means that the "Repository" does not circulate in his immediate household, it is [illegible] subscribe for it, and he will no longer regard us as "sectional."

Mr. Editor:—It strikes me, instead of these [illegible] attacks upon each other put forward to develop our strength, intelligence, and piety, [illegible] at war with each other, it would be wise in you and your correspondent, to use your influence to foster all efforts put forward by any portion of our church to do good. I wish none put forth crushed. The man who is so narrow-minded as to seek to destroy everything that does not chime in his peculiar plan of doing good, generally destroys himself. Selfishness finds its own reward. This is most strikingly exemplified in the case of John, who came to the blessed Saviour, and told him how he had forbid one who was not casting out devils just according to his idea of good order. He said: "Master, we saw one casting out devils in thy name, and we forbade him because he followed not with us." He expected applause, but the Saviour gave none such. He too well knew the animus which actuated him, and replied: "Forbid him not; for he that is not against us is for us." Much less approvingly did the Son of God speak to his beloved disciple than did our General Book Steward to Mr. [illegible]

By what authority have you, Rev. Sir, and your friends, directly and indirectly, in private and in public, aimed death blows at the existence of the "Repository."

This you may say, "I have never done yet," but the Repository may well say as a poet once [illegible]

In the immortal jewel of their souls.
[illegible]
But he that filches from me my good name,
Robs me of that which not enriches him,
[illegible]

We say that we violate no law of the African M. E. Church by publishing the "Repository;" and so long as we do this, we claim from you and your friends to be let alone. We ask, and all we ask, is to allow us to do all the good we can in our own way. You do what you conceive to be your duty, and we claim a right to be judges of what is ours. We are no enemies of the Book Concern, and the man who represents us thus is a base calumniator. The man who attempts to place us in an inimical position to the general interests of the Church of which we are members and ministers, is an accuser of his brethren—more; he is their enemy—and so he must be regarded. We are no enemy of the Recorder.

Very respectfully, yours,

JOHN M. BROWN,
One of the Editors of the Repository.

THE GOODNESS OF GOD.

BY DR. FISH.

Behold, too, the goodness of God in the changes of the seasons. How monotonous if we had the same climate the year round! What diversity comes from these changes! I do not know which season shows most of God, and should make us most thoughtful and thankful. When it is Spring and I feel its soft air, and behold the silent waking of torpid nature into life, and when the buds are bursting, and the trees are looking "as if angels had descended and wreathed them with the roses of heaven," then I think spring is the loveliest part of the year.

And when summer comes, and the earth is redundant with vegetation, and vociferous with life, and arrayed in her richest attire, then I say the summer shows most of a bounteous God. But then, when it changes into melancholy autumn, "magnificent in its decay," and the orchards are loaded with golden fruit, and the [illegible] the flower to the bee, and the butterfly, and the bird! How the birds enjoy the ripe strawberries and blackberries and cherries! How sweet the roots and the nuts to the lithe squirrels! How happy the hen, encircled by her [illegible] them. "My sweet bairns, give your mama or [illegible] mother's comfort!" "Blessed be thou, O Holy [illegible] sleep. And it is, too, her enriching time. For the snows are not merely for sleigh-rides. In falling, they bring back the escaped ammonia discharged into the atmosphere from decayed plants, and so fill the ground again with the natural food [illegible] A snow bank is a fertilizer. Snow is the poor man's manure. And besides, it is a warm quilt; it keeps many of the great root family from freezing. And then beyond the utility of winter, there is much to admire in it. How many can remember to have enjoyed immensely its long intervals of [illegible] ning, for pleasant excursions across the fields on the snow-crust, or along the well beaten road, beneath the intense lustre of the stars, and the limpid radiance of the moon; or the sitting down quietly around the blazing hearth stone at home. So that, beyond its usefulness, there is a charm in winter.

Each of the seasons, then, is lovely, and each is illustrative of the beneficence of the Preserver of men.

And the same is true of the succession of day and night. Each day [illegible] of the rising of the sun. Aurora has never once failed, during so many ages, to announce his approach; and he knoweth his going down. Thus does he enlighten both sides of the globe, and shed his rays [illegible] enough to exhaust the physical energies and call for repose; and then night comes, of sufficient length to recruit those energies. George Herbert sings of "dear night" as "the stop to busy fools," and as "cares check and curb." Think of the accelerating swiftness of care, and pleasure, and wickedness, going on without interruption. What would the mad and anxious world come to, if night did not put on the break, and fetch things to a stand-still?

God knows we want rest. And so, (to use the words of another,) "as a mother stills every [illegible] that her infant be not disturbed, [illegible] shuts out the light from its tender eyes, so God draws the curtains of darkness around us; so he makes all things to be hushed and still, that his great family may sleep in peace." And what a mercy that he gently shuts the eye of day, instead of suddenly shutting it; that he gently draws aside again the curtains of night in the morning, and slowly lets the light fall on the [illegible] Let us be thankful [illegible] for the [illegible] and [illegible] when [illegible] ending his course, we are not plunged in an instant into darkness; but that rather departing day climbs softly up a ladder, as a poet fancies, setting its red sandal [illegible] and then on tree, and then on chimney-top, and then on the tall elm, and then on church-spire, and then on hill-top, and then on cloud, thus going up from round to crimson round, into the high heavens.

Behold, also, the goodness of God in the endless forms of beauty which we meet. God might have made things to appear ugly and uncouth; but he hath made all things beautiful. Beautiful are the heavens above, clear and blue, and gemmed with stars, or black with awful majesty, or streaked with [illegible] Beautiful is the morning, when the glories of night are being dissolved into the glories of the dawn. Beautiful is evening, when the sun shining [illegible] are the [illegible] are the birds, and the flowers, and the [illegible] and the mosses, and the gushing fountains, and the fields of clover opening their blushing [illegible] soms to the bees, and the winter crystals wasting the pools, or sheeting the ground, or kissed upon the winter by the [illegible] night.

Everything is beautiful, and every thing is made beautiful by God:

"Those are thy glorious works, Parent of good,
Almighty! Thine this universal frame,
Thus wondrous fair."

Let us be thankful for this!

It is said of Linnæus, the great Swedish botanist, that when first seeing a splendid European plant, he fell on his knees and thanked God for thus beautifying the earth. How much beauty do we see around us every day, and yet for this how seldom are our hearts lifted in gratitude to Him who hath made all things lovely to be [illegible]!

Our senses thus [illegible] the inanimate world. And how much does it show of the goodness of God in little things. And [illegible]

II. The animate (but unintelligent) part of creation.

And here we are [illegible] profusion of living creatures. The waters teem with life. There goes leviathan, that maketh the ocean to boil like a pot; and there, in almost infinite variety, are the lesser forms of life, running down to the animalcule, so small [illegible] would not weigh a grain. [illegible] teems with life, and the dry land swarms with animals of every order, crawling, creeping, burrowing, boring, leaping, running. Out of our sight are living things. In the air we breathe, in the water we drink, in the food we eat, in the very acids, in the toughest flint, in the pulp of mellow fruit, leaves and organs of plants, in the bodies of animals, ay, and in our own bodies, are puny tenants—colonies of unseen inhabitants, too minute to be detected. Everywhere is life. Life cradles life. Nature at every pore is bursting with life, and every death is only a new birth.

What object could God have had in creating these innumerable ranks of sensitive existence, except that they might taste his bounty, and enjoy a happiness peculiar to their state? Because dead matter was incapable of delight, and because the eternal Sovereign would exercise his superabundant goodness, therefore hath he stocked the world, and worlds upon worlds, with ten thousand times ten thousands of living creatures, that his table might be filled with millions of guests, whose mouths and whose hearts he might every hour and every moment fill with food and gladness.

Nor has he failed of his end. How happy are all these his creatures! Enjoyment is certainly with them the rule, and suffering the rare exception. I recently looked through a microscope, upon a part of a drop of water, and there I counted some twenty or thirty animalcule, apparently as big as a large house-fly, frisking and flirting about as happy as they could be. And the great deep itself is but the magnificent dance-house of its gladsome inhabitants.

The winged inhabitants of the air, too, have a delightful existence. Have you never stood and admired the nimble and orderly flirtations of a pleasure-party of insects, at the rising or setting sun of a summer's day? What a striking comment upon the Divine beneficence, these myriads of happy insects on the wing; testifying by their sportive motions, their wanton mazes, and their gratuitous activity, the exultation which they feel! The birds, too, especially if it be morning, you find attesting their joy. I have somewhere seen published the following:

"A Concert will be given on Tuesday, May Twentieth, at half past four, A. M. Robin, Oriole, Thrush, and many other exquisite and justly celebrated musicians, will be among the performers. Price of admission, 'Early rising.'"

I am very sure the attendants would come away, believing the birds to be happy, and probably themselves happier for the sight.

And if, turning the eye from life on the wing, you look upon the smiling, blooming earth around, what signs of happiness in other forms of life! How fresh and grateful the herbage [illegible] How [illegible] the [illegible] was playing with a younger brother close to the door. Scared at the sight of the dragoons, the children rushed to tell their mother, who taking [illegible] goons to flee. They are slow to obey: he arises [illegible] his own pistol and fires the fatal shot. John Brown falls; his wife is a widow and his little children orphans; but undoubt the throne of the house of Stuart is safe and Graham of Claverhouse has vindicated his right to be regarded as "chivalrous."

These wild hills, so ravenous, boggy and steep, so often clad in mist and cloud, were well fitted to afford shelter from persecution; but I cannot help feeling astonished at the inexpressible cruelty, the persistent savagery that would [illegible] going to kill it, or sell it to the butchers." And I went on my way, thanking God that the calf did not hear that, nor know what it was coming to.

Moreover, how kind in God to care for every one of the millions upon millions of this great needy family of his; expending upon each one an equal care, so that the least insect, living [illegible] hour does not fail of his portion. And how kind to provide for all without their labor—for it is a just remark of Pierre, that [illegible] by the hand of Providence—without care, and almost without labor. And yet, again, how kind and wise to cause each one to subserve some useful purpose to man; making even the little flies and all the winged insects to act as scavengers, by taking up and carrying off the surplus effete matter in the vegetable creation; and all the little groundmice and earth-worms to act as nature's plowmen, or as sappers and miners, boring in all directions into the stubborn soil, thus rendering it pervious to air and rain and the roots of plants!

In this survey of the unintelligent creation, how much do we see of the goodness of God in [illegible] full of his goodness.

THE GRAVES OF THE MARTYRS IN AYRSHIRE

Did ever our readers read anything about the Scotch Covenanters? Differing though we do from them on some points, the following tribute to their memory will be read with no little interest:

Ayrshire is the land of Burns, but dearer still to me for being the land of Richard Cameron, and Alexander Peden, and John Brown, of Priesthill, and many more of earth's true nobility. A moral feeling, higher and holier than that with which you calmly contemplate the beautiful in nature, takes possession of your soul, as you tread the battle field of Airsmoss, or stand by the grave of the "Christian Carrier," at Priesthill, or of the Prophet of the Covenant, in the well peopled cemetery of old Cumnock.

[illegible] a town far up among the Highlands of Ayrshire, the coldest, bleakest, highest town in all Scotland. On every side the ground swells into hills of varying height and aspect—some hiding their barren summits in the morning mist, others green with waving wild grass, and dotted over with sheep. The Lugar, Greenock water, Irvine water, and Bonnie Doon, find their sources in these moors. A road, winding, steep, but hard and good, starts from Muirkirk away across the hills [illegible] road I start at four o'clock in the morning, to visit the scene of the tragedy so familiar to every reader of Scotch Church History, the murder of the peasant, John Brown, by the chivalrous Graham of Claverhouse; chivalrous—if we are to believe Professor Aytoun [illegible] barously cruel and reckless, if we let deeds speak!

Muirkirk sleeps under a mantle of morning mist, through which the fierce flames of the iron works gleam far and wide. Its three Presbyterian churches are seen, one on a hill, the others down in the vale. The town itself is old and crowded, its population being about 2000. We follow the road that winds its way among the hills, for about two miles, and then we turn off and take a by-road to the right, narrower and steeper than the road we have left. Up hill, down dale, over fords, through gates, away up we go for two miles more. Here we reach a shepherd's house, the one lonely dwelling within sight. We then strike out into a desolate, houseless, trackless moor, and after half an hour's wandering, we reach

JOHN BROWN'S MONUMENT.

There is first a flat stone covering the grave. This stone is enclosed by a wall five feet high. At the head of it the monument, painted white, stands about ten feet in height. It is simple, plain, humble-looking, well situated to commemorate the humble and plain dead. On the monument is the following inscription:

"This Monument was erected, and the adjoining grave of John Brown enclosed, by money collected at a Sermon preached here by Rev. John Milwaine, on August 28th, 1839, in commemoration of the Martyr."

On the flat stone in the following epitaph, evidently written by a stern old Covenanter, who paid greater regard to sentiment than to rhyme:

Here lyes the body of John Brown, Martyr who was murdered in this place by Graham of Claverhouse, for his testimony to the Covenant and work of Reformation, and because he durst not own the authority of the Bible destroying the same; who died the First day of May 1685,
and of his age 58.

"In death's cold bed the dusty part here lies
Of one who did the earth as dust despise;
[illegible]
Now he has got the garland of the martyr.
[illegible]
Rising now ever never to be cast down.
Only he owning Christ's supremacy,
Wickedly wronged by encroaching tyranny.
Nothing now more sweet he to good
Esteemed, nor dear for any truth nor blood."

Such then is the simple memorial that marks the resting place of the "dusty part" of the poor "Christian Carrier." There is no house, not even a shepherd's shealing, within sight. All is wild moorland, desolate and cold. The lapwing and the curlew fly around in flocks. Sheep nibble the grass by the side of the streams. It is as lonely as the sea. Not even a tree or bush appears within the horizon. The morning mists are rising and rolling away up the sky, and the sun comes out to cheer the solitude. A burn runs close by the grave, and at the distance of a few yards there are signs of the foundation of a small building—no doubt Brown's Cottage.

Think for a moment of the "chivalrous" Claverhouse coming away up these lonely hills to molest the simple pen-antry! Think of the "Bloody House" of Stuart sending forth its minions to shoot and hunt down shepherds and carriers in these wild moors! Is it a wonder that the house of Stuart has come to be a desolation and that the memory of the instruments of cruelty is held in abhorrence?

It was just six o'clock of a May morning nearly two hundred years ago—a misty morning like this—when John Brown, cutting peats up the brow of this hill, was seized by Claverhouse and his dragoons and driven down to this spot where [illegible] was playing with a younger brother close to the door. Scared at the sight of the dragoons, the children rushed to tell their mother, who taking [illegible] them. "My sweet bairns, give your mama or [illegible] mother's comfort!" "Blessed be thou, O Holy [illegible]

Ayrshire, beautiful in scenery, rich in poetic [illegible] especially rich in martyr memories, well rewards the pilgrims' toil. Musagiel [illegible] Myrtle, the sweet flowing streams of [illegible] the [illegible] heights of Priesthill, the [illegible] and [illegible] will combine to rouse the [illegible] most powerful emotions of the human soul. The rugged doggerel rhyme on the stone of the Covenanter will not be the less touching than the immortal strains of Robert Burns are echoing in your ears, and the gloomy caverns, the wild moors and the steep side of the misty hill will convey their burden of historic homilies not the less effectually that sunshine and calm are on all the vales and on the waving corn fields, and on the green meadows where the cattle herd.

August, 1862.

Presb. Witness, Halifax.

There is many a hiding place—many a spot round which tradition weaves its stories, in these hills; but let us retrace our steps—pass through Muirkirk, and four miles below it we come to a wide, level, barren moor, which is

AIRSMOSS.

Sadly memorable as the field where the brave, honest, hero-hearted RICHARD CAMERON [illegible] and a few of his persecuted compatriots lodged on the moor, and next day the bloodhounds of the tyrant swept down upon them, and Cameron died fighting. They cut off his head and hands, and flung his body into a hole here. Over that hole a tombstone was laid by pious friends, and within the last few [illegible] has been erected, which can be seen for a distance of more than a mile from the spot. Cameron was one of the most far-sighted men of his generation; he saw as by instinct what was right and what was wrong, and sooner would he die a hundred deaths then compromise with sin or error. He was not a profound thinker, or a skilful director of affairs." The Bible and the solemn League and Covenant, were his alpha and omega. "Let Christ reign over a free church and a pure and righteous nation" was [illegible] him in all his actions; and this principle led him to anticipate the Revolution of 1688 in 1680. It made a prophet and a martyr of him. His fall at Airsmoss was one important if not an essential step towards the Revolution settlement. He was still a young man when he fell a martyr to truth on this Moor.

Here my mind recurred naturally to what is one of the most touching and tender of the incidents of the persecution of the Covenanters. Cameron had been in battle—gone to his rest [illegible] a peaceful grave. Perhaps [illegible] weary footed chased from [illegible] with bursting heart beside this stone, and raising his eyes to heaven, prays, "O to be wi' Ritchie!"—well might the poet exclaim:—

"Oh! dreary, dreary was the lot of Scotland's true [illegible]
A famine-stricken remnant, wearing scarce the guise [illegible]
They burrowed, few and lonely, 'mid the chill, dank mountain cave—
For those who once had sheltered them were in their martyr graves."

And well might Peden sigh, "O to be wi' Ritchie!" But there was work for him yet to do, and he did it.

What have not Richard Cameron, and Renwick and Peden done for Scotland? Their work stands forth to the light of this day; and [illegible] Presbyterian churches approach to purity, and the civil community to peace and righteousness, the nearer are they to the ideal for which these men strove. The bulk of Presbyterians cheerfully acknowledge the debt; and something has been gained towards the realization of the hopes and [illegible] of these martyrs. It is interesting to mark that the dates of nearly all the monuments of the Covenanting Martyrs coincide with the great liberalizing struggle in Scotland, which resulted in the Disruption of 1843.

There is hardly a sublimer episode in history than this of the few scattered Covenanters in Scotland boldly and calmly flinging down the gauntlet to the House of Stuart, and inaugurating a Civil War many years before the Revolution. The flame kindled by Cameron and his associates was never extinguished till the Bloody and Treacherous House was hurled from the British throne and torn up, root and branch. Alone, despised, hunted on those moors, hung and quartered wherever seized, the remnant held up the Blue Banner, till at last it waved in triumph over William, Prince of Orange.

PEDEN'S GRAVE.

After musing awhile by the brink of "Sweet Afton," I walked five miles to Old Cumnock, to visit the spot where the fiery Prophet of the Covenant lies. The story of his marvellous escapes from the jaws of the lion of persecution, and the peaceful close of his career, peaceful though amid storms and blood,—is familiar to all who take an interest in the Covenanting heroes. His friends laid him in a decent grave, not far from the humble cot in which he died; but Claverhouse and his party dug up the body after it had lain many days in the grave and buried it here out of contempt—here under the gallows tree where murderers were laid.

It is now one of the loveliest spots in Scotland. The Lugar and the Glisnock unite their waters and flow through the adjacent village. The village itself nestles in a valley sheltered from all winds, and surrounded with leafy groves of ornamental trees. The hills from which the Afton and the Nith take their rise, line the southern and western horizon; and other hills numerous to me but beautiful, and richly repaying the culturing hand, come closely down on the north and east. The town is quaint and old, most peaceful, warm and sunny, just such a resting place as tollworn, weather-beaten, weary wanderers like Peden might choose for the home of final repose. The pilgrim's ashes would sleep softly, sweetly here, if anywhere.

High above all the houses of the town rises this hill on whose crest is the grave of Peden. It is just beside the gate of the burying-ground, and the people of Old Scotland are not ashamed to lay their dead close to the dust of the once outlawed man of God. On the contrary, the nearer his ashes, the greater the honor, although the gallows once stood here.

The following inscription is on his grave:—

"Here lies Mr. Alexander Peden, faithful Minister of the Gospel, sometime in Glenluce, who departed this mortal life on the 26th January 1686: and was raised after six weeks out of the Grave; and buried here out of contempt. Memento morie."

Close beside his grave is another with the following epitaph:—

"Here . lyes . David . Don . and . Simon . Paterson . who . was . shot . in . this . place . by . a . party . of . Highlanders . for . their . adherence . to . the . Word . of . God . and . the . Covenanted . work . of . Reformation . 1685.

Another still with the following:—

"Here lies the corpse of Thomas Richard, who was shot by Colonel James Douglas, for his adherence to the covenanted work of Reformation, on the 5th of April, 1685.

[illegible]
Adhered to Scotland's Reformation;
And to our sacred covenant and laws;
Establishing the same which was the cause
In time of Prayer I was by Douglas shot.

Among the strong and prickly hawthorn tree [illegible] Who seeks the graves of the persecutors of Sharp, Claverhouse or Mackenzie? Who pays their memory any other tribute than the rebuke of malediction? Yet perchance that lonely rock at the gallows' [illegible] though rent over and over has enemies of mankind.

Ayrshire, beautiful in scenery, rich in poetic [illegible] especially rich in martyr memories, well rewards the pilgrims' toil. Musagiel [illegible] Myrtle, the sweet flowing streams of [illegible] the [illegible] heights of Priesthill, the [illegible] and [illegible] will combine to rouse the [illegible] most powerful emotions of the human soul. The rugged doggerel rhyme on the stone of the Covenanter will not be the less touching than the immortal strains of Robert Burns are echoing in your ears, and the gloomy caverns, the wild moors and the steep side of the misty hill will convey their burden of historic homilies not the less effectually that sunshine and calm are on all the vales and on the waving corn fields, and on the green meadows where the cattle herd.

August, 1862.

Presb. Witness, Halifax.

SECESSIONISM IN MISSOURI

St. Louis, Sept 18th, 1862

[illegible] doubt on the subject of slavery. In the admission [illegible] all powerful and gainful system, or else never had [illegible]

The Kansas outrages first revealed the existence of an anti-slavery feeling in St. Louis, and developed it to an unexpected extent. By virtue of its intimate connection with the South, it consted all the old issues of banks, franchise, tariff, and in a few years and slavery [illegible] vailed in our local political contests. Chiefly by the aid of the Germans [illegible] ing out of the rebellion, the cause of freedom was making a slow but sure progress when the rebellion began. Nearly all the state officers from the Governor down were conspirators. The Legislature was infamously disloyal. The perjured villains hoped to carry the State into secession by a convention called for that purpose, and to force St. Louis along with them.

Greatly to the surprise and astonishment of the traitors, the convention, though largely disloyal, and with few exceptions only conditionally loyal, refused to pass an ordinance of secession. Failing here, an effort partially successful was made to carry St. Louis at the principal election in April, 1861. A mayor of secession sympathies was chosen, but the common council was loyal by a clear majority. Startling events followed in quick and rapid succession. The Legislature grasped at the treasury of the State to provide means for the inevitable war it projected against the people who had chosen it to office, it passed an act organizing the militia, and vesting new and despotic powers in the Governor, and then disbanded to raise forces for the rebellion.

Jackson, under color of this law, ordered the militia to assemble in camps of instruction, and especially organized Camp Jackson in St Louis, and armed it with the evident purpose of seizing the arsenal and controlling the city. His plans were thwarted by the prompt action of General Lyon, Camp Jackson was taken and St. Louis saved to the government. At that period one half of the inhabitants of this city were disloyal. At least two thirds of American-born citizens were disloyal. The Germans, with few exceptions, were loyal. The Irish papists, with very few exceptions, were rancorously disloyal, but none were as bitter as men, and especially women, of American birth and parentage. Here as elsewhere, this rebellion was not the calm and terrible uprising of an oppressed people who could no longer endure evils and outrages more cruel than the horrors of war, but the reckless outburst of mean spite, ignorant prejudice, selfish pride and intolerant vanity, characterized above all and everywhere, both among men and women by a malignant, murderous, diabolical frenzy for blood. The language of would-be-ladies, refined, polite, educated ladies, was absolutely fiendish, and it will hereafter be a wonder that it so seldom provoked retaliation. The spirit of the rebellion here is sufficient evidence that its horrible atrocities elsewhere have not been exaggerated in the narrative. It was capable of any crime, however monstrous. Success of the rebellion here, or anywhere where there was a large party of unflinchingly loyal men to be exterminated, would have been the signal for a fearful carnage.

Some one has remarked that we are not only in the midst of a civil war, but in the midst of a great revolution, and certainly that is true of this city. Slowly at first but with gradually accelerated progress, this war has revolutionized public sentiment. The reproach of abolition is gone, swallowed up in the vociferous plaudits of vast multitudes upon the utterance of the most radical abolitionism. The old radical abolitionism of the Covenanter that was condemned by the multitude and by the learned alike as intolerant and unchristian, grows conservative before the stern demand of the new abolitionism of to-day for the instant demolition of slavery. The most able and uncompromising denouncer of slavery, who carries with him the voice of the people in a tumult of applause, is one who not two years since was the apologist of slavery.

The lines that divide society are being drawn more strictly every day. Loyal men remember the insults and threats of the secessionists in the day of their success, and are not now inclined to live on terms of friendship with those who besides their rebellion betrayed such animosity against them. The Governor of the State was unquestionably chosen as a compromise candidate, and has given little encouragement to hearty unquestioning loyalty. A few weeks ago, under a great pressure, he uttered some very bold opinions and sentiments and received much applause; but recently he has appointed to command the State militia such men as Col. Knapp, of known strong pro-slavery and of strongly suspected secession sympathies. He seems wedded to slavery.

The compulsory enrollment of the militia has disclosed the astonishing fact that a very large majority of the Irish residents of St. Louis have not exercised any political privileges whatever, at least so they swear, so as to obtain exemption from militia service. Another interesting fact comes out incidentally, that the loud-mouthed and unblushing denouncers of English oppression and injustice are the first to seek British protection, and the men who are all just about to free Ireland and attack England are the most meek and obedient subjects Victoria possesses, and have been faithful to their allegiance for years, in spite of all the blandishments of American democracy. Of course we believe it in

St. Louis

BRIEF REMARKS

This day is a day of rebuke. After a few splendid victories gained by the Federal arms in the West and Southwest, God seems no more to go forth with our armies. The "spirit of counsel and of might" seems to be withholden from our Generals. Or jealousies and rivalries have prevented them from acting in concert. Is there not a cause? Yes: for some time we have been talking and writing so much about slavery as the crying sin of the South, that we have been in danger of forgetting that with us, even with us in the North, there are sins against the Lord our God, however righteous our cause.

O the Sabbath-breaking, the profane swearing, the covetousness, the corruption and bribery reported to, to carry elections and for other political purposes, the practical Atheism which leads hundreds of our politicians to say, "Who is the Lord that we should obey his voice? As politicians, we know not the Lord, and will have nothing to do with him."

I am glad to notice some happy change of tone in the religious press of the North, and that earnest efforts are made to lead our people to see that our sins have procured these things for us.

There is just now real cause of alarm for our country, but not of despondency. God may turn our recent calamities into blessings, by teaching us that we should not rely on great hosts, or on mighty [illegible] save by few as well as by many.

Recently, hundreds of our choice young men have left their homes, and not a few of them their families, to defend their country and its valuable institutions. Many of them have been trained up in the way of truth and holiness, and are still walking in it; and we have confidence in the President and his constitutional advisers, that they will do their utmost to prevent them from being [illegible] less or incompetent commanders, or by military men who [illegible] tal.

Since the above was written the prospect has begun to brighten.

We [illegible] an anti-slavery paper. After noticing how greatly the hopes which were indulged a few months ago have been disappointed, the writer proceeds:

"What does it all mean? What is the import of the providence which has permitted these reverses? Is it that God has abandoned our cause, [illegible] to be [illegible] with the breath of destruction? We cannot believe it. Have we not exulted over the fact, that in all this war the South only has been the battle-ground—the South only has suffered severely from the desolations of the contest? Have we not said, [illegible] pression, and shielding the Free States because they have no slavery? Instead of that deep humiliation which ought to cover all our faces with [illegible] for our sin of oppression—have we not been lifted up with pride and ready to say, "We thank thee [illegible] the sins of others, we should always take care not to imbibe the spirit of the Pharisee

ENGLISH INTEMPERANCE.

The International Temperance Convention held daily meetings in London during the first week of September, when some facts were brought out which are by no means creditable to the morality of the people of Great Britain, and instead of sitting as self-constituted censors on our good or evil works, it is very plain that there is a field at their own door, more than enough to enlist all their sympathy and to exhaust all their charity. Sir W Trevyllian, the Chairman, mentioned that in a district in the east of London, only three-quarters of a mile square, there were 57 gin-palaces, 200 houses of bad repute, and only seven bakers, five butchers, and five butchers' shops It is also found, he said, that the liquor traffic flourishes most in the poorest districts of London and other large towns. A Quaker gentleman, Mr. Back house, declared that there was one drinking establishment in Great Britain for every 200 of the community. In Sunderland, with a population of 70,000, there were 490 places for the sale of drink, or about one to every 160 inhabitants, men, women, and children

Bad as the present state of affairs is, there seems to be some improvement upon the past, showing that some good men have got their eyes opened and are moving in the right direction. The Government has also reduced the duty on light French wines, and increased those upon spirits, the result of which has been to increase the use of wine and decrease correspondingly the use of spirits, and at the same time increase the revenues of the Government from this source $25,000 000 more last year than the preceding

The following are the official returns of spirits manufactured for home consumption for each of the last three years:

1859, - - -	23,878,088	gallons.
1860, - - -	21,404, 088	"
1861, - - -	19,698,792	"

Let us add to these figures the quantities of foreign spirits entered for consumption, to wit:

1859, - - -	4,911,819	gallons.
1860, - - -	5,154,018	"
1861, - - -	5,153 897	"

It thus appears that there has been a diminution of consumption of 2,005,319 gallons in 1861 as compared with 1860, and of 2,132,401 as compared with 1859. During the first six months of the present year the ratio of decrease has been still greater. The total quantity entered for consumption of foreign or British spirits during the half year was 11,306,982 gallons. Should the proportion remain the same during the succeeding six months, the consumption of spirits this year will be reduced to 2,244,723 gallons, as compared with 1861, making altogether a consumption of about six millions and a half less than in 1861 The indirect effect of the temperance agitation is here seen in some measure, but far more is this owing to the constant elevation of sentiment, and of the true social standard of hospitality among the middle and upper classes. The same is beginning to tell on the lower, but scarcely on the lowest class, although even there exceptions are to be found

These figures, however, show but a part of what the inhabitants of Great Britain drink, for malt liquor is the greatest beverage of the masses Beer, ale, porter, brown stout, in all forms of dark and pale, bitter and sweet, strong and mild, are constantly in use every where and apparently by all. Hundreds of millions of gallons of these are consumed every year, and their sweetest and mildest will quickly intoxicate those who are not habitual drinkers. Lager beer, so general with us, is used but very little, and almost exclusively by Germans. The corpulent bodies, the red faces, and the coarse bloated features so generally met with in all the towns and cities, and largely in the pulpits and among the females of the British Isles, bear unequivocal testimony to the fact that whiskey and ale are freely and habitually drunk by the great majority of the subjects of Queen Victoria

A reformation is beginning, and the duty of total abstinence is being agitated and strongly urged by many good and able men. But the work is going on very slowly, for the opposition is immense. Several millions of persons are directly or indirectly interested in the making and the selling of ale and spirits, and loath to lose their gain. The nobility, without an exception known to us, use liquor personally, or have it daily upon their tables. All fashionable society patronize drinking, and plus stamping the custom with the brand of fashion, every householder who [illegible] regard for public opinion, although an abstainer himself, feels compelled to have liquors upon his table and offer them to his guests. The masses love them for their own sakes. Then, the church has never said aught against the use of these beverages, and even clergymen and high church dignitaries use them freely and openly themselves, so that there is no church conscience against the custom. It is but just to say that the upper classes almost exclusively use ale and spirits only in connexion with their meals, leaving the social drinking to light wines. This, however, makes reformation but the harder, for it must war against a daily custom of good society, which is regarded as not only innocent, but is stoutly defended upon dietetic grounds. They drink at dinner, they say, to promote digestion; and when we regard the amount of roast beef and plum-pudding consumed at a meal, there may be some excuse for using a digester to guard against the danger of apoplexy. This only shows that intemperance in drinking is connected, to a certain extent, with intemperance in eating, that the roots of the evil strike deep into the customs, prejudices, and appetites of all classes of the people

We wish the advocates of total abstinence all desirable success, and hope they may not grow weary in well doing, but they must not be too sanguine of immediate and great success, for the habits of the people must be reformed as well as [illegible] and [illegible] first Britain is becomes Archbishop of Armagh. This great prize has fallen to the lot of a man who is likely to fit it well. He is somewhat too old, perhaps, to be very effective [illegible] is in the full year of his age, a period when the springs of life begin to flow with less force.

Dr Rowland Williams has published a [illegible] tion to him fiercely. He entitles his work "Pro[illegible] cution for the Word," and ranks himself in the same category as the martyrs of former ages!

Mr H. Seymour, in the House of Commons, more than once tried to get from Government a censure upon the Bishop of Oxford for his injunction to the clergy to call on the people for their prayers for a restoration of peace in this country. But he signally failed. He has since obtained an opinion from a couple of [illegible] it does the Bishop of Oxford.—Church Journal.

An Impressed Bishop—A [illegible] United States army at Helena, in Arkansas, writes from that place:

[illegible] Bishop [illegible] ville, Ala. I had not known it till they told me."

[illegible] likely to give to our Government just cause for imprisonment than Bishop Lay.—Church Journal.

Dashiell—The venerable Rev. Dr. Dashiell, who left Shelbyville, Tenn., on account of his anti-slavery sentiments, supplied the pulpit of Rev. T. Cuyler's congregation, in Brooklyn, during the absence of the pastor in Europe. He is greatly grieved at having several sons in the rebel army.

A Union Democrat, B. F. Harding, was chosen U. S. Senator from Oregon on the 14th, after thirty ballots.

Dr. Breckinridge.—We have just received information, from what we deem an authentic source, that the Rev. Dr. R. J. Breckinridge has fallen into the hands of the rebels. No particulars of the arrest have yet been received.—Presbyterian.

The Wrong Gasparin.—It appears that the Count de Gasparin, who died lately in France, was not Count Agenor de Gasparin, but his father, Count Adrien de Gasparin, former Minister under Louis Philippe. The [illegible] "The Uprising of a Great People" is happily still living, aged only 52, and we trust that he may live to see all his generous hopes and predictions concerning his "great people" fully realized. The march of events is following the line he has marked out, and the proclamation of the President, liberating the slaves of rebels, is one of the great steps that he has been looking for. We rejoice that he lives to hear the news he has been expecting.

Domestic Items.

The Meeting of the Governors of the loyal States.—Their interview with the President Washington, Sept 26.—The Governors of the [illegible] loyal States arrived here this morning [illegible] towns, namely: Massachusetts, Rhode Island, Pennsylvania, Virginia, Ohio, Illinois, Wisconsin, Iowa, Michigan, New Hampshire, and Indiana—the last named State being represented by Col Ross.

Between 12 and 1 o'clock they had an interview of an official character with the President, and presented an address, expressing

First. A cordial personal and official respect for the President.

Second. A determination, under all circumstances, to support and maintain his constitutional authority, and the Governors therein speaking for themselves and the people of their respective States.

Third. Pledging to him their aid in all measures calculated to bring the war to an early termination, which should be vigorously prosecuted to ultimate victory, unless all the rebels shall return to their constitutional duty and obedience.

Fourth. Congratulating the President upon his emancipation proclamation, believing that it will be productive of good as a measure of justice and sound policy, and Fifth. Referring to the merits of the soldiers who have fought our battles.

The Governors were courteously and kindly received, and their suggestions listened to with close attention.

Views of the Cabinet on the President's Proclamation - [illegible] now pretty well ascertained. Mr. Chase was the leader in urging the emancipation policy; Mr. Stanton and Mr. Welles [illegible] with less warmth. Mr. Seward and Mr Blair were very decided against it. Caleb B. Smith was somewhat less so, and Judge Bates perhaps still less. The majority, however, were against the proclamation The President, as usual, acted on his own responsibility.

Shooting of General Nelson.—LOUISVILLE, Sept 30.—There are many conflicting accounts of the shooting of Gen. Nelson by Gen. Davis. About a week ago Nelson placed Davis in command of the Home Guards of this city. At night, Davis reported to Nelson the number of men working in the intrenchments and enrolled for service. Nelson cursed him for not having more. Davis replied that he was a general officer, and demanded the treatment of a gentleman. Nelson, in an [illegible] ordered him from the room. Davis left the Planters' House, and [illegible] to eject him from the city.

This morning Gov Morton and Gen. Nelson were standing near the desk of the Galt House, when Gen. Davis approached and requested Gov. Morton to wit[illegible] between himself and Nelson. He demanded of Nelson an apology for the treatment he had received at Louisville. Nelson [illegible] ask him for an apology. Davis then demanded an apology. Nelson denounced him and slapped him in the face. Davis stepped back, clenched his fist, and again demanded an apology. Nelson slapped him in the face and again denounced him as a coward. Davis then turned away, procured a pistol from a friend, and followed Nelson, who was going up stairs. Davis told Nelson to defend himself, and immediately fired, the ball penetrating the left breast.

Despatch from General McClellan.—WASHINGTON, Sept. 30.—The following report of the victories of South Mountain and Antietam has been forwarded to the head quarters of the army by General McClellan:

NEAR SHARPSBURG, Sept 20, 1 30 P M.—Major-General Halleck, General-in-Chief United States Army:—General [illegible] reports the following as some of the results of the battles of South Mountain and Antietam

At South Mountain our loss was—

K[illegible]	430
W[illegible]	1,806
Missing,	76
Total,	2,325

At Antietam [illegible]

Killed,	2,010
W[illegible]	9,416
M[illegible]	1,043
Total,	13,469

Loss in the two battles, 15,794

The Rebels, in the two battles, as near as can be ascertained from the number of their dead found upon the field, and from other data, will not fall short of the following estimate:—

Major Davis, Assistant Inspector-General, who superintended the burial of the dead, reports 4,724 rebel dead buried upon the field at Antietam by our troops Previous to this, however, the Rebels had [illegible] probably at least, five hundred.

[illegible] Medical Director [illegible] drove them, from the commencement of the action, and as a much greater number of their dead were seen on the field than of our own men, it is not unreasonable to suppose that their loss was greater than ours. Estimating [illegible] killed in the two battles would be four thousand. According to the ratio of our own killed and wounded, this would make their loss, in wounded, 18,742.

As nearly as can be ascertained at this time, the number of prisoners taken by our troops in the two battles, will, at the lowest estimate, amount to five thousand. The full returns will no doubt show a larger [illegible] It may be safely concluded, therefore, that the Rebel [illegible] their campaign in Maryland.

From the time our troops first encountered the enemy in Maryland until he was driven back into Virginia, [illegible] 6 pieces of artillery, 30 caissons, and 1 signal flag

We have not lost a single gun or color. On the battle-field of Antietam 14,000 small arms were collected, besides the large number carried off by citizens [illegible] other unarmed men arriving immediately after the [illegible]

[illegible] Medical Director [illegible] Major General Commanding

Rev. Rogers [illegible] the number of sick and wounded received in the Richmond hospitals since their organization, as 10,538. Of these 6,771 have been furloughed, 2,311 have died, and 7,003 have died At Chimbo [illegible] Hospital, received 24,893, deaths, 2,993 Winter Hospital, received 21,871, deaths, 1,271. Whole number [illegible] deaths, 11,170. Here, as in Richmond, the smallest number of deaths have occurred in the hospitals superintended by ladies.

Died.

Died, on Saturday, September 27th, PETER CARON, aged 115 years.

To be buried from his late residence, Brown Street, Frankford, at 3 o'clock, on Wednesday afternoon.

[illegible] years

One of the aged, and to be one hundred and five years old, died in Frankford on the 27th ultimo. We [illegible] thing we do know—he has entered into a life that has [illegible]

The Social, Civil, and Statistical Association of The Colored People of Pennsylvania open a subscription list to aid the freed men at Port Royal and other points where they may be located, and respectfully ask the co-operation of the colored citizens and others in this city, or elsewhere, in money or clothing

[illegible] will be duly received will be [illegible] ledged, with the name of the donor, in the Recorder, where a constant record will be kept.

Subscriptions may be sent to Jacob C. White, at the office of the Lebanon Cemetery, 711 Lombard Street, and to Rev. E. Weaver, 619 Pine Street

PAID

Statistical Society,	$50 00
Clayton Miller,	[illegible]
William Still,	[illegible]
[illegible] Alger,	[illegible]
Henry Minturn,	[illegible]
Catherine Johnson,	2 00
Vasti Locke,	[illegible]
Wm. Warricks,	[illegible]
Harriet Shorter,	1 00
Sarah S. Hawkins,	1 00
Rev. Jonathan C. Gibbs,	1 00
James P. Clay,	1 00
Benjamin F Hill,	[illegible]
S M S.,	2 00
[illegible]	1 00
F. J. Dreer,	[illegible]

It affords us pleasure to acknowledge the receipt [illegible] contributed to the S. C. and Statistical Association, to be applied as intended W[illegible]

Cor. Sec of S, C and Statistical Association of the United People of Color

ADVERTISEMENTS.

MRS MARTHA COLLINS

730 Russell Street, above Fitzwater.

Begs leave to inform her friends and the public generally, that she has opened an ENGLISH and CLASSICAL School for Boys and Girls, to whom she will pay special attention to teaching the [illegible] Reading, Writing and Arithmetic, and to [illegible] upon the most reasonable and accommodating terms. She does not hesitate to say that she will be able to please all who may give her a trial.

PERRY & FITZGERALD'S

PROCESS FOR MAKING LIGHT NUTRITIOUS, AND UNADULTERATED BREAD, WITHOUT FERMENTATION

The new process of breadmaking patented by Perry & Fitzgerald, removes all the obstacles which have hitherto rendered it impossible to manufacture perfectly pure, sweet, and nutritious bread. The entire process is performed by mechanical means, and is eminently cleanly

The [illegible] is [illegible] to flour in a closed vessel and the application of pure carbonic gas, under pressure, by which the [illegible] is [illegible] into pores. By batches, in the brief space of fifteen or twenty [illegible] The "charge" is usually 200 pounds, and each machine comprehends the operations, in all its details, from the putting in of the flour to the discharging of the dough, in from twenty five to forty minutes.

The Inventors [illegible] Scientific objections to the ordinary preparation of bread, by establishing a system of wholesale manufacture but subject to the vicissitudes and evils of fermentation, but exact and certain in its results.—L. Beeman, by the substitution of mechanical for animal labor, and in the superior value of the article produced. It promises large profits upon the capital employed. It requires such small amount of capital, as well as the profits accruing to the proprietor, gives adequate security against [illegible] of the evils of a monopoly, because it leaves the manufacture of all human [illegible] should the inventors prove prejudicial.

The application of pure carbonic acid gas, under pressure, to a mechanically kneaded dough mass, as in the invention of Perry & Fitzgerald, did not occur to Dr Dyer, though he seems to have had a clear foreshadowing of the importance of the artificial use of the [illegible] resulting bread will be somewhat spongy (could a light article," he continues, "be produced in this way) then, as the sugar would remain undecomposed, the bread would be as much the sweeter and [illegible]

What, to Dr Dyer, was certainly a clearly comprehended chemical truth, has been practically developed by the ingenuity of Perry & Fitzgerald, and now [illegible]

ITS SUPERIORITY.—The superiority of unfermented bread is by no means new. Dr Cullen, who wrote more than seventy years ago, says:—

"In Scotland, also [illegible] of the lower class of people, and that in the greater part of the country, [illegible] unfermented bread, and by experience [illegible] that I have practised nothing [illegible] this will have [illegible] with [illegible] To avoid [illegible] leaven of fermentation

Also, more recently, Dr. [illegible] the "Food of Animals," after alluding to the fact referred to above by Dr. Cullen, and other kindred facts, observes:—

"Such, then, being sufficient evidence in favor of the wholesomeness of unfermented bread, it becomes important to discover in what respects it differs from fermented bread. The [illegible] process of fermentation may be entirely [illegible] the separation of the particles of which the [illegible] so [illegible] by the mere [illegible] Digestion. But, in this [illegible] ment of the flour, it becomes a matter of interest to ascertain the amount of the loss sustained in the process."

The result of Professor Thompson's experiments showed a difference in favor of unfermented bread of nearly seven per cent.; [illegible] Together with [illegible] of fermentation [illegible] by the process of fermentation, was driven into the air and lost.

We come now to a more particular consideration of the superiority of the Bread made without fermentation, or the use of chemical agents, over the Bread made by these processes Although, from what has already been said, the superiority appears in most vivid contrast, yet the public will be better satisfied to have the points stated specifically. So it only needs that the advantages secured by the method [illegible] in order to its universal introduction in the manufacture of Bread.

I. Its CLEANLINESS.—Instead of the dough being mixed by the naked hands or feet of the bread, from the moulding of the flour to the completion of the baking, is not, and scarcely can be, touched by any one. "One desideratum obtained in the manufacture," says Dr. Willard Parker, "is to entire cleanliness." Says Dr. Waterbury: "The process is not only purely scientific, but preeminently cleanly."

II. Its PRESERVATION OF ALL THE NUTRIENT PROPERTIES OF THE FLOUR.—As the raising of the dough is by the mechanical introduction of pure carbonic [illegible] gas, no [illegible] remains, it takes a perfect [illegible] or spongy texture. All the constituents of the flour remain as they are [illegible] while the process of raising bread by fermentation [illegible] a portion of the [illegible] of them, as has been already shown.

III. Its UNIFORM CHARACTER.—Bread made by the New Process is uniformly light, sweet, and nutritious The conditions being simple and not liable to variation, no failure can occur to always producing bread of the same quality. It retains its moisture much longer than fermented bread, and may be eaten warm with impunity. The [illegible] The London Times:—

"The "charge" is usually 200 pounds, and each machine comprehends the operations, in all its details, from the putting in of the flour to the discharging of the dough, in from twenty five to forty minutes.

"An Investigation [illegible] Scientific objections to the ordinary preparation of bread, by establishing a system of wholesale manufacture but subject to the vicissitudes and evils of fermentation, but exact and certain in its results.—L. Beeman, by the substitution of mechanical for animal labor, and in the superior value of the article produced. It promises large profits upon the capital employed. It requires such small amount of capital, as well as the profits accruing to the proprietor, gives adequate security against [illegible] of the evils of a monopoly, because it leaves the manufacture of all human [illegible] should the inventors prove prejudicial.

"The application of pure carbonic acid gas, under pressure, to a mechanically kneaded dough mass, as in the invention of Perry & Fitzgerald, did not occur to Dr Dyer, though he seems to have had a clear foreshadowing of the importance of the artificial use of the [illegible] resulting bread will be somewhat spongy (could a light article," he continues, "be produced in this way) then, as the sugar would remain undecomposed, the bread would be as much the sweeter and [illegible]

"

PEACE OF PARADISE.

When [illegible] deep
[illegible]
When from [illegible] perfect order sprang,
[illegible]
Music spread o'er the universe its stream,
[illegible]
Around the bowers of happiness it hung,
[illegible]
And [illegible] one song,
[illegible]
The song it sang was the sweet song of Peace.

In Eden's grove, upon the primeval air,
It whisper'd love to the primeval pair;
Moved [illegible] trees,
And softly mingled with the [illegible]
The setting sun shed splendor on the scene,
And, rising, joy'd to hail its gentle again.
[illegible]
Where all was calm, and happy, and serene,
And as a man trod 'mid the opening flowers,
Bliss added wings to swiftly passing hours.

ST. LUKE'S HOSPITAL.

On a Spring morning, after an exhilarating drive in Central Park, we were set down at the entrance of what might be called the "House Beautiful"—a stately building, with spacious halls and stair-cases, and a multitude of commodious, airy rooms. It is St. Luke's Hospital—the hospital of the "Beloved Physician"—on the Fifth Avenue, near Fifty-fourth street. The wide lawn is rich with a luxuriant verdure nowhere else to be seen, and here and there, peeping up from off their soft green pillows, are the sunny-eyed dandelions.

But golden blossoms have not undisputed possession of the fresh beauty of this lawn. There are a dozen little children beside.

But they are not rushing merrily about, tossing the flowers at each other in boisterous glee, making a mimic snow-fall of golden flakes, and shouting with the mad joy which the "new wines of the year" inspires. Two or three move languidly backward and forward with a swaying, uncertain motion; one fairly runs, but, alas! if it were not for those strong crutches under his little thin arms, he could not even walk; yet with their aid he accomplishes wonders of locomotion, to the mingled admiration and envy of his companions. The others sit or lie upon the grass wrapped in coats or tippets, as if it were January, instead of May, and watch with sad, wondering eyes the movements of the happier few. For these are all sick children, and they have come here to be made well again if skill and tenderest care can avail.

The ward which we entered was very long and high, and was brightened with many windows, through which the sunshine could come in. But its glory was a line of beautiful little snow-drifts, on either side, through its entire length. Snow, drifts, I say, since that was my first thought; but there was nothing so cold and cheerless as even the most exquisite snow-work must be in this lovely room. My snow-drifts proved to be little dainty white beds, and in many of them lay little children.

Before I introduce you to any of the occupants of these fairy beds, I must tell you more about their pleasant surroundings.

Of course, everything is as clean and pure as possible; but I cannot divine how the good people who take care of these sick children contrive to conceal, as they do, every sign of a sick room. I did not catch a glimpse of a single vial, or bandage, or medicine-glass. There were little tables by every bed, but they had not upon them even that half-filled glass of bubbly water, which seems incident to even the "best regulated" sick rooms. Instead of this, there were a few bright, fresh flowers in a tasteful vase; a bird's cage, with its garrulous little singer, telling its pleasant history to any one who would listen; or some gayly-colored picture-book, or pretty toy, or dainty doll—all within the range of the little invalid's eye and hand.

Then the walls of this beautiful hall were hung with charming pictures, such as a child would care to look at again and again. And chief among these was a copy of the well-known picture, more significant to me than any rosy Cherub of Raphael or Dead Christ of Rubens. It represents the Holy Child bearing on his baby shoulder the cross, held fast with dimpled hands; at his feet the crown of thorns and the blood-stained nails; and in his great pathetic eyes, awful shadows of Gethsemane and Calvary. The picture borrowed new beauty and significance from the scenes about it. The Holy Child seemed to lift up a standard in the midst of these little cross-bearers, and to be leading and sustaining them upward and onward, through patient and brave endurance to victory. May their baby feet keep close to his, and never miss his foot-prints!

As we passed down through the long hall, we began to distinguish the faces of the occupants of the little white beds, and they were quick to discover who had entered with us.

"Doctor! doctor!" cried a dozen eager little voices.

Now, you may suppose that these sick children shrieked "Doctor!" in fear, and passed on the alarm-cry from bed to bed that all might be prepared for his dreaded coming. What a mistake! This was not one of those doctors—nursery Ogres—with a gruff, raspy way of speaking: "Humph! sick, are you? See your tongue! quick, now!" Nor of that other kind, even more exasperating to childish sensibilities, the noisy-quiet species, who make great ado about walking softly, and yet ingeniously contrive to squeeze every bit of noise there is in their huge boots out at the toes. No, this doctor neither glowered at them savagely, as if he had half a mind to eat them up for daring to fall sick; nor went mincing and sighing about them with a yard-long visage, as if he thought they could never get well, and he did not mean to encourage them to try. All these poor little children seemed to love their young doctor with all their hearts. I could see it in the eyes of those too weak to speak their thoughts, who followed him, as he went from bed to bed, with loving looks, eager for their turn to come to share his cheery presence. As for those whose tongues were in working order—dear me, how they ran!

"Doctor, doctor, I want to see you this minute!"

"No, doctor; come to my bed!"

"Doctor, is that your light waggin?" asked little Peter, whose post was fortunately on the side of the room toward the street, and who having been taking observations from the window near his bed—his meagre little body propped up by his sharp elbows and the pillows—had seen the doctor's carriage drive up to the gate.

"Couldn't you give a poor pusson a ride?" piped a weak little voice from the opposite bed.

And many a "poor pusson" is indebted to the kind surgeon for a ride. Sometimes he takes them on the street in what little Peter called his "light waggin;" but oftener (for few of the sick children are able to endure this) he pushes them through the long corridors in a little house-carriage constructed for the purpose, the gift of little children.

Was there ever another such doctor? Even those children whom he has been forced to hurt most cruelly, in the curative process, seemed to love him best of all; for he and they understood each other perfectly, and they knew the pain would be as light and brief as possible, and that such pain is, indeed, only love called by a different name.

Some of the inmates of this children's ward had such healthful happy faces, that we wondered why they were not out among the dandelions at play. But we wondered no longer when the rope with its heavy cannon-ball, which hung over the foot of their beds, was pointed out to us. That pulley, with its heavy weight, was tugging at their little crooked limbs to make them straight and of equal length! When we saw this our hearts ached, and we could not understand how the little martyrs could have such laughing faces. But how good it is that they can be sheltered in this beautiful home safe from griping hunger and pinching cold—with happy little children about them; amidst pleasant sights and sounds, and with tender nurses and skilful surgical care—instead of lying neglected, and perhaps ill-treated, in loveless, comfortless poverty! We hardly know whether to laugh or cry, as we went the round of the children's wards. We did both, however, when little pale-faced Luke pulled us by the ribbons and whispered, eagerly,

"Couldn't you bring me a doll [illegible] and [illegible] Lord?

Poor little Luke was one of those who would have to wear a cannon-ball for many long months to come; but I suppose the little captive's fancy was haunted with memories and visions, and wide blue skies and pine winds for play-fellows, and he longed to hold some tangible representation of [illegible]

The doctor had one rival in the affections of the children when I saw them, and that was [illegible] baby! The little girl stopped pulling her long beard, and the boys stopped wrestling with his curly, pony little arms as the little pugilists flourished, when the baby appeared.

"Please bring her to my bed!"

"Lay her by me, please!"

"I want her on my pillow!"

"Give her here!"

These were the cries on all sides, and the nurse did not know where to deposit her charge first. No words can adequately set forth the perfections of that baby. It must have been an incarnation of the triplet spirit of Job the Patient, Moses the Meek, and Griselda the long-suffering. Suffocated by kisses, garroted by hugs, riddled by tickling fingers, it yet bore a dauntless front through all, and even smiled blandly upon its ruthless assailants. Its virtues seemed to us rather caoutchouc than human; but we were assured by the highest authority that it was of the same species with that for which the little transcendentalist prayed, when, disgusted with saw-dust shams, she cried:

"Lord! give me a baby! a real meat baby!"

Sometimes the conversation between these little beds is pitiful to hear. A little girl, who had been for a long time an inmate of the hospital, had recovered, and announced, with justifiable delight,

"I've got all well! and my mother's coming to take me away to-morrow!"

Whereupon her little sick neighbor responded, in a still more triumphant tone, "Ho! I haven't got any mother; and I am glad of it, for I shan't have to go away—never!"

Could anything be sadder than this—to give thanks that one has no mother? This reminded me of a scene of my school-days. I encountered a group of poor children in riotous dispute. As I passed them a boy shouted out, tauntingly, to a girl in the rival faction: "You need not feel so smart! I saw your father dead-drunk last night!"

The girl's pose was magnificent, as she turned upon the contemptible young bully, and said, slowly and almost impressively: "I thank your boner! I haven't got no father! My father's dead!"

All the sick wards of this hospital whose patron-saint is "the Beloved Physician," open into a central chapel, where prayers are read every night by one whose heart is in this noble charity, and to whom we owe some of the choicest hymns of the Church. How sweet and cheering his voice must be, as it goes softly on from bed, where lie the suffering men, women and children, for whom he prays! I think the many hearts which he has lightened and comforted could hardly say "Amen," when he sings, "I would not live alway, I ask not to stay," however eagerly they may appropriate to themselves the soothing tenderness and brave hope of the hymn. No, they cannot let him go yet!

The crowning grace of the beautiful chapel is an illuminated manuscript of the gospels, each page with its perfect text, and its own peculiar ornament of exquisite device, and all this magic wrought by the loving skill of a woman's hand! Indeed, the presence and ministrations of refined womanhood invest this House Beautiful with an indescribable charm. I dare not say what I would of the sisterhood whose voluntary service makes it what it is. No austere vow paralyzes heart and will; but, constrained simply by love to our Lord, they tenderly and faithfully wait on their ministry. Native grace, the finest culture and the heartiest devotion, are laid on the altar of sacrifice. But is it sacrifice? Were delicate hands, and cultivated powers of heart and head, more worthily or happily employed in the luxurious ease of home, or the brilliant rounds of society, than now, in alleviating a sick child's sufferings, or speaking peace to some poor soul tossed on the billows of death? I doubt not that to many an idler in Vanity Fair, with hungry heart and listless hands, the soft garb of the sisterhood would prove the garment of Peace, and the easy yoke of Christian service, rest to the soul.

The great city has no such fascinations for me as this very children's ward at St. Luke's; and although it is more than two years since I saw them, yet my heart still yearns after Susie, with her great brown eyes and pathetic face; after sharp little Luke, and comical little Peter, and their companions. These may have passed away, but other little faces lie on those pillows to be brightened by loving care: and more than this, for every child there sheltered a thousand little ones, with distorted limbs and suffering bodies, lie without, in the bleak, cruel world; and for some of these a word from you would provide the blessed novelty of a "sweet home!"

Harper's Magazine.

OUT-DOOR EXERCISE OF ENGLISH WOMEN.

The women of England are blessed with one pre-eminent advantage as regards exercise out of doors, which to us must be always wanting, and that is the character of their climate. Say as much as you will against the English climate, it could hardly be better for walking, and that is something, all must admit. There is nothing, comparatively, of summer heat or winter cold. Eighty in the shade is reckoned a very warm day in ordinary seasons. You will remember such a day a good while. The nights are few in which a blanket is not required for comfort. As to winter, England can hardly lay claim to anything to which we should accord the name. Snow is a rarity, and seldom remains on the ground for two days together. The ice in the London parks is so thin at best, that the skaters are constantly breaking through, and being taken out half dead. Gardening operations are suspended only for a very short time, if at all. Cabbages are left in the garden through the winter, and taken as they are wanted. The crocus anemone, ranunculus and polyanthus, are out in all their beauty in January, and peas are up and potatoes are planted by the middle of February. Mud is but little known, because there are excellent gravel sidewalks all over England. What is there to prevent the women of England from walking, then, if they want to, on almost any day from New Year's to Christmas? It is true they have gloomy clouds, and damp chilly winds, and rain in abundance, but these are hardly allowed to stand in the way. Equipped from head to foot, according to the weather, they sally forth in almost all weathers, and in almost all circumstances. The young wife never shuts herself up at home, nor stays away from church, as long as she is well enough to go abroad.

A deeply interesting illustration of the good health of English women is the fact that deaths among young wives and mothers are, comparatively, very infrequent. Such cases are far more numerous among ourselves. We remember to have seen an English lady amazed and appalled in wandering over a New England cemetery, and reading on the headstones the many inscriptions which tell this exceedingly sad and mournful tale. To her it seemed as if some very fatal pestilence must have visited that particular locality. Yet it was simply the tale which all our places of burial tell, and to which no one among us takes heed. An Englishman who should have committed his third wife to the grave at forty years of age, would be regarded with feelings approaching to superstition, and another woman would hesitate to assume the thrice vacant place. We knew one such case, and only one, in a period of fourteen years.

An English woman is a pedestrian almost from her birth, being taken out for an airing when she is scarcely a week old, passing several hours of every fine day out-of-doors during the first year of her existence, and walking thousands of miles before she has numbered her teens. Would it not be strange if she had not a full form, and a rosy cheek, and a merry, laughing eye? An English girl who would not rejoice in a walk of four or five miles, would be thought a poor feeble [illegible]

Post & Review

NEW ROYAL MAUSOLEUM AT WINDSOR.

The mausoleum now in course of erection in the royal grounds at Frogmore, and which is intended to receive the remains of the late Prince Consort, is situated about 100 yards from that of the late Duchess of Kent. A more secluded spot could not have been selected. The surrounding scenery is by many different species of flowering shrubs and trees of a large growth, while close by is a beautiful specimen of the deciduous cypress, the dark shapes of which will contrast well with the stones of the tomb. The building consists of a central cell with four transepts branching north, south, east, and west, with a porch adjoining the western transept. The whole floor is supported by brick vaults of massive work, which at the same time form chambers, with loopholes for the purposes of ventilation and the prevention of damp rising to the superstructure. They are entered by a small flight of stone steps. The central cell will be lighted by three light semicircular windows in the clerestory, which will be externally decorated with Aberdeen granite shafts and heads. The copper roof of the central cell (which is octagonal on plan) rises from the wall heads to the apex with a flat pitch in the manner of an Italian campanile, and will be surmounted with a gilt cross. Under this roof will be the sarcophagus for the remains of the Prince Consort. The reclining statue of the Prince will be executed by Baron Marochetti. The transepts are square on plan, are lighted by windows similar to those in the clerestory of the central cell, and will have pedimented copper roofs. The porch, which will be entered by a handsome flight of stone steps, will be lighted with circular-headed three light windows, with shafts and heads of Guernsey granite, and the front will be supported by monolithic granite columns, similar to those already finished in the mausoleum of the Duchess of Kent. The whole of the exterior will be decorated with Aberdeen and Guernsey granite, and with red Mansfield and various other stones. The interior will be different-colored marbles and stones. The building is in the Italian style, reminding one of the campanili at Pisa. As the erection stands upon a base of concrete, six feet in thickness, there is very little probability that the symmetry of the mausoleum will be marred by settlements. The erection, which is 70 feet in length and the same in height, will be adorned by several statues. The foundation stone, which was laid by her Majesty the Queen, bears the following inscription:—"The foundation stone of this building, erected by Queen Victoria in pious remembrance of her great and good husband, was laid by her on the 15th day of March, A. D., 1862. "Blessed are they that sleep in the Lord."'

THE DISTRESS IN LANCASHIRE

The subjoined extract is from a letter written by the wife of a Dissenting minister in Lancashire:—

I will just tell you the tales of some of my neighbors who come to me for help. One says, —Missus, have you got an old petticoat of any kind you could give me, for really I'm well nigh starved? My old man has got a day or two's work now, but we are so bad off that we are almost naked; Jonathan's shirt a' scarce got a bit in't of what it was the first." Another comes (a widow woman,) "Missus, an you got anything you could possonse? My daughter makes three days a week at factory, an' there's on'y us two. I get two shillings from the parish, but it's hard work to live upon that and get a bit of soap and coals—and look at this poor gown! 'tis the only one I've got, and nothing hardly underneath. I had a better gown, but our Mary's obliged to wear it to her work. She can't go without one." Another came to me on Saturday, and in a whisper, lest any one should hear—poor thing,—she said, "Maw, could you give me a few pence to buy a little coal? We have not had any fire for two days, and the weather is so cold. There is only my husband and me. We have buried our last child when she was sixteen; and now we are old and have not any one to work for us. I am truly sorry to ask you, but indeed I did not know where to go, nor who to ask; I went to the Relief Fund on Thursday, and they gave me one shilling, because there are so many large families on the list; but what is that for two; and we nearly clemmed (starved, or famished.") Now could I resist such an appeal? Well so it is day after day, and then my husband comes home,—"I have seen a poor woman to day, with a little baby three weeks old—oh dear! the poor mother looks so weak! She says she has not had anything but a little tea and gruel since her baby was born. You had better get a bit of meat, and make her some broth." Then I have to send for a pound and a half of mutton, and some Scotch barley, and stew her up something. It all needs a little fund to go to; but this somehow comes out of my own scrapings, and is given to the worthy ones, who are not exactly poor saints. Yours is to be devoted to them entirely, and will be only dispensed in very necessitous cases, for we are in anticipation of times being much worse, instead of better, and the mills stopping altogether. I fear I shall weary you, but one more case I must tell. Not two hundred yards from our door lives a comparatively young widow. She has four children; the eldest, thirteen, is still an infant in the cradle, and one other is badly afflicted. It is a pitiable case; and the poor woman, unable to leave home to do a hand's turn of work to get a mouthful of bread for these hungry ones! How they are to be fed and clothed in these hard times, God only knows! I believe every decent person about have given every article of clothing they could spare to one and another. Mine all go the very minute I can spare them."

SCENES IN CEYLON.

Dr. Johnson reached Ceylon on Nov. 6th, 1860, landing at Point-de-Galle at eight in the morning. The effeminate appearance of the natives, their beardless faces, the rings in their ears, and their petticoat-like wrappers at first gave him the impression that all whom he saw were females. After visiting the Wesleyan mission, examining the boys in the mission school, where their knowledge of divine things, as well as their general intelligence, was most gratifying, the doctor and his party went next day to Madura, skirting the coast in a southerly direction. From his description of the journey we quote the following passage:—

"There were European officials in loose clothing, covering themselves with cotton umbrellas; there were Singhalese natives clothed as I have described; and the women, some of them prematurely old and very ugly, in white jackets; there were Moors and Musselmans in turbans and yellow coverings, carrying japanned paper umbrellas; there were Malabars and Malays, and Buddhist priests with shaven heads and saffron robes; and mingled with these were English soldiers in cotton uniforms, and native chiefs in gay, embroidered dresses, and jewelled ornaments. On quitting the town we skirted along the side of the harbor, passed by the crowded market places, and entered a splendid avenue of tall cocoa-nut trees, over-arching the road, and rendering it pleasantly cool. The natives, like living bronzes, and in their pink, yellow, red, blue, and white costumes, thronged the road, and blending with the green foliage, formed a rich and pleasing picture. We saw many long snakes on the way and several chameleons. Sometimes the guana—a large green lizard, three or four feet long, a preadamite-looking reptile, but little afraid of man—ran across our way, or dragged up its length on the banks at the roadside. There were beautiful openings of the sea-coast at intervals, with masses of snow-white coral strewing the shore. As we advanced, innumerable insects of various kinds thronged the air, and filled it with a perpetual hum. Among these were large, gorgeous butterflies, and huge dragon flies of bright metallic lustre; while ever and anon would come, booming on their short wings, lustrous beetles of rainbow hues. The dark natives were turning their cocoa-nut mills under shady trees, at the sides of the road, or working in the open "paddies" or rice-fields. Long, slender cranes were standing in pools, and buffaloes, like huge black pigs, were luxuriating in deep, soft mud. Gay flowers, of bright yellow and deep crimson, on trees, and not on mere bushes, lined the way, and a vast variety of orchids climbed the boles of the palms, and entwined themselves gracefully around them. Trees with roots above the ground, seeming formed of writhing snakes, were seen at intervals, as also the drooping banyan tree, with its long, rope-like roots descending from its branches. We passed a gigantic figure of Buddha, carved out of the rock by the wayside, and reached Belligam in the forenoon, when the heat had become very oppressive, and when the hum of insects had ceased, and all living things had retired for rest into the shade. At Belligam there is a "rest house," provided by the government for travellers, as there are at certain distances on all the high roads of Ceylon. In these "rest houses" needful refreshment can be had at appointed prices. While the ladies reclined under the shade, and breakfast was being prepared, Mr. Scott and I went forth to see the village, our chapel and school in it, and some Buddhist temples.

Guernsey, with Notes by the Way.

DANIEL WEBSTER IN HIS COFFIN.

We find the following account of the private funeral of Col. Fletcher Webster, and of the inspection of his illustrious father's remains, in this week's issue of the Plymouth Rock:

"The tomb at Marshfield once again opens wide its portals to receive the last of the sons of the Great Expounder.'

The funeral of Col. Fletcher Webster took place in Marshfield on Wednesday, September 10th. The body was brought down from Boston in a richly caparisoned hearse, with four horses, by way of Hingham and South Shore. Several coaches conveyed his Boston friends from the Kingston depot, while a large assemblage gathered from the neighbouring towns. Rev. Mr. Aldeo, the village pastor, conducted the services, the body resting on his father's writing table in the library, according to his dying request. A large procession followed his body to the tomb, where the coffin was deposited with the family whom a nation mourns.

By request of Peter Harvey, Esq., and others, the oaken box containing the great statesman's coffin was opened, and the metallic cover of the glass removed. How were the feelings of those personal friends stirred within them to find those lineaments and features which so man ever looked upon to forget, retaining the same color and impress—natural as when ten years ago they gave him up to the grave.

The eyes were more sunken, but the heavy shadows beneath the brows were always there in life. Even in death, and for a decade the captive of a grave, that kingly presence inspired the same deep reverence and speechless awe as when in the living temple of his matchless mind."

WELL DONE WEST POINT.

Let the miserable demagogues who seek to cover their treachery to their country under the demagogue's cry against West Point, turn to the battle field at Frederick and read the glorious record—Hooker, Franklin, Fitz John Porter, Sedgwick, Keyes, Burnside, Reno, McClellan, Hallock! All soldiers from the nation's school! All heroes and veterans in their country's service; all leaders of a gallant army, in which, having confidence in their generals, the new regiments equalled the old, and have routed and defeated the rebel army.

GENERAL BANKS' ACHIEVEMENT.

Gen. Banks' retreat from Bristow's Station without the loss of a man, is regarded by military men as a masterpiece of strategy. He was left behind by Pope to destroy the stores on the railway, and to disable the road itself. He burned one hundred and forty-seven car loads of goods, worth two millions of dollars, after having told his soldiers to help themselves to what they wanted, which they did with a will. Old rags were doffed and new suits were donned in a hurry, without due regard to the arm of the service the clothes were made for. It was not surprising, therefore, that the division appeared to be composed of cavalry, artillery, and infantry, indiscriminately. The boys didn't care for the color of the stripes, however, so that they had new suits and were comfortable. It is said that the attempt to attain uniformity by tearing off the yellow and red braids, did not improve their general appearance in the least.

THE ART OF CATCHING HORSES.

A correspondent of the Valley Farmer truly remarks that there are few things more aggravating than to be in a hurry to go to some place, and have great trouble to catch a horse. I have sometimes made the assertion that a horse which I raise will never be hard to catch, unless some one else spoils him. The way I manage is to keep them gentle from colts, handling them as often as convenient. When young horses are running to grass, give them salt occasionally, and let them fondle about you, making as little show as possible of trying to get hold of them. There is nothing surer to spoil a horse forever than running as if trying to head him in, and yelling at him authoritatively, or scolding; he can see, just as well as you know, that he is out of your reach. To put on the cap sheaf, whip him severely for causing trouble, and, my word for it, the next time you want to catch him he "will not listen to the voice of your charming, charm you never so wisely." Horses learn a great deal by signs. In beginning to teach them to be caught, go toward them on the near side, slowly and cautiously, making no demonstration at all. If the animal begins to walk off, stop, and whistle, or otherwise manifest indifference, until he becomes quiet again, then approach as before. When you are so close as to be confident that he will not escape you, speak kindly, and hold up one hand, ready to touch him on the withers, and thence pass it along the neck until you can get hold of his head, but do not seize him with a grab, as this tends to excite fear afterward. By practising this reserve, using the sign, namely, holding up the hand when you are a little farther away each time, a horse may be taught to stop and be caught, even when in considerable glee, (playing,) simply by holding up the hand and using some familiar phrase, such as whoa, boy, &c. By way of caution, however, watch his actions and intentions closely during his tutoring, and if at any time or from any cause you see that he is going to run, do not by any means say anything or hold up your hand, as the sign given and disobeyed a few times, will almost inevitably prevent your making anything out of it in future.

INDIFFERENCE TO DEATH DURING BATTLE.

A soldier, who was in all the battles before Richmond, remarks that "it is astonishing how indifferent to danger a man becomes in action, after being in it a short time. While supporting the battery, some of our men laid down on the ground and slept soundly, utterly regardless of the shells that were bursting around them. If I had not seen this, I certainly never would have believed it."

THE CAT AND THE PUPPIES

A little black spaniel had five puppies, which were considered too many for her to bring up. As, however, the breed was much in request, the mistress of the house was unwilling that any of them should be destroyed, and asked the cook whether she thought it would be possible to bring some of them up by hand before the kitchen fire. The cook replied that the cat had that day kittened, and that, perhaps, two of the puppies might be substituted. The cat made no objection, took to them kindly, and gradually all the kittens were taken away, and the cat nursed the two puppies only. Now, the first curious fact was, that the two puppies nursed by the cat were in a fortnight as active, forward, and playful as kittens would have been: they had the use of their legs, barked, and gambolled about; while the other three, nursed by the mother, were whining and rolling about like fat slugs. The cat gave hers her tail to play with, and they were always in motion; they soon ate meat, and long before the others they were fit to be removed. When they were taken away, the cat became inconsolable. She prowled about the house, and on the second day of tribulation fell in with her other puppies. "Oh!" says Puss, putting up her back, "have you, who have stolen my children?" "No," replied the spaniel, with a snarl, "they are my own flesh and blood." "That won't do," said the cat; "I'll take my oath before any justice of the peace that you have my two puppies." Thereupon issue was joined; that is to say, there was a desperate combat, which ended in the defeat of the spaniel, and in the cat walking off proudly with one of the puppies, which she took to her own bed. Having deposited this one, she returned, fought again, gained another victory, and redeemed another puppy. Now, it is very singular that she should have only taken two, the exact number she had been deprived of.

SCRAPS

An Irishman being asked at breakfast how he came by "that black eye," said "he slept on his fist."

What is that which by adding something to it will become smaller, but if you add nothing will grow larger?—A hole in a stocking.

He is a first-rate collector who can, upon all occasions, collect his wits.

"The ugliest trades," said Jerrold, "have their moments of pleasure. Now if I were a gravedigger, or even a hangman, there are some people I could work for with a great deal of enjoyment."

Some one blamed Dr. Marah for changing his mind. "Well," said he, "that is the difference between a man and a Jackass; the Jackass can't change his mind and the man can—it's a human privilege."

The young lady who burst into tears has been put together again, and is now wearing hoops to prevent the recurrence of the accident.

"Caught in her own net," as the man said when he saw one of the fair sex hitched in her crinoline.

We are told to have hope and trust, but what's a poor fellow to do when he can no longer get trust?

A girl recently stole a pair of gloves, giving as a reason that she only wished to keep her hand in.

Old Dr. Strong, of Hartford, whose name is still a praise in the churches, had an unfortunate habit of saying amusing things when he meant it not so—as when he was presiding in a meeting of ministers, and wishing to call on one of them to come forward and offer prayer, he said:

"Brother Colton,
Of Heaven,
Will you step this way,
And pray?"

To which Mr. Colton immediately answered, without intending to perpetrate anything of the same sort:

"My dear brother Strong,
You do very wrong,
To be making a rhyme,
At such a solemn time."

And then Dr. Strong added:

"I'm very sorry to see
That you're just like me!"

The good men would not, for the world, have made jests on such an occasion; but they could plead the same excuse for their rhymes that the boy did for whistling in school: "I didn't whistle, sir; it whistled itself!"

Two lawyers in Lowell, returning from court the other day, one said to the other—"I've a notion to join Rev. Mr. ——'s church; been debating the matter for some time. What do you think of it?" "Wouldn't do it," said the other. "Well, why?" "Because it could do no possible good, while it would be a very great injury to the church."

Among the Sabbath School children of a certain church was a poor little fellow. He couldn't tell the number of the house in which he lived, and was charged when he next came to school to bring it. The next time he appeared, he was asked if he had brought the number. "No, sir," said he, "it is nailed on the door so tight, that I couldn't get it off."

An incorrigible wag, who lent a minister a horse which ran away and threw his clerical rider, thought he should have some credit for his aid in spreading the gospel.

A PETRIFIED CAT.

While workmen were engaged in pulling down a portion of the wall of the Assembly Rooms building, now undergoing extensive alterations they found imbedded in it the body of a cat, so imbued with the calcareous substance of the wall that it is completely petrified. It is complete in all its parts, even to the claws and whiskers. It is evident that it could not have found its way into the wall by accident, but would appear to have been deliberately built in from superstitious or mischievous motives by some Greenock mason nearly fifty years ago.—Greenock Telegraph.

PHOTO ZINCOGRAPHY.

More than once we have suggested the reproduction of rare old books—such as "Shak-peare's Sonnets"—by the new process of photo-zincography. By this process, which Sir Henry James has applied to a reproduction of "Domesday Book," every beauty, every flaw in the type, every peculiarity of punctuation or division in the arrangement of letters, is preserved. How important such trifles may become, has been recently shown by M. Philarete Chasles, in his letter on the publication of "Shakespeare's Sonnets." The idea has been taken up by Mr. Lovell Reeve, who is about to issue a fac simile of the first edition of the "Sonnets," taken by this new process from the famous copy in the Bridgewater Collection. This fac-simile we have now before us, and we cannot imagine a more perfect or more interesting present to a book-collector, or even to a reader of Shakespeare. The dedication of the Sonnet will enable every one to judge of the value of M. Philarete Chasles' discovery. Lord Ellesmere deserves every credit for allowing this fac simile to be made. Mr. Reeve, we are glad to say, proposes to issue other important books in the same style. "Much Ado About Nothing" is already in hand.

Family Circle.

TO MY SPIRIT SISTER

[illegible] to me than sweet [illegible]
And cherub-like, my sister; that the glance
Of thy meek eye was like the morning light
When first it wakes, and that thy lute-like voice
Spake sweetest melody.

I never saw thee.
Never read the [illegible]
That flitted, spirit-like, across thy mind,
And painted on each theme in thy pensive eye.
[illegible]
But they who saw and loved thee oft have told
Me [illegible]
And [illegible]
To him that would have told a brother's love
To her who never knew her brother's sport.

I've wander'd to the little mound of earth
Which marks thy resting place, and cull'd the flowers
[illegible]
Them in my mother's hair a rustic wreath,
Rec[illegible]
Alone in all my walks, communing with
My heart and address. In the silent hour
Of night when all was hush'd and [illegible]
My little couch held not a slumberer,
But I beguiled my tedious wakefulness
In converse with a spirit-form, whose beauty
Was not of earth, but heaven. When with my tasks
I've pausèd on the page a cherub face
I call'd my sister's. And so vividly
[illegible]
[illegible]
That [illegible]
Thy younger brother. Words of thrilling love
Breathed by his lips did never reach thy ear,
But thou didst shed the fragrance of thy love
Around the family-hearth, a summer day.
When He who gave, retook the tender flower,
[illegible]

COALS OF FIRE ON THE HEAD.

Joe's small feet clattered vigorously down to the little cave where his boat was hidden. But as he neared the place, an exclamation of surprise escaped him, for there were signs of some intruder, and the big stone before the cave had been rolled away. Hastily drawing forth his treasure, he burst into loud cries of dismay, for there was the beautiful little boat, which Cousin Herbert had given him, with its gay sails split to a hundred shreds, and a large hole bored in the bottom.

Joe stood for a moment motionless with grief and surprise; then, with a face as red as a peony, he burst forth—"I know who did it—the mean scamp? It was Fritz Brown; and he was mad because I didn't ask him to come to the launch. But I'll pay him for this caper," said little Joe through his set teeth, and hastily pushing back the ruined boat, he hurried a little farther down the road, and fastening a piece of string across the footpath, a few inches from the ground, he carefully hid himself in the bushes.

Presently a step was heard, and Joe eagerly peeped out. How provoking! instead of Frits it was cousin Herbert, the very last person he cared to see, and hastily unfastening his string, Joe tried to lie very quiet, but it was all in vain, for Cousin Herbert's sharp eyes caught a curious moving in the bushes, and, brushing them right and left, he soon came upon little Joe. "How's this?" cried he, looking straight into the boy's blazing face; but Joe answered not a word. "You're not ashamed to tell me what you were doing."

"No, I'm not," said little Joe, sturdily, after a short pause; "I'll just tell you the whole story;" and out it came, down to the closing threat, "and I mean to make Frits smart for it!"

"What do you mean to do?"

"Why, you see, Frits carries a basket of eggs to market every morning, and I mean to trip him over this string and smash 'em all."

Now Joe knew well enough that he was not showing the right spirit, and muttered to himself, "Now for a good scolding;" but to his great surprise, Cousin Herbert said quietly—

"Well, I think Frits does need some punishment; but this string is an old trick. I can tell you something better than that."

"What?" cried Joe, eagerly.

"How would you like to put a few coals of fire on his head?"

"What, and burn him?" said Joe, doubtfully. Cousin Herbert nodded with a queer smile. Joe clapped his hands. "Now, that's just the thing, Cousin Herbert. You see his hair is so thick he wouldn't get burned much before he'd have time to shake 'em off; but I'd just like to see him jump once. Now tell me how to do it, quick!"

"If thine enemy be hungry, give him bread to eat; and if he be thirsty, give him water to drink: For thou shalt heap coals of fire upon his head, and the Lord shall reward thee," said cousin Herbert, gravely; "and I think that's the best kind of punishment little Frits could have."

Joe's face lengthened terribly. "Now I do say, Cousin Herbert, that's a real take-in. That's just no punishment at all."

"Try it once," said Cousin Herbert. "Treat Frits kindly, and I'm certain he will feel so ashamed and unhappy that he would far rather have you kick or beat him."

Joe was not really such a bad boy at heart, but he was now in a very ill temper, and he said sullenly—"But you've told me a story, Cousin Herbert. You said this kind of coals would burn, and they can't at all."

"You're mistaken about that," said his cousin, cheerily. "I've known such coals to burn up a great amount of rubbish—malice, envy, ill-feeling, revenge, and I don't know how much more—and then leave some very cold hearts feeling as warm and pleasant as possible."

Joe drew a long sigh. "Well, tell me a good coal to put on Frits's head and I'll see about it."

"You know," said Cousin Herbert, smiling, "that Frits is very poor, and can seldom buy himself a book, although he is extravagantly fond of reading, but you have quite a library. Now suppose—ah! well, I won't suppose anything about it. I'll just leave you to think over the matter, and find your own coal; and be sure and kindle it with love, for no other fire burns so brightly and so long;" and with a cheery whistle Cousin Herbert sprang over the fence and was gone.

Before Joe had time to collect his thoughts, he saw Frits coming down the lane, carrying a basket of eggs in one hand and a pail of milk in the other.

For one minute the thought crossed Joe's mind, "What a grand smash it would have been if Frits had fallen over the string," and then again he blushed to his eyes, and was glad enough that the string was safe in his pocket.

Frits started and looked very uncomfortable when he first caught sight of Joe, but the boy began abruptly, "Frits, do you have much time to read now?"

"Sometimes," said Frits, "when I've driven the cows home, and done all my chores. I have a little piece of daylight left; but the trouble is, I've read everything I could get hold of."

"How would you like to take my new book of travels?"

Frits's eyes danced. "Oh, may I, may I? I'd be so careful of it."

"Yes," answered Joe, "and perhaps I've some others you'd like to read. And Frits," he added, a little shyly, "I would ask you to come and help mail my boat to-day, but some one has torn up the sails and made a great hole in the bottom. Who do you suppose did it?"

Frits's head dropped upon his breast; but after a moment he looked up with a great effort and said: "I did it, Joe; but I can't begin to tell you how sorry I am. You didn't know I was so mean, when you promised me the books?"

"Well, I rather thought you did it," said Joe, slowly.

"And yet you didn't"—Frits couldn't get any farther, for his cheeks were in a perfect blaze, and he rushed off without another word.

"Cousin Herbert was right," said Joe to himself; "that coal does burn; and I know Frits would rather I had smashed every egg in his basket than offered to lend him that book. But I feel fine;" and little Joe took three more somersaults, and went home with a light heart, and a grand appetite for breakfast.

When the captain and crew of the little vessel met at the appointed hour, they found Frits there before them, eagerly trying to repair the injuries, and as soon as he saw Joe he hurried to present him with a beautiful little flag which he had bought for the boat with part of his egg-money that very morning. The boat was repaired, and made a grand trip, and everything turned out as Cousin Herbert had said; for Joe's heart was so warm and full of kind thoughts that he never was more happy in all his life.—Helps over Hard Places.

A house full of children composes as powerful a group of motives as ever moved a heart or hand, and the secret of many a struggle and triumph in the world's battle may be found throned in its mother's lap at home, or done up in a little bundle of white flannel.

An Irish stationer, after advertising a variety of articles, gives the following nota bene: "To regular customers I sell wafers gratis."

SAYING PRAYERS

To say my prayers is not to pray,
Unless I mean the things I say.
Unless I think to whom I speak,
And with my heart his favor seek.

In prayer we speak to God above,
[illegible]
We seek for pardon for our sin,
And grace to make us pure within.

My infant lips were early taught
To say "Our Father," as I ought;
And every morn, and every night,
To use my daily prayer is right.

But O, if I am found to smile,
Or play or look at all like [illegible]
Or think vain thoughts, the Lord will see
[illegible]

There is no flock, however well attended,
But one dead lamb is there:
[illegible]
There is no [illegible]

LAZY STEPHEN.

Books were distributed, scholars commenced their studies, and Grace took no more notice of Stephen Wright, but perceived that he occupied himself in catching flies and pulling off their wings, and in tormenting scholars who sat near him. Two little boys complained that he had stuck pins in their boots, and was constantly pricking them; another complained that he stuck pins in the benches; all kinds of tricks were played by him; and when he was tired he laid his head down upon the desk and went sound asleep.

Grace proceeded hopefully with the rest; a few sullen spirits at first refused obedience, but when they

THE CHRISTIAN RECORDER.

Published by the African Methodist Episcopal Church in the United States, for the Dissemination of Religion, Morality, Literature and Science.

Rev. Elisha Weaver, Editor. PHILADELPHIA, OCTOBER 11, 1862. Vol. II. -No. 41.—New Series.—Whole No. 92.

THE CHRISTIAN RECORDER

is published every Saturday on behalf of the

AFRICAN METHODIST EPISCOPAL CHURCH,

BY

REV. ELISHA WEAVER,

General Book Steward,

No 619 Pine Street, Philadelphia.

Notice.—All letters and matters pertaining to the Book Concern or to subscribers, sale of papers, and all moneys belonging to Book Concern or for paper, must be directed to Rev Elisha Weaver, Box No. 336, Philadelphia; and all matters sent by express, and in our city must be directed to E. Weaver, No. 619 Pine St.

All articles or matter for the Christian Recorder, must be directed to E. Weaver, Box No. 336, Philadelphia.

TERMS.

Two Dollars a year, payable in advance. Single copies, Five cents.

ADVERTISEMENTS.

We solicit Advertisements of all descriptions suitable for a Religious newspaper which will be published as follows:—

Cards or Advertisements, limited for one year provided they do not exceed eight lines ten dollars, paper included or, eight dollars without the paper,—six months, for six dollars, paper included,—three months, four dollars,—one month, $1.50, paper in each case included.

CORRESPONDING EDITORS OF CHRISTIAN RECORDER.

Rev. J. P. CAMPBELL, Rev. A. W. WAYMAN,
" J. M WILLIAMS, " E T WILLIAMS,
" O. H. GRAHAM, " C. BURCH,
Rev. L. ROSS.

Poetry.

THOU ART NEAR, O LORD!

Thou art near, O Father! on life's troubled sea,
How sweet and sustaining this thought is to me.
As an anchor, my surely-tossed spirit it keeps,
When temptation's wild blast like a hurricane sweeps;
For though perilous oftimes my transit appears,
Thy presence sufficeth to banish my fears;
Not all the rough billows my bark can o'erwhelm,
While Omnipotent wisdom and love guide the helm.

Thou art near, O my Father! The friends that have smiled
On the days that are past, and their sorrows beguiled,
Are now far away from the home which they blessed.
Some the Saviour has called to the mansion of rest;
Some amidst the confusion of life and its cares,
Rarely think of the heart that once echoed to theirs;
And others regard me with glances that chill,
But unchanged and unchanging thou lovest me still.

Thou art near, O my Father, how clear and how bright
Ought those actions to be, which are full in thy sight;
Then help me with child-like affection, each day,
To study thy will and thy precepts obey.
O nerve me for conflict with self and with sin,
And teach me the way steady conquests to win:
And when wearied with failure, hope seems to decline,
O point to the crown which through grace shall be mine.

For the Christian Recorder.

THE CONFLICT OF THE SOUL.

AN ALLEGORY.

"For that which I do, I allow not: for what I would, that do I not; but what I hate, that I do." —Rom. vii. 15.

"To him that overcometh will I give to eat of the tree of life which is in the midst of the paradise of God."—Rev. ii. 7.

It was upon an afternoon in the sultry month of ——, in the year ——, that as I sat musing in the house of a friend, all alone, there passed before my mind's eye two men. Shall I describe them? One of them appeared to be the very impersonation of divine beauty. Shall I ever forget those eyes—so piercing and so filled with love? And then those lips, and——but why particularize? Was not his whole appearance that of unearthly beauty? The other of the two was characterized by no peculiarities. He was of medium height, and possessed a countenance not altogether unprepossessing. Just such a one as we daily behold. My eyes followed them for some distance, as they walked side by side, evidently enjoying the society of each other. A smile of peaceful radiance seemed to light up the countenance of both.

In the distance I espied a church, and upon it was lifted up, at a respectful height, a beautiful Cross. With deep and holy thoughts I gazed upon that sacred emblem.

And with what emphasis did it speak to my soul! Beginning with Moses and the Prophets, it told the whole story of man's redemption

Methought that I arose, and with humbled spirits entered that church, in company with a great multitude of devout hearers.

The vast assembly realized God's presence, and was still, even as death.

Taking my seat in a pew, I sat in pensive mood; but imagine my surprise when, upon looking toward the altar, I saw that those same two individuals whose footsteps I had before followed occupied the holy place. Each, as he sat in the altar, seemed to be engaged in heart devotion, and in my soul I said, "Oh! that I possessed such holy and seemingly undisturbed equanimity!" I knew well what life had been to me. I knew in very deed that it was as a battle, a wrestle, a race—but when I gazed upon these two strangers, and beheld the place which seemed to possess their souls, I almost broke the tenth commandment. At this moment a still, small voice—whence it proceeded, I know not—whispered in my ear, "Follow those men when they shall leave this chapel."

After having listened to sound words as they fell from the lips of him who was most divine in his appearance, from Hebrews xii. 14, and the congregation having received the words of blessing after they had united in singing that heavenly Doxology—

"Praise God, from whom all blessings flow,
Praise Him, all creatures here below,
Praise him above, ye heavenly host,
Praise, Father, Son, and Holy Ghost,"

I maintained my seat while the congregation passed out.

In due time the two appeared, and as they passed I was enabled to take a good view of them, which served but to strengthen my first impression. In fact, the face of him who had spoken brought to my mind the appearance of Moses, whose face, after his communion with God on the Mount, shone with exceeding brightness. In the countenance of the other I could discern a certain ——passiveness, shall I call it? It expressed an absence of joy which illuminated the face of the other—and yet it did not altogether express anger or envy.

Howbeit, the two journeyed on, while, in obedience to the mysterious mandate, I followed them. As I thus sat musing, with my eyes intently fixed upon the travellers, I at once saw that they were engaged in the closest conversation—while the countenance of him who had given indications neither of joy nor anger, seemed to grow vivid with life. They seemed to be conversing upon some theme of importance, and, from the animation displayed, it was very plain that they were not of one mind. It proved to be that the one which took no part in the services at the chapel was opposing some of the arguments which the other had advanced—and that with such vehemence that he seemed to be angry. At this procedure I was greatly surprised, for, hitherto, perfect unanimity had seemed to characterize their every movement. In astonishment I still followed them, while the controversy between them grew hotter and hotter.

At this moment that same small voice which had so audibly bidden me to follow them, whispered again in my ears, "Where now is their supposed unanimity and peace? Knowest thou not, my son, that life is life, and that of necessity the flesh warreth against the spirit?"

Ere these words had fallen upon my ears, I was almost aroused from my half-unconscious state by the high controversy between the travellers. I listened even more attentively than before, and from their words I learned that in expounding the text, "Follow peace with all men and holiness, without which no man shall see the Lord," Brother Innerman (for such indeed is his name) had given great offence to his companion, whom I now recognized to be Mr. Outerman. During the delivery of this discourse our good Brother Innerman had spoken plain words, as the whole congregation could bear witness. He boldly proclaimed therein the necessity of being completely dead unto the world, and alive unto Christ. At this Mr. Outerman took exception, and he fain would have brought his fellow-traveller to the same way of thinking and acting with himself. "Thou shouldst not preach such doctrine," he exclaimed; "for thou knowest, my friend, what the blessed St. John says in his first Epistle—'If we say that we have no sin, we deceive ourselves, and the truth is not in us.' And so it is very plain that thou art deceiving thyself."

I saw as they journeyed along that Brother Innerman seemed to be very fearful, and at times I thought I could see him tremble, and more particularly during the delivery of Mr Outerman's speech. Yet, at its conclusion, he bravely answered, "Who is he that condemneth? It is Christ, that died, yea, rather, that is risen again, who is even at the right hand of God, who also maketh intercession for us."

War now began in earnest between the two parties, because the carnal mind is enmity against God, for it is not subject to the law of God—neither, indeed, can be; and hence it is a war of life and death.

I also noticed that during the whole time the two travellers were journeying, there were also within hailing-distance of each, armed legions. Those who were for the defence and protection of our dear Brother Innerman were under the leadership of a mighty Prince, perfectly panoplied, as were all his host—and he was of such skill, that he was never known to be vanquished in a battle.

And now I could perceive that between the two the war became very fierce indeed

And could the reader have beheld with me these numerous death-struggles! How they caused my blood to stand still, as each could be seen to triumph alternately over the other.

As my sympathies were all with the angelic Innerman, and when at times I would see him almost fall to the earth, and then be constrained to hear the shouts of victory from the exultant foe, my very flesh and my bones would tremble as of palsy.

Oh, there! see that struggle now going on—each have grappled the other—it is a wrestle! What skilful movements on the part of each for the slightest advantage! What desperate exertions!

See Brother Innerman, as his face verily shines with a holy determination! And how surely is he straitened—for he wrestles, not against flesh and blood, but against principalities, against powers, against the rulers of the darkness of this world, and against spiritual wickedness in high places.

Each moment increases the desperation of the struggle. Alas! alas! Brother Innerman falls! Is he really cast to the earth?

In sadness I turned away, but, from the confusion of the conflict, I recognized the voice of my friend, as he cried aloud, "Rejoice not over me, O mine enemy. Tho' I fall, yet will I rise again."

I turned and looked—and behold! Brother Innerman had regained his feet, and had renewed the conflict with greater vigor than before. And now, see, his panoplied Defender approaches him and whispers words of encouragement in his ear, while both are straining every nerve. The climax of the conflict is attained—and joy! joy! the carnal Outerman is giving way! See! he trembles—his strength has left him, and now methinks I saw brave Innerman grapple him with more than human power, and with one mighty exertion cast him to the earth to rise no more.

Brother Innerman was applauded—and as he entered the city above, to be crowned as victor through the blood of the Lamb, my soul, filled with ecstacy at the triumph of my friend, cried out—

"So let it be, O Lord of Hosts, with every saint in every Conflict of the Soul!"

BENJAMIN T. TANNER

For the Christian Recorder.

LETTER FROM J. R. V. THOMAS.

MR. EDITOR:—I promised you, some time ago, to write something for the RECORDER; but circumstances, over which I had no control, hindered me.

Having a few leisure moments, I employed them in sending you a few lines, hastily written, relative to the condition of the Rahway and Elizabeth Circuit

I was appointed to the above named circuit in consequence of the Rev A. C Crippen's request, who was to be removed therefrom. His request was granted, and he was transferred by the Rt. Rev. D A. Payne, D.D, to the Camden Circuit, Del., in the Baltimore District, (If I am correct)

I went on the circuit with a light heart, and with the prospect of a useful future brightening before me, believing that if I discharged my duty, as a reward for my labor, I would be blessed of God and enjoy an approving conscience.

The first point on the circuit, on leaving New York city, is Elizabeth, which is about five miles from the city of Newark. In this place, there is a neat frame church, that will seat about 200 persons. This church has 34 members in all; 28 are working ones, and six are on the indigent list. This society was formerly in the Zion's connexion, from which they withdrew some two years ago, and joined Elder Crippen's charge, which was Newark and Rahway. Elder Crippen offered this society to the Annual Conference of 1861, and it was received in our connexion, after which the Conference detached Rahway and Elizabeth from Newark, making the latter a station and the former a circuit.

The Tamco A. M. E. Church, in Elizabeth, are loyal to the connexion and easily governed. Their liberality is known by all who have in former times served them. They are a noble-hearted people, regular in their attendance to the church, and are trying to be practical Christians. The work of the Lord is reviving in their midst, and sinners are being brought to the knowledge of the truth.

The Sabbath-school attached to this church is a good one. It is composed of children and adults, and is officered by members of the M. E. Church, who take pride in instructing our children in the truths of the Bible. I always go to the school whenever I am in Elizabeth. The school is well attended, as a general thing, and the children are greatly attached to their teachers. There is an excellent choir, composed chiefly of young persons, who are members of the church. These singers are called the Philharmonic Society. Their tutor is Mr. John H. Sullivan, formerly of Baltimore. He is an excellent teacher. His equal for compass of voice and sweetness of tone is not found every day. He lectures for them every Wednesday evening. His scholars' avidity to study and learn, and their sweet singing is commendable.

Five miles south of Elizabeth is Rahway. In this place there is a plain church, lighted with gas. This church is capable of seating about 200 persons. It is called the Paran A. M. E. Church. There are 40 members, two-thirds of which are good working ones. The people at this point are worthy of praise for their constant attendance to the church, their benevolence and piety. This church is getting along finely in her financial matters, too, and, in a spiritual point of view, she is not a whit behind the chiefest.

The Sabbath-school in Rahway is composed of children and adults, too. Among those of riper years may be seen local preachers, exhorters, class leaders and trustees. This school also has my co-operation. It is conducted by members of the M. E. Church, who furnish it with books and fuel.

There is a good choir in the Paran Church. These singers are called the Quartette Association. They meet every Tuesday evening at the residence of Mrs. Anna Pippinger, (who is their preceptress) for the benefit of Black Board lectures. These singers, like those of Elizabeth, are new beginners; but, in consequence of having competent tutors and a taste for music, they excel all singers that I ever heard, (having no more experience than they.)

Mrs. Anna Pippinger is among the few females in our connexion that can read music and give black board lectures. She has an excellent baritone voice, and is mistress of her business. She reads with precision, and in the best of time. She spares no pains in giving her scholars instructions. In the science of the beautiful, it has been my happy lot to be in company and sing with some good ear singers; but a very few that can master the black dots.

In conclusion permit me to say, that in the midst of the excitement occasioned by the struggle between freedom and slavery, we, on the circuit, are composed; our trust is in the God of battles. There have been six added to the circuit since the 3d of August, three in Elizabeth and three in Rahway. Five profess to be soundly converted to God.

I am trying to get some yearly subscribers for the RECORDER. I think I will succeed. Pray for my success, and as soon as I get them I will send you the money and their names.

Yours, fraternally,
J. R. V. THOMAS.

For the Christian Recorder.

LETTER FROM PETER LESTER.

Victoria, Aug 14, 1862.

DEAR FRIEND:—I find it impossible for me to follow up the subject which I promised in my last. In fact, I see so much of late in your movements to admire, that I know not where to commence; everything is working to a change. The day of the slaves' deliverance is near at hand.

I cannot say that I have any great love for your country; but really I have often thought that I would like to have been in the battle before Richmond. I suppose that this feeling grows out of the fact of that being my playground when a boy. I hope to hear soon that your prayer has been granted by the presidents of the passenger railways in your city.

My advice to you all is, seek to have an interest in the railways, and by so doing you will become strong. However, I believe, there is a good time coming for us all. We must wait a little longer. You will find in less than six months that colored men will have as much to do with settling the war as any other class.

The whole matter is plain. The present combatants cannot settle it themselves. They need just such help as can only be found among the colored people, both North and South; the American people have always been blind, and will continue to be to their best interest. They all act as if the breach which has been made could not be healed—the Northern people in particular. Then to think that the Southern people, after they have been well flogged, will return to the Union like so many obedient children, O, what a delusion for men of sense to entertain!

These are the times for anti-slavery men and women to gird on the armor anew, instead of laying it aside.

Now, I find, the mail steamer has arrived, so I can neither copy nor have this letter copied; so you must take it as it is. We are all well, and have nothing particular to find fault with.

Yours, as ever,
PETER LESTER

HOW CAN YOU!

How can you reconcile it with the teaching of Scripture to call yourself a Christian and not pay your debts—or make every honest effort to pay them?

How can you call yourself a Christian and contract debts without a reasonable prospect of paying them?

For the Christian Recorder.

LETTER FROM PITTSBURGH.

Rev. and Dear Brother Weaver:—Agreeably to the promise I made you when we were last together in Pittsburgh, I take this opportunity to forward to you the following communication:

We have held our second quarterly meeting in this Conference year. It was held Sept. 28th of the past month in Wylie St. Church. We held our usual prayer meeting at 6 o'clock, A. M., which has been especially organized under a covenant to pray for the universal and ultimate liberation of the oppressed race in this the "Land of the free and the home of the brave."

Also for the Lord of hosts, by his almighty hand, to protect the innocent everywhere. It is evident that there is a Divine power needed to destroy the Satanic impressions made upon the minds and hearts of thousands. God alone can bring about the great moral revolution that is desirable, even after Slavery is abolished, before we can have permanent and enduring peace, for he alone is the God of peace. And then we truly can "worship him under our own vine and fig tree, where none dare molest us or make us afraid," and live together as Christians and friends in this the land which the Lord our God has given us.

Brother J. Peck filled the morning appointment. He preached a very appropriate and feeling sermon. Brother S. H. Thompson, preacher in charge of our church in Allegheny city, filled the afternoon appointment. At the conclusion of his discourse, which was exceedingly interesting and applicable to the occasion, the blessed Lord's Supper was administered to a large number of communicants. There was preaching at night as usual. On the following Monday night, we held our love feast, at which there were a great many persons, as was the case on the previous Sabbath. In short, we had a glorious time, for the blessed Lord was in our midst, and there was a shout of the King in the camp.

S W.

Wylie St. Charge, Pittsburgh, Pa., Sept. 1st, 1862

For the Christian Recorder

WRETCHED HOME.

You have all heard and read of the miseries of the drunkard's home. A more miserable home than that had Amy. She would tremble and shrink when her quick ear caught the sound of her husband's unsteady footstep approaching the door, for she well knew that however she might try to please him, some excuse would yet be found to make her suffer. She was very lonely, too, and often thought of her dear father and mother, who were so far from her; but if she was ever tempted to wish for her, she checked the thought in a moment, saying to herself: "It is better as it is. I never could live to see her almost daily cry." But they did not then know what she could or would live through, sometimes with food and sometimes without food. So poor Amy, after receiving the most cruel beating her husband had ever given her, was pushed rudely from the door, and told never to enter it again till she could submit to his will without a word. She found her way to the house of Mrs. B., a poor neighbor, who took her in and treated her with great kindness.

"But what is the matter with you? Does Reuben treat you very badly now?"

"O, worse and worse," answered the poor woman, bursting into tears.

"Why, then, do you stay with him?"

"Many and many a time, I have taken a bundle of clothes and left the house, thinking I never would go back, but I could not make up my mind to leave, and so I always returned. He has threatened to murder me, and I never go to sleep without thinking that, perhaps, before morning, he will be the death of me."

He drank more and more deeply, till at last he was brought down to death's door by that awful scourge of the drunkard—madness. O, how the wretched man would groan with agony till crowds would collect about the house for curiosity, though few dared to enter. Four or five of the strongest men would sometimes go in and hold him. But it pleased God that he should not then really go to that place of despair. The fit passed off, leaving him very weak, and unable to stir hand or foot.

"Love your enemies; do good to them which hate you; bless them that curse you, and pray for them which despitefully use you." "The soul that sinneth, it shall die." "The drunkard shall not inherit the kingdom of heaven." "The wicked shall be turned into hell."

"I am going to hell, and if any man on earth knows what the torments of hell are, I am sure I do." Jesus is willing to receive all who repent of their sins and turn to him. "Though your sins be as scarlet, they shall be like snow; though they be red like crimson, they shall be as wool." "Come unto me all ye that labor and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest." Let the lovers of the drunkard look at this.

JOSEPH CLARK, Professor.

Salem, N. J., Sept. 25th, 1862.

THE GLORIOUS LIBERTY OF THE CHILDREN OF GOD.

1. Freedom from sin. The child of God is freed from condemnation. The sentence of the law written against him as an impenitent sinner is blotted out, and being justified by faith, he has peace with God. While sin, as a tyrant, holds us as his subjects, the law holds us as prisoners and criminals. But the grace of God which makes us his children brings us out from prison, pardons our offences, and delivers us from punishment. At the same time the child of God is set free from the dominion of sin. "There is, therefore, now no condemnation to them which are in Christ Jesus, who walk not after the flesh but after the Spirit; for the law of the Spirit of life in Christ Jesus hath made me free from the law of sin and death." It is characteristic of the child of God, that he walks not after the flesh but after the Spirit. He is not strictly perfect, so that he never errs. He is still imperfect, frail in the body, and surrounded by temptations, and often has occasion to mourn his errors and offences. Still he is no longer the slave of sin. He has been redeemed, regenerated, disenthralled. He is the freed man of the Lord. Now, he is the child of God, having been adopted into God's family, having received not the spirit of bondage again to fear, but in place of it the Spirit of adoption, whereby he cries, Abba, Father.

2. It is freedom from the fear of death. A bondage to the fear of death is a common torment of our race. Men, even without religion, rise above it by various efforts, and under different influences. Patriotism, anger, recklessness, skepticism, busy occupation, may subdue it. But the child of God has a glorious deliverance from it by being lifted above it, with the assurance of a triumph over it, and the enjoyment of a grand hope beyond it. He walks by faith, seeing things invisible to mortal eyes, knowing that the light affliction of the moment is to be followed by a far more exceeding and eternal weight of glory. For him Death is robbed of his sting. For the "sting of death is sin, and the strength of sin is the law." But he can say: "Thanks be to God, who giveth us the victory through our Lord Jesus Christ."

3. Again, this liberty of the Christian is liberty under law. It is not pure independence. It is not mere license. It is not putting the Christian beyond control. He is still surrounded by the sovereignty of God, and all the defences of God's holy law. As before remarked, in all God's dealings with us there is no such thing as liberty without law. We as soon think of God's abdicating his throne, as of his abolishing the law. "Do we, then, make void the law through faith? God forbid. Yea, we establish the law." It is one of the chief beauties and glories of Christian liberty that it is according to law; that it finds its highest delight and completest development in obedience to the law of God; that whilst the life of the Christian flows on like a stream gliding at its own sweet will, it also flows as by a holy instinct in channels and courses of God's appointing, and in accordance with laws of his establishing. And this leads to the remark that,

4. Christian liberty is a spontaneous obedience to God. It is a new life, the life of God's children. Children are bound to obey their parents; but the relation which they sustain to them must ever be nearer, and more ennobling and free than that of servants. That man has no correct idea of the worth, the meaning, the beauty of the parental relation, who treats his children simply as servants subject to his express will, to be used only for the furtherance of his selfish ends. God does not treat his children so, and they have [illegible] wards him simply as his servants requiring prompt, careful, a complete obedience. They are his subjects, his servants, bound to obey the slightest intimations of his will. But they are more. Christ said to his disciples, "Henceforth I call you not servants but friends, for the servant knoweth not what his master doeth." But even more than friends, they are children. They are adopted into his family. But it is even a closer relationship than that. The blood of the parent flows in the veins of the child. The child receives the nature of the parent. God imparts his Spirit to his children. They become partakers of a divine nature. In their measure they love as God does; they live out the spirit that is in them; they engage spontaneously, naturally, that is, according to their renewed nature, in his service. It is their joy, the impulse of their spiritual life, to do that which pleases God. It has come into their souls as a vital principle to glorify God and enjoy him forever; and all their living is modified and controlled by this; and their happiness is found in their completest service of God. It is natural for the light to shine, for the flower to bloom in beauty and send out its fragrance, for the bird to sing its joyousness, for the meadow to smile in rich verdure beneath the summer showers and sun, and all this is according to strict, unvarying law. So the child of God spontaneously serves him, loves to worship him, loves to help forward his cause, loves to practice holiness, not simply because God requires him to do so, but because it stirs his heart to do so; because in his [illegible] being renewed, is sanctified, governed by a holy principle. This is the highest liberty, the liberty of a sanctified nature, of a will made free in holiness. This is the liberty of the flower blooming in the garden, of the bird sweetly caroling in the tree, or winging its flight unrestrained through the air. But it is vastly more. It is the freedom of the holy angels who do God's will in heaven; there unbroken and complete, here imperfect because of the defilement of sin not at once eradicated, and the presence of temptation. For the child of God often sighs because he does that which he would not, and longs to be delivered from the body of this death. Yet it is his great joy that his heart is set to do God's will. And these unwilling aberrations, these repeated failures, while they serve to keep him humble and watchful, also serve to enhance the glory and gladness of the hour of full release, and entrance on the perfect service of God in the heavenly home.

5. For consider that this is a perpetual liberty never to be interrupted.

The children of God shall never again become the willing bond-slaves of sin, and shall attain to a perfect love and freedom from all sin, and complete satisfaction in the likeness of God. "For I am persuaded," says Paul, "that neither death, nor life, nor angels, nor principalities, nor powers, nor things present, nor things to come, nor height, nor depth, nor any other creature, shall be able to separate us from the love of God which is in Christ Jesus our Lord." Preserved unto the end of this life by the grace of God, his children shall all be received into his heavenly home, and there they shall be free indeed, free from all imperfection, from all sorrow, serving God gladly forever in the untarnished beauty of holiness.

6. Finally, let it be considered that this liberty is wrought out for us through suffering, and bestowed on us by the grace of God.

All redemption, all advance of human freedom, has been secured through suffering and sacrifice. Liberty has had its heroes and its martyrs, through whom its deliverances and triumphs have been achieved. Each onward step, each successive achievement, has been at the cost of human lives, of pains and agonies.

In how much higher, holier sense is this true of this glorious liberty of the children of God! It comes to us as the purchase of the self-sacrifice of the Son of God. He came down from heaven and died to redeem us. Before him all the heroism of the champions of civil freedom, all martyrdoms for humanity, pale and sink into insignificance; or, rather, they are the far-off reflections of his glory, just as all human liberty is a faint connection from that resplendent redemption which he wrought out. For this grand liberty, as for all minor blessings, we are indebted to the cross of Christ, to the grace of God which bringeth salvation. The price of this glorious liberty was the precious blood of Christ; the incarnation, and suffering, and death, of the Son of God. Let it be added here, that as civil liberty is to be preserved only by unceasing vigilance, so does the enjoyment and preservation of this boon, gift as it is of God's grace, and continued to us by his kindness, demand of us unceasing watchfulness, lest it degenerate into license, or we, being found off our guard, shall become again the captives of the devil.

Now, my friends, is not this a "glorious liberty," this liberty of the children of God? Natural liberty is freedom to act as one chooses without restraint, except from the laws of one's own being. God's natural liberty [illegible] Human liberty is the right to [illegible] opinions, and to worship God according to the dictates of conscience, and the approval of one's own [illegible] power. The liberty of God's children is a heart set free from sin, loving and practising what is right, [illegible] his friendship, and having a sure prospect of perpetual and perfect bliss in holiness. To be delivered from the condemnation of the law, and the [illegible] have the Spirit of the Lord in our hearts, and to live superior to passion, and to worldliness, and to the fear of death; with the blissful anticipation of a perfection of holiness, in which every emotion of the heart shall be right, and a happiness like to that of God himself, shall be ours perpetually—is not that a "glorious liberty," greatly to be desired for ourselves and for others?

[illegible]

THE LORD'S SUPPER

The question has sometimes occurred to my mind whether the Church has not, in a great measure, lost the distinctive characteristic idea of the Lord's Supper. What this idea is, appears in the very name of the ordinance. It is a supper; solemn, not a fast. The Lord's Supper! The thoughts naturally connected with the designation are those of gladness, of festive reunion, as of children in their father's house, when all that is beautiful and costly in the paternal treasures is brought forth to grace their welcome, and all that is asked in return is to take freely and to be happy. But do our seasons of communion resemble such a meeting? Are they not rather times of sadness and depression, if not of absolute gloom? How often, in any church we are acquainted with, would a stranger, casually entering on one of those occasions, infer from the countenances of the participants, and from the general tone of the services, that he was present at a feast? Would he not rather suppose it to be a funeral?

Among my childish reminiscences, none stands out in stronger relief than the sombre gatherings of the church with which I was earliest acquainted, to celebrate the monthly communion. The minister, a grave and godly man, wore an aspect of yet sterner solemnity than usual, as he discoursed to his flock of the duty of self-examination, and warned them of the soul-destroying sin of partaking unworthily. His prayers, the hymns he read, the tunes they were sung in, would have been perfectly in place at a burial, or on a day of humiliation for some great calamity. His selections of Scripture for the occasion were invariably those which describe the Saviour's agonies, and his remarks upon them from month to month, as I now recall them, left on my young mind only this distinct impression:—"It is our sins that killed the Lord." Of the triumphant resurrection, the ascension to the right hand of power, the reign of immortal light and glory, the living, joyful, victorious King of saints, all-loving, all-forgiving ever-present as the source of light and joy to these gatherings of his people, I remember not a word. No doubt these themes were touched on; but it was in so subordinate a way as to make no impression. A mysterious, dreary awe hung over the scene; and the sacramental symbols were not so much tokens of love and grace as bitter memorials of the sin of sins.

This picture is too darkly colored for the present day, but the general features remain the same, and the Lord's Supper is still, in most evangelical churches, distinctively a season of humiliation and sadness, not of joy. That it often proves a means of grace as thus administered, that consciences are quickened by it into a wholesome life, that hearts are melted into repentant tenderness, that it becomes the medium of sweet communion with him who gave his life for us, is not denied. But the question still remains: Is the true idea of the Lord's Supper thus actualized? Did the Lord himself so mean it? Is the benefit which we derive from the ordinance the special benefit which he intended we should receive through it? If not, we sustain a spiritual loss; we have dropped the clue which leads to a certain chamber of precious gifts in his great treasure-house; and these wanting, our casket of spiritual [illegible] one of the essential elements of health. The body cannot perform its functions rightly unless there is joy in the spirit. The child condemned by poverty and cruel usage to perpetual sadness, is a sickly and unwholesome child. The soul, in its secular and earthly relations, does nothing rightly, if under the shadow of a constant melancholy. And this is just as true as our spiritual life; if we are not joyous Christians, we are not wholesome, efficient, growing Christians. What trait of the spiritual man is more commended in the Scriptures than this of joyfulness? Its possession is not something to be left to chance. Its cultivation is an imperative duty, no more to be evaded than that of cultivating truthfulness, purity, humility or any other of the Christian graces. With what emphasis does the Apostle Paul lay down this law in the code of Christian liberty: "Rejoice in the Lord always; and again I say, rejoice!" And that this grace might bloom gloriously, and shed its crowning glow over the whole Church, the Saviour gave us, as his parting gift, this ever-recurring feast, this perpetual rehearsal of that final marriage-supper of the Lamb, when his bride, having attired herself in the white bridal garments of joy, shall go to dwell forever with her Lord. Shall she rehearse this triumphant consummation in the garments of widowhood and mourning? The solemn and pathetic memories which cluster around the rite, and which touch the deepest source of tears, are not to be forgotten, but to be transformed into thoughts of tender joy. It is a flower nourished with the tears and blood of our dearest Friend, and therefore we must weep over it; but since he is not dead, but lives and reigns in unending bliss, joy should smile like a rainbow through our tears.

Examiner.

GREATNESS OF CHRIST'S WORK.

But Christ shows himself to be a superhuman character, not in the personal traits only, exhibited in his life, but even more sublimely in the undertakings and teachings, by which he proved his Messiahship.

Consider then the reach of his undertaking; which, if he were only a man, shows him to have been the most extravagant and even wildest of all human enthusiasts. Contrary to every religious prejudice of his nation and even of his time, contrary to the comparatively narrow and exclusive religion of Moses itself, and to all his training under it, he undertakes to organise a kingdom of God, or kingdom of heaven on earth. His purpose includes a new moral creation of the race—not of the Jews only and of men proselyted to their covenant, but of the whole human race. He declared thus, at an early date in his ministry, that many shall come from the east and the west and sit down with Abraham, and Isaac and Jacob, in the kingdom of God; that the field is the world; and that God so loves the world, as to give for it his only-begotten Son. He also declared that his gospel shall be published to all nations, and gave his apostles their commission to go into all the world [illegible] creature.

Here, then, we have the grand idea of his mission—it is to new-create the human race and restore it to God, in the unity of a spiritual kingdom. And upon this single fact, Reinhard erects a comparison [illegible] between Christ and the founders, going into a formal review of all the great founders of states and most celebrated law-givers, the great heroes and defenders of nations, all the wise kings and statesmen, all the philosophers, all the [illegible] and discovering as a fact that no such thought as this, or nearly proximate to this, had ever before been taken up by any living character in history; showing also how it had happened to every other great character, however liberalized by culture, to be limited in [illegible] and set in opposition, or antagonism, more or less decidedly, to the rest of the world. But he [illegible] alone, the simple Galilean carpenter it happens otherwise; that never having seen a map of the world in his whole life, or heard the name of half the great nations on it, he undertakes, coming out of his shop, a scheme as much vaster and more difficult than that of Alexander, as it proposes more and what is more divinely human! This thought of a universal kingdom, so [illegible] spire of his day, constructed by so many ages of war and conquest, is a bauble in comparison, both as regards the extent and the cost! And yet the rustic tradesman of Galilee propounds even this for his errand, and that in a way of assurance, as simple and quiet, as if the immense reach of his plan were, in fact, a matter to him of no consideration.

Nor is this all; there is included in his plan, what, to any mere man, would be yet more remote from the possible confidence of his frailty: it is a plan as universal in time, as it is in the scope of its objects. It does not expect to be realised in a lifetime, nor even in many centuries to come. He calls it, understandingly, his grain of mustard-seed; which, however, is to grow, he declares, and overshadow the whole earth. But the courage of Jesus, counting a thousand years to be only a single day, is equal to the run of his work. He sees a rock of stability, where men see only frailty and weakness. Peter himself, the impulsive and always unreliable Peter, turns into rock and becomes a great foundation, as he looks upon him. "On this rock," he says, "I will build my church, and the gates of hell shall not prevail against it." His expectation, too, reaches boldly out beyond his own death; that, in fact, is to be the seed of his great empire—"except a corn of wheat fall into the ground and die, it abideth," he says, "alone." And if we will see with what confidence and courage he adheres to his plan, when the time of his death approaches—how far he is from giving it up as lost, or as an exploded vision of his youthful enthusiasm—we have only to observe his last interview with the two sisters of Bethany, in whose hospitality he was so often comforted. When the box of precious ointment is broken upon his head, which Judas reproves as a useless expense, he discovers a zeal propriety or even prophecy, in what the woman has done, as connected with his death, now at hand. But it does not touch his courage, we perceive, or the confidence of his plan, or even cast a shade on his prospect. "Let her alone. She hath done what she could. She is come aforehand to anoint my body to the burying. Verily I say unto you wheresoever this gospel shall be preached throughout the whole world, this also that this woman hath done shall be told for a memorial of her." Such was the sublime confidence he had in a plan that was to run through all future ages, and would scarcely begin to show its fruit during his own lifetime.—Dr. Bushnell.

PASTORAL WORK IN THE SABBATH-SCHOOL.

The following extract, touching the mutual duties and relations of pastor and people to the Sabbath-school, is from the inaugural sermon of the Rev. Alfred Taylor, newly installed pastor of the Presbyterian Church at Bristol, Pennsylvania.

"Our Sabbath-school claims our prayerful attention, our earnest work and toil. We must not overlook it, or think it beneath our notice. The children of to-day are the men and women of to-morrow. The babe in arms escapes our observation for awhile, and lo! he is almost a man. He is worth attending to, and training in the way in which he should go. The duty is a duty which rests upon the whole Church. Our prosperity depends much on how we bring up our children. We can train them for a useful Christianity—we can let them run loose till they become very vagabonds.

"We have now a pleasant Sabbath-school, well officered, efficiently [illegible]. But we can do more than we are doing. Our rooms are but half full. We can fill them. Let us have a live Sabbath-school. Let us compel the little ones to come to the feast spread for them. Let us add to its efficiency by adding to the number of its co-workers, and engaging in all those modern improvements which make the Sabbath-school such a fruitful nursery of Zion. I deprecate the idea, however, of turning our Sabbath-school into a menagerie, or an exhibition, as is too frequently the custom. We can interest our children in various ways, and interest our friends in their behalf, without departing from the great object for which we gather them together. The great object is to teach them the truth as it is in Jesus. It must be presented to them in the most interesting way possible, or they will not listen to a word of it. No long-winded droning to them; no tedious harangues; no cross and impatient scoldings; no bitter sarcasm mingled with the teaching of God's truth. The truth must be spoken in love to them. And, as we look for good and able officers for our army, so we want more good, really good, really able, teachers for our Sabbath-school. There is no call for the irregular teacher, who comes only when it is not convenient to stay at home; no call for the slovenly one, who is always late; no call for the heedless one, who has not his heart in his work; no call for the stupid one, who can neither take an idea himself, nor impart one to his scholars; no call for the stubborn one, who is always finding fault with the arrangements of the school.

"But there is a call for one dozen faithful, competent, punctual, cheerful-faced teachers. We want them now. I believe they are here, and are willing to enlist in this work. I want to know every teacher and every child, and I want them to know me. I want to go among them, and encourage and instruct them; and I want them to encourage and instruct me. And that we may the better work together, I propose to preach a sermon to the children on the last Sabbath afternoon in each month. Although this is for the children, I will try to make myself understood to the grown persons who may be present, and I hope to see you all here, to show your interest in the lambs of the flock, if nothing more."

DIVIDING UP A SERMON.

It has always appeared to me extremely bad policy, in any preacher who desires to keep up the interest of his congregation, to announce at the beginning of his sermon that in the first place he will do so; and in the second place, such another thing; and in the third place something else, and finally close with some practical remarks. I can say for myself, that whenever I hear any preacher say anything like that, an instant feeling of irksomeness and weariness possesses me. You cannot help thinking of the long, tiresome way that is to be got over before happily reaching the end. You check off each head of the sermon as it closes; but your relief at thinking it is done, is dashed by the thought of what a deal more is yet to come. No; the skilful preacher will not thus map out his subject, telling his hearers so exactly what a long way they have to go. He will never let them have a long look-out. Let each head of the discourse be announced as it is arrived at. People can bear one at a time, who would break down in the simultaneous prospect of three, not to say of seven or eight. And then, when the sermon is nearly done, you may, in a sentence, give a connected view of all you have said, and your skill will be shown, if people think to themselves what a long way they have been brought, without the least sense of weariness. I lately heard a sermon which was divided into seven heads. If the preacher had named them all at the beginning, the congregation would have ceased to listen, or would have listened under the oppressive thought of what a vast deal awaited them before they would be free. But each head was announced just as it was arrived at; the connection was whiled along insensibly; and the [illegible] with no sudden attention, from the first sentence to the last.

Country Parson.

Who made the heart, 'tis He alone
[illegible]
He knows each chord, its various tone,
Each spring—its various bias;
Then at the balance let us be mute
We never can adjust it;
What's done we partly may compute,
[illegible]

The Christian Recorder.

Philadelphia, October 11, 1862.

FROM THE CHURCHES

We have received a very interesting letter from the Rev. W H Jackson, of Dublin, Ind.

Brother Jackson was moved, after a very successful year of labor on the Vincennes Circuit, to the Blue River Circuit this year, and writes that the prospects were excellent but many of the people on all that large circuit did not know that there was a paper in the connexion. No wonder the Church don't prosper. We believe that Brother and Sister Jackson will soon set them to work.

We hope that Brother H. B. Smith will keep up the interest for the Recorder that Brother and Sister Jackson kept up last year.

A FAIR FOR CONTRABANDS.

The Sabbath School of the Seventh St. Presbyterian Church, of which Rev. Mr. Gibbs is pastor, gave a fair at the Masonic Hall last week for some three afternoons and evenings. We were not present, but we understood that they realized something handsome. The good Lord bless the dear children for what they have done. The way to have good men and women, is to educate the mind properly while young, and continue to impress it on their minds until they arrive at the age of discretion.

THE CONTRABAND

The Contraband Committee are still at work while we are writing these lines. They have already sent off some two or three boxes packed as full as they could well be. We have called at Bethel Church frequently, and really it is pleasant to behold the different denominations of our people and churches all come together, sitting and standing side by side, as one man and one woman, all trying to have a part in the good work. They know no form, but all labor to promote the great cause of humanity. God, who is just and is no respecter of persons, will reward the cheerful giver. May his name ever be praised.

TAKE NOTICE AND ACT ACCORDINGLY.

We have received a number of letters from brethren, that have neither the town, state, day, nor date. Some are asking one thing, some another. We really don't know where to answer them, for there are several young men taken up this year, and old ones too, that we are not acquainted with.

BETHEL CHURCH.

Last Sabbath morning Bethel Church was filled to its utmost capacity, on the occasion of the Lord's Supper. The first Sabbath in every month generally brings a crowded house.

We were also at the Union in the afternoon with Elder Davis, and preached for him.

It would be a good thing to lecture the young men about the manner of leaving the church immediately after the sermon is over.

QUARTERLY MEETING.

The Quarterly Meeting of Rev. A. L. Stanford, Wesley Church, Hurst St., come off on the 11th and 12th inst., as was published in the last No. of the Recorder. There will be preaching three times during the day on Sabbath, and the Sacrament of the Lord will be administered at 5 o'clock. The Lord be praised, and give us a good old fashioned time

NOTICE.

The Rev. Peter Gardiner, who is on the Camden Circuit, is having a great revival. Many souls are being converted.

"Hell may rage and vent his spite,
The Lord will save His heart's delight."

SABBATH SCHOOL CONVENTION

The brethren of the Philadelphia District will take notice, and govern themselves accordingly by notifying the several Sabbath Schools under their jurisdiction, that, according to an act of the Conference for such a convention, Bishop Nazrey has appointed for it to meet on Wednesday, the 12th of November, in Bethel Church, Sixth Street, Philadelphia. You will find his notice in the 20th number of the Recorder.

THE PATRIOT'S HYMN BOOK.

We have just been musing on a little hymn book called "The Patriot's Hymn Book," compiled by the Rev. Andrew Manship, of this city, who is the agent of the Tract Society of this city. It is a book gotten up and compiled with much care and taste. This patriotic little hymn book is not only adapted to the soldiers of the temporal warfare, but to those of the spiritual warfare, and we don't see any reason why they might not be adopted in the Sabbath Schools. We invite all who have not made a purchase of one, to go to No. 119 North Sixth Street, Philadelphia.

We have also the Rev. Mr. Manship's life of thirteen years in the itinerancy. We have not had time to peruse it through, but we have read enough to be satisfied that it will pay any one to read it through. Also the Memoir of his wife Rebecca. Many thanks to you, Brother Manship.

A GRAND PRIZE CONCERT

Mr. Andw. Barris will give one of his splendid musical concerts on next Wednesday night, the 15th inst., at the Franklin Hall, in Sixth Street, below Arch. Our friend and brother, Mr. Barris, is too well known in this city and vicinity not to have a full house. Price of entrance, only twenty cents. For further information we refer you to the hand-bills.

SHAME! SHAME! SHAME!

Every day or two we hear of cowardly and most outrageous treatment of some of the most civil and best colored citizens of Philadelphia, when quietly walking along the street, by three, and four, and often more cowardly rowdies. We say cowardly, because one of them, when alone, never interferes with the colored people. And what seems to be still more strange about these attacks is, almost invariably takes place in the police district of Mayor Henry, put a stop to it by having the police to be more watchful.

THE PROCLAMATION OF THE PRESIDENT AND THE COLORED PEOPLE OF THE SOUTH

President Lincoln has declared in his proclamation, that all the bondmen shall be free on the first day of January, 1863, if those States that are now in rebellion are not represented in Congress at that time. There are many who live here in the so-called 'free North,' who are really in favor of Slavedom. They are making all kinds of capital about such a proclamation, and, of course, use every means to work upon the animal passions of those who may not understand its righteous intentions—to incense and enrage, or arouse a sense of fury and indignation against the colored people, who are the cause of all the excitement both here in the North and in the South, in relation to the slave in the South. We call attention to hear from one who was born in the South, and who has travelled considerably through the Southern States, and has a pretty fair knowledge of the dispositions and feelings of both colored and whites throughout the South:—Now to those who are trying to kindle a fire of untruthful, unrighteous, and un-God-like indignation against the poor, oppressed slaves, and are using every effort to take their spite out of the free colored people here in the North, upon the grounds that, since the proclamation of President Lincoln was issued, the slaves would raise insurrections, slay, and kill men, women, and children wherever they could find them, we would say, it is a vague idea, a false premise, and erroneous. But, of course, they would strike for freedom, as much so as the white man would, and they probably would strike down their masters rather than be bound down as slaves; but even in this case they would forbear rather than take the lives of those claiming to be their masters. They are human beings, notwithstanding the efforts that have been put forth declaring them not to be; they are possessed with instinct, rest assured of that; they know that the child can't help what the father does. Those who have read the history of the emancipation of the West India Islands, do not read of a single instance where the slave interfered with the women and children; no, not a bit of it. As bad as the slave has been treated, he would not be as brutal as some portions of the rebel army have proved themselves to be, with all their instinct and intelligence, towards white Union men, women and children. History, and history alone, will unfold the facts which now remain hidden from the public mind, with regard to their brutal conduct during the contest with Southern rebellion against the flag of this Union. From reports, which have been confirmed, the rebels, when they invaded Maryland, took a colored preacher and, without judge or jury, hung him by the neck until he was dead. The slave would not be guilty of so vile or wicked a tragedy, though they might be every way justifiable. The rebels hung that man without any cause whatever. O! thou God of heaven, how long shall these things be?

Now, let the North, if they are in favor of the Union, not stop and tremble at the proclamation, but say, like all honest and good men will say, that it is the Lord's doings, and who shall hinder it? Yes, God has looked down upon this great national sin, and is now frowning upon it, and declares His judgment upon it. He has heard the groans of His people, and has come down to deliver them. Who art thou, Lord? I am that I am. The time has come; it is written by the prophet Jeremiah. Therefore, we would say that the women and children are in a much safer condition if they by chance fall into the hands of the slave, than the women and children in the North would be if they should fall into the hands of the rebels.

One other question we will notice, and that is in the event that on the 1st day of January, 1863, this country shall break the shackles off the bondmen, the question is being asked, What are we going to do with the blacks? Many ask this question, too, that a God-fearing man would not dream of asking. As this country would grow smaller as soon as all become free. Nonsense! Why, don't every man of common sense know that, if freedom is proclaimed, there will be as much land then as now? Assuredly, yes; there would be more need of their services then, than ever, since so many thousands of men have been slain

A BAD HABIT WHICH SHOULD NOT BE TOLERATED.

There is one thing which seems to be practised among our ministers in certain localities, which we think is productive of a bad omen. Let us for a few moments examine this subject more minutely. Brother A. will, or is to have, a two days' meeting, or a quarterly meeting At this meeting there are elders, deacons preachers, and exhorters. Among these there are those who may live in and around about the city, or circuit, as it may be, and the elder in charge may call upon another elder to preach for him; he may, in fact, be a stranger, or he may be an elder who has preached for them but seldom; that elder may preach a sermon that all the audience may feel to rejoice in that God who is no respecter of persons; he takes his seat; the choir sings; the collection is taken up; after which, the elder in charge calls upon an exhorter, or preacher, and sometimes a deacon or an elder, but the latter two but seldom; this exhorter or preacher, as the case may be, follows the elder with an exhortation, and often strives to excel the elder. Nine times out of ten, the congregation grows weary, though the exhortation may be a good one, yet the congregation had become so tired sitting in one position, that many began to wish they were at home; hence what good can there be in pursuing such a course? We say, as Bishop Quinn says, "it ought not to be." But they don't often stop at one exhortation, but it frequently happens to be three or four after one man Now, on some occasions we like to hear an exhortation. We say, if brethren wish to try or put up inexperienced beginners, put them up first, and then put up an elder or deacon to close immediately after them, by timing the exhorter or preacher. To be candid about the matter, we are opposed to these lengthy exhortations in any form:—1st. Because a congregation is not always prepared for it. There is a time for all things. There are times when a congregation needs teaching—sometimes lecturing—sometimes a short exhortation, as well as practical sermonizing. But there are few times if any, when there is a need for an hour and sometimes an hour and a half sermon and then a plurality of exhortations after a sermon. We repeat that it is a very bad practice, and ought not to be tolerated. For our part, we would much rather hear a good sensible exhortation, followed by good singing then a good warm prayer, and then for the congregation to be dismissed, each one repairing to their respective homes, and prayerfully thinking over what they heard until the next hour for divine service, than to have a good sermon preached, and then followed by three or four exhortations, for it seems more like rivalry to us, or novelty, than real sound honest teaching. We heard an elder some time ago say that he preached for another elder, and felt that what he had said in God's name it was, from all appearance, joyfully received by the congregation, and after he was through, the minister in charge put up some one after him, who set some of the people to laughing, and others threw their heads down, while some got up from their seats and went off. Now, if this be true, we would ask, what good resulted from this meeting? This custom, however, is more among our people this side of the mountains than is to be found west of the mountains. My brethren, the work we are about is a great work; a work which ought to be fraught with the glory of God; and in whatever position we are put in as leaders, as a part of the work, we should act with great caution, that all things should be for the promotion and the extension of the kingdom of Almighty God here upon the earth.

Again, we as leaders and pastors, should study the best practical and experimental mode of educating the people, by which they may grow firm and stable minded—yea, with a principle of honor before God and man, for we do hold that the people, as a general thing, are governed by their leaders. Whether they are pastor of this or that church, or whether they are editor of this or that paper, the "pulpit and the press" are the two great levers, and therefore should be twin sisters.

For the Christian Recorder

OUR CHURCH AT LEE, MASS

MR. EDITOR:—Permit me, through the columns of your invaluable sheet, to present before the generous public the condition of one of our eastern churches. It will be remembered by many that, at the rise of the Annual Conference for the New England District, I was appointed to the pastoral charge of one of our churches, situated at Lee, Mass. In obedience to said appointment, I hastened to my field of labor. On arriving there, I found the church in a very bad condition, having but twenty-two or three members, and a debt pending upon them to the amount of $425.00, and this amount being already due. Prior to my reaching this place, the mortgage had already been foreclosed. I found my members much discouraged. I, like every other man of God, endeavored to do what I could to encourage them. After much persuasion, and having exhausted every other means, I consented to take a travelling tour, and try to collect whatever our sister churches were willing to give us. This will account for my absence from my charge. While I must admit that times are hard and money very scarce; yet I can but admit that I have been not a little encouraged to trust in God. Since I left home, I have visited several of our churches, most of which have nobly responded to my call. Perhaps it would be encouraging to some to know what sort of a spirit of liberality there is in the North. I will, therefore, mention the names of a few of our churches, stating what they have done:

A. M. E. Wesley Church, Hirst St., Phila.,	$7 25
A. M. E. Union Church, Center St., Phila.,	8 00
A. M. E. Church at Media,	15 22
" Macedonia Church at Camden, N. J.,	2 52

There are several other churches that I called on, and spent the Sabbath with them, most of which were unprepared, but did what they could. It would not justify me to mention their names at this time. There are a number of individual friends who have given me $1 each to help on the cause. I hope the good Lord will bless them all. I leave here in a few days for the city of Baltimore, which is my old home. I have many true and sincere friends there I expect to get a good collection in the old Monumental City. I need not appeal to the sympathies of our people; for they are almost universally acknowledged to be the most sympathetic people living. I hope that our friends will do what they can for us; as I shall try to visit the greater portion of our churches in Maryland. God grant that this appeal may elicit a response pregnant with sympathy and efficient help for this part of the Christian Church.

JNO. H W. BUALEY,
Preacher in charge of Church at Lee, Mass.
Phila., Oct 8th, 1862.

For the Christian Recorder.

SIGNS OF REPENTANCE.

It is said by the teachers of religion that the strongest evidences of repentance is an open confession of sin. The recent emancipation proclamation of the President of the United States has, if it does nothing more, brought out a confession from the leaders of the present rebellion that slavery is a terrible evil; and that they have been sinners of the deepest dye, and by-poerites the most consummate, in their endeavors to magnify the horrors of the crime of the President in the issuing of his emancipation proclamation. They show us the wickedness of the system by citing as an evidence the want of discrimination on the part of slaves if servile insurrection is allowed to break out.

First, they charge that the slaves are ferocious, and will slay old and young, men, women and children alike; and cite as an evidence Nat Turner's Insurrection, in Southampton, Va. Comparatively, we have been taught that slavery was the best condition of the African, that the slaves of the South were better off than the free negroes of the North. Who would say that the negroes of the North, in mad ferocity, would murder innocent women and children? And yet these Southern mad-men are forced to confess that slaves are not able to discriminate between right and wrong, friend or foe.

Surely the coverings of these rebels are becoming too short. They cannot hide the deformity of that wicked institution. Is it possible that in this favored, Christian land, where so much has been done for the conversion of heathens, the translation of the Bible into different tongues, the publication of tracts and all sorts of religious works for foreign reclamation, that there should be in our midst, and connected with the domestic household, those unreclaimed, possessing all the ferocity of heathen with acts standing on the statute books forbidding on pain of imprisonment and death, the teaching of these brutes' passions into the feelings of human beings? What a mockery.

REPORT ON SLAVERY

Whereas, As we humbly believe that the Ruler of battles permits reverses as well as victories, and by these defeats he is bringing this nation to the performance of its duty, not only to the country, but our enslaved brethren, therefore,

Resolved, That we, as ministers, will do all in our power to impress upon the minds of our respective congregations the importance of patiently waiting upon the Lord, believing this war is a judgment upon the American nation for its hypocrisy and God-insulting slave-holding system.

Resolved, That we discourage all attempts to the colonization of our people in Central America or elsewhere; we feel that this is our country, for it was bought with our blood, fertilized with our tears, and cultivated with our hands; hence we want to remain here until that good time comes which we trust is nigh at hand, when men shall be as brethren, and all unconditionally taste the sweets of liberty and enjoy true manhood.

Resolved, That we still believe that God has a controversy with this nation on account of our brethren; let us stand still and see God use up slavery in His own way, while our hearts shall be united in giving him praise.

After the disposition of some ordinary matters, the appointments were read, as follows:

APPOINTMENTS FOR 1862—'63.

Elmira, N. Y., Jos. H. Smith; Ithaca, N Y., John Thomas; Binghampton, N. Y., and Montrose, Pa., J. W. Logan; Syracuse and Geneva, N. Y., Bazil Mackall; Auburn, N. Y., Wm. A. Cromwell; Lockport, N Y., Wm. Sanford; Little Falls, Utica, Canjoharie, Richard T. Eastep.

Rochester Circuit: Rochester, Genessee, Bath, Corning, Dundee, Horsehead, Canandaigua, Thomas James; in his charge, Hezekiah Butler.

Johnstown Mission. Johnstown, Fonda, Gloversville, Schoharie, Amsterdam, Watertown, George Bosley; in his charge, Isaac Stewart.

The next Conference will meet in Binghampton, the first Saturday in September, 1863.

The business of the Conference being finished, a vote of thanks was tendered the superintendent, for the able manner he had conducted the Conference; to the congregation, for their liberality; and the friends, for their kind hospitality.

The superintendent then delivered his valedictory address, and closed the Conference with singing and prayer, after an agreeable session of nine days.

S. M. G.

CORRECTION

MR. EDITOR:—In the article headed the Genesee Annual Conference, published September 27th, I find a mistake. It reads: "The Superintendent then celebrated the Conference." It should have been: "The Superintendent then addressed the Conference."

For the Christian Recorder.

GARRISON JAMES.

A eulogy was delivered on the life, character, and death of Garrison James, from Psalm xxiii 4, in the A. M. E. Union Church, on the 30th of September, 1862.

Garrison James was born in Philadelphia on the 23d of January, in the year 1812. He was married, in 1841, in Philadelphia. He embraced religion in the second year of his marriage, and he joined the above named church shortly after, where he continued a faithful and a worthy member while he lived. He was a Trustee in his church for some nine years, and the Treasurer for four years. He was a punctual business man in his church.

Brother James was taken in his death sickness about the first of May, 1862, and lingered nearly five months; during which time he bore his affliction with great Christian fortitude. On the 26th of September, 1862, in the morning, he called his beloved wife to him, and said: "Lizzie, I am going to leave you, and don't you weep a tear for me for it is all well with me, and the good Lord will take care of you." At about fifteen minutes before 12 o'clock, the same day, he departed this life in full hope of a better resurrection, aged 50 years 8 months and 7 days.

"Mark the perfect man and behold the upright: for the end of that man is peace."

Rev. H. NEY DAVIS, Asst.

For the Christian Recorder.

OBITUARY.

Departed this life, Sept. 23d, 1862, Henrietta Constable, aged 65 years. She was born in Maryland, and formerly a resident of Baltimore. For many years she was a faithful member of Sharp St. M. E Church. After removing West, she joined the African M. E. Church. She suffered with the asthma and dropsy for about six months, and bore her afflictions with much patience. She was resigned and waiting long for her change to come; and whenever interrogated, she could always give her ministers and members a cheerful answer concerning the hope within her. She loved to talk about the Saviour, and expressed a desire to depart and be with him, which she thought far better. She was removed from Louisville to New Albany during the excitement ordering women and children to leave. There she died and was buried.

"Peaceful be thy silent slumber,
Peaceful in the grave so low,
Thou no more will join our number;
Thou no more our songs shall know."

W. H. G.

Louisville, Sept. 29th, 1862.

DIED.

The friends of Sister H. Constable, an old resident of Baltimore, will regret to hear of her death. She is the mother-in-law of Brother William Gibson, of Louisville, Ky

NOTICE

TO THE DISTRICTS OF PHILADELPHIA, NEW ENGLAND, OHIO, INDIANA, AND MISSOURI, OF THE A. M. E. CHURCH MINISTERS.

Dear Brethren:—As we have a number of superannuated ministers on the list in said Districts, therefore it will be expected that the ministers and preachers, on their circuits and stations, will do all they can to collect the two cent money; and we also recommend that the Class leaders be instructed to collect and set the amount on the Class book opposite each member's name, as also all the collections called, per Discipline, for the Annual Conference, and publish the same once every quarter, that it may be seen who they are that work for God and his cause. We think it is time to give credit to those of our people who do work, so that God's name may be glorified.

THE TRIAL OF FREE LABOR.

It seems strange that additional evidence should be required of the ability and willingness of the colored race to labor without the smart of the lash, after the abundant evidence to the contrary since their emancipation in the West Indies, and their colonization in Liberia. Such, however, is the fact, and it is but another proof of the blindness of prejudice that some editors are conjuring up all manner of imaginable consequences which are to result from the idleness of emancipated slaves, while in the very same articles they object to such emancipation because their labor will come in competition with the free labor of the North?

Happily for our country, however, this great problem is now being wrought out before the nation; and in addition to the official despatches of General Saxton to the Government, the most abundant and satisfactory evidence to the ability of the freedman to labor, is furnished by the letters of numerous correspondents to the leading journals of the land. It may suit certain lewd fellows of the baser sort, like Bennett, of the New York Herald, and kindred sheets to tamper and pervert the facts of history; but the truth on this subject is becoming so palpable that it can no longer be set aside nor its force be evaded.

Out of a number of late letters bearing on this important question, we select the following from an exchange, from a gentleman who has had the most ample opportunities to form a correct judgment on the facts which have been brought out in the experience of the past nine months. They will be of special interest to the Christian and the patriot, in view of the recent proclamation by the President, and the probable emancipation by it of several millions of colored men in the Rebel States:

Beaufort, S. C., Sep. 10, 1862.

SIR:—There is no phase of the present war which has attracted more of the attention of those who look beyond the incidents of battles, sieges, retreats and victories, than the probable success or failure of the experiment of free-labor as attempted on the sea-islands of South Carolina. If 15,000 freed men are found to have no insane desire to overrun the North, but, on the contrary, are found to evince the strongest attachment to the place of their birth; if 15,000 freed men working on these plantations with no other stimulus than that common to mankind since Adam was condemned to earn his bread by the sweat of his brow, can produce a cotton crop, why may not three or four million similarly circumstanced do as well? The experiment has been tried and hundreds of fields and thousands of acres whitened by the king of staples attest its success.

During this week I have ridden over several plantations on St. Helena and Ladies' Island to witness the process of cotton picking. The plants are opening rapidly now, though the crop is generally backward on account of the late planting. For the first time in South Carolina can now be witnessed thousands of men, women and children rapidly filling their bags with the snow product without the hitherto indispensable motive power of the lash!

Many circumstances have conspired to prevent the production of a large crop of cotton. One of them is found in the very large number of the best hands being withdrawn from the plantation to work in the quartermaster's department at Hilton Head and Beaufort. The value of the labor performed by them cannot be estimated in dollars and cents, when it is remembered that it would otherwise have fallen to the lot of our Pennsylvania and Connecticut soldiers, who would have sunk by hundreds under such drudgery in this climate. Gen. Hunter's regiment of South Carolina Volunteers drew off another thousand of prime field hands, now returned to the plantations to find the crops planted by them in the spring overrun by weeds and lost by neglect. Still another loss was experienced in the evacuation of Edisto Island, which was the richest in the quality of land and quantity of crops of any island in the department. Twelve hundred people were thus added to the population of the remaining islands at a time when their industry could not be available. It is hoped that before the crops planted there are lost we may be able to return and gather them. Above all, the sense of insecurity, so fatal to business activity everywhere, has regarded labor here It is difficult to plan broadly for next year or next month when there is no certainty of being here to-morrow.

The total number of effective plantation hands on Port Royal St. Helena, and Ladies' Islands is about 3,250; non effective (including children, old and infirm,) is about 3,600. The ground cultivated in—

Corn,	6,444	Peas, beans, etc.,	360
Potatoes,	1,407	Cotton,	3,294

A little calculation will show that enough food has been produced to support the workers, and a cotton crop estimated to be worth about half a million dollars in addition.

Before closing this subject let me say a word of the conduct of these ignorant people, during their transition period from chattelism to manhood. I believe I express the opinion of both friends and foes of emancipation when I say it has been admirable. The same patience exhibited under the oppression of former masters has been shown under the frequent insults and wrongs of a portion of the soldiers. Their respectful demeanor towards white persons has been preserved, notwithstanding the privileges of freedom accorded to them. The crops on the plantations, and the records of the Quartermaster's Department, prove them not to be lazy. The judicious manner in which they spend their earning proves them not to be thriftless. The experiment thus far has justified the sanguine expectations of their friends, and rebuked the calumnies of their enemies.

I am, sir, with great respect, yours,
J. G. T.
Lutheran and Missionary.

THE CATHOLIC RELIGION IN AUSTRIA

Churches are very numerous in Austria. In the course of a ten miles' ride in the country, you will see as many as twenty. They are all very neat little buildings with white walls and tinned or gilded spires. They all have bells and an organ, with four or more altars, emblems and ceilings painted in the fresco, tesselated floors, pictures and statues. There is one series of pictures to be seen in every church—sometimes of large size, sometimes miniatures. The first of these series represents Christ condemned to death by Pilate. Then we have Christ going to execution bearing his cross. Then he falls under the weight of it. Next, some charitable persons come to his aid, and help to carry it. Afterwards we have him ascending Mt. Calvary. Then he is stripped and bound. Then we have him stretched on the cross, with a thief crucified on either side, and the women weeping. Finally, we have the taking down from the cross and the entombment.

In the cities the churches are very numerous and splendid They have two, three, or four towers, with clocks and chimes of bells, which are very musical. Generally they have a dome over the central part. In fact they are all of the one model, that of St Peter's at Rome They are in the form of a cross—the long part constituting the nave, divided into several aisles by rows of tall pillars of marble, black, white, or variegated, which support the roof; the roof being elegantly painted in fresco, and the flour of splendid mosaic. Sometimes, when these pillars are of inferior material, they are covered with crimson damask. The dead are buried in the churches In the cathedral at Trieste lie buried Don Carlos and his two sons. His widow still resides in Trieste. Two sisters of Louis XVIII. were formerly buried here; but after the restoration their bodies were removed, the King making a very handsome present to the church. About the church are stone basins for holy water, into which the worshippers dip their fingers and then wet their foreheads and cross themselves. Also baptismal fonts, some of them very highly ornamented. The dead body is carried in procession in sumptuous coffins, with wreaths of flowers and white drapery for the young; the poorer class have the coffins painted sky-blue. I have never seen a Catholic marriage. Baptisms may be seen at any time.

The ornamentation of the altars descends to the minutest particulars. In the cathedral at Trieste upon one of the altars is a complete puppet show of the Nativity: Christ in the crib of the stable, the oxen eating out of it; his mother in the straw, the shepherds coming to announce the singing of the angels; and the wise men of the east, who had followed the star to Bethlehem, presenting their gifts. Whether the figures can be made to move by a wire I do not know, but that is probable, as that is usually the way with puppet shows. There are also little images, in white wax, of bishops, the Virgin Mary, Moses, oxen, cows, sheep, and smoking lambs placed on the altars, which are also ornamented with artificial flowers which can hardly be distinguished from the real ones. The priest, in consecrating the mass, stands with his back to the audience. He kneels and bows many times. Books are brought to him, by little boys in white robes, on cushions, out of which he reads, but not in an audible voice. He partakes both of the wafer and the wine; he also puts a wafer into the worshipper's mouth. There are several organs, each with its choir, in each church, and their singing and responses are very fine The worshippers have prayer-books; but the Bible, except in Latin, is not allowed.

New York Independent.

FOREIGN MISSIONS.

The following is the substance of Dr. Morgan's report to the late General Assembly of the church in Ireland, upon their Foreign Missions.

"In the last report of this mission its general features, illustrative of its past history and its present condition, were mainly dwelt upon The object of the present report shall be to put the Assembly in possession of the actual operations carried on at each of the stations, so far as they are known, and as the space allotted to such a record will admit. It is natural to advert to these stations in the order of their occupation by the missionaries of the Assembly.

"RAJKOTE.—This was the earliest station of the mission. It was selected because it is central, and is the principal military depot in Gujarat. Since the Indian mutiny, however, it has undergone changes. The number of troops stationed there is not so great as formerly. Yet it is still a place of importance, and there is no reason to regret the location of our mission there, or to contemplate a removal from it. The mission premises are good and convenient, and its connexion with European society, as well as with a heathen population, requires that there shall be no diminution of the labor that has been bestowed upon it. The following reports of correspondence will sufficiently explain the condition of the mission there. Mr. M'Kee writes on the fifth of October last:—'On the 23d, 24th, and 25th of September we had a public examination of our schools. One hundred and fifty were examined in the common elements of secular instruction, and at length in Scripture truth. The political agent and several officers were present on the second day and took part in the examination. A class of very little boys, though as yet unable to read or write, excited a good deal of interest. These form our infant school They are taught in very simple rhyme, moral maxims and Gospel truths, as also mental arithmetic, and elementary catechism My senior class of twenty-six boys gave much satisfaction. They were examined in geography, writing, reading, doctrinal catechism, but especially on the New Testament, with the truths it contains they are strikingly familiar. Their answers on the doctrines, miracles, and parables of Christ, and the great end of his mission, gave much satisfaction. My morning exercise has uniformly been teaching these lads the truth, and I have ever endeavored to address myself both to the understanding and the heart. May the Spirit of God water His own Word!' It is painful to have to add that the state of Mr. and Mrs. M'Kee's health has latterly very much hindered his labors at Rajkote. He has been compelled to leave it for a time and seek restoration to health by a visit to the hills that are the resort of invalids He has been urged by medical counsel to return to his native land, but he has refused to do so while there is any hope of his being enabled to resume his labors. The directors have fully considered his case and authorized him to act as he shall think proper, or be advised by his brethren of the Presbytery. His conduct has been more than satisfactory; it has been zealous and self-sacrificing. He has commanded the esteem, and affection, and gratitude of all who know him and his work. He has proved himself a most faithful missionary of the Lord Jesus Christ and of His Church. And our earnest prayer is, that he may yet be enabled, according to his own longing desire, fully to resume his labors in his chosen and beloved field of this mission.

"GOGO.—This is the next station in the order of occupation. It has been served throughout the year by the unbroken labors of Mr. Wallace. All the accustomed labors have been prosecuted with the usual diligence and success. The native Church consists of 14 members, and there are 170 children under Christian instruction. Our missionary has had great help in these young men who have been under his care for a considerable time, and who are prosecuting their education under his superintendence in the hope of being qualified for usefulness among their own countrymen.

"SURAT.—It is known that our mission was undertaken in this station at the request of the London Missionary Society, and through an arrangement entered into with them to that effect. It is a position of great importance and influence. It is an ancient and populous city. It has recently been connected with Bombay by a railroad, or is on the eve of being so. Then that railroad on the other side of the city goes on toward Borsad and Ahmedabad, and will eventually be carried Northward as far as Agra; whence it is expected that it may traverse the land to the Eastern coast of Hindostan, and have its terminus at Calcutta. Such a pathway in the East is of incalculable moment. It will create a new era in agriculture and commerce, and develop the resources of the country as they have never been before. What a call there is thus presented to us to occupy the field for Christian influence! The leading cities, such as Surat and Ahmedabad, by the way ought to be strongly occupied. We are happy to say our mission is strong and prosperous in the former. It has been sustained throughout the year chiefly by the labors of Dr. Glasgow and Mr. Montgomery; but others have given occasional help. Mr. M'Kee rendered most valuable service by putting the press into thorough working order. Before leaving this country, on his late visit to it, he got himself instructed in the management of the press by the kind offices of one of our Belfast houses, and he has turned his knowledge to good account in Surat before he settled in Rajkote. Mr. Taylor also has been there recently, and while taking advantage of the press in the publication of a work on education, has made himself otherwise most useful. A very satisfactory report has been furnished by Mr. Montgomery, and it will be the best to give it in his own words. He says:—

"'Through God's great goodness we have been spared to send you another annual report from this station. All the agents of the mission at Surat have enjoyed uninterrupted good health during the year, and opportunity to labor unremittingly in the Lord's work. For our day thus lengthened out we thank the God of our health, and we ask you to unite with us in blessing His name. The works with which we are endeavoring to occupy the "day" thus vouchsafed to us may be learned from the following particulars:—

"'THE PRESS.—The press has been very efficiently managed during the year. The new superintendent continues to discharge his duties in a very satisfactory manner. I never saw our press nearly so efficient as it is now. The printing of the revised version of the Gujarati Old Testament has been completed; and the binding of it is now going on under the superintendence of one of our young men who spent four years at the Government Press at Bombay, in connexion with its binding. We hope to commence immediately the printing of 5,000 copies of the New Testament in large type, with a view to facilitate the study of the word of God by imperfect or dim-sighted readers.

"'SCHOOLS.—The number of our schools at present is 7. The number of children is—boys, 434; girls, 29; total, 463—with an average daily attendance of 322. Are we not entitled to more aid in this work?"

"ROMAN.—Mr. Taylor continues to occupy this station with much encouragement and success. While he gives his attention principally to Borsad as the place of his residence, however, he does not confine his labors to it. Jambusir and Dewan are in his neighborhood, and he superintends native teachers who are located there. At Borsad the church built by the generosity of Major Wallace, and for which he received the thanks of the Assembly, is completed; but there is one thing in connexion with this station to which, from its high importance, our attention must be confined. It is an extension of the spirit already noticed in the neighborhood of Gogo, whereby the inhabitants of a neighboring village of their own accord sought for Christian instruction.

DEATH OF BISHOP MEADE, OF VIRGINIA.

We have already noticed the death of this eminent Bishop, who expired at Richmond, on the 14th of March. The Episcopal Recorder, of Philadelphia, has just come into possession of a number of The Southern Churchman, published at Richmond, containing the address of Bishop Johns at the funeral. The latter speaks of the deceased as "he who, more than any other man, was honored as the instrument in raising the Church in Virginia from what was pronounced hopeless extinction." Alluding to the Bishop's condition a day or two previous to his death, he says:

The chronic affection of the heart, of which for years he was conscious, and from which he long expected sudden death, now developed itself in fearful action. For several days and nights his manly frame bore the assault with extraordinary powers of endurance, and his Christian spirit, strengthened by the Word of God, sustained his great bodily suffering with exemplary patience. "Read me," he said to a friend, "a portion of the sacred Scriptures." "What shall I read?" "The history of the crucifixion." And when this was done he observed, "Yes, six hours did our Lord suffer the intense agony of the cross, and that for us—for our sins—and shall we complain of our sufferings?"

At another time, to one of his respected Presbyters, who was at his bedside taking leave of him, he thus closed his solemn counsel:

Speak boldly to your people Tell them to persevere in sustaining their country in this struggle. The war against us is iniquitous. I am persuaded that God is with us, and will give us success.

On Thursday morning, the day before his death, he requested others who were present to retire, that he might communicate something to me (Bishop Johns, his assistant in the Diocese of Virginia,) in private. When we were alone, he said:

I wish to bear my testimony on some things of importance. The views of evangelical truth and order which I have held and advocated for fifty years, I approve; and exhort my brethren, North and South, to promote more than ever. My course in civil affairs I also approve, resistance to secession at first, till circumstances made it unavoidable. I trust the South will persevere in separation. I believe there are thousands in the North who condemn the course of their administration towards us, and in time will express themselves openly The prospect of rest from sin and suffering is attractive, though I am willing to remain and take my part in the labors and trials which may be before us. My hope is in Christ, "the Rock of Ages." I have no fear of death, and this not from my courage, but from my faith. The present seems a proper time for my departure. I am at peace with God through Jesus Christ my Lord, and in charity with all men, even our bitterest enemies. All that has ever been said in commendation of me, I loathe and abhor, as utterly inconsistent with my consciousness of sin. I commend you, and all my brethren to the tender mercies of Christ, and pray for his blessing on the Church in Virginia.

MISSIONARIES COMPARATIVELY SAFE.

God's providence is the surest protection of his servants. Rev. Dr. Turner, author of Nineteen Years in Polynesia, said, when speaking, in a lecture at Glasgow, Scotland, of the few violent deaths connected with the missions in the South Sea Islands compared with others, that two hundred and sixty persons in search of sandal wood, had been killed during the last thirty years, while of one hundred and twenty missionaries, who had labored there the last twenty years, only Williams and Harris and Mr. and Mrs. Gordon had been killed. The missionaries had already rescued 250,000 from savageism. How small a sacrifice to secure such results!

NEWS FROM DR. LIVINGSTONE.

The well-known African explorer, in a recent letter from the interior of Africa, remarks that Africa is a continent of the future. It is impossible to resist its capabilities. It is pre-eminently a young country, for there the plant is perennial, and requires little of that heart-breaking toil re

FRANCE A LAND OF LAW.

Whatever France may have gained or lost in exchanging a Republic for an Empire, she certainly presents to-day a rare exemplification of complete—perhaps excessive—government. We entered Paris on the 26th of July at midnight, and although that is scarcely too late for the busy life of Parisian life, we were surprised at the universal order that seemed everywhere to prevail.

Whatever orgies may have been in progress within that vast and densely populated area, were at least conducted in an outwardly quiet manner And the explanation was clearly enough seen in the ubiquitous though silent tread of the armed garded police, and when we wheeled into the splendid Rue de Rivoli and confronted the Imperial Guards that stood like statues at every gate and corner of the Palace, there came over us in its strength and fulness the impression that we were in an Empire—a land whose power is the sword, and whose sceptre is the outward symbol of one stern and unflinching will.

This minute extension of power and this close surveillance may not be of necessity irksome to the subject. Its contact with the people is so skilfully managed as scarcely to be felt; or even remembered by the loyal; but it is there, and is prepared to exert itself sternly at any moment Monarchy, in these latter days, has learned to draw its strong cords very deliately

There is nothing of the savage and insulting display of personal superiority and dominion so common among the despots of the past The feeling of self-respect, and so far as may be, even the sense of pride in the subject, is treated with consideration. In France especially Imperial power aims to be imposing and yet unobtrusive; to be everywhere felt, and yet unfelt It is a lion asleep, and yet by no means asleep. Care is taken to please the people and to thoroughly unite their interests with that of the Empire. Whether the monarch is first or the people, is a question which is not named in France, but every energy of the profoundest statesmanship is employed to render each great in the greatness of the other. The same splendid edifices that are covered with "N's," are also objects of pride to the humblest citizen, and whatever renders France the most glorious of Empires, at the same time proves each individual Frenchman, in his own eyes at least, the most glorious type of a man. The Imperial decrees which have filled Paris with magnificent monuments to the present reign, are therefore called "public benefactions"—works which Napoleon has done for the city, and in a sense they are such, though the merit of favors is always less obvious where the recipient is compelled, nolens volens, to foot the bill. Still the masses, so long as the supply of bread is continued, take all for good, and rejoice in the great Babylon, whoever built it. The national band enter the gardens of the Tuileries and the Palais Royals every day at 4 o'clock P M, to play for the people who gather round them by thousands; for the work of the Frenchman is finished at this hour, and he has only to enjoy his late dinner and the various diversions of the evening —Evangelist.

HOW TO SETTLE THE SECESSION DIFFICULTIES IN THE EPISCOPAL CHURCH.

What we expect from the coming General Convention, is the enactment of a canon something like that which we sketched two weeks since, viz.: That when in any Diocese the ecclesiastical authorities have testified their withdrawal from the jurisdiction of the General Convention of the Episcopal Church in the United States, it shall be lawful for the Presiding Bishop to extend Episcopal supervision to any clergy and congregations desiring the same in such Diocese, in the same effect as if said clergy and congregations were in the Presiding Bishop's particular Diocese.

By this process, our Church will be rescued from the stigma and the disastrous consequences of disloyalty in such Dioceses; the loyal clergy within their borders be enabled to continue in their old allegiance, both secular and ecclesiastical, without danger of discipline, and the moral support given by Southern Episcopacy to secession broken.

If the next Convention does not act in the matter, it will be too late. The canons of Virginia, and we presume of all the Southern Dioceses, treat as contumacious all ministers who do not, within a specified period, report to their ecclesiastical authorities. If they continue contumacious they are suspended or deposed. Unless we, in the mean time, establish new and loyal authorities for the loyal clergymen of the South, they will be either forced into ecclesiastical secessionism, or placed under disabilities which it will be then out of our power to relieve. For, as our canons now stand, our whole loyal Church cannot remove the disciplne which a secession Bishop and court may be pleased to inflict on any loyal minister within their diocesan borders.—Episcopal Recorder.

BRIEF REMARKS.

A "United States convention of Universalists" lately assembled in Chicago, and continued its sessions for some days. Their object—at least one of their objects, seemed to be to reader themselves a "power" in the "church;" for they claim to be a branch of the church. They deliberated about colleges, and Sabbath schools, and talked about the "gospel" "So abominably they aped" a Christian convention.

Now, it is well known that I am not one of those, who think that the first and great duty of the faithful Christian is to strengthen and build higher the walls of separation between the different denominations of evangelical Christians. To say no more, I believe this to be bad policy: for the higher these walls are, the sooner they will begin to totter and tumble down, as two or three of them have done within my remembrance. I believe that Christians should delight to meditate more, and talk with one another more, on the great, precious and vital truths on which all denominations of evangelical Christians substantially agree, than on those points about which they differ, important as some of them may be in their own place. A man may be faithful to the particular church to which he belongs, and to all her distinguishing principles which are of any practical moment, and still not sit on the top of the wall which surrounds her, with his bow and quiver, ready to let fly an arrow against every one he sees outside, unless he humbly craves admission from the keepers of the gate. Furthermore, I believe with John Newton that the best way to keep an enemy from filling a bushel with tares is to endeavor to be beforehand with him and fill it with good seed This, if the Apostle is correctly interpreted, in what he chiefly means by contending earnestly for the faith once delivered to the saints. In these views, I have no doubt I will be sustained by at least nine-tenths of my brethren in moments of sober reflection.

But, I feel it to be my duty to say that Universalism is simply infidelity in disguise. The claim of Universalists to be recognised as a branch of the visible church of Christ, I can by no means admit. Its leaders say that a declared infidel is regarded with distrust—that the more sober sort even of irreligious men were shy of open, professed infidels. Therefore they saw that their only hope of success in their endeavors to propagate their principles, was in professing a regard for the teaching of the Scriptures, calling themselves by the name of Christians, and talking about the "gospel."

Though entitled to our commiseration and good will as our erring, deluded fellow-creatures, and to our kind offices as neighbors and friends in society at large, they have no claim on us to recognise them as brethren in Christ

---

TRUTH is an anvil which has broken many a hammer

Domestic Items.

Honor the Brave.—We saw a Methodist preacher in the forty-dozen of the Fire Railroad, foot of Chambers street rose up when he saw a Union soldier enter the house with his wife beside him, and their babe in his arms. Forty-one men, two ladies, a soldier and wife, and the following conversation ensued. Preacher to the soldier: "Where are you from?" "From Bedloe's Island, sir; I'm there among the sick soldiers, though I am very much improved; was sunstruck, and had my back injured from carrying loads of ammunition during the six days' fight in Virginia." "Where did you come from?" "Delaware did you say?" "Yes, sir, and my wife here has come all the way to see me, with our little baby." (There were some most eyes then more than loved them, outside of two.) "Do you know Dr. Harris out there?" "Oh! yes," said both man and wife, "we know Professor Harris and all the Professors; Dr. Thomson married us in his own house." "Well," speaking to the soldier, "going home with your wife?" "Oh! no, only came to the ferry, got to go back right away." "Not going over the ferry to see her on the car?" "No sir, they won't allow that, I must now go back to the Island, get well, and go back to my regiment." "Well, I'll take the babe for you, and see your wife in the cars." "Thank you, sir;" and they all stepped along to the gang plank, where the soldier kissed his wife and babe, perhaps for the last time. The lookers-on were all-kind, but all had to move along, and we rather envied the Methodist preacher whose privilege it was to carry the baby and wait upon the soldier's wife.—The Methodist.

The Coinage and the Scarcity of Specie.—It will be seen by the following table that, although specie is so scarce, the amount of gold coined at the Mint in September was more than the monthly average since January 1st:—

	Gold Coinage.	Silver Coinage.	Copper Coinage.
January,	$118 100	$124,411	$12 000
February,	80,319	117,930	10,000
March,	171,317	90,000	11,000
April,	162,671	2?,?05	10 000
May,	174,164	20,634	10,000
June,	268,266	42,000	15,000
July,	167,995	16,499	30,000
August,	440,322	22 481	21 000
September,	410,906	18,045	28,000

High Prices.—In order that our readers may be better informed in the current articles of home consumption as compared with the rates at the time of last year, we have prepared the following statement:

	Cost on Oct. 1st. 1861	Cost on Oct. 1st. 1862.
Brown sheeting,	6½c. ₱ yard.	10c ₱ yard
Prints, calicoes, &c.,	6½c ₱ yard.	13½c ₱ yard.
Bleached muslins,	6½c ₱ yard.	13½c ₱ yard.
Canton flannels,	10c ₱ yard.	18c ₱ yard.
CLOTHING.
Doeskins,	125c ₱ yard.	25c ₱ yard
Brown jeans,	25 ₱ yard	37½c ₱ yard
Tweeds,	$1.50 ₱ yard.	$2.50 ₱ yard.
GROCERIES.
Oolong Tea,	60c ₱ lb.	80c ₱ lb.
Young Hyson Tea,	60c ₱ lb.	80 cents ₱ lb.
Oregon Tea,	50c ₱ lb.	60c ₱ lb.
Gunpowder Tea,	60c ₱ lb.	80c ₱ lb.
Imperial Tea,	60c ₱ lb.	80c ₱ lb.
Cube Sugar,	12c ₱ lb.	20c ₱ lb.
Porto Rico Sugar,	9½c ₱ lb.	20c ₱ lb.
Lagunyra Coffee,	16 cents ₱ lb.	25c ₱ lb.
Rio Coffee,	13½c ₱ lb.	20c ₱ lb.
Porto Rico Molasses,	40c ₱ gal.	65c ₱ gal.
Salt,	$2.50 ₱ sack.	$4.50 ₱ sack.
Nutmegs,	60c ₱ lb.	75c ₱ lb.
Pepper,	18c ₱ lb.	30c ₱ lb.
Allspice,	12c ₱ lb.	20c ₱ lb.
Cinnamon,	75c ₱ lb.	90c ₱ lb.
RAW COTTON, &c.
Cotton Laps,	16c ₱ lb.	40c ₱ lb.
Wadding,	16c ₱ lb.	20c ₱ lb.
Carpet Chain,	22c ₱ lb.	40c ₱ lb.
Lamp Wick,	20c ₱ lb.	40c ₱ lb.
Oatmeal,	4c ₱ lb.	7c ₱ lb.
Dried Cloths, Cassimeres, &c., have increased from 10 to 12 ₱ cent.
DRUGS.
Camphor,	50c ₱ lb.	$1.50 ₱ lb.
Opium,	$4.75 do.	$7 00 do.
Gum Shellac,	30c. do.	75c. do.
Borax,	18c. do.	30c. do.
Cream Tartar,	30c do.	60c. do.
Indigo,	$1 00 do.	$2.00 do.
Rhubarb,	50c. do.	$1.50 do.
Red Senna,	15c do.	$1.00 do.
Pink Root,	15c. do.	25c. do.
Virginia Snake Root,	25c do.	40 cents do.
Tartaric Acid,	50c do.	75c do.
Sulphur,	4½c do.	9½c do.
Sulphate Quinine,	$1 00 ₱ oz.	$2.00 ₱ oz.
PAINTS.
Manuf. Cerussite,	10c ₱ lb.	20c ₱ lb.
Sugars	12c ₱ lb.	25c ₱ lb.

Mme Demorest, of 473 Broadway, has recently introduced a very small and efficient sewing-machine that makes the running-stitch exactly like hand-sewing. It uses a common needle, sews very rapidly, and is so easily understood that a child cannot fail to use it with advantage. It is so diminutive that it can be carried about without inconvenience, even in the pocket, and is attached to the table like a sewing-head, and sold at only $6. Every lady can now have a sewing-machine, and those who have one already, will find this one a valuable auxiliary on account of the running-stitch.

Maps—We have just received a copy of Lloyd's New County Colored Map of the United States, Canadas and New Brunswick, engraved on steel in the highest style of art, from actual surveys up to July, 1862. This is certainly the finest and most accurate map we have ever seen. And the price is so low that it is within the reach of every one. The map can be folded without creasing, put up in strong wrappers, and sent by mail at a cost of 54 cents.

We have also received an equally good map of Virginia, from surveys up to 1862. This map is the one from which General McClellan plans his campaigns in Virginia. Price 25 cents.

For either of the above maps, address J. T. Lloyd, Publisher, 164 Broadway, New York.

Rebel Loss Since Leaving Richmond. Sixty Thousand.—An officer in Washington has stated that he had heard from General Lee the acknowledgment that, since their advance upon General Pope at the Rapidan, in all their battles at Manassas and Bull Run, before Washington, and in the several engagements in Maryland, in killed, wounded, and prisoners, and from sickness caused by marching and other causes, and by desertion, their army had suffered a reduction of 60,000 men.

They have undoubtedly lost much from desertion and sickness, and, in consideration of the immense number of stragglers, I think these numbers are not beyond what is credible.

Grand Review of the Troops by President Lincoln and General McClellan.

HEADQUARTERS OF THE ARMY OF THE POTOMAC, Friday, October 3.

The President, accompanied by General McClellan, has to-day reviewed the several corps of the Army of the Potomac, beginning with General Burnside, which is located near the mouth of the Antietam, and concluding with that of General Franklin, at Boonsville, and embracing those of Porter and Banks.

At each point the people collected in large numbers, and manifested the greatest enthusiasm towards both the President and General McClellan. The prevailing spirit of loyalty was clearly inherited by the greetings which on every hand were showered upon these distinguished personages.

The President, after visiting General Richardson, who lies wounded near by, in the morning, will be escorted to Frederick, where he will take a special train for Washington.

The Torn Flag.—In the battle of Antietam the regimental colors of Massachusetts 19th were literally cut into ribbons by the storm of the enemy's shot. It happened the next day that the wreck of this gallant regiment, bearing this honorable remnant of their banner, marched by General McClellan. The General and his staff uncovered their heads—a token of respect for the tattered flag—as it passed them, a recognition of their trophy which was welcomed by the men with enthusiastic cheers.

Sigel—The New York Post of last evening says: "A letter from Gen. Sigel's command, received in the city to-day, confirms the statements which have already been published concerning the condition of that corps. General Sigel's cavalry are without horses, and nearly destitute of officers or arms. Many of his troops have been taken from him, and some of them sent to Western Virginia, and his repeated calls for reinforcements have elicited no response. An earnest appeal is made for new recruits to bring up the several regiments of the corps, and it is understood that active efforts will be put forth in the city to meet this call."

The President's Proclamation in the South—The Richmond Whig, speaking of President Lincoln's proclamation, says it ordains servile insurrection in the Confederate States, and is and unconstitutional, either North or South. It is a stab at the pen to destroy four thousand millions of our property, and is as much as a bid for the slaves to rise in insurrection, with assurance of aid from the whole military and naval power of the United States. It speaks of the cruelty in the Administration, and says Butler is a saint when compared with his master. Our military operations are henceforth to assume a very grave character. The [illegible] will [illegible] all terms between us. The next campaign will be a tremendous one, both for the magnitude and character of the hostilities. Let our authorities prepare the [illegible] The enemy is making great preparations, as well as issuing foolish proclamations. We must respond with equal energy. If we do not we shall be lost. But we will do it.

Emancipation and the Rebel Congress.—The [illegible] 20th ultimo, as we learn from the Richmond Whig. Mr. Benjamin, of Louisiana, submitted a joint resolution embodying the declaration of the Proclamation, that [illegible]

Mme Demorest, of 473 Broadway, has recently introduced a very small and efficient sewing-machine that makes the running-stitch exactly like hand-sewing. It uses a common needle, sews very rapidly, and is so easily understood that a child cannot fail to use it with advantage. It is so diminutive that it can be carried about without inconvenience, even in the pocket, and is attached to the table like a sewing-head, and sold at only $6. Every lady can now have a sewing-machine, and those who have one already, will find this one a valuable auxiliary on account of the running-stitch.

Maps—We have just received a copy of Lloyd's New County Colored Map of the United States, Canadas and New Brunswick, engraved on steel in the highest style of art, from actual surveys up to July, 1862. This is certainly the finest and most accurate map we have ever seen. And the price is so low that it is within the reach of every one. The map can be folded without creasing, put up in strong wrappers, and sent by mail at a cost of 54 cents.

We have also received an equally good map of Virginia, from surveys up to 1862. This map is the one from which General McClellan plans his campaigns in Virginia. Price 25 cents.

For either of the above maps, address J. T. Lloyd, Publisher, 164 Broadway, New York.

Rebel Loss Since Leaving Richmond. Sixty Thousand.—An officer in Washington has stated that he had heard from General Lee the acknowledgment that, since their advance upon General Pope at the Rapidan, in all their battles at Manassas and Bull Run, before Washington, and in the several engagements in Maryland, in killed, wounded, and prisoners, and from sickness caused by marching and other causes, and by desertion, their army had suffered a reduction of 60,000 men.

They have undoubtedly lost much from desertion and sickness, and, in consideration of the immense number of stragglers, I think these numbers are not beyond what is credible.

Grand Review of the Troops by President Lincoln and General McClellan.

HEADQUARTERS OF THE ARMY OF THE POTOMAC, Friday, October 3.

The President, accompanied by General McClellan, has to-day reviewed the several corps of the Army of the Potomac, beginning with General Burnside, which is located near the mouth of the Antietam, and concluding with that of General Franklin, at Boonsville, and embracing those of Porter and Banks.

At each point the people collected in large numbers, and manifested the greatest enthusiasm towards both the President and General McClellan. The prevailing spirit of loyalty was clearly inherited by the greetings which on every hand were showered upon these distinguished personages.

The President, after visiting General Richardson, who lies wounded near by, in the morning, will be escorted to Frederick, where he will take a special train for Washington.

The Torn Flag.—In the battle of Antietam the regimental colors of Massachusetts 19th were literally cut into ribbons by the storm of the enemy's shot. It happened the next day that the wreck of this gallant regiment, bearing this honorable remnant of their banner, marched by General McClellan. The General and his staff uncovered their heads—a token of respect for the tattered flag—as it passed them, a recognition of their trophy which was welcomed by the men with enthusiastic cheers.

Sigel—The New York Post of last evening says: "A letter from Gen. Sigel's command, received in the city to-day, confirms the statements which have already been published concerning the condition of that corps. General Sigel's cavalry are without horses, and nearly destitute of officers or arms. Many of his troops have been taken from him, and some of them sent to Western Virginia, and his repeated calls for reinforcements have elicited no response. An earnest appeal is made for new recruits to bring up the several regiments of the corps, and it is understood that active efforts will be put forth in the city to meet this call."

The President's Proclamation in the South—The Richmond Whig, speaking of President Lincoln's proclamation, says it ordains servile insurrection in the Confederate States, and is and unconstitutional, either North or South. It is a stab at the pen to destroy four thousand millions of our property, and is as much as a bid for the slaves to rise in insurrection, with assurance of aid from the whole military and naval power of the United States. It speaks of the cruelty in the Administration, and says Butler is a saint when compared with his master. Our military operations are henceforth to assume a very grave character. The [illegible] will [illegible] all terms between us. The next campaign will be a tremendous one, both for the magnitude and character of the hostilities. Let our authorities prepare the [illegible] The enemy is making great preparations, as well as issuing foolish proclamations. We must respond with equal energy. If we do not we shall be lost. But we will do it.

Emancipation and the Rebel Congress.—The [illegible] 20th ultimo, as we learn from the Richmond Whig. Mr. Benjamin, of Louisiana, submitted a joint resolution embodying the declaration of the Proclamation, that [illegible]

heat, and declaring that as it is levelled against the citizens of the Confederate States, it is "a gross violation of the usages of civilized warfare, an outrage on the rights of private property, and an invitation to an atrocious servile war, and therefore should be held up to the execration of mankind, and counteracted by such severe retaliatory measures as in the judgment of the President may be best calculated to secure its withdrawal or arrest its execution." After some debate, during which the immediate raising of the "black flag" was [illegible] the matter was referred to the Judiciary Committee.

From McClellan's Army.

General McClellan's Headquarters, October 5, 1862.

A company of the 54th Pennsylvania Regiment, who were guarding the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad bridge at Pawpaw, about half way between Hancock and Cumberland, were yesterday attacked by a rebel force, and all taken prisoners. At the same time a cavalry force under Col. McReynolds captured the encampment of the rebels, and brought away two pieces of artillery, ten wagons, and sixty horses and mules.

A strong cavalry force under Gen. Averill has been sent in pursuit of the rebel force.

HARPER'S FERRY, OCT. 3.

The Railroad bridge was completed yesterday, and trains of cars passed over it into Harper's Ferry to-day with troops and munitions of war, and army stores. The Winchester road is being put in order, and trains will run at once to and beyond Bolivar Heights.

The President spent the day in reviewing the different divisions of the troops, after a long consultation in the morning with General McClellan. A strong advance will undoubtedly be made into Virginia—but whether it will be by way of Harper's Ferry, or over the Williamsport ford, no one has the slightest idea.

A large body of the enemy are still at Falling Waters and Bunker's Hill, in the rear of Martensburg, whilst a few regiments are at Charlestown, their pickets meeting those of General Sumner about three miles this side of that place. The fortifications on the Maryland Heights are being strengthened, so as to make the place truly impregnable in case of a reverse, and also to enable the holding of Harper's Ferry with but a small force.

The guns being mounted there will command both Maryland and Bolivar Heights, and can be swung around so as to be brought to bear on the approaches to Solomon's Gap, in the direction of Antietam Valley.

Kentucky.—The army of Kentucky has been thoroughly reorganized and strengthened, and now consists of three heavy corps of 25 roads, respectively, under command of Gens. McCook, Crittenden, and Gilbert, the whole commanded by Gen. George W. Morgan, the distinguished officer who captured the Cumberland Gap and held it for more than four months, although at one time entirely surrounded by the enemy. Major-General Don Carlos Buell has been relieved of command in Kentucky, and ordered to report himself at Indianapolis to take charge of the camp of instruction near that city, and to attend to the reorganization and disposition of paroled prisoners. Gen. Buell has evidently failed as a general field officer. He has always stood very high, however, as a tactician, and, although an admirable adjutant, he has failed to display the qualities usually found in a great general in any of his movements.

The Monitor.—The arrival of the United States iron-clad gunboat Monitor at Washington has been the cause of many persons originating silly rumors about the powerful engine of naval warfare which we deem it our duty to correct. The reasons why the Monitor is now at Washington, are as follows:—During her last engagement with the Merrimac, in moving about, she broke some of her propelling machinery, which was only temporarily repaired at Fortress Monroe, in order that she might accompany the Galena and Naugatuck up the James river. Her ventilation is not as good as it should be, and the vessel wants housing in some parts. The "Monitor" has been under steam and on duty incessantly for more than six months, and the "wear and tear" on her inner works has been considerable. A shot from the Merrimac, an "11-inch solid Dahlgren," knocked off a portion of the edge-plating near the bow. She greatly needs cleansing and oiling up on every part, and in view of all this, and the fact that the Young Merrimac is not coming down from Richmond for some time to come, the Monitor has come to Washington to rest her officers and crew, and obtain some repairs. The turret of the Monitor was severely tested by the Merrimac, and guns at Drury's Bluff, but she seems to be perfectly invulnerable to any ordinance now used by mankind. The New Ironsides and Galena take her place at Newport News, and await the coming down of the young Merrimac.

Despatch from General Halleck to General McClellan.

WASHINGTON, September 30, 1862.

Major General McClellan, Commanding the Army of the Potomac:

General—Your report of yesterday giving the results of the battles of South Mountain and Antietam, has been received and submitted to the President.

Those were hard-fought battles, but well-earned and decided victories. The valor and endurance of your army in the several conflicts which terminated in the expulsion of the enemy from the loyal State of Maryland, are creditable alike to the troops and to the officers who commanded them. A grateful country, while mourning the lamented dead, will not be unmindful of the honors due the living.

(Signed) H. W. HALLECK, General in Chief.

Rebels Preparing to Retreat.—My informant states that for ten days the rebels have been sending back their sick and wounded up the Shenandoah Valley towards Staunton. Baggage wagons have been passing continually filled with them.

The Confederates have also been sending back cannon during all that time. My informant states that no one has any idea that the rebels will make a stand Conversing with a rebel officer, he said, "Don't you see your army is all demoralized—you can't fight again." The answer was a confession of their deplorable condition, but an assurance that they could and would fight, though just now it was not appearing when. So impressed with the disorganization of their army is our informant, that he believes it will be impossible for them to do anything hereafter. His great reliance is that the Government, not appreciating the desperateness of their case, may be inclined to accept terms of peace far more favorable for the rebels than we are able to impose upon them.

The Rebels at Winchester.—WASHINGTON, October 3, 1862.—A letter from Sharpsburg, dated last night, and received here to-day, states that there are decided indications that the enemy is fortifying Winchester and Martinsburg, and seem determined on holding themselves in a defensive position. Another reconnoissance had shown that the rebels had left their dead unburied on the field after the late skirmishes. News from the front to-day represents nothing of special interest.

Garibaldi's Army Tendered to the United States.—New York, October 4th.—R. A. Wilkens, of this city, has received a letter from an officer of Garibaldi's army, tendering the services of from four to six thousand veteran soldiers and two hundred officers, to fight for the Union, and asking if the State of New York would engage them. They can arrive in New York fully equipped, and will have no difficulty in leaving Italy, as they have taken no part in the late demonstration.

The Cartel of Exchange.

First—An equitable exchange of prisoners, man for man, officer for officer, or officers of higher grade exchanged for officers of lower grade, or for privates, according to the scale of equivalents.

Second—That privates and officers, and men of different services may be exchanged according to the same scale of equivalents.

Third—That all prisoners, of whatever arm of service, are to be exchanged or paroled in ten days from the time of their capture, if it be practicable to transfer them to their own lines in that time—if not, so soon after as practicable.

Fourth—That no officer, soldier or employee in the service of either party is to be considered as exchanged or absolved from his parole until he equivalent has actually reached the lines of his friends.

Fifth—That the parole forbids the performance of field, garrison, police, or guard, or constable duty.

JOHN A. DIX,
Major-General U. S. Army.
D. H. HILL,
Major-General C. S. Army.

The War in Kentucky—The Masterly Retreat of General Morgan.

Cincinnati, October 4th.—A despatch from Captain Hauser, of the Thirty-third Indiana Regiment, dated Greensburgh, Kentucky, the 3d inst., says: "General George W. Morgan arrived with his whole command at Greensburgh this evening. He brought all his trains and artillery with him. His men are in fine health, notwithstanding the many hardships they have undergone in their march from Cumberland Gap.

The Great Victory at Corinth. Miss.—Official Despatches of General Grant

Yesterday, the rebels, under Van Dorn, Price, and [illegible] were repulsed from their attack on Corinth with great slaughter. The enemy are in full retreat, leaving their dead and wounded on the field. Reconnoissances [illegible] The enemy is making great preparations, as well as issuing foolish proclamations. We must respond with equal energy. If we do not we shall be lost. But we will do it.

Emancipation and the Rebel Congress.—The [illegible] 20th ultimo, as we learn from the Richmond Whig. Mr. Benjamin, of Louisiana, submitted a joint resolution embodying the declaration of the Proclamation, that [illegible] seven hundred to one thousand prisoners, besides the wounded, are left in our hands.

(SECOND DESPATCH.)

General Ord, who followed General Hurlburt, and took command, met the enemy to-day on the Hatchie River, as I understand from his despatch, and drove them across the stream and got possession of the heights with our troops. General Ord took two batteries and about two hundred prisoners. A large portion of Gen. Rosecrans's forces were at Chewalla. At this distance everything looks favorable, and I cannot see how the enemy are to escape without losing everything but their small arms. I have strained everything to take into the fight an adequate force, and to get them to the right place.

U. S. GRANT,
Major General Commanding.

Letter from General McClellan—The Valor of Pennsylvania Acknowledged.

(From the Harrisburg Telegraph, Oct. 2)

The following letter will explain itself. As part of the history of the rebellion, it deserves to be printed wherever there is a man who went forth at the summons of Gov. Curtin to rally on the border for the defence of the Common wealth from invasion.

HEADQUARTERS ARMY OF THE POTOMAC, SHARPSBURG, Sept. 27, 1862.

GOVERNOR: I beg to avail myself of almost the first moment I have had since the general battles, to tender to you my thanks for your wise and energetic action in calling out the militia of Pennsylvania for its defence, when threatened by a numerous and victorious army of the enemy. Fortunately circumstances rendered it impossible for the enemy to set foot upon the soil of Pennsylvania, but the moral support rendered to my army by your action, was none the less mighty. In the name of my army and for myself, I again tender to you our acknowledgments for your patriotic course; the manner in which the people of Pennsylvania responded to your call and hastened to the defence of their frontier, no doubt exercised a great influence upon the enemy.

I am, very respectfully, and cheerfully yours,
GEO. B. MCCLELLAN,
Major-General.

His Excellency A. G. CURTIN, Governor of Penna.

The Social, Civil, and Statistical Association of the Colored People of Pennsylvania open a subscription list to aid the freed men at Port Royal and other points where they may be located, and respectfully ask the co-operation of the colored citizens and others in this city, or elsewhere, in money or clothing.

Any amount of value received will be acknowledged, with the name of the donor, in the Recorder, where a constant record will be kept.

Subscriptions may be sent to Jacob C. White, at the office of the Lebanon Cemetery, 711 Lombard Street, and also to William Still, 107 North Fifth Street, and to Rev. E. Weaver, 619 Pine Street.

PAID.

Statistical Society,	$50 00
Clayton Miller,	2 00
William Still,	5 00
Robert Adger,	1 00
Henry Minturn,	2 00
Catherine Johnson,	2 00
Wm Lewis,	2 00
Wm Wormley,	1 00
Harriet Shorter,	1 00
Sarah S. Hawkins,	1 00
Rev. Jonathan C. Gibbs,	1 00
James P. [illegible]	2 00
Benjamin F. Hall,	2 00
S. M. S.,	1 00
Elizabeth Gordon,	1 00
P. J. Dreer,	1 00

It affords us pleasure to acknowledge the receipt of ten dollars, the proceeds of Miss Anna E. Dickinson's lecture at Concert Hall for the contrabands, contributed to the S. C. and Statistical Association, to be applied as intended.

WM. STILL,
Cor. Sec. of S., C. and Statistical Association of the Colored People of Penna.

ADVERTISEMENTS.

MRS. MARTHA COLLINS.

730 Russell Street, above Fitzwater.

Begs leave to inform her friends and the public generally, that she has opened an INFANT SCHOOL for Boys and Girls, to whom she will pay special attention in teaching the primary departments of Reading, Writing, and Arithmetic, also Singing, upon the most reasonable and accommodating terms. She does not hesitate to say that she will be able to please all who may give her a trial.

MRS. S. SHORTER HAWKINS'

DRY GOODS, HOSIERRY, AND TRIMMING STORE,

No. 615 LOMBARD STREET, PHILADELPHIA

Mrs H calls the attention of her friends and patrons to a new stock of Fall and Winter Goods, consisting of Delaines, Calicoes, Flannels, Muslins, Drills, Shawls, Removal, and Hoop-Skirts

N B Regalia and Dress Trimmings still on hand. All will be sold as near the old prices as possible. Call and see.

PERRY & FITZGERALD'S

PROCESS FOR MAKING LIGHT, NUTRITIOUS, AND UNADULTERATED BREAD, WITHOUT FERMENTATION.

The new process of bread-making, patented by Perry & Fitzgerald, removes all the obstacles which have hitherto rendered it impossible to manufacture perfectly pure, sweet, and nutritious bread. The entire process is performed by mechanical means, and is eminently cleanly

The process consists in mixing the flour in a closed vessel, and the application of pure carbonic gas under pressure, by which the dough mass is made thoroughly light and ready to be discharged into pans, for baking, in the brief space of fifteen or twenty minutes. The discharge is speedy, the vessels, and each machine requires the operation, in all its details, from the putting in of the flour to the discharging of the dough, from twenty five to forty minutes.

The invention of Perry & Fitzgerald effects a revolution in the preparation of bread, by establishing a system of wholesome manufacture not subject to the vicissitudes and evils of fermentation, but exact and certain in its results:—1. Because, by the substitution of mechanical for manual labor, and in the superior value of the article produced it promises large profits upon the capital employed. 2. Because such employment of capital, as well as the protection afforded by the patent, gives adequate security against competition. But whilst preventing undue competition it produces none of the evils of a monopoly, because it leaves the consumer at all times in possession of his former means of supply, to be resorted to, should the monopoly ever use improperly.

The applied carbonic acid gas, under pressure, to a mechanically kneaded dough-mass, as in the inventions of Perry & Fitzgerald, did not occur to Dr. Liebig though he seems to have had a clear & reckoning of the importance of the artificial use of the gas since he states, hypothetically, that "if water, highly impregnated with carbonic acid gas, be used for kneading the dough the resulting bread will be somewhat spongy. Could a light article," he continues, "be produced in this way, then, as the sugar would remain undecomposed, the bread would be so much the sweeter and more nourishing."

What to Dr. Liebig, as a scientific theorist, was a comprehended chemical truth, has been practically developed by the brilliant invention of Perry & Fitzgerald. Precisely still hold their masses in grateful remembrance, as can any one who has ever tasted Liebig's [illegible]

ITS SUPERIORITY. The superiority of unfermented bread is by no means new. Dr. Cullen, who wrote more than seventy years ago, says—

"In Scotland, nine tenths of the lower class of people, and that in the greater part of the whole, live upon unfermented bread, and unfermented farinaceous in other forms, and there are not a more healthy people anywhere to be found. In the course of fifty years, that I have practised among them, I have had occasion to know this, and have hardly met with a disease, of any consequence, that I could impute to the use of unfermented farinacea."

At a later period Professor Thompson, of Glasgow, in his work on the "Food of Animals," after alluding to the facts collected in above by Dr. Cullen, and other kindred facts, observes—

"Such, then, being sufficient evidence in favor of the wholesomeness of unfermented bread, it becomes important to discover in what respects it differs from fermented bread. The result gained by this process (fermentation) may be considered to be merely the dispersion of the particles of which the loaf is composed, so as to render the mass more readily divisible by the proper(illegible) organs of digestion. But, as this object is gained at a less cost by the [illegible] are [illegible] it becomes a matter of interest to ascertain the amount of the loss sustained in the process."

The result of Professor Thompson's experiments showed a difference in favor of unfermented bread of nearly seven per cent over that made by the ordinary process. In other words, there was a loss of over one eleventh of the nutritive properties of the flour which, by the process of fermentation was driven into the air and lost.

We propose now to show particularly and clearly [illegible] of the Bread made without fermentation [illegible] agents, over the Bread made by these processes. Although it is [illegible] that has already been said, the superiority appears in so many [illegible] contrast, put the public still in better position to have the points stated specifically, for it only needs that the advantages secured by this method be clearly understood in order to its universal introduction in the manufacture of Bread.

I. ITS CLEANLINESS.—Instead of the dough being mixed by the naked hands or feet the bread, from the wetting of the flour to the completion of the baking, is not, and cannot even be touched by any one. "One desideratum attained in its manufacture," says Dr. Wardsworth, "is the entire cleanliness." Says Dr. Wardsworth: "The process is not only purely scientific, but pre-eminently cleanly."

II. ITS PRESERVATION OF ALL THE NUTRIENT PRINCIPLES OF THE FLOUR.—As the raising of the dough is by the mechanical introduction of pure carbonic acid gas, under pressure, in a closed vessel or receiver it takes a perfect yeast-like or spongy texture. All the constituents of the flour remain wholly undisturbed, while the process of raising bread by fermentation inevitably sacrifices some of them, as has been already shown

III. ITS UNIFORM CHARACTER.—Bread made by the New Process is uniformly light, sweet, and nutritious The conditions being simple, and not liable to variation, a uniform result is always produced, even in the hottest weather Says the London Observer—"The objectionable consequences of fermentation being avoided, the constituents of the flour are not [illegible] and unchanged, the resulting loaf being absolutely pure."

A SERMON
ON
SECRET SOCIETIES.

Preached in Portland, Oregon, October 21, 1862. By Rev. P. B. Chamberlain, pastor of the First Congregational Church. Third edition. Price 10 cents.—$1.00 per dozen. $7 00 per 100. Will be sent by mail, on receipt of the money and direction. Wm. S. Young, No 702 Race street, Philadelphia

WILLIAM S. YOUNG,
LATE FOWLER & YOUNG,
Book, Job and Newspaper
Printing Office,
No. 52 NORTH SIXTH STREET,
PHILADELPHIA.

Advertisements.

THE DAUGHTERS OF HOPE GRAND UNION Temperance Society met, it being the thirteenth convention, April 10th, 1861. Representatives from Lodges are as follows:—

From Garnet Union No 4, D. of T. from Phœnix Union, No [illegible], D of T., from Northern Union, No 10, D. of T.; Webb's Union, of Chambersburgh, Pa.; from Dr. Rose' Union of Carlisle, Pa.; from Mount Olive Union No 19 D of T from Vanbrunt's Union No 15, D. of T., of Norristown, Pa

Officers installed to their several positions are as follows:

Grand P., Sister Bennet, Grand Associate Sister Burrin, Grand Treasurer, Sister Lawrett, Grand Conductress, C Thompson; Grand Sentinel, A. L. Dunnett, Grand Chaplain, Elder Hall.

G P. F.,	Sister E. Roberts,	G. P. P	Sister Anderson,
"	" E. Bowers,	"	" J F Black,
"	" M H Newby,	"	" E. A Grant,
"	" S Nyeap,	"	" White,
"	" S. Davis,	"	" S Hall.

THE DAUGHTERS OF CORNISH SOCIETY

The STATED QUARTERLY MEETIN

SONG OF THE RIVER.

Clear and cool, clear and cool,
By laughing shingle and foaming weir,
Cool and clear, cool and clear,
By shining shingle and foaming weir,
Under the crag where the eagle sings,
And the ivied wall where the church-bell rings;
Undefiled, for the undefiled,
Play by me, bathe in me, mother and child!

Dank and foul, dank and foul,
By the smoke-grimed town in its murky cowl;
Foul and dank, foul and dank,
By wharf and sewer and slimy bank;
Darker and darker, the farther I go,
Baser and baser, the richer I grow;
Who dare sport with the sin-defiled?
Shrink from me, turn from me, mother and child!

Strong and free, strong and free,
The flood-gates are open away to the sea,
Free and strong, free and strong,
Cleansing my stream as I hurry along
To the golden sands and the leaping bar,
And the tameless tide that will not be char.
As I lose myself in the infinite main,
As a soul that has sinned and is pardoned again,
Undefiled, for the undefiled,
Play by me, bathe in me, mother and child!

—Charles Kingsley.

TO COLUMBUS DYING.

FROM THE GERMAN, BY W. H. FURNESS.

Soon with thee will all be over,
Soon the voyage will be begun,
Which shall bear thee to discover,
Far away, a land unknown.

Land which each alone must visit,
But no tidings bear to men,
For no sailor once departed
Ever hath returned again.

No carved wood, nor broken branches,
Ever drift from that far wild,
He who on that ocean launches
Meets no curse of angel child.

All is mystery before thee,
But in peace, and love, and faith,
And with hope attended, sail'st thou
Off upon the ship of death.

Undismay'd, my noble sailor,
Spread thee, spread thy canvass out,
Spurt, on a sea of ether,
Soon shalt thou serenely float.

Where the deeps no plummet soundeth,
Fear no hidden breakers there;
And the fanning wings of angels
Shall thy bark right onward bear.

Quit now, full of heart and comfort,
These Azores, they are of earth;
Where the rosy clouds are parting,
There the blessed isles loom forth.

Heest thou now thy San Salvador?
Him, thy Saviour, thou shalt hail;
Where no storms of earth can reach thee,
Where thy hopes shall no more fail.

THE YOUNG VOLUNTEER.

"If you were only a Christian, Albert, I would not oppose your enlistment; but how can I send you to the army, with the knowledge that if you fall, you lose your soul and body both?"

"I don't mean to get killed, father; but if I do, my patriotism, like charity, will cover a multitude of sins."

"Do not trifle, Albert; impenitence is not a slight stain, to be easily effaced by some praiseworthy deed. True, patriotism is a duty as well as repentance; but a duty performed, will not atone for, or excuse a sin committed. Only give yourself to God, my son, and I will heartily give you to your country."

"Father, I cannot stop to get religion now. I am bound to see my country pulled through the straits in which she is labouring; but if you will let me go to the army, I promise to become a Christian as soon as I come back."

The father hesitated—and thought—and finally answered, "go."

"It is not because of your promise, Albert," he added, "though I doubt not you are sincere in making it, yet I know better than you how little likely you are to fulfil it. But I fear that in withholding you from the call of your country until you become pious, seems to be making terms with God. I feel that the patriot's call is truly a voice from heaven, and as such I will yield you to it, and trust the Lord to prepare you for whatever he is preparing for you. Only remember, my son, that one who once declined the gospel message with a promise of attending to it at "a more convenient season," was never afterwards known to hear or receive it."

Albert Johnson went from his father's presence with an arrow in his heart. So long as his parents opposed his enlistment, even under the plea of his want of preparation for the terrible contingencies of war, he thought them obstinate, and possibly insincere. But when his father, struggling between a parent's love and a Christian's duty, submitted to the call of Providence, and sent him forth to acknowledged danger and possible death, with only his simple trust in God to stay his breaking heart, Albert felt, as he never had before, the sacredness of God's claims, and the worth of an immortal soul.

He went to Camp L——, and diligently performed the various military evolutions required of him. But through the busy day and the quiet night the thought of a higher and holier duty pressed upon his heart. In vain did he seek to quiet conscience with the promise which he had offered to his father. "He would not accept it," said Albert to himself, "and how much more will God, who requires my heart now, frown upon my dismissing his claims with the promise of obedience in future—that future which, in the just exercise of his sovereignty, he may never give me. Oh, to be a Christian now—to live as a child of God, loving and trusting the Saviour in life or in death—to fight the battles of the Lord in my own heart, amidst a sinful world, and against my country's foes—this, this is what I want." And falling on his knees, he offered that simple petition never rejected when it is the voice of a penitent and trusting soul, "God be merciful to me a sinner."

Henceforth, Albert Johnson served his country as unto the Lord—and his father had the unspeakable joy of believing that God had thus rewarded his struggling faith when he gave his son as a volunteer.—Congregationalist.

GRAY SQUIRREL

The gray squirrel is one of the most beautiful and graceful of the inhabitants of our forests, in which it generally makes its home, hardly ever venturing from them, unless occasionally, when the Indian corn is ripe, it enters the fields to add a little to its winter store of nuts; the amount which it pilfers could hardly be missed, however, unless the field should happen to be in or near the woods.

It prefers forests of chestnuts or oaks, in which its winter store can be readily collected. The first heavy frost is the signal for this work to commence, and the dropping of the chestnuts and acorns which the frost has loosened, accompanied by the rustling of the squirrel through the newly-fallen leaves as it gathers the nuts together, and carefully deposits them in hollow trees and crevices of rocks, or buries them in some secure place beneath the leaves, are the sounds most intimately connected with our woods in the autumn season.

The summer nest is built in some tall tree, at the junction of several limbs with the trunk. It is composed of sticks and leaves, and is lined with soft grass and ferns; in this the young are reared, and live with the female till they are old enough to shift for themselves. At the approach of winter, some hollow in a tree is selected, sometimes the abandoned nest of a woodpecker, in which a warm nest is built, composed of grass and soft leaves; this is the winter home of usually the whole family. In early spring the young are driven off by the old ones, who soon build the summer nest, in which to rear another family. The young, after being driven off, soon pair, and in their turn become heads of families.

The habits of this animal are very interesting. You may be walking through the woods, and shortly you hear what you at first think to be the barking of a small dog; on listening, you discover your mistake; the abrupt notes you can, with chattering guttural additions, proceed from the tall tree a few rods from you; you cautiously steal on tip-toe to the fruit of the tree, but do not see the animal, even after looking carefully on every side. You know the little fellow is there, for he could not possibly have got out of the tree unless you had seen him. Now, if you go close to the tree, and step quickly to the other side, you will see him whisk suddenly to the opposite side from you, where he is now closely hugging the tree, and perfectly motionless; your interest has now become awakened, you are curious to see more of him; very well, you must retire a few rods, and remain perfectly still. You had better take a comfortable seat, for he will not move while you are near the tree. Presently you see his head, with its bright, lively eyes, slowly moving around to the side where you are; this is the first reconnoitering movement. If you remain perfectly still, he will soon take his position on a limb, where, jerking his tail, and flaunting it in conscious security, he gives vent to his satisfaction at your removal in a series of chattering barks, which are answered, perhaps, by other squirrels that you had no thought were in the neighbourhood; soon one of them, with a challenging bark or chatter, chases another, and shortly three or four of them are scampering about, running through the fallen leaves, and up and down the trees in high sport; presently one of them, in escaping from the others, comes suddenly near you; with a shrill whistle of astonishment he scampers up the nearest tree, and is soon as effectually concealed as all the others were the instant he gave the alarm. You may as well retire now, for you will see nothing more of them; as long as you remain near, they will not budge a foot.

MYSTIC MEMORY.

In February, 1828, Sir Walter Scott was breaking himself down by over-hard literary work, and had really fallen to some extent out of health. On the 17th he enters in his Diary, that, on the preceding day at dinner, although in company with two or three beloved old friends, he was strangely haunted by what he would call "the sense of pre-existence;" namely, a confused idea that nothing that passed was said for the first time—that the same topics had been discussed, and the same persons had stated the same opinions on them. The sensation, he adds, "was so strong as to resemble what is called mirage in the desert, or a calenture on board of ship, when lakes are seen in the desert, and sylvan landscapes in the sea. . . . . There was a vile sense of want of reality in all that I did and said."

This experience of Scott is one which has often been felt, and often commented on by authors, by Scott himself amongst others. In his novel of Guy Mannering, he represents his hero Bertram as returning to what was, unknown to him, his native castle, after an absence from childhood, and thus musing on his sensations: "Why is it that some scenes awaken thoughts which belong, as it were, to dreams of early and shadowy recollection, such as my old Brahmin Moonshie would have ascribed to a state of previous existence? How often do we find ourselves in society which we have never before met, and yet feel impressed with a mysterious and ill-defined consciousness that neither the scene, the speakers, nor the subject, are entirely new; nay, feel as if we could anticipate that part of the conversation which has not yet taken place." Warren and Bulwer Lytton make similar remarks in their novels, and Tennyson adverts to the sensation in a beautiful sonnet:

"As when with downcast eyes we muse and brood,
And ebb into a former life or seem
To lapse far back in a confused dream
To states of mystical similitude,
If one but speaks, or hems, or stirs his chair,
Ever the wonder waxeth more and more,
So that we say, All this hath been before
All this hath been, I know not when or where.
So, friend, when first I looked upon your face,
Our thoughts gave answer each to each, so true
Opposed mirrors each reflecting each—
All-ignorant of what is yet in place, time, or place.
Methought that I had often met with you,
And each had lived in the other's mind and speech."

TALKS ABOUT HEALTH.

BY DIO LEWIS, M. D.

Eating Too Much.

Ten persons die prematurely of too much food where one dies of drink. Thousands eat themselves into fever, bowel disease, dyspepsia, throat affections, and other maladies

Some years ago the residents of a German city were one morning wild with excitement. Everybody was poisoned. The doctors were flying in every direction. Water was the only thing they had swallowed in common. The reservoir was examined. In one corner a paper of deadly poison was found.

The stomach is the reservoir which supplies the whole body. A fever, an inflammation, or some other malady appears. Look to the reservoir. There you will find the source of the disease.

I am acquainted with the table habits of a large number of persons. They have all eaten too much food. Nearly all, too much in quantity, but all have eaten food too highly concentrated. Yesterday, I saw a dyspeptic friend eating pears at a fruit-stand. He said, with a smile, "I go a few Bartletts half a dozen times a day." Certain dietetic reformers seem to think if they eat coarse bread and ripe fruits, a peck is all right. Fine flour bread, pies and cakes are great evils.

A friend, who has decayed teeth, dyspepsia, torpidity of liver, and a disagreeable eruption—all produced by excessive eating of improper food, declared, in response to my remonstrance, "But I never eat more than I want." Every person wants the quantity he is in the habit of eating. If he could digest well two pounds a day, but eat four pounds, he wants the latter quantity. A man may want a glass of spirits on rising. He is in the habit of drinking at that time.

The body is strengthened by what it can digest and assimilate. Every ounce more than this is mischievous. The large eater is always hungry. The man who eats just enough suffers little from hunger.

Pardon a word of my own experience. During many years' practice of my profession, I had but little muscular exercise. I ate enormously. An hour's postponement of my dinner was painful. Now I labor very hard several hours a day in my gymnasium. I do not eat more than a third the quantity of former years. Now I can omit a dinner altogether without inconvenience. I have lost twenty pounds in weight, but feel a great deal younger. (More than half of the thin people would gain flesh by eating less.) I have only one dietetic rule, kind reader, I commend to you. Always take on your plate, before you begin, everything you are to eat. Thus you avoid the dessert and are pretty sure not to eat too much. This simple rule has been worth thousands to me.—Independent.

PREACHING AND PRACTICE.

Dr. Channing had a brother, a physician, and at one time they both lived in Boston. One day, a countryman in search of the "divine," knocked at the "doctor's" door, when the following dialogue ensued:

"Does Dr. Channing live here?"

"Yes, sir."

"Can I see him?"

"I am he."

"Who—you?"

"Yes, sir."

"You must have altered considerably since I heard you preach."

"Oh, I see your mistake now. It's my brother who preaches. I practise."

"THAT IS MA'S."

Lieut De Kay was dying in New Orleans, of his wound received in capturing that city. He had before him a Bible, which his mother had given him. He was reading, or rather gazing at some lines written by her in the fly leaves. He was asked what it was that pleased him. He pointed to the lines written in pencil: "Cast thy burden upon the Lord, for he shall sustain thee." Many recollections seemed to flash over his mind, but he remarked only, "That is ma's."

Many, many a mother has blessed her dying son with her handwriting in his Bible.

TRICKS OF ANIMALS.

In breaking or managing a horse, however intractable or stubborn his temper may be, preserve your own. Almost every fault the brute has, rises from ignorance. Be patient with him; teach and cure him, and success in time is certain. There are tricks, however, which are the result of confirmed habit or viciousness, and these sometimes require a different treatment. A horse accustomed to starting and running away, may be effectually cured by putting him to the top of his speed on such occasions, and running him till pretty thoroughly exhausted. A horse that had a trick of pulling his bridle and breaking it, was at last reduced to better habits by tying him tightly to a stake driven on the bank of a deep stream, with his tail pointing to the water. He commenced pulling at the halter, which suddenly parted; over the bank he tumbled, and, after a somerset or two, and floundering awhile in the water, he was satisfied to remain at his post in future, and break no more bridles. A ram has been cured of butting at every thing and every body, by placing an unresisting effigy in a similar position. The sudden assault on a wintry day then resulted in tumbling his ramship into a cold bath, which his improved manners took good care to avoid in future. A sheep-killing dog has been made too much ashamed ever again to look a sheep in the face, by tying his hind leg to a stout ram, at the top of a hill, while the flock were quietly feeding at the bottom. The ram being free, and in haste to rejoin his friends, tumbled and thumped Master Tray so sadly over the stones and gullies, that he was quite satisfied to confine himself to cooked mutton thereafter. Man's reason was given him to control "the beasts of the field, and birds of the air," by other means than force. If he will bring this into play, he will have no difficulty in meeting and overcoming every emergency of perverse instinct or habit in the dumb things, by his superior cunning.—American Agriculturist.

ALLIGATORS TO BE TURNED TO ACCOUNT.

A recent author says that the time is not far distant when alligators will be called upon to discharge their obligations to society, and that the business of catching them will afford another chance for profitable industry. Oil of a very fine quality can be obtained from the alligators, and it is considered most valuable for scalds, burns, and rheumatism. Excellent saddles, and beautiful boots and shoes have been made out of their tanned skins. Their hard, white, and polished teeth may be used for a variety of purposes; while under the fore fins there is an odoriferous substance resembling musk, and which it is supposed can be employed as a substitute for that expensive article

SELECTED RECIPES.

Buns.—Use cup of butter, one of sugar, half a cup of yeast, half a pint of milk; make it stiff with flour; add allspice and nutmeg.

Baked Rice Pudding.—Two cups of rice, two quarts of milk, half a cup of sugar, a large teaspoonful of salt; bake it two hours; serve it up with butter.

Fruit Rice Pudding.—Swell the rice with milk over the fire, then mix fruit of any kind with it—currants, gooseberries, or quartered apples; put one egg in to bind the rice, boil it well, and serve it with sugar and butter, beat together, with nutmeg, or mace.

Batter Pudding.—A pint of milk, four eggs, made thick with flour, a little thicker than cream. Boil it one hour, serve it up with sauce made of flour and water, butter, sugar, a little vinegar, or tart with spice to your taste.

Pudding Sauce.—One pint of sugar, one table spoonful of vinegar, a piece of butter the size of an egg, boil fifteen minutes, add one table spoonful of rose water, a little nutmeg, boil it, with the sugar, in nearly a pint of water, and a large table-spoonful of flour.

To Boil a Ham.—Put a ham in the boiler, whilst the water is cold; be careful that it boils slowly. A ham of twenty pounds takes four hours and a half, larger and smaller in proportion. Keep the water well skimmed. A green ham wants no soaking; but an old one must be soaked sixteen hours, in a large tub of soft water.

Bird's Nest Sago Pudding.—Soak half a pint of sago in three pints of water, stirring it occasionally, until it is uniformly swelled. Pare and core ten or twelve apples; fill the holes in the centre, and put them, without piling them one over another, in a pudding dish so that the sago will just cover them. The sago may then be poured on, and the pudding baked, until the apples are soft—very nice for dyspeptics.

MANUFACTURING IN LEEDS.

Your readers all know that Leeds is a large manufacturing town in Yorkshire. But they are not all aware (at least I was not till I came here and saw with my own eyes) on what an enormous scale manufactures are carried on here, and how rapid the growth of the town has been of late years. The population is about two hundred thousand. The town stands upon the edge of the great midland coal-field of Yorkshire and Derbyshire, and this is doubtless the great cause of its manufacturing importance. The coal is, as usual, accompanied by iron ores; and those about Leeds are said to be among the best in England. Quarries of excellent building-stone and flagging abound in the immediate vicinity, as do different varieties of clay, for brick and pottery-ware. All the elements of a great manufacturing industry are thus gathered about the spot. The river Ayr, which passes through the town, affords water-power, and is also navigable up to the town, affording communication with the Humber. Canals communicate with the Mersey and the Ouse, thus reaching both eastern and western seaports. The most important point of all is, that Leeds is the greatest railway centre in England, next to Manchester. The town has been noted for six hundred years for its manufacture of woollen cloths, and up to a recent period this was almost its only branch of industry. To day, Leeds is perhaps the greatest emporium for cloth in the civilized world; in its spacious "cloth-halls" every variety of goods is exhibited, and purchasers are gathered there from all parts of the earth. There are over a hundred woollen factories, with nearly a thousand power looms, one hundred and twenty thousand spindles, and about twelve thousand factory hands. There are fifty or more factories in worsted, flax and hair, employing also about twelve thousand hands. More flax work is turned out here than at any other place except Belfast. The flax mills of the Messrs Marshall cover several acres of ground.

Within the present century the iron manufacture, in its various branches, has risen to proportions almost rivalling those of woollen goods in Leeds. The factories for locomotives and machinery employ over ten thousand hands. Glass works, tanneries, and chemical works are carried on upon a vast scale. What one would least expect in such a place to the tobacco manufacture, but there are nine large establishments devoted to it, using up a quarter of a million pounds of tobacco annually.

As you would naturally suppose, Leeds is not a very beautiful or attractive town. The smoke of its countless chimneys overhangs the city over like a pall; and when the sun makes his strongest efforts, but a few pale and sickly gleams reach the busy denizens of this hive of industry. Nor are the factory operatives pleasant to look at. I took part in a central spot among the factories at noon yesterday, to watch the work people coming out to dinner. At the stroke of the bell they began to pour forth, and in a few minutes hundreds had passed me; men and women, boys and girls, generally lively and cheerful enough, but squalid and filthy to a sad degree.—M. Chisholm to the Motherdld.

The Duke of Wellington.—When the Duke of Wellington was dying, the last thing he took was a little tea. On his servant handing it to him in a saucer, and asking him if he would have it, the Duke replied, "Yes, if you please." These were his last words. How much kindness and courtesy is expressed by them! Don't forget three little words, "if you please."

PHILADELPHIA.

There is a degree of low-toned defamation of Philadelphia, in certain New York journals, when the name of the city is mentioned, that has produced a most unhappy effect on the good feeling which ought to exist between the two cities. The English word "provincial," which is applied abroad to any town except the metropolis and capital of England, the great London, is flung in the face of Philadelphia by her ungracious assailants, as though it had any American meaning, or as though any city of this country could assail another as inferior in culture or refinement. To apply such a term to Philadelphia is simply foolish, as well as coarse and bad-hearted.

The city is larger than any in Europe, Paris and London alone excepted, numbering six hundred thousand inhabitants, and covers with its unbroken buildings a larger space than New York, and having no dirty internal dens called tenement houses, each man is lord of his own little castle; and it may be affirmed beyond contradiction that nowhere under heaven is the same amount of working humanity so condensed enjoying the same comforts, decencies, and prosperities, as in Philadelphia. The journeyman mechanic can rent, in a broad, well-ventilated street, his comfortable little house, with all the modern conveniences of gas, bath-room, kitchen range and so forth, for an expense within his means and economies.

Compare this with the metropolitan treatment he receives in New York, where he soothes in back slums, families piled on families, and with the desperate filth of uncleansed streets assailing his nostrils, and creating a greater proportion of tubercular consumption than any other city is afflicted with, notwithstanding the magnificent advantages of our bays and rivers. Philadelphia, so far from being provincial, has all the requisites of a great city. In her great hospitals she was the pioneer of all the States and Colonies; in her libraries she led the way; in her theatres she was first and now has the finest in the country; in her halls of Science she rivals Europe; in her markets she stands almost unequalled for profusion; and her miscellaneous manufactures exceed those of any other city in the world. But, nevertheless, whenever New York, so far as certain journals may be supposed to represent us here, can speak disparagingly of Philadelphia, it is done.

But now we think these things should cease, especially in respect of the attitude of Pennsylvania and Philadelphia in the war. Besides having contributed already the greatest proportion of troops of any of the great States, Pennsylvania has given additionally about 100,000 men, and of these 20,000 were raised in a single day in Philadelphia. If Philadelphia be not adequately protected by the military skill, courage, and the numbers, of the citizens siding our armies, if she be invaded and taken, where does New York stand? In view of the common, undivided interests of the two cities, we do trust that this most ungracious spirit toward Philadelphia may cease, and that she may be treated with the fairness and honor she so fully merits as the great city of a great State.

New York Tribune, Sept. 24th.

THE GREAT PLAGUE OF 1666 IN SCOTLAND.

It was a fearsome time! whole households died, and there were none to bury them, neither would any go near to them; and these houses of the dead were wonder till first the thatch fell in, then the walls, and then a green knoll covered all, giving them a burial, many, many years after it had been denied them by man. You see there Carradale Glen, where the plantings are, and where the river comes down from the mountains. Well, sir, in that glen, in the time of the great plague, there was a man who took the sickness; and hearing of what I've told you of the people dying in their houses, he feared he should not be buried. So this fear took such a power over him that he prevailed on some of his friends to dig his grave, and he went and sat by and saw it done. When it was dug, he laid himself in the grave, and with his sword by his side, and presently he died, and his friends covered his body with turf. Mac Caog was the man's name; and they will show you the grave to this day. "Uaigh-Mhic-Caog" is its Gaelic name, which means, "the grave of Mac Caog."—Cuthbert Bede's "Glencreggan."

THE REBEL SECRETARY OF THE NAVY.

Gov. Foote recently offered a resolution in the Rebel Congress, "That the Hon. R. S. Mallory, Secretary of the Navy, does not possess the confidence of Congress or the country." The resolution was discussed at some length, when a resolution was agreed to appoint a select committee to investigate the affairs of the Navy Department. Mr Foote moved to reconsider, and proceeded to descant at some length upon the incompetency of the present Secretary of the Navy. If it were the determination of the government to retain Mr Mallory, after the expose made there, he should not repine, although he should regret it. He then told an anecdote of an acquaintance of his, who, when he was a young man, resolved, like many others, to marry. We give the anecdote, as it is pretty pointed:—"So he went to a house where a dozen young ladies and a dozen young men were assembled. It was a log house, and at night. When they retired the young men heard through the thin partition, the ladies talking about their beaux. One of them said;—'Oh, as to Thompson—I do love Thompson; he's such a fool.' (Laughter.) And so, continued Mr. Foote, if, after this exhibition, the President and his advisers shall retain Mr. Mallory, he will excuse them on the ground that they 'do love Mallory, he's such a fool.'"—Yorkshurgh Whig.

HOW THEY FIRE IN BATTLE.

An army correspondent says:—"You wonder whether the regiments fire regular in volley, or whether each man loads and fires as fast as he can. That depends on circumstances, but usually, except when the enemy is near at hand, the regiments fire only at the command of their officers. You hear a drop, drop, drop, as a few of the skirmishers fire, followed by a rattle and roll, which sounds like the falling of a building, just as some of you have heard the brick walls tumble at a great fire. Sometimes, when a body of the enemy's cavalry are sweeping down upon a regiment to cut it to pieces, the men form into a square, with the officers and musicians in the centre. The front rank stands with bayonets charged, while the second rank fires as fast as it can. Sometimes they form in four ranks deep—the two front ones kneeling with bayonets charged, so that if the enemy should come upon them they would run against a picket-fence of bayonets. When they form in this way, the other two ranks load and fire as fast as they can. Then the roar is terrific, and many a horse and his rider goes down before the terrible storm of bullets.

ELEVEN REBELLIONS.

Since the organization of the Federal Government eleven attempts have been made to resist its authority. The first was in 1782, a conspiracy of some of the officers of the Federal army to consolidate the thirteen States into one, and confer the supreme power on Washington. The second in 1787, Shay's insurrection in Massachusetts. The third in 1794, called the Whisky Insurrection of Pennsylvania. The fourth in 1814, by the Hartford Convention. The fifth in 1820, on the question of the admission of Missouri into the Union. The sixth was a collision between the legislature of Georgia and the Federal Government, in regard to the lands given to the Creek Indians. The seventh was in 1830, with the Cherokees in Georgia. The eighth was the memorable nullifying ordinance of South Carolina, in 1832. The ninth was in 1842, in Rhode Island, between the Suffrage Association and the State authorities. The tenth was in 1850, on the part of the Mormons, who resisted the Federal authorities. The eleventh is the present attempt at Secession.

We make ourselves more injuries than are offered us; they many times pass for wrongs in our own thoughts that were never meant as such.

THE BURNING OF MOSCOW.

A stupendous conflagration was the burning of Moscow, in 1812, owing to its increased extent. It was attended with many horrors, for all who could not fly—the sick, infirm, and wounded—inevitably perished. Upon the approach of the French invaders, and the loss of the great battle of Borodino, it was determined to abandon the old capital of the Czars; and on the Sabbath, Sept. 15th, its three hundred thousand inhabitants were suddenly aroused from a sense of security by a peremptory order to quit their houses, while the Russian army of defence filed through the midst of them in full retreat. On the morrow, the officers of the government and the police withdrew; the prisons were thrown open, and none were left but the incapable, and those who remained to execute the secret orders of the authorities. Towards evening, the advanced guard of the enemy arrived, and before midnight Napoleon was in the Kremlin. The city, with its churches and palaces of semi-Asiatic architecture, rising above an immense mass of private dwellings, must have presented a strange, solemn, and even awful spectacle to the new comers. Not a Muscovite was to be seen; not a chimney smoked; not a sound was heard. An unclouded moon illuminates these deserted streets, vacant hotels, and empty palaces. "How doth the city sit solitary that was full of people!"

Scarcely were the French established in their new quarters, when smoke and flames, were observed issuing from houses closely shut up in different districts. By Tuesday evening, the 15th, the fires had assumed a menacing aspect, distracting by their number the efforts made to quench them, while a high wind rapidly connected them with each other, and wrapped Moscow in a vast sheet of flame. Midnight was rendered as bright as day, for at that hour, at the distance of nearly a league, Dumas could read the despatches forwarded to him by the light of the burning metropolis. Thirty thousand houses, seven thousand principal edifices, and fourteen thousand structures, were reduced to ashes. The private loss is supposed to exceed thirty millions sterling. "Palaces and temples," writes Karamsin, the Russian historian, "monuments of art and miracles of luxury, the remains of past ages, and those which had been the creation of yesterday; the tombs of ancestors and the nursery cradles of the present generations, were indiscriminately destroyed." Napoleon shuddered at the sight, as ominous of a series of disasters, and was compelled to decamp precipitately. Much mystery has been effected with reference to this transaction. But there can be little doubt that, as it was intended to dislodge the French, it was the work of Rostopchin, the governor, carefully prepared for, with the full consent of the cabinet of St. Petersburgh. He brought away with him the fire engines, so that the French might have no means of extinguishing the conflagration.

It is a curious fact that, the year after the fire, seedling aspen plants sprang up everywhere among the ruins of the city. That tree is very abundant in Russia, particularly in the woods around Moscow. The seeds had been wafted by the winds; and if the inhabitants had not returned to the site, it would speedily have become one immense forest.—Leisure Hour.

HEROIC CONDUCT OF TWO LADIES.

The conduct of two young ladies of Danville, Ky., on the occasion of the arrival of the Rebels at that place, was equal to our idea of Spartan courage. For many months a beautiful specimen of the national flag has floated from the residence of Mrs. Taylor, an estimable widow lady, and when the Rebels took possession of Danville it was but natural that they should seek to remove the hated emblem. A squad of half-a-dozen men was sent to Mrs Taylor's residence, to take possession of the flag, but they were confronted at the door of the residence by Miss Maria and Miss Mattie Taylor, the two accomplished and charming daughters of the patriotic widow, the young ladies announcing their determination to defend the cherished banner. The chivalrous half-dozen returned to their commander and reported that it would require a force equal to a full company to capture the flag, and a company was accordingly despatched to make the capture. Arriving in front of Mrs. Taylor's residence, the commander of the company demanded the surrender of the flag; but the two young ladies again made their appearance, bearing the flag between them, each armed with a revolver. In response to the demand for the flag, the ladies informed their persecutors that they would never surrender it to Rebels, and drawing their pistols, vowed that they would shoot the first Rebel that polluted the sacred emblem with his foul touch. The company of Rebels retired, leaving the ladies in quiet possession of their flag, which they yet retain.—Louisville Journal.

GREED OF GOLD.

When Napoleon, about 1811, desired to build a palace for the King of Rome, near the Barrier de Passy, the shop of a poor cobbler, named Simon, stood in the way. Simon having learned what was going on, demanded twenty thousand francs for his tenement. The administrator hesitated a few days, and then decided to give it; but Simon, goaded by the greed of gain, now asked forty thousand francs. The sum was more than two hundred times its value, and the demand was scouted. An attempt was made to change the frontage, but being found impossible, they went again to the cobbler, who had raised his price to sixty thousand francs. He was offered fifty thousand, but refused. The Emperor would not give a franc more, and preferred to change his plans. The speculating son of St. Crispin then saw his mistake, and offered his property for fifty thousand francs, for forty thousand, thirty thousand, coming down at last to ten thousand. The disasters of 1814 happened, and all thoughts of a palace for the King of Rome were abandoned. Some months after, Simon sold his shop for one hundred and fifty francs, and in a few days after the sale was removed to an insane asylum; disappointed avarice had driven him crazy.

OLD MANUSCRIPTS REPRODUCED.

M. Silvy, of Paris, has recently reproduced photographically one of the curious old manuscripts of early literature. He states that not only is the copy more legible than the original, but certain passages which could not be deciphered on the old parchment have been actually revived; and this is particularly visible on the last page, where a note, written in German under the signature, has become both visible and legible, while there is not a trace of it left on the original. This curious circumstance is explained as follows: "During the photographic process, the brilliant and polished parts of the parchment reflect light much better than those where the ink has been deposited. However colorless it may appear, the ink has not its antiphlogenous qualities opposed to the photogenic ones of the parchment; and thanks to this opposition, black characters may be obtained on the sensitive surface, in return for much paler ones on the original."

CONSUMPTION OF WOOL FOR THE ARMY.

It is estimated that a complete outfit for an American soldier requires twenty-five pounds of raw or unmanufactured wool. From the excessive wear and tear in time of war, and losses from various causes, it is thought that, on an average, each soldier requires three outfits per annum.

At the lowest estimate, we shall soon have over a million men in the field. The annual consumption of wool for army purposes, therefore, will amount to the enormous quantity of seventy-five million pounds! According to the census of 1850, the product of the whole United States amounted to only fifty-one million pounds! It is now, undoubtedly, much larger—perhaps double; but at all events, this extraordinary demand for wool, especially for the coarser grades, cannot fail to insure high prices.

The cheerful are the busy; when weariness knocks at your door or rings the bell, he will generally retire if you send him word you are "an engaged."

"HER ROLLING RAPIDLY."

It is related of some friends of Campbell, the author of "Hohenlinden," in leaving his room after a gay supper, that one of the number had the misfortune to fall down a long flight of stairs. The poet, alarmed at the noise, opened his door and inquired—"What's that?" "'Tis I, sir, rolling rapidly," was the immediate reply of his fallen friend.

CONSEQUENCES AND CAUSES.

There is no action of man in this life which is not the beginning of so long a chain of consequences, as that no human providence is high enough to give me a prospect to the end.—Hobbes.

Southey, quoting this, observes, "Although the chain of consequences be so long, I will venture to say that the chain of causes is longer."

Delicate Praise.—When Sir Matthew Hale was made Chief Justice, his commission was brought to him by Lord Clarendon, who told him that, "If the king could have found out an honester and a fitter man for that employment, he would not have advanced him to it."

American Ice.—Sydney Smith, in London, was shown a lump of American ice, upon which he remarked, "that he was glad to see anything solvent come from America."

ODDS AND ENDS.

The only flag of any nation that has attempted to run the blockade has been that of England.

The newly born infant of the Queen of Spain has received one hundred and twenty-four names.

It has been calculated that the fibres of pure Sea Island cotton average one inch and three quarters in length. If it were possible to place the fibres end to end, one pound would extend 4,777 miles.

Hollow metallic canes filled with condensed gas are now used in some of the European cities. The bearer has only to turn a small nipple and apply his match, when he instantly finds himself furnished with a torch that will light him several hours.

Among the captures of the rebel Col. Stewart, in his recent raid, was the baggage of his father-in-law, Gen. Philip St. George Cooke, commanding a Federal brigade of cavalry. His valise contained a box of silver, worth $25. The General, referring to his loss, said he would cut off his vegrant son-in-law with a shilling. A wicked wit replied that he was "afraid he never would cut him off with cavalry."

Fur Off.—A friend was trout fishing on the sides of "old Saddleback's, a mountain in the interior of New England, a hundred miles from the coast. Supposing himself ten miles from any village and half as far from any house, he was surprised by hearing the blows of an axe. Soon he came to a small clearing, where the proprietor of the axe surveyed him with some curiosity. "Hello, stranger!" said he. "How are you, sir?" "Well, now, stranger, where be you from?" "From New York." "From New York! Why, I should think you'd hate to live so far off."

Two distinguished philosophers took shelter under one tree during a heavy shower. After some time one of them complaining that he felt the rain—"Never mind," replied the other, "There are plenty of trees; when this is wet through, we will go to another."

Arms vs. Coats.—A gentleman having called a ticket-porter to carry a message, asked his name; he said it was Russell. "And pray," said the gentleman jocularly, "is your coat of arms the same as the Duke of Bedford's?" "As to our arms, your honor," said the porter, "I believe they are much alike, but there is a great difference between our coats!"

Family Circle.

AS WE PASS ALONG.

BY DR. TRACY R. WALLER, U. S. A.

In the cars and on the boat,
As we pass along,
Love and friendship all afloat,
Bleeding hearts beneath the coat,
In the cars and on the boat,
As we pass along.

Tales of sorrow fill the eye,
As we pass along;
Trickling tears cannot deny
Blighted hopes that you and I
See in others passing by,
As we pass along.

Weeping, hoping, when we part,
As we pass along,
Dearest memories of the heart
Meet us, thrill us with a dart,
When we stop and when we start,
As we pass along.

On the field we meet a brother,
As we pass along;
In the cars we meet a mother,
Weeping sadly for another,
Killed or wounded, like some other
As we pass along.

May the angels come and greet us,
As we pass along;
Let no deeper sorrow meet us;
Meet we none who can defeat us,
Guardian spirits thus entreat us,
As we pass along.

THE MASTER'S CALL.

"Why stand ye here all the day idle?"—Matt. xx. 6.

Why stand ye wasting your time here so idly?
Methinks I can hear the kind Saviour to say,
Go work in my vineyard, and spread the seed widely
'Mong perishing sinners, without more delay.

Why stand ye idling your time, when the heathen
Are groping in darkness for lack of the word?
Go at once to the great work and strive to relieve them
By preaching the gospel of Jesus our Lord.

Why stand ye so idle, when mortals are falling
The victims of sin and of Satan around?
These are warnings to you that the Saviour so calling;
Arise, and prepare to obey the sweet sound.

Oxford, Pa. J. W. C.

RELIGIOUS TRAINING OF CHILDREN

Children are God's heritage, committed to parents for a time, that they may train them up for heaven. This duty is a Divine command, with a promise, "Train up a child in the way he should go, and when he is old he will not depart from it." The parents who faithfully obey the command, need not doubt that the promise will be fulfilled. We cannot, indeed, look for earthly crowns for our children, but there is a crown of glory for every one of them, in heaven, who is faithfully trained for God. All our little ones may not become the great ones of the earth, but if reared in faith and prayer, they will become "kings and priests unto God." They may not possess mansions and places on earth, but being children of God, they are heirs, "heirs of God, and joint heirs with Christ," to mansions of glory above; to "an inheritance incorruptible, undefiled, and that fadeth not away;" to those happy and glorious homes of which Jesus speaks when he says:—"In my Father's house are many mansions; I go to prepare a place for you, that where I am, there ye may be also."

Some forty-one or two years ago, a royal Duke was on his dying bed; he had one only child, a daughter, quite an infant. Taking the babe in his arms, in an earnest prayer he dedicated the little one to God; then giving her to the mother, he solemnly charged the royal parent to train that daughter up in the fear of God, assuring her that he would give her an ample reward. With trembling solicitude, the mother faithfully discharged her trust, and the child was trained up in "the nurture and admonition of the Lord;" was affectionate and obedient, and is now a wife, a mother, a queen, and reigns over a kingdom on which the sun never sets, the beloved Queen of England, whose son last year was welcomed to our shores, in one place, by a banner with this inscription, "Laddie, we will welcome thee for thy mither's sake."

A little over fifty years since, a youthful mother, away in the distant part of Scotland, was near her death, and a little unconscious infant lay by her side. In the trustful calmness of a truly pious heart, she committed her child to the care of a pious and faithful nurse, tenderly and earnestly charging her to train up her infant boy in the way in which he should go.

That pious nurse accepted the charge, and faithfully performed her duty, and the boy was carefully trained for God, and in early life his heart was renewed by Divine grace; he was prepared for the sacred ministry; he became a clergymen of the Church of England, and is now the Bishop of London.—Maine Evangelist.

(From the Tract Journal.)

NORA CAREY.

"Oh mother, dearest mother,"
Sweet Nora Carey said,
"May I go up the mountain
To search for berries red?
All under the old birch trees
The vines are hanging full;
I'll bring my basket loaded,
All bright and beautiful."

"Yes, go, my little Nora,
But pass not by the stream;
It runs both deep and swiftly,
However calm it seem.
And stay not till the

THE CHRISTIAN RECORDER.

Published by the African Methodist Episcopal Church in the United States, for the Dissemination of Religion, Morality, Literature and Science.

Rev. Elisha Weaver, Editor. PHILADELPHIA, OCTOBER 18, 1862. Vol. II.—No. 42.—New Series.—Whole No. 93.

THE CHRISTIAN RECORDER

is published every Saturday morning, by the

AFRICAN METHODIST EPISCOPAL CHURCH,

BY

REV. ELISHA WEAVER,

Corporation Book Steward,

No. 611 Pine Street, Philadelphia.

[illegible] All letters and communications intended for publication must be addressed to the Editor, and all business letters to the Corporation Book Steward, No. 611 Pine Street, Philadelphia.

TERMS.

Two Dollars a year, payable in advance. Five Copies to one address for Ten Dollars.

ADVERTISEMENTS

We solicit Advertisements of all descriptions suitable for columns of a religious newspaper, which will be inserted three times for One Dollar per square of ten lines, and twenty-five cents for every subsequent insertion. Those who advertise by the year will be allowed a liberal discount. Notices of Marriages and Deaths, not exceeding eight lines, free; but for every additional line, five cents will be charged. Obituaries, exceeding sixteen lines, will be charged as advertisements. Marriages and Deaths will not be inserted without the paper. All communications for the paper must be addressed to the Editor, Box No. 611 Philadelphia.

CORRESPONDING EDITORS OF CHRISTIAN RECORDER.

Rev. J. P. CAMPBELL, Rev. A. W. WAYMAN,
" J. M. WILLIAMS, " E. T. WILLIAMS,
" G. H. GRAHAM, " C. BURCH,
Rev. L. ROSS.

Poetry.

THE STILL SMALL VOICE

BY MRS. EDWIN JAMES

Oh, there was a wild wind; it cleft the rock,
And the mountains were rent at the direful shock—
It swept over the seas, and the earth, and the air,
But Jehovah, the Mighty One, was not there

Then came an earthquake: it rocked the ground,
And the trees of the forest lay scattered around;
All Nature, astonished, hushed ghastly and chill,
But the Lord spoke not then his almighty will.

Then followed fire, and raging and dread;
Rivers were scorched at their fountain head;
The beasts and the wild birds lay down to expire,
Yet came not Adonai in that withering fire;

When lo! there was heard a still small voice—
It bade the fiend spirit exult no rejoice;
But the prophet bowed low with his face to the ground,
When he heard that gentle, that soul-soothing sound.

It came like the sweet notes of music gone by,
Like the harpings of angel ministrelsy;
'Twas dear as the hope of a happier morrow
To the lone heart that's wasted with anguish and sorrow.

O Brother! 'tis thus 'mid the dark night of sin,
The still voice of Religion breathes gladness within,
For she tells how Christ left the eternal spheres
To whisper of heaven to mortal ears.

She bids all thy sins, all thy sorrows to cease,
O'er thy torn, wounded heart, sheds the balsam of peace;
And she bids thee press onward through much tribulation,
To a kingdom of glory, a crown of salvation.

For the Christian Recorder.

IN THE PASTOR'S FLOCK.

MR. EDITOR:—Permit me to pen a few thoughts in your paper on this subject. I find, after a little experience in this direction, that there is a great deal to do in our pastoral charges. When all the batteries are silenced and a breach is made in our consciences, we look out for some secret way to leave Sodom without taking notice of those who fight under Satan's banner. We have found it a duty to speak to the flocks in haste concerning the evils that destroy the flocks of Christ. Pride, that odious vice, which feeds on the praises it coyly procures, lives by the applause it has meanly courted, and is equally stabbed by the reproof of a friend and the sneer of a foe. Pride being an inordinate love of one's self, and one's own excellence, which induces man to refer everything to himself and his own attributes, instead of attaching himself and referring all to his God. This we hold to be the greatest and most dangerous of all evils; first, because it caused the fall of the angels as well as the first man. The greatest, because it aims directly at God himself, and all evils may be traced to it. Most dangerous, because it insidiously creeps into our very virtues, like a demon clothed in light. Again, the spirit of independence gets in his flocks which cannot bear control; is galled by the easiest yoke, gnaws the slender cord of just authority as if they were the heavy chains of tyrannical power. This sheep jumps from pasture to pasture; his cry is, I will do as I please; he winds a thousand ways to climb up to the high seat of power, shines on the tottering stage of honor; wears the golden badge of fortune; glitters in the gaudy pomp of dress, and draws by appearances the admiration of a gaping multitude. Again, sloth get in his flocks, which unnerves their soul, enfeebles their bodies, and makes them deaf to the call of duty, loath to act about their business, ready to postpone or omit it upon any pretence, and willing to give up even the interests of society, and dose the time away in stupid inactivity, or enjoy themselves in the disorderly indolence which passes in the world for quietness and good nature. Again, envy get in his flocks. She looks with an evil eye at the good things that some enjoy; takes a secret pleasure in their misfortunes; under various pretexts exposes their faults and stings their heart when they eclipse them of their great success or superior excellencies. Covetousness gets in his flocks. He is always dissatisfied with his lot or portion; watches it with tormenting fears; increases it by every sordid means, and turning his own executioner, justly pines away for the want of the treasure, or to hold it. Impatience gets in his flocks. She frets at almost everything, finds fault with every person, and madly tears herself under the distressing sense of the present evil, which distorts her face, racks her breast, alarms her household. Jealousy gets in his flocks. He through a fatal skill in diabolical optics, sees contempt in all the words of a favorite friend; lives upon the wicked suspicions it begets, and turns the sweets of the mildest passions into wormwood and gall. Thorn is malice in his flocks, which takes as unnatural, hellish pleasure in quarreling with one another. The offspring of this evil is revenge, which always thirsts after mischief or blood, and shares only the delight of devils when they can repay a real or fancied injury seven fold. There is hypocrisy, which borrows the cloak of religion, bids her flexible muscles imitate vital piety; attends the sacred altars to make a show of her fictitious devotions. Also pestiferousness, which puts on a look of a true benevolent Christian; speaks language of the warmest affection; with solemn protestations invites the pastors to depend on them or their sincerity while they lay a deep plot for their destruction, and with repeated oaths beseeches Heaven to be witness of their artless innocence, while they move the centre of hell to accomplish their design. We find, to cleanse the Church, the pastors will have to pray unitedly, shoot Gospel bullets well aimed from the pulpit forts, and for all things, ask the Lord of armies to help, even so, amen. We believe no longer that David killed Goliath with a grain of sand, and cut off his head with a spire of grass; or that our rulers sink men of war with a puff of breath, while our soldiers batter down ramparts with snow balls, for the Lord is in the field of battle.

WM. H. WINDER.

Freehold, N. J.

For the Christian Recorder.

ON SANTIFICATION OF BELIEVERS IN CHRIST

The work of sanctification of believers in Christ is indispensable for the subsequent reasons:

The first is, that they may be cleansed from their carnal nature, which is not subject to the law of God. The apostle Paul says the "Carnal mind is enmity against God, for it is not subject to the law of God, neither indeed can be." He also says it is the "will of God, even your sanctification" is not merely pardoned of actual guilt, but that they should be made pure from the corruptions of sin, and be assimilated to the likeness and image of Christ, their divine Master, by the approbation of the Holy Spirit, through the truth as revealed in His blessed word. That even their bodies should be set apart and dedicated to His holy service, that He might work in them His own good will and pleasure.

Our blessed Saviour says, "Sanctify them through thy truth: thy word is truth." He also says, "for their sakes I sanctify myself, that they also might be sanctified through the truth."

The second reason is: That no one in an unclean state can enter into the kingdom of Heaven. The good book says, "Blessed are the pure in heart, for they shall see God." The Bible again says, "Without holiness, no man shall see the Lord." Taking into consideration the above reasons, how indispensable it is that believers in Christ should be sanctified. SAMUEL WATTS.

Pittsburg, Pa., Oct. 13th, 1862

New Bedford, Mass., October, 1862

REV. AND DEAR BROTHER:—This will inform you that we have had a very pleasant visitor. Our venerable bishop, Willis Nazrey, arrived in this city on the 4th inst. We were glad to find him enjoying such good health, but I was disappointed in not seeing his good lady with him. I was informed that she had loosted for awhile. On Sabbath morning, at Willis' Point, I baptized three candidates by immersion; at 7½ A. M.: there was quite a large gathering of Methodists and Baptists to witness the ceremony. It being the first time that I was called to perform that duty, the good Lord assisted me. We all returned from the river in better spirits than when we went down. In the forenoon I tried to speak to the people. At 8 o'clock the Bishop spoke and administered the sacrament of the Lord's Supper: he also baptised three adults by sprinkling. Brother Mitchell spoke at night. We had a day of feasting, but more particularly in the afternoon, the Holy Spirit descended in power, and there was a shout of general rejoicing among the children. On Monday night we held a love feast, the God of love was there, and we had a glorious time; after which we received twenty-five into the fellowship of the Church. In regard to this station, I can truly say that God is with us. The entire church is working harmoniously together, cemented not with the frost, but love. Mr. Editor, my attention has been called to the Rev. G. A. Rue's letter, in which he charges me with departing from the truth. Permit me to say the Lord never called me to fight through the papers, but to use the sword of the Spirit. But permit me to say first, that my information was received through brother Rue himself.

Second, the money was received of myself, and part from Rev. H. J. Johnson, and I have his account with my own, and it falls short a few cents, not dollars, of what I said. I answer to the third, I have his own handwriting, written since the date of my letter, stating that what I said, on what he calls the third error, is true, why should he write me such a letter unasked for, and then say in your paper it is not the truth? In answer to the fourth, in my letter as published, it said he wrote to the trustees, this was a mistake of mine or the printer: it should have read treasury, and not trustees. He will not deny writing to the District Treasurer. With the best of Christian feelings to my brother, I will write no more, or say no more, till we meet. Good by

We had a very sudden death here. Mr. G. W. A. Smith, who is well known; a tailor by trade, on Wednesday afternoon was well and hearty as usual. After sundown he was standing at the door of his residence conversing with his friends, after which he went in and lay on the bed; at 8 o'clock he breathed his last. He was buried on Friday, the 10th inst., by the members of Union Lodge, No 7 of A. Y. Masons. His funeral sermon was preached by Rev. Wm. Jackson of the Salem Baptist church. The address to the fraternity was by the pastor of the A. M. E. church, Kempton street.

WM. W GRIMES

For the Christian Recorder

MR. EDITOR.—When I began to give my views of colonization, as I did a short time since, in a series of letters, I had not at that time seen Bishop Payne's advice, which is equally alike to each, and all who are in the bounds of, and belong to the A. M. E. Church. Had I seen his advice before writing, I would not have written until I had more carefully, and more fully, carried his admonitions and counsels into practice; because, I highly respect him, as also his counsels. I had expected to have continued my letters against the scheme of colonization proposed by the President, for various and many reasons, if I had not seen the communication referred to.

I also thought, Mr. Editor, that while I was writing the above, I would give you some account of my charge. When I returned to this charge, the brothers and sisters belonging to it seemed very willing to receive us for another year. As a proof of their sincerity, they have commenced buying me a fine suit of clothes. They have got my suit partly bought and paid for. My first Quarterly Meeting for this Conference year closed last night with a love-feast, which went off pleasantly, and peacefully; the brothers and sisters, a majority of them, seemed to enjoy themselves well: we had a large turnout, and most excellent order. As it regards other matters coming under my control and observation, I believe they are tolerably encouraging. W J Gresely has taken up a day school for us, to continue through the fall and winter. We hope he has now a fine start, his school numbering some forty scholars already; and we also have on hand a good Sunday School, which we have just re-organized, and officers for the present Conference year. Bro. W. J. Gresely has also a good singing school still on hand, and he consequently has his hands quite full. There have quite a number of fine-looking men, (colored) come from the south, who are here in our midst, seeking for labor and homes, and they are doing well. I think, Mr. Editor, that your old home—Terre-Haute, is becoming very much anti-slavery since the war; and some of our men have whipped two or three white men here very lately like all the world; and I think that that had a tendency to help abolitionize and civilize them to some extent

I will try what I can do by the 1st of January, 1863, in the way of getting new subscribers.

T. STROTHER, of Terre-Haute, Ind.

For the Christian Recorder.

DEAR BROTHER:—As I am writing to have my name corrected, I think I must express to you and all others, my deep joy in learning from your paper, that the Haytien Scheme is somewhat on the decline. In reading the farewell address of Mr. James Redpath, I noticed that several of the agents had retired from the movement with him; and from the depths of my heart, I could but exclaim "Thank God." You will doubtless desire to know what is my objection to the Haytien Scheme. What has caused my great aversion to that Scheme, which is stirring up the minds of hundreds, yea, and perhaps thousands of the colored race? If you should ask that question, I shall answer as follows:

I had an only son. He was his father's pride, and his mother's joy. For that son I had that love which only mothers feel. I loved him because he was my child, loved him because he was a dutiful son, loved him more tenderly and passionately, because he was an only child That son, the child I cherished, nursed from his infancy, the child I had early taught to lisp the Lord's Prayer, the son I had learned to look upon as my future pride, was assailed by these heartless agents of the Haytien Scheme. They filled his young mind with strange stories of the great wealth to be amassed in this far-famed isle of Hayti, and of the high political standard of the young men of color. Poor child! his young mind was completely turned, perfectly confused; and in this state of mind he embarked for Hayti. What are the fruits? Has he amassed his riches? Has he gained that standard for which he was so earnestly striving? I can answer for him, No! Now he fills an untimely grave. He is dead! He died in Hayti under a burning tropical sun, with no kind mother to smooth his bed. No mother to bathe his aching head. No mother to wipe the death sweat from his brow. And last of all, with no mother near to shed the parting tear. But, alas! buried in the land of strangers, and by strangers. Ah! yes, a stranger's hand closed his eyes in death, and performed the last ceremonies; whilst I, his mother, was denied that privilege. What was the cause? These Haytien agents.

Now, dear brother, is not this enough to satisfy the inquiries of any thinking mind, why I rejoice at the apparent decline of the Haytien Scheme? I fancy every heart, yes, every mother's heart, answers, yes.

Since the death of my son, I have visited Canada, and there I learned the full details of this grand scheme, and Oh! it seems to me, that it relieves my heart of a great burden, just to have the privilege of telling the public, that I disapprove of the Haytien Scheme.

Yours truly,
E. G. CAREY.

For the Christian Recorder.

MR. EDITOR:—I hope you will not censure me for not writing regularly, as I am both in poor health and very much engaged. I merely write these few lines to let you know that I have not forgotten you since the gentle showers of heaven's rain has fallen upon our earth again. The clouds of dust hitherto so annoying to the finely dressed gentlemen and ladies, have condensed themselves into an equal proportion of mud and slop.

Prof. A. M. Green is carrying everybody here before his sterling eloquence like a rolling tornado. We little fellows, who only have a smattering knowledge of the King's English, have to lie very low, but in justice to the Professor he is unquestionably a great man. Thus far, he is the idol of our literati.

Three distinguished divines have paid us a visit within the space of two weeks:—Rev. A. W. Wayman, J. M. Brown, and J. P. Campbell,—the latter of whom preached on Sabbath morning at Union Bethel Church, and, in the evening, at Israel Church. Both of his sermons were marked by a masterly distinction rarely exhibited by white or colored.

We learn that the Central American expedition is deferred till the first of October. This is done in consequence of Senator Pomeroy's delay in Kansas. I hear that over a thousand applications are made to go in the first expedition.

The young men of Israel Church came together on Monday night last and organized a grand lyceum, to be known as the Israel Lyceum. They elected H. M. Turner President, Thomas H. C. Hunton, Vice-President, J. B. Cross, Secretary, William Tunny, Treasurer, J. T. Castin, McGill Pearce, and Wm. Brown, Managers, &c. The institution bids fair to be one of the very things to wake up the latent powers of the minds of all identified with it. Some twenty-three gave their names immediately, and several more are sending in their applications.

The armies about here are all standing still, as if they were waiting for the first of January, 1863, so as to secure the assistance of millions of colored freemen.

I see that that miserable sheet called the New York Herald is raving mad on the negro question. Too late now, Bennett; the thing is out, and if you don't repent of your sins, which outnumber the drops of all the oceans in the universe, you will be out, too—but it will be into outer darkness. Mr. Editor, I hope you will excuse me for referring to that infamous, rotten scrap of paper and the proprietor of which I regard as an incarnate fiend. But it speaks so contemptibly of my race, whether they be the so called contrabands or more intelligent colored men, that it unmans all my Christian gravity to think of it. Nothing less than a hell, where the fire burns forever with brimstone fuel, and where chain-lightning is employed to fasten you down in the gridirons of perdition, and where red-hot lead, burning lava, and boiling pewter, is poured down the throat for water, and where the lurid, angry flames, heated ten thousand times redder than imagination can depict or thought conceive, can be adequate to the punishment due one so dreadfully steeped in hatred to his fellow-man.

I still hear nothing of that committee's report from the President. I suppose they are preparing a document to tell with lasting effect. It is looked for with much anxiety. H. M. T.

Washington, Oct. 13, 1862.

PROGRESS IN HOLINESS—HOW IT IS EVINCED.

All life has its infallible marks of development, its indices, which, wherever they clearly appear, prove incontrovertibly that it is passing on from infancy to maturity. In the animal world, this is, generally, an enlargement of physical proportion; in the vegetable, the same fact is conjoined with others more specific and peculiar. The blade of corn manifests its growth by the ear that is gradually formed upon it; the wheat, by its bearded head; the plant, by the unfolding of its buds and the tree, by the mellowing of its fruit.

We are rarely in doubt as to whether life, in any of these various forms, is really in the process of development. In no case, indeed, is its unfolding so manifest as to be palpable to our senses at the very moment of its occurrence. We do not see the tree grow; nor does the flower-bud burst into full bloom the instant that we gaze upon it. The lapse of time seems to be essential to the perception of growth.

Precisely thus is it with the life of God in the soul. It has its indices,—veiled, of course, to its internal and spiritual character,—yet equally definite and marked with times which distinguish other growths, and, like them, clearly perceptible at intervals more or less distant. What these are, it is our present purpose to endeavour to show, Progress in holiness, how is it evinced?

Our blessed Lord indicates one way, in that oft-repeated declaration, "Whosoever exalteth himself shall be abased; and he that humbleth himself shall be exalted." Great piety is like great knowledge, always connected with humility. Men go down in their own esteem, as in character they approach the divine. He who has the clearest apprehension of God has the most truthful and vivid sense of his own imperfections. "I have heard of thee," said Job, "by the hearing of the ear, but now mine eye seeth thee: wherefore I abhor myself and repent in dust and ashes."

The Apostle Paul, when he was first converted, said, "I am not worthy to be called an apostle;" when he had made greater progress in holiness, he said, "I am the least of all saints," but just before he died, when his views of heaven were brightest and his knowledge of himself the clearest, he exclaimed, "I am the chief of sinners." Eliphaz, Job's friend, uttered many an unwise, and even untruthful, sentiment, in his discourses to the patriarch; but this saying is not among them: "When men are cast down, then thou shalt say, There is lifting up."

As believers progress in holiness, their religious emotions, also, become more disinterested. In the religious life of a young convert every thing is personal and subjective. His thoughts are mainly upon himself, and he is conscious of little else save his own sinfulness and the redemption which is in Christ Jesus. Even those rapturous feelings of gratitude and adoration sometimes felt by the youthful believer, and which the older disciple of Christ longs after when he exclaims,

"Oh for the blessedness I knew
When first I saw the Lord!"

are, to a great extent, occasioned by a view of the grace of God as manifested in his salvation.

But this absorption of thought upon self cannot long continue if the soul advances in the divine life. Personal interests provided for, and personal anxieties abated, the believer comes more and more out of himself. The chief characteristic of piety becomes disinterestedness. He delights in the contemplation of Christ's character, in the study of His word, and in the examination of divine truth.

A profound axiom of Christian experience is contained in the remark of a Scotch divine "that one of the most unequivocal signs of ripeness of Christian character is a growing fondness for the doctrines of the gospel, as distinguished from its precepts." In that period of mental repose which follows the first and more anxious years of Christian life, the believer extends the range of his meditations, and soars over the whole realm of moral truth. He looks backward as well as forward; and even those themes which in their logical order precede revelation have to him a special charm

It is often observed that a mature Christian disciple invests the Old Testament with peculiar interest, and finds its adoring contemplation naturally expressed in the imagery and language of the Song of Solomon, a book almost without meaning to many a young disciple. Of McCheyne, the Scotch divine, so remarkable for the richness and maturity of his Christian experience, it is said that he had preached as often on the Canticles that at last he had scarcely left himself a single text of its "good matter" which had not been discoursed upon.

And with this is conjoined a desire, most intense and consuming, for the salvation of others. When Paul said to his countrymen, "I could wish that myself was accursed from Christ for my brethren, my kinsmen according to the flesh," he was no novice in the school of Christ. Such disinterestedness of religious emotion was the result of long culture. He could not, we are quite sure, have uttered such language when, in all the fervor of his "first love," he entered the city of Damascus.

The great philanthropist Wilberforce, at a time when every energy of his being was absorbed in the effort to secure the abolition of the slave-trade, was asked by a friend if he had not been neglecting his personal prospects and endangering his soul. His magnanimous answer was; "I do not think about my soul. I have none for thoughts of self. I have really forgotten all about my soul." It was when the disciples of Christ were but half baptized with His Spirit, and before that prayer of their Master in their behalf was offered, "Sanctify them through thy truth," that they proposed to [illegible] and followed thee: what shall we have therefore?"

In a shipwreck, when a man tossed upon the angry bosom of the waters first feels that he [illegible] saved, all is anxiety. He thinks of nothing but of that object's stability, strength, and capacity to save him. He even forgets that others are all around him sinking in the waves. So soon, however, as this question of personal safety is answered, —so soon as he finds himself secure,—his heart is instantly filled with earnest desires for the salvation of others. Indeed, the man soon forgets himself, and is wholly absorbed in concern and effort for others. Thus is it with the true believer. At the commencement of his religious life, we cannot deem it strange that it itself himself that he thinks [illegible] should be saved always? He first humbly planted upon the Rock of Ages, should not his deepest concern now be for the vast multitude who are all around him sinking beneath the waves of sin? Such must needs be whenever there is any real growth in grace. Progress in holiness has as one of its indices an increasing disinterestedness of religious emotion.

And to this we may add, as still another infallible test of Christian advancement, increased fearlessness to the world. As a power for evil, the love of the world has not lost all its influence even upon the truly regenerate soul. It is to professed Christians that the command is addressed, "Be not conformed to this world, but be ye transformed by the renewing of your mind." The young disciple of Christ is not, indeed, in doubt which to choose as his portion, the world or his Saviour; nor does he suppose that this earth can make him happy without the blessing and smile of God; but then, there are in this world so many fair and bright and beautiful things to fill his fancy, and to awaken hopes of enjoyment, that he is very prone to be too highly pleased with the goodly show The world has still too fast a hold upon him. It intrudes upon his closet, pollutes his Sabbaths, and sometimes persuades him to drink of its tasteless streams, when he ought to have quenched his thirst with the sweet waters that flow from Christ, the living Fountain. It never, indeed, converts him into an apostate and treacherous Judas; but it does sometimes make him a fickle and foolish Demas.

But as the Christian advances in the divine life, this love of the world dies, and hence the liability of being drawn away by it into sin lessens. The old nature more and more thrown off, and the new nature more and more put on, the believer becomes more and more disengaged from the passions and affections of earth. As faith sheds on his path the light of heaven, he sees more clearly the emptiness and vanities of those glittering bubbles, with which the world allures and decoys. Its losses affect him less painfully, and he receives its prosperity with a more sober and subdued spirit.

But what is true of this generic form of sin is equally true of all the specific acts which it includes. As the soul goes inward and upward in the divine life, it marks every step of its progress by its increased power to meet and overcome all temptations to sin.

The young Christian is frequently conquered by his spiritual foes. His relapses into sin are numerous. Ignorant to a great extent of the wiles of the adversary, he is often unable successfully to resist them. Clad in the whole armor of God, he yet wields so unskilfully his weapons as, in many an evil day, to be overcome. Moreover, the whole power of the great law of habit is, with a young Christian, against his successful resistance of temptation. He is not accustomed to do evil; and hence it is very hard for him to do good.

It is an interesting fact, in illustration of this remark, that Bunyan, in his "Pilgrim's Progress," —a book which, as Dr Arnold says, "seems to be a complete reflection of Scripture, with none of the rubbish of the schools mixed with it,"—has made Christian yield to one of the first temptations that beset him, after at the cross he lost the burden of his sins. How plaintive is the language of his penitence! "Oh, wretched man that I am, that I should sleep in the midst of dangers! that I should so indulge the flesh, as to use that rest for ease to my flesh, which the Lord of the hill hath erected only for the relief of the spirit of pilgrims!"

And this liability to sin on the part of young Christians is especially in the direction, either of their natural defects, or of their previously formed sinful habits. Every individual has vulnerable points in his character. There are sins which—in Scriptural language—easily beset him, and it is to their precise that Satan particularly allures. Prone, before our conversion, to anger, envy, pride, covetousness, our greatest danger afterwards is in these infirmities. It was the natural self-confidence of Peter, his ardent and impulsive disposition, never properly disciplined into restraint before he became a disciple of Christ, that in that base denial of his Master reappeared to dishonor his apostleship.

Advancing, however, in holiness, these relapses into sin become more and more infrequent. The mature disciple meets temptation with far more steadiness and success than the young convert. Using the weapons of his warfare, the Divine acquires the art of using them better," and, watching the wiles of the adversary, he learns how more skilfully to escape from them. Natural defects of moral character are ameliorated as the soul progresses in the divine life, and the power of sinful habits is broken Petulance softens into amiableness, envy into brotherly kindness, pride into humility and covetousness into a large and generous beneficence.

And this mark of Christian progress how conspicuous! We can hardly mistake it if we would. It calls us to a plain reckoning of our sins. It bids us tell their number. It exhorts us to compare our present with our past sinful relapses. It inquires whether our obedience is becoming more perfect, and whether the imperfections of our character are being gradually eradicated. Provocation to malevolence, pride, anger, impurity, do we now as frequently yield to them as we once did? It is impossible, if we are really growing in grace.

But there is one other evidence of Christian progress that we must not fail to notice. When the pious Rutherford, in writing to a friend, subscribed himself "a man borne down and hungry and waiting for the marriage supper of the Lamb," we all instinctively feel that, if these words were truthful and honest, his soul must, in the maturity of its graces, have been nearly ripe for heaven

To the fear of dying, the unregenerate man is all his lifetime in bondage; and, though one of the objects of Christ's incarnation is to deliver His people from this thraldom, yet full and complete liberty in this particular is, perhaps, never the immediate result of true conversion. It is "perfect love" that "casteth out fear." It is not until the believer feels some assurance of the personal love of Christ, and until the great objects of his faith begin to assume in his vision the aspect of substantial realities, that he views the close of his life with calm, and even joyful, expectations The attractions of heaven increase as the Christian in the holiness of his character approaches it, and as the strong ties that once bound him to earth are severed.

We should think it almost strange to hear a young Christian, as expressing his own desires, singing that familiar hymn,

"Jerusalem! Jerusalem!
Would God I were in thee!
Oh that my sorrows had an end,
Thy joys that I might see."

A better prayer for such a believer would be those words of David: "Oh, spare me, that I may recover strength, before I go hence, and be no more seen." And that sweet hymn beautifully and truthfully expresses the feelings of a mature disciple.

That men sometimes welcome death for reasons very different from this, indeed, cannot be denied. There are in society disappointed and restless worldlings, men so "whipped of their own guilty conscience" as to feel that life is a burden and earnestly to desire that they might lay it down Such are all suicides; and to this class belong a much larger number, who, with the same inward unrest, are deterred from the outward crime only by [illegible] Between such a desire to depart from earth, and that which characterizes the mature disciple of Christ, how striking the contrast! There is with the latter nothing of a chafed, vexed, or murmuring spirit, but all is sweet, quiet and meek. The longing for death of a ripened saint is not so much to escape the sufferings and disappointments of life, as to be free from its temptations [illegible] He would not [illegible] away from himself as continually annoyed by a [illegible] [illegible] to get near to a friend whose, having not seen, he yet loves with an affection all-absorbing and supreme.

Dr Darling.

A SALUTARY THOUGHT

When I was a young man, there lived in our neighborhood a farmer who was usually reported to be very liberal man and unusually upright in his dealings. When he had any of the produce of his farm to dispose of, he made it an invariable rule to give good measure—rather more than could be required of him. One of his friends observing him frequently doing so, questioned him as to why he did it—told him he gave too much, and said it would be to his disadvantage Now mark the answer of this excellent man. "God Almighty has permitted me but one journey through the world, and when I am gone I cannot return to rectify mistakes." Think of this. But one journey through the world!

ON PLEASING OUR NEIGHBOR.

BY NORMAN MACLEOD, D.D.

"Let every one of us please his neighbor for [illegible] to edification," says the Apostle Paul. There is a pleasing of our neighbor which is very different from this; a pleasing him by chiming in with his prejudices, by flattering his inferiorities—by complying with his sinful wishes—by laughing at his wicked jokes—by countenancing him in his evil ways; in short, by doing or not doing that which will ensure us popularity with our neighbor, though at the expense of principle in ourselves. This is indeed pleasing him, as we please the drunkard when we give him drink, or the self-willed when we give them their own way, but it is not pleasing him "for his good to edification," but rather for his injury to destruction. And nothing, I repeat it, is more common than this sort of pleasing each other. It is done, people say, "for the sake of peace," "to give no offence," "because to find fault is none of our business." With these plausible excuses, men cloak over their own unprincipled and slothful selfishness and want of love to their neighbors. For if they really loved their neighbor; if they felt themselves responsible for their conduct toward him; if they were concerned for his good, they would seek to please him, consistently with that good, and in such a way as he would thank them for when on his dying bed, or at the day of judgment. What we all must learn is, to seek our neighbor's well-being, so that his evil should be our burden, and his good our happiness and reward. We must learn so to love him, as that we shall, if necessary, displease him, and put him to pain, and make him perhaps angry with us for a time, if in this way we can only do him good in the end; just as a kind surgeon will put us to pain in order to save our lives.

"Every one of us" must thus please his neighbor; because every one has some neighbor thus to please. Do you ask, "Who is my neighbor?" I reply, That person, whoever he be, with whom, God in his providence brings you in contact; whether you meet him by accident for a few minutes only, or associate with him every day of your life; the person, in short, who can in any way be influenced by you—by what you are, as well as by what you do—that person is your neighbor; he is more or less closely "bound up in the bundle of life" with you; and in as far as you can by word, look, or action, "please him for his good," so far it is your duty and privilege, as fellow-workers with God, to do so.

And a moment's consideration will show you that there is no one, however poor, however unknown, however unlearned, but has, at least, one talent of influence which he may use, and which he must lay up in a napkin. Not only so, but that he possesses greater opportunities of influencing one or more individuals than any other on earth has. I ask you, reader, is there not some one whom you know better, and come in contact with more frequently than any others do? It may be your child or parent, your brother or sister, your fellow-workman or daily acquaintance; but some one there is whom you know better than any one else does, and is therefore in a special sense, your neighbor—for whom you are, in a special sense, responsible. This one talent, I say, every man possesses; while thousands from their position in society, possess many more: this one work each one of us may do for others, and perhaps no one else can do it so well.

The opportunity of doing this good is a power given us by God, which is peculiarly our own. You cannot point to a single case in which this will not hold true. That old decrepit woman, for instance, who cannot stir from her chair by the fireside, may, day by day, "please" the children who play around her knee, "for their good to edification," —a good which may tell upon families yet unborn. That poor invalid who can scarcely move or speak, may by patience, and love, and meekness, and consideration of the feeling of others, springing from a trust in God, shed a holy influence around her dying bed. That sick-nurse who watches beside this other sleepless sufferer may, in the silence of the night, speak words which by God's blessing, may end in life everlasting. That infirm man, who, for support, leans on his staff, may, by his affectionate advices to the young; his pious visits, rich in prayer, to his sick neighbors; his kindly words, and peaceful, happy walk before all—scatter blessings around him while he lives, and leave them behind him in the hearts of many when he dies.

But not to multiply instances, or to select them from higher walks in life, it will suffice to say in conclusion, that if we only remember how each one of us comes in contact with many individuals every year, and how every hour we cannot but exercise some influence upon others, we must see how we never can want neighbors, whom we have the means of "pleasing for their good to edification." This talent of doing good or evil to others is a very solemn one. But it is a fact, and no power of ours can alter it; nor should we seek to have it otherwise, for all God's appointments are good, both for the world and for us. In order to make this great talent gain other talents, one thing alone is needful; but that is every thing, namely, that we be good ourselves. If we first please God, by giving him our hearts for our own good to salvation, then we cannot but choose to please our neighbor for his good to edification.

REPEATING SERMONS.

We are not among those who flounce and fret on hearing a minister repeat a sermon, for we have settled it in our mind, that a sermon must be a poor affair which will not bear the operation. There are abuses, however, which should be guarded against. While it is freely admitted that a settled pastor may occasionally repeat himself with advantage, or may be under the necessity of doing so from some providential hinderance to his studies, care should be exercised that it is not done in the indulgence of an indolent habit Unintermitting study in a minister is an essential part of his vocation; and it this fact be lost sight of, he may rely upon it that he will never meet the demands of a thoughtful congregation, and instead of growing in efficiency, he will retrograde [illegible] if he flatters himself that he can fall back on his old [illegible] We [illegible] in some instances, with any thing but pleasing results.

In most cases, a sermon prepared with careful study depends for its effect on the fresh and awakened feeling of him who has prepared it, and which is manifest in its delivery When the occasion has passed which led to its preparation, and the feelings with which it was imbued have departed, its delivery is apt to become a cold recitation, which neither interests the speaker nor hearer. The plan of construction is the same, the words are the same, and yet it is a very different thing, which no artificial attempt can galvanize into life

We have known ministers who have relaxed in their studious habits, earnestly entering a change of place, under the false impression that in this way they could, by the use of their old sermons, very greatly lighten their labors; and we have seen such go from place to place, repeating the same series of discourses, which, however good in the first instance, failed to awaken their own hearts, and, by inevitable consequence, the hearts of their auditors. The life and freshness of them had evaporated; the skeletons alone were left. The thoughts and expressions were the conceptions of the author in former years, and, of course, could not have the vigor and raciness of the productions of yesterday. The people were disappointed, because they were put off with a stale rehash, when they had a right to expect fresh beaten oil.—Presbyterian.

THE TIMES WORSE.—The Apostle Paul had three wives that he married [illegible] and that he married them all for Christ, and that he might magnify Christ. Luther

CHRISTIAN STEADFASTNESS.

That is a beautiful description of the good man with which the sweet singer of Israel opens his strain. He shall be like a tree planted by the rivers of water, that bringeth forth his fruit in his season; his leaf also shall not wither, and whatsoever he doeth shall prosper." He is not compared to a plant easily rooted up, or a shrub of little account; but a tree, the pride of the vegetable kingdom And the stands, not on a plain or by a brook, where it might be parched with drought; but by the rivers, in a fertile soil. It is not for mere ornament, but bears fruit, regularly and continuously

There are Christians that resemble such a goodly tree. They may not be great. The tree is not said to be lofty. But they are living, fruitful, consistent, regular, ever blessed. They are what the church and the world need. There is much to try the faith of the best men. Those who stand in high positions, extolled by every tongue, sometimes prove treacherous, and bring reproach upon the cause they were set to defend. The masses often prove unreliable. In the sunshine of prosperity they appear to run well, but they become fickle, indifferent, wayward, and Zion languishes in the day of adversity. Did all thus prove inconstant, hope would fail, and general ruin ensue; but there are some who abide, and they are the salt of the earth and the light of the world. They are the very pillars upon which every moral edifice stands

What shall be done to increase Christian steadfastness? There is no good reason why three or four in a church and community should bear all the burdens and secure all the blessings. The gospel was never designed to be exclusive, to build up an aristocracy in any sense. It is a great democratic leveller; but it levels up, not down. It always elevates, never depresses. Its tendency is to make all its votaries as trees planted by the rivers, living fountains, kings and priests unto God. Cannot more be done to diffuse its mighty power and saving efficacy—to gather the multitudes to its healing waters, to forsake them no more? What the gospel does for a few, it may and should do for all.

Morning Star

BEGINNING FAMILY PRAYERS.

The commencement of this sacred and delightful duty must often be attended by difficulties where the head of the family has for years neglected it. "I have never done anything since I became a Christian," writes one, "which required so much self denial, and which was so truly a bearing of the cross, as beginning family worship I felt that it was a duty from the time that I devoted myself to the service of Christ; but I shrank from its performance so painfully, that day after day and week after week passed away without my attempting it. At length conscience remonstrated so loudly, and my conviction that it was a sin to neglect it so long was so strong, I determined to make the effort to perform it the next morning, cost what it would. It occasioned me a wakeful night; again and again I implored strength from on high. I was constitutionally timid, and when the morning came was much agitated

"Before breakfast I said to my wife, 'I feel, C——, as if we ought to have prayer in the family. We have all souls to be saved, and need God's blessing. I am sure you will not object to it.' 'No,' she replied; but the tone in which she said it was not encouraging. When we arose from the breakfast table, it seemed to me the children had never been so noisy before, and it required an effort to request them to keep silence and be seated. They did so, but I felt that their eyes were fixed wonderingly on me. I took the Bible from the shelf and sat down. I wished to preface the service with some remarks, but I could not trust my voice, and I opened the book and read the first chapter that presented itself. I then knelt, and with faltering voice began to address the Creator. But my hesitation soon passed off. I know not why it was, but during the performance of the service my soul was so filled with thoughts of God's great goodness in permitting me to approach him, and to place myself and those dear to me under the shelter of his protecting love, that I forgot the presence of others, and poured out my heart in supplications for his blessing with as much freedom and fervor as I had ever done in secret When I arose I perceived my wife's eyes were moistened with tears.

"The conflict was over, the duty entered on, and the peace which follows the consciousness of having done right came into my heart. Prayer with my beloved ones was no longer a burden, but a delightful privilege; and ere long I had the satisfaction of knowing that the heart of my companion ascended in full unison with my own to the throne of grace. I can now speak freely in my family of the value and sweetness of this service, and to many of them I believe the hour of prayer has become one of the most highly prized of all the day brings us."

"AND THEN!"

The following story is told of Filippo

The Christian Recorder.

Philadelphia, October 18, 1862.

NOTICE

TO THE M. E. CHURCH MINISTERS OF PHILADELPHIA, NEW ENGLAND, OHIO, INDIANA, AND MISSOURI, OF THE A. M. E. CHURCH MINISTERS

Dear Brethren:—As we are a number of [illegible] from the [illegible] herefore it will be expected that the ministers and preachers, on their circuits and stations, will [illegible] they can [illegible] We would also recommend that the Class leaders be instructed to collect and set the amount on the Class book opposite each member's name, as also all the collections called, per Discipline, for the Annual Conference, and publish the same once every quarter, that it may be seen who they are that work for God and his cause. We think it is time to give credit to those of our people who do work so that God's name may be glorified.

For the Christian Recorder

SPECIAL NOTICE.

I would have left report on the 22d, and according to the answer of Brother Wm H. Winder to my request in a previous number of the Recorder, shall be at Riverside, New Jersey, on the same day, and will remain on the circuit until the 29th, when I shall leave for Allentown circuit, where I shall remain until the 3d or 4th of November. The ministers will make the appointments and arrangements.

N. B.—I have to go back to Boston on the 14th to attend to some business there.

W NAZREY

Providence, Rhode Island, Oct 11, 1862.

NOTICE

We hope our brethren will not forget to lay before their congregations the fact that any person or persons who wish to read the Christian Recorder, can have it from now till the first of Jan., 1863. Will each pastor keep this before the minds of their people, and let them send me fifty cents, and read the Recorder

We see that, from Rev. W. R. Revels' letter, the Rev. Charles Burch has taken to himself a wife.

QUARTERLY MEETING

Quarterly meeting in the A. M. E. Union Church, on the 18th and 19th inst. Preaching on the 19th, at 10 o'clock, by the Rev. John A Williams; at 3 o'clock, by Rev. James P Campbell; at 7 o'clock, by Rev. Anthony L. Stanford

On the next following evening, at 7 o'clock, the Lord willing, Love Feast.

Rev HENRY DAVIS, Elder.

NOTICE

THE SACRAMENT.

The Lord's Supper will be administered in the Zion Mission Church, on Sabbath, at 3 o'clock, P. M. Preaching and administration on the occasion by Rev. Elisha Weaver, General Book Steward.

W. D. W SCHUREMAN, Minister.

Rev. W. D. W. Schureman's Quarterly Meeting is at Thorntown to-day and to-morrow.

GOOD AGAIN.

On last Tuesday night we had the pleasure of going in holy wedlock Mr Samuel Johns and Miss Anne M Gibbs The ceremony was performed at our place of residence Both were of Dover, Del. The week before, we joined two others. We don't care if they come every week to No. 619 Pine Street—for we do love to tie knots; for the change they give us is always acceptable. So give us yours, as our house is always open for that.

MANY THANKS.

From Steubenville, Ohio, we have received a handsome box of two kinds of grapes from our kind and good sister of Steubenville, Ohio, where we lodged all night—and we are quite sorry that the name of that good sister and her daughter have been misplaced. We would say that more fine and delicious grapes we have never tasted—and we are glad that there are some who think of us. Those grapes, rest assured, my sister, are very delicious, and we shall regret when they are gone—and we hope that the blessing of Almighty God may ever rest upon you.

THINGS ABOUT PHILADELPHIA

Last Sabbath we had a nice time at Wesley church. The Rev. Anthony L. Stanford, a gentleman of the highest stamp and clerical distinction, preached an interesting sermon in his own peculiar and masterly style of rendition, in the morning. In the afternoon we spoke for him, and assisted him in the consecration and administering the Lord's Supper

The Lord was with us. Elder Stanford has been carrying on a protracted meeting, which, it seems, resulted in the salvation of some fifteen souls. To God give all the glory.

UNION CHURCH

It was Sacrament day with them also.

7TH. ST. PRESB CHURCH.

Under the administration of Rev. Mr. Gibbs, this church had the ordination of some two elders into its communion. One was our friend, Mr Parbeau, but the name of the other brother we cannot just now recall to memory.

The Rev. J. P. Campbell being out of the city, there was nothing more than usual going on in his (Bethel) Church, the fountain-head.

The Rev Mr. Reeves, pastor of the Lombard Street Presbyterian church, is absent from his congregation for two weeks.

The energetic and skilful Dr. Wilson, of our city, is kept busily on the alert in attending to his patients.

ACKNOWLEDGMENTS.

Dr. Leber, per Rev H Davis, [illegible]

Mrs. Euphemia Johnson, per Rev. H Davis, [illegible]

Mrs. M A. Hatton, [illegible], Mass., 1 00

Rev H M Turner, Washington, D C, 5 00

Mr James Pettiford, Vincennes, Ind., per Rev William Andrews 1 00

Rev. R. P. Gloster, [illegible] 2 00

Rev. Thos. Gould, on account for paper, [illegible]

Rev W. R. Revels, Indianapolis, Ind., for [illegible]

Mr G H W[illegible], Philadelphia, 1 00

per Rev. W R Revels, for Recorder, 1 00

Mrs Elizabeth Harris, of Hornstown, and Mr Allen Doherty are regularly paid up.

THE ELECTION

On the morning of the day appointed for the Election in this city, as we were returning from the Post Office, we were handed a circular purporting to come from the colored people, of their Literary Institute, and some five names signed as a committee—and were profusely scattered around throughout the different wards. We would say that the colored people held no such meeting, and every word contained in the circular was but so many lies heaped upon the innocent colored people.

The object was of a two fold character. First, a political one—to defeat His Honor, Mayor HENRY and the Union Republican party; that by [illegible] to such a low contemptible [illegible] scheme, they would be able to turn a sufficient number to defeat the Republicans. The second object was to incense and array the foreigners, and others, who knew but little about the colored people, against them, and thus to create a mob. We had never before interested ourselves much about the elections—but when we received the said circular, filled as it was with falsehood, we [illegible] heartily.

We exhibited the circular to gentlemen of note, and told them of its stupendous perjury and falsehood—thence to the Press office—thence to the Bulletin office—and thence to the Journal office, &c. We then repaired to His Honor the Mayor, and read the circular before him, informing him of its base and malicious intent, and furthermore that not a word of it was true—and thence we went around to many of the most respectable gentlemen, so that they might spread around the exposure of this foully-planned scheme. And we do firmly believe that we were the means of many votes being cast for the Republican party—and if we had five hundred votes to give, we would have cast them all for Mayor Henry, as we really believe that principle has more to do with him than party. But we [illegible] did the deed were [illegible] and afraid to own that it was them—and, the best of all, notwithstanding they resorted to such low and vile trickery, the Union Republican party triumphed. Thank God that in the end right will always triumph over the wrong. God did not intend for Mayor Henry to be defeated, let alone the whole party.

WARNING TO MINISTERS.

How often are we caused to sit in the sanctuary and hear some brethren, who declare their calling to be the ministry, after ascending the desk or pulpit, read the longest hymn they can find in our Hymn-book, pray a long prayer, and then when they arise for the purpose of preaching to their audience commence to make some kind of apologies for not being brought up at the college; they can't spit dick; they can't talk among the stars, and you need not look for a high fluent sermon: and to this way some ten or fifteen minutes is taken up. Silly! you are My brother, dost thou not know that thy congregation will know very soon if you are not an educated man? Well, what profit is there in telling that in the way of an excuse? But you say that you are called to preach. Let me ask you a question—Who called you, my brother? The Lord, you say. Very well; did not the Lord know before, and when He called you, that you had not been to college? Yes. When you came for license to exhort, and license to preach, did you then and there make so many excuses before the brethren who granted you the right to do so, in that portion of God's Church to which you belong? No. Well, then what is the matter? Now, you said, when God called you, He said, "Open thy mouth in my name and I will fill it" Then, my brother, you surely have [illegible] in God, and trust to Him. If not, what is the matter?—for we claim that He is the same God now and forever, to change. But you say you are ordained a deacon, and still you offer up to the people a good lengthy exhortation in the way of excuse, after which time the preacher or deacon, and often the older, reads his text, and is very frequently from an hour to an hour and a quarter, and from that to an hour and a half preaching. This is not right. Again, sometimes brethren make excuse for being very sick, not able to preach, &c., and are very apt to speak longer than they do when they make no excuse, and at the same time promise the people that they are only going to speak but a very few minutes. I have heard some brethren tell their congregations as high as six times, saying, "another thought, and I am done;" "another thought, then I am done,"—with a space ranging from three to five minutes. What do you call that, my brother? We say to all brethren who are accustomed to make a practice of this, to take warning.

FROM BROTHER REVELS

Please find enclosed three dollars. Credit two dollars to me for the Recorder, and one dollar to Mr Stewart, formerly of Vincennes. I have forgotten his Christian name.

There is great demand for hymn-books in this district. If you will send a few down, they can be sold.

Our charge has been looking up ever since the Annual Conference. Ten have recently been added to the Church. Pray for me that the good work may continue until the whole world shall be converted to God.

I will send you some Minutes soon.

W R REVELS

For the Christian Recorder.

FROM BURLINGTON.

The people of Burlington having received a circular stating the wants of the Contrabands in Washington, immediately responded to it.

On Tuesday evening a meeting was called by the Rev Joseph H. Smith for the colored citizens to assemble and to take into consideration the best means of assisting our brothers and sisters now free from bondage. The meeting assembled according to order at the A. M. E Church, Pearl street. Opened by singing, and prayer by the Rev. Joseph Long, Pastor. Rodman Dutton, Secretary.

It was moved and seconded that there be a sewing society established, to meet twice every week. Carried.

It was then put in motion to elect a President, Treasurer, and Secretary for the said Society

The motion being put before the house and seconded that Mrs. Martha Tudy be President [illegible]

It was moved and seconded that Mrs Lydia A Thomas be Treasurer. Carried.

[illegible] and E [illegible] Secretary. Carried.

It was then moved [illegible] a committee of three appointed to see what would be [illegible] such articles as were needed for the Sewing Society to forward to the needy. Carried.

It was moved and seconded that Mr Way Jones Mr Robert Taylor, Mrs. Ann McNeil, Mrs Lydia A Thomas be that committee Carried.

It was moved and seconded that the doings of this meeting be published in the Christian Recorder. Carried.

It was moved and seconded we adjourn, to meet on Tuesday, Oct 7. Carried.

Closed with benediction by the Rev. Joseph Long

Mrs. Martha Tudy, President.

Mrs Lydia A Thomas, Treasurer.

Miss Rosetta Rennie Secretary

Mr. John M Taylor, Asst Sec.

COMMITTEE

Mr Way Jones, Mr. Robert Taylor, Mrs Lydia Thomas Mrs Anna McNeil

A collection of one dollar and seventy four cts. was taken up at the meeting

Yours respectfully,

REV JOSEPH H SMITH

For the Christian Recorder

SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE

Washington Oct 13th

MR. EDITOR:—Eventful are the times in which we live. It is the glory and boast of our day that assistance is afforded to the God-given principles of man, and they struggle to free themselves from the trammels and superstitions of the past, the slavery and prejudices of the present; and with truth may it be said that eventful was the age in which we lived. The agents of slavery, darkness and the devil, seem to be retiring to their native shades before the noontide blaze of the powers of light. This world is improving, the unsettled state of national affairs, both in the old and the new world, the burning passions, tumults, crimes, mob-rule, bloodshed, prejudices, that prevail throughout the length and breadth of our distracted, bleeding and almost broken country, to the contrary notwithstanding. That man is blessed who lives to-day, and whose great privilege it is to aid in carrying forward these heaven-begotten principles, ordained by God for man's [illegible] Gloomy is the prospect; the timid falter, the weak give back, and the strong man inquires with trembling solicitude, What shall be our next hope?

The war-cry has been changed from onward to Richmond to onward to Washington. And to-day the rebel foot desecrates the land of Wm. Penn. But amid the general darkness, dismay, disappointments, another light is seen rising in the distance. Slowly and steadily it presents itself to view. It is a star of the first magnitude, and as it comes nearer and still nearer, and sheds its heavenly light around, abroad, all over, we discover its beauty, its grandeur and its power. And far off in the distance we see vast multitudes of men, women and children, buoyant with hope, and fresh with life, eagerly, with arms clasped around each other, and their eyes fixed on this beautiful star, they laugh, they cry, they shout. What means this vast multitude clad in the noble panoply of manhood, and on their breast a star? Ah! the mystery is solved, for I see in the front ranks a banner flung to the breeze, and on its waving folds I read in golden capitals, Freedom to the slaves in all the land. Abraham Lincoln

On Thursday (2d inst.) the Rev. H. M. Turner, the popular pastor of the First A. M. E. Church, Capitol Hill, convened his large congregation to a thanksgiving discourse to Almighty God for his goodness to us as a people, and to pray for God's blessing upon the President of the United States, the grand army, and all the branches of the government. In the pulpit were the Rev A W Wayman, H J Rhodes and James A Handy Several distinguished white gentlemen were present. Rev Mr Turner opened the meeting with the soul-stirring old hymn,

"God moves in a mysterious way
His wonders to perform," &c.

He read the 3d verse of the 2d chapter of the Prophet Habakkuk. He laid down nine propositions. The three most prominent were:

1st. God is acting agreeably to a plan in which there is a fixed time for executing all the designs announced in prophecy.

2d. In executing his plan occurrences often arise which disappoint the expectations of the world, and cause it to suppose that the fulfilment of the promise for which they looked is delayed beyond the appointed time.

3d. The punctual and full accomplishment of every Divine prediction is, nevertheless, certain.

The Rev. gentleman handled the subject in a masterly manner, showing conclusively that God is in the war in the executive branch of the government, and in the councils of this nation; and our duty is to wait: though he tarries wait. Prof. A M. Green, of your city, is here. He lectured a few nights ago at Israel Church. It was decidedly the ablest lecture delivered in this city for a long time. He is an orator and a true scholar. On Sabbath I strayed to Union B thel Church, and listened to a discourse from my old friend, the Rev. J P Campbell. The doctor has lost none of his fire of former years

At this church a series of meetings are going on. God is in the work. A score or more have been happily converted to Christ. Rev. S L. Hammond is in the city looking well. Rev B. T. Tanner, of E St. mission, is working with great success He raised at one collection last week $143 14. Good for the times. God prosper that mission. Hundreds of our brethren are arriving here weekly in great distress They are in need of everything. A great deal has been done, and there is yet a great deal to be done to enable them to pass through the winter. The Rev. Mr. Campbell and Prof. Green are looking after their interests

A man that said his name was John Young, of Pittsburg, Pa., came to Washington with a company of soldiers, as cook. He was taken sick and left on the street to die. He was cared for by Mr. Cyfax and Mrs Susan Sinney. They made him comfortable. He died on Sabbath, Oct. 12th. They gave him a Christian burial

More anon. APRICANUS

It has recently been discovered that a number of valuable books belonging to the British Museum have been stolen by an Irish solicitor. He transferred them to his own shelves, having first pasted his own name and arms over the mark of the Museum. As he had filed with the librarian [illegible] that the theft remained so long undiscovered has suggested some inquiries as to the faithfulness with which those having charge of the library are accustomed to perform their duties.

The British Government has granted a pension to Mr. Isaac Taylor, as an acknowledgment of his [illegible] departments of history and philosophy.

THE PROCLAMATION.

The world moves. We are living years in days and centuries in years. If, when we witnessed the uprising of a great people, for a Government of law and constitutional liberty, and the sublime sacrifices of life, property, and all that men hold dear, we wrote that we devoutly thanked God we were permitted to live in such a crisis of our country's history and of the world's, what shall we say now, when we stand on the eve of events, which, in the good providence of God, must not only girdle the deadly Upas of American slavery, but sooner or later make it a dry and lifeless trunk? Believing that liberty is better than bondage, and that slavery, as it exists in our land, is monstrous, unnatural, and wholly contrary to the clear teachings of the Divine Word, we daily and hourly thank God, over every successive step which is taken in the way of that "righteousness which exalteth a nation," and in the constitutional overthrow of that "sin which is a disgrace to any people."

While the President of the United States, in the discharge of his sworn obligations to obey the Constitution, had no choice left but to annul the bold action of individual Generals, like Fremont, Phelps, and Hunter, in reference to the enslaved, he has, after due consideration, approved and signed the first Confiscation Act; the bill abolishing slavery in the District of Columbia; the bill forever forbidding slavery in any present or future territory of the United States; the new treaty with England for the suppression of the slave trade, "in which the long resisted right of search was, for the purposes of humanity, conceded by our nation;" and, finally, the joint resolution, offering compensation from the national treasury to such of the Border States as should adopt a system of immediate or gradual emancipation. This last policy, the General Synod of the Lutheran Church in the United States, after a calm and thorough discussion, almost unanimously approved; thus leading the way for a clear and manly utterance on the great question of human liberty, which was followed by the principal Christian denominations of the land. If any of our readers are so addicted to the old order of things, when the slave mart disgraced the national capital, and the coffle-gang could be daily seen from the Capitol steps on its road to the Southern cars; when the virgin soil of a new territory must be polluted with slavery for every territory devoted to freedom; when cargo after cargo of miserable Africans were annually landed on our shores, and New York capitalists became millionaires by fitting out ships for the devilish traffic of human flesh; if any are so devoted to the state of things "as it was," we are not of that number. On the contrary, we rejoice before God with the deepest thankfulness, that these shameful days are over. Whatever may be the final result of the great Rebellion, the Sun will never go backward from these points on the dial of our nation's history. Slave ships in our harbors, slave marts in our capital, slave territory in our national domain, will be seen and known among us no more. All this is clear gain, and it is a gain so unspeakably great, when viewed in its relations to the future, and the unnumbered millions of the white and colored races who will be affected by it, that no tongue of man can utter its greatness, and no pen of man portray its far reaching and beneficent consequences

Another great step has just been taken in the direction of human freedom. Slavery is at once the strength and the weakness of the Rebellion. It is its strength, because it furnishes it the sinews of war, the food of its armies and a laboring class to remain at home, while the entire effective white population may be thrown into the field to fight its battles. It is its weakness, because whatever disturbs, arouses and renders insecure this laboring class, cuts off the very locks of the Rebel giant, and makes him comparatively helpless for evil We need not prove that the President's Proclamation of freedom to every Slave in the Rebel States, after the first of January, 1863, must turn the strength of the Rebellion into weakness. The quaking and fear in the Confederate Congress already tell how this offer is affecting them. Though a war measure, necessitated by the needless waste of treasure and blood, and set forth solely as such by the Commander-in-Chief of the Army and Navy of the United States for the preservation of the Government and the Union, it strikes with a moral power which is irresistible. It draws the lines between liberty and slavery, and boldly sets the Government at once the world on the side of liberty for all men. This cuts up intervention by the roots, creates a consciousness of right doing by the Government in the hearts of our population; and, what is infinitely more important, secures for our nation the approbation of Heaven. Having the power, under the Constitution, "to proclaim liberty to the captives, and the opening of the prison to them that are bound," as well as to do everything else which might cripple the enemy and bring the Rebellion to a close, how could we hope for success while coldly turning away from the oppressed and loyal slaves of the South, or even aiding their Rebel masters to drag them back into slavery from our very lines? No! God cannot smile upon such intolerable wrong. But now all is changed. The proclamation is occasioned, indeed, by the necessities of the war, but it is made also because it is eminently right. God has spoken the word, "Let my people go," and the Government arrays itself with God against the oppressor, and on the side of the oppressed. Now we know where we are, and who is on our side. It is that God who rebukes hypocrisy and sham—and says, in language which eats into the flesh like fire, "Is not this the fast that I have chosen? to loose the bands of wickedness, to undo the heavy burdens, to let the oppressed go free, and that ye break every yoke? Then shalt thou call, and the Lord shall answer; thou shalt cry, and He shall say: 'Here I am' If thou take away from the midst of thee the yoke, the putting forth of the finger, and speaking vanity; and if thou draw out thy soul to the hungry, and satisfy the afflicted soul, THEN shall thy light rise in obscurity, and thy darkness shall be as the noonday!"

Lutheran and Missionary.

BREVITY IN SABBATH SCHOOLS.

Children soon become listless and weary, if any exercise to which they engage is tedious in length

Superintendents and [illegible] both schools [illegible] you to remember this, and be guided by it. Another paper shall be on the Manner of the [illegible]

"Brevity!" Such was the reply of a man of great [illegible] when interesting ideas into his pupils. I would fain whisper it in the ears of my fellow teachers. Make your speeches brief. Above all, make your prayers brief. You have only an hour for reciting lessons, hearing catechism, reading and questioning, exhortation, singing, and devotional exercises. [illegible] body addresses the school fifteen minutes, what time is left for other duties?

I listened last Sabbath with great pain to a prayer at the opening of a school, which could only be described by a word coined by the Rhenish translators, longanimity. It was a good prayer, an earnest one, and the officer remembered every interest of the Church, from Christ to the Pedimanes, but right in front of me was a class of rowdy boys, without a teacher, trying to steal each other's caps and cut the buttons off each other's jackets; and the class behind that was trading knives; and the infant class was carrying on a comparison of patterns and skating caps. O how I longed to pull that brother a skirt and whisper to his ear, "Stop!" [illegible] to the children—be a more acceptable prayer from that Sabbath school, than the fifteen minutes' prayer, for things which they could not possibly understand, and had no thought of Teachers, never exceed three minutes in your prayers. Every minute more is only training the children to formalism and hypocrisy.—Christian Guardian.

PURITANISM SKETCHED BY A BOSTON LAWYER

One of the most extraordinary passages we have ever met with that attempted to characterize the religious meddling of the system of New Englandism, occurs in the speech of a Boston lawyer on a late criminal prosecution there. It reminds one of the earlier pages of Hildreth's history of the United States. If we could accept such testimony, (as in our opinion we cannot) the religious system of Puritanism has not been the most favorable to individual rights or freedom. The passage is as follows:—

The man who attends to every other man's affairs, whether his own are attended to or not, is almost exclusively a Massachusetts nuisance To Massachusetts society meddling is, indeed, a scourge so great that it may be doubted whether it does not fully counterbalance every comfort and blessing concentrated in this country. Puritanism, which exalted the manly English spirit to fanaticism on the one hand, degraded it on the other to espionage. Its churches were mutual assurance societies for the morality of their members. Its doctrines are forgotten But the evil which the Puritans unconsciously did lives after them, and churches which detest their memory and deny their teachings are managed on their principles. New England today is covered with societies in which the best of men and women conscientiously, but reluctantly, and the worst of men and women eagerly and with a devilish delight perform the part of spies and informers upon each other. To say that such a gigantic system of mutual espionage does not tend to degrade character, is simply to say that eaves-dropping and tale-bearing are not low and mean occupations. Under its influence, nothing is known of a man's real character and disposition. Habitual watchfulness upon the one side awakens habitual hypocrisy on the other.

And it is only when the little saint of Boston expands into the gigantic villain of New Orleans or San Francisco, that you can tell how vast a benefit you have derived from his emigration. The wickedness looked little here, because we saw but little of it. The enormous pressure of universal listening and peeping had driven it deep into the innermost fibres of society.

* * * * * * But be the turn whose it may, the system of a barbarous age and people applied to the control of civilized mankind awakens the fiercest resentment. Men have put up with the savagest taskmasters. They have endured the bloodiest tyrants without resistance for many years. They have submitted to the Kings of Prussia—to the Czars—to the House of Austria—and even the Turks But a government of meddling philanthropists they cannot bear.

Individually vile and odious, but quite insignificant; when collected they are all pervading, all-devouring, appalling, loathsome to every sense, and intolerable to the strongest body and the firmest mind

SIR WALTER SCOTT.

"Never, perhaps, in any period of the world's history," says a contemporary of Scott, "did literary talent receive a homage so universal as that of Scott. His reputation was co-extensive, not only with the English language, but with the boundaries of civilization. In one year, too, his literary productions yielded him £15,000. The king conferred on him a baronetcy, and wherever he appeared, at home or abroad, he was the lion of the day. All the good things of life were his. His mansion at Abbotsford realized the highest conceptions of a poet's imagination, and seemed like a poem in stone. His company was of the most honorable of the land, and his domestic enjoyments all that his heart could desire. Yet he was not happy. Ambitious to found a family, he got into debt, and in old age he was a ruined man. When about to leave Abbotsford for the last time, he said: 'When I think on what this place now is, with what it was not long ago, I feel as if my heart would break. Lonely, aged, deprived of all my family, I am going [illegible] and unbecoming [illegible] to be [illegible] But [illegible] the great [illegible] a [illegible] piece [illegible] I walk [illegible] that it may open for me at no distant period' And again: 'Some new [illegible] appear every moment. Sicknesses come thicker and thicker; friends are fewer and fewer. The recollection of youth, health, and powers of activity, neither improved or enjoyed, is a poor ground of comfort. The best is, the long halt will arrive at length, and close all.' And the long halt did arrive. Not long before he died, Sir Walter Scott requested his daughter to wheel him to his desk She then put a pen into his hand, but he fingers refused to do their office. Silent tears rolled down his cheeks. 'Take me back to my own room,' he said, 'there is no rest for Sir Walter but in his grave.' A few days after this, he died, realizing, in reference to all his fame, honor, and renown, the truth of Solomon, 'Vanity of vanities, saith the preacher, all is vanity and vexation of spirit.'"

JERUSALEM UNDERGROUND.

An account of Signor Pierotti's discoveries in the subterranean topography of Jerusalem has been published. Employed by the Pasha as an engineer, he has discovered that the modern city of Jerusalem stands on several layers of ruined masonry, the undermost of which composed of deeply bevelled and enormous stones, he attributes to the age of Solomon, the next to that of Zorobabel, the next to that of Herod, the next to that of Justinian, and so on till the times of the Saracens and Crusaders He has traced a series of conduits and sewers leading from the "dome of the rock," a mosque standing on the very site of the altar of sacrifice in the Temple, to the Valley of Jehoshaphat, by means of which the priests were enabled to flush the whole temple area with water, and thus to carry off the blood and offal of the sacrifices to the brook Kedron. The manner of his explorations was very interesting. He got an Arab to walk up through these immense sewers, ringing a bell and blowing a trumpet, while he himself by following the sound was able to trace the exact course they took. About two years ago he accidentally discovered a fountain at the pool Bethesda and on [illegible] this discovery [illegible] of water [illegible] Nobody knows from whence it comes, nor whither it goes. He found the great [illegible] and [illegible] Messiah's coming, and portended the speedy restoration of their commonwealth. This fountain, which has a peculiar taste, like that of milk and water, is identified by Signor Pierotti with the fountain which Hezekiah built

MORAVIA

The Moravians or United Brethren, of Germany and America, are taking measures to promote the resuscitation of evangelical religion in Moravia, which is the land in which their Church originated, and whence it derives the name by which it is often called This is a noble work, and is now practicable under the more liberal policy which the Austrian Government has begun to pursue in relation to Protestants of the Empire

It is the theory of a famous speculator in politics that [illegible] right to be in the world, he has no business to complain if he be allowed to starve However hard this principle may seem when applied to [illegible] it is perfectly just when applied to a poor. It has [illegible] of [illegible] that some duties [illegible] tive want.

A PENMAN ON PENS

What a pen is to be made of is still unsettled. The quill, the steel pen, and the hard nibbed gold pen, have their several advocates, and are largely used; but still every one complains that he is not suited; nothing that is good and cheap lasts Various other names have been adopted for keeping steel and corrosion apart. Pens have been galvanised on Davy's plan for protecting the ship's copper, but not with good effect. Washes of all kinds have been applied; the latest we have seen is that of gutta percha pen. Glass has been tried, but has not come into use. A correspondent informs us, that he strongly suspects that simple gold, without any hard nib, is the true material When his nibs have come off, whether by wear or accident, he grinds the gold ends in an unskilful way into something like a practical form He thus produces a rough pen, which is so durable that he thinks the manufacturers would do well to turn their attention to the imitation of a quill in gold The metal is to be excessively thin, and our correspondent suspects that the best imitation of a quill would require so little gold, that a pen might be sold for a shilling. This pen, he thinks, would last for six months at least, even in the hands of a reviewer. At any rate, it is worth while to repeat from time to time, the complaint that the world, in this prodigiously-puffed and [illegible] age, is [illegible] pen.—London Athenæum.

SEA SICKNESS

R M Bache, in a letter recently read before the Connecticut Academy of Arts and Sciences, gave a new theory of the cause of sea sickness. He attributes this annoying malady not to motion, or the appearance of motion especially, but to unaccustomed and irregular motion, the extent and direction of which the mind is unable to calculate and anticipate. As soon as persons become accustomed to this life, and the mind does not act at variance with the motion of the body, the nausea ceases. He advises sea sick persons, therefore, to keep near a quiet horizontal position, so as not to be worried with the seeming motion of the horizon. Let the food be the same as is ordinarily used. There is no specific for sea-sickness, except to [illegible] to the motions of the ship, and any tampering with the stomach in the way of unaccustomed articles of food or drinks is only likely to aggravate the nausea. If, in addition to what has been recommended above, says Mr. Bache, the passenger will spread a mattress, and put him if in a recumbent posture, all will then have been done that can be done to prevent, to cure, or to alleviate sea sickness, until the education of the senses is completed.

Mr. B. FRANK PALMER, the inventor and manufacturer of the artificial limb which bears his name, has recently tendered to the Government his services, with the free use of his time and abilities, for the assistance of the halt and maimed of our armies. Congress, it will be remembered, passed an appropriation of $15,000 for the purchase of artificial limbs for such; and Mr. Palmer has generously offered to take the sum specified, and to apply it, without profit to himself, to the construction of as many of his artificial limbs as the amount will pay for.

CHILDREN.

A friend of ours—a publisher—once thought of republishing a Christmas story from a large English collection which he had imported. He made his selection, and gave the balance to his little son to read. Next day the boy rushed to his father with one of the stories in his fist, and with glowing face and sparkling eyes exclaimed: "Oh, father, this is the story for Christmas; it's a real steamer, and will take down the world!" The father published both. His boy's selection went through four editions; his own still has unsold on his shelves.

We know a little chubby-faced boy who being taken down town and suited to a new jacket and pants by his father, made the following remark as they were about to take the cars for home: "Now father, you [illegible] me [illegible] to-day that I can't bear to have you spend any more, so you just jump in the car and ride home, and I'll trot along on the sidewalk and save you three cents." There was thoughtfulness for an eight-year-old!

"THE LORD'S NO DEAF."

A poor old [illegible] man residing in a Yorkshire village was visited one day by the parish clergyman, who had recently taken a resolution to pay such visits regularly to his parishioners, and therefore made a promise to the wife of this villager that he would call occasionally and pray with him. The minister, however soon fell through this resolution, and did not pay another visit to the deaf man until three years after, when, happening to go through the alley where the poor man lived, he found the wife at the door, and therefore could not avoid inquiring for her husband.

"Well, Margaret," said the minister, "how is Thomas?"

"Nae the better o' you," was the rather curt answer.

"How, how, Margaret?" inquired the minister.

"Ou, ye promised twa years syne to ca' and pray anee a fortnight wi' him, and ye never anee darkened the door sin syne."

"Well, well, Margaret, don't be so short. I thought it was not necessary to call and pray with Thomas, for I see, you know, and cannot hear me."

"But sir," rejoined the woman, "the Lord's no deaf."

And the [illegible] clergyman shrank abashed from the cottage

HAD TO SAY IT

The late eloquent and learned Dr. Rice excelled in the fervor and unction of his prayers. In his congregation was an aged negro, very pious and excitable, who would always shout "Amen!" when any petition was put up which touched his feelings This at length became quite annoying to Dr. Rice, especially as Cæsar's hearty amens not unfrequently [illegible] the congregation. Finally, the Doctor told him that his shouts disturbed the congregation, who were not accustomed to them; and if he could restrain them, it would be a great favor. The good negro was shocked to learn that he had disturbed any one, and faithfully promised silence in future. But it happened the very next Sunday that the Dr. was unusually earnest in his supplications to the throne of grace He fairly "wrestled in prayer." In the gallery, as usual, sat Cæsar, writhing sympathetically with the emotion which he could not repress and would not utter More and more fervent waxed the prayer—deeper and deeper grew Cæsar's emotions—more and more violent his struggles to avoid giving vocal utterance to them Nature at last could hold out no longer. "Amen!" shouted Cæsar. "Massa [illegible]

EVILS OF MENTAL PRECOCITY

[illegible] pleasant to find parents to see how bright, intelligent and witty their children are; and they often find great satisfaction in showing to others the brilliancy and mental sprightliness of their precocious darlings. Such parents know not what they are doing. [illegible] parental folly, and fond aunts, and doting grandparents, and injudicious friends, tends to the ruin of [illegible] children. [illegible] science are but the indications of an over-stretched [illegible] year. This neglect of the physical, and stimulating the mental man, is the more to be deplored, from the fact that this early precocity is wholly unnecessary, because many of the best [illegible] and most [illegible] very dull pupils in early childhood. Andrew Fuller, Sir Walter Scott, and Daniel Webster were [illegible] has ever done more in theological discussion than the former? Or who, in the whole world of intellect, than the second? Or who at the bar and in the Senate than the latter.—Mrs Farrington.

VERDICT OF A JURY OF BOYS

When Dr Nathaniel Prentice taught a public school in Roxbury, he was very much a favorite; but his patience at times would get very much exhausted by the infractions of the school rules by the scholars. On one occasion, in rather a wrathy way, he threatened to punish with six blows of a heavy ferule the first boy detected in whispering, and appointed some as detectors. Shortly after, one of the detectors shouted,

"Master, John Ziegler is whispering."

John was called up and asked if it was a fact. (John, by the way, was a favorite both with his teacher and schoolmates.)

"Yes," answered John; "I was not aware of what I was about; I was intent on working out a sum, and requested the boy who sat next to hand me the arithmetic that contained the rule which I wished to see."

The doctor regretted his hasty threat, but told John that he could not suffer him to whisper or escape the punishment, but continued:

"I wish I could avoid it, but cannot without a forfeiture of my word. I will," he continued, "leave it to any three scholars you may choose, to say whether or not I omit the punishment."

John said he was agreed to that, and immediately called out G. S., T. D., and D P. D. The doctor told them to return a verdict, which they soon did, (after consultation,) as follows:

"The master's word must be kept inviolate—John must receive the threatened six blows of the ferule; but it must be inflicted on voluntary praties—and we, the arbitrators, will share the punishment by receiving each of us two of the blows

John, who had listened to the verdict, stepped up to the doctor, and with outstretched hand exclaimed:

"Master, here is my hand; they shan't be struck a blow. I will receive the punishment"

The doctor, under pretence of wiping his face, shielded his eyes, and telling the boys to go to their seats, said he would think of it. I believe he did think of it to his dying day, but the punishment was never inflicted.—Methodist Journal

TEACHING CHILDREN

Do all in your power to teach children self-government. If a child is passionate, teach him by gentle and patient means, to curb his temper. If he is greedy, cultivate liberality in him. If he is [illegible] out of it by encouraging frank good humor. If he is indolent, accustom him to exertion. If pride make his obedience reluctant, subdue him by counsel or discipline. In short, give your children a habit overcoming their besetting sin.

A WORD TO YOUNG WRITERS.

Do not aim to be eloquent. Be sure to have something to write about, and then tell your story with plainness Whenever a writer begins with stars and rainbows, we always find it difficult to discover his subject. If, however, we find him scientific and instructive, we read him with pleasure, and print him also, if we judge his article suited to our columns; but if his stars and rainbows are only introduced as ornaments, we grow weary in looking for his thoughts, and generally dismiss the article.—Meth Prot.

BIBLIOMANIA.

An interesting volume, called the Book-Hunter, has lately fallen into our hands, filled with very pleasant matter concerning a harmless and not very numerous class of men, whose passion is a peculiar one, but hurtful neither to Church or State, and, incidentally profitable to all literary men. It is the class of book-collectors, or, as he entitles them in one of the chapters of his general essay, "mighty book hunters"—bibliomaniacs, to use the sounding, scholastic term, which the Greek language has furnished for them. The curious habits and peculiar fancies of this class of men are well [illegible] and literally much information is given concerning the objects of these men's passion, the rare or celebrated books which they were wont to hunt after with so much zeal, and hoard with so much care.

The division of labor which is so perceptible a feature in our modern society, obtains also among this unwieldly and secluded class of men. Only the division is made among them very much by the caprice or fancy of the various persons visited by this interesting malady

LITERARY SCRAPS.

Daniel Webster said: "Small is the sum that is required to patronize a newspaper, and amply repaid is its patron, I care not how humble and unpretending the Gazette he takes. It is scarcely possible to fill a sheet without putting in it something that is worth the subscription price. I well remember what a marked difference there was between those who had access to some good newspapers and those who had not. Other things being equal, the first were always superior to the last in debate, composition, and general intelligence."

Rev. Dean Trench, in his excellent work on "English—Past and Present," after noticing the anomalous construction of the word "its," says it does not once occur in the whole of our authorized version of the Bible—occurs only three times in the whole of Shakspeare—was a word unknown to Ben Jonson—was not admitted into his poems by Milton—and did not come into common use until a few years before Dryden sanctioned it in his writings.

Anthony Trollope contributes to the Athenæum an open letter to James Russell Lowell, headed American Literary Piracy. He relates in it the story of his difficulties with certain American publishers about the publication of some of his works and the payment of his claims as author, and on this bases an eloquent argument for an international copyright. He very truly says that the effects of the present system are to take away all security both in author and publisher.

But why is it—inquires the Methodist—that we hear so much of "American" and little of English "Literary Piracy?" Mr Trollope barely admits that there may be such a thing. We assure Mr. Trollope that there is such a thing, and far more heinous in its nature than the crimes committed this side of the water. American publishers appropriate the works, but always give the credit of their composition to the foreign authors. English publishers have been known not only to steal American works, but to claim them as by English authors, and at the same time abuse the original itself as worthless and the author as incompetent. Andrews's Lexicon was "republished" in this way by [illegible]

A great fac-simile reprint in quarto has been published of the well-known Caxton volume, The Game of Chess, supposed to be the first book printed in England

The death of Prof T. Stewart Trail, at Edinburgh, [illegible] Mr Trail was the editor [illegible] the recent edition [illegible]

PSALM CVI.

[illegible]

O! [illegible]
The custom of eternal love;
[illegible]
Have stood, and will forever last.

Who can his mighty deeds express,
Not only vast, but numberless

RELIGIOUS INTELLIGENCE

Rev. Asbury Lowrie publishes a letter "declaring that he had received no new views in regard to the Trinity, the Atonement, and other doctrines of grace." He says—

"I know nothing of the origin of the statement, but I would observe, that I do not take exception to every part of it, in the direct statement and in that is implied in it. I have made no change in regard to the views which I have so often and abundantly expressed in my writings. By a change of views, I suppose you mean a change from views which I have once held, and which I have so often expressed—views which I regard as my attempt to call attention to the ministry, and which I have endeavored to maintain, through the press—on the doctrine of the Trinity, the Atonement, the Spirit's work, and the doctrine of the Christian generally." The doctrines and the mode of government of the Presbyterian Church are what I have been preaching, more and more the longer I live; and in the belief of those doctrines, in which I was trained, and which I have published and endeavored to maintain for nearly forty years of my life, I expect to die."

METHODIST.—EPISCOPAL CHURCH IN PARMA, ITALY.—At the Easter Monday Conference, a letter was read by Mr. Arthur from Rev. H. J. Piggot, who had purchased at Parma, for £250, a building which had formerly been the church of a monastery, and which, after a fourth sum of £40 had been expended upon it, was opened on the Sabbath preceding the date of the letter. To show the impression which this event had produced, he stated that a large congregation had assembled on that occasion, that "450 persons were within the doors," orderly and attentive, and that hundreds remained in the street. Every indication was given of sympathy and encouragement, and he considered that nothing could have greater promise for Italy. Mr. Arthur gave translations from a Parma journal, which announced the opening "that morning, for the first time in that city, of "an evangelical church," and which added that "the place was small, the crowd great, and the heat oppressive," so that many were obliged to retire, but that it was filled with successive congregations. In conclusion, Mr. Arthur expressed his opinion that Italy must be evangelized by native energy, but denominational efforts and the men of well-united piety should be employed to "preach the Gospel," and leave developments to God.

At the late meeting of the Massachusetts General Conference, an interesting discussion arose on the propriety of teaching the children of Congregationalists the Westminster Assembly's Catechism. We are pleased to learn that the importance of the measure was so stoutly maintained.

One said that the Catechism, next to the Bible, had made New England what it is. Another stated the historical fact that the great apostacy in this Commonwealth commenced by ignoring the Catechism, and substituting another in its place, which excluded the peculiar doctrines of the Gospel. This was done in Plymouth county more than a hundred years ago. The same thing was done in Worcester county more than fifty years since. It was by gradually lowering down the Gospel that heresy was introduced into these churches. Let our children be brought up without being taught the fundamental doctrines of the Gospel, and we shall have a second crop of Unitarianism. This generation will not pass away before the battle with heresy will have to be fought over again. Let the saying of an old writer be remembered: "Let me fill the bushel with wheat, then let him that can, fill it with chaff." Fill the minds of our children with Bible truth, and it will fortify them against being led away by error.

EPISCOPAL.—TRINITY CHURCH PATRONAGE.—There are nine clergymen connected with the wealthy corporation of Trinity church in New York—a rector and two clergymen to each of the four congregations. The following statement will be read with interest, as showing the loyalty and devotion to the country of the clergy of "Old Trinity":

"The rector, Dr. Berrian, has a son connected with the Navy Department. In Trinity Church, Dr. Vinton has two brothers in the United States army; Dr. Ogilby has a son and other connections fighting gallantly at the Peninsula and in other Western battles. In St. Paul's chapel, Dr. Haight has a son in the army in Virginia. Mr. Dix has a father a major general, and a brother a chaplain in the United States service. In St. John's chapel, Dr. Weston has gone home as chaplain with his (7th New York) Regiment. In Trinity chapel, Dr. Higbee has two sons in the naval service of the United States, and Dr. Hobart a nephew in the army."

The Boston Review says of New England Unitarianism:

"As a whole, it is obvious that it is neither increasing nor aggressive, and if Boston, its fountain head, may be quoted as a true exponent of its quantity and power, it has lost much during the last thirty years. Instead of holding that city as formerly, it has been compelled to relax its grasp, and behold evangelical elements assert and maintain a power more than quadrupled in the number of its churches, members and influence."

Domestic Items.

An important reconnoissance was made to Leesburg on Sunday, by a cavalry force of Negley's Fifth, the Fortieth New York regiment, Colonel Egan, where they captured a rebel wagon train, which, among other things, contained the personal effects and official papers of the rebel General Longstreet, and a good deal of army supplies, tents, and so forth. Several fine horses, beef cattle, and a caisson filled with ammunition were also captured.

A New Currency.—A new plan for obviating the small change trouble has been suggested and is being urged out by parties in Connecticut, which seems to be the best expedient to adopt until we come back to our good old tokens of gold and silver. The small change now in use are incased in a thin white metal covering, with a mica face, so that their denomination is easily seen. The whole is then of exactly the same shape, though not as large or as thick as a quarter dollar, and is as handy to every respect as ordinary silver change. It can be furnished at about five per cent. premium. An effort is to be made to induce the Treasury Department to adopt this style of currency in preference to the small bills, which, it is argued, being printed on inferior paper, will soon become dirty and ragged.

George Francis Train has issued a statement and protest against his expulsion from Faneuil Hall, Boston, on the occasion of the Emancipation Meeting and address of Charles Sumner. He states that the meeting having adjourned, he (Train) was prevented from holding another meeting, and being called upon, he attempted to go on the platform, when dozens rushed upon him, striking him, and lifting him from the floor by the collar, and finally succeeded in throwing him down. On his way out the mob attempted to throw him over the bridge.

The London Times on our Victory.—Though a greater victory than that now claimed would still leave the Federal Government in a desperate position, the enormous extent of the theatre of war, the number of generals and armies, the variety of details, is likely to produce a great effect at New York requires but slight encouragement to be heard as a note of triumph. Richmond is the object of Washington, will probably make the commercial capital jubilant. Unless reversed by some Confederate victories, the present engagement will revive McClellan's popularity, so that many will be disposed to consider which he set out from Washington in pursuit of the successful Confederates, it is a considerable one. Movement to have marched or fought at all. Yet he has done both with a celerity that did not distinguish his operations in the Peninsula; and he has done it with troops that must have been fatigued by the continued retreats, and the spectacle presented will in the long run of Washington, from which they again moved to recommence the struggle. But if McClellan has really won the battle, it is still a fatality of the Federal Cabinet that it will not gain an unqualified advantage from the [illegible] will thank [illegible] the conquered [illegible] the ravages of the invader and driven him from their borders. While reposing at the victories which, under God's blessing, have crowned our exertions, let us [illegible] of any good through all these troubles to a peace be[illegible]

Episcopal Convention, and Secession.—The [illegible] was held in New York on the 1st inst. The Right Rev. Bishop Potter who not present, in consequence of a domestic affliction. A number of clergymen from [illegible] were present.

The mooted subject of an expression in regard to the [illegible] and the [illegible] church, was [illegible] before the Convention by the Rev. Mr. Brount [illegible], who offered a preamble and resolution, declaring [illegible] never by ecclesiastical enactments the [illegible] and the [illegible], thereby grievously rending the body of [illegible] in His Church," and requesting the House of [illegible] to set forth a special form of prayer pleading [illegible] God's gracious [illegible] praying that it may please Him [illegible] ment, giving it the victory over all its enemies; that [illegible] will abate their anger and pride, assuage their malice, and confound their devices, and, giving them better [illegible] that He will restore our National Union, bring back [illegible] peace and prosperity to the State, and godly unity to [illegible] churches.

The resolution was debated and laid on the table by a vote of 75 yeas to 31 nays, and an attempt to reconsider was lost. The argument against the adoption of [illegible] was, as follows:

He considered the resolution unnecessary and an [illegible] West [illegible] Church was loyal; it could not be imputed to them that they were in any sympathy with the rebellion. In the most fervent prayers of the Church there were supplications [illegible] overlooked. The Church could well say with truth that it was not responsible for the rebellion. She could, indeed, exclaim, "Thou canst not say, I did it." It had been said that the press and the people of the country would expect some expression from the Convention with regard to the war. But that should not [illegible] that character. He hoped that no subjects calculated [illegible] would be brought up. They were in the midst of a civil war. The North and South had drawn the sword. If the [illegible] should be divided, and, then, if they were to have two churches instead of one, then, indeed, it would be time to introduce such a resolution. Now it was impolitic, and he would impress upon them the force of the old maxim, which declared that they should treat their enemies as friends, knowing that at one day they might be [illegible] friends.

Hon. Horatio Seymour also took part in the discussion on the attitude of the Church towards the rebellion, and while a full and free [illegible] of love for their mistaken brethren. He believed that the [illegible] of the Government [illegible] the peace could be restored to us as well as by force. It was for that reason he had previously voted for a special form of prayer in which they could all unite. But he urged the importance of dealing with our Southern [illegible] Christian men, in the expectation of meeting them again some time and wiping out all past differences. The resolutions were [illegible] committee. The [illegible] position was made of other resolutions suggesting modification of the [illegible] same subject.

Statement of a Refugee from Richmond—Affairs at Staunton and Winchester.—[Special Correspondence of the Baltimore American.]—WILLIAMSPORT, Md., Oct. 4, 1862.—Jn Clay, an Englishman, and others, left Richmond Oct. 4th. By slow traveling they at length reached Staunton on Friday night. He was told by those with whom he conversed, that there were 1,500 Confederate States soldiers in the hospitals of the place, and at Charlotte, from 2000 to 3,000. Staunton was so full of soldiers that he could not procure any bed, and only slept in the hotel parlor by paying dearly for its accommodation. On Sunday another train of cars brought to Staunton 500 more convalescents. Here he again had to procure a pass.

On Monday morning he left Staunton. All along the way he saw companies of men passing in the direction of the army as he looked from out the stage-coach. According to his own judgment, he supposes that he saw about 1,500 wagons on their way to Staunton, filled with sick and wounded soldiers.

On Tuesday morning, about nine o'clock, he reached Winchester. This place, he says, was so full of soldiers that he found it impossible to procure either bed or boarding. The greatest destruction of property he has ever seen he beheld here. He saw soldiers here upon the side-walk, without any regard for decency, picking up the vermin off their bodies. Some [illegible] and [illegible] were [illegible].

About eleven o'clock on Wednesday morning, he left Winchester. At this point of his progress he had to abandon the idea of traveling by conveyance. He therefore was obliged to walk. Within a short distance of Martinsburg he met three regiments of cavalry going into the town. These regiments he afterwards saw dismounted on the road leading to Shepherdstown. Here his papers were demanded, but he succeeded in effecting his passage through their lines after showing them. He attributed his easy escape beyond [illegible] about Martinsburg, and to the last night's reconnoissance [illegible] river he only met several cavalry, whom he was ordered to pass by. He reached here between five and six [illegible] man, and a close observer of things which occur [illegible] him. He does not ask many questions, but is ready to answer any inquiries about Dixie's land. Richmond, [illegible] 8,420 Confederate mails he purchased $1100 in gold. [illegible] lors ample information. He says he saw men tarred and feathered, wounded and stubborn with half of their heads [illegible] of their [illegible] to the United States and Stephen [illegible] continuance of the war are the speculators of Richmond.

The Sioux War.—The Sioux war is regarded as practically at an end. 1,500 prisoners have been taken, and more are brought in every day. In the engagements which have broken the strength of the red men, only [illegible] on the [illegible] part upon record.

Refugees from Virginia.—White refugees from the counties of Virginia skirting the Potomac, and even from those surrounding Richmond, are beginning to arrive here in considerable numbers, induced to come as much, it may safely be conjectured, on account of the danger of starving to death as from incentives to loyalty. Ten or a dozen men have come in to-day, and several women with children and babies. There seems a strong probability that the negro will increase with the approach of winter.

Noble Contribution from San Francisco.—The people of San Francisco have raised and forwarded to the Sanitary Commission at Washington, the magnificent contribution of one hundred thousand dollars for the relief of our sick and wounded soldiers and seamen.

Massachusetts in the War.—Massachusetts will have sent, in all, under the different calls of the President, 80,400 men, as follows:—36 regiments of three years' men, 36,000; 19 regiments of nine months' men, 19,000; number raised to fill up the old regiments' 7,000, other miscellaneous contributions, 2,700; 1 cavalry regiment 1,200, 11 batteries, 1,700, enlisted in the navy, 12,000.

Iron clads Building at Greenpoint L. I.—Six iron-clads are now building at the Continental Works, Greenpoint, One—the Passaic—was recently launched and is near completion. The Montauk and Naiskil will be ready to launch in two weeks. The plating of the fourth and fifth—the Puritan and Dictator—will be commenced soon, and the completion. The Quidnick Battery—has her frame up. She will have two turrets, and carry four 2 inch guns.

Business at New York Custom House.—Contrary to the expectations of many of our merchants, the importations continue to be heavy, and the amounts received for duty large, notwithstanding the new tariff. The rates of duty were thought to be so high that the quantity of goods imported would be much less than [illegible] Dress [illegible] and [illegible] have been more than usually heavy, and the quantity of [illegible] Evening Post.

From The Army of the Potomac—Congratulatory Order of Gen. McClellan to the Soldiers of the recent Victories, &c.

HEADQUARTERS, ARMY OF THE POTOMAC, }
Camp near Sharpsburg, Md., Oct. 3, 1862. }

General Order No. [illegible]

I announce to the army that the President of the United States has expressed his appreciation of your recent services in general terms of congratulation to the army under his command for the victories achieved by their bravery at the passes of the South Mountain and upon the Antietam.

Hagerstown, Boonsboro, Keedysville, Sharpsburg, Hagerstown, Funkstown, Frederick City, Middletown, Boonsboro, Hagerstown, Williamsport, Falling Waters, Martinsburg, Bunker Hill, Charlestown, Harper's Ferry, Halltown, Bolivar Heights, Hagerstown, Boonsboro, Middletown, Frederick City, Jefferson, Harper's Ferry, Bolivar Heights, Charlestown, Bunker Hill, Martinsburg, Williamsport

THE BATTLE AUTUMN OF 1862.

The flags of war like storm-birds fly,
The charging trumpets blow;
Yet rolls no thunder in the sky,
No earthquake strives below.

And, calm and patient, Nature keeps
Her ancient promise well,
Though o'er her bosom sow'd with deeds
The battle's breath, they toll

And still she walks in golden hours
Through harvest-happy farms,
And still she wears her fruits and flowers
Like jewels on her arms.

What mean the gladness of the plain,
This joy of eve and morn,
The mirth that shakes the beard of grain
And yellows locks of corn?

Ah! eyes may well be full of tears,
When hearts with hate are hot;
But even-paced come round the years,
And Nature changes not.

She greets with smiles our bitter grief,
With songs our groans of pain;
She mocks with tint of flower and leaf
The war-field's crimson stain.

Still in the cannon's pause, we hear
Her ceaseless sounds and sights;
Tho' near to God for doubt or fear,
She shares the eternal calm.

She knows the seed lies safe below
The fires that scar and burn;
For all the tears of blood we sow
She waits the rich return.

She sees with clearer eye than ours
The good, of suffering born—
The earth that feeds on blood and tears
And ripens like her corn.

Oh, give to us, in times like these,
The vision of her eyes;
And make her fields and fruited trees
Our golden prophecies.

Oh, give to us her finer ear!
Above the stormy din,
We, too, would hear the bells of cheer
Ring peace and freedom in!

Atlantic Monthly for October

BIOGRAPHY OF A NOTORIOUS ELEPHANT

Among the most attractive features of Van Amburgh & Co.'s Menagerie is the celebrated elephant, Hannibal, the largest animal ever exhibited in this country or in Europe, and, as the old fellow has so frequently furnished newspaper itemizers with materials for spicy paragraphs that his name has become familiar to almost every one, a brief sketch of his history may be found of interest.

Hannibal was brought to this country in 1824, from the East Indies, and was purchased by a butcher in New York, who exhibited him for a time in a stable in that city. He shortly after fell into the hands of his present owners, who have retained him ever since, and who would not now sell him at any price. He was supposed to be about twenty-five years of age when imported, which would make him sixty-three years old at the present time

Hannibal first distinguished himself at the Zoological Institute in the Bowery, New York, in 1825, when he saved the life of his keeper, Mr. Joseph Martin, who now resides at Girard, in Erie county. A large tiger and tigress had escaped from their cage and fastened upon a lama which was allowed to run wild about the building. Mr. Martin, hearing the noise, entered the apartment, without suspecting the extent of the danger, when the tiger immediately crouched to spring upon him. Martin was entirely unarmed, and all resistance to the attack of the infuriated beast would be useless. At this juncture Hannibal rushed forward, seized his keeper, and raising him out of danger, held him in safety until assistance arrived and the animals were secured.

The admirable disposition exhibited by Hannibal in the incident just narrated gained him great credit with the public as a humane and well-disposed elephant, of good feelings and generous impulses; but his subsequent conduct, we are sorry to say, has entirely destroyed that favorable impression, and he is now regarded, and not without reason, as a morose and incorrigible old rascal, who can only be kept within the bounds of decent behaviour by the constant use of chains and frequent applications of condign punishment. His breaches of peace have been so numerous that it would be impossible to detail them within the limits of a newspaper article, but we will briefly allude to some of his most violent outbreaks.

In 1847 this city was the scene of one of his most violent bursts of fury. The menagerie was wintering in the warehouse of Leech & Co., on the banks of the canal, where the Cleveland and Pittsburg freight depot now stands. "Queen Ann," an elephantine maid, for whom Hannibal had formed a tender attachment, was removed from his companionship, and he immediately fell into a fearful state of sullenness and rage. For three days he refused all food, and during that time lost no less than three thousand pounds in weight, as was definitely ascertained at the time by the scales He endeavored to drown his sorrows "in the flowing bowl," refusing to drink unless the water given him was stiffly infused with whisky; but this indulgence, by which it was sought to humour him, only rendered him more frantic in the end. His keeper, and a favorite dog with whom he had been on the best of terms, became the special objects of his animosity. At the first symptoms of insubordination he had been loaded with chains, and so firmly secured that it was thought impossible for him to break loose. Day after day passed away without any diminution of ill-temper upon the part of the large beast, until at last his uninterrupting "surgings" resulted in tearing away his fastenings, and the infuriated elephant was at large in the building. A scene of the wildest terror ensued The lions, tigers, leopards and other animals commenced dashing against the sides of the cages, while the air resounded with their cries of fright; the people by thousands gathered around the warehouse armed with rifles and every description of fire-arms. Hannibal roamed through the building, tearing down timbers, raising his enormous bulk upon his hind legs, and beating the roof with his trunk, and threatening every moment to make a complete wreck of the whole structure. But the manager of the menagerie had provided for this. Long poles, with strong steel hooks at the ends, were brought forward and inserted in his flesh on every side; these were attached to ropes and tackle, manned by hundreds of men, and finally the angry monster, the blood flowing from his lacerated body in torrents, but still struggling desperately and trumpeting fiercely, was brought to the ground and so chained as to render him perfectly helpless Spears and pitchforks were then brought into requisition, and he was punished, until completely exhausted, be announced in his usual manner his complete submission and promise of better behaviour, when he was released, a wiser, and, for a time, a better elephant. His appetite returned immediately, and in a very short space of time he had more than supplied his extraordinary loss of flesh.

In 1851, while going from Pawtucket to Fall River, in Massachusetts, he had a misunderstanding with his keeper, whom he compelled to fly for his life. Finding himself at liberty he started off at a furious pace, attacking every animate object that he found in his path. He threw a horse and wagon into the air, smashing the vehicle all to pieces, and then carried the mangled remains of the horse a distance of fifty feet, to a pond, into which he threw the lifeless body. He next encountered another horse and wagon, and made kindling wood of the latter, the horse escaping by flight. Coming to a third wagon he smashed up the whole establishment, threw the horse thirty feet into an adjoining field, and then, tearing down the fence, brought the body of the horse and hurled it down on the road. Overtaking still another horse and wagon he demolished the vehicle, and, the horse changed with the fore-wheels, he pursued him for eight miles, without being able to overtake the frightened steed. In this race he travelled a portion of this distance at the rate of a mile in three minutes. Fortunately, the occupants of the vehicles sustained no very serious injuries, and the proprietors of the menagerie offered a satisfactory compromise to the parties interested. After killing another horse and doing other mischief of a less serious character, he laid down exhausted in the bushes, where he was soon after found and properly secured

A few years since, while the menagerie was at Williamsburg, N. Y., Hannibal suddenly broke out in a furious fit, during the absence from the tent of his keeper, and after demolishing a wagon loaded with sawdust, turned his attention to the cages of animals which he upset right and left, fortunately, however, without setting loose any of the dangerous inhabitants, with the exception of a hyena or two, which were soon captured. He then sallied forth into the street, dragging his chain after him and trumpeting defiance The attaches of the menagerie followed him and drove him into a stone-yard, where he was kept until the long pikes and hooks of the Young America Hook and Ladder Company were brought upon the ground, when he was surrounded and kept at bay until ropes were thrown around his legs and wound so he could not move. He was then thrown, after which he was speared and stabbed with pitchforks until completely reduced to submission, as he signified by "begging" piteously, when he was led back to his old quarters as docile as a lamb.

His last fit of insubordination occurred in Philadelphia, in February, 1861, and continued for three weeks. His owners know him so well now, that they can detect the approach of one of these fits at once, and guard against its unpleasant consequences. So, on this occasion, he was most securely chained upon showing the first symptoms of ill-temper, that he was unable to do any mischief, except tearing down an iron column which stood within his reach, and throwing it with great violence across the building. Since then he has conducted himself with great propriety, and Van Amburgh & Co. are in hopes that he has reformed, and will hereafter conduct himself as a peaceable, respectable elephant should. Still they watch him with the utmost vigilance, and his keeper is always ready for him in case he should manifest any disposition to return to his old, disreputable tricks.

In 1859, while travelling in Mississippi, Hannibal was ordered to swim the Black Warrior River, which was then greatly swollen by a freshet. Instead, however, of crossing as directed, he started on a voyage of discovery down stream, emerging suddenly on a plantation some twelve miles below where he entered. He came ashore on the edge of a cotton-field, where a large number of darkies were at work, and the effect produced among them by the unexpected and terrific apparition may be imagined, but cannot be described. The news spread, with all the exaggerations which would naturally be given to such an event, with incredible rapidity, and resulted in a general stampede of the entire colored population of the country. It is even said by some that a good many of the darkies turned white with fright. As a proof of this, numbers are pointed out in that region who have not fully regained their natural hue. It would hardly be fair, however, to hold Hannibal responsible for all the doubtful shades of complexion to be found in that vicinity.

In 1856, a keeper who had taken care of Hannibal for many years, fell from his horse in a fit near Zanesville, Ohio. The huge beast, instead of deserting him, stood watching over his senseless form until the train of cages came up, and then suffered himself to be chained and led away by Mr. Thomas, his present keeper, without making the slightest resistance, although had the other keeper been well, such an attempt at authority on the part of Thomas would have been resented with fury.

Hannibal is temperate and regular in his habits, eating about four hundred pounds of hay and a couple of bushels of oats daily, with such allowance of apples, gingerbread, &c., as the generosity of visitors may bestow upon him, and an acre (more or less) of clover, by way of salad when he can get it. His only beverage is water, of which he consumes a couple of barrels every day. His weight is probably from 15,000 to 18,000 pounds. In consideration of the recent good conduct of Hannibal his owners have had a magnificent golden-fringed and embroidered covering manufactured for him, at an expense of nearly one thousand dollars, and as he marches in the line of cages in all the pride of his gorgeous apparel, the spectator cannot but feel that the old fellow is fully sensible in his own mind that he is the most important individual connected with the establishment

THE GREAT WALL OF CHINA.

For a short distance either side of the Lo-wan Pass the wall is constructed of brick with rubble in the centre; but further away it is composed almost wholly of stone; in fact, whatever materials were closest at hand would appear to have been made use of: thus, as at the spots we visited, granite abounded in greatest profusion, so in the construction of the wall was it made the principal ingredient, and for miles the wall consists of large, shapeless masses of granite, smoothed only on the outside. We observed but one tower built entirely of stone—they being, with this exception, composed of brick, with foundations of hewn stone The height of the wall from the top of the parapet is about seventeen feet ten inches at most parts, though occasionally, where the parapet is highest, it measures eighteen feet six inches; its breadth is thirteen feet, and the height of the parapet five feet four inches. The towers are thirty one feet three inches high, and twenty-eight feet one inch broad. The parapet is both crenelated and loopholed, and the towers are pierced for the discharge of some projectile. From any elevated site the scenery well repays one for the trouble of ascent; clear streams are seen meandering down the passes, whilst on every side, and looming far in the distance, are a succession of brown hill-tops, with small patches only under cultivation Droves of pack-asses are seen going and returning, the former unladen, and the latter bringing a small kind of brushwood, which the borderers burn instead of the millet stalk in use on the plains whilst in wild abundance are scattered innumerable ash, poplar, and fir-trees.

Offshoots branch out from the wall in occasional places. For their construction it is difficult in every case to assign a reason; the little town of Lo-wan Eu is completely encircled by one, and on the opposite side a double wall winds upwards with the portions in nearly parallel lines.

A visit the following day to the Pass of Chapyw, distant about twenty-one lee from that of Lowan, confirmed our surmise that in the erection of the wall the contractors, if such there were, availed themselves to any extent of the building materials closest at hand. We noticed several gaps, most of which were partially imbedded in the earth or rubble forming the centre of the wall; one bore an inscription recording that it was cast in the reign of Wan Lee, the last Emperor but one of the Ming dynasty; it must therefore have been upwards of 200 years old and was evidently fashioned after a European model A great many of the towers were in a decay ed state, and the interior of some of them, having been erected of adobe, were converted into gardens and granaries

The Chinese speak of the wonderful structure as the 10,000 lee old wall, and appear to consider it extremely natural that strangers should desire to visit it; the sight amply repays one for the troubles and difficulties of the journey; and when the fact is realized that for thousands of miles this extraordinary product of masonic art pursues its serpentine course, all other so-called wonders of the world fade by comparison with this lasting memento of a despot's folly and the involuntary labor of a submissive people.—Once a Week.

BRIDGING THE SUSQUEHANNA

The Philadelphia, Wilmington, and Baltimore Railroad Company are now constructing a pier in the Susquehanna river, preparatory to the construction of a railroad bridge across that stream. Piles have been driven where the water has a depth of thirty feet, and by the aid of machinery they have been cut off even with the bed of the river. In constructing the pier, an iron caisson, made of boiler iron, the size of the pier, is first constructed, and each section will be sunk by filling it with blocks of granite until the stone-work is above the water. A frame-work at the bottom of the river, around the edge of the pier, will keep the iron caisson in its place It is expected that this pier will be completed before the cold weather sets in

THE HOUSE THAT JACK BUILT.

THE JEWISH ORIGIN OF THE CELEBRATED POPULAR LEGEND "THE HOUSE THAT JACK BUILT"

As the occupation and pleasures of childhood produce a powerful impression on the memory, it is probable almost every reader who has passed his infantile day in an English nursery, recollects the delight with which he repeated that puerile jingling legend, "The house that Jack built." Very few, however, are at all aware of the original form of its composition, or the particular subject it was designed to illustrate. And fewer still would suspect that it is only an accommodated and altered translation of an ancient parabolical hymn, sung by the Jews at the feast of the Passover, and commemorative of the principal events in the history of that people. Yet, such is actually the fact. The original, in the Chaldee language, is now lying before me, and as it may not be uninteresting to the readers of the Congregational Magazine, I will here furnish them with a literal translation of it, and then add the interpretation, as given by P. N Leberecht, Leipsic, 1751. The hymn itself is found in Sepher Haggadah, vol. 23.

1. A kid, a kid, my father bought,
For two pieces of money:
A kid, a kid.

2. Then came the cat and ate the kid,
That my father bought,
For two pieces of money:
A kid, a kid.

3. Then came the dog, that bit the cat,
That ate the kid,
That my father bought,
For two pieces of money
A kid, a kid.

4. Then came the staff, and beat the dog,
That bit the cat,
That ate the kid,
That my father bought,
For two pieces of money;
A kid, a kid.

5. Then came the fire, and burned the staff,
That beat the dog,
That bit the cat,
That ate the kid,
That my father bought,
For two pieces of money:
A kid, a kid.

6. Then came the water, and quenched the fire,
That burned the staff,
That beat the dog,
That bit the cat,
That ate the kid,
That my father bought,
For two pieces of money:
A kid, a kid.

7. Then came the ox, and drank the water,
That quenched the fire,
That burned the staff,
That beat the dog,
That bit the cat,
That ate the kid,
That my father bought,
For two pieces of money:
A kid, a kid.

8. Then came the butcher and slew the ox,
That drank the water,
That quenched the fire,
That burned the staff,
That beat the dog,
That bit the cat,
That ate the kid,
That my father bought,
For two pieces of money:
A kid, a kid.

9. Then came the angel of death and killed the butcher,
That slew the ox,
That drank the water,
That quenched the fire,
That burned the staff,
That beat the dog,
That bit the cat,
That ate the kid,
That my father bought,
For two pieces of money,
A kid, a kid.

10. Then came the Holy One, blessed be He,
And killed the angel of death,
That killed the butcher,
That slew the ox,
That drank the water,
That quenched the fire,
That burned the staff,
That beat the dog,
That bit the cat,
That ate the kid,
That my father bought,
For two pieces of money:
A kid, a kid.

The following is the interpretation:

1. The kid, which is one of the pure animals, denotes the Hebrews. The father by whom it was purchased, is Jehovah, who represents himself as sustaining this relation to the Hebrew nation. The pieces of money signify Moses and Aaron, through whose mediation the Hebrews were brought out of Egypt.

2. The cat denotes the Assyrians, by whom the Ten tribes were carried into captivity.

3 The dog is symbolical of the Babylonians

4 The staff signified the Persians.

5. The fire indicates the Grecian empire under Alexander the Great

6. The water betokens the Romans or the fourth of the great monarchies to whom the Jews were subjected.

7. The ox is a symbol of the Saracens, who subdued Palestine, and brought it under the caliphate.

8. The butcher that killed the ox denotes the Crusaders, by whom the Holy Land was wrested out of the hands of the Saracens.

9. The angel of death signifies the Turkish power, by which the land of Palestine was taken from the Franks, to whom it is still subject

10 The commencement of the tenth stanza is designed to show that God will take signal vengeance on the Turks, immediately after whose overthrow the Jews are to be restored to their own land, and live under the government of their long expected Messiah.—London Congregational Magazine.

NOVELS.

The Rev. Dr. Caird, of Glasgow, in a recent lecture on the uses of poetry and fiction, thus sums up the matter:

"In pointing out some of the uses of poetry and fiction, he said that the most obvious and important might be said to be these three—first, the stimulation, the wholesome excitement or vent for excitement of thought and feeling which were to be derived from this sort of literature; second, the wider range of human experience and knowledge of life which they opened up; and third, the nobler ideal of life which they set before us. After dwelling at considerable length on the advantages that might be derived from such literature, he said the works of imagination had their dangers as well as their advantages The main objection to novel reading was that it was too pleasant To a sensitive and excitable nature, the world of romance was a much more delightful one than the world of reality; and the attractions of works of fiction were apt to interpose a serious obstacle to the work of life. There were cases in which fiction, in its purest and most unexceptionable form, should be read very sparingly—such as by the weak and excitable, and persons who lacked the counteractive of hard work to regulate their minds, or to minds that have not a strong anchorage in reason and reality "

CHARACTER OF ST PAUL'S HANDWRITING.

The text in Galatians vi. 11, has caused great diversity of opinion among the commentators; but the translation should be, "Ye see in what large letters I have written unto you in mine own hand." St. Paul here refers to the capital—uncial—letters, in which the best and most ancient manuscripts of the Greek Septuagint and New Testament are written, as distinguished from the small or cursive letters, in which slaves wrote. Thus Cato, the elder, wrote histories for his son in large characters. (Plut. Cato, the Censor, xx.) The writing in Greek capital letters, as in Hebrew, Chaldee, Syriac, Arabic, and Ethiopic, which had then no cursive character, indicated a solemn and dignified manner, and would be more legible to the Gauls than the cursive character, which, even now, from its numerous contractions, embarrasses the Greek student. In legal documents of a more solemn character, the writing is engrossed (—en gros, or large character.)

English Notes and Queries.

THE FREAK OF A RIFLE BALL.

Among the curiosities of the wounds received at the battle of Fair Oaks, we notice that of Captain Eli Dougherty, Company K, 93d Penn. Regiment, who was wounded in the breast A Minie ball struck him in the clothes over his heart. It went through his coat, vest, and shirt. It smashed a gold watch (which he had bought for his sister) all to pieces. The ball then went into a Bible and dog its way through the lid and through about six hundred pages At the beginning of the 4th chapter of 2d Timothy it went out of the Bible and inflicted a slight wound in his breast. It left its last mark on the first verse of that chapter. It is as follows:—

"I charge thee before God, and the Lord Jesus Christ, who shall judge the quick and the dead at his appearing and his kingdom."

The Bible is so disfigured that it will only be valuable as a relic. It was given to the captain by a lady.—Medical and Surgical Reporter.

HOW TO GET A GREAT MAN'S AUTOGRAPH.

It is well known that, toward the latter years of the late Duke of Wellington's life, it was next to impossible to coax or wheedle his autograph out of him. All the stratagems used to get a reply from him to letters failed; he either did not answer them at all, or directed his private secretary to do so, and thus the famous signature of "Wellington" became a rarity highly prized by collectors. A lady who had an album garnished with the autographs of most of the great men of the day but who wanted that of the "Great Captain," mentioned her distress to the late Mr. H——, and a few days after he, to her great surprise and pleasure, brought her a note from under the hand of the victor of Waterloo. It ran thus:—

"Field-Marshal the Duke of Wellington never ordered a pair of braces of the Messrs. Simpkin. If F. M. the Duke of Wellington had ordered the articles he could not forget it. F. M. the Duke of Wellington always pays for his braces."

This was a very odd document for a lady's album, but its authenticity was undoubted, and it therefore found the best place in the interesting collection. The way in which this singular note was elicited was this:—Mr H—— filled up one of the Bankruptcy Court forms, and signed it, informing the Duke that in winding up the affairs of Messrs. Simpkin he (the assignee) found on their books the sum of 6s 6d due by his grace for a pair of braces, which he requested the Duke would immediately pay or have paid. Mr. H——'s ruse was founded on pure fiction, but it succeeded; and now in a certain lady's album may be seen the curious note of which we have given a copy.—English Paper.

RUNNING INTO THE RAIN.

The keeper of the house on the top of Mount Holyoke says that he has witnessed seven thunder storms in one day; and that he has often seen a man in the hay field harness his horses, and run and put on a load, and drive right into the storm. Up where he was, he could see that the storm was moving away, and that the man, if he would remain where he was, would save his harvest. But the man, in his precipitation and not having the higher vision, ran right into the difficulty, for fear of it, and wet his hay. This is a small matter, but I see the same thing in a higher sphere. I stand and behold men living down so low, that, though the storm is moving off, they fail to perceive it, and run right into it.—H W Beecher

HURRAH.—A great many people have shouted "Hurrah" "many a time and oft," but comparatively few know its derivation and primary meaning. It originated among the eastern nations, where it was used as a war cry—from the belief that every man who died in battle for his country went to heaven. It is derived from the Sclavonic word "Horrag" which means "To Paradise."

Family Circle.

AN EVENING TALK WITH FRANKIE

The shadows of evening had not been gathered long that December day, when I tucked my little brother snugly between the sheets of the bed he shares with me, and said—

"Now pet, I'll tell you a story. Did you know that once, a great while ago, this earth where we live, was all dark, with water all over it, and not a tree, nor a bird, nor flower, nor anything on it?"

"Was it?" said he, "why, it isn't now."

"No," I said, "for God gathered all the water together, and formed it into seas and oceans and brooks."

"Did He make the little brook down beside the road then?" asked Frankie.

"Perhaps so," I answered, "and he made light."

"So he could see how it looked," commented my interesting little listener.

"And then the first day ended," I went on

"Then did he go to bed?" questioned Frankie.

"No, for there is no night with God," said I, "but he called that the first day. The next day he made the beautiful blue sky, and the work of the third was to make the grass, the herbs, the flowers, and the beautiful green trees."

"Oh, Ella!" interrupted Frankie, "did He make a Christmas Tree? But what did he do next day?"

"Then he made the sun, the moon, and stars, to give light to us."

"But we have lamps and candles to make it light" said my little pet

"Yes, in the house, I answered, "but God saw that it would not be pleasant for us to carry them always, and without the sun, you know, it would be always night"

"Oh, yes" said he in a satisfied tone, "was that on Sunday?"

"No. On the fifth day He made the birds, eagles, and robins, and sparrows, and bluebirds; and He made, too, the great whales and the fishes. All these things he said were 'good'"

"Wasn't He glad that they were so, for then He wouldn't have to make them over" put in my pet

"On the sixth day He made the cows and creeping things and the ones can't sheep"

"And did he make our hens?" inquired my listener.

"I think not," said I, "but hear what he made last of all—he made man"

"And who made the rest of mans and womans?"

"God made everybody. He made you"

"Frank don't see how He got me down here," said he

"And then, Frankie," I continued, "the world was finished. Just think, it took God only six days to make this great, great world, and all its birds, beasts, flowers, trees, and insects. When the men built pape's barn, last spring, it took them almost a month, and then they thought it had been built quickly. But, you see, God can do everything just as he pleases"

"Can he turn this house topsy-turvy?" Frankie said, as if he had a new idea.

"If he should choose," I replied; "but as I told you, He had been six days making the earth, and on the seventh, He 'rested,' and so the day on which He rested was for man to rest too. It was the Sabbath, and now, Frankie, I want to tell you, this great God who made the earth, takes care of you, and loves you. He sees everything you do, and knows everything you think; so you must try to be good, and try to do as He wants you to Now, dear, say your little prayer to Him."

So he began to lisp—

"Now Frank lays Frank down to seep; Frank pays the Lord, Frank's soul to keep. If Frank should die before Frank wakes—

"Frank don't want to die before Frank wakes," he said with tears in his brown eyes

"But, if Frank is good, it will be only his body that lies in the ground, and the part that thinks, will go to heaven, where God is."

"Frank does love God," said the little voice, quite comforted, "and will you and papa and mamma and the horse go too?"

This question was not easily answered, and so, as the eyelids drooped, I left him safe in the shadow of His wing, "who giveth his beloved sleep!"

—Little Pilgrim.

HOME CONVERSATION.

Children hunger perpetually for new ideas, and the most pleasant way of reception is by the voice and ear, not the eye and the printed page. The one mode is natural, the other artificial. Who would not rather listen than read? We not unfrequently pass by in the papers a full report of a lecture, and then go and pay our money to hear the self-same words uttered An audience will listen closely from the beginning to the end of an address, which not one in twenty of those present would read with the same attention. This is emphatically true of children. They will learn with pleasure from the lips of parents what they deem it drudgery to study in the books; and even if they have the misfortune to be deprived of the educational advantages which they desire, they cannot fail to grow up intelligent if they enjoy in childhood and youth the privilege of listening daily to the conversation of intelligent people; Let parents, then, talk much and talk well at home. A father who is habitually silent in his own house, may be, in many respects, a wise man, but he is not wise in his silence.

We sometimes see parents, who are the life of every company which they enter, dull, silent, uninteresting at home among their children. If they have not mental activity and mental stores sufficient for both, let them first provide for their own household. It is better to instruct children and make them happy at home, than it is to charm strangers or amuse friends. A silent house is a dull place for young people—a place from which they will escape if they can. They will talk and think of being "shut up" there; and the youth who does not love home is in danger. Make home, then, a cheerful and pleasant spot. Light it up with cheerful, instructive conversation. Father, mother, talk your best at home.

THE WHITE FEATHER

"What a dreadful affair!" said a hen, who was walking about on the other side of the village from where the circumstance was supposed to have taken place, "what a dreadful affair took place in our house last night! I shall not be able to sleep alone any more, I am afraid. But it is a fortunate thing that the most are on my side."

Thereupon she began to state that the feathers of all the other fowls bristled up the night before, and the bravest of their defenders had dropped their combs from fear. "It's as true as you live!"

Now I must begin my story, the facts of which were believed to have occurred on the opposite side of the village. The sun had already been down some time, and all the chickens began to fly up on their roost. One of them was a young hen. She had beautiful white feathers and short legs; she laid eggs as regularly as her sisters, and was as respectable as any individual in the whole henhouse. While sitting quietly she pecked about her wings a little, and one of her beautiful white feathers fell down on the floor.

When she saw it she said: "It seems to me, that the more I peck myself the more beautiful I grow." She only spoke in sport. She was very handsome, but she never grew proud about it; indeed she seldom thought of it. She was very witty, and only said what she did, to make a good hearty laugh all through the house.—Then she went to sleep. She slept soundly because she had been good all day.

It became very, very dark One hen sat beside another and slept, and all was asleep except a certain one whose name I will not here repeat She had heard, and she had not heard. But she was pretty sure that she heard some one say that if you want to become very pretty, you must peck yourself a great deal. So nothing would do but she must tell it to her neighbor.

"Wake up, wake up," she whispered "didn't you hear what was said awhile ago? I will mention nobody's name; but there is a certain proud hen in our house, who says she makes it a habit to peck herself so that her feathers may fall out, and may become more beautiful all the time. Such a hen ought to be despised by every one in our whole city."

Right over the hens and chickens, and close under the roof, was a pair of old owls with their young ones. That family were noted for their sharp ears, and they heard some one whispering about a certain young hen. They rolled their great eyes around, and the old mother owl said to her little children:

"Did you hear what was said below us a few moments ago?"

"No, mother," they replied, "we were almost asleep"

"Well, I'll tell you. A certain hen has pecked out fifty of her white feathers, and says she is going to keep doing it till she has pecked out three hundred. She does it because it makes her prettier. I can't keep such an absurd thing as that to myself. It ought to be known"

"Take care, children," said the old owl father, "I think there is some mistake about it."

"I shall tell it to my neighbors, anyhow," spoke the old mother. And then she flew out. "Dreadful! dreadful!" she cried, as she came up to the front door of the pigeon-house. "Have you heard the news? Dreadful! We have a hen in our house who has pulled all her feathers out because she says it makes her handsome. She will freeze to death, if she's not dead already. Dreadful! It's as true as you live."

"Where? where?" cried a few of the pigeons.

"In our house. I have as good as seen the affair myself One can scarcely believe the things, it is so ridiculous But you may depend upon it It's as true as you live."

Then the pigeons who heard the news, went to every room in their house and after waking up all the sleepers said: "What awful news we have just heard! There are two hens in this city who have pecked out all their feathers to make them beautiful But they have only been frozen to death Served them right There's no doubt of the matter It's as true as you live"

Off flew an old pigeon to a crow with whom she was acquainted "Wake up! wake up! I have some wonderful news to tell you. In our city there are three hens that have plucked all their feathers out to make them pretty But they are now dead and buried Our people met to keep a fast but now to behold the sad relics of your relations They would be glad to hear about it."

So the crow told it to the bat, and the bat to the hawk, and it passed from one to another until finally it came back again to the hen-house from which it had started

The blackbird flew into the hen house door, and said: "What terrible news is creeping all over the country! Five hens have plucked out all their feathers, because they thought it made them beautiful. But an assassin came upon them, and killed them all just afterward; and their bodies have been stolen away, so that no one can tell what has become of them."

The little white hen who had accidentally plucked out a single feather, could not at first recognize this news as having come from her remark. But, as she was of a shrewd turn of mind, the whole thing finally flashed upon her.

"Now," said she, "I'll tell my friends here what I am going to do I shall narrate this wonderful thing, and mention the name of each tell-tale who has been so busy, and made such a mountain out of a mole hill. At the conclusion of my account, I am going to say that it all came from my having lost a single feather. This shall be published in all our papers, and the name of every tell-tale shall be printed in large, capital letters; it's as true as you live!"

The next day everybody read the account of the little white hen, and the names of the tell tales were never forgotten in that country.

MY FIRST YEAR OF HOUSE-KEEPING.

BY MRS. H. D. GARDNER.

I was just twenty years old when I became the wife of a clergyman, a poor country pastor It was a love match, and with the usual thriftlessness of lovers, I think it did not then occur to us that we could not live upon love, or that it would need such vulgar appliances as roast beef and palatable puddings to preserve in its purity the divine essence of the grand passion.

Everybody said that I was totally unfit for a minister's wife. I was naturally exceedingly joyous and mirthful, and without a particle of the staid dignity expected from persons in my position; while my husband was a grave, thoughtful man, endowed by nature with a commanding personal appearance and prepossessing manners I do not wonder now that people could see the impropriety of his choosing me for a wife when so many patron women stood ready to accept him. My own family had but one objection to the match; he was poor, and I had no idea of housekeeping.

Ah, how well I remember the first washing-day. My husband after vainly trying to persuade me to hire a washerwoman, (I knew he could not afford it) came into the back kitchen to help me himself We were very merry at first, but after rubbing off little patches of skin from every knuckle, and burning our arms till they looked like illustrated maps of some unknown country, we began to find out there was but little poetry and no fun in the washtub.

But the ironing day was worse yet—nothing but pride kept me from rolling those starched shirts into a bundle and taking them across the field to my mother's kitchen.—I forgot to mention that we had taken up our abode in a parish but one mile distant from my father's house.

I had never ironed any starched clothes of any description, but from my brothers at home I had imbibed very exalted ideas in regard to the importance of the immaculate shirt bosoms. My husband told me all that he could remember of his mother's method, and then betook himself to his study. Shall I ever forget the feelings when the flat iron, heated seven times hotter than its wont, and carefully applied to the gluttonous surface, suddenly struck up an attachment for the same, and when it forcibly separated left its whole image and superscription behind, in black and brown colors. I have that shirt now. I keep it to show to those wise mothers who are training their daughters for future usefulness.

But it was in cooking that I found my chief trouble. All my attempts in that line, at the time I commenced housekeeping, had resulted in spoiling several kinds of rich cake, concocted in accordance with those possible receipts which fill our modern cookery books. I had never made a loaf of bread in my life.—Baker's bread served me for a time—for so long a time, indeed, that we found out all its good qualities, and have not tasted its excellencies for many years.

We had been married and settled nearly a fortnight, when, one morning my husband came in with a letter in his hand and a very anxious expression on his face. I sprang up from my seat, nearly upsetting the breakfast table which was prepared for him

"What is the matter, Frank? Is any body sick or dead? have you got bad news?"

"No. At least it ought not to be bad news."

"Well what is it? Something serious, I know from your looks."

"No, Hattie, nothing of the kind. Only I feared it might annoy you.—It is only a note from my college chum, Fred. Knowles, saying that he is going to Boston and will call on us, —and get his dinner to-day," said my husband, finishing the subject reluctantly.

It was my first call to entertain company, and knowing by this time my ignorance, I shrank back affrighted from the prospect. I confess, to a feeling of deep mortification that my husband could not receive his most intimate friends without so serious a drawback upon his pleasure. All my natural energy and pride was aroused, and I determined to become a good, practical housekeeper at whatever cost of time or labor.—But the present emergency was first to be attended to.

"I suppose I had better get some fresh loaves from the bakery?" Frank looked at the dry, light slices on the breakfast table as he spoke.

"Yes, I think so. And some meat, Hattie, That forlorn old roast has lasted for a fortnight, I am sure —I think I should recognize its bones if I saw them in Africa. Do you think you could broil a steak, Hattie?"

"Yes. But, Frank, you must come out of the parlor and overlook me.—And if you will get me some peas and lettuce, and other vegetables, I shall get up a famous dinner."

"Well we must do our best. The cars will not arrive till two o'clock, so there will be plenty of time for marketing and cooking."

"Is Mr. Knowles very particular?" I asked, timidly. "Will he notice if things just go a little wrong?"

"Perhaps not. But he will have natural curiosity in regard to the capabilities of his friend's wife. But I think we shall do very well."

"I am sure we shall," was my encouraging response, inspired by a bright idea that suddenly occurred to me. In accordance with it, my husband had no sooner started for market, than I, slipping on my hat and shawl, started on a long walk through the fields and woods. I was going to consult my mother about dinner. I surprised her by bursting into the dining room, quite out of breath from my hurried walk, just as the family were sitting down to a late breakfast.

"Is it Hattie, or her ghost?" asked my father, getting up to welcome me.

"If my memory serves me, our Hattie used to be a late riser."

"Housekeeping improves me, papa."

"Don't wait to talk," said mamma. "The coffee will be spoiled. Take off your bonnet, Hattie, while I get another cup and plate, and we will chat afterward."

"No, I thank you, I cannot stop a minute." Mamma opened her eyes in astonishment.

"You are not going to walk directly back again. Let me take your shawl."

"But I must go. We are going to have company to dinner, Frank's chum. And I want to know how long to broil the potatoes and other —"

Such a chorus of laughter as interrupted me. "Why, my dear child, broil them until they are done."

"I know as much as that, mamma: but when must I begin them to have them done at the right time? I have got peas to cook, and beef steaks, and I ought to make a pudding. Oh dear!"

They all laughed again, as much at my distressed looks as at my ignorance. I did not join them; indeed it was as much as I could do to keep back my tears

"It is not her fault that she knows so little about cooking," at last said my father kindly. "You must not mind our laughing at you, my dear, I have been longing to ask you what you put in that mince pie I ate at your table last Sunday? I have tasted it ever since. But I will not trouble you for I have no doubt that you will in time be as good a cook as your mother. And now as regards the present difficulty," he went on pleasantly, "I have a plan to propose. I will put the horses on old Fanny, and you, mother can take the poor child home and stay to superintend the dinner."

Mamma always accepts papa's plans so my load of responsibility was gone at once. It was pleasant to see the look of relief on my husband's face as we drove up to the door.

"I have been searching everywhere for you," he said, "and I could almost find it in my heart to scold you for causing me so much anxiety, but your safe return satisfies, especially as your excursion has brought your mother to aid us in our extremity. But, Hattie, I must insist on your having no more private walks."

"Ah, sir, if you had known you would have forbidden it. That would have spoiled all."

I have no doubt that Mr. Knowles left us that day under the impression that my husband had secured a matrimonial prize But I take a hypocrite for weeks afterwards.

It came to pass after many days, that bakers' bread became unendurable I tried to believe in it—I praised and tasted; but it would not do. Its glory had departed. I began heartily to approve of Pharaoh's course in lifting the head of the chief baker from off his shoulders and hanging him upon a tree; but I saw no way out of my trouble. I had tried many times to raise bread but had not succeeded in making any fit to appear on the table I had a trifle better success in making milk biscuit, though I never could guess right as to the amount of soda required Sometimes they were yellow enough to be mistaken for lumps of virgin gold, but often they had the appearance of having been hardened and compacted in a cheese press. My husband pretended that they were passed through heavy rollers like those they used in iron foundries At first I tried to work the cold puddings and griddle cakes, but their peculiar solidity frustrated all such attempts to economize. But when the case appeared hopeless I had still one resource There was a wide ditch behind the garden, and in its deep waters I buried my biscuit out of my sight Inexperienced girls should never commence housekeeping without a convenient ditch at hand. But my troubles did not end here. In an evil hour a neighbor's hen hatched a big brood of ducklings, which in due time found their way to a batch of provisions. The biscuit so long in soak had now a resurrection, and I remember watching the fowls as they tried to divide them with their strong bills.

"My dear, dear Hattie," said my husband one morning after the usual toil of breakfast was over, "don't you think you could learn to make raised bread?"

"I cannot tell; I am quite discouraged"

"You have learned to cook so many things in so short a time," he went on encouragingly, "that I am sure if you had some one to give you a few hints about the best method you would succeed admirably. Why don't you consult your mother?—She is a superior cook."

"You forget, Frank, how we resented it when my mother, and sister, and aunts, and, in fact, all our friends predicted our present perplexities. No, it would be too mortifying to go home for counsel in this matter. Indeed, consulting any one. I give all my visitors bakers' bread, and they having it only occasionally, seem to like it"

"Suppose we try boarding, Hattie?"

"We cannot afford that; and besides we want a home by ourselves. You would not be contented to give up our home liberties and privileges, Frank. If it were not for the eternal bread question, we could get a little enjoyment out of life; but comfort is now out of the question. I wish, Frank," I added, pettishly, "that you had married a housekeeper and I had gone into a convent"

She face flushed.

"I was not fin

THE CHRISTIAN RECORDER.

Published by the African Methodist Episcopal Church in the United States, for the Dissemination of Religion, Morality, Literature and Science.

Rev. Elisha Weaver, Editor. PHILADELPHIA, OCTOBER 25, 1862. Vol. II.—No. 43.—New Series.—Whole No. 94.

THE CHRISTIAN RECORDER

Is published every Saturday on behalf of the

AFRICAN METHODIST EPISCOPAL CHURCH,

BY

REV. ELISHA WEAVER,

General Book Steward,

No 619 Pine Street, Philadelphia.

Notice. All letters or business communications to the Book Concern must be addressed to Rev. Elisha Weaver, and must be post paid. Letters containing money, if registered, will be at our risk. All letters containing money, not registered, must be at the risk of the writer. Rev. Elisha Weaver, No. 619 Pine St.

All letters or matter on the Christian Recorder, must be directed to E. Weaver, Box No 619, Philadelphia.

TERMS.

Two Dollars a year, payable in advance. Single copies, Five cents.

ADVERTISEMENTS.

We will insert advertisements for one eighth of a column for a religious newspaper, which will be published for one year, provided they do not exceed eight lines for one dollar; paper to be left at eight o'clock with all the papers. Six months for six dollars; paper to be left, three months, four dollars,—one month, $1.50, paper in each case to be left.

CORRESPONDING EDITORS OF CHRISTIAN RECORDER.

Rev. J. P. CAMPBELL, Rev. A. W. WAYMAN,
" J. M. WILLIAMS, " H. T. WILLIAMS,
" G. H. GRAHAM, " C. BURCH,
Rev. L. ROSS.

Poetry.

For the Christian Recorder.

OUR COUNTRY.

O this, our native land,
Weeping under oppression's hand—
Oppressing human beings is the cause;
It defies God's holy laws.

Let truth and justice have their sway;
Oh! to do this, why delay?
Let every human mind and heart
Come up to the work and do their part.

It will make it better for all.
O let us not from this Republic fall,
In carrying out what its founders designed.
In God's holy laws the remedy we find.

That will redeem us from oppression's hand,
And give us abiding peace in the land.
Under its banner of Justice and truth
The earth shall yield its abundance of fruit.

Who can say this is not the Chief Magistrate's design?
May he help to the God of Armies find.
Deliver the nation to what it was intended to be—
That under its banner all shall be free.

SAMUEL WATTS.

Pittsburgh, Penna., October 15th, 1862.

HARVEST AND VINTAGE.

BY A. J. H. DUGANNE.

I dreamed of a marvellous harvest—
I dreamed of a threshing floor,
Where men, like grain, by angels swam,
Were garnered in mausoleum store;
All bound in sheaves, like corn in the leaves,
And flailed from husk to core.
And the angels sang with voices sweet,
"Out of the grain the dross we beat,
Out of the chaff we winnow the wheat:
True souls are the wheat of a nation!"

I dreamed of a wonderful vintage—
I dreamed of a wine-press red,
Where men, like grapes, by angel-shapes,
Were trodden with wrathful tread,
As grapes ye work to must and to murk,
And crush them, shred by shred
And the angels sang, with tongues divine,
Out of the murk the must we line,
Out of the grapes we mellow the wine:
Brave hearts are the wine of a nation!"

I would that my dreams were real—
That angels this land might beat!
And scourge our sad with the flails of God,
And scatter the chaff from the wheat,
And mightily tread, in our wine-press red,
All dross beneath their feet!
That our souls might sing in hymns strain,
"Out of the chaff the wheat we gain,
Out of the murk the wine we drain:
The wheat and the wine of our nation!"

I pray that the Angel of Freedom
May strive with the Angel of War:
Till men, like grain, these winnowers twain
Shall flail, from husk to core;
Till men, like wine, in libation divine,
To thee, O God! they pour!
And forevermore sing, with tongues divine,
"God of the true! the wheat is thine!
God of the free! receive this wine:
The heart and the soul of our nation!"

From the Jewish Record.

YOM KIPPOR.

I

To your knees! to your knees!
[illegible]'s an angel, in sable, afloat on the breeze!
[illegible]nions extend o'er our wide-scattered race,
[illegible]sh or to fold them in holy embrace;
[illegible] bears on his bosom the couplet of me,
Kippor"—in starry-eyed letters of fire.
Israel, fly to your knees!
Comes the whisper from Heaven on every breeze.

II

To your knees! to your knees!
[illegible]he pave of the Synagogue never before
[illegible]ighter burden of penitence bore!
—the gates of the Holy of Holies roll back,
the High Priest of God treads the sanctified track, [illegible]o the grand old laments of the Temple—interred
a year—burst their tomb, and in sorrow are heard;
Israel, now on his knees,
Bends a prayer for mercy on every breeze.

III.

The judgment is past,
[illegible]d Yom Kippor is into eternity cast.
[illegible]e angel in sable departs from the breeze,
[illegible]nd the Shophar calls Israel up from [illegible]r knees,
Now Joy, like a midsummer sun with a shower,
Chases Wo, 'till she's lost in the light of her power.
Israel sings the loved strains.—
Yom Kippor is past, and God's mercy remains.

For the Christian Recorder.

ALEXANDRIA CORRESPONDENCE.

The work goes bravely on, Mr. Editor. What work? inquires a voice from the crowd. The work of subduing the rebels, and causing them to return to the Union, by the strange, yet effective way of driving them from you at the point of the bayonet? Not by any means, Mr Inquirer, for since the battle of Antietam in Maryland things have returned to the stand still or do nothing period. It really seems that in conducting this war, our Generals, doubtless after a long and tedious war council, have adopted, as part of the "programme," the principle taught in Eccl iii. 3, "A time to kill, and a time to heal." But they, doubtless, have that passage paraphrased, so that to some of them, at least, it reads, "A time to kill Rebels and our own men, and a time to heal or comfort both." But, Mr. Editor, have not they forgotten that Solomon was pre-eminently a man of peace, and knew nothing whatever of the art of war?

But if our Generals are determined to adopt a Bible saying as a maxim of war, why not accept the words of the father instead of the son—why not take the precepts and example of David, the man of war, instead of that of Solomon, the man of peace? While the son is singing of love and of peace, we hear the father say, in speaking of the enemies of his realm, "Let them be as chaff before the wind, and let the angel of the Lord chase them. Let their way be dark and slippery, and let the angel of the Lord persecute them."

But no, no. Our Generals seem to prefer Solomon, and so they have a period for killing, and a period for healing, or doing nothing offensively Knowing the truth of the poetic words, your humble correspondent, for one, says, Amen.

"God moves in a mysterious way."

But, Mr. Editor, the work goes bravely on. You know it is said to the world's conqueror, in Psalm xlv. 3: "Gird thy sword upon thy thigh, O most Mighty, with thy glory and thy majesty." This Almighty Conqueror has come to our rescue in accred Virginia, the state which has always declared upon her statute books that to be colored is proof positive that you are incapacitated for the Christian ministry—materialism of the grossest kind.

The banner of the A. M. E. Church floats upon Virginia soil

Our foes here, both white and colored, are numerous indeed; but in reference to our church, we can with great truth use that common figure of the oak, against which fierce winds blow and blow, resulting only in the roots of the tree being sunk deeper into the earth. We are progressing slowly and surely. In connexion with our Church, we have what promises to be a most excellent choir, under the leadership of Mr Richard Lyle. The choir is regularly instructed in the do, re, me's by Mr Jacklow Strange, than whom none understands them better.

Our Sabbath School is under the superintendence of Mr. Chas. Watson, and you may rely upon it, that it is a school of great credit. Upon last Sabbath, Oct. 12, we had a Sabbath School Reunion—the first ever held upon this soil, the Spain of the States. Let me give you a brief account of it. The day was extremely cool, and drizzling rain; and yet at the hour appointed, St John's Chapel, (the name that is given to our house of worship,) was comfortably filled, and before the service regularly began, the house was full—even to overflowing, there being over 250 children. The sermon on the occasion was preached by the pastor, Rev. Benjamin T. Tanner, from Prov. xxii. 6. After which the exercises consisted in a number of the most interesting addresses, delivered by the following gentlemen: Mr. Philip Ware, who descanted upon duty; the Rev. George Parker of the Baptist school, which was the only one that accepted the invitation, and which appeared in full force, spoke upon Union; Rev Richard Berry, who is a veteran in African Methodism upon this soil, exhorted them to liberality, while Father Smith, who is a very patriarch, brought up the rear.

During the interval of these speeches, the children sang a beautiful anthem, and the Choir honored the occasion. The whole was concluded by singing, "My country, 'tis of thee." More anon.

H. T. T.

For the Christian Recorder

Indianapolis, Oct. 15th, 1862

Mr. Editor:—The following address was read by me at the celebration held here on the first day of August, 1862. Hoping it may prove interesting to some of your readers, I send it for publication.

Fellow Citizens and Friends to the Great Cause of Universal Liberty.

We have assembled here this day to commemorate an event which shines bright upon the annals of the world's political history; an event in which every noble and grateful heart that beats high with the principles of freedom, should observe and appreciate in the highest degree.

Honorable Freemen; This is a day sacred to the cause of liberty; a day in which warm and loving hearts sequience together in harmonious reunion, to express these glowing sentiments and sacred rights which God decreed that every man should possess.

There are now thousands of our race in these United States who are enjoying the festivities of this glorious day, and whose opinions and principles unite as one upon the great boon of liberty. Multitudes of our race are now listening with breathless emotion to the cheering and impassioned eloquence of our own orators. This illustrious day has dawned upon many of our freemen who are enjoying a high degree of liberty and happiness, with the irradiance of heaven's glorious-ness beaming upon them in their prosperity and freedom. There possibly may be some on this broad continent of America, that saw blest with the rights and immunities of men to the fullest extent, but if at all it is the individual right and not the privilege of the masses. It is true that we claim the right of being American citizens, and that we claim protection under the stars and stripes of this Union, and we may repose beneath the broad canopy of America's protecting wing, and yet she will refuse to interfere when our immunities are crushed and we are deprived of those political privileges which would insure our citizenship and lawful protection. But while we are deprived of our political rights, and otherwise oppressed, we should still express our heartfelt thanks to the All-wise Creator for the prosperity and happiness that we enjoy; and that our condition, although not improving to that extent to which it should, is, however, not degenerating, but rather keeping a slow step with the march of improvement.

This glorious anniversary that we celebrate will never be forgotten while there is a drop of the blood of Africa's noble sons coursing through our veins; and although we may lose that difference which distinguishes us from the white race; and may become by the ties of consanguinity with them, unknown as possessing our original blood: yet we will still cherish those divine principles of right, truth, justice, and liberty, and will hail with joyous enthusiasm the day that so many thousands of our countrymen were released from the tyrannical bonds of slavery

GEO. H. W. STUART.

(To be continued.)

For the Christian Recorder.

DEAR BRO. WEAVER:—This will inform you of my health and the state of the Church. The cause of religion seems to have been quite dull, but I think the spiritual interests of the Church are on the increase. I preached for the people at half-past ten o'clock, and half-past seven, yesterday, (Sunday) and the Lord was with us, and we had a good time. The S. Sabbath School connected with the church, under the supervision of Brother Alexander Clark, seems to be interesting, and we have a good day school here, kept up by the School fund, and the people in general seem to be awake to the interest of education. Our Quarterly Meeting will come off on the 18th and 19th of this month. Pray for us, that the Lord may pour out his Spirit upon us.

I feel very grateful for the reception of the CHRISTIAN RECORDER, which you have so kindly sent to me since I have been here. I appreciate its instructive columns very much, and I will be a regular subscriber; just as soon as I can get the amount I will send it to you. I have been laying the claims of the paper before my people, and many of them said they would like to have the paper, but they were afraid it would not come regularly; but I told them that I would vouch for them getting it. So I think I will be able to send you the names of four or five yearly subscribers in the course of a week or two. I will do all I can for the interest of the paper, for I think its instructive columns are a welcome visitor to the family circle of every Christian family and every true lover of religious literature. May the smiles of God rest upon you in your great work, and His sacred blessing rest upon your labors.

Yours to Christ, E. C. JOHNSON

Muscatine, Iowa, Oct 13, 1862

For the Christian Recorder.

MR EDITOR:—Permit me to make a few statements which may be useful to the readers of the Recorder. We have in John Wesley A. M. E. Church, a number of our friends, commonly called contrabands; they were in a very indigent and suffering condition when admitted to the basement of the church. The members of the church and the friends generally, have contributed to their support in money and clothing, that which their own aid they are doing as well as can be expected. They have been in the church near three months. The members of the church appointed a committee to take charge of money and other useful articles collected for them, which have been distributed. There was a demonstration given in the above named church, on Sunday afternoon, the 12th inst., at 4 o'clock, P. M., by three societies, the Daughters of Levi, the Sons of Levi, and the Young Men's Union Benevolent Association, for the benefit and convenience of the contrabands. These societies are beneficial to themselves, but very benevolent in many praiseworthy and benevolent acts; we speak of the Sons of Levi more particularly, who have distinguished themselves in responding to the many philanthropic, beneficent and benevolent acts in which they have been called. The other societies that associated in the demonstration on Sunday, are young, that being their first public appearance. We hope they may by their acts, distinguish themselves equal with the other. Instead of a sermon that was to be preached on that occasion, Professor A. M. Green being absent, was solicited to address them, he was introduced by the pastor to the societies, they being in regalia, it was an interesting and touching scene. The address was an able one, suitable for the times. One of the members of the Sons of Levi, Mr. George Newman, was introduced by the President, and gave an interesting address, after which a collection of $37 70 was taken up. At this moment, Deacon Wm. Wilson stated the condition of a colored friend, deceased, who had fallen near his residence the day before, and lodged in the house of Mrs. Quinn, died the next morning: $6 76 cents was taken up to assist in the burial; I learned there had been $6 00 taken up at the Union A. M. E. church in the morning for the same purpose. The deceased was from Pennsylvania, and had been in service with one of the regiments, who left him in his affliction; he gave his name as John Young.

Rev. H. M. Turner preached in the John Wesley Church on Sunday morning, 12th inst. The subject was practical and very interesting, especially to the young. I visited Rev. J. H. Handy at Union A. M. E. church, on Sunday night, the 12th inst., and had a comfortable time; he has quite an interesting revival going on. May the good Lord revive his work in all the churches. Elder J. D. Brooks, at Wesley Zion, has had a revival in progress for some time; the friends, generally, seem to be untiring in their efforts.

Deacon J. H. Anderson, of Union Wesley A. M. E. Zion church, is doing as well as can be expected, as the society is not very large, and money is to be raised to pay for the church building and other current expenses of the church, it will require the united and untiring efforts of all directly concerned in order to succeed; we hope they may be successful.

Deacon R. H. Dyson, of Galbreath Chapel, is getting along finely; they are coming up to their duty in the different departments of the church; they bid fair to rank, in time, with any of our churches.

On Sunday, the 19th inst, we had our second Quarterly Meeting: Elder J. D. Brooks preached in the morning, the subject was plain dealing and pointed as usual, the effect of which is not always seen at present, but as it is always within strict keeping with the Scriptures, it is bound to prove effectual. "Now no chastening for the present seemeth to be joyous but grievous; nevertheless afterwards it yieldeth the peaceable fruit of righteousness unto them which are exercised thereby," Heb xii 11. Superintendent J. J. Clinton preached in the afternoon. We had a good time, his being absent from the district some time, the friends generally desiring to see and hear him. The church was well filled; his subject was very interesting, and we sat in a heavenly place, and felt as said the text, "We would see Jesus," John xii. 21, after which the sacrament of the Lord's Supper was administered, the Superintendent taking the lead; it was a time of refreshing from the presence of the Lord.

Deacon J. H. Anderson preached at night; we had a comfortable time; the friends generally seemed to be satisfied with the exercises of the day.

J. P. HAMER.

Washington, D. C., October 20th, 1862.

(For the Christian Recorder.)

LETTER FROM IOWA.

Keokuk, Iowa, Oct. 15th, 1862.

BROTHER WEAVER,—I thought that I would drop a few lines to let the friends know what is going on out here at present. Our hospitals are receiving fresh recruits from the battle field—other Regiments are filling up to the country's call. Our border is now quiet. Things along the line here are generally quiet. Now about my people. We are not doing much in religion at present. We have had one wedding. On the 2d of Oct., 1862, Miss Mary Story, a lovely young lady, and secretary of the Ladies' Union Sewing Circle, was united in the holy bonds of matrimony, to Mr. Austin Bland to whom she gave her hand, and the union was perfected. May the union always be preserved. I have paid a visit to Quincy, Ills., as it is a part of my work this year. I preached twice on Sunday, the 5th, to small, but intelligent congregation; and on Wednesday evening met the Church Aid Society. They were giving an exhibition to raise money to pay up the indebtedness of the house. Let me here narrate the scene in part. Nine young ladies, as handsome as can be found in the West, the very picture of health. Nature's work was well done in size, and hence there was no need of paint, for they were naturally very beautiful. The first piece performed was the Countess of Florence Nightingale by the Misses. Considering the time of practice, it could not be beaten. Then came Miss Zenobia Cager, declaiming "The Dying Soldier, and the Scenes of the wounded upon the Battle-field," with so much mournful pathos, that the audience was made to tremble at the thought. A returned soldier, sitting in the audience, forgetting where he was, was so moved by her vivid description of the battle-field and its heart-rending scenes, that tears stole down his cheeks, despite his efforts to restrain them, as he imagined himself gazing on the field of carnage.

Next came Miss Sarah Jones, of Palmyra, Mo. She declaimed, "The arrival of the May-flower—how gallantly she sped with her pilgrim freight to New England's shore." She is a most sublime declaimer, as well as one of Nature's beauties.

Ne xt came Miss Mary Modley formerly of Wakequan, Ills., heralding the "Battle Scenes of Napoleon Bonaparte in the vale below Mt. Tabor, in connexion with the scenes of that sacred mountain." You might have fancied yourself standing upon that hill-top and, with prophets and generals, taking a peep into the past. It was hard to tell which was the best speaker, although the two last named were called out a second time; but the audience came no nearer deciding. The subjects were grand, and they were handled as by masterworkmen. I hope to see all those young ladies Christians, and in the church. May God bless them. A part of the members took an active part in giving a festival, the proceeds of which go towards liquidating the debt of the church.

A. T. HALL.

P S. Miss Sarah Gray wishes her paper sent to Rock Island instead of Madison. Please inform me through the Recorder whether the Repository is living or dead. I subscribed and paid for one year at our Conference, and have not yet received a single number. No more, until I come back from Muscatine.

A. T. H.

"THEE wisdom is to be sought after during the [illegible]. We cannot expect to find places of shelter in a storm which we did not look for while it was calm.—Augustine.

PALM TREE CHRISTIANS.

The psalmist, in describing the happy and prosperous condition of the righteous, says they "shall flourish like the palm tree." Planted in the courts of the Lord's house, they are to be "fat and flourishing," and "still bring forth fruit in old age." This comparison of a good man to the palm-tree is appropriate and beautiful, and would be sure of appreciation by the inhabitants of Palestine. A heathen historian speaks of Judea as a land "renowned for palms," and some of the principal towns of the country took their names from the presence of these trees. The date-palm has several characteristics that constitute it a fitting emblem of the character and influence of a righteous man. It attains to a great height, grows perfectly erect, and its leafy crown is always green and flourishing. It is not only natural for the palm to be upright, to lift its head straight toward heaven, but it is almost impossible to force it to grow in any other direction. It may be burdened with heavy weights, storms may beat upon it, and tempests wrestle with it, but it will not be bent or warped into any crookedness. It bears ill-usage well. Some assert that it is most fruitful when most abused, and that the blows that bruise and wound it only increase the quantity and improve the quality of its golden fruitage. This beautiful tree is of long life, and continues to grow steadily from generation to generation. Long-continued rains and floods of water do not drown it; nor does it droop in drouth, or wither under the rays of a tropical sun. To every man who has the taste to appreciate its beauty, the palm-tree must be an object of interest and affection. But its beauty is not its sole or chief recommendation. It is a prolific fruit-bearer—a single tree often yielding three or four hundred pounds of dates in a year. This fruit is not a mere luxury, for thousands of the inhabitants of Egypt, Arabia, and Persia have little other food, and subsist almost entirely upon it. And every part of the tree is turned to some useful purpose. The leaves, which are six or eight feet in length, are used as a covering for the sides and roofs of houses, and in making baskets, mats, and other household articles. The fibrous parts of the tree are made into thread and cordage, and the more solid parts are used for fuel. The sap, when thickened by partial evaporation, is almost as sweet and palatable as honey. The stony pits or seeds of the dates are broken or ground, and fed to the Arab's camel. So enthusiastic are the Orientals in their appreciation of this tree that they profess to enumerate no less than three hundred and sixty distinct uses to which it may be usefully applied. It is no wonder that the palm-tree was at one time the emblem of Judea, or that David, in selecting an object by which to symbolize the beauty and utility of a good man's life, should say, he "shall flourish like the palm-tree." The beauty in which the righteous grow and flourish is the beauty of goodness. Their lives are invested with the beauty of holiness. We have no disposition to disparage the material beauty with which the world is adorned. "God hath made everything beautiful in his time;" and standing in the midst of all this glory, we feel like exclaiming with the psalmist, "All thy works shall praise thee, O Lord." But "that is the best part of beauty which a paint-er cannot express," and it seems like the desecration of a holy word to say of the depraved and corrupt that they are beautiful. Ahab's wife, Jezebel, and Cleopatra were what the world calls splendid women, and the daughter of Herodias was graceful and accomplished, but who thinks of them but with disgust? Mary, Queen of Scots, was a beauty, and may have wondered that stanch old John Knox was proof against her blandishments; but here was the beauty of the kindled tiger or the stealthy serpent. Herod so won upon the people by his presence and oratory that they said, "It is the voice of a god and not of a man;" and Byron had fine features, and a head that statuaries love to copy. We hear nothing of the beauty of Hannah or Dorcas. And there were those who said of the apostle that his bodily presence was weak, and his speech contemptible. Unselfish goodness, devotion to truth and duty, love to God, and charity to our fellow-men, are always beautiful; and with this beauty the righteous are adorned. Some of these characters of grace and loveliness are in my mind's eye as I write. One of them is an unmarried female—the heartless and the flippant call the class to which she belongs old maids. She was not young twenty years ago, when I saw her first, and time has aged her harshly since then. She was never handsome, and she is plain even to homeliness now. But her life has been given to sweet charities and kindly offices. She is the friend and benefactor of the whole neighborhood in which she lives. She visits the sick, instructs the ignorant, comforts the sorrowful, and relieves the necessities of the poor. When her own resources fail, she informs the rich where they may bestow their charities, or acts as the almoner of their bounty. The humble path in which she has walked is fairly lustrous with her good works. She lives in the affections of all who know her; and when she departs to her rest and reward, hundreds will rise up to call her blessed, and cherish the memory of her virtues. Without being at all aware of it herself, she is far more beautiful than the stately and graceful palm-tree to which the Arab poet compares his lady-love. I am sure, my reader, that you keep in your heart and memory the portraits of some of these symmetrical and mature Christians, and that they are to you a perpetual joy and inspiration. It may be a mother's likeness that you enshrine with tender and filial piety. That mother is advanced in life, and the infirmities of age are pressing sorely upon her. The roses have faded from her cheeks, her eye is dim, and her brow, once so smooth and fair, is furrowed with many wrinkles. Those who knew her long ago will lament the decay of so much loveliness, but to you she never seemed so beautiful as now. How much we need in the family, in the church, and in the world, these palm-tree Christians—men and women whose lives point us constantly toward heaven, and are a perpetual protest against whatever is sensual and grovelling. There are professors of religion who remind us of the stunted pines and dwarf oaks that grow on a thin and sandy soil. Others are like low-lived and creeping vines, that have no ambition to lift themselves above the surface of the earth.

Some who make a show of standing up have no more strength or stamina than brook willows or mullen-stalks. They are tossed to and fro by every gust of temptation, or break under the first burden that is laid upon them. These marvelling and unstable Christians misrepresent the Gospel, and bring the way of truth into disrepute. But those who serve the Lord in the beauty of holiness cannot fail of being useful. They are "the light of the world," "a dew from the Lord," "the horsemen of Israel and the chariots thereof." To abide in Christ and bring forth much fruit, is the privilege of all who are called to be saints. The righteous shall flourish like the palm tree. Oh that these trees of righteousness, planted by the rivers of water, may increase a thousandfold, till their fruit shall shake like Lebanon.—Independent.

FORMAL professors are far more difficult to arouse than even the desperately bad. Arch deacon Trench, in his late book on the Apocalypse, gives us the reason for this. The lost are those who are truly zealous; the "cold" those who might become zealous; but the "luke-warm" are those who have heard, who know, but who have rejected.

CLOUDS.—We often live under a cloud, and it is well for us that we should do so. Uninterrupted sunshine would parch our hearts; we want shade and rain to cool and refresh them. Only it behooves us to take care that whatever cloud may spread over us, it should be a cloud of witnesses. And every cloud may be such. If we can only look at the sunshine that broods behind it.

THE MINIMUM CHRISTIAN

The minimum Christian? And who is he? The Christian who is going to heaven at the cheapest rate possible. The Christian who intends to get all of the world he can, and not meet the worldling's doom; the Christian who aims to have as little religion as he can, without lacking it altogether.

The minimum Christian goes to church in the morning, and in the afternoon also, unless it rains, or is too warm, or too cold, or he is sleepy, or has headache from eating too much dinner. He listens most respectfully to the preacher, and joins in prayer and praise. He applies the truth very sensibly, sometimes to himself, oftener to his neighbor. He goes to the weekly lecture occasionally, more rarely to the prayer-meeting, as the latter is very apt to be uninteresting. He is always, however, at the preparatory lecture, and at all the services of the Communion Sabbath, and is frequently quite regular in his family prayers for a week or two after it.

The minimum Christian is very friendly to all good works. He wishes them well, but it is not in his power to do much for them. The Sabbath School he looks upon as an admirable institution, especially for the neglected and ignorant. It is not convenient, however, for him to take a class. His business engagements are so pressing during the week, that he needs the Sabbath as a day of rest—but does he think missionary questions a reason a teacher. There are so many persons better prepared for this important duty, that he must beg to be excused; still, he will do if he must. He is in favor of tract distribution, and of visiting the poor; but he has no time to take part in those labors of love. He thinks it a good thing for laymen to assist at prayer-meetings, and in social religious circles; but he has no gift for public prayer, or for making addresses, and he must leave it to others. He is very friendly to home and foreign missions, and gives his "mite." He thinks there are "too many appeals," but he gives, if not enough to save his reputation, pretty near it—at all events, he aims at it.

The minimum Christian is not clear on a number of points. The opera and dancing, perhaps the theatre and card-playing, and large fashionable parties, give him much trouble. He can't see the harm in this, or that, or the other popular amusement. There is nothing in the Bible against it. He does not see but that a man may be a Christian, and dance, or go to the opera. He knows several excellent people who do. Why should not he?

In short, the minimum Christian knows that he cannot serve God and mammon—he would if he could—but he will come just as near doing so as he can. He will give to himself and the world all that he may, and to God as little as he can, and yet not lose his soul. He stands so close to the dividing line between the people of God and the people of the world, that it is hard to say on which side of it he actually is.

Ah! my brother, are you making this attempt? Beware, lest you find at last that in trying to get to heaven with as little religion as possible, you have missed it altogether—lost, without gaining the whole world, you lose your own soul. The true child of God does it easy. "How little," but, "How much may I do for my God?" They thus judge, that if One died for all, he died that they which live should no more live to themselves, but for him that died for them. Leaving the things that are behind, they reach forth toward those that are before, are exclaiming, "What shall I render unto the Lord for all his benefits?"

Reader, are you a minimum Christian? There is reason to fear that such are no Christians at all. "Not every one that saith Lord, Lord, shall enter into the kingdom of heaven, but he that doeth the will of my Father which is in heaven."

DRAW NIGH TO GOD

The excitement and intense anxiety about the war is in danger of depressing the religious zeal of the Church. The war engrosses the attention; hangs like a weight of sadness upon every heart; rolls like a dark and fiery storm cloud before our eyes; fills the ears with its rumbling, muttering discords by day, and crowds the soul with night visions of blood, we, mutilated brothers and sons, and liberty weltering under the treacherous blow of vile men; and it seems as if there was left no time, heart, strength nor capacity for pious labors. The ordeal is a severe one, the burdens which press upon us are ponderous, and seem likely to crush us; but if we take a proper attitude and view the terrible strife and trials as we should, we shall not be separated from the Lord, but shall draw nearer to him than ever before.

How numerous and weighty are the reasons for faith, mighty pleadings with God and spiritual effort! How much we need the help of the Almighty in our distress! A saint on ship-board in the midst of a terrible storm, which threatened sudden destruction, was appealed to: "If you have a God, now secure his help." A day and night were spent in fervent prayer, and the ship was saved. If we have a God, if we have any faith in his word, if there is any spiritual life in us, now is the time to pray. Sword and gun will never save our country. The God of battles alone can give success to our arms, and that needed help will come when Christians pray with united heart and fervency of soul.

How much we have to pray for now! How near to the throne of grace we ought to live! Here is our country in danger; our loved ones are in the centre of the storm of death; tens of thousands, with mutilated limbs, are enduring untold distress in hospitals; thousands are suffering the barbarities of southern prisons, almost innumerable hearts are bleeding with anguish over the loss of their sons and brothers, the Christian churches and the various benevolent societies are distracted and crippled by the terrible strife; pious men who have joined the army are apostatizing by hundreds; tens of thousands are travelling on the brink of wo, with missiles of death flying all around, and must be reached by the Gospel or lost forever; the spirit of revenge and the legion vices which war breeds spontaneously are threatening to corrupt and destroy our Christian civilization; and our enemies are rushing forward to damnation, and our religion makes it our duty to pray for them. Every one of the facts mentioned, and many more, call earnestly upon every Christian to stand true to his Lord, to be zealous, prayerful, spiritual, Christ-like. The power and influence of religion is now needed more than ever; this is a crisis in our history; we are in the crucible now, and it depends upon Christians to decide whether we survive the ordeal.

Our churches should be thronged, our prayer rooms crowded, our closets the scenes of fervent supplications, everywhere we should be full of spiritual life.

Morning Star

STRENGTH OF CHARACTER

Rev F. W. Robertson makes some excellent remarks on STRONG CHARACTER, among which the following are worthy more than a passing notice:

Strength of character consists of two things; power of will, and power of self restraint. It requires two things therefore for its existence, strong feelings and strong command over them. Now it is here we make a great mistake; we mistake strong feelings for strong character. A man who bears all before him, before whose frown domestics tremble, and whose bursts of fury make the children of the household quake—because he has his will obeyed and his own way in all things, we call him a strong man. The truth is, that is the weak man; it is his passions that are strong; he, mastered by them, is weak. You must measure the strength of a man by the power of the feelings he subdues, not by the power of those which subdue him. And hence composure is very often the highest result of strength. Did we never see a man receive a flagrant insult and only grow a little pale and then reply quietly? That is a man spiritually strong. Or did we never see a man in anguish stand as if carved out of a solid rock, mastering himself? Or one bearing a hopeless daily trial remain silent, and never tell the world what cankered his home-peace? That is strength. He, who with strong passions remained chaste; he who, keenly sensitive, with manly power of indignation in him, can be provoked, and yet restrain himself and forgive—these are the strong men, the spiritual heroes.

THE CHRISTIAN'S JOY

SCOUGAL, in one of his books, after stating what worldly men value, says:—"But the pious person hath his thoughts far above these painted vanities: his felicity is not patched up of so mean shreds; it is simple, and comprised in one chief good. His soul advanceth itself, by rational passions, toward the Author of its being; the fountain of goodness and pleasure. He hath none in heaven but him, and there is none upon earth whom he desireth beside him. The knowledge of nature hath been reputed a good means to enlarge the soul, and breed in it a contempt for earthly enjoyments. He that hath accustomed himself to consider the vastness of the universe, and the small proportion which the point we live in bears to the rest of the world, may, perhaps, come to think less of some acres; or of that fame, which can at most spread itself through a small corner of this earth. Whatever be in this, sure I am, that the knowledge of God, and the frequent thoughts of heaven, must needs prove far more effectual to elevate and aggrandize the mind. When once the soul, by contemplation, is raised to any right apprehensions of Divine perfections, and the foretastes of celestial bliss, how will this world, and all that is in it, vanish and disappear before his eyes! With what holy disdain will he look down upon things which are the highest objects of other men's ambitious desire! All the splendors of courts, all the pageantry of greatness, will no more dazzle his eyes than the faint lustre of the glow worm will trouble the eagle after he hath been beholding the sun. He is little concerned who obtained this dignity, or that fortune; who sits highest at table, or goes first out of the door. His thoughts are taken up with greater matters—how to please his Maker, and obtain an interest in that land of promise some of the fruits whereof he hath already tasted. And from thence ariseth that constant and equal frame of spirit which the pious man's mind maintains in all the changes and vicissitudes of things; while he who hath not his spirit balanced with religious principles is lift up and cast down, like a ship on the sea, with every variation of fortune; and partakes, perhaps, of all the motions of this inferior world whereunto his heart and affections are fastened: and, certainly, he must be far more happy and generous, both who sitteth loose to the world, and can, with the greatest calmness and tranquillity, possess his own soul, while all things without are in hurry and confusion. Private disasters cannot dispossess him, nor public calamities reach him; he looks upon the troubles and combustions of the world as men do on the ruin and desolation of cities where men, to themselves, have little interest; with no other concern than that of pity to see men trouble themselves and others to no little purpose. If the world should shake and the foundations of the earth be removed, yet would he rest secure, in a full acquiescence to the will of God, and constant dependence on his providence. He shall not be afraid of evil tidings—his heart is fixed, trusting in the Lord."

A BLASTING WIND IN PALESTINE.

At the close of the day, March the thirty-first, we pitched our tents near the site of Ashdod, the Azotus of Acts viii. 40. A little village not far off, called Esdud, perpetuates the ancient name. Ashdod was one of the chief cities of the Philistines, but is now utterly forsaken. The prophet's sentence has been executed upon it to the letter: "I will cut off the inhabitant from Ashdod," (Amos i. 8.) The only marks of antiquity which I could discover were a high mound, where the old city stood, covered now with fragments of pottery; two or three cellars or cisterns, that seemed to have been recently laid open; two marble columns, one prostrate in the court of a neighboring khan, and the other wrought into a drinking trough, several broken pieces of columns or tablets, mostly built into a Sakieh or watering machine; and a few traces of masonry near the Jaffa road, which may have belonged to the city walls. These last are so concealed as to be found only with special pains. Just before dark, the temperature, which during the day had not been oppressive, suddenly changed. The air, in a few moments, became hot like that from a strongly heated furnace. This extreme variation lasted but a short time, though the night which followed was exceedingly warm. Had it continued much longer, as the natives assured us, it would have done serious injury to the grain, which was then near its maturity. A hot wind, occurring just before the harvest is ripe, is often mentioned in the Bible as one of the greatest calamities which the husbandman had occasion to fear. When Pharaoh in his dream saw "the seven ears of corn blasted by the east wind," he beheld in that symbol the significant intimation of an approaching famine. The blasting of the grain, that is, as the original word shows, by scorching wind, is threatened as a judgment in various passages.—Hackett.

PUBLIC READING OF SCRIPTURE.

We observe constant complaints in the English press, religious and secular, of the poor way in which the Scriptures are read in public worship. These complaints are well founded, and the evil at which they are directed is inexcusable. Perfect reading is, indeed, a rare and difficult attainment; for by perfect we mean such reading as puts the reader in easy and entire possession of the sense and spirit of the passage read, without for a moment diverting his attention to the reader. It requires an unusual combination of physical and moral qualities to effect this. But subordinate degrees of excellence are within the reach of almost all. The two main requisites are clear, distinct utterance, and such a thorough comprehension of the meaning and aim of what is read as will enable the reader to express it as if he were uttering sentiments of his own. Who shall say that these requisites are unattainable by any one? Yet, these being secured, there is an end at once of hesitation, of tones false emphasis, undue rapidity, the greed of pauses, spluttering, coldness, deadness, and all the other defects which often make it almost a painful task to hear the best of books read even by one of the best of men. The reason of the prevalence of these defects is the erroneous views many have of the exercise. They think little of its importance, and still less of the qualifications necessary for performing it rightly.

A change on these points would soon be followed by a change elsewhere. Men of taste are agreed that few accomplishments are so precious as that of reading well; but if this be so in the general, how much more need it be the case in the pulpit? There easy, intelligent, sympathetic reading always gains attention, conciliates favor, and, what is of far more importance, impresses the simple word of God upon the mind and memory and heart of the hearer.

Christian Intelligencer.

A MAINE editor thus distinguishes between different sorts of patriotism: "Some esteem it sweet to die for one's country; others regard it sweeter to live for one country: and yet others hold it sweeter to live on one's country."

THE man who with a business meddles the end of his own finger, probably thinks he hasn't hit the right nail on the head.

THE SOLITUDE OF THE CHRISTIAN HEART.

One of the wonders, which cluster so thickly about our life, is that of human loneliness. We are in a world, peopled by unknown millions, we are justled every day by thronged crowds, yet, as far as giving and receiving sympathy in our most hidden and precious life is concerned, we might as well be walking alone in an untravelled solitude. It is true, men have the same general characteristics, but there is a wide diversity in individual cases. All have bodies and minds and souls, but no two bodies are alike in appearance, —no two minds are alike in their manner of thinking,—no two souls alike in their experience. Men resemble each other as members of the human family, but every man has an individuality, which does not and cannot belong to another. Therefore, though they may sympathize with each other in their general sorrows, and rejoice with each other in their general joys, and comfort each other in their general afflictions, yet every one has sorrows and joys and afflictions, which cannot be shared. Even in things pertaining to this world, there is a solitude around the human heart. "The heart knoweth his own bitterness, and a stranger doth not intermeddle with his joy."

Especially is this true in spiritual life. While all Christians have the same Father, the same Redeemer and the same Sanctifier,—while all are members of the same family, while all are fighting the same battles and looking forward to the same rewards, yet every Christian has his peculiarities in his past experience and in his future hopes, which cannot be shared by another. There is a community of interest and feeling in many things, but there is an individuality in the deepest and purest thoughts of the heart. In this spiritual life, there are sorrows too sacred to be expressed in words,—joys too precious to be made known to our fellow—stings of affliction too sharp to be told to human language.

The peculiar circumstances, under which Christians are placed in

The Christian Recorder.

Philadelphia, October 25, 1862.

NOTICE

TO THE DISTRICTS OF PHILADELPHIA, NEW ENGLAND, OHIO, INDIANA, AND MISSOURI, OF THE A. M. E. CHURCH MINISTERS.

Dear Brethren:—As we have a number of superannuated ministers on the list in said Districts, therefore it will be expected that the ministers and preachers, on their circuits and stations, will do all they can to collect the two cent money; and we also recommend that the Class leaders be instructed to collect and set the amount on the Class book opposite each member's name, as also all the collections called, per Discipline, for the Annual Conference, and publish the same once every quarter, that it may be seen who they are that work for God and his cause. We think it is time to give credit to those of our people who do work, so that God's name may be glorified.

THE AVERY COLLEGE.

ALLEGHENY CITY.

This institution was bequeathed for the education of the colored people by that great and good man, Rev. Charles Avery. He not only left a whole square and a magnificent building upon it, opposite his own private mansion, but he has also provided and bequeathed means for its permanent support.

Now, we cannot see why we might not take hold of it and recommend our young men and women to be there educated. Why not make provision for board and any number of teachers? More anon.

QUARTERLY MEETING.

The quarterly meeting of the A. M. E Bethel Church will take place on Saturday and Sabbath, the 25th and 26th of October, 1862. Preaching and exhortation on Saturday evening.

Sabbath, the 26th, at 10 o'clock, A. M., Rev. Peter Gardiner.

3 o'clock, P M., Rev A. L. STANFORD.

7 o'clock, P. M., preaching by a stranger, with exhortations.

General class meeting of the membership on Friday evening, the 24th inst.

Love Feast on Monday evening, the 27th instant.

☞ Doors open at 7 o'clock.

J. P. CAMPBELL, Pastor.

ANNUAL MEETING.

From Rev. E. H Cain, of Brooklyn, L. I., on account,	3 00
From Mr. Franklin Lee, Ferton, N J, per Joshua Woodlin,	50
From Rev. James Lynch, of Baltimore, Md., on account,	1 00
From Rev. Wm. H. Winder, for the following gentlemen:
Wm. Guy, of Riceville, New Jersey,	50
Elias Stillwell, " "	50
Mr. George Boston, of Media, Pa., paid,	1 00

THINGS IN AND AROUND ABOUT PHILADELPHIA.

Last Sabbath morning we paid a visit to St Thomas' Church, and heard a discourse delivered, or read, from these words: "For we know that if our earthly house of this tabernacle were dissolved, we have a building of God, a house not made with hands, eternal in the heavens." The subject was handled in a plain, practical sense by the speaker. At 3 o'clock we preached in Zion Mission for Rev. W. D. W. Schureman, and administered the Lord's Supper,—a good time. The Rev. Henry Davis' Quarterly Meeting came off, also, on the same day. They had a very good time.

The Rev. Peter Gardiner is having good meetings in the Camden circuit.

The Rev. James Hollas, Elder of the Salem circuit, has been doing a great work, which may be seen from his letter.

The Rev. James Lynch writes us that he is having a great time in his church. The altar is crowded every night with mourners—over twenty-five at a time. Some, he writes, and many have already professed a hope in Christ Jesus the Lord The Lord be praised. Go on, Brother Lynch; do all the good you can, for it is much needed.

We are glad to hear from so many of our brethren, and of the good Lord blessing their labors.

CONTRABANDS IN AND AROUND ABOUT WASHINGTON.

Our people seem to be awake to their interest It will be seen that the members of Rev. Henry Davis' church are engaged in the work. Also, the members of Rev. Joseph Smith, Elder of the Burlington circuit, are engaged in gathering and making up for the benefit of the contrabands.

MONTHLY REPOSITORY.

The October number of the Repository made its appearance on our table on the 21st instant. Our worthy contemporary, the editor, it would seem, has worked himself into a great stew about "Inquirer's" article, which appeared in the 39th number of the Christian Recorder—a man of much distinction and moral worth in our connexion, who signs himself as, "From the West." This gentleman ("Inquirer") requested us to answer several certain questions, which we did in a Christian and brotherly manner, being very cautious of saying or penning anything deprecatory concerning the existence or affairs of the Repository, unless it should presume to interfere with the Book Concern. The editor of the Repository, however, came out the next week in No. 90 of the Recorder with nearly a column and a half, (which we most forbearingly permitted to be inserted entire,) in which he denies the right of any such interrogatories being made. Having asserted this much, the editor of the Repository, it appears, found it impossible to wind up his article without pouncing upon the editor of the Recorder, (our humble self;) though we did not regard the unjustifiable attack as made intentionally, but, rather, "ignorantly"—although some of our friends tried to persuade us that a part, at least, of this obnoxious communication was intended for us. But, not being satisfied with a column and a half, or nearly so, in the Recorder, he comes out with a column in the Repository, in which he shows strong desires for a fight. You shall be accommodated, my pugilistic brother—for there are many things we can and will say, if necessary, which we shall not say in this article. In is locus to deduce, ut, antequam ego communitus judicium exorgam, tu superus negligentiæ, tuus judicium, convince fateor

You say, in your Repository editorial, by way of asking, "Will some one tell us when the General Conference authorized the publication of the Recorder?" None but an insane man would ask such a question as this, only [illegible] A. M. E. Church. Now we will answer that brother [illegible] Whenever the [illegible] Conference authorize the discontinuance of the Christian Recorder?

Now, for the satisfaction of the brother, we will answer his interrogatories. In the year of our Lord, eighteen hundred and fifty-two, the General Conference sat in the city of New York, and did then and there decree that the organ of the African M. E. Church should be called the Christian Recorder.

The General Conference which sat in Cincinnati in 1856 did not decree its non-existence—for we were there also. When it sat in the city of Pittsburg it did not decree its non-existence—and the man who says it did, only says so because he is ignorant of the true action of that great body It was fortunate for us that we escaped all the Committees except the one to draw up the rules for the government of that body, and of which we were made the Chairman. Therefore, we were present at nearly every motion made during the sessions of that body—and we are free to say that the General Conference did not say that there should be no Recorder published—but, on the other hand, it did most positively say that there should be a weekly paper and a monthly magazine. And the man who seeks for the truth will not become offended when he hears it.

Now, mark: Non sum is, qui nil verus sum videar. God forbid that we should ever be. Now I ask any honest man or woman of God, let him be a minister or not, to open one of the Disciplines of 1856, which were used up to 1860, and considerably since that time, and look on page 211, and see whether or not the following words are there found:

"The Editor and General Book Steward shall publish, for the intelligence of our people, a quarterly magazine and a weekly newspaper, to be called the Christian Recorder."

Now what General Conference endowed with the same amount of intelligence as the A. M. E. Church would have been guilty of so base a principle as that of plotting the overthrow of light and truth—of denying the means of intellectual improvement to our people? We hope the man does not live who would or could be guilty of such an attempt—and, if there was, the Conference would not have disgraced herself so much had she done so

I made the following motion, which motion did prevail—and if the Secretary of that august body has any recollection of it, he will affirm the same, which was

Resolved, That the term Quarterly Magazine be stricken out, and be so amended as to read, Monthly Magazine and weekly paper."

This was carried unanimously. Those words do not appear in our present Book of Discipline, but the fault lies rather with the Secretary, or with the Committee who prepared the Minutes for the press.

But let me tell my brother, aside from all that, that the General Conference empowered the General Committee with the same power that she invested in the Philadelphia Annual Conference, when under her jurisdiction. The General Committee, when in session, did most positively order its continuance, and elected Elisha Weaver as its editor.

If there were no other authority, this is sufficient to stand the test, civilly or ecclesiastically. Art thou satisfied with the truth—the whole truth, on abundant authority—Elisha Weaver, General Book Steward and Editor? For we hope, on the account of truth, Let and Abraham not to part.

For the Christian Recorder.

REVIVAL IN THE SALEM CIRCUIT.

MR. EDITOR:—There seems to be quite a change among the people in our circuit, and I thank the Lord that it appears to be for the better. We have had a series of meetings at Bushtown—Brother Jay, it appears, being the instrument through which the Lord was pleased to display His power. Our meeting was held for two weeks, and the slain of the Lord were many, while the sword and the bayonet are waving and glittering through the air. May the sword of the Spirit also wave and prevail. Our meeting closed on the 11th inst., at which time there were 37 added to the Church; and the most of them profess to have received the blessing. Our Quarterly Meeting came off at Dutchtown on Sunday last. We had a glorious meeting. There were five added to the Church; besides that, there were several mourners. Our next Quarterly Meeting will be held at Bushtown, the Lord willing, on the 27th and 28th inst., at Fogletown on the 1st and 2d of Nov., and at Salem on the 11th and 12th.

May the Lord revive the work in all of our hearts. J. HOLLAN AND J. P. JAY

Salem, New Jersey.

For the Christian Recorder.

MERIT

REV. E. WEAVER:—I send you these lines for a place in your valuable paper,—not to flatter you; by no means I send them because you are deserving of every word.

Too much credit and praise cannot be given to Rev. Elisha Weaver, for the beautiful and neat appearance of the CHRISTIAN RECORDER. It is not only a credit to the A. M. E. Church, but to all the community at large. May the great Head of the Church bless him in that noble and manly enterprise, and we pray that the paper may continue to prosper in his hands.

Yours truly, DAVID H. CROSBY.

Cleveland, Ohio, Oct. 15, 1862.

For the Christian Recorder.

REV. ELISHA WEAVER, EDITOR:—I send you these lines as an item of news, and hope you will give them a place in your popular paper.

The Grand United Order of Odd-Fellows held their seventeenth meeting of the annual movable committee, in Chester, Delaware County, Pennsylvania, on the first and second days of October The business was done in the very best of harmony. The following named brethren were duly elected officers for the ensuing year:—David H. Bowser, Grand Master; Jas. M'Cummill, Deputy Grand Master; James Needham, Grand Secretary; Henry Gordon, Grand Treasurer. Directors:—Ulysses B. Vidal, Charles Simpson, S. Smith, E J. Davis.

As myself and family are present, please direct my paper to Box 3180. Nothing more at present

Your brother in Christ,

DAVID H. CROSBY.

Cleveland, Ohio, Oct. 18, 1862.

For the Christian Recorder.

DEATH OF MR RESPES.

MR. EDITOR:—As an item of information I would inform the friends of James Respes, of Columbia, Ohio, through your paper, of his death He was a well-known and [illegible] friend by many who visited that city.

He deceased August 25th, 1862, after a protracted disease of some six years, which he bore with fortitude. He was a professed Christian and a gentleman, as those who knew him best know: he was a member of the A. M. E. Church His house has been a welcome home for the messenger of the cross of Christ. The church has lost a friend, and the community a worthy citizen.

He gave evidence that he was victor in death, and conquered when he fell. He left an affectionate wife, daughter, mother and aunt, with hearts smitten with sorrow. Having called to his bed-side his only daughter living, with the affection of a father he requested her to treat her mother kindly, be good to John (her husband) to whom he had so recently given her in marriage, and requested her to meet him in heaven.

"Hark! they whisper; angels say,
Brother spirit, come away."

All thy sufferings now are over. Enjoy thy rest with saints above!

EDWARD D. DAVIS.

For the Christian Recorder.

EVENING SCHOOLS.

We have been informed that the "Friends" will open their evening schools for colored men and women at the corner of Raspberry and Aurora Sts, near Ninth and Locust, on the 3d of 11th month (November)

We are also informed that these schools are free, and that the Friends have been giving their time, labor and money towards keeping them up in the winter for more than thirty years.

They also say that the men's school is not near so well attended as it should be. They spend too much money for so small an amount of benefit partaken by the colored men. Now, whose fault is it? We think it lies pretty near the feet of some of our brethren who do not appreciate such kindness. Come, brethren, this should not be so. Wake up every one of you, and fill up the seats of that excellent school!

We do not treat our friends well by being so regardless of their good-will towards us. Education is a great thing for the colored man, and these friends are ready and willing to give it to him.

For the Christian Recorder.

TAKEN FROM ZEDIKIES' ALMANAC, ENGLAND.

Annual eclipse of the sun, at Washington, in America, 3 h. 39 m. 6, P M., 26th May, 1854, mean time in that city.

This great defect of the greater light of heaven will be of a most remarkable character, for the very moment of the eclipse is that of the Solar Conjunction with the evil planet Saturn. The sun, moon and Saturn will all be found in 13th minute of the 6th degree of the sign Gemini, which rules America. Such a phenomenon does not occur in many centuries: perhaps, before has never taken place. At the time we find Mercury ruler of the eclipse in the 3d degree of the same sign, and Mars casting a baleful square thereto in the 9th degree of Virgo, at the very moment the ecliptic conjunction Jupiter falls on the lower meridian, exactly; and Venus is found descending below the western horizon, forming a baleful square to the greater fortune.

It is no idle task to read the great and momentous indications of those heavenly indices of the sovereign will to their great Creator.

Alas! for the men of the United States They are about to be visited by the Avenger. The cup of their national iniquity is full. The cry of the crushed and toil-worn miserable slave has reached the ear of his Maker. The bell born system shall cease; but not without a fearful struggle, which, like the rush of the mighty Niagara, shall shake to pieces the social system founded by Washington, who left the fatal taint of slavery among his country's institutions—the only failure in that immortal hero's noble character. Yes, before the eclipse shall end his rule, nay, before Saturn leaves the sign, American blood shall flow like water. The federal system shall be rent asunder. The pride of the American people shall be humbled, and their cruelty punished They, too, shall feel the heel of the oppressor. Their vaunted liberties curtailed, civil war will rage and martial law silence the bravest defender of the Union! The world's attention will be drawn to the destruction of the power of the American eagle; but from its ashes a phœnix will arise freed from the stain of that foulest of all human crimes—domestic slavery.

F. MYERS.

For the Christian Recorder.

MEETING IN BEHALF OF THE FREEDMEN.

October 7th, 1862

A meeting was called by the pastor, Rev. Henry Davis, at the Union A. M. E. Church, Coates St. The meeting was called to order. Prayer by brother James H. Smith.

On motion, Rev. Henry Davis was appointed Chairman, and Edward Young Secretary

The Chairman then stated the object of the meeting, and a letter was presented and read from the Freedman's National Association, signed by the President thereof, stating the aid required to assist those freed men, women and children, having, by a kind Providence, escaped from the house of bondage.

A series of resolutions were then submitted and adopted.

A committee of twenty-one was appointed to receive all goods and moneys, which may be sent to either of the following persons:

Rev. Henry Davis, No. 813 Wood St.
Mrs Sarah Davis, No 538 Vincent St
Mr. William Randolph, No. 1310 Alder St.
Mrs Eliza Bowen, No 436 Lyal St
Mr. Willis Scutchens, No 1315 Perry St.
Mrs. Susan Faucett, No. 416 Lyal St.
Mr. Joseph S. Thompson, No. 1240 Hutchenson St.
Mrs Margaret Hitchens, corner of Rawl and Orchard Sts
Mr. James H Smith, 1226 Alder St.
Mrs. Hannah Scutchens, No. 1315 Perry St
Mr. James S. Hallowell, No. 461 Kerr St
Mrs. Maria T Hallowell, ditto.
Mr Redman Faucett, No. 416 Lyal St.
Mrs. Ann Lawe, No. 1034 Vernon St
Mr. Joseph Draper, No. 1014 Vernon St
Mrs Sarah Saunders, No 534 Vincent St
Mr. James Jainor, No. 1323 White Hall St.
Miss Angelina Henry, No. 1235 Girard Av.
Miss Ann Cornelia Johnson, Mervine above Orchard:
Miss Angeline Harmon
Mrs. Julia Shanklin
And, further,

Resolved, That each person be requested to keep a book record of all such aid as they may receive. That the committee also have power to increase the funds for this object by any means in keeping with Christianity or morality.

Collected and paid over to the Treasurer, Ridgway Cauft, $15.00.

On motion,

Resolved, That the meeting adjourn, subject to the call of the chairman.

The committee is to meet on Wednesday evening, the 15th inst.

HENRY DAVIS, Chairman
EDWARD YOUNG, Secretary.

WASHINGTON CORRESPONDENCE.

Washington, Oct 20th, 1862.

MR. EDITOR:—Our city is still the seat of bustle and stir. The militia tramp, and sabre clank, are among the many things engaging attention. People seem never to lose curiosity in the war matters, but with an insatiable anxiety they untiringly hunger and thirst to see all that can be seen, and hear all that can be heard; no deep metaphysical disquisition is engaging to the attention now; every body desires something light, something easily digested. Washington might be compared to Athens, when every body was on the alert to hear something new. The inactivity of nothing is appreciable, but all is commotion, move, and stir While nature is laying off her green carpet and blooming foliage, to slumber through the cheerless nights and dreary days of the coming season of another wintry chill, the human mind walks in all the vigor of its native powers, and permeates the elements of every circle. No blighting frost or numbing wind appears to arrest its roving spray, but dashes as with electric prongs—surcharged with ever restless elements that defy boundaries or limitation.

On Monday evening, Oct. 13, Rev. B. T. Tanner delivered a lecture before a Washington audience in Israel Church, on the duty and destiny of the A. M. E Church.

After its delivery the large assembly present organized themselves into an informal Mass Meeting. Rev. J. P. Campbell of Philadelphia being present, by motion was called to the chair. After which John T. Castin, Esq., moved that this honorable body request Rev. B T. Tanner to publish his very able and elegant lecture. Prof. A. M. Green moved to amend Mr. Castin's motion, by empowering the President to appoint a committee to negotiate with Rev B T. Tanner relative to its publication, which prevailed unanimously. After which the Rev. James Reed, John T. Castin, and Rev. Wm Hughes, paid most eloquently a glowing tribute to the rare merits of the lecture, which had just held them enchained for an hour and a half.

Wednesday night the 15th inst., Rev. J. P. Campbell also lectured before the Contraband Association, at Union Bethel Church. Rev. Campbell spoke very applaudingly to the society, and his great power of creative genius which is never at a loss for an idea, poured out in living streams a flood of encouragement, unlike the man who had never drank deep at the fountain of science, theology and polite literature.

The sons and daughters of Love and Charity, No. 17, held a grand demonstration in Israel Church on Thursday night, the 16th inst, of which Mr. James Thomas was the grand Master. They appeared in their full regalia with emblems answering to every grade or degree of their order. Mr. Wm. Thomas delivered a lecture before the large assemblage, vindicating the honor of secret institutions, which he did with arguments irrefutable. This was the first time we ever saw this much spoken of gentleman, and we are proud to say, that he is a fit representative of the race with whom he is identified.

Rev. A. W. Wayman preached the funeral sermon of the lamented Henry Tatte, Sabbath afternoon, 19th inst., from the text, Mark the perfect man, and behold the upright, for the end of that man is peace. And just imagine what he did with it. His former reputation will speak it better than I can write it. H. M. T.

MODERN DISCOVERIES

Bayard Taylor, the celebrated traveller, thus sums up the results of modern discoveries: "Within the last twenty-five years, all the principal features of our own vast interior regions have been accurately determined; the great fields of Central Asia have been traversed in various directions, from Bokhara and Oxus to the Chinese wall; the half-known river systems of South America have been explored and surveyed; the icy continent around the Southern Pole has been discovered; the Northwest Passage—the ignis fatuus of nearly two centuries is—at last found; the Dead Sea is stript of its fabulous terrors; the source of the Niger is no longer a myth, and the sublime secret of the Nile is almost wrested from his keeping; the Mountains of the Moon, sought for 2,000 years, have been beheld by a Circassian eye; an English steamer has ascended the Chadda to the frontiers of Bornou; Leichardt and Stuart have penetrated the wilderness of Australia; the Russians have descended from Irkoutsk to the mouth of the Amoor: the antiquated walls of Chinese prejudice have been cracked, and are at last tumbling down, and the canvass screens that surround Japan have been cut by the sharp edge of American enterprise Such are the principal results of modern exploration. What quarter of a century, since the form of the earth and the boundaries of its land and water were known, can exhibit such a list of achievements?"

"A CONTINENT OF THE FUTURE"

This is the expressive remark lately made by the celebrated explorer, Livingstone, of Africa. And the light received recently in regard to its interior, justifies the predictions. Geographical research, commercial adventure, colonizing enterprise, and missionary zeal, unite in opening the continent, and in exhibiting vast fertile regions densely inhabited by much more intelligent and powerful tribes than those to which our former acquaintance was restricted.

The explorers of the Tanganyika Lake, in Eastern Africa, report the land visited as abounding in iron and timber, copal mines and ivory, and that the cotton plant is indigenous, and rivals in fineness, firmness and weight the medium staple of the New World.

Livingstone wrote to a friend at Cape Town the result of his recent three months' tour on the Nyassa. He states that the lake is over two hundred miles in length, the water fresh and cool, and is "surrounded by mountains, or by the high table lands that appear as such A mountainous cape divides the southern end into two bays, one thirty and the other eighteen miles in length. We went along the western shore, and found it a succession of bays, until, in the far North, the spurs of the mountains, running sheer down to the water, scarcely afforded landing places In the South no bottom was felt with our sounding line of thirty-five fathoms. * * * We never saw so many people anywhere else as on its shores; they were on the whole very civil. * * * Healthy localities can be secured on the highlands, which arise on our [illegible] seven thousand or eight thousand feet above the sea.

Dr Kirk thus concludes an interesting communication to the [illegible]

GEMS OF CHRISTIAN THOUGHT

RELIGION.

"Whatever objections the vain or vicious make against religion, they must allow, if they have any regard to truth remaining, not only that nothing else promises happiness, even here, as that disposition of mind to which religion proposes to bring us:—for he who loves God sincerely, and obeys him willingly, and trusts in him cheerfully who delights in doing justice, and showing goodness to his fellow-creatures, and takes pleasure in regulating his conduct by the dictates of reason and Scripture, studying to be useful in his station, and keeping his heart shut against hurtful indulgence, while he opens it, in a proper degree, to every innocent gratification, hath, unquestionably, the truest enjoyment of his being that is possible He destroys not his health by intemperance, nor his fortune by extravagance, nor his character by criminal or mean behaviour. He generally obtains esteem and friendship; and he always feels the most comfortable testimony of his own conscience Whatever he denies himself, or parts with, it is for a valuable consideration,—the discharge of his duty:—whatever he suffers, he escapes the greatest of evils,—remorse and shame—and he enjoys the greatest good, a conscious sense of the Divine favor, conducting him graciously through the afflictions of this life to an endless felicity in the next, that shall be more abundant for them. And where shall we find upon earth a securer, an easier, a more joyful situation? Right actions, it must be owned, are often accompanied, in the beginning of a Christian's course, with great inward struggles; but they diminish continually, in proportion as a right temper is formed; and, when we arrive at a proper maturity of goodness, we shall be entirely free from difficulties, and absolutely at peace."—Commencement of Archbishop Secker's Sermon on Matt. v. 6.

PIETY.

"Piety, in its true sense, is the first and great commandment. Many think external observances in religion to be piety; and too many think piety to consist in the exercise of reverential affections towards God, though it prompt very little, if at all, to imitate his moral attributes and obey his injunctions Perhaps they are induced by this regard to God not only to abstain from gross vices, usually so-called, but to do acts of charity, also, and to contribute to religious uses: and so far is well; but by no means do they sufficiently consider their obligations as extending to everything in every part of life, and in their own breasts, in which there is a right and a wrong. And hence they conceive themselves at liberty, in point of conscience, to act as they will in multitudes of instances where they act very much otherwise than they ought. Therefore, I wanted your Lordship to add a fourth conference to the three you have already written, for the purpose of saying more explicitly, and dwelling more upon it, that religion extends its authority to everything; to the most worldly, the commonest, the lowest things; and binds us to behave reasonably, decently, humbly, honorably, meekly, and kindly, in them all; and that interfering so far, instead of being a hard ship, is a great blessing to us, because it interferes always for our good."—From a Letter of Archbishop Secker to Bishop Hoblesby, arraigned by a publication of the latter.

NOTHING MINE BUT GOD.

In the memoir of Mrs. Savage, the sister of Matthew Henry, the commentator, is this entry in her diary: "Resolved, To call nothing mine but God" How forcibly does the expression remind us of the Saviour's requirement, "Whosoever he be that forsaketh not all that he hath, he cannot be my disciple;" and, at the same time, of the Apostle's inventory of the Christian's possessions, "All things are yours" Truly, if this be so, "He that loseth his life shall find it."

CONTENTED JOHN

One honest John Tomkins, a hedger and ditcher,
Although he was poor, did not want to be richer;
For all such vain wishes he from his heart [illegible]
By a [illegible]

Though cold were the weather, or dear were the food,
John never was found in a murmuring mood;
For this he was constantly heard to declare,
What he could not prevent he would cheerfully bear.

"For why should I grumble and murmur?" he said,
"If I cannot get meat I'll be thankful for bread;
And though fasting may make my calamities deeper,
It never can make them [illegible]

If John was afflicted with sickness or pain,
He wished himself better; but did not complain,
Nor lay down to fret in despondence and sorrow;
But said that he hoped to be better to-morrow.

If any one wronged him, or treated him ill,
Why, John was good-natured and sociable still;
For he said that revenging the injury done
Would be making two rogues where there need be but one.

And thus honest John, though his station was humble,
Passed through the sad world without even a grumble,
And "here we'll stone look, whoever greater and richer,
Would copy John Tomkins, the hedger and ditcher.

MISS TAYLOR

ODDS AND ENDS.

It is said that one of the visitors' albums at Niagara Falls contains the following specimen of pathetic Latin verse:—

"Tres fratres simul
Took a boat for Niagri!
Magnum frothum surgebat
Et boatem overturnibat
Et omnes drownidederunt
Qui swimmere non potuerunt!"

ALBERT the Good is now the accepted phrase in the English weekly journals, when alluding to the late Prince Consort

THE Oxford Democrat copies the following description from a deed recorded in that county: "Thence northerly four rods, thence so crooked as you can go to the north line of the Phillips Academy grant."

A PAPER can publish the appointments after the coming in of a new administration; but what paper in the world is large enough to publish half the disappointments?

[illegible] may favor fools, but that's a poor reason why you should make a fool of yourself.

A team follow sometimes drives contentiously by a pair of grays when he is driven by a score of duns

THE lions of the forest are said to live a century. The lions of fashionable society are generally [illegible]

NAPOLEON was one day [illegible] to his library, and at last discovered it on a shelf somewhat above his reach. Marshal Moncey, one of the tallest men in the army, stepped forward, saying, "Permit me, sire; I am higher than your majesty" "You are longer, Marshal," said the Emperor, with a frown

A Jewish Wedding.—A wedding in Jewish high life took place at the Green Street synagogue, and was attended by the crème de la crème of Hebrew society The parties were Mr Mannheim Cohen and Miss S., [illegible] Henriques. The building was crowded [illegible] elite, and the display of dress and jewelry on the part of the ladies was very fine. More than five hundred carriages attended the bridal party. That evening [illegible]

A SABBATH IN SARATOGA.

Such is the title of an article in a periodical lately sent to me, entitled "The Volunteer," and published by "The Ladies' Educational Union" of New York. Among other Sabbath scenes of Saratoga, noticed in this article is the following, headed—

"THE WAR MEETING"

"in Pavilion Grove, at 3 P. M. It was organized by the appointment of Rev. Dr. Wayland as Chairman. Rev Dr Beecher, Mayor French, and others made stirring speeches, and were enthusiastically cheered. Recruits, however, were slow in coming forward, yet the leaven was working silently in many minds Speech followed speech, powerful appeals were made, patriotism burned in many a heart. The crowd increased. Earnest, anxious, and thoughtful minds were pondering the question of duty; old men wished they were young again, the invalid sighed for health [illegible] our country, the mother was tearing her love of country by the heart struggle of consecrating her only son. (We wonder how the reporter discovered all these patriotic mental processes in the silent crowd) Silently the tide is welling up in many a heart, and now the balance trembles on the pause; one little weight will turn it: Hush! 'tis not a speech. Stand back, strong men! your powerful arms have tried in vain! But see! it comes "gentle as the breath of evening," 'tis woman's magic charm. A lady detached her jewelled chain from her neck, and gently laid it on the scale. "This for the first to stand forth in our defence." "I take it," says young —— stepping forth, "and by this token victory or death be mine!" The ball was started and rolled on. Chains, pencils, watches, rings were freely handed in. Cheer on cheer went up as recruits came forward [illegible]

None but a lady could describe such a scene in such style as the above. The object of the meeting is one which commends itself to the heart of every loyal man. But we would like to ask the Rev. Dr. Wayland, Beecher, and others, whether assisting the draft is a matter of such necessity or mercy as to justify such a meeting on the Lord's day? "It has been said that "war knows no Sabbath," and [illegible] the last year we have had many evidences of the truth of the statement. "No one can visit a camp or a garrison even, without observing this anti-Sabbatic influence of war. How lamentable then that a distinguished Doctor of Divinity and Christian pastors should be found actually stimulating, and so to say, consecrating this dreadful tendency of war! If Saratoga had been threatened by an enemy, or if the tidings had reached there on Saturday, that Washington or New York was in imminent peril, the necessity of such a meeting as the one above described would have been too obvious for dispute. But no such urgent reason existed for the devotion of sacred time to secular business, however patriotic it might be. What was done on Sabbath could have been done as easily on Saturday or Monday. And it behooves all who love the Lord's day, all who do not wish to see a German or a French Sunday taking the place of an American Sabbath, to lift up their voices in earnest protest against all such instances of Sabbath desecration as occurred on "the last day of summer 62 in Saratoga." F

A VISIT TO SHARPSBURGH

Hagerstville, Monday, Oct 13th, 1862

DEAR BROTHER:—We were not long in the cars until we discovered that many were traveling on a sad mission. Fathers and brothers in search of sons or brothers, who were wounded, were sick, or near to death, or had fallen, and whose bodies they wished to recover. As we neared the scene of action, their number increased. In the hotels, the hospitals, the field, everywhere, we met men in search of friends. Sometimes they were successful soon, sometimes they were directed from hospital to hospital, from town to town, for days, sometimes they searched in vain. The person sought for had been removed, or had died, or was buried in an unmarked grave.

I visited some of the hospitals in Harrisburg, and was pleased with them in general. The sick affected me much more than the wounded. I will not soon forget how one man asked me, "Do you know anything good for the dysentery?" The wounded were doing well, and received good attention.

At Hagerstown, I visited two out of the three hospitals. Most of the wounded had been removed. I did not find any acquaintances. The men are glad to be visited, even by one who is a stranger. At the hotel, we found the rates better than the fare. My efforts on the beef-steak in the evening were a failure. In the morning I chose veal; but I might as well have called for chicken—it would have been off the same piece.

The first object of attention was the hospitals near the battle-field. I kept no record, and, therefore, cannot give any details. To give you some idea of the number and extent of the hospitals, imagine all the houses on contiguous farms for six or seven miles, through a good farming district, occupied as hospitals. Up stairs, down stairs, sometimes basement, barn, straw-stack, barn-yard, everywhere filled with wounded. It was a sickening sight. These hospitals are not like the ones in our towns and cities. A little straw in the bed—their blanket is their covering—if they happen to have one. Their privations are very great. Wounded in every possible part of the body, suffering every degree of pain, without friends, without many of the commonest comforts, without, in some cases, proper medical attendance, or care of nurses, there they lie and pine away. But, to a most remarkable degree, I found the men cheerful I scarcely heard a groan, seldom a complaint. Surgeons generally appeared to be doing their duty, nurses attentive, hospital stores, in some cases, scarce. There were, no doubt, some cases of neglect; but when so many were wounded, it could not be otherwise. In the villages, Sharpsburg, Keedysville, Boonsboro', &c., they are well cared for. I visited many hospitals during my visit. I do not desire to witness such scenes again; but such is war—it is barbarism. Nothing touched me more than the spiritual destitution. There are no chaplains, no attention paid to the spiritual condition, no service at burial. In hospitals near camps or in villages, necessary matter is supplied; but in the field hospitals it is not so. Men suffer and die without a word of comfort, and are buried without ceremony. The latter is not needed; for there are no friends to weep. A visitor cannot do much, unless he remains some time. Sometimes remarks are gratefully received, sometimes evaded. In a hospital in Harrisburg, I asked a young man who is sick, a native of New Hampshire, if he was a member of church. He said not; but his mother is. His eyes filled with tears at once. While I talked, they ran down his cheeks. He had been in the service a year—had not heard a sermon. He belonged to a battery The man next him was his neighbor and companion, and like him. I talked awhile, and then knelt down in prayer with them. May it be answered and blessed!

I visited the rebels and talked with many On our right, they were a poor, miserable-looking set; on our left belonged to a better class I did not find one forced into the service. Some said [illegible] volunteered because they knew they would have to go—so did many of our men Ignorance and hatred characterised them. I talked with many concerning the war. They mostly said they were tired of it. So did our own soldiers. Some said they would gladly get out of it if they could. Some said as soon as they got well and were exchanged, they would go at it again and fight till they die. They generally spoke of the Abolitionists wanting to free the negroes as the cause of the war. Some said John Brown began the war, and they appear to be fighting him yet. Fortunately his body is beyond their harm, and spirit is not subject to the same laws with matter, his "soul is marching on." One fine looking man said when I asked him what he was fighting for, "I am fighting for slavery I believe it right, and, therefore, it ought to be extended. You believe it is wrong, and, therefore, it ought not to be extended. Now that's the difference, and we're trying to fight it out; and just as soon as I get well and am exchanged, I will go at it again."

My impression is that we are not yet cured of our folly in believing what deserters and spies tell us. There are men in the rebel army who have no love for the cause; there are some Union men in the South; but the men who have been able to lead or drive them thus far are not likely to lose their power over them, especially so long as they are victorious The rebel army is not in the least danger of breaking up. They are not as well clothed as our men, and, perhaps, not as well fed; but there is perfect discipline, and the most resolute determination, and, I think, also bitter hatred, towards an imaginary class, indeed, but real and intense

I visited the battle-fields of South Mountain and Antietam. Of course the dead were all buried; but the scene was horrid enough still. The battle of Antietam began on our right and moved to our left. We could easily follow the course in which the forces moved. Newly-ploughed fields were trampled hard as a road, fences were levelled, fields of corn were cut off by the balls, trees were marked and torn, and, in some instances, cut off. You read of a corn-field on the right, and of certain fences and roads and a church where severe fighting was done. The carnage was fearful. All over the field hats, caps, cartridge boxes, haversacks and rations, or something of the kind, and a blood-stain on the ground are seen, showing how terrible the battle was. We could tell generally whether it was a Union or rebel soldier. Along the fences the rebels were concealed, and had fallen in very great numbers. The Dunkard Church is shattered by the balls and shells. Where Burnside fought, on the left, the rebels had all the advantage of the ground. I wonder he ever reached the crest of the hill. Sharpsburg lies just over the hill. We can trace the progress of the fight in the houses. First the balls struck the steeple of a church, then lower down as our forces advanced, until they struck the foundations of the houses. The dead were all decently buried; our soldiers singly or a few together, marked with boards, and commonly fenced in with rails. The rebels were laid side by side in trenches.

I did not go over all the battle-field on South Mountain—only the centre and our left. As I stood on one point and looked over the Middletown Valley, I could not think we were in the midst of such scenes. It is a beautiful valley, well cultivated to the summit of the Catoctin Mountain. All was quiet and happy apparently; but here stood a rebel battery, behind these stone heaps, and in those woods were concealed rebel soldiers; up that open steep came the brave soldiers of freedom. The fragments, the blood-stains, the graves show the carnage of the battle. I felt sick of war, and turned my face homeward.

I visited many of the camps. At home we scarcely know the value of friendship; it is known in the army. O, how the soldier rejoices to see one from home! Men who had never seen me gathered around me. Old acquaintances, neighbors, and members of my congregation rejoiced as if a brother had come. Separated from home so long, suffering privation, exposed to death so often, no wonder they rejoice to see one from home.

On Sabbath I preached at 9 o'clock to the 13th Reserves; but the audience was gathered from the whole brigade. How different it is preaching to such a congregation from preaching to our congregations at home! There is no restraint of form or ceremony, no fear lest we offend good taste by a mischosen word, or an unmethodical sermon. The spirit is free, and, I think, with an earnest man, must be powerful. At 10.30 I preached to the 155th, Col. Allen, a new regiment. There is no chaplain yet; but the Col. arranged for the services in the best manner. The regiment was taken out to a piece of woods, and were seated by companies under the trees. A barrel with a box turned over it was the Bible-stand; but I did not need it. O, how cheering it is to preach to such an audience! There were members of my congregation present who had not heard a sermon since they heard me at home. In the evening, I was walking by the 129th Regiment, and joined in their service and addressed a few words to them. At sunset I preached to the 126th, Colonel Elder

It made me sad to visit the old regiments. When I saw them last winter, they were in strength and full of confidence. Now they are reduced to a handful, and are weary. The new regiments are full of hope yet; but are not eager for the battle

On the whole I was not well pleased with the condition of the army. The men are poorly provided for. Many of the old regiments lost their knapsacks on leaving the Peninsula, and have nothing but what is on their backs. Their knapsacks are probably stored in Washington. I saw men on dress parade without shirts, for the simple reason they had but one, and it was drying Many of the new regiments also have no tents or gum blankets; some have just overcoats or blankets. During the heat of the day when off duty, they hang their blankets on the guns, and sit down in the shade. At night they wrapped themselves in them and laid down on the dust, and in the morning rose wet with dew and chilled with cold. They soon built for themselves shelters of branches. The camps are not kept clean. Filth accumulates around them, and, in many cases, from carcasses of dead horses, offals of butchers, &c., there is a constant stench. But what surprised me most, the carelessness of the army. There is a censorship of the press; but no guard around the camp. I went wherever I wished to go without a pass. I passed from brigade to brigade without meeting a guard. Of course there are pickets along the river, and, in some cases there is a small brigade guard; but there is nothing to hinder any spy or emissary of Jeff. Davis to enter the camp and go where he will. I met scores, hundreds of soldiers, strolling everywhere over the country. In one case, I met them with guns ten or twelve miles from camp. Any person who wishes can desert by going to some farm-house or village and buying a suit of old clothes. In many cases the men do go home. I will not say the army is demoralized; but discipline is not strict—by any means not as it is in the rebel army. I was altog

THE BELFAST RIOTS.

The Dublin correspondent of the London Times, under date of September 20, gives the following as a sketch of the main facts of the riots in Belfast:—

On Wednesday night (17th) the inhabitants of the Pound district almost entirely Roman Catholics, began to assemble in groups at the corners of the streets, when they got out of the mills and other places where they are employed. It is said they began by attacking every decent-looking person they saw passing. The police were soon on the spot, and partially succeeded in dispersing them. But they got round into Berry street, and before the police could come up they had smashed the windows of the Rev Mr. Hanna's church. Mr. Hanna is a Presbyterian minister, who had formerly given offence by preaching in the open air, and by strong speeches against Romanism.

The Mayor and a number of magistrates were out during the evening, endeavoring to restore order and protect the peaceful citizens. The constabulary exerted themselves as well as they could. Some of them were wounded by blows of bricks and other missiles. The riot act was read several times. But, as the Belfast mobs are used to that ceremony, we are told that they regard it only as a pantomime and the police as so many harlequins. They laugh at the whole thing and throw stones at the magistrates during the performance. If they dispersed it was to do mischief in other localities.

Last night the riots were resumed. Early in the day the magistrates met and adopted all precautionary measures they could devise for the preservation of the peace, or rather to "terminate the riots." A great number of magistrates were present near the spot where it was expected the disturbance would break forth. But there during the whole night all was quiet; the soldiers piled their arms and amused themselves joking and singing "Annie Laurie." The first movement of the "enemy" came from an unexpected quarter. A large body of navvies from the Ulster Railway marched up Durham street and on to the Pound, four deep, carrying their spades and shovels on their shoulders—quite an unusual thing.

In the rear of this body marched the police, to prevent a collision with the Orangemen, which might have had fatal results. The Orange blood, however, was now well up. Sandy-row and Durham street poured forth their hosts of fighting men, who were resolved to be revenged for the wrecking of Mr Hanna's church. The war-cry was "For St. Malachi's!" meaning the principal Roman Catholic church. By great exertion a body of constabulary was got there in time, by taking a short route, to prevent that building from being wrecked. At this actual moment 250 of the constabulary from the reserve force in Dublin arrived by the express train. They had come in heavy marching order, with their knapsacks containing "full kit" their great coats, blankets and undress caps strapped to their backs, and their shakoes on their heads.

But they had no time to get rid of these incumbrances or take refreshments till morning, being obliged to assist in quelling the riots; but the police and the military were dodged so artfully that there was not a guardian of the peace to be seen where most of the mischief was done. Balked in their attempt to demolish the windows of St. Malachi's, the Orangemen cried "To the Whig office!" Here the police were again before them. But they went back to Donegal square, the residence of the proprietor of that liberal (not Roman Catholic) journal, and smashed every pane of glass in the windows. A great number of heavy stones remain in the rooms. Fortunately the family were absent, Mr. Finlay being on the continent, and only two female servants being in the house. They next smashed every window in the large bakery establishment of Mr. Barney Hughes, a wealthy Roman Catholic.

The windows of the Royal Hotel, a fine building, were also demolished, and some valuable articles of furniture injured by the stones and bricks flung into the apartments. In Charlotte street all the houses had their windows smashed, it is supposed because they were the property of Mr. Coyle, an inoffensive Roman Catholic gentleman, whose Protestant neighbors endeavored to protect him in vain, for he was struck by a brick, which injured him severely. In Church street and North street upward of twenty houses were damaged by the mob. In Ballymacarrett a great number of respectable houses were attacked indiscriminately, whether they were inhabited by Protestants or Roman Catholics.

The Roman Catholic mob broke the windows of the Unitarian meeting house, the minister of which, the Rev. J. Scott Porter, did all he could to prevent the meeting being held in the Botanic gardens.

During the evening the riot act was read several times by Mr. Dunseville, Dr. McGee, Mr. Lyons, and others of the magistracy; but their desire, it was evident, was not to resort to extreme measures. A great number of injuries were inflicted on constables and civilians by the mobs of rioters; but the wounds received were not of a dangerous character.

The chasing of the mob—the Roman Catholics here, and the Orangemen there—running in all directions, doubling round corners and rushing through by streets, to be able to wreck a house before their pursuer overtook them, was quite exciting. The respectable inhabitants were out in the streets, trying to see what was going on. The troops and the constabulary were striving to disperse the crowds, and all was a scene of wild confusion and clamor, rioting and reveling, as if Belfast, the most industrious, prosperous, religious town in Ireland, had been turned into Bedlam and Bedlam was let loose in the streets.

Personal.

The Rev. Smylie Robson, of Damascus.—Mr. Rodgers read a recommendation from the Board of Missions, to the effect that the Rev. Smylie Robson should be allowed to leave Damascus, with a view to take charge of the moral and spiritual training of two sons of the late Said Beg Jimblat, chief of the Druses, who made a request to Lord Dufferin when he was dying that his two sons should be brought up on the religious customs and manners of England.

Professor Porter gave an interesting sketch of the late Said Beg Jimblat, who was the most influential chief among the Druses. He described minutely that part of Palestine where the Druses reside, and stated that the opening is a most favorable one for the extension of Christianity. He bore flattering testimony to the zeal and energy of Mr. Robson as a missionary of the Gospel.

The recommendation was unanimously agreed to.

It was moved by Dr. McCosh, and seconded by Mr. Macdonnell, that they should join in thanksgiving for the gratifying statement they had heard. At the request of the Moderator, Dr. McCosh engaged in prayer.

The Bishop of London.—The new Archbishop of Canterbury is not to be the Bishop of London, as was at first supposed, but the office is conferred upon the Archbishop of York, whose place will probably be filled by the Bishop of Lichfield. The State has had more to do in this arrangement than the Church. The Government wants a man in the Primacy who will not be disposed to meddle too much with the political affairs of the nation, but who will be contented to let things rub along smoothly, as they have been doing for many years.

The new Archbishop is nearly seventy years old, and has no means likely to set the river Thames, or even the Parliament Houses, on fire.

A Jewish Organist in the Church of the Puritans.—Mr. Abraham Dropsekar has been appointed organist to Dr. Cheever's church, being the only instance in our knowledge of a Jewish organist carrying off the palm for a position in a Christian church.

Re Election of Senator Foote, of Vermont.—Montpelier, October 14.—Solomon Foote was re-elected United States Senator to-day, for six years, by a unanimous vote in the Senate. There were only seven votes against him in the House.

The Chinese Government is purchasing quite a fleet in England. The admiralty has sold it three gun-boats, and a side-wheel steamer, and two mailed gun-boats are to be built. The fleet is to be taken out to China by its commodore, Capt. Sherrard Osborn, R. N.

Domestic Items.

News from Kentucky

[From the New York Ledger, 17—.

The opposite [illegible] Buell, between Cumberland's corps and Kirby Smith's army, is now confirmed as quite generally credited. The battle was fought on Wednesday, and what we publish of its details is taken from citizens of Richmond. By Hall's to Madison county, on the turnpike leading from Richmond to London, Barbourville and Cumberland Gap. It is distant from Richmond 18 miles.

The battle commenced at about eight o'clock in the morning, and raged fiercely during the remainder of the day—four o'clock in the afternoon—when the night.

The attack was made by our troops, under the immediate command of Major General Nelson, who was in command of the advance division. The rebels were commanded by Kirby Smith, whose division were acting as the rear-guard of the rebels in their retreat from Camp Dick Robinson.

This wing of the rebel army had charge of most of Bragg's supply train, including a large number of cattle, horses, mules, ammunition, &c., from Camp Dick Robinson.

The result of the battle, so far as we can learn, is a decided Federal victory—the rebels being fairly and badly whipped.

Numbers of stragglers from the rebel army have arrived at Richmond, and quite a number at Lexington. They report that Smith's army was completely routed, and that whole regiments had thrown away their arms and were fleeing in every direction, completely demoralized.

It is said that we have captured nearly the whole of the rebel train, including about two thousand head of cattle, a large number of hogs, horses, mules, &c., &c. We also captured a considerable quantity of ammunition.

The rebels are said to have fought desperately, and the loss in killed and wounded is reported heavy on both sides. We heard no estimate of the number. It is reported, however, that we have taken several thousand prisoners, and a large number of cannon and small arms.

We will, doubtless have full reports of the engagement to-morrow.

The rebels were driven back slowly, fighting in their retreat, and only abandoning their positions after the most stubborn resistance.

Our troops were pressing on them vigorously, and we hope to hear of the capture of the entire rebel army. We have good reason to credit all the reports of Federal advantages as far received.

General Gilbert's corps was in pursuit of the main body of Bragg's army, which passed through Crab Orchard on Wednesday morning, some seventeen miles in advance of our pursuing army. They were moving on the road to Mount Vernon and London.

A portion of McCook's and a portion of Crittenden's corps have united with Gilbert's corps, and are engaged in the pursuit. General Buell, it is said, is with the wing of the army.

Curiosities of Nature.—Among the papers published in costly style by the Smithsonian Institute at Washington, is one on the microscopic plants and animals which live on and in the human body. It describes quite a number of insects. The animal which produces the disease called itch is illustrated by an engraving half an inch in diameter, which shows not only the ugly little fellow's body and legs, but his very toes, although the animal himself is entirely invisible to the naked eye.

When Lieutenant Berryman was sounding the ocean, preparatory to laying the Atlantic telegraph, the quill at the end of the sounding line brought up mud, which, on being dried, became a powder so fine, that, on rubbing it between the thumb and finger, it disappeared in the crevices of the skin. On placing this dust under the microscope, it was discovered to consist of millions of perfect shells—each of which had a living animal.

The President on Brigadiers.—A gentleman recently from Washington tells a characteristic anecdote of our facetious Chief Magistrate. In response to a very high recommendation for a Brigadier-Generalship, Mr. Lincoln replied that, as the number of officers of this grade allowed by Congress (two hundred) was already full, he could make no more appointments. What he needed now was the rank and file. There were enough Generals. Our army would soon be in a like predicament with a certain great Western herdsman, who, in his ambition to improve his stock, had entirely overlooked the value of cows and calves, and, to his dismay, found he had nothing left but bulls.

The Rebel Pirate "290."—Washington, October 18th.—The report that the pirate "290" (otherwise known as the Alabama) is at Mobile, is not only improbable, but positively untrue. Captain Pelton, of the bark Virginia, which was destroyed by the pirate "290," has arrived home.

The descriptions which have been given of the famous "290," show that she was never intended for a war vessel, and her operations make it manifest that the aim of her rebel owners and their English friends is to cripple our commerce. She has already wantonly destroyed a number of merchant vessels, and the alarm caused by her depredations has increased the premium demanded by underwriters.

With twenty such ships afloat, the perils of carrying merchandise in American vessels would become so great as to render the business unprofitable, and all our vast trade would fall into the hands of English merchants.

Two objects would thus be accomplished by our English neighbors. The difficulty of subduing the rebellion would be increased, and they would gain an immensely lucrative business.

As as a mere penny-wise speculation, the money invested in building a number of swift steamers would be profitably expended.

The State Election.—Harrisburg, October 19th.—The result of the election in regard to the State ticket is still in doubt, but the probabilities favor a Democratic majority.

Fifteen Unionists are no doubt elected to Congress, including Mr. Reilly, in the Sixteenth District.

The State Legislature will probably stand as follows:—

House, 46 Unionists and 54 Democrats. Senate, 20 Unionists to 13 Democrats. It is generally conceded here that there will be a Democratic majority of one on joint ballot.

The Army of the Potomac.—Oct. 18, 1862.—The troops, under Generals Hancock and Humphreys, who left on Thursday morning to make a reconnoissance in the direction of Winchester, returned after arriving at Smithfield, five miles from Bunker Hill. None of the enemy interfered with the return of Gen. Hancock's command.

With Gen. Humphreys' command it was different. They followed him with cavalry and artillery within a short distance of Shepherdstown, and opened with the latter whenever they could get within range. Our loss was one killed and six wounded.

The troops safely recrossed at Shepherdstown ford last evening, bringing with them a number of prisoners.

The rebel wounded, numbering one hundred, left at Charlestown, were brought within our lines yesterday afternoon, where they will be paroled.

The rebels had between forty and fifty killed and wounded, on Thursday, whilst disputing the advance of Gen. Humphreys' command.

Our advices indicate that Gen. McClellan is again about to measure strength with the rebel hosts under Lee. There appears to be no doubt that the latter intends to give battle at or near their present location, which is now well known to our Generals, through the thorough reconnoissances recently made.

Reported Negro Plot in Virginia.—Washington, Oct. 20.—The Republican of to-day says:

A refugee who recently came into General Sigel's headquarters gives information of a highly important character. He escaped from Amherville, Culpeper Co., Virginia, and states that the greatest consternation and trouble exists among the white people at that whole section of country, in consequence of an apprehended slave revolt.

Seventeen negroes, most of them free, had been arrested on suspicion of being engaged in plotting the uprising of the entire colored population. Copies of late newspapers, which published President Lincoln's Emancipation Proclamation, were found in their possession. The fact that such a proclamation has been made is well known among all the negroes, and it produces the most startling effect.

The terror of the whites is beyond description. Apprehensions of a re-enactment of the Nat. Turner horrors are felt to an alarming extent. The accused negroes were promptly taken out, at Amherville, and hung.

It is said that the negroes of the different counties around Culpepper are all engaged in the conspiracy for a general insurrection.

Conscription in the South

[From Fredericksburg, Virginia.]

Washington, Oct. 21.—We have information from Fredericksburg of a late date. The conscription law of the Davis Government is being rigidly enforced. Every man coming within range of its operation is forced into the army. Some have demurred, and to these little mercy is shown, and they are thrust into jail at once.

Money.—Washington, October 20th.—There is no foundation for the current report that the Secretary of the Treasury will apply to the next Congress for authority to issue more Treasury notes. It is probable that Mr. Chase will ask Congress to legislate so as to curtail the issue of bank bills, and thus restore the value of Government paper to the gold standard. It is the opinion of many financiers who have been in Washington of late, that if no more Government paper was to be issued, and all the paper issues of the banks could be suppressed, the Government paper would instantly rise to the value of gold. The Government is convinced that something must be done to lessen the present disparity between specie and paper money.

A Speck of War with Spain.—Considerable excitement has been caused at Havana, and throughout the entire island, by an alleged "outrage" by the officers of an American man-of-war. The facts of the case are briefly these: On the afternoon of the 7th instant a steamer was seen rapidly approaching the Spanish coast, about six miles to the westward of Morro Castle, pursued by a man-of-war. The steamer had French colors flying at the time, and the pursuer, from her general appearance, was a United States vessel. The captain of the British ship was clearly endeavoring to make for the harbor of Havana, but the Federal boat hailed her, and the vessel was forced to run ashore. Launches were at once despatched from the cruiser to capture the captain and crew, and to get off the steamer if possible. No sooner had the launches touched shore, however, when a detachment of Spanish soldiers were seen approaching, on the appearance of which the commander of the boats gave directions to fire the vessel, which was immediately done, and the launches returned to the war steamer, taking with them the pilot of the destroyed vessel, whom they had captured. The cruiser immediately proceeded to sea.

The ship destroyed proved to be the steamer Blanche, last from the port of Molato, where she had stopped for coal.

As to her mission and to where she belonged, accounts differ. Some say that she was a slaver, others, doubtless more correct, affirm that she hailed from Port Lavacca, Texas, and had a cargo of cotton.

Avoiding the Draft

Surgeon—What's the matter with you?

Would-be-Exempt—Weak back, sir—very weak back.

S.—Weak knees, you mean.

W.—Yes, sir, weak knees—very weak knees—can't march.

S.—Yes, I'll give you a certificate. (Writes.)

"Upon honor I hereby certify that the bearer ——, is weak in the knees, a great coward who shrinks from defending his country. Hope he will be put in the front ranks, where he can't run away.

——— ———, Surgeon," &c.,

W.—(Handing the surgeon a quarter,) Thank you, sir. I knew I was entitled to a certificate. The rebellion, so wicked and monstrous, must be put down. It has done my heart good to see the energy of the President in ordering a draft.

(Here reads the certificate and limps.)—Hartford Times.

Old Hundred in the Army.—Never before have we heard anything so magnificently grand as that same Old Hundred song by the soldiers of the Union army on the plains of Yorktown. The air was made vocal by the music, and the woods around reverberated with the mighty strain. Beneath the canopy of heaven the soldier gazed upward into the starlit sky, and sung unto God, "from whom all blessings flow," an anthem that stirred in the heart of man the best and noblest emotions. The incident was a sublime one, either for the poet or the artist.—Inquirer.

Postage Stamps.—The first postage stamp was used in London, January 10th, 1840. The first American stamp in 1840 or 1845. France adopted them about the same time we did. The Taxe und Taxis office introduced them in Germany in 1850. They are now used in sixty-nine countries in Europe. In all the countries there are used fifteen hundred different stamps. The most beautiful are those of Russia and Lubeo, one of the Hanse towns. Ours are not far behind those of any country.

The Coming Mora.—Rev. J. S. C. Abbott concludes an article in the Congregationalist thus:

"History proves that nearly every war which has desolated our globe, has originated in the same cause which is now drenching our land in blood—the desire of the strong and the rich to live at the expense of the weak and the poor. The last conflict ended, and though there may be a lingering skirmish yet to come, we have essentially peace.

'Peace, and no longer from her brazen portals
The blast of war's loud organ shakes the skies,
But beautiful as songs of the immortals,
The holy melodies of love arise.'

Then comes the coronation of humanity. The long dark night of woe will disappear in the blaze of an endless morning."

An Act of Justice.—General Butler has made the following special order:

"It is made to appear to the Commanding General that Marcellin Soniat, an old soldier of the war of 1815, under Jackson, did not give up his arms under the general order No. 60, and has been sentenced by the provost court to imprisonment for thirty days, therefore, knowing the love an old soldier has for his arms, and believing that something is to be pardoned to that fond feeling, the sentence is remitted."

Prayer in the War.—Never before have so many earnest hearts been lifted in prayer, night and day, to the God of battles as now. Mothers praying for their sons, sisters for their brothers, wives for their husbands. Never in the thousands of Christian pulpits of the Free States has the Gospel been more earnestly, broadly and fervently preached than during the present moral crisis of the age. It is the testimony of many ministers that the exercise of public prayer in the sanctuary—prayer for the outpouring of God's Spirit upon the people, for victories to our armies, for the binding up of wounded hearts at home, for the sick languishing in hospitals, for the divine guidance of the President and all others in authority—never has been more unpressive, hearty and touching than in these very Sabbath days whose quietude has been disturbed by the echoes of war.

LATER FROM EUROPE.

GREAT BRITAIN.

The London Times says:

"The Emancipation Proclamation of President Lincoln as a political concession to the Abolition wing of the Republican party. When the Union existed, the Constitution gave no right, either to the President alone, or to the President and Congress combined, to abolish slavery. Emancipation was the thunderbolt placed in President Lincoln's hands to destroy the whole social organization of the South at a blow. It is a thunderbolt which President Lincoln has assumed the right to launch—but he is without the power to enforce his decree.

The North must conquer every square mile of the South before it can make the proclamation of more effect than mere waste paper. Commercial advices from New York show that there is a strong impression among the leading merchants that a termination of the war will ultimately occur from a financial crisis and confusion in the North."

FRANCE.

General Changarnier denies that President Lincoln has offered him the command of the Federal forces.

Vera Cruz letters give a different account of the state of affairs in Mexico from what the French papers have published.

Juarez is far from giving up the contest, and was preparing for a most desperate resistance to the French.

The city of Mexico is strongly fortified, and the road from Orizaba will be defended inch by inch.

The Paris Bourse was much excited, and the Rentes closed on the 7th instant at 75f., a decline of a half per cent.

ITALY.

The King has signed a decree granting an amnesty to all persons concerned in the acts and attempt at insurrection which took place lately in the Southern provinces, with the exception of the deserters from the Italian army.

Sicilians have been disarmed, in consequence of numerous assassinations.

PORTUGAL.

The new Queen, the daughter of King Victor Emanuel, had arrived at Lisbon.

SPAIN.

The Spanish "Escocheron" had been torn down in Mexico.

PRUSSIA.

The Crown Prince and Princess were to proceed on a tour through Switzerland and Italy.

The budget was still under consideration in the Berlin Chamber of Deputies.

The Hanoverian Government has declined to join in a treaty of commerce with France.

RUSSIA.

Zimoyski is banished from the whole kingdom of Russia.

While Garibaldi remains in confinement, pending his recovery and trial—if he is to be tried—the numerous meetings and several small actual insurrectionary movements throughout Italy, the voice of the press there, and other indications of an increasingly distinct and intense public sentiment, all signify that the Italian nation is filled with a settled and strong determination to possess Rome, and to possess it soon. It is probable that any open opposition to this national resolve would quite peril the authority of Victor Emmanuel.

A telegram, dated Sept. 2, from Alexandria to Paris, states that the Mohammedans have murdered the American Protestant Missionaries, Smith and Thompson, and their families. Lately an outbreak of fanatical outrages in that region, and troops have been sent from Aleppo to [illegible]

Married.

On the 12th instant, by Rev. Wm H Wheeler, Mr JAMES M. T. FIELDS to MISS AMANDA GREEN, all of Freehold, N. J.

On the 15th instant, by the Rev. M. Hirst, Dr J. H. WILLIS to MISS HARRIETTA V. S. GUY, of Washington, D. C.

The Social, Civil and Statistical Association, of The Colored People of Pennsylvania, open a subscription list to aid the freed men at Port Royal and other points where they may be located and respectfully ask the co-operation of the colored citizens and others in this city, or elsewhere, in money or clothing.

Any amount of value received will be acknowledged, with the name of the donor, in the Recorder, where a constant record will be kept.

Subscriptions may be sent to Joseph C. White, at the office of the Lebanon Cemetery, 711 Lombard Street, and also to William Still, 107 North Fifth Street, and to Rev. E. Weaver, 619 Pine Street.

PAID.

Statistical Society,	$30 00
Clayton Miller,	2 00
William Still,	5 00
Robert Adger,	2 00
Henry Minturn,	2 00
Catherine Johnson,	2 00
Vasti Locke,	2 00
Wm. Warricks,	2 00
Harriet Shorter,	1 00
Sarah S. Hawkins,	1 00
Rev. Jonathan C. Gibbs,	1 00
James P. Clay,	1 00
Benjamin F Hill,	3 00
S. M. S.,	2 00
Elizabeth Gordon,	1 00
P. J. Dreer,	5 00

It affords us pleasure to acknowledge the receipt of ten dollars, the proceeds of Miss Anna E. Dickinson's lecture at Concert Hall for the contrabands, contributed to the Soc. C. and Statis tical Association, to be applied as intended. WM STILL,

Cor. Sec. of S. C. and Statistical Association of the Colored People of Penna.

ADVERTISEMENTS.

MRS MARTHA COLLINS,

730 Russell Street, above Fitzwater.

Begs leave to inform her friends and the public generally, that she has opened an INFANT SCHOOL for Boys and Girls, to whom she will pay special attention in teaching the primary departments of Reading, Writing, and Arithmetic, also Singing, upon the most reasonable and accommodating terms. She does not hesitate to say that she will be able to please all who may give her a trail.

MRS. S. SHORTER HAWKINS'

DRY GOODS, HOSIERRY, AND TRIMMING STORE,

No. 615 LOMBARD STREET, PHILADELPHIA.

Mrs H calls the attention of her friends and patrons to a new stock of Fall and Winter Goods, consisting of Delaines, Calicoes, Flannels, Muslins, Drills, Shawls, Balmoral, and Hoop-Skirts.

N. B. Regalia and Dress Trimmings still on hand. All will be sold as near the old prices as possible. Call and see

PERRY & FITZGERALD'S

PROCESS FOR MAKING LIGHT, NUTRITIOUS, AND UNADULTERATED BREAD, WITHOUT FERMENTATION.

The new process of bread-making, patented by Perry A Fitzgerald, removes all the obstacles which have hitherto rendered it impossible to manufacture perfectly pure, sweet, and nutritious bread. The entire process is performed by mechanical means, and is eminently cleanly.

The process consists in mixing the flour in a closed vessel, and the application of pure carbonic gas, under pressure, by which the dough soon is made thoroughly light, and ready to be discharged into pans for baking, in the brief space of fifteen or twenty minutes. The "change" is exactly 20 y ards, and cork machine completes the operation, in all its details, from the putting in of the flour to the discharging of the dough, in from twenty five to forty minutes.

The invention of Perry & Fitzgerald effects a revolution in the preparation of bread, by establishing a system of wholesome means hitherto not subject to the vicissitudes and evils of fermentation, but exact and certain in its results—1 Because, by the substitution of mechanical for manual labor, and to the superior value of the articles produced, it provides a more profitable upon the capital employed. 2 Because such employment of capital as well as the protection afforded by the patent, gives adequate security against competition. But whilst preventing undue competition it produces none of the evils of a monopoly, because it leaves the consumer at all times in possession of his former means of supply, to be resorted to, should the monopolist become prejudicial.

The application of pure carbonic acid gas, under pressure, to a mechanically kneaded dough mass, as in the invention of Perry & Fitzgerald, is now for the first time effected, and we have had a clear foreshadowing of the importance of the artificial use of the gas, since he states, hypothetically, that "if water, highly impregnated with carbonic acid gas, be used for kneading the dough, the resulting bread will be somewhat spongy. Could a light article," he continues, "be produced in this way, then, as the sugar would remain undecomposed, the bread would be as much the sweeter and more nourishing."

What, to Dr. Dee, was evidently a clearly comprehended chemical truth, has been practically developed by the brilliant invention of Perry & Fitzgerald. Formerly this field under seance in practical remembrance, as one of the most eminent benefactors of mankind.

IV. Its Wholesomeness.—Being free from the deleterious substances which are the product of fermentation, or chemical operations, by the old modes, the bread made by the Perry Process is easy of digestion, and agrees with the most delicate stomach. "Dyspepsia," says Dr. Dee, (late of the N. Y. Medical College,) "it will be invariable, as they will be able to use it when the fermented manufactured bread has been found to have signally failed on an infinite class."—Says the London Medical Times and Gazette:

"Since the introduction of the new unfermented bread, there have already been received from members of the medical profession, who have recommended it in their practice, as well as from non-professional sources, accounts of the really astonishing results that have followed its use in cases of deranged digestion and constitution. Many persons have reported their recovery to health, after years of suffering and misery, by the simple use of the bread as a diet. Many must have also been reported by medical men of position, in which extreme distress of stomach complaint, which had remained intractable under every kind of treatment, have yielded as if by magic, almost immediately after adopting the use of the unfermented bread."

"The beneficial effects of the new bread are attributable to two causes. The one is the absence of the prejudicial matters imparted to ordinary bread by the presence of fermentation, and the other is the presence in the bread, unchanged, of those elements which are the essential agents of digestion and assimilation."

The most eminent members of the medical profession, both in Great Britain and in the United States, not only speak in the highest terms of the ease with which it is digested and of its rich, nourishing qualities, but especially of its peculiar palatableness, and wonderful keeping properties. The absence of acidity and other strong flavors, which, in a greater or less degree, are characteristic of fermented bread, renders the new bread peculiarly delicate to the taste.

V. Its Economy.—By the use of mechanical means, instead of manual labor, a barrel of flour is converted into baked loaves in forty-five minutes; whereas, by the ordinary process, four or five hours are occupied in the formation of the "sponge," and a further time in kneading, raising, and baking the dough.

"The conditions of the consumption of bread," says a correspondent of the Journal of the Society of Arts, "renders it an article peculiarly suitable to be prepared and supplied by a public company. And since the new process removes all the objections of many persons, and the expenses of the machinery gives a comparative monopoly, the supply of bread is placed at once in the same category with gas, water, or other articles of prime necessity."

VAN RIPER & CAMP,

EXCLUSIVE MANUFACTURERS,

Corner of Broad and Buttonwood Streets,

PHILADELPHIA.

TO THE FRIENDS

OF

OUR PATRIOT DEAD.

Repeated applications having been made to the subscriber to establish a branch of his business in the vicinity of the late battle-fields, with a view of reducing the cost of bringing home the bodies of the dead, he respectfully announces that he has now established a branch at HAGERSTOWN, Md., and is prepared to attend to the business at greatly reduced rates. Orders from a distance promptly attended to.

The Burial Casket

furnished by me is equal to any other in use with regard to security, economy, and entire absence of any of the unpleasant circumstance which generally surround similar articles. Wherever used it has given entire satisfaction, and the subscriber challenges comparison with any Casket now before the public.

Much complaint has been made of the extortionate prices charged by unprincipled men engaged in this business, which the subscriber will honestly avoid,

JOHN GOOD, Undertaker.

No. 921 Spruce Street, Philadelphia.

ALGER'S PRONOUNCING BIBLE

922 Pages, Octavo. Price—$1 25. With Metrical Psalms, One dollar and Thirty-one cents.

Published by WILLIAM B. YOUNG,

1023, Race Street, Phila.

Or, WM. S. RENTOUL, 20 St. Clair Street, Pittsburgh.

A SERMON

ON

SECRET SOCIETIES.

Preached in Portland, Oregon, October 21, 1860. By Rev. P. B. Chamberlain, pastor of the First Congregational Church. Third edition. Price 10 cents.—$1 00 per dozen, $7.00 per 100. Will be sent by mail, on receipt of the money and direction. Wm. S Young, No 023 Race street, Philadelphia

T. B. KNIGHT,

PAPER WAREHOUSE,

No. 523 COMMERCE STREET, PHILADELPHIA.

☞ Particular attention given to orders for Printing Paper aug 9.

WILLIAM B. YOUNG.

STEAM POWER PRESS

Book, Job and Newspaper

Printing Office,

No. 82 NORTH SIXTH STREET,

PHILADELPHIA.

Advertisements.

THE DAUGHTERS OF HOPE GRAND UNION Temperance Society met, it being the thirteenth convention, April 10th, 1861. Representatives from Lodges are as follows:—

From Garnet Union No 4, D. of T., from Phœnix Union, No 8, D of T., from Northern Union, No. 16, D. of T.; Wash's Union, of Chambersburgh, Pa.; from Dr Rice Union, of Carlisle, Pa.; from Mount Olive Union, No. 19, D. of T.; from Vanbrakle Union, No. 14, D. of T., of Norristown, Pa

Officers installed to their several positions are as follows:—

Grand P., Sister Bennet, Grand Associate, Sister Burris; Grand Treasurer, Sister Fawcett; Grand Conductress, C. Thompson; Grand Sentinel, A. E. Dubhart; Grand Chaplain, Sister Hall

G. P. P., Sister E. ROBERTS, G. P. P Sister ANDERSON, " " E. BOWEN, " " J. P BLACK, " " M. H. [illegible], " " E. A CLARK, " " S NEWMAN, " " WHITE, " " S. DAVIS. " " S HALL.

THE DAUGHTERS OF CORNISH SOCIETY.

The STATED QUARTERLY MEETING of the Society are held on the first Wednesdays of February, May, August, and November.

The meeting of the Board are held on the Wednesday previous to the regular stated meetings of the society.

MRS SARAH CARTER,

President.

Mr. L. S. SEYMOUR, Sec'y.

THE BOOK DEPOSITORY

OF THE

AFRICAN M. E. CHURCH,

No. 619 Pine Street,

PHILADELPHIA

We keep on hand, in connexion with our other books Sabbath school books of various kinds: Question Books; Catechisms, Nos. 1, 2, and 3. We have a good assortment of such books as are generally used in the Public Schools. Also, Stationery, inks, Pens, Paper, Envelopes and Blank Books.

THE DEATH-BED OF THE REV. JOHN WESLEY.

Wanted Canvassing Agents for the splendid large engraving, how it should be in every house of all denomination of that great and good man. The most liberal inducements offered to those selling this print. Send for circulars and terms to

WM. SMITH, Printer,

702 South Third Street, Philadelphia.

WANTED.—The charge of a Public School. Reference as to ability can be given. Apply to

J. W. A., 1641 Helmuth St.

ONE-PRICE CLOTHING,

OF THE LATEST STYLES,

Made in the Best Manner, expressly for RETAIL SALES Lowest Selling Prices marked in Plain Figures. All Goods made to order warranted satisfactory. One One-Price System is strictly adhered to. All are thereby treated alike. JONES & CO.,

Dec 25 1y 604 MARKET STREET

GOOD NEWS

To Tailors, Dress-makers, and to those wishing to be such. Also to owners of sewing [illegible] or tailors and large families, for in one day by practice learn to cut and make Pants, Vests, Jackets, Boys and Men's Coats and Overcoats, perfectly. Ladies Dresses, Boys' and Men's

Local and Traveling Agents Wanted.

Address REV. WM BRADLEY,

Carversville, Bucks Co., Pa.

Or, apply to Mrs. Mary C. Weaver, (wife of the Editor of this paper) 619 Pine St., Philada., Pa. June 12—1y

JAMES DOWNS,

DEALER IN

NEW AND SECOND HAND

CLOTHING,

No 225 South Second Street,

No. 17—3mo. PHILADELPHIA.

WILLIAM STILL'S

STOVE STORE,

107 NORTH FIFTH STREET, PHILADELPHIA.

The subscriber would respectfully inform his friends and all in want of good stoves, that he has now on hand a general variety of excellent PARLOR, COOK and CHAMBER STOVES, including Gas-burning, as well as other patterns, which he is selling at very low rates. He buys entirely for cash, of the best wholesale founders, and of course can sell much cheaper than those buying on the usual credit system. At any rate his friends are invited to give him a call and examine for themselves before purchasing elsewhere, as he feels that they would be convinced that it would be to their interest to give him their patronage. Coal orders constantly on hand.

WM. STILL.

JOSEPH H. COLE,

CONTINENTAL RESTAURANT,

NO. 717 LOMBARD STREET, PHILA.,

(Above Seventh St., under Philadelphia Institute,)

Where he continues to keep always on hand the very best assortment of OYSTERS and other refreshments—hoping that all his friends and the public in general will favor him with their patronage.

☞ Meals served at all hours. Families supplied with Oysters of the best quality and flavor at the shortest notice

☞ Also, public and private waiting done on the most reasonable terms. 1y.

MISS JANE JOHNSON,

Respectfully informs her friends and the public, that she continues laying out and shrouding the dead,

☞ All orders will be immediately attended to.

RESIDENCE,

618 South 8th St

"UNION COTTAGE,"

ATLANTIC CITY, NEAR THE INLET.

The subscriber will always be happy to welcome his numerous friends, and the public in general.

TERMS

Board per week,	$6 00
" " day,	1 25
Single meals,	50

S. H. WALLS, Proprietress.

BOARDING

IN BROOKLYN.

MRS. S. PLANT (formerly Richardson) respectfully announces that she has opened a first-class BOARDING & LODGING HOUSE at No. 97 HOYT STREET, Brooklyn—where she is prepared to accommodate the public on the most reasonable terms

Her house being located in a very pleasant part of the city, and within five minutes' walk of Fulton Ferry, is made thus a very desirable and convenient place.

BOARDING.

Mrs. AMIA WILLIAM, of Cape May, will open the Banker House for the season, for the accommodation of all who wish to spend the season there, and she will spare no pains to make all comfortable. Those wishing to spend one, two, or three days, will find the Banker House the right spot. Prices very reasonable. 1sep6

COAL, STOVES, &c., &c.

The subscriber respectfully informs his friends and the public generally, that he has taken the store,

NO. 107 NORTH FIFTH STREET,

formerly occupied as the Anti-Slavery Office, (where he has been engaged for the last fourteen years,) to occupy it henceforth as a place of business for the sale of

COAL, STOVES, &c.

Having made arrangements with one of the first Coal Dealers in the city, to furnish the best qualities of Lehigh, Schuylkill, &c., at the lowest Cash prices, he hopes to give full satisfaction in this branch of his business

He will also keep constantly on hand a general assortment of good NEW and SECOND-HAND STOVES, FURNACES, &c

Persons wishing Stoves taken down, stored away, put up, or cleaned, can be promptly accommodated by applying as above.

He hopes by energy and strict attention to business to obtain a fair share of patronage.

WM. STILL,

107 North Fifth Street, Philadelphia

REFERENCES.

J. M. McKim,	Dr Casper Wistar,
Samuel Rhoads,	James Mott,
Dillwyn Parrish,	Thomas Williamson,
Prof. C. D Cleveland	W. H. Furness.

WANTED,

One or two respectable colored men in a quiet and respectable family to lodge where they can secure all the comforts of a home, with a furnished room.

INQUIRY,

No 424 South 7th St., Phila.

REV LEWIS S. LEWIS'

FAMILY LINIMENT

IS PREPARED WITH GREAT CARE,

EXPRESSLY FOR FAMILY USE.

Its composition is very simple, containing nothing that is injurious in any form, and there is no danger in its use from exposure to the weather. No family should be without it. Having a wish to benefit mankind in general, and those afflicted in particular—and having had recourse to the article in several cases of rheumatism, bunions, chilblains, and other lameness, it proving to be a remedy in every case—I therefore recommend it to the public.

CERTIFICATES

PROVIDENCE, R. I., Nov 27, 1861

Rev. L. S. LEWIS—Dear Sir: I have been afflicted with the rheumatism eleven years, during which time I tried almost everything, but received no cure relief. For the last four months my limbs and joints were so swollen, that at times I could not walk or use my slippers. I procured a bottle of your Liniment, and at the first application was instantly relieved. After using one or two bottles, I was enabled to enjoy the free use of my limbs. Rev. GEORGE A. RUE

NEWPORT, R. I., October 29, 1861.

Rev. L. S. LEWIS—Dear Sir: I have been affected for a number of years, more or less, with a pain and weakness in my chest, arising from some cause unknown to me. I made two applications of your Liniment, and was relieved. I was attacked with the diphtheria, and was cured by using your Liniment. Its worth has proved itself ten times its cost. ANTHONY RANDOLPH

NEWPORT, R. I., Nov. 19, 1861

Rev. L. S. LEWIS—Dear Sir: I have been cured of suffering in my joints by using your Liniment. I recommend it to all who are thus troubled. RICHARD WHITE.

NEWPORT, R.

WHEN THE GREAT REBELLION'S OVER.

Clemmie the baby on her knee,
Was [illegible]
Pulled [illegible]
"When will papa come to me?"
"Papa!" and the mother cried—
"Papa! ah! the naughty river!
Sweet, my pet, he'll come in thee
When the great rebellion's over!"

"Mamma once had rosy cheeks,
Danced and sang a merry tune;
Now she rocks me in the moon,
Sits and sighs, but scarcely speaks."
Sad the smile the mother wore—
"Sweet, mamma has lost her lover,
She will blush and sing us more
Till the great rebellion's over!

"Till the bush of peace shall come,
Like a quiet fall of snow,
And the merry troops shall go
Marching back to hearts at home—"
"Papa—home!" the baby lisped,
Balmy-breath'd as summer clover,
"Yes, my darling, home at last,
And the sad rebellion over!"

Entered at the open door,
While the mother soothed her child,
One who neither spoke nor smiled,
Standing on the sunny floor.
Wistful eyes met mournful eyes,
Hope took flight, like airy plover;
'Ah! poor heart, thou'lt wait in vain
Till the great rebellion's over!

Heart, poor heart! too weak to save,
Vain your tears—your longings vain—
Summer winds and summer rain
Beat already on his grave!
From the flag upon his breast,
(Truer breast it never shelter'd)
From its mouldering colors, wet
With his blood, shall springs beget
Lily, rose, and violet,
And a wreath of purple clover,
With the flag upon his breast,
They have hid away your lover—
Weep not! wail not! let him rest,
Having bravely stood the test,
He shall rank among the blest,
When the great rebellion's over.

Methodist

LITTLE FEET.

Up with the sun at morning,
Away to the garden he hies,
To see if the sleepy blossoms
Have begun to open their eyes.
Running a race with the wind,
With a step as light and fleet,
Under my window I hear
The patter of little feet.

This child is our "speaking picture,"
A birding that chatters and sings.
Sometimes a sleeping cherub—
(Our other one has wings.)
His heart is a charmed casket,
Full of all that's cunning and sweet,
And on harp-strings laid such music
As follow the twinkling feet.

When the glory of sunset opens
The highway by angels trod,
And seams to unbar the city
Whose Builder and Maker is God,
Close to the crystal portal,
I see by the gates of pearl
The eyes of our other angel—
A twin-born little girl.

And I asked to be taught and directed
To guide his footsteps aright,
So that I be accounted worthy
To walk in the sandals of light,
And hear, amid songs of welcome
From messengers trusty and fleet,
On the starry floor of heaven
The patter of little feet.

CHANGE OF HABITS IN OLD AGE.

A man may change his mode of life as long as he is on the youthful side of middle life; the meridian line once passed, all such radical change is attended with the peril of death. Have you never noticed in burying-grounds, or in the necrological columns of newspapers, how often husband follows wife or wife husband, with brief intervals of time between their departure, when they have long lived together? The age-worn constitution is unable to react against the bereavement and to adapt itself to the new circumstances in which it is placed. The usual form in which death invades the body of these aged persons demonstrates this truth; for they die either of apoplexy or of paralysis of the brain. The mind, shrinking instinctively from death, exerts all its powers of recovery to rally after the blow received; the exertion is too much for it, 'tis shattered by the very attempt. There used to be an old diplomatist here, Count de Lowenhelm, from Sweden, who represented the court of Stockholm near the Tuilleries for nigh fifty years. He was a well-preserved old man, an habitual frequenter of the Grand Opera and French Comedy, going constantly into society, and never absent from a single court-ball. The Crimean war gave unusual importance to the diplomatic relation of the two courts, and it became necessary to appoint a more active man to the Swedish Legation here. The old minister seemed to grow older every hour after the newspaper recorded the appointment of his successor. He roamed about the lobbies of the Grand Opera and the French Comedy like a person lost in the woods. He went to Stockholm, and fell dead of apoplexy a few days after his arrival. His letters of recall were his death-warrant. Have you never heard the vulgar remark that the builder of a house dies almost as soon as the house is completed? The observation has some foundation in truth, but the cause of the [illegible] is not "luck," it is this very inability of the aged mind to react against old habits lost. Men rarely build houses until they have amassed something like independence of fortune; in other words, they are generally in the afternoon of life, and they build the house for a harbor from the cares of business, where they may twirl their thumbs and "enjoy life" by oppressing themselves with idleness. As long as the house is building, all goes well; they don't miss the absent shop or counting-room. There is the bricklayer to be scolded and the carpenter to be overlooked, and discussions to be held with the architect, and money to be paid out; in fine, there is something to think about, something to worry over, something to fret about; it is the old round of life in miniature if you will, but still it is the old round which has been paced for forty years. But when the house is complete, when the last coat of paint has dried, and the last chip has been removed, and the bit of mortar taken away, when the owner has nothing to do but to enjoy his fine house and his affluent fortune, then comes—the vacuum—nothing to do. The old man finds years have not changed his mind as much as they have changed his body, and the toy tires the old man even sooner than it tired the child. There is no correlation between building a house and death, but there is a close connection between age and change of life.

Spirition.

GENTLE WORDS.

"O germ! O fount! O word of love!
O thought at random cast!
Ye were but little at the first,
But mighty at the last."—Mahmay.

A correct idea of the power of language is seldom entertained. Many of us forget that our conversation, yea, almost every word we utter, exercised a mighty and a lasting influence. We who are Christians, fail to realize the great amount of moral power we might exert by the loving use of encouraging words. We are prone to distrust and shun the penitent prodigate, and too apt to turn the "cold shoulder" on the church member who once yielded to temptation, but who is now confessing his sin, and seeking the forgiveness and favor of God. This course is contrary to the spirit of the Gospel, and to the example of our blessed Saviour. "Neither do I condemn thee; go and sin no more," were the gracious words that fell from the lips of Jesus, like heavenly music, on the ear of the penitent. We who are too conscious, forget our own liability to fall, and remember not the apostle's injunction—"Brethren, if a man be overtaken in a fault, ye who are spiritual, restore such a one in the spirit of meekness, considering thyself, lest thou also be tempted."

We may foster good resolutions to a struggling heart by a single word fitly spoken. Sunshine and dew are not greater blessings to the drooping flower than smiles and gentle words of hope and love to the tempted soul. On the other hand, how many spirits emerging from the [illegible] error and sin into an atmosphere faintly illuminated by the first rays of truth and holiness—how many spirits beginning to aspire Godward, have been astonished and wounded by harsh or thoughtless words from an ill-tempered, morose Christian. An ill-tempered, morose Christian. What a contradiction of terms!

Speak gently for an angry word
May [illegible]
And a [illegible]
Amongst [illegible]

Let gentle words—words of [illegible] encouragement, faith, and love,—fall ever from our lips. Jesus will smile upon them, and they will be transforming influences of spiritual sunshine. Our souls will then be fountains, our lips outlets, and our words beams of heavenly love and light. Our own hearts will be cheered, enabled, and purified while many among the redeemed in time and eternity, will bless the Lord, that he gave us souls in which Christian thoughts were conceived, and tongues that uttered gentle words.

Speak gently, like the morning dew
Thy words will rise and shed
From on the [illegible]
Of blessings on thy head.

Thus thou may'st cheer a drooping soul
For whom thy Saviour died,
And shed a thought of [illegible]
Thus cheer'st the Christian.

CHINESE CUSTOMS ILLUSTRATIVE OF SCRIPTURE.

The subject has been started by some one, whether the Chinese are not, some of them, the descendants of the ten lost tribes of Israel. I know one missionary who, several years ago, stoutly maintained that the Chinese were the descendants of Abraham by Keturah. I have never seen sufficient reason to adopt the latter nor the former theory. There are, however, many customs now prevalent among this people, which bear a very striking resemblance to customs which are referred to in the Bible. Some of these I propose to mention.

I propose to prefix to each custom described, a passage of Scripture, or to refer to one or more verses. Let not the reader, therefore, infer, that the Chinese custom illustrates the Scripture passage. In some instances there may be a very great similarity between the customs described and the customs referred to, as once prevalent in the land of Judea, or adjacent countries; in other cases there will be a very great dissimilarity. Perhaps the manifest dissimilarities are as worthy of being noted as are the marked coincidences.

1. And he asked for a writing table.—Luke 1 63. The Chinese have boards of various sizes and thickness, painted white, which they often use to write upon—much as in some Western lands the slate is used. Pupils in schools use such boards, of only about half an inch thick, and six or eight inches long, by four or five wide, on which they practise writing the Chinese character. They are not unfrequently found in private houses. In offices, shops, &c., they are found suspended from the walls, several feet long and two or three feet broad, used for noting down items for reference, or for advertising the prices of goods, &c. The characters, whether written in red or black ink, are removed by the application of a wet cloth, or wet paper. A board covered with a thin coating of metal, like tin, is more adapted for expeditious use, but the painted board is much more common, perhaps because cheaper.

2. And Laban gave to Rachel his daughter, Hilhah, his handmaid, to be her maid.—Gen. xxxix. 29. The custom prevails extensively here, and probably in other parts of China among wealthy families, of giving a female slave to a daughter on the occasion of her marriage. Sometimes two female slaves are given, or sometimes, though rarely, one female slave, and one male slave. Male slaves are very seldom found in this part of China. These slaves are all Chinese, and are bought with money when quite young, and usually brought up in the family with their future mistress. Some rich families, it is said, not unfrequently have some ten or fifteen maid servants; and when a daughter is married, she is often allowed to take the one she likes the best. This female slave is generally treated more as a companion among the daughters in the family, than is usually regarded consistent with the relation of bond-women in Western lands, where slavery prevails. To say the least, there is not so much moral degradation (apart from heathenism) connected with female slaves in pagan China, as is often found in Christian America among the same class of slaves. Female slaves usually have their liberty given them, and are provided with husbands not very long subsequent to their becoming of marriageable age. Very seldom do they arrive at the age of twenty-five or thirty years of age unmarried.

3. Be shod with sandals.—Mark vi. 9. Travellers of the lower class, and the common porters and sedan bearers, found everywhere in the streets in this part of China, always wear straw shoes or sandals. They can walk easier in these sandals, and are not so liable to slip as with other kinds of shoes on their feet. There are many varieties of sandals, as regards quality, size and value. Those worn by coolies, or sedan bearers, cost only about one cent. They are made very coarsely out of common rice straw, braided or plaited together, in size large enough to cover the sole of the foot. They are fastened on by straw strings, or strings made of some other coarse material, passing up over the toes and heel, and to join the top of the foot, or around the ankle. There are other kinds manufactured out of a very tough kind of grass, or rush, in shape resembling a Chinese shoe, sometimes colored red, and of various sizes and prices, costing from a few cents to several shillings, or even a dollar per pair. These are often worn in houses by Chinese gentlemen.

Who had his dwelling among the tombs.—Mark v. 3. Coffins containing the remains of the dead, are most usually put under ground with considerable show of respect, in less than seventy days after death. Sometimes, however, proper burial places have not been secured, and in such cases the coffin is placed, temporarily, in a certain kind of house, or tomb above ground, erected for the purpose of holding such coffins. These houses are some eight or nine feet high, and eight or twelve feet long, and wide enough to hold a coffin. Their general appearance is like a diminutive dwelling-house without windows. Several coffins oftentimes are placed in one such dead house, or tomb above ground, where they remain till a suitable burial place has been secured, and till it is convenient to inter them in the usual manner. At the festival of the tombs, which generally falls in the month of April, it is the universal custom for the family to whom any coffin belongs, to send some one who hangs up strips of perforated yellow or white paper, representing money, for the spirits of the dead, to use in the future world, on the sides of the dead houses, or under their roof. Sometimes strips of the paper are put on the coffin by entering the door.

These tombs above ground, oftentimes become very much dilapidated, and the coffins sometimes are never removed and buried, either because the family to whom they belong has become very poor, or has become extinct, &c. In such cases, they are neglected, and the dead houses, or tombs, become the residence of beggars or of thieves, or afford a place where they pass the night, in seeking to avoid detection, or where they deposit their stolen goods. The houses belonging to respectable families, are attended to and repaired from time to time, and beggars, thieves, &c., are not allowed habitually to frequent them, and make their dwelling among those tombs, as did the man possessed with an evil spirit in the time of the Saviour.—Chinese Homily.

SINGULAR FACT.—One day last week, a flower resembling a full blown white rose, was picked up from an apple tree on the farm of Harlow Burghardt, in this town, on the road to Egremont. It was nearly two inches in diameter, and consisted of over a hundred leaves. The tree is loaded with small apples, and the singularity of the phenomenon is the subject of much foolish superstition.—Berkshire (Mass) Courier.

THE FIDGETY SUPERINTENDENT.

This person is constitutionally uneasy. He is in a row at home, at his place of business, and wherever else he goes. He never was thoughtfully calm for five minutes at a time. He unwittingly puts into a stew those with whom he associates or has business. It would be well if, in putting on his Sunday clothes, he could clothe himself with a garb of quiet dignity, but he cannot. So he brings his every-day manners and customs with him, as he comes to the discharge of his official duties in the Sunday School. His entrance into the school room introduces a general odor of disquietude and restlessness. He seems to have been chased by a dull razor, or bitten by a venomous [illegible]. Perfectly [illegible]. As he constantly bolts over on the subject of punctuality, he is careful not to be after the time for the opening of school. But he hurriedly bolts into the school just as the clock is on the strike, and as hurriedly arranges his affairs, so that the opening of the school may at once proceed.

His opening exercises are as when a jar of fermented preserves is opened. Great boisterous, little orderly profanity. His ways are different. Sometimes a hymn, a chapter, a prayer. Sometime a hymn, a prayer, a chapter. Sometimes no chapter, sometimes no prayer. Generally without the care in selection and arrangement which is desirable. Always lacking in that spirit of earnest devotion which should mark every religious exercise. The school is opened, or rather torn [illegible] in such a manner as to jar the religious feelings of all right-minded teachers; and the exercises of study are due. But the impetuous official has a notice to give, or a new regulation to announce. He rings the bell with violence, and failing to gain the attention he desires, thumps on the desk with a stick till enough noise is made to cause everybody to look and listen. The notice or regulation is an unimportant one, which might have been otherwise disposed of. The Library duties, contrived as awkwardly as possible, are then attended to. Five adjutant superintendents, under the name of secretaries, then march around, attending to the roll, which our fidgety friend might as well do himself, but for the fact that he does not see how one man can do so much work.

The school is fairly set in motion. Not the stately and dignified motion of the well freighted and balanced ocean steamer, but the nervous wriggling of the unballasted skiff, which a flaw of wind may upset at any moment. A constant buzz is heard when the superintendent moves around. Not, however, the buzz of the busy bee, children industriously studying and reciting; but something more like the buzzing of a family of hornets, as he goes from class to class, stimulating teachers and scholars with some over new species of worry. The boys are a special plague to him. The girls constantly minister to his vexation. As for his teachers, never were such an inefficient set known to be in any one school. The ventilating apparatus distresses him. The arrangement of the shutters and blinds requires his unremitting attention. He flutters at the stoves, and disturbs the school by making a noise with the poker. He bothers the librarian until that officer is on the point of resigning. The sexton is his natural enemy.

The fidgety superintendent has no lack of rules and regulations. In fact, he has too many; enough for several Sunday schools. He has so many that it is impossible to enforce a quarter of them. Some of them conflict with others. Most of them are the product of his own unassisted wisdom. Some of them have been extemporized for particular occasions. For instance, when a boy (not too able bodied) has behaved badly, the school is reminded of the rule that all such boys so behaving shall be made an example of, by being temporarily imprisoned in the coal cellar. With strong cries and great bustling, the evil doer is thus made an example of, the bigger boys wishing that he had tried it on them, that they might see whether boy or superintendent would go to that dimly lighted place of punishment. The school is thrown into confusion. Superintendent declares that among such a set it is impossible to keep order, and that the school is rapidly going to destruction. So it is. And if the teachers value the school and think it is worth saving, the best thing they can do is to call a special meeting, unanimously request Mr. Fidgety to consider himself put out, and then elect a wiser and more placid man in his place.—S. S. Times.

ABOUT FLIES.

Flies do not breathe, like men, through the mouth, but through a set of holes in the abdomen, called stigmata, or spiracles. By these, the air passes into beautifully constructed tubes, called tracheæ or wind-pipes. The spiracles are furnished with a curious contrivance to prevent dust from entering. The hole is closed by a sort of sieve or screen, which must be seen to be appreciated. A drawing gives you some idea of its nature, but the real thing is far better; and as not every one is up to such minute manipulation, recourse should be had to microscopic preparations, which are furnished at a reasonable rate by Amodio, of Throgmorton street, London, and other first-rate opticians. The fly supplies an interesting series of objects. Beside the compound eye, the antennæ, the foot, and the spiracles, the proboscis of a fly is a thing to wonder at. It is more complicated than the trunk of an elephant. A portion of this proboscis acts as a lip; in addition to its lancets, a fly has teeth—yes, real teeth, like notched chisels, and as plain as pike-staves, if you only know where to look for them.

With these claims on our interest, we can hardly be surprised that, in countries not too much infested with them, flies should have had their patrons and protectors. Not to mention the Indian hospital for insects, a compassionate damsel is described as delighted to Save drowning flies that float along the stream.

A toper invites a jolly fly to take a cheerful drop with him:

Eager, busy, curious fly,
Drink with me, and drink as I.

Uncle Toby had not the heart to extirpate on a fly. "Go," says he, one day at dinner, to an overgrown one which had tormented him cruelly all dinner-time. "Go," says he, lifting up the sash and opening his hand to let it escape; "get thee gone; why should I hurt thee? This world is surely wide enough to hold both thee and me."

PERSIAN window-glass, of which panes have been discovered as large as 20 by 28 inches, has proved, on examination, to have been cast in a manner similar to that now followed in making plate-glass, except that it was not rolled flat, as now, by metal cylinders; but pressed out with a wooden pallet, so that its thickness is not uniform.

NAKED ARMS AND NECK.

A distinguished physician, who died some years since in Paris, declared, "I believe that during the twenty-six years I have practised my profession in this city, twenty thousand children have been carried to the cemeteries, a sacrifice to the absurd custom of exposing their arms naked."

I have often thought if a mother were anxious to show the soft, white skin of her baby, and would cut a round hole in the little thing's dress, just over the heart, and then carry it about for observation by the company, it would do very little harm. But to expose the baby's arms, members so far removed from the heart, and with such feeble circulation at best, is a most pernicious practice.

Put the bulb of a thermometer in a baby's mouth, and the mercury rises to 99 degrees. Now carry the same to its little hand; if the arms be bare and the evening cool, the mercury will sink to forty degrees. Of course all the blood which flows through those arms must fall from 2 to 59 degrees below the temperature of the heart.

Now I say when these currents of blood flow back into the chest, the child's general vitality must be more or less compromised? And now I add that we ought not to be surprised at its frequent recurring affection of the [illegible] throat or stomach.

I have seen more than one child with habitual cough and hoarseness, or choking with mucus, entirely and permanently relieved by simply keeping the [illegible] heart warm. Every evening, [illegible] plunges his little opportunity in with the same [illegible]. Hygienic.

WASHINGTON IRVING IN EUROPE.

The second volume of the life of Washington Irving includes the greater part of the period of his residence in Europe. His Knickerbocker's New York and Sketch Book had been published, and had proved successful. He had grown into high favor with English men by means of qualities in his writings which could not but endear him to them, heightened, as their effect must have been, by the agreeable surprise that an American should have acquitted himself so creditably. He soon found a place in the most polished literary and social circles in the kingdom. He shortly appears on intimate terms with Leslie and Newton, the artists, and with Scott, and Moore, and Rogers, and others whose names hold a prominent position in the catalogue of celebrities. His account of his introduction to Rogers is quite amusing, exhibiting some of the most marked characteristics of the banker-poet.

The introduction took place at a dinner at Lord Spencer's, at Wimbledon. Rogers "received him with the hearty cordiality of an old friend. Irving was overrun with invitations from many of whom he knew nothing. Rogers cautioned him to be on his guard, or the common place would hunt him down. 'Show me your invitations,' said he, 'and I will give you a hint or two. This accept,' to one, 'that decline,' to another; to a third, 'this man avoid by all means; oh! he's a direful bore.'"

The essays composing the Sketch Book, Bracebridge Hall, etc., are but relieves of his daily life during the period to which they were composed. The story of the Stout Gentleman is said by Leslie to have had its origin in a rainy Sunday which the two were compelled to spend in a hotel at Oxford. "It rained incessantly, and we were confined to the inn, like the nervous traveller whom Irving has described as spending a day in endeavoring to penetrate the mystery of the stout gentleman. The next morning, as we mounted the coach, I said something about a stout gentleman who had come from London with us the day before, and Irving remarked that 'The Stout Gentleman' would not be a bad title for a tale. As soon as the coach stopped, he began writing with his pencil, and went on at every like opportunity." Apropos to the stout gentleman, the author gives us the following anecdote:—

"I was once reading aloud in his presence, a very flattering review of his works which had been sent him by the Critic in 1848, and smiled as I came to this sentence: 'His most comical pieces have always a serious end in view.' 'You laugh,' said he, with that air of whimsical significance so natural to him, 'but it is true. I have kept that to myself hitherto, but that man has found me out. He has detected the moral of the stout gentleman.'

The idea of the Tales of a Traveller was conceived at the Hotel de Darmstadt, Mayence, whence the essays profess to have been dated. Here he met several officers, of various nationalities, who exhibited strongly marked characteristics, and were full of conversation, to which, doubtless, he was indebted for many an incident afterwards woven into his delightful work. Here also he found the valuable Katrine, of whom he makes so sweet a heroine.

The Conquest of Granada and the Alhambra were written as relaxations from graver duties during his residence in Spain, the scene of the romantic events he describes, and chiefly in the Alhambra itself. Here he made his abode for several weeks, having the complete range of the whole place. He would "breakfast in the Court of the Lions, or the Saloon of the Ambassadors, or would stroll about the courts, and gardens, and arcades, day or night, with nothing but bats and owls to keep him company."

"It absolutely appears," he would say, "to me like a dream; or as if I am spell bound in some fairy palace." How perfectly does his book reflect these scenes and the feelings to which they gave birth!—Methodist.

USES OF THE BOOK-HUNTER.

It will serve to secure for the race of book-hunters some kindly consideration at the hands of Christian men, to know that their pursuit has kept for us rare editions of the Holy Scriptures, and assisted thus to preserve the purity and correctness of the sacred text. We suppose that there have been very few editions of the Bible published, of which some copies are not to be found, either in private collections or public libraries. The book-hunter's curiosity has scented them out in strange places, and while the edition to which they belonged has perished in the using, they remain for the scholars, critics, and proof-readers, of succeeding generations. It serves also to exemplify the imperial rule of the Bible, its power to command into its service the labors of widely different men, and to make them instruments in its perpetuation and diffusion, to see a class of men, whose pursuit is but a fancy or a freak, becoming in time a passion, thus made to be keepers and guards of the Book whose words are to endure when every other book shall have perished, and the great libraries of the world become rubbish.

"IMITATION OF CHRIST."

Of all the uninspired books in the world, none has been so often reprinted; none has been translated into so many languages, as that entitled, "The Imitation of Christ." It is believed that there has been more than two thousand editions of the original Latin, not less than one thousand of the French translation. It first appeared about the year 1415, and came rapidly into general circulation. The authorship of this remarkable devotional work is still unsettled. It is commonly ascribed to Thomas a Kempis, or Thomas Hamerken, of Kempen, a small town in Rhenish Prussia, about twenty miles north-west of Dusseldorf. He was born about 1380, lived a monk, and died in 1471, in the Augustine convent of Mount St. Agnes, near the town of Zoolle, in the Netherlands. The book appears to have been circulated at first without the name of the author. Many of the oldest manuscripts of it bear the name of Thomas a Kempis, and two of them were written with his own hand. John Busch, a contemporary of Thomas, and a brother of the same monastic order, ascribes the work to him. It is also attributed to him by two or three other writers, who lived in the same century. The style, too, in the opinion of such scholars as Gieseler and Milman, confirms the tradition which ascribes the work to Thomas. Still, the authorship was early and long a matter of earnest controversy. "Whole orders of monks, and whole nations," says Hase, "have contended respecting the author of this work." The work is ascribed to John Gerson, the learned Chancellor of the University of Paris, in a manuscript as early as 1563. The editor of the French translation, published in 1488, says it is doubtful whether to ascribe it to Gerson or to St Bernard. It has also been imputed to John Gerson, who was the Abbot of a Benedictine convent at Vercelli, in the first half of the thirteenth century. The controversy became so warm between two rival orders of monks, that the Parliament of Paris, in 1602, to put an end to the strife, decreed that the book should henceforth be printed with the name of Thomas a Kempis. We suppose that there is really very little reason to doubt that he is the author of the work; but the long and impassioned controversy upon the subject shows how greatly the book was esteemed, and how anxious the various disputants were to establish the claims of their particular party, or favorite writer to the authorship.—Watchman and Reflector.

A NEW PLANET.—A new planet was discovered by Dr Robert Luther, Director of the Observatory at Bilk, Germany, on the evening of August 31st. It was situated in right Ascension three degrees, and declination two degrees north. It was equal in brilliancy to a star of the eleventh magnitude. Dr Luther has devoted many years to the discovery of these bodies, and during that time has discovered twice as many as was known to exist at the beginning of the present century.

An Irish tailor making a gentleman's coat and vest too small, was ordered to take them home and alter them out. Some days after the old man was told that his garments happened to fit a countryman of his, and he had let them out at a shilling a week.

Family Circle.

AFTER ALL.

The apples are ripe in the orchard,
And the work of the reaper is done,
And the golden wood-nuds redden
In the hood of the dying sun.

At the cottage door the grandsire
Sits pale in his easy chair,
While the gentle wind of twilight
Plays with his silver hair.

A woman is kneeling beside him,
A fair young head is prest,
In the first wild passion of sorrow,
Against his aged breast.

And far from over the distance
The faltering echoes come
Of the flying blast of trumpet
And the rattling roll of drum.

And the grandsire speaks in a whisper—
"The end no man can see;
But we give him to his country,
And we give our prayers to Thee."

The violets star the meadows,
The rose-buds fringe the door,
And over the grassy orchard
The pink-white blossoms pour.

But the grandsire's chair is empty,
The cottage is dark and still—
There's a nameless grave in the battle-field,
And a new one under the hill.

And a pallid, tearless woman
By the cold hearth sits alone,
And the old clock in the corner
Ticks on with a steady drone.

Vanity Fair. WILLIAM WINTER.

A FLYING SQUIRREL IN THE HOUSE.

One bright morning in May a singular pet came to us in a singular manner. One of the girls, while sweeping the sitting-room, heard a slight scratching behind the fire-screen. Feeling some curiosity to know the cause, she removed the screen, and out into the middle of the room darted a—flying squirrel. He seemed a little bewildered at his new position, and ran about the room, examining the furniture with great attention.

He had delicate fur of a soft gray color, and very bright black eyes. His wings were membranes, with but little fur upon them. He had evidently darted from a tree near the house into the chimney, which he thought to explore, and thus unexpectedly found himself a guest in our household.

We were very much amused in watching his tricks. He scaled the mantel-piece, examined the clock admiringly, raised himself up to peep into a mug or vase, and then with a sudden flight reached the floor again.

A little dish of corn, another of bread-crumbs, and a third of water, were placed upon the mantel. He accepted this hospitality quite as a matter of course.

He slept nearly all the day, and played all the evening, and probably all the night. During his stay with us, he showed not the slightest fear of any one, although it was evidently his first acquaintance with human beings. His associates had been of the woods—fellow-squirrels and brown robins. He had never heard the voices of any but chattering wrens, or carolling blue-birds; but with an entire trust in mankind, he relied upon the kindness of all for safety. He certainly showed a very unworldly spirit.

His favorite amusement of an evening was to climb up the muslin curtain, by clinging with his sharp claws, as he used his wings only in coming from a height. Having reached the top, he would spread his wings and slight in the middle of the room; then return and repeat the game for an hour or more at a time.

As so much of his time was passed in sleeping, he was quite particular about his selection of a sleeping-place. He chose first to nestle beneath the chintz cover of the lounge, or under a cushion. One day an overcoat having been left across the arm of the lounge, he crept into one of its pockets, and frequently, when the owner of the coat caught it up hastily, he was warned by a weight in pocket or sleeve, that the garment was already in use.

THE BABY.

The baby rules everybody in the house—issues her mandates in the feeblest of voices—yet all hasten to interpret her wishes. It matters not that they may be expressed in the most unintelligible of dialects, every one intuitively wise meaning, and watches with the intensest interest for the next utterance. Even papa is vanquished by baby's feeble cry, and when she stretches out her arms to go to him, he is prouder, happier far, than when news of gain, by sea or land, quickens ambition, but still's the gentler voices of his soul, the music tones of humanity.

Is baby asleep? Then is the household hushed, and the mother, as she sits by its side, sewing and occasionally rocking the cradle with her foot, is most truly the "guardian angel" of its happiness, and the smiles that flit across its innocent face might well be the reflections of her own love-lighted beauty.

Is baby sick? How dull and dark seems the dwelling: how envied the mother, because she only can soothe the little sufferer and hush that plaintive moaning; and if baby dies, how silently and shiveringly do the household gather round the family hearth, whence the light is departed and the fire seems quenched. Those who say it was only a baby never knew how the tendrils of affection twine round the innocent helplessness, which we would fain guard from sorrow, and develop into the full maturity of truth and beauty. Such never knew how that tiny touch can magnetise into forgetfulness the pain of care; how the thought that upon that mind is yet unwritten the consequences of sin, makes us emulate ourselves, in the desire to throw upon its impressive nature the light of a holy life; and how the wondrous mystery of its unfolding life sends us to the Mercy Seat, seeking the wisdom that cometh from above, that we may train the child for God.

M.

THE WISE GOOSE.

It was in vain the sun shone over head, and earth spread her many-colored carpet under foot, while music and perfume filled the soft, summer air. None of the season's sweet charms could gladden the heart of young mother-goose, as she stood amidst her pretty brood of goslings, looking sadly from one to another, as they contentedly nibbled the tender grass at their feet.

"Why, wifey, what's the matter?" inquired the gander, suddenly looking up from the repast which he, too, was enjoying. "You are the picture of care," he said, approaching her side—"won't you confide your trouble to me, dear?"

"I am thinking," said the goose, with a deep sigh, "of the doom which awaits these little innocents—the knife, the spit, the table!" and she thrust her head under her wing and wept.

"Come, come," said the gander, "you must not give way to such gloomy thoughts. Even though it is the doom of our race to be food for man, we are not the only creatures so doomed. All the birds in the barn yard are as liable to the knife and table as we, and yet they do not allow the thought to interfere with their happiness."

"Nor did it interfere with mine while I had only myself to think of," murmured the goose; "but now, as I look on my precious brood, a knowledge of what they are born to fills me with sorrow."

Thus, wiping her eyes with the feathers of her breast, the goose looked up at her husband.

"Nor do I see," she said, "how it mitigates the wrong of our race that all the birds of the barn-yard are alike devoted. Look at our beautiful goslings, with their straight legs, arched necks, and green and yellow down—are they not of a class far above the common fowls of the barn-yard? The first wrong done us, was placing our family in the barn-yard at all. Our place should have been in the pleasure grounds, with that pretty pond to sport in—it grieves me to see it monopolized by those haughty swans. We are as handsome as they, and our goslings are far prettier than their cygnets. Oh! it is for my goslings I care!" And again the poor goose thrust her head under her wing and wept.

The gander tried to soothe his disconsolate mate, but in vain. Visions of the knife, the spit, the table, had filled her imagination, and the more happy and engaging her little brood appeared, the more painful her anticipations of their cruel doom.

But while this scene was enacting between the parent geese, one of the goslings happened to be near enough to hear every word that was said, and, though she could not fully understand the subject under discussion, she saw that her mother was unhappy in consequence of some evil which their race endured, and from which there seemed no escape. She immediately became interested. To be sure she was but an infant goose, and geese are, at best, considered silly things; yet she thought it no harm to inquire upon a subject that so nearly concerned her family, and so, at the first opportunity, she coaxed her kind mamma to tell her all about it.

The goose was very sorry that her little one had learned of a fatality the knowledge of which would blight her young joy, and so endeavored to say as little on the subject as possible. But the gosling plied her with questions until the whole frightful truth came out, that the goose family owned no privileges, possessed no rights, and were only the slaves of despotic man, born, cared for, and nourished to no higher end than that their feathers might encourage his indolence, their flesh gratify his palate.

The gosling, upon this discovery, hung her head. The world was not the same as it had seemed in the days of her ignorance. The barn yard, such a pleasant play-ground, and the little green outside, where such sweet, tender grass grew, she had supposed to be an estate owned, in common, by her papa, Mr. Drake, Mr Gobbler, and Mr. Doodle; and the neat little home, where she and her brothers and sisters had been born, and which they had been used to call "papa's house," how different all looked now!

Then there were huge creatures around—some on four feet and some on two—who had dwellings in the barn-yard and contiguous, and who she had supposed to be guardians and providers to the feathered families. The two footed folk, she thought, were special attendants of the birds, for they brought them their food and cleaned after them. It was only the day before that she herself had met with an accident. Something sharp had run into her foot, and caused her intense pain, making it very difficult for her to walk. While suffering so, some elegant creatures, covered with gaudy plumage, had entered the yard, when one of them cried out:—

"Oh! see, one of the goslings is lame!"

They then ran and caught her, and she was held gently against a soft cheek, and soothed with kind words, while the largest of the strangers examined the ailing foot, and soon extracted the cause of the pain, at the same time saying, in a displeased tone:

"How careless to throw broken needles about! That must have come from the house in the sweepings."

It was very fine to be thus waited on by such large, grand creatures; and when little gosling was set on the ground she ran to join her family, and told them, with some pride, of what had occurred. Oh! how different from pride is the feeling now!

Now, that the relative positions of man and the feathered races are explained to her, she understands the nature of the interest which the family of the farmer manifests in her family; and even in the case of her injured foot, she writhes with grief and humiliation when told that the special attention paid her had reference to her growth and plumpness which might be seriously hindered by a painful wound. "For," added her mamma, with a sigh, "it is well known that the lame bird doesn't thrive."

From that day the gosling had something to think of; and the subject that occupied her little head was no less a one than the question as to the possibility of raising herself above the condition to which she was born, and so obtain the great boon of life.

She sought an early opportunity of taking a peep at the swans, of whose superior fortune she had heard her mother speak in envy; but she saw that they were, indeed, much grander birds than geese, and that no gosling might ever hope to purchase life by exerting in the breast of man such admiration as that princely tribe commanded.

This thought was depressing; but our little goose was not going to yield to depressing influences. She had a sanguine nature, and this, added to a passionate craving for life, kept her mental energies astir, and so, as she still pondered the all-engrossing question, she soon learned that beauty was not the only quality that recommended the animal races to mercy. Some, she perceived, were allowed to live because they were useful. They worked for their master, and he seemed to value them quite as highly as the birds which he nurtured for their beauty. Could she work? This was the question now. Was there any way in which a little goose could serve the human tyrant? She thought, and thought, and thought, but without avail—she could discover nothing that she could do. She was willing, indeed, but incompetent. She had neither the strength nor the talent. She could not carry and draw like the horse, nor hunt and track game like the dog; and she loathed the thought of earning life by devouring vermin like the cat. It was a puzzling question, which, day by day, agitated our gosling. Yet she would not give it up—indeed, the difficulties made her cling to it all the more.

And all this time the little brood were growing. The down of their coats was magnifying itself into feathers, the green hue of which was fading into gray and white, and they were stretching and expanding in size, and our little friend thought that as she advanced towards maturity, perhaps she might find the ability to employ herself in her master's service. But, as she was comforting herself with this hope, a circumstance occurred which filled the whole family with grief and alarm.

One morning, when the maid who usually fed them came with their breakfast, instead of spreading it in the yard as usual, she went into their house, on the floor of which she laid the dish. They, forthwith, followed her, and, entering the house, hastened to plunge their bills into the food.

While they were eating, another woman came in, and the door was shut; and then both women proceeded to lift the goslings and weigh them in their hands, feeling their limbs and breasts.

The goose and gander became greatly agitated, and the goslings began to cry and run about. If vain were these demonstrations; the young birds were all examined, and the two largest and fattest put into a basket, which the strange woman carried away. What became of them never transpired, though, from a remark which fell from one woman about "green geese and gooseberries," the sorrowing family knew pretty well what was the fate which had broken their circle.

This affair was a great shock to our gosling. When she was in the woman's hands, with her life in the scales, her heart died within her. How childish and ridiculous than seemed the hope of ever being able to escape this hereditary doom! And even when the trial is over, the life that was still left to her seemed such a mocking uncertainty that she felt it was scarce worth possessing.

A month passed away, during which two others of the young geese were taken; and yet our poor friend had discovered no work that she could do to compensate man for sparing her life. It had become a habit with her to think of this subject, though now she thought of it without hope.

One day the geese were reclining in a group at the edge of their bath in the barn-yard, when a company, belonging to their master's family, entered the gate and walked round among the inhabitants. A stout old lady, in heavy, black satin, leaning on a fine boy, walked towards the water, saying she wished to look at the ducks. Our young geese watched the pair, as they passed at a little distance, and presently she saw the lady drop her handkerchief. A little pig who stood near, also saw it, and, doubtless, thought it would be a nice thing to play with, for he immediately moved towards it. The gosling, knowing that piggy meant mischief, and seeing here a chance to make herself useful, started up, and flying forward, seized the precious piece of cambric in her bill, before the naughty little snout had reached it. She then ran after the lady, and, getting before her, politely held the handkerchief up, stretching her neck to its utmost length in doing so.

But never was a bird so astonished as the young goose to suddenly find herself a heroine. The act had been witnessed by two young ladies at a little distance, who, with loud exclamations of admiring wonder, rushed to the spot. Seized with momentary fright, the gosling was about to fly away; but before she could do so she was caught, and her fluttering nerves soothed with caresses, while her exploit was told again and again, as the company came hasting together. They all declared she was the first goose they ever knew to do a smart thing, and that the act ought to be published.

"And, grandmamma, I think you ought to adopt little goosey," was the merry remark of one of the young ladies.

"Yes, indeed," said the old lady, pleasantly, "she has introduced herself to my kind regards."

"Then, come, let's take her to the house," was the next proposal.

"Yes, come." And the party began to move, the young lady still carrying the fortunate goose.

The latter stretched her neck over the soft arm that supported her, and

THE CHRISTIAN RECORDER.

Published by the African Methodist Episcopal Church in the United States, for the Dissemination of Religion, Morality, Literature and Science.

Rev. Elisha Weaver, Editor. PHILADELPHIA, NOVEMBER 1. 1862. Vol. II.—No. 44.—New Series. Whole No. 95.

THE CHRISTIAN RECORDER

Is published every Saturday on behalf of the

AFRICAN METHODIST EPISCOPAL CHURCH,

BY

REV. ELISHA WEAVER,

General Book Steward,

No 619 Pine Street, Philadelphia.

Notice.—All letters and matters pertaining to the Book Concern or Publishing department, including subscriptions, advertisements, and all moneys belonging to Book Concern or Publishing, must be directed to Rev. Elisha Weaver, Box No. 619, Philadelphia; and all matters sent by express, and in our city, must be directed to E. Weaver, No. 619 Pine St.

All articles intended for the Christian Recorder, must be directed to E. Weaver, Box No. 619, Philadelphia.

TERMS.

Two Dollars a year, payable in advance. Single copies, five cents

ADVERTISEMENTS.

We solicit Advertisements of all descriptions, suitable for a religious newspaper, which will be published as follows:—

Blanks or Advertisements, inserted for one year, (provided they do not exceed eight lines, ten dollars, paper included; or eight dollars without the paper,—six months, for ten dollars, paper included.—three months, four dollars,—one month, $1.50, paper in each case included.

CORRESPONDING EDITORS OF CHRISTIAN RECORDER.

Rev. J. P. CAMPBELL, Rev. A. W. WAYMAN,
" J. M. WILLIAMS, " E. T. WILLIAMS,
" G. H. GRAHAM, " C. BURCH,
Rev. L. ROSS

Poetry.

For the Christian Recorder.

THE POOR MOUSE'S PETITION.

O hear a pensive prisoner's prayer,
For liberty that sighs,
And never let thy heart be shut
Against the wretch's cries!

For here, forlorn and sad, I sit
Within the wiry grate,
And tremble at th' approaching morn,
Which brings unpending fate.

If e'er thy breast with freedom glowed,
And spurned a tyrant's chain,
Let not thy strong oppressive force
A free-born mouse detain.

Oh! do not stain with guiltless blood
Thy hospitable hearth,
Nor triumph that thy wiles betrayed
A prize so little worth.

So, when destruction lurks unseen,
Which men, like mice, may share,
May some kind angel clear thy path
And break the hidden snare!

HYMN.

How blessed are the sons of light!
Though poor on earth, and ill at ease;
The path of faith and not of sight,
Is that of pleasantness and peace.

Loud laughter and the idle jest
May rise amid the ungodly throng,
But calm content, and holy rest,
To pilgrims of the cross belong.

In Thee, sweet source of heavenly peace,
All fresh and living springs are found;
And the deep well knows no decreases,
From whence those gladdening springs abound.

What though the vain and worldly deem
The way of God a desert rude,
Green pastures and the tranquil stream
Are found in that sweet solitude.

There the Good Shepherd loves to lead,
In noontide heat his little flock:
There they repose and there they feed,
Beneath the shadow of the rock.

Partners of birth, to that clear spring
The doves descende, her wandering o'er,
Loves in the stream her weary wing,
Nor leaves the quiet shelter more.

Thou God of grace, and peace, and love!
Teach me to find that region blest;
O for the pinions of the dove,
To flee away and be at rest!

For the Christian Recorder.

THE GOSPEL METHOD OF VICTORY.

Philadelphia, Oct. 20th, 1862.

MR. EDITOR, Dear Sir:—Permit me to say a few words to the public through your paper, which I'll title the Gospel Method of Victory. Sufferings are ways of victory in another method and form. He that conquers under persecution, receives in the enmity, wrath and opposition of his enemies into himself, and there quenches it and destroys it in the Spirit; for the Christian, being one with the Lord Jesus, flesh of his flesh, and bone of his bone, is partaker of that power and glory which was in Christ, and through him who hath overcome the world. We are more than conquerors, and this is our victory, even our faith. And the strength and life of Christ is shed abroad through all his people, so as death has no sting for them, and the grave no victory over them. The violence of fire is quenched, and the mouths of lions stopped, kingdoms subdued.

No more at present, but remain your humble and obedient servant, WM. HAZZARD.

For the Christian Recorder.

THE WEST INDIES.

The group of islands known under this name comprises four divisions, viz.: the Bahamas, Great and Little Antilles, and the Carribees. The latter are sometimes known by the names of Winawhra and Luwara. In 1492, embowered amidst its palm, cocoanut and orange trees, Guanahani first met the wearied eye of Columbus, who had been threatened with death by his mutinous crew. The West Indies must have presented a scene not to be found in any other but a tropical country. The natives, uncivilized, living in simple luxury, roaming whichever way they pleased, their rudely-constructed huts surrounded by palm, cocoanut and orange trees, giving it, at a distance, the appearance of a vast grove. Its dense woods, filled with feathered songsters of various sizes and hues, whose melodious voices re-echoed through the grassy plains, intersected with rivulets and small streams, within whose dense bosom reposed numbers of the finny tribe; filled with those members of the animal kingdom indigenous to the tropics; and numbers of reptiles existed here, without having cause to use their venom.

Everything was as God had made it, free, unowned and unconquered. The sea lashed the coast without having known what it was to bear anything heavier than a light canoe. The mineral wealth of the soil was untouched.

The climate was, and still is, delightful, and most of the year it is uninterruptedly mild, except two months when violent hurricanes occur. The islands are clothed with constant verdure, and every island to a traveller who, for many hours has rested his eyes on naught but sea, appears like a beautiful garden. Its chief productions are coffee, sugar, cotton, tobacco, logwood and mahogany, all of which, in large quantities, are exported to the United States and Europe. The history of the West Indies is but a continuation of wars, sieges, robberies and treaties. The islands discovered within a few years of each other were settled by the Spanish. The English, in trying to displace them, were involved in a war; then a servile war, which has placed in prominent position in the history of the world many dark-skinned patriots, many deeply dyed heroes, who equalled, if not surpassed in magnanimity, the heroes of the old world, among whom we may mention "Toussaint L'Overture" and "Dessalines." The government of the West Indies is a mixture of Republicanism and Despotism, liberty and slavery. In Hayti, we have a military despotism. In Cuba, a dependency, as well as those of the British Islands.

It was on the 11th of November that we reached the beautiful island of Hayti. We landed and were awe-struck at the beautiful prospect that met our view—the dark blue sea, the tall trees swayed by the gentle wind, the fruit in wasteful abundance. And a little distance inland we found the purling brook, the towering mountain; and the clear blue sky rendered us thoughtful. Hark! what is that we hear? The splashing of oars? Who is that? —our friend, to whose house we were going. We proceeded and arrived just in time for dinner, composed of tropical fruits. The house looked like a miniature "Swiss cottage," so elegant and neat, nestled in its tropical trees. We remained all day; the evening was moonlight. We proposed a walk; the proposition was accepted. We started and walked about half a mile. The spectacle that met our view was beautiful in the extreme. The moon in majestic beauty had risen to the zenith. The refulgent light had given a kind of limpidness to the scene. The distant mountain, with its outlines perfectly distinct; the tall trees seemed to touch the luminary; every bush assumed a fantastic shape; the usual shrill cry of the owl and whip-poor-will was softened. After viewing this we returned home, and involuntarily exclaimed, "O, Lord, how manifold are thy works: in wisdom hast thou made them all!"

CORUNO.

Philadelphia, October, 1862.

For the Christian Recorder.

ANNIVERSARY ADDRESS.

(Continued from last number.)

But while we are commenting upon the great demonstrations that are going on in the United States, if we could see the military pageantry, the pomp and splendor of brilliant parades, the soul-stirring influences of music, with the banner of freedom unfurled to the breeze! To see the national flag with the British lion reposing majestically upon it, with his noble, protecting look of justice and liberty, the thousands of colored soldiery under arms, their polished steel glittering in the pure light of the glorious day; their fine habiliments beautifully displayed! To view their perfect manœuvres and hear the cheering shouts of the multitude, must altogether command an array of components as grand and magnificent as the brilliant ages of Rome when she was at the height of her military glory!

According to Biblical authority, slavery came into existence soon after the commencement of sin and disobedience to the laws of God: hence it must be allied to evil, and cannot possess a single Divine principle. The fact of its union with evil is sufficient proof of its wickedness, and the truth that it grows and flourishes best where God's laws are disregarded, and where all manner of evil is at its climax is sufficiently convincing of its atrociousness.

There can be no better illustration given of the withering effects that slavery has produced in governments, than the calamitous and destroying consequences that befell Rome, which caused her to fall from her high and commanding position of fame and power, and to gradually decay, until her sickly, and emaciated form fell headlong into the endless abyss of oblivion!

It will not be my object in this address to trace all the effects of slavery in different governments, or even in this; but merely to show the great acting cause which produces so much discension in any government where it is tolerated.

The great effects upon our moral, and particularly our intellectual condition, show that it has blighted our most sacred rights, and deprived us of the towering advantages which the other enjoys. Why are the sons and daughters of African descent refused admittance into most of the schools and colleges of this country? It is simply because they are degraded by the cursed influence of slavery.

The institution of slavery, as it has existed in this country ever since its independence was declared, has rivated the chains of oppression upon us in every tyrannical form that the heel of abject degradation could impress. It has not only deprived us of the right of suffrage, but the right of our own persons, which has been clearly demonstrated in enforcing the Fugitive Law, where a free man's person could be claimed, and by a simple act of perjury by the claimant, reduce the poor human being to chains and slavery. * * * *

It is useless for us to shut our eyes to the fact that this government is in a very dangerous period of existence. A country that commits wrongs will be as surely punished as the man who commits a sin, and he will be punished in proportion to the magnitude of those crimes. Why is the whole nation now thrown into mourning? Why do we pause in sorrow at the threshold of nearly every door in the land, and behold that lone widow stricken down with grief, her careworn and emaciated countenance telling too truly the weight of sorrow that is hanging like a dark pall over her troubled mind? In the midst of her gloominess, her imagination carries her to the field of blood and carnage, and there she beholds the bones of her once beloved husband bleaching upon the lone waste. So must it be a haughty nation is suffering for the many great sins she has committed.

(To be continued.)

AS IT was the spirit of the world that nailed our blessed Lord to the cross; so every man that has the spirit of Christ, every man that opposes the world, will certainly be crucified by the world some way or other.

For the Christian Recorder

NEWS FROM CAIRO.

Cairo, Ill., Oct. 21st, 1862.

MR. EDITOR:—DEAR BRO.:—After a long silence I again open my communication with you. We left Louisville on the 22d of Sept. and arrived at home on the 28th. We left in the midst of great confusion, yea, I may say consternation, as GEN. Nelson had given orders that morning to remove all the women and children out of the city; every person was trying to get out; thousands of government teams and droves of mules crowded the river banks at every available point of crossing, while some of the mules were swimming the river; the scene was shocking. Our boat pushed out just at dusk in the evening. I left the people crossing the river in every kind of vessel, skiff, flat, ferry, and steam boats.

We floated down on the bosom of the Ohio, feeling anxious to know what would be the fate of Louisville, but when we reached Cairo on the 25th, we learned that all was quiet again in Louisville.

Now to the church. We found the church in good condition. I have visited Sparta and found the church there alive, thank God; the church in Chester is in good care. I am now in Cairo, Ill., and have organized a society here, and one at Mound City, enough to form a class at each place. With a number of anxious souls there is a prospect of great work here. We had a great meeting here last night, the Lord was with us.

Now to the paper. I have not had time since I have been home to seek subscribers, for I had to make my family comfortable first: for he that will not provide for his family is worse than an infidel. But now I am ready; please send me twenty copies, and one of each back Nos. from the 7th of Sept. and I will try what I can do for the Recorder. Yours truly,

B. L. BROOKS.

For the Christian Recorder.

ALEXANDRIA CORRESPONDENCE.

Once more, Mr. Editor, your unasked for, and, perhaps not desirable correspondent, addresses you. Since my last, with an occasional exception, things have pursued the even tenor of their way.

Let me first notice the death of one of the most aged, as well as the most estimable of our colored residents—a true mother in Israel, Mrs. Hannah Lyles, the mother of the excellent leader of the choir of our infant church. Your correspondent was in Washington at the time, when a note arrived requesting his presence at the funeral.

The deceased for many years had been one of the living stones in Roberts' Chapel, the colored Methodist church. Of her it truly could be said, "She hath done what she could." At home or abroad, in the church, or in the social gathering, she did what she could to make life pleasant to all; and so at her death her praise is in the mouth of all. Her death was that of the righteous, even as her life had been.

The Methodist, or old side church as it is commonly called, has two stations here; one white and one colored. The pastoral work of both being performed by Revs. Reed and Lemon, officiating alternately in either church. The Rev. Mr. Lemon, I believe, attending in chief to the colored church. The object of stating the above fact will appear very shortly. Your correspondent upon receiving the note, last no time, and very shortly he found himself seated in Roberts' Chapel awaiting the arrival of the pastor in charge. A few moments after the hour appointed, the Rev. Mr. Reed walked in, to whom I was introduced, and who after, very cordially invited me up in the altar and also to take part in the exercises. He preached the funeral sermon, choosing for his text the words of the prophet Amos, "Prepare to meet thy God." His remarks were stirring and truthful, but not by any means appropriate. Its very inappropriateness, Mr. Editor, perfectly satisfied me of two things, and they are, 'The utter incapacity of white men for colored churches;' and secondly, "The absolute necessity of social equality between priest and people." I believed them before, but the incidents and facts of that day confirmed me in that belief.

Among many remarks of the Reverend speaker, was the following: "Personally, I do not know how she spent her last days, or how she died."

What think you of that, Mr. Editor, a shepherd thus ignorant of his sheep. Nor is the Rev. Mr. Reed altogether to blame, for I can assure you that upon a short acquaintance, I am persuaded that God intended him to be a good man, but like us all, owing to circumstance, that purpose or intention has been thwarted to a degree. But the fact is the gulf between the two is too wide. The waters are too rushing. We must take up our good old Bibles and follow the examples there given. And what are these examples? Why, a Hebrew for the Hebrew, as Moses; a Greek for the Greeks, as Timothy, and a Roman citizen for a world of Roman citizens, as Paul. So must we here in this land, Anglo-African priests for Anglo-African people. And it is just here that God speaks to our Church. May we hear his voice.

In company with Miss Amanda Bowden, who is a very Samaritan, I visited the "Contraband" quarters on Washington Street. I merely make this allusion, promising in my next to speak at more length. More anon. B. T. T.

For the Christian Recorder.

INFORMATION FROM BISHOP MAZREY

Having visited the churches in the New England Annual Conference District, we shall give some knowledge of matters and things.

1st. On visiting New Bedford, my first point, where I found some letters from Boston, informing me of the state of the church, and also found Rev. J. M. Mitchel, the minister in charge, who informed me that he had left Boston, some time since. I found everything in New Bedford in a very favorable condition, and the people doing well and also Newport. At my next point I found an excellent state of things. Bro. Desmond who was absent, being in a feeble state of health, and seeking means of relief, saw my arrangements in the Recorder, and wrote to Bro. Lewis, who he had left in charge in his absence, to look out and prepare for my reception, and which he did. Brother Desmond got home before I left, but little improved in health. May his health improve, and he be long spared to do good. The state of the church at that place is good. I left for Providence, next point, and found them worshipping in the same old place, and had not come to the conclusion on the precise point on which they would build, though they had gathered $200.00 since the conference for that purpose, and are still going on in the good work. We expect to hear from them before long. Leaving this point, I went back to Boston, where I found the church laboring under a debt of nearly $6000, and the minister gone. I met and counselled with them. I hope for the best, but when or how that enormous debt is to be mastered with a membership of 25 or 30 working members only, as I was informed how many there are, I cannot tell.

Elder Rue having failed to accomplish his North Carolina mission, I appointed him to the charge of the Boston station, until the next annual conference of the New England District. Bro. Rue was yet unable to labor, from the effects of the camp fever, but thought he would be able to go to his work in a week or two. I hope no time will be lost, nor pains spared to redeem that church if possible. Bro. Mitchel has engaged to go to California, to assist in that long neglected field, and informed me since, that he was making considerable progress in collecting means to pay his passage. The Missouri Annual Conference pledged themselves to raise their portion of the means this year, as directed by the last general conference to pay my expenses out to that portion of our work, and Bro. Turner of that conference has volunteered to go out with me, to labor in that part of the vineyard, and that will be 2 elders, and if the other districts will raise their quota, I shall go out there, after the rise of the next New England Annual Conference, and labor there, leaving myself time to reach the general Conference of 1864, and as I have made so many appeals to the districts, and no notice has been taken of it, I give this as the last.

New Haven church is laboring under some 1000 or 1200 dollars debt, and anxious to relieve themselves of it, which I think they will. They have a fine little building, and all that is wanted, is a little more energy. I hope to hear from them before long.

I visited Bridgeport, as it is the last point in the New England District. I should have visited Bro. Burley's field, had he been there, or could I have learned any thing from his whereabouts. Any brother, in future, who intends leaving his field to which he is sent from the Conference, under my first direction, to collect money or otherwise, will please inform me, if he is going to stay. I am now passing through Bro Winder's circuit, and have been to Riceville and Fair Haven. A few hours ago, arrived at Freehold, N. J., and so I shall proceed onward. We meet the Christian Recorder, as a welcome guest in nearly all my route, and think that a little more effort on the part of the ministry, and it will more effectually accomplish its mission. Will the Editor send a half dozen copies to Madison M. Bell, and one to Rev. T. M. D. Ward, San Francisco, California? W. NAZRET.

For the Christian Recorder.

CONDITION OF THE CONTRABANDS IN WASHINGTON.

MR. EDITOR:—Before giving you an account of my own personal observations upon the condition of the contrabands in and about Washington, I have greatly preferred to spread before your readers the following correspondence, believing that the letter of Rev. H. M. Turner will be to them highly interesting, and, to several associations and committees, useful.

Rev. H. M. Turner, Dear Brother:—Having received through Mr. Still, of this city, a communication from Mr. Hemlin, the President of the Freedmen Association, making an appeal to the colored community for aid to relieve the sufferings of the refugees from human bondage, we are about making a most hearty response to that appeal. In his appeal the President sets the contrabands before us in a most destitute and suffering condition. Many persons to whom we appeal for aid, desire additional light upon the subject. And thus, on behalf of my church and congregation, I thought proper to ask you to be kind enough to send us a communication which may be read before said church and congregation, setting forth facts and observations made by yourself upon the subject in question. You will greatly benefit the cause of humanity by a speedy compliance with this request. Yours in Christ,

J. P. CAMPBELL.

Philadelphia, Oct. 6d, 1862.

One week after the above date, we received from Rev. H. M. Turner the following reply.

Washington, Oct 6th, 1862

REV. J. P. CAMPBELL and others:—Yours of the 2d inst., requesting me to give a succinct account of the contrabands and all that appertains to their condition, is before me. And in order to better enable me to give a true and proper delineation of their wants and necessities, I procured the assistance of Mr. John T. Catlin, who accompanied me to the various camps where the contrabands are now located.

The first place we visited was the camp of Captain Warner, where we found, I judge, about four hundred of all sorts and sizes. And here we stopped to make observations and propose interrogatories commensurably to the object in view. Captain Warner, being a gentleman of large benevolence, as well as a true philanthropist, invited us into his quarters, and tendered us all the information desired, and then volunteered his services to conduct us to several of their tents, which we found to our very agreeable disappointment in many instances, much more comfortable than we had anticipated.

They have good military tents, cooking utensils, and the Captain stated plenty of common provisions, but not the kind of delicacies adapted to the wants and disordered systems of the sick, especially that kind of nourishment required for sick children, of which there were a large proportion.

He further informed us that there was a great want of proper clothing; particularly, such as socks of various sizes, shirts for men, and clothing for children; and as the weather grew colder the exigencies of all kinds of clothing would be considerably enhanced. And I would further state, that our communications with the contrabands led us to a still stronger credence in the above statements, from their very many corroborative attestations.

Having made the necessary investigations in this department, we proceeded to the camp of Rev. J. D. Nichols, into which we were admitted without any restrictions, indispensable to the completion of the object of our mission.

Here were nearly seven hundred contrabands, ranging from infants to sires of eighty winters, many of whom were very sick, and most earnestly craving that kind of nourishment suitable to their condition.

We were there informed by the superintendent that they stood in great need of at least a thousand blankets. The matron, a distinguished lady from Boston, also told us that all kinds of clothing were in great demand; that many of the women were merely clothed in rags, and had no changeable apparel even to serve them while they washed what they had on. "But," said she, "anything and everything in the shape of clothing would be most gratefully received, for unless Providence opens up some merciful way by which their needs can be supplied, the winter's chilling, blasting, wind will carry many of the half naked contrabands to a premature grave." And she very particularly emphasized upon the needs of the little children, who were not able to help themselves.

We also saw many who were very comfortably clothed, and a very large proportion of others just the contrary. Indeed, some were very finely dressed. But there appeared to be many things over which they had great reason to grieve. The superintendent, however, assured us that the Government would provide stoves, tents, wood, cooking utensils, and such like things, plentifully for the winter campaign, but that blankets, bed-ticking, etc., could not be obtained from that source, and all assistance given in that direction would be most gratefully acknowledged. I am happy, also, to state that the greater number of the contrabands who have come to Washington, display an amount of enterprise highly commendable. Hundreds of them never go to the camps provided for them, but seek immediate employment. They say if the Government will free them, they ask no other favors. But hundreds are compelled to remain at the camps, because it is impossible to procure a house or room in which to stop. And to the honor of the Washington people, many of them have thrown open their finest parlors, given up their kitchens, garrets, and even closets to shelter these escaping sons of humanity, and every day we are besieged by contraband hunting houses. I assure you if we had house room and remunerative employment proportionate to the demand, this benevolent appeal would not have to be made. And those who have disseminated it, that the contrabands are all a set of lazy, trifling dupes, are liars to the back bone. But I must congratulate you and your noble-hearted people for that laudable spirit of generosity which has prompted you to engage in such a distinguished enterprise.

I think with what our people in Washington are doing, and with what you are willing to do North, for the relief of the contrabands, we could establish a regular hospital. They suffer mostly in sickness, and it is pretty good dying, out of a camp of seven hundred, for four and five to die nightly, which is quite the average. I see them often moving along the streets so sick and weak that they can hardly wag. Death seems to be figured in their countenance, and yet no where to go, no where to rest that weary, fevered head, that fainting frame. But it would be needless to try to describe what passes before my actual observation, or to descant the arguments favorable to a colored hospital, for the picture would be too horrible. The fact is, we need a colored hospital, and the next question is, can we have it. I answer, we can if we will try. Let the generous hearts of the great North unite on the subject and Baltimore and Washington do the same, and in a short time we will have a house fitted out, properly officered with intelligent men of our race, with every thing necessary for the sick and afflicted. One cent per week from our people would support as fine a hospital as could be desired. And I believe that many would be willing to give from one to five dollars per month for the sustenance of an institution of that kind. Besides, many of our white friends would greatly aid in the project, and the moral influence which would grow out of it would tell with thrilling effect upon our opposers and calumniators. It would, furthermore, turn the attention of our people to the great subject of their own responsibility, or to the help-yourself doctrine, which must ultimately triumph, if we ever triumph. I hope you and your congregation will give this matter some consideration, and if the plan is approved of, neither myself nor congregation will be found wanting in the sphere which must help to its achievement. Lest I weary you, I forbear. Your brother in Christ,

H. M. TURNER.

For the Christian Recorder.

MORAL HONESTY.

Moral doctrine of the duty of life,
Honesty, Justice, Truth, Sincerity.

Moral honesty! What a subject—one that should engage the attention of our lower world, and all finite and intelligent beings. Honesty is a precious jewel; the diamond jewel. Is it to be found among the sons of men? Rarely. If the subject of moral honesty was well studied and practised by a majority of the children of men, the woes and sorrows that are felt would be less experienced. What a great want of moral honesty do we find in our dealings with individuals, in our business or engagements in this life, where we have to deal with fallen humanity. Not only is this want found in others, but we oftimes find it in ourselves. Let us notice two particular points.

1. Sentiments. 2. Actions. Where is that person who is honest in the expression of the sentiments of his mind on every subject which pertains to his own interest? He is more particular to know what are the sentiments of others on the subject, and if he finds that the opinions of others are not the same as his own, and the giving of his own sentiments will conflict with others, and be detrimental to his own interest, he is very apt or certain to withhold his own views, and accord with others for his own advantage. Hence we see the want of honesty in the person who agrees with others for his own personal benefit, when at the same time he differs in sentiments. In a word, an individual finding that to express his own sentiments would do himself an injury, (no matter whether he think his own opinions in keeping with truth and justice or not,) for the sake of the benefits which he will gain by keeping secret his own sentiments, will be dishonest in sentiments. Secondly, are we always honest in our actions? If we let conscience speak it will say No! View the action of many, and you may see a great want of moral honesty. Men do not act according to what they believe to be right and just, but according to what will promote their own interest, and best please others. Here we see the great want of honesty in actions. No jewel is more counterfeited than this precious jewel—honesty. What an amount of pretence to honesty there is in the world. And what a great love there is in the world for honesty; but how little is possessed or manifested in sentiments or action. How many in this world and the other, have been deceived by taking for honesty that which was only a show of, or a pretence to it. The individual who would please God must cultivate that honesty which has been planted in the human heart by God—if planted or possessed at all—because it embraces in an abstract sense two of the divine attributes, justice and truth. Hence, we are told to love mercy, deal justly, and to walk humbly with God. And how can man please God unless he is sincere? Wherever moral honesty is practised and acquiesced with, there is peace and happiness.

Georgetown, D. C. H. J. RHODES.

THE PRESIDENT AND THE COLORED RACE IN AMERICA.

We copy the following article from the London Daily News. We return our thanks to the friend who so kindly furnished us that paper. We trust the article will be carefully read by all of our readers.

While we take due note of the broad hints given in American newspapers of all parties about the allowance to be made for what the President does not say, and the interpretation to be put on what he does say, we must be permitted to treat him with the common civility of supposing that, as far as he goes, he means what he says. The universal reply to the question whether Mr. Lincoln is honest is that he is honest; yet, from the extreme difficulty of his position, nine in ten of the people about him expect that he will come out on their side at last, and that meantime he is only saying what the circumstances of the time require. On the latest opportunity for any public declaration Mr. Lincoln made a long speech on a subject of the very gravest importance; and it is of the deepest concern to every public interest in America that the address should be understood as it was meant, and treated as it deserves. We refer to the President's address to a deputation of men of color, who waited on him "to hear his views upon their position." The occasion was planned; the deputation was invited; and if ever a public man was aware of the weight of his own words, and prepared to say what he meant, President Lincoln must have been so on the 14th of August. It is pertinent to this matter to notice one or two preceding incidents. When we recently mentioned the organising of a negro regiment by the Governor of Rhode Island, it was not known here how the President would take such a practical dissent from his own course. He had just before refused to accept of two negro regiments offered to the army, and the remark then was that he had simply refused the offer, and had not condemned the procedure. The inference drawn proves to be just. Mr. Lincoln leaves Governor Sprague of Rhode Island and Governor Andrew of Massachusetts to their own action, and intimates that it is a matter of time and means. He must himself wait (so he thinks) till national opinion warrants him calling on the colored people to join in the defence of the country; but, if any State chooses to enrol its own people without distinction, he is not bound to interfere. So he settles one point. But he has a course of his own to pursue. In his Message of last March he proposed a scheme for the emigration of the colored people; and Congress made a grant for the purpose. He must take some action upon this; and the method he has chosen is to invite a deputation to hear his "views" and receive his counsel. So far all is plain. Then comes the perplexity. What he proposes is impracticable, and the scheme is based upon a doctrine which every unprejudiced mind must see to be untenable. He tells his hearers that their presence in the Republic is injurious to both races; that it has caused all the great evils of the State; that it is the cause of the war; that it is fatal to the development of the negro character and fortunes; that it places the political and moral welfare of the whites in constant jeopardy; and that the solution of all the perplexities can be nothing else than the removal of the whole body of their race to a new country. He proposes, therefore that they should set about the removal to Central America, by means of funds provided by Congress. This being promised, we may come at once to the practical point of the President's address. The removal which he proposes is impossible. Five millions of persons never have been, and we may safely say never will be, removed en masse from one country to another. No settled country can receive five millions of laborers into its bosom; and such a crowd of strangers cannot by any power be thrust upon it. The project would be impracticable for a single million, for half a million, for a hundred thousand, under the best circumstances of preparation and fitness. In regard to a population of four millions and a half of slaves, and half a million of better trained people, the scheme is so wild that its proposal amounts to a mere confession of perplexity, if not despair. Mr. Lincoln declares himself of opinion that the colonization of Liberia is a "success;" yet he presently states that the number of negroes from America is twelve thousand. Twelve thousand in forty years! Twelve thousand after vehement efforts and vast expense on the part of the slave-holders who made the scheme, and their pro-slavery abettors in the North, who gave their money and their services to it, in hopes of getting rid of the blacks! While those twelve thousand emigrants have been passing to Africa, the slaves have increased in America literally by millions. Mr. Lincoln seems to be aware how his hearers might reply about removal to Africa, for he passed lightly over that part of his discourse, and dwelt chiefly on Central America as the future home of American negroes. He extolled the coal fields of Central America. The reply of the people of color may be anticipated. They prefer the cotton and corn fields of their own country. They will refuse to starve among unopened coal fields while the cotton and corn fields of their own country need their labor, and will afford them subsistance. They have abundantly shown that they can take care of themselves in a country where society is organized, and where labor secures subsistence first, and as much comfort and luxury afterwards as its quality may be worth. Let any number depart in this voluntary way, and there will still be millions left at home. The President must surely see this; and he must see that their whole number will be wanted more now than ever, if the industry and the fortunes of the Republic are to be sustained. While tens of thousands of the citizens are perishing in the war, and hundreds of thousands are leaving their industrial pursuits for the army, it is no time to propose the banishment of five millions of the working class. The notion is so extravagant that its announcement must be understood as an indirect disclosure of Mr. Lincoln's policy in his singularly difficult position. In the military matter, he uttered what he supposed to be the predominant feeling, but left it to State Governments and people to act as they think best, and now, in the negro question, he expresses what he imagines to be the public wish, and he will certainly acquiesce when circumstances show that, in the first place, the negroes cannot go, and, in the next, that, if it were possible, they could not be spared. Meantime, there are many of those people who are prosperous and happy. "The prospects of the black man are bright to-day," said an escaped slave on the 1st of August, their festival day. "We wonder," said a citizen to a fugitive from the South, the other day, "that you have not had an insurrection." The answer was, "We don't need one. The white men are killing each other, and we have only to sit still. If either party will give us our freedom, we will take it. If not, we will wait till they have done with each other, and then our time will come." President and nation had better leave these people to take care of themselves and one another, and rise in the world through the opening which a natural retribution has made.—Daily News.

SUBMISSION.

Thus saith the Lord: "Thy days of health are over!"
And like the mist my vigor fled away,
Till but a feeble shadow was remaining,
A fragile frame, fast hastening to decay.
The May of life, with all its blooming flowers,
The joys of life in colors bright arrayed,
The hopes of life, in all their airy promise,
I saw them in the distance slowly fade.
Then sighs of sorrow in my soul would rise,
Then silent tears would overflow my eyes!
But a warm sunbeam from a higher sphere
Stole through the gloom and dried up every tear;
Is it thy will, good Lord! The strife is o'er,
Thy servant weeps no more.

"Thy cherished flock thou mayest feed no longer!"
Thus said the Lord who gave them to my hand;
Nor even was my sinking heart permitted
To ask the reason of the dread command.
The shepherd's rod had been so gladly carried,
The flock had followed long and loved it well;
Alas! the hour was dark, the stroke was heavy,
When sudden from my nerveless grasp it fell!
Then sighs of sorrow in my soul would rise,
Then rushing tears would overflow my eyes!
But I beheld Thee, O my Lord and God,
Beneath the cross lay down the shepherd's rod!
Is this thy will, good Lord! The strife is o'er,
Thy servant weeps no more.

"Never again thou mayest feed thy people!"
Thus said the Lord, with countenance severe,
And bade me lay aside at once, forever,
The robes of office, honored long and dear.
The sacred mantle from my shoulders falling,
The sacred girdle loosening at His word,
I could but feel and say, while sadly gazing,
"I have been once a pastor of the Lord!"
Then groans of anguish in my soul would rise,
Then burning tears would overflow my eyes!
But He own garment once was torn away,
To the rude soldiery a spoil and prey!
Is this thy will, good Lord! The strife is o'er,
Thy servant weeps no more.

"From the calm port of safety rudely severed,
Through stormy waves thy shattered bark must go,
And dimly see, amid the darkness sinking,
Nothing but heaven above, and depths below!"
Thus said the Lord; and through a raging ocean
Of doubts and fears my spirit toiled in vain.
Ah! many a dove went forth of hope inquiring,
But none with olive leaf returned again!
Then groans of anguish in my soul would rise,
Then tears of bitterness o'erflowed my eyes!
Yet through the gloom the promised light was given;
From the dark waves I could look up to heaven!
Is this thy will, good Lord! The strife is o'er,
Thy servant weeps no more.

"Thou shalt find kindred hearts in love united,
And with them in the wilderness rejoice;
But stand prepared, each gentle tie untwining,
To separate at my commanding voice!"
Thus said the Lord. He gave as he had promised;
How many a loving heart has met my own!
But ever must the tender bonds be broken,
And each go onward, distant and alone!
Then sighs of sorrow in my soul would rise,
Then tears of anguish overflowed my eyes!
But these hast known the bitter parting day—
From the beloved John last turned away.
Is this thy will, good Lord! The strife is o'er,
Thy servant weeps no more.

[MOWBRAY, in Sacred German Lyrics.]

THE PRE-EXISTENT STATE.

In 1762, the Rev. Capel Berrow published a work entitled, A pre-existent Estate of Human Souls Demonstrated.—More recently, we find Southey declaring: "I have a strong and lively faith in a state of continued consciousness from this stage of existence, and that we shall recover the consciousness of some lower stages through which we may previously have passed, seems to me not improbable." Wordsworth, too, founds on this notion in that fine poem where he says—

"Our birth is but a sleep and a forgetting;
The soul that riseth in us, our life's star,
Has had elsewhere its setting,
And cometh from afar."

With all respect for the doctrine of a previous existence, it appears to us that the assertion in question is no sort of proof of it; for it is clearly absurd to suppose that four or five people who had once lived before, and been acquainted with each other, had by chance got together again, and in precisely the same circumstances as on the former occasion. The notion, indeed, cannot for a moment be seriously maintained. We must leave it aside, as a mere poetical whimsy.

DISCIPLINE IN CHILDHOOD.

Young people who have been habitually gratified in all their desires, will not only more indulge in capricious desires, but will infallibly take it more amiss when the feelings or happiness of others require that they should be thwarted, than those who have been practically trained to the habit of subduing and restraining them, and consequently will in general sacrifice the happiness of others to their own selfish indulgence. To what else is the selfishness of princes and other great people to be attributed? It is in vain to think of cultivating principles of generosity and beneficence by mere exhortation and reasoning. Nothing but the practical habit of overcoming our own selfishness, and of familiarly encountering privations and discomforts on account of others, will ever enable us to do it when required. And therefore I am fully persuaded that indulgence invariably produces selfishness and hardness of heart, and that nothing but a pretty severe discipline and control can lay the foundation of a magnanimous character.—Lord Jeffrey.

CHRIST'S LOVE, PRECIOUS AND POWERFUL.

I, his exiled prisoner, sought him and he hath rued upon me, and hath honoured for me, as he doth for his own, (Jer. xxxi. 20; Isa. xlv. 11,) and I know not what to do with Christ; his love surroundeth and surchargeth me. I am burdened with it, but oh, how sweet and lovely is that burden! I cannot keep it within me: I am so in love with his love, that if his love were not in heaven I should be unwilling to go thither. Ah, what weighing and what telling is in Christ's love! I wonder what he meaneth to put such a slave at the head of the table, at his own elbow. Oh, that I should lay my mouth to such a fair, fair, fair face as Christ's! But I dare not refuse to be loved; the cause is not in me why he hath looked upon me, for he got neither bribe nor hire of me; it cost me nothing; it is gratuitous love. Oh, the many pounds-weight of his love, under which I am sweetly pressed!

I urge upon you a nearer communion with Christ, and a growing communion. There are curtains to be drawn by in Christ that we never saw, and new foldings of love in him. Therefore, dig deep, and sweat, and labor, and take pains for him; and set by as much time in the day for him as you can; he will be won with labor.

I thought it had been an easy thing to be a Christian, and that to such a God had been at the next door; but ah, the windings, the turnings, the ups and downs, that he hath led me through, and I see yet much way to the Lord. He speaketh with me to me in the night season; and in the morning, when I awake, I find his love nowa, that he shot at me, sticking in my heart. Who will help me to praise? Who will come to lift up with me, and set on [illegible]

Rutherford's Letters

The Christian Recorder.

Philadelphia, November 1, 1862.

NOTICE

TO THE DISTRICTS OF PHILADELPHIA, NEW ENGLAND, OHIO, INDIANA, AND MISSOURI, OF THE A. M. E. CHURCH MINISTERS.

Dear Brethren:—As we have a number of superannuated ministers on the list in said Districts, therefore it will be expected that the ministers and preachers, on their circuits and stations, will do all they can to collect the two cent money; and I also recommend that the Class leaders be instructed to collect and set the amount on the Class book opposite each member's name, as also all the collections called, per Discipline, for the Annual Conference, and publish the same once every quarter, that it may be seen who they are that work for God and his cause. We think it is time to give credit to those of our people who do work, so that God's name may be glorified.

NOTICE.

To the Executive Committee of the Book Concern of the A. M. E. Church:

You will please take notice that you are hereby notified to meet in the city of Philadelphia, on the 13th of November, 1862.

I make this announcement in order to save expense, as the Sabbath School Association meets here on the 12th.

ELISHA WEAVER,
General Book Steward and Editor.

TO SUBSCRIBERS.

Will those of our friends who are in arrears for the paper, and otherwise, please forward us the amount due immediately, by return mail? We never needed it more than at present. Remember, friends—send it NOW.

HAVING A GOOD TIME IN THE CHURCHES.

We have received letters from a number of brethren, giving an account of the working of the Spirit in their respective churches. One from Rev. B. L. Brooks, and from several other ministers.

That most energetic and never-tiring divine, the Rev. J. P. Campbell, has, we are pleased to learn, started a series of meetings in his Church every night, except Saturday. Prayer-meeting at 4 o'clock in the afternoon.

HYMN-BOOKS.

Several brethren have written to us for hymn-books. We wish to say to those brethren that we have no hymn-books for sale in the store, with the exception of seven or eight. We have sent them to the brethren—and of course we are without both the money and hymn-books. We fall short of about one hundred. Hence we have no more to bind up, and have no means to publish any more, unless some thoughtful brethren will send us the means.

Brethren, it is a moral impossibility for us to work without means. We need now, at the very lowest calculation, several hundred dollars to operate with in this department. Will not some, at least, if not all, of our brethren, raise collections, and forward them on to us? The demand is urgent. Do not delay.

SOCIETIES IN WASHINGTON, D. C., FOR THE BENEFIT OF THE CONTRABAND.

Mrs. Keckley, formerly of St. Louis, Missouri, who is now a resident of Washington, D. C., arrived in this city on Tuesday last, in company with Mrs. Gilbert, of this city, on her way to New York.

She is looking very well, indeed. She is also empowered to collect funds for the benefit of the contrabands in Washington. Mrs. Keckley, who is a member of our Church, some time in July or August last, seeing and hearing of the sufferings of the contrabands who are sent to Washington! proposed to some of her lady friends, when returning from church one Sabbath day, the necessity of a contraband relief association, which appears to have met with warm approval from her friends.

They met at the house of Rev. Mrs. Cook, on a lovely silver-moonlight night, and the result of the meeting was thirty-nine members, who have been in constant attendance, she states, ever since that time. She is also the President of the Association.

We have also the Constitution of the Union Relief Association of Union Bethel Church, under the control of Rev. James A. Handy, of Washington, D. C. It was organized September 10th, 1862. Mr. Thomas E. Green is the worthy President.

☞ Donations may be forwarded to him at No. 420 Eleventh Street, between I and K Sts., Washington, D. C.

We are so thronged with matter that we cannot find room for the Constitutions that have been sent to us of Societies.

NOTICE.

We have received, through Rev R Berry, all dues to the first of January, 1863, from West Philadelphia subscribers.

NOTICE.

Philadelphia, Nov. 1, 1862.

The following named elders are hereby notified to meet in the basement of Bethel A. M. E Church, on the 11th of this month, at 9 o'clock, A. M., to attend to the business assigned them by the last Annual Conference of this district in the case of Rev. Wm. James Fuller.

Rev. Joshua Wooldin
" Richard Robinson.
" Peter Gardiner
" Stephen Smith
" Richard Berney.
" James Holloo.

HENRY DAVIS, Chairman

ACKNOWLEDGMENTS

Elizabeth Reed, Moralton, N. J	50
Charles C. Green, Mt. Laurel, N. J.	50
Henry Butler, Haddonfield, N. J.	50
Thomas Anderson, Camden, N. J.
Hannah Liston, Woodbury, N. J.	1 00
Mary E. Mitchel, Mount Holly, N. J.	50

MARRIED.

We have the pleasure of announcing the marriage of our highly esteemed friend, Dr. James H. Wilson, of Philadelphia, to Miss Henrietta Guy, of Washington, D. C.

We wish them a long and happy connubial life. The worthy Doctor has changed his residence, since his marriage, to No. —— Lombard Street, above Ninth street.

QUARTERLY MEETING

At Jordantown, on the Burlington Circuit, under Rev. Joseph Smith, the presiding elder in charge

Last Sabbath morning, we left for Jordantown, N. J.; we went to the foot of Market St., where we took a carriage, in company with elder H. Davis; after we were driven aboard of the boat the rain poured down to such a degree that the indications bespoke a stormy day, and brother Davis not being well concluded to return home, which he did, we kept on our journey, in company with Mr Sockum and lady, Mr. M'Key, and another lady. We arrived at Jordantown a little before love feast was over. We met with Rev. J. Smith, and brother Joseph Long, both of whom were looking well. Brother Joseph Smith is a gentleman and a Christian in reality. He spoke to his people of the Recorder and of the editor, in the highest terms, so much so that we felt a little delicate when speaking. Brother Joseph Long, a young brother who has just started out in the field this year, is a zealous, good man, gentlemanly in his ways, and is improving finely in his studies. He preached in the morning from the words, "Thou art worthy," to be found in the Revelation. He gave us a very clever discourse, and said many good things, which the congregation seemed to enjoy; it reminded us of the Methodism of by-gone days. At 3 o'clock, P. M., we preached and administered the Lord's Supper. Though it rained all the day there were people from nearly all parts of the circuit, and we must say that it was one of the best, if not the best meeting we have been at since we have been in the Philadelphia District. We got six subscribers for the Recorder, and an opening for more. May the good Lord bless the two Josephs.

Bethel Church, Philadelphia, of which Rev. J. P. Campbell is pastor, have had their second Quarterly Meeting. We are told that Rev. Peter Gardiner preached one of the most able sermons that they ever heard; he is a master builder. We look upon brother Gardiner as one of the ablest men in the Philadelphia District. As a historian we have not got his equal. On Monday night, Rev. Campbell had his love feast, and there was a good representation of ministers in the persons of Rev. Gibbs, of Carlisle Circuit; Rev. Henry Davis, of Union Bethel; Rev. Gardiner, of Camden Circuit; Rev. Scharcman, of Chester Circuit; Rev. Stanford, of Wesley Church. There were also some seven or eight white ministers present. The church or main audience room was pretty well filled. After the bread and water had been passed around, elder Campbell announced that we could all break and eat bread. Just imagine the heavenly time—yes it was a little heaven to go to heaven in. The speaking was pretty well timed, and upon the whole we had a good time.

WORK FOR EVERY ONE.—WHY STAND YE IDLE?

Perhaps there never was a time in the history of our people in this country when there was more need of a union—a oneness of determination upon the part of our men, women and children, than there is at the present time. If a house be divided against itself, that house cannot stand. So it appears that the United States—so called—is divided against itself, a party for the Union, a party for a dissolution; a party for slavery, ignorance and degradation of the colored people; and a party for freedom, irrespective of hue, clime or condition. God has made every man his own moral, free agent; but we are sorry to say that there are many whose God-given rights have been suppressed and usurped by those claiming to be their superiors, both in goodness and numbers. There are many whose hearts have become like old Pharaoh's of old, who declared that he would not let the people of God go. Their hearts are like adamant against truth and right; therefore God, in the person of Abraham Lincoln, President, sent him down to Washington, where they meet to make laws to govern the people, and there to say to the South and all those who hold with oppression, That I, Abraham Lincoln, am the highest in authority; but I come not here as a monarch, but to reason with you about your national sins; and if ye will not hear to reason, I am authorized from high Heaven to declare deliverance from the hands of the oppressor. That declaration has been made, and the first of January, 1863, is the time for the final consummation. Many of the oppressed are delivered, and still being delivered now, and are coming to Washington, where the decree was made, and other places where they can find protection. The poor creatures have long been in darkness on account of being deprived of their God-given rights. They are very thinly clad, and being without means, of course, must fall on the sympathies of humanity. The greater part of the fall, with its white, biting, Jack Frost, is almost gone. Then comes winter, with her cold, frozen icicles, whose Northern winds almost pierce you through. O, what will become of the many thousands in their unprotected condition? The Government, probably, is doing what it can just now under the circumstances.

Then, we repeat, there is a work for every one. Why stand ye idle all the day long? Arise! arise! and to action. I say to my people all through the North, not to stand idle all the day long. Instead of buying rum, tobacco and segars, all of which you can easily do without, take those pennies and dimes, and give toward the relief of the contrabands. There is no need of idleness; but room for all to work Why stand ye idle, while there is so much to do? God holds us responsible for our stewardship here below.

SABBATH SCHOOL CONVENTION OF THE PHILADELPHIA DISTRICT.

Brethren, we wish to call your attention to a portion of the reports, as we think each school will be required to give an account of—1. How many scholars are in your school? 2. What kind of books do you use in your school? 3. Where do you get your books from? 4. What kind of Superintendents have you? 5. What hour do you meet? 6. How do you open and close your schools? 7. What mode do you adopt as teachers to improve your pupils, &c

If our preachers will look on page 21, of the Philadelphia Minutes they will see the resolution in regard to the delegates.

NOTICE

All the unordained travelling preachers, and those who have not been received in full connection with the Philadelphia District, that were left in the hands of the Committee on Examination are requested to meet said Committee, November 14, 1862, in Bethel Church, Philadelphia, Pa., at 10 o'clock, A. M.

W. D. W. SCHUREMAN, J. P. CAMPBELL, A. L. STANFORD, Committee.

For the Christian Recorder.

THE ADDRESSES OF THE CONTRABAND COMMITTEE OF THE UNION BETHEL CHURCH.

October 17, 1862.

A series of resolutions were then submitted and adopted.

A committee of twenty-one was appointed to receive all goods and moneys, which may be sent to either of the following persons:

Rev. Henry Davis, 818 Wood street
Mrs Sarah Davis, 538 Vincent street.
Mr. William Randolph, 1310 Alder street
Mrs. Elias Bowen, 136 Lynd street
Mr. Willis Scotchens, 1315 Perry street.
Mrs. Susan Faucett, 416 Lynd street.
Mr. Joseph S. Thompson, 1240 Hutchenson street.
Mrs. Margaret Hitchens, corner of Rawle and Orchard streets.
Mr. James H. Smith, 1226 Alder street.
Mrs. Hannah Scotchens, 1315 Perry street.
Mr. James S. Hollowell, 461 Kerr street.
Mrs. Maria T. Hollowell, do.
Mr. Rodman Faucett, 416 Lynd street.
Mrs. Ann Laws, 1304 Vernon street.
Mr. Joseph Draper, 1014 Vernon street.
Mrs. Sarah Saunders, 534 Vincent street.
Mr. James Joiner, 1323 White Hall street.
Miss Angelina Henry, 1235 Girard Av.
Miss Ann Cornelia Johnson, Mervine, above Oxford street.
Miss Angelina Harmon.
Mrs. Julia Shanklin.

And, further,

Resolved, That each person be requested to keep a book record of all such aid as they may receive. That the committee also have power to increase the funds for this object by any means in keeping with Christianity or morality.

Collected and paid over to the Treasurer, Richard Caulf, $15 00.

On motion,

Resolved, That the meeting adjourn, subject to the call of the chairman.

The committee is to meet on Wednesday evening, the 15th instant.

HENRY DAVIS, Chairman
EDWARD YOUNG, Secretary.

OUR WASHINGTON CORRESPONDENT

MR EDITOR:—The world is still moving onward, not only performing his elliptic revolutions and making one of the sun's grand retinue, which he swings to his side by the power of attraction, while he struts in majestic order the trackless path of boundless space, or whirls by the force of under-laws a thousand things, subjectively menial, but activities are rife in the moral and social world equally proportionate; every observable object bears the insignia of an eternal go on. This necessarily arises from the fact that no law is suspended, nor its claims of obedience neglected; for that homogeneous attraction exhibited in the atomical ingredients of a feather, is as significantly stamped with the force of immutability as that instantaneously transmitted gravitation, which binds everything, from the lowest geological stratum to the minutest particle that floats upon the boundaries of the aerial region, to the centre of its action.

So, when we contemplate the circle of human action, man, by virtue of his own constitutionality, lives in its ever-telling manifestation, despite the efforts to still him; he talks and thinks, he walks and runs, he contends and battles, he lives and dies,—onward he moves regardless of his repugnance to it.

But leaving the sphere of his extraneous mobilities, we come to consider his motive relations. We behold him moving in the confines of will and choice, treading the path of his own selection, or rejecting it with the sternness of defiance, or gliding along its defunct track with a grim countenance of aversion. Oh, what a heaven-granted legacy! but how wretchedly disposed of! Man's inadaptedness to so great a favor is evidenced by thousands of his daily follies. And likely it could not be better depicted than in the slow, tardy move of the American people to come to the place where God would have them. In short, war they have got to fight, blood they have got to shed, the firebrands of devastation they must by force of irresistible circumstances scatter, till they lay waste and desolate every unjustly erected fabrication.

These are the uncontrollable agencies which they neither can thwart, arrest, or subvert; they must, they will, they shall go on.

But, sentimentally, how indisposed they are to look the bull in the eye! Motively, how tardily they creep around the cylinder grooved spiral of God's incompressible plans! for, notwithstanding all their indefatigable resistance, they shall become "willing in the day of his power." The institution of slavery must go into an eternal nonentity, and that by the choice of the American people Southern sympathisers, under the garb of Northern Democrats, may exultingly elect and send their candidates to Congress, to stay the progress of freedom, but it will prove as vain as did the attempt of Xerxes to stay the waves of the Mediterranean. Gen McClellan may feed the worms of the Peninsula with the bodies of his stagnant army, or not them upon the suburbs of Harper's Ferry rather than move upon the enemy. Gen Buell may hold his great command in the plains of Kentucky as lifeless as death, or permit them to wager for sport, rather than become an element in the great freedom resolution, but, as Galileo said, "it moves nevertheless."

The weather here is again very dry and dusty. A few mornings ago the wind rose very high for a few moments, and the clouds of dust were so dense that I imagined it resembled the judgment day.

Prof. A. M. Green lectured on the 22d inst., in Zion Wesley Church, to a large audience of white and colored. I am informed he gave Central America fire and brimstone.

The Sabbath School Association gave an exhibition on Monday last, in Israel Church, to one of the most densely crowded houses I ever saw. The children acquitted themselves admirably, and their selections reflected great credit upon the teachers.

A venerable sister, namely, Milly Bell, died on the 22d inst. She was about 80 years of age, and had been a member of the church for 46 years. Her Christian character was unsullied to her death. Her remains were rested in Israel Church, where her funeral sermon was preached by Rev. H. M. Turner. Her high character brought together a very large concourse of people.

Yesterday some 800 new contrabands came into Washington, and went to the quarters provided for them. They are of all sizes, shapes, and colors, and many are in great need. The people of our city are making great efforts to relieve their wants.

Rev. John H. W. Burley, from the New England Conference, is here, and preaching very acceptably to our people. Rev. Mr. Burley is a great friend to literature, and is destined to be one of the great defenders of the Christian faith.

I am informed that Mr. Joseph E. Williams, of Central American notoriety, was serenaded a few nights ago, prospectively to becoming the Governor of Lincolnia. I am also informed that some parties who were very recently much opposed to the Central American project, have become its converts, and are going out in the first ship. All I have to say, is, ecce homo.

On last Thursday morning a terrible accident occurred at the Alexandria wharf, caused by the explosion of a steamboat boiler. The report was extremely terrific, but providentially the disasters were not so great as was at first supposed. A few colored people, whose names we have not just in mind, were among the killed and wounded.

H. M. T.

Washington, D. C., Oct. 24th, 1862.

EVENING SCHOOLS.

We have been informed that the "Friends" will open their evening schools for colored men and women at the corner of Raspberry and Aurora Sts, near Ninth and Locust, on the 3d of 11th month (November.)

We are also informed that these schools are free, and that the Friends have been giving their time, labor and money towards keeping them up in the winter for more than thirty years.

They also say that the men's school is not near so well attended as it should be. They spend too much money for so small an amount of benefit partaken by the colored men. Now, whose fault is it? We think it lies pretty near the feet of some of our brethren who do not appreciate such kindness. Come, brethren, this should not be so. Wake up every one of you, and fill up the seats of that excellent school!

We do not treat our friends well by being so regardless of their good-will towards us. Education is a great thing for the colored man, and these friends are ready and willing to give it to him.

THE MIDNIGHT MISSION IN LONDON.

This remarkable movement has lost nothing of its first efficiency, though it has long ceased to excite the interest of novelty. It was a bold, but an important enterprise. It is now confessedly a great success. It demanded a more than common amount of good sense, discretion, and delicacy; it laid its promoters open to severe censure in case of failure, and exposed them to great ridicule and smart gibes on the part of those who can always laugh at what they cannot understand or will not help. The brief history of this movement is instructive. Many kind and earnest ministers and laymen felt deeply for the condition of 40,000 fallen women traversing nightly the streets of London. They were not only lost sheep, but apparently inaccessible to the aggressive efforts of those whose compassion their sorrow and their sufferings had excited. That there might be no fair opening for censure, the first promoters sent out to leading and influential persons 700 notices of their design. On the 8th of February 1800, 500 invitations, enclosed in envelopes, were distributed among the women frequenting Regent Street, Coventry Street, and the Haymarket, and in the various casinos which they are in the habit of visiting, affectionately and respectfully inviting them to meet a few friends at tea in the Restaurant of St James' Hall, at half-past 11 P. M. About 250 of these "unfortunate ladies" accepted the invitation.—They were addressed by the Hon. and Rev. Baptist Noel, in words full of earnest remonstrance, Christian feeling, and in a temperate spirit, and the effect was most impressive. Numbers felt chords touched in their nature that had long ceased to vibrate, and remembered stirred that had been almost effaced, and applications many and fervent were made by the victims of a great evil for deliverance from its bondage. The results, in a mere statistical point of view, were as follows:—12 meetings of this kind were held, 2400 unfortunate women attended, 26 were restored to their friends, 18 were placed in service, 91 were gathered in various "Homes" provided for this purpose, four married, and two emigrated. A contemporaneous attempt was made by some French pastors, under the same sanction, to impress the very numerous Frenchwomen who have fallen into the same degraded condition; but here the difficulties were very great. The haunts of these unfortunates are the property of Belgians and Frenchmen, who import the unhappy creatures into this country by gross misrepresentations, and afterwards live and become rich by their gains. These taskmasters forbade their victims to accept the invitations, and threatened to fling them if they disobeyed their order. It was also found that the skepticism and separations in which they had been trained in their own country enabled them to a great extent to resist every attempt to awaken them to a sense of their position, and to throw off every earnest and salutary appeal. But excepting all the failures, there remains sufficient success to be a reward to these benevolent persons who so nobly pitied and so kindly toiled for those who did not pity themselves. The countries to which the 188 reclaimed unfortunates belonged were as follows:—50 were natives of London; two came from Wales, three from Scotland, and six from Ireland. Yorkshire furnished three, Gloucestershire four, Somersetshire eight, and two were from each of the remaining English counties. Their average age was 22 years. The sources and springs of the "social evil" are many and various. Not a few start on their unhappy career from fashionable dressmakers' establishments. Young and beautiful, they feel oppressive of fatigue of vitiated air, late hours and incessant work. They meet with them that "smile and are villains." Dissatisfied with their intolerable toils, yearning for relief and sympathy they yield, are forsaken, and die alike unknowing and unknown. Another source of this evil is found in the army. The rules of the service allow only six wives in each company, and the marriage of the soldiers is generally discouraged. Regiments sent out to India are accompanied by 30 wives, though composed of 1000 men. If young women could look forward to early marriages, they would thus be lifted out of the way of temptation. But owing to the consumption of men by the navy and army, by emigration, and by the fact that there are thousands of shopmen whose masters would dismiss them if they dared to marry, there were found at last census 1,400,000 women between 20 and 40 years of age unmarried. Servants out of places swell the ranks of the fallen. In fact, poverty has much to do as an occasion, if not a cause, of the first step downward. They see thousands of their sex on the streets gaudily attired, apparently prosperous and merry, while they are cold, and hunger bitten, and in rags.—The temptation to plunge into the current is strong, and their principles or powers of calculation are weak, and they are ruined. The upper classes also contribute their share of victims. Fashionable mothers cultivate the society of profligate young men of rank and fortune, and often reap the fruits they have been fostering in the degradation of their daughters. Nor is not more worthy of censure. We ought to be reprobated in man as fiercely as in women. If we cannot extinguish the social evil, we may do much to lessen it. Earlier marriages would be a step in the right direction. Let young men begin as their parents live after thirty years of prosperous labour. Let mothers learn to appreciate a fortune in a young man as highly as a fortune with a young man. The former is a mine, the latter is but a balance in the bank. At all events, he can not have much pity or compassion in his heart who refuses his best wishes for the success of an enterprise that has already lessened the burden of human suffering, and appears to have capabilities of increased success.—Times.

There is no medium between truth and falsehood

MISSIONS OF THE AMERICAN BOARD.

We cut the following from the report made to the late meeting of this board, in reference to its several missions:—

The mission in Southern Africa has enjoyed usual prosperity. Twenty-two were added to the church, others were hopefully converted, and church members were quickened and revived. The churches are making some progress toward self-support. A Missionary Society was formed for sustaining native home missionaries. The body of converts all so lately barbarous, contributed $750 for various purposes. But so great are the inducements to trade, growing out of the incoming civilization, that only a few of the converts have yet been induced to give themselves to the ministry of the Word.

The Turkish mission, considered as one, has 21 stations, 84 out-stations, 40 missionaries, 44 authorized native preachers, (of whom 11 are pastors,) and 125 other native co-laborers. Of churches there are 43, with 1,504 members, almost 200 of whom were received the past year; 117 common schools contain 8500 pupils, and there are 3 high-schools for training a native ministry. Dr. Goodell has nearly completed the revision of the Armeno-Turkish version of the Bible. Dr. Riggs is engaged upon the Bulgarian, and Dr Schauffler has about completed the Arabo-Turkish translation of the Scriptures. Dr. Dwight was killed in the early part of the year by a sad accident, and Mr. Colling and Mr. Merriam were murdered by Turkish brigands, followed by the death of Mrs. M. in consequence. Dr. Jewett, another laborer in this field, died suddenly at Liverpool; and another, Mr. Dunmore, has lately been killed while acting as chaplain of a Western regiment. It is but rarely that such a series of calamities comes upon a single mission in a year.

In Syria, more persons have avowed themselves Protestants in the last twelve months than during the whole previous forty years, and never were so many inquiring on the subject of religion. In Homs, a city north of Damascus, two hundred and fifty persons avowed themselves Protestants, and earnestly requested either a missionary or a native preacher. Two hundred and thirty-two Maronites in B'teddin declared their adhesion to the Gospel, and have remained steadfast for months, with a flourishing school among them. In Cana, the Protestant community has increased three fold, and greatly needs more room for religious meetings, and the same is true of Dier-Mimas. A new meeting house has been built in Merj-Ayun, costing $500, without aid from the Board. The Hasbeya church was broken up by the massacre, but a new church of seventeen members has been formed in the Merj-Ayun district, most of them from that church. Six were admitted to the church in Sidon. There were also additions to the churches in Beyrout and Abeih, and nearly forty persons are reported as hopeful candidates for admission in connexion with these three stations. Missionary associations have been formed, both of males and females, for weekly offerings to support a native preacher in Homs, and a city missionary in Beyrout, and to supply preachers for several localities in the south. They also publish a small Missionary Herald in Arabic, and have printed a collection of sacred songs in Arabic, for the Sabbath-school children, which they are taught to sing. An unusual number of adults are learning to read in order to study the Scriptures, and Bible classes have been largely increased. As a consequence of this, the old hostile religion has been revived, and there has been much persecution and suffering in various places.

In view of the probable embarrassments growing out of our civil war, liberal donations have been made to the Mahratta mission by our English and Scotch brethren in India and elsewhere. Even Hindoo gentlemen, not Christians, made donations amounting to about $200. A young Hindoo merchant of Bombay, educated in the Government schools, sent $50, accompanied by a letter, in which he says: "Though I am not a believer in Christianity, still I admire the disinterested zeal and exertions of the Christian missionaries in doing good to the people of India; and I believe the American Mission has been and is still doing much good, in the way of the moral and social elevation of my countrymen. I therefore deem it my duty, accordingly to my ability to the support of the mission in their present embarrassing circumstances." The war has been the occasion here also, as well as in several other missions, of stirring up the native Christians to good works. The total amount given and pledged by the native Christians within the bounds of this mission, exceeds $500; and the total amount from all sources is $7,687. Four new churches were organized during the year, making the number of churches twenty two. The members received were eighty five. The number of cities and villages represented in these churches is one hundred and one; showing the diffusion of Christianity among the people. Several persons of high caste were received to the church. The social condition of the Christians is improving.

The brethren among the Dacotahs, at the close of their missionary year, made a favorable report. Ten persons had recently professed their faith in the Saviour; and the whole number of communicants was eighty-three, advancing, it was believed in knowledge and stability. The schools seemed to be as prosperous as they had ever been. Such of the Indians as came more immediately under the influence of the mission, were making decided progress in civilization. The use of intoxicating liquors in the vicinity of the different stations, had become much reduced. It is not strange, therefore, that these brethren were hopeful, as well as happy, in their work. On the 18th of August, however, the families of Yellow Medicine and Hazelwood (Mr. J. P. Williamson being out of the State,) discerned the tokens of a portentous storm. They fled for their lives, and after wandering about for several days, they reached a place of safety. They would have gladly sought a refuge in Fort Ridgely, though it was beleaguered by an unknown force of Indians; but its defenders were worn out by a five days' conflict, and by no means confident of relief, had already given shelter to five hundred women and children. The missionaries had no alternative, therefore, but to press forward, avoiding dangerous localities, as far as practicable, in the hope that the Angel of the Lord would encamp round about them. This he did to the end.

The Nestorian.—This mission has suffered much during the past year. Mr Breath died of cholera in November, and was an irreparable loss; and Mrs Breath has since been obliged to return to this country with her children. The health of Mr Ambrose has required him to relinquish the missionary work. The same is also true of Mrs Thompson. The health of Mr. Coan demanding a cessation from labor, he is now on a visit to this country with his family. Dr. Perkins, the founder of the mission, is on his way back to Persia.

THE STAMP TAX.

The following schedule in relation to stamp duties, approved by Governor Hontwell, the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, is of the utmost importance to every man of business, and should be carefully studied:—

1st. Agreements or contracts, other than those hereinafter named, for each sheet or piece of paper upon which the same shall be written, five cents, .05

2d. Checks, drafts, or orders, for the payment of money, payable at sight or on demand, for any sum exceeding $20, each two cents, .02

3d. Inland bills of exchange, drafts, checks, or orders, drawn upon places other than the place of issue, if payable at sight, or on demand, are subject to the same rate of tax, viz., two cents, .02

4th. Inland bills of exchange, drafts, or orders for the payment of money otherwise than at sight or on demand, and all promissory notes on demand or on time, (excepting circulating bank notes,)

Exceeding $20,	and not exceeding	$100	.05
" 100	"	200	.10
" 200	"	300	.15
" 300	"	500	.20
" 500	"	750	.30
" 750	"	1,000	.40
" 1,000	"	1,500	.60
" 1,500	"	2,000	1.00
" 2,000	"	2,500	1.00
And for every additional $2,500, or part of $2,500, one dollar,			1.00

5th Foreign Bills of Exchange drawn out of, but payable in the United States, and all such bills, drawn in, but payable out of the United States, "when drawn singly, or otherwise than in a set of three or more," and all Letters of Credit, pay the same rates of duty as in the preceding schedule.

6th. Bills of Exchange drawn in, but payable out of the United States, "if drawn in a set of three or more," for every Bill of each set, not $150, or its equivalent, three cents, .03

Exceeding $150	and not exceeding	$250	.05
" 250	"	500	.10
" 500	"	1,000	.15
" 1,000	"	1,500	.20
" 1,500	"	2,250	.30
" 2,250	"	3,500	.50
" 3,500	"	5,000	.70
" 5,000	"	7,500	1.00

And every additional $2,500, or part thereof, .30

7th. Bonds of Indemnity, fifty cents, .50

8th. Certificates of Stock in any incorporated company, each twenty-five cents, .25

9th. Certificates of Deposit of Bank, Trust Company, Banker, or person acting as such, not exceeding $100, two cents, .02
Exceeding $100, five cents, .05

10th. Powers of Attorney—
For sale or transfer of stocks or bonds, or for the collection of dividends or interest, twenty-five cents, .25
Or proxy for voting at an election, ten cents, .10
For receiving or collecting rents, .25
General Powers—For all purposes other than those above specified, 1.00

NOTE.—General powers will not be valid for the specific objects above named, without the addition of the stamp required therefor.

11th. Protests, each twenty-five cents, .25

12th. Tax on all dividends, and on all sums added to or contingent funds, 3 per cent.

13th. Stamps issued for specific instruments cannot be used for any other, (see Sec. 96.)

14th. The person using or affixing a stamp must write thereupon the initials of his name, and the date when used, (Sec. 99.)

The penalty for making, signing, or issuing any instrument, document, or paper of any kind, without the same having thereon a stamp to denote the duty, is fifty dollars, and such paper will be invalid and of no effect. (Sec. 95.)

The certification of checks, already duly stamped, will require no additional stamp for such certification

The stamp tax upon protests should be added to the expense thereof

Checks dated, or payable ahead, are subject to taxation as promissory notes.

Stamps are not required upon documents made prior to Oct. 1st, 1861, excepting upon foreign bills of exchange, which must be stamped on acceptance.

Stamps must be affixed to all documents by the party issuing the same, before presentation at bank; and all documents issued by a bank must be stamped by it before delivery, as required by resolution unanimously passed at a meeting of Bank Officers, Sept. 15.

Orders to pay dividends are not Powers of Attorney; but, like drafts at sight, are subject to the stamp of two cents.

Bills of Exchange, drawn in duplicate, must both be stamped.

The omission to cancel the stamps on checks does not invalidate the check, but subjects the maker to a fine of fifty dollars.

Revenue Stamps may be ordered from the Internal Revenue Office at Washington, in quantities to suit the purchasers. Orders should cover remittances of Treasury Notes, or an original certificate of a United States Assistant Treasurer, or designated depository, of a deposit made for the purchase of stamps.

The following commission, payable in stamps, will be allowed:—

On purchases of	$50 or more,	2	per cent.
" "	100 "	3	"
" "	500 "	4	"
" "	1,000 "	5	"

In sending orders for stamps, it should be remembered that every stamp expresses on its face its kind as well as its denomination, and that each stamp must be used for the purpose thus specified, and for no other. Every correspondent is requested to give the State, as well as town and county of his residence.

If not otherwise instructed, the stamps will be transmitted by mail.

In regard to Receipts and Licenses, it will be noticed that the tax is levied on the receipts from the first day of September, notwithstanding the fact that the law was not enforced at that time. The license tax must be paid at once, as most of the collectors are ready to receive the money, and heavy penalties are imposed for transacting business without having taken a license. As this is a matter of great importance, and one which seems to be neglected, we give the section of the law relating to the penalty:—

SECTION 59. And be it further enacted, That if any person or persons shall exercise or carry on any trade or business hereinafter mentioned, for the exercising or carrying on of which trade or business a license is required by this act, without taking out such license as in that behalf required, he, she, or they shall, for every such offence, respectively, forfeit a penalty equal to three times the amount of duty or sum of money imposed for such license, one moiety thereof to the use of the United States, the other moiety to the use of the person who, if a collector, shall first discover, and if other than a collector, shall first give information of the fact whereby such forfeiture was incurred.

The licenses taken out are to be dated September 1. The following persons are required to take out licenses for the transaction of their business:

Apothecaries, Auctioneers, Bankers, Billiard table keepers, Do. for private use, Brewers, Brokers, Bowling alleys, Cattle brokers, Claim agents, Coal oil distillers, Commercial brokers, Confectioners, Circus keepers, Dentists, Eating houses, Horse dealers, Hotels, Jugglers, Lawyers, Livery stable keepers, Manufacturers, Peddlers, Photographers, Pawnbrokers, Physicians, Retail dealers, Retail dealers in liquors, Rectifiers, Soap boilers, Surgeons, Tobacconists, Theatres, Tallow chandlers, Wholesale dealers.

EDWARD IRVING: HIS GREATNESS AND HIS WEAK POINT.

Where was the flaw? What was the fault? What shipwrecked Edward Irving? Carlyle, it is well known, attributes it to the "poison of popular applause." The world of fashion, in which he had looked to see the "gum flowers of Almack's" changed into the "roses of a new Eden," suddenly, after its manner, left him; "forgot this man—who, unhappily, could not in turn forget," and so plunged into excitements of a spiritual intoxication. We do think, and we rejoice to say it, that Mrs Oliphant seems to have shown that this was not the case. There is, at least, in all the materials she has brought forward, no evidence of such a crisis and reaction. On the contrary, Irving's progress all through his life seems to have been steady and continuous, ever higher and truer. As a young preacher, he is more religious than when a student. As minister in London, his personal piety is deeper than when he preached in Glasgow. Year after year domestic joys and sorrows, and the events of his ministry, made him more earnest, living nearer to God, and more under the power of divine things; and the farther down he goes into the darkness of mistake and ruin, the more is his struggling sincerity towards God apparent. The thing that ruined him was not any particular incident, such as the gain or the loss of London celebrity. It was far deeper and far earlier than that; and there is not a page of this memoir that does not bear testimony to it. Mrs. Oliphant claims it as a merit that in writing this life, she has been "interested chiefly with the man himself," rather than with the questions that lay around him. An unkind critic might say that it was very fit she should be so, for this was precisely what the man himself was; and the saying would be false, yet not without some relation to the truth. This noble soul was tainted from his earliest years with egotism and vanity. While a young man, and without much sense of religion, it is very manifest. It occupies much too large a space in his devotion of himself to the Christian ministry. Love of eccentricity, love of applause, scorn of others, pride of genius, pride of religious imagination, all accompany it. Yet such was the wealth of his nature, and such the loveableness of the man, that this hardly injured him, in the merely human sphere. Mr. Carlyle gives him this memorable testimony: "But for Irving, I had never known what the communion of man with man means. He was the freest, brotherliest, bravest human soul mine ever came in contact with: I call him, on the whole, the best man I have ever, after trial enough, found in this world, or now hope to find. But that utter want of humility, which hardly impaired his nobility as a man among men, he carried into a higher sphere. He became a more earnest, a much more religious man—but hardly more humble or more self forgetful. He had carefully educated himself into singularity and self-admiration; and he found it impossible to divest himself of it when he came to deal, and that very earnestly, with God and his truth and grace. And so the hero stumbled where God will guide the meek, the humble, and the child-like, and the wayfaring man, though a fool."

But hath he stumbled that he should fall? God forbid. The whole latter part of Irving's career, full of failure and ruin externally, seems to us, far more than the earlier portion, to show the true heart of the true man cleaving truly to his God. And if, indeed, there was that flaw in his nature, the origin of all his troubles, surely never man was passed through a hotter furnace to purge it out. All that "destruction of the flesh," all that wasting and terrible process of humiliation, which the record of these volumes will records, was, we doubt not, for the saving of the spirit in the day of the Lord—even in that day of perfect salvation and humiliation, when he was able to say, "If I die, I die unto the Lord."

Leaving Mrs. Oliphant, whose beautiful book we have treated rather unjustly, let us quote what the most powerful writer of our age has finally to say of his friend: "Irving clave to his Belief, as to his soul's soul; followed it whithersoever, through earth or air, it might lead him; toiling as never man toiled to spread it, to gain the world's ear for it—in vain. Ever wilder waxed the confusion without and within. The misguided, noble minded, had now nothing left but to die."

"Adieu, thou first Friend; adieu, while this confused Twilight of Existence lasts! Might we meet where Twilight has become day."

Amen! Amen! for the living and the dead.

News of the Churches.

IS YOUR SOUL SAFE?

These are days of unusual anxiety. People are deeply moved about the safety of the country, of their property, of their friends and children. But what are country, property, and friends, if the soul remains exposed to the wrath of Almighty God? I have seen great crowds at various points, where men pressed upon each other to obtain exemption from draft into the army; but what is exemption from the privations and perils of military duty, if the soul be not exempt from the dangers and penalties which hang over an unsanctified heart and life! Many who have hitherto lived in comfort and ease, by the hard necessities of the times are fretted and wondering how they are to secure their bread and living; but what is meat and drink to the great question of the safety of the immortal soul!

I have recently been over the scenes of the late conflicts, and upon grounds still blood stained, desolate, and full of new graves and piles of putrifying dead. I have looked upon the still plain evidences of the anxiety of the combatants to save themselves from each other's power. And as I gazed upon houses riddled, fences splintered into atoms, trees split into fragments, and walls of stone, and even the earth ploughed and torn with the dreadful instruments of destroyed destruction, hurled by one army upon the other, I could well enter into the feelings which induced the men to gather into pits, and hide themselves behind embankments, and build up before them breastworks of stone and wood, and shelters of every imaginable sort. But at one of these places, where multitudes had intrenched themselves to receive the dreadful shock of battle, I picked up the cover of a little book bearing these words: *Your

JEWISH PRAYERS.

At the laying of the corner stone of the Hebrew Orphan Asylum in New York, on the 30th of September, the following prayer was offered by Rabbi Isaacs:

Thou Holy One of Israel, whose glory exceeds all definition; whose attributes alike defy comparison or computation! From Thy pavilion, high enthroned, Thou guidest the tempest; by Thy supreme direction the storm is calmed, the raging deep quelled. Age after age witnesseth Thy power and boundless condescension. Succeeding generations attest Thy praise. In the decay of worlds, Thou alone endurest, unchanging and unchanged.

Great Cause of all, a portion of Thy people have assembled here this day to commence a labor of love. Actuated by those principles of humanity which Thou hast implanted in every breast, they have inaugurated a structure they design erecting for the purpose of affording spiritual instruction and temporal support to those poor children of sorrow who have been deprived of their earthly parents. Thou, who art the Father of orphans, will not withhold Thy approval from an institution to teach the lear of grief of Thee and Thy unlimited goodness.

In this act of philanthropy, the members of the Hebrew Benevolent Society have been materially assisted by the State and City authorities, who, with their characteristic liberality, have aided in placing the banner which was displayed in the Orient—engraven with characters of life, light, and glory, containing within its centre Thy ineffable Name—side by side with the flag unfurled in the West, so that entwined they may embrace each other and neither of them be tarnished with the contact. For this and kindred acts of true liberality, which Thy people have at all times received from their fellow-citizens, we ask thy blessing for them, and for this, the beloved land of our adoption. Oh that it may please Thee to restore union and peace, to supersede the present dissension and war!

We pray Thee, prosper the work in which the sons of Abraham, of Isaac, and Jacob, are engaged. Vouchsafe to all that are employed in this act of elevating the lowly, from the veteran who has this day laid the first stone, to the humblest of Thy servants, who presumes to supplicate for others, the happiness of bringing this work to successful issue, so that they may witness the ingathering of the orphans now left without succor, and teach them to bless Thee, our Father—our God! Amen, Selah!

A LESSON FOR OUR LAND.

Three hundred and forty-five years ago, the first thrill of the earthquake of the Reformation was felt in Europe. Men knew so little of its nature that they imagined it could be suppressed. They threw their weight upon the heaving earth, and hoped to make it lie still. They knew not that they had a power to deal with, which was made more terrible in its outburst by the attempt to confine it. As the result of the opposition to the Reformation, Europe was made desolate. After the final struggle of the Thirty Years' War, Europe seemed ruined, its fields had been drenched with blood, its cities laid in ashes, hardly a family remained undivided, and the fiercest passions had been so aroused that it seemed as if they could never be allayed.

Yet the establishment of the work of the Reformation has richly repaid Europe for all she endured. The earthquake has gone, the streams of desolation have been chilled, and the nations make a jubilee over the glorious anniversary of that grand movement which, by the depravity of men, was made the occasion of so much disturbance and misery. The evils of which the Reformation was the occasion have passed away. We must go to the page of history to know what they were. The blessings of which the Reformation was the cause, abide; we feel them in our homes, in the church, in the state; they are inwoven with the life of our life Once feeling them, we know that this would be no world to live in without them.

And to them not comfort for our desolate and mourning land in these facts? We are trembling and weeping as the molten and seething elements make the earth quake, and pour themselves out in red and wasting streams. But their outbursting is essential to their consolidation, and to their bearing part in the work of the world. What was once lava, marking its track in ruin, shall one day lie below fair fields, whose richness it has made. The olive shall stay the vine, and the shadows of the foliage of vine and olive shall ripple over flowers; and women and children, lovelier than the fruits and the flowers shall laugh and sing amid them. The blessings from the upheaving of the heart of the world shall gladden the children of those who gazed on it with wo-begone eyes. Had a war of three hundred years been necessary to sustain the Reformation, we now know the Reformation would ultimately have repaid all the sacrifices it demanded. Had our fathers surrendered the truth, even under that pressure to which ours, as yet, is but a feather, how would we have cursed their memory, as we contrasted what we were with what we might have been.

And shall we despond, draw back, and give our names to the reproach of generations to come, because the burden of the hour seems to us so heavy? God, in his mercy, forbid. If all others are ready to yield to despondency, and abandon the struggle, we, children of the Reformation, dare not. That struggle has taught two lessons which must never be forgotten. One is that the true and the good must be secured at any price. They are beyond all price. We dare not compute their cost. They are the soul of our being, and the whole world is as dust in the balance against them. No matter what is to be paid for them, we must not hesitate to lay down their redemption price. The other grand lesson is that their price is never paid in vain. What we give can never be lost, unless we give too little. If we give all, we shall have all. All shall come back. Our purses shall be in the mouths of our sacks. We shall have both the corn and the money. But if we are niggard, we lose all—lose what we meant to buy, lose what we have given.

Personal.

Presidency of Harvard College.—Rev Thomas Hill, late President of Antioch College, has been renominated by the Fellows of Harvard University for the Presidency of the Institution. It was not known, at the time his nomination was before the Board, a few months since, that he had resigned the Presidency of Antioch College, and his connexion with that institution, it is said, had much influence in their causing his rejection. He has since been elected by the Board.

Conversion of the Last Descendant of Timour.—The Baptist Missionaries at Delhi, notwithstanding recent discouragements, are cheered by manifest tokens of the Divine presence. Among their converts is a nephew of the ex king, the only remaining member of the great house of Timour in Delhi who can lay claim to pure royal blood. He is the author of a tract on the Divinity of Christ, and has had to encounter much persecution from Mohammedans; one rich Moslem offered a native christian a large estate if he would persuade him against changing his religion. Another relation of the ex king has been hopeful and several persons of various ranks are seeking admission to the church.

Capt Wm L. Hudson, of the U. S. Navy, died suddenly, on Wednesday night, the 15th inst, in Brooklyn. He was about 70 years of age, a native of New York and had spent most of his life in active service, having entered the Navy in 1816 and risen through every grade from the forecastle to the quarter deck. He was second in command of the Exploring Expedition under Capt. Wilkes, and in 1854 he took command of the U. S. steam frigate Niagara, in the Atlantic Cable Expedition.

The Hon Townsend Harris, who has just returned from his mission in Japan, says that the last person he parted with was "Tommy," who was in fine health and spirits. "Tommy" was attached to the American Embassy before he visited the country, and resumed his position on his return.

Judge Rice, of Illinois, has decided that colored persons are not privileged to teach school in that State, and that the public moneys cannot be appropriated to pay their salaries.

Mrs. Douglas resides near the Douglas Hospital, Washington, and is constant in her visits to comfort the sick, in the small villa originally occupied by the Illinois statesman.

Ex President Buchanan will in a short time present to the people of the United States his long-prepared and elaborate defence of his administration.

Domestic Items.

The Draft in the State.—Harrisburg, Oct. 24.—In one or two districts a disposition has been manifested to resist the enforcement of the draft. Gov. Curtin has prepared himself fully for any emergency, and has authority to use any troops within the State to enforce the laws at every hazard.

The draft has been patriotically sustained in nearly all the counties, and transportation has been provided for most of the drafted men to their different places of rendezvous, and in a few days the large force will be at the service of the Government.

Our Guardian Bird in Battle.—In a letter dated at Corinth, Oct. 12, written by Chester D. Howe, of Co. E. Twelfth Illinois Volunteers, is the following. Speaking of the recent fight at Corinth, he says:

"The finest thing I ever saw was a live American eagle, carried by the Eighth Iowa, in the place of a flag. It could fly off over the enemy, during the hottest of the fight, then would return and seat himself upon his pole, clap his pinions, shake his head and start again. Many and hearty were the cheers that arose from our lines as the old fellow would sail around, first to the right and then to the left, and always return to his post, regardless of the storm of leaden hail that was flying around him. Something seemed to tell us that that battle was to result in our favor, and when the order was given to charge, every man went at them with fixed bayonets, and the enemy scattered in all directions, leaving us in possession of the battle-field."

A Hospital Chapel.—Rev. Nathaniel West, chaplain of the West Philadelphia Army Hospital, has issued an appeal to our citizens in behalf of the construction of a hospital chapel. The cost of such a building he estimates at $1,500. Dr. West says:

"All in authority, the general commanding, the medical director, the quartermasters, the surgeon in charge, the chaplains, and all concerned, heartily concur in the project of erecting a hospital chapel. The plan and specifications are prepared, the site is selected, and nothing but money wanted. Thus the Christian people of Philadelphia will not withhold. A city whose devotion to the army has been so largely proved, whose loyalty to the Government has been so eminently manifested, will surely give her sick and wounded a 'house for God,' that it may prove 'the gate of heaven to their souls.' Nothing can be done, however, until the sum required is secured."

Davis' Opinion of Rebel Officers.—In a recent message to the Rebel Congress, Jeff. Davis speaks in the following terms:

"While the deficiency of competent officers exists in some cases, there is a large excess in others. Numerous regiments and companies have been so reduced by the casualties of war, by sickness and other causes, as to be comparatively useless under the present organization. There are companies in the army in which the number of officers exceeds that of the privates present for duty, and regiments in which the number of such privates does not exceed that which is required for a single effective company."

Brilliant Victory at Maysville, Arkansas.—St. Louis, Mo., Oct. 24, 1862.—Our arms are entirely successful against North-west Arkansas.

General Schofield, finding that the enemy had encamped at Pea Ridge, sent General Blunt, with the first division, westward, and moved towards Huntsville with the rest of his forces.

General Blunt, by making a hard night's march, reached and attacked the rebel force at Maysville, near the North-west corner of Arkansas, at 7 o'clock, A. M., on the 22d instant. The enemy was under cover, and estimated at some 5,000 to 7,000 strong.

The engagement lasted almost an hour, and resulted in the total rout of the enemy, with the loss of all his artillery, a battery of six-pounders, a large number of horses, and a portion of their transportation, camp and garrison equipage.

The War in Virginia—From Sigel's Advance.—Washington, Oct. 25.—The Evening Star says: "We have very late information from the region of country between the lines of Sigel's army corps and Gordonsville. Three days ago the only rebel troops occupying it were a regiment of North Carolina cavalry and a regiment of infantry. They had their headquarters at Warrenton, with pickets thrown out along the Rappahannock, and, at times, small scouting parties in various directions.

"Culpeper Court House had then ceased to be the railway terminus, at which the supplies from Richmond for Lee's army were put on wagons. They are now taken to Staunton by rail, and wagoned from there all the way up to Winchester."

Affairs in M'Clellan's Army—Rebels Retreating to Gordonsville.—Washington, Oct. 26.—The recent reconnoissance from General Sigel's command to Leesburg discovered that the rebel General Mumford is there, with 1,500 men and some artillery.

Another reconnoissance to Thoroughfare Gap discovered a small rebel force at New Baltimore.

Late Items from the South.—The Richmond Enquirer of the 20th contains copious extracts from the New York Times of the 17th inst. It admits that "General Bragg has fallen back from his late position a distance of forty miles, for the purpose of securing subsistence. The combinations of the enemy, who had been strongly reinforced, doubtless rendered such a step absolutely necessary. It is surmised, also, that Rosecrans had commenced a strategic movement to form a junction with Buell, and cut off his army entirely."

The Wilmington Journal of last Monday says that the sudden change to cold on last Saturday night had a deadly effect on five hundred pending cases of yellow fever. . . . Coffins are in great demand, and cannot be obtained as fast as the orders die. The number of new cases on last Saturday was 56, and on last Sunday about 40. The paper making these announcements suspends its issue in consequence of all its hands nearly having died or fled the infected city.

The Raleigh Standard notices the death of General George B. Anderson, Confederate States Army, from a wound received in the foot at the battle of Sharpsburgh, Maryland.

The Richmond Enquirer clamors for the most stringent measures to prevent the crime of desertion, otherwise called "straggling," and boasts that the Kanawha salt mines are furnishing enough salt for the curing of all the pork now almost ready to be slaughtered. The price of salt at the mines is one dollar per bushel—"Confederate money at the bank rates of any of the Southern States taken at par." The capacity of the furnaces now at work is stated to be about equal to 7,500 bushels per day.

The rebel loss in the three days' battle of Corinth is estimated by an army correspondent of the Atlanta Confederacy at 3,000 killed, wounded and missing. Our loss is put down by the same authority at hardly less than 2,000. The letter concludes thus: "The future is dark in this part of the country. I fear other reverses are in store for us, including loss of much ground now held by us. The enemy can readily in a few days concentrate three to one against our forces."

The Wilmington (N. C.) Journal (Rebel) says that seven regiments of negroes, which have been in camps of instruction under white officers for three months, and which have become remarkably proficient in drill, have arrived to garrison the towns and fortifications during the sickly season.

Mr Lyons has proposed a resolution in the Rebel Congress, offering $20 to every negro who should kill a white Union soldier.

The New Charleston Ram.—The good people of Charleston, South Carolina, have had some sort of grand mudscraph celebration in their city in "lap ping" a marine ram, or "ladies' gunboat," built there.

Mr Yeadon, who was selected to administer the rite of baptism, made a speech of several hours' length, and quoted, of course,

"O woman, in our hours of ease," &c.,

and of the boat—

"She'll walk the waters as a thing of life," &c

After his literary exertion, Mr. Yeadon is reported to have performed the rite of baptism in the following invocation:

"With all solemnity and reverence, and invoking on these the blessing of Almighty God, noble boat, 'Palmetto State,' I baptize thee in the name of the patriotic ladies of South Carolina. Amen."

A Movement Along the Whole Line.—After the many reported changes in military affairs, we have at last stated that the Army of the Potomac is moving along the whole line into Virginia, and that important events may be daily expected.

The advance of the army of the Potomac commenced October 26th, and there is reason to believe that the movement will be general along the whole line, placing the Potomac in our rear.

At daylight the cavalry force of General Pleasanton —with four pieces of artillery — passed the new pontoon bridge at Berlin, eight miles east of Harper's Ferry, and proceeded direct to Lovettsville, in Loudon county.

At Lovettsville our cavalry entered about 8 o'clock, in the morning, and the few rebel pickets stationed there fled before them, in the direction of Leesburg. The people of this loyal town, especially the ladies, received our troops with great enthusiasm, and the Stars and Stripes were thrown out in all parts of the town. Many of their fugitive husbands and sons returned with the cavalry, and the demonstration was most earnest and unmistakable.

Another Disastrous Attack on the Charleston and Savannah Railroad.—The rebel papers report an attack by the Federal forces on Pocotaligo and Coosawatchie, on the Charleston and Savannah Railroad, on the 22d instant, and their repulse. It is said that our troops were driven back to their boats, and left their dead upon the field.

Removal of Gen. Buell.—Gen. Buell has been removed from the command of the forces in Kentucky, and Gen. Rosecrans ordered to assume the position. This is the sequel of the late campaign in the West, around which so much interest has hung, North and South. It is not a little singular that the campaign for which Gen. Bragg receives the marked displeasure of his Government, excites likewise on the part of the rebels the utmost degree of applause for Gen. Bragg. Neither General has done the work that was expected at his hands, and they will probably share the same fate.

No better selection for a successor to Gen. Buell can be found than Gen. Rosecrans. He is one of our ablest generals and most popular men. His campaign in Western Virginia, and latterly in the West, will form one of the brightest pages in the history of this war, and place their hero as one of our greatest military officers. General Rosecrans is quick in design and rapid in execution, and when his blows fall upon rebels they are of the hardest kind. From the new commander of the Army of the Ohio we look for the achievement of grand results. He has a large army, well equipped as the materiel of war, and we feel sure will not let it lie idle. The design of Bragg is now known to be Nashville, and we hope such measures will be taken as will prevent that city, with its garrison, 7,000 in number, from falling into the hands of the rebels. We congratulate the Army of the Ohio and the people of Kentucky in having at last at their head a live general.

Important News from Tennessee and Kentucky.—Louisville, Oct. 22.—On Sunday, the rebel General Forest, with a considerable force of rebel cavalry, commenced crossing the Cumberland river. His advance, one thousand strong, encamped on the Gallatin pike, seven miles north of Nashville.

Gen Negley immediately dispatched Col. Miller, with a detachment, to intercept them. The rebels were attacked on Monday at daylight, and driven in great confusion across the Cumberland river. But few were killed or wounded, but a number of thereabouts, including a Colonel, were captured.

From the West and South-west.—The intelligence from the West and South-west is varied and interesting.

From Galveston, Texas, we learn that that city was evacuated by the rebels on the 4th instant, the last day of grace accorded the citizens by the commander of the United States forces, for the removal of the women and children.

On the following day the city was occupied by our troops.

Galveston is the most populous and commercial city of Texas. It is situated upon an island, at the mouth of Galveston Bay, and is about four hundred and fifty miles south-west of New Orleans. It was stated a few weeks since that several mortar-boats had been sent thither, and they probably operated first against Sabine City, and having accomplished the capture of that point, next visited Galveston.

On Thursday, Colonel McCook, Acting Brigadier-General, with five hundred cavalry, left Crab Orchard, a village in Lincoln county, Kentucky, sixty miles south-east from Frankfort, and moving northward towards Richmond, the capital of Marion county, a village of some two thousand inhabitants, captured at that point two hundred sick and wounded rebels, whom they subsequently released on parole.

Patriotic Lady in Frederick.—During the recent rebel raid into Maryland, the wife of a National officer, the latter of whom is connected with the Potomac Home Guard, secured some ninety rifles belonging to the men and threw them into a well in a main street of the city, to prevent their falling into the hands of the rebels. The lady is the wife of Lieut. Groffy, of the regiment referred to. Her patriotism has been the subject of warm commendation in social circles during the week.

FOREIGN NEWS.

Advices from Italy say that Garibaldi is about to issue another manifesto, and that he will endeavor to carry out his project of taking Rome. This can hardly be true at present. The Liverpool cotton market was rather flat, with no change in prices. Breadstuffs were easier, and provisions steady.

The steamship Australia, from Liverpool on the 10th instant, and Queenstown on the 11th, has advices from Europe two days later than were received by the Kangaroo. The news is interesting, and, in some respects, important.

The English press continued its comments on the President's Emancipation Proclamation, and managed to find a good deal of fault with it. It was reported that the "Southern Association" in Liverpool had agreed to a proposition which has for its object the memorializing of the British Government for the recognition of the Confederate States. The movement was chiefly caused by the remarks of Mr Gladstone, at Newcastle.

It was also said that the members of the Liverpool Chamber of Commerce were about to petition Government as to the necessity of recognizing the South. There appears to be no danger of recognition, however. The Liverpool Post of the 11th says "Two of the highest class Liverpool houses received yesterday evening a telegram from their headquarters in London that the British and French Governments have lost no time in announcing that they are resolved on persisting in a policy of perfect neutrality." The city editor of the Times asserts that the feeling among the commercial classes of London is so strongly opposed as ever to any action on the part of the Government toward a formal recognition of the dissolution of the Union, and he says that there is a suspicion that the desire for such a recognition comes rather from the North than the South. The London Commercial Daily Last says it is enabled to state that there is no likelihood of an immediate recognition of the Southern Confederacy.

There is an exhibition in Paris an instrument which imitates the human voice so as to be mistaken for it. It represents a female seated, and the larynx is constructed on physiological principles of construction. The voice has the compass of two octaves, and sings any air with the tone of the female voice.

Garibaldi to the Swedes

Varnhams, Thursday, October 2.

To the People of Stockholm:

When you came from the manufactories where manual labor renders still more vigorous the temper of your soul, or when you leave your domestic hearth, where the holiest of affections raises your soul to sublimity, and strong in your numbers, you assemble in your public places to manifest your feelings, you never think of stifling your thoughts—your words, your cheers, are the reward of the kindness shown to those who suffer from temporary misfortunes, or those who lie prostrate by slavery.

You, also, fair-haired Scandinavian people, sent me an affectionate greeting when God gave me strength to wrench the crown of thorns from the brow of our Southern brethren. Now you assemble once more to offer to a good cause the moral support of your good wishes—the real union of the Italian nation—Italy matures at home.

In the name of my countrymen, I thank you, O noble race, one of the finest in Europe! Let us all unite to raise and enforce the great voice of affection and concord.

The sword as a crime, as the punishment of death is an abuse, and conquest an insult.

Let us make war on anarchy—on, and labor a hymn to the Most High. When bells and cannons shall have been turned into productive instruments, force, disarmed, will return to the darkness from whence it has escaped for the misfortune of mankind, and the dawn of felicity will whiten the horizon, to flood the whole world to the depths of its rays.

From the depths of my soul, greeting and gratitude people of Stockholm.

GARIBALDI.

The Social, Civil and Statistical Association, of The Colored People of Pennsylvania open a subscription list to aid the freed men at Port Royal and other points where they may be located, and respectfully ask the co-operation of the colored citizens and others in this city, or elsewhere, in money or clothing.

Any amount of value received will be acknowledged, with the name of the donor, in the Recorder, where a constant record will be kept.

Subscriptions may be sent to Jacob C. White, at the office of the Lebanon Cemetery, 711 Lombard Street, and also to William Still, 107 North Fifth Street, and to Rev. E. Weaver, 610 Pine Street

	PAID.
Statistical Society,	$40 00
Clinton Miller,	2 00
William Still,	5 00
Robert Alger,	[illegible]
Henry Minturn,	2 00
Catherine Johnson,	2 00
Yasti Lawks,	2 00
Wm. Warricks,	2 00
Harriet Shorter,	1 00
Sarah S. Hawkins,	1 00
Rev. Jonathan C. Gibbs,	1 00
James P. Clay,	1 00
Benjamin F Hill,	2 00
S. M. S.,	2 00
Elizabeth Gordon,	1 00
F. J. Dreer,	5 00

It affords us pleasure to acknowledge the receipt of ten dollars, the proceeds of Miss Anna E. Dickinson's lecture at Concert Hall for the contrabands, contributed to the S. C. and Statistical Association, to be applied as intended. Wm. Still.

Our Soc. (S. C. and Statistical Association) for Colored People of Penna

ADVERTISEMENTS.

MRS MARTHA COLLINS.

730 Russell Street, above Fitzwater.

Begs leave to inform her friends and the public generally, that she has opened an INFANT SCHOOL for Boys and Girls, to whom she will pay special attention in teaching the primary departments of Reading, Writing, and Arithmetic, also Singing, upon the most reasonable and accommodating terms. She does not hesitate to say that she will be able to please all who may give her a trial.

MRS. S. SHORTER HAWKINS'

DRY GOODS, HOSIERRY, AND TRIMMING STORE.

No 613 Lombard Street, Philadelphia

Mrs. H calls the attention of her friends and patrons to a new stock of Fall and Winter Goods, consisting of Delaines, Calicoes, Flannels, Muslins, Dells, Shawls, Bonnets, and Hoop-skirts.

N B. Regalia and Dress Trimmings still on hand. All will be sold as near the old prices as possible. Call and see

PERRY & FITZGERALD'S

PROCESS FOR MAKING LIGHT, NUTRITIOUS, AND UNADULTERATED BREAD, WITHOUT FERMENTATION.

The new process of bread-making, patented by Perry & Fitzgerald, removes all the objections which have hitherto rendered it impossible to manufacture perfectly pure, sweet, and nutritious bread. The entire process is performed by mechanical means, and is eminently cleanly.

The process consists in mixing the flour in a closed vessel, and the application of pure carbonic gas, under pressure, by which the dough mass is made thoroughly light and ready to be discharged into pans, for baking in the brief space of fifteen or twenty minutes. The "charge" is usually 280 pounds, and each machine completes the operation, in all its details, from the putting in of the flour to the discharging of the dough, in from twenty five to forty minutes.

The Invention of Perry & Fitzgerald effects a revolution in the preparation of bread, by establishing a system of wholesale manufacture not subject to the vicissitudes and evils of fermentation, but exact and certain in its results. 2. Because, by the substitution of mechanical for manual labor, and in the superior value of the article produced, it promises large profits upon the capital employed. 3. Because such employment of capital, as well as the protection afforded by the patent, gives adequate security against competition. But whilst preventing undue competition it provides none of the evils of a monopoly, because it leaves the consumer at all times in possession of his former means of supply, to be resorted to, should the monopoly become prejudicial.

The application of pure carbonic acid gas, under pressure, to a mechanically kneaded dough-mass, as in the invention of Perry & Fitzgerald, did not occur to Dr Ure, though he seems to have had a clear foreboding of the importance of the artificial use of the gas, when he states, hypothetically, that "if water, highly impregnated with carbonic acid gas, be used for kneading the dough, the resulting bread will be somewhat spongy. Could a light article," he continues, "be produced in this way, then, as the sugar would remain undecomposed, the bread would be so much the sweeter and more nourishing."

What to Dr Ure, was evidently a dearly comprehended chemical truth, has been practically developed by the brilliant invention of Perry & Fitzgerald. Patently will hold their names in grateful remembrance, as among the most eminent benefactors of mankind.

IT. For Wholesomeness.—Being free from the deleterious substances which are the product of fermentation, or chemical reagents, by the old modes, the bread made by the New Process is easy of digestion, and agrees with the most delicate stomach. "To dyspepticism" says Dr Cox, (late of the N. Y. Medical College,) "it will be invaluable, as they will be able to use it when the fermented manufactured bread has been found to have signally failed as an article of diet." Says the London Medical Times and Gazette:—

"Since the introduction of the new unfermented bread, there have already been received from members of the medical profession, who have recommended it to their practice, as well as from non-professional sources, accounts of the really astonishing results that have followed its use in cases of deranged digestion and assimilation. Many persons have reported their recovery to health, after years of suffering and misery, by the simple use of the bread as a diet. Many cases have also been reported by medical men in practice, in which certain alarming complaints, which had remained intractable under every kind of treatment, have yielded as if by magic, almost immediately after adopting the use of the unfermented bread."

"The beneficial effects of the new bread are attributable to two causes. The one is the absence of the prejudicial matters imparted to ordinary bread by the process of fermentation; and the other is the presence in the bread, unchanged, of those elements which are the essential agents of digestion and assimilation."

The most eminent members of the medical profession, both in Great Britain and in the United States, not only speak in the highest terms of the case with which it is digested, and of its rich, nourishing qualities, but also of the capability of its particular constituents, and wonderful keeping properties. The absence of acidity and other strong flavors, which, in a greater or less degree, are characteristic of fermented bread, renders the new bread peculiarly delicate to the taste.

V. For Economy and Economy.—By the use of mechanical means, instead of manual labor, a barrel of flour is converted into baked loaves in forty-five minutes; whereas, by the ordinary process, four or five hours are occupied in the formation of the sponge," and a further time in kneading, raising, and baking the dough.

"The stubbornness of the consumption of bread," says a correspondent of the Journal of the Society of Arts, "renders it an article peculiarly suitable to be prepared and supplied by a public company. And since the new process removes all the vicissitudes of manufacture, and the expense of the machinery gives a comparative monopoly, the supply of bread to parts at once in the same category with gas, water, or other articles of prime necessity."

VAN RIPER & CAMP,

EXCLUSIVE MANUFACTURERS,

Corner of Broad and Buttonwood Streets,

PHILADELPHIA.

A SERMON

ON

SECRET SOCIETIES.

Preached in Portland, Oregon, October 31, 1858. By Rev. P. B. Chamberlain, pastor of the First Congregational Church. Third edition. Price 10 cents.—$1.00 per dozen, $7.00 per 100. Will be sent by mail, on receipt of the money and direction, Wm. S. Young, No 625 Race street, Philadelphia

THE EVANGELICAL REPOSITORY.

A MONTHLY PERIODICAL,

Edited by Revs. J. T. Cooper, and W. W. Barr.

CONTENTS OF THE NOVEMBER NUMBER.

Matthew Henderson, Junior—The Great Southern Rebellion—The Freed People of South Carolina—Proceedings of the Synod of Iowa—Extracts from the Minutes of the Synod of New York—The First United Presbyterian Synod of the West

Sabbath-School Department: What Teachers have to do in introducing their Pupils to a Christian Life.

Children's Department: "Feed my Lambs."

Ecclesiastical Record: Calls—Statistics Received—Ordained and Installed—Dissolution of the Pastoral Relation—Change of Presbyterial Relation—New Organization—Death Chaplains—Miscellaneous

Editorial: The Duty of Parents in Relation to the Sabbath-School—The Meeting of the Synod of New York—The President's Proclamation—Letter from Rev James S. Barr—Alarms False and True.

New Publications—Obituaries.

WILLIAM S. YOUNG, Publisher.

No. 52 North Sixth St., Phila.

THE FARMER AND GARDENER,

A MONTHLY PERIODICAL,

Devoted to the Interests of Agriculture,

EDITED BY

A. M. SPANGLER,

CONTENTS OF THE OCTOBER NUMBER.

Agriculture: Should Manure Ferment and Decompose in the Barnyard or the Field?—Surface Application of Manure—Premium for Weeds—On the Feeding Value of Straw—In Breeding Horses, do the Stock take most after the Sire or Dam?—The Time to train Colts—Great annual sale of Shropshire Sheep—Selecting Seed Wheat—Fattening Swine—How to Catch a Horse—Reducing and applying Bones—Cribbing—Fall Ploughing

Horticulture: Strawberry Culture—Empress Eugenie Strawberry—How to protect Raspberries and other Plants through Winter—Synonyms of Strawberries—The Raising of Onions—Interesting to Fruit Growers—Gathering and Storing Fruit—Fruit Garden—Curl in the Peach—The White Doyenne Pear in France—Black Knot on Plum and Cherry Trees—The Effect of Dew and Fogs upon Plants—Asthurium Scherzerianum—Geraniums in Windows—How Plants change their Characters—Summer Roses—Pruning Evergreens—The Egg Plant—Harvesting Beans—Apples and Pears—Moonlight Planting—Fall Treatment of Flowers—Ribbon Flower Bed—Poetry: Ode to Pig-Tail, by Walter Elder

Editorial: A Glimpse at the Times—War nearer home—Patent Office Report—The Fly in the Wheat—Dried Fruit Wanted—Send on your Subscriptions—Sheep Breeding—Bog and Peat Meadows

Home Department: How to make the best Cider—The care of Tools—Richmond Prize Current for July—Farmers' Wives—Tomatoes for Supper—Cheery Kitchen. Why Salt is Healthy—Hen-Houses—Sunlight for Animals—Some thoughts about kindness to Animals—Turkey raising—Facetiæ.

TERMS, $1.00 per Annum.

Specimen copies sent on the receipt of two letter stamps

W. S. YOUNG, Publisher,

No 52 N. Sixth St., or 1023 Race St.,

PHILADELPHIA

TO THE FRIENDS

OF

OUR PATRIOT DEAD.

Repeated applications having been made to the subscriber to establish a branch of his business in the vicinity of the late battle-fields, with a view of reducing the cost of bringing home the bodies of the dead, he respectfully announces that he has now established a branch at Hanoverown, Md., and is prepared to attend to the business at greatly reduced rates. Orders from a distance promptly attended to.

The Burial Casket

furnished by me is equal to any other in use with regard to security, economy, and entire absence of any of the unpleasant circumstances which generally surround similar articles. Wherever used it has given entire satisfaction, and the subscriber challenges comparison with any Casket now before the public

Much complaint has been made of the notorious practices by unprincipled men engaged in this business, which the subscriber will honorably avoid,

JOHN GOOD, Undertaker.

No. 921 Spruce Street, Philadelphia.

T. B. KNIGHT,

PAPER WAREHOUSE,

No. 923 COMMERCE STREET, PHILADELPHIA.

☞ Particular attention given to orders for Printing Paper. aug 9.

Advertisements.

THE DAUGHTERS OF HOPE GRAND UNION Temperance Society met, it being the thirteenth convention, April 10th, 1861. Representatives from Lodges are as follows:—

From Garnet Union No 4, D. of T.; from Phœnix Union, No. 8, D. of T.; from Northern Union, No. 16, D. of T.; Webb's Union, of Chambersburgh, Pa.; from Dr Rias' Union, of Carlisle, Pa.; from Mount Olive Union, No. 19, D. of T.; from Vanbrackle Union, No. 15, D. of T., of Norristown, Pa

Officers installed to their several positions are as follows:—

Grand P., Sister Bennet; Grand Associate, Sister Burrle; Grand Treasurer, Sister Fausett; Grand Conductress, C. Thompson; Grand Sentinel, A. E. Dunham; Grand Chaplain, Sister Hall

G P P, Sister E. Rogers, G P P Sister Anderson,
" " E. Bowen, " " J. F. Beach,
" " M. M. Bonny, " " E. A Clark,
" " S Newman, " " White,
" " S. Davis, " " S Hall.

THE DAUGHTERS OF CORNISH SOCIETY

The State Quarterly Meeting of the Society, are held on the first Wednesday of February, May, August, and November.

The meeting of the Board are held on the Wednesday previous to the regular stated meetings of the society.

Mrs Sarah Carter,
President.
Mr. L. R. Seymour, Sec'y.

THE BOOK DEPOSITORY

OF THE

AFRICAN M. E. CHURCH,

No. 619 Pine Street,

PHILADELPHIA.

We keep on hand, in connexion with our other books Sabbath school books of various kinds, Question Books, Catechisms, Nos. 1, 2, and 3. We have a good assortment of such books as are generally used in the Public Schools. Also, Stationery, Inks, Pens, Paper, Envelopes and Blank Books.

THE DEATH-BED OF THE REV. JOHN WESLEY.

Wanted Canvassing Agents for this splendid large engraving, each should be in every home of all admirers of that great and good man. The most liberal inducements offered to those selling this print. Send for Catalogue and terms at once to

WM SMITH Publisher,
702 South Third Street, Philadelphia

WANTED.—The charge of a Public School. Reference as to ability can be given. Apply to

J. W. A., 1641 Helmuth St.

ONE-PRICE CLOTHING,

OF THE LATEST STYLES,

Made in the Best Manner, expressly for RETAIL SALES. Lowest Selling Prices marked in Plain Figures. All Goods made to order warranted satisfactory. Our One-Price System is strictly adhered to. All are thereby treated alike.

JONES & CO.,
Dec25-1y 804 Market Street.

GOOD NEWS

To Tailors, Dress-makers, and to those wishing to be such. Also, to owners of sewing machines, shoe-fits-pers, and large families,—for one of the newly-patented directions which each Gentleman's coat, pants, vests, jackets, sack and over coats

Local and Travelling Agents Wanted.

Address REV WM BRADLEY,
Carversville, Bucks Co., Pa.

Or, apply to Mrs Maria F. Weaver, editor of the Editress' (the paper,) 819 Pine St., Philada., Pa. Jan12—1y

JAMES DOWNS,

DEALER IN

NEW AND SECOND HAND

CLOTHING,

No 225 South Second Street,

No 17—3mo. PHILADELPHIA.

WILLIAM STILL'S

STOVE STORE,

107 NORTH FIFTH STREET, PHILADELPHIA.

The subscriber would respectfully inform his friends and all in want of good stoves, that he has now on hand a general variety of excellent PARLOR, COOK and CHAMBER STOVES, including Gas-burning, as well as other patterns, which he is selling at very low rates. He buys entirely for cash, of the best wholesale founderies, and of course can sell much cheaper than those buying on the usual credit system. At any rate his friends are invited to give him a call and examine for themselves before purchasing elsewhere, as he feels that they would be convinced that it would be to their interest to give him their patronage. Coal orders constantly on hand. WM. STILL.

JOSEPH H. COLE,

CONTINENTAL RESTAURANT,

NO. 717 LOMBARD STREET, PHILA.,

(Above Seventh St., under Philadelphia Institute,)

Where he continues to keep always on hand the very best assortment of OYSTERS and other refreshments—hoping that all his friends and the public in general will favor him with their patronage.

☞ Meals served at all hours. Families supplied with Oysters of the best quality and flavor at the shortest notice.

☞ Also, public and private waiting done on the most reasonable terms. ly

MISS JANE JOHNSON,

Respectfully informs her friends and the public, that she continues laying out and shrouding the dead.

☞ All orders will be immediately attended to.

RESIDENCE,

618 South 8th St.

"UNION COTTAGE,"

ATLANTIC CITY, NEAR THE INLET.

The subscriber will always be happy to welcome her numerous friends, and the public in general.

TERMS:

Board per week,	$6 00
" per day,	1 25
Single meals,	50

S. H. Wailes, Proprietress.

BOARDING

IN BROOKLYN.

MRS. S. PLANT (formerly Richardson) respectfully announces that she has opened a first class BOARDING & LODGING HOUSE at No 92 HIGH STREET, Brooklyn—where she is prepared to accommodate the public on the most reasonable terms

Her house being located in a very pleasant part of the city, and within five minutes' walk of Fulton Ferry, is made thus a very desirable and convenient place.

BOARDING

Mrs. AMIA WILLIAM, of Cape May, will open the Banker House for the season, for the accommodation of all who wish to spend the season there, and she will spare no pains to make all comfortable. Those wishing to spend one, two, or three days, will find the Banker House the right spot. Prices very reasonable. 1sept

COAL, STOVES, &c., &c.

The subscriber respectfully informs his friends and the public generally, that he has taken the store,

NO. 107 NORTH FIFTH STREET,

formerly occupied as the Anti-Slavery office, (where he has been engaged for the last fourteen years,) to occupy it henceforth as a place of business for the sale of

COAL, STOVES, &c.

Having made arrangements with one of the first Coal Dealers in the city, to furnish the best qualities of Lehigh, Schuylkill, &c., at the lowest Cash prices, he hopes to give full satisfaction in this branch of his business

He will also keep constantly on hand a general assortment of good NEW and SECOND-HAND STOVES, FURNACES, &c.

Persons wishing Stoves taken down, stored away, put up, or cleaned, can be promptly accommodated by applying as above.

He hopes by energy and strict attention to business to obtain a fair share of patronage.

WM. STILL,
107 North Fifth Street, Philadelphia

REFERENCES

J M M'Kim,	Dr Caspar Wistar,
Samuel Johnson,	James Mott,
Dillwyn Parrish,	Thomas Williamson,
Prof C D Cleveland	W B Forness

WANTED.

One or two respectable colored men in a quiet and respectable family to lodge, where they can secure all the comforts of a home, with a furnished room.

INQUIRE,

No 424 South 7th St., Phila.

REV LEWIS S. LEWIS'

FAMILY LIN

THE POETRY OF PLOUGHING.

BY C. W. HOLMES.

CLEAR the brown path to meet the coulter's gleam,
Lo! on he comes, behind his smoking team,
With toil's bright dew-drops on his sun-burnt brow!
The lord of earth, the hero of the plough!
First in the field before the reddenod sun,
Last in the shadows when the day is done,
Line after line, along the burning sod,
Marks the broad acres where he feet have trod;
Still where he treads the stubborn clods divide,
The smooth, fresh furrow opens deep and wide,
Matted and dense the tangled turf upheaves,
Mellow and dark the ridgy cornfield cleaves;
Up the steep hill-side, where the laboring train
Stands the long track that scores the level plain;
Through the moist valley clogged with oozing clay,
The patient convoy breaks its destined way;
At every turn the hamming chains resound,
The swinging ploughshare circles glistening round,
Till the wide field one billowy waste appears,
And wearied hands unbind the panting steers.

NORTHERN SUGAR.

IT would be a singular result of the rebellion, if the North and West should become independent of the Southern climes in the articles of sugar and cotton. The cotton culture will be tried next season in regions farther north than it ever was before—with what results, time will show. The various products that will yield sugar will also become more extensively sought after.

The sorghum, the sugar beet and the rock maple are all demanding attention. They can all be used in Maine and the other New England States. The maple and the beet are at home in the North, and the sorghum and imphee produce abundantly in the Western States. The earlier varieties of imphee will undoubtedly ripen in Maine.

The sorghum has already been proved in the West, and its culture next season will be quadrupled. A Sorghum Convention was held at Rockford, Ill., last fall, where many samples of the syrup and some sugar were exhibited, and much valuable information elicited, which will lead to improvements both of culture and manufacture the coming season. One individual had made 16 gallons of syrup from an acre. Another had made 100 gallons from three-fourths of an acre. Seven gallons of juice made one of syrup.

The Illinois Horticultural Society, at their meeting held in Chicago not long ago, had some discussion upon the subject of the production and manufacture of sorghum syrup and sugar. Among other interesting facts, it appears that "The cultivation of the sugar cane in the North-west is no longer a matter of doubt. As high as 500 gallons of syrup have been produced per acre. One hundred and fifty gallons in a small yield;" and it was confidently asserted that they would soon have a home supply and a surplus to export to the Eastern States.

Our farmers in northern New England should be preparing themselves for the maple sugar campaign. The time for it will soon be along, and should be improved in every way possible.—Maine Farmer.

USE OF SWEET APPLES.

A sweet apple, sound and fair, has a deal of sugar or saccharine in its composition. It is, therefore, nutritious; for sweet apples, raw, will fat cattle, horses, pigs, sheep and poultry. Cooked sweet apples will fat children, and make grown people fleshy—"fat" not being a polite word as applied to grown persons. Children being more of the animal than "grown folks," are not so fastidious in their classification. But to the matter in question. In every good farmer's house who has an orchard, baked sweet apples are an "institution" in their season. Everybody, from the toddling baby holding up by its father's knee, away back to "our reverend grandmother" in her rocking-chair, loves them.

No sweetmeat smothered in sugar is half so good; no aroma of dissolved confectionery in half so simple as the soft, pulpy flesh of a well-baked apple of the right kind. It is good in milk, with bread.

WHEN the farmer's wife wants to color a bright red, she must wash her yarn clean and nice, and boil in strong alum water; then dry in the sun a day—but don't rinse it out. Then the next day boil in good madder, soak over night; then dry it again, after which wash it, and you will have a brilliant bright red. When you want to color a bright green, you must boil in alum water the same way, having everything very clean; then boil in the kettle some good, strong black hickory bark; take out the bark and put in the yarn; boil thirty minutes; after drying, wash the yarn; then make some blue dye in the usual way, from indigo and a small bit of madder.

CHOIR SINGING.

We once heard a hymn sung, the second verse beginning with—

"He careth for the fatherless;
He feeds the hungry poor,
And in the pious He delights," etc.

The tune (Transport) was one that repeated part of the third line. The consequence was that, after "He feeds the hungry poor," there came—

"And in the pig,
And in the pi-ous he delights," etc.

We have heard of a case where the fourth line had to be sung in part by the bass voices, and then repeated and finished by the whole choir. The result was that the cry went up from all the bass singers—

"Send down an-
Send down an!"

And this singular petition was only explained when the choir took it up and finished the line—

"Send down an-nation."

As a counterpart of that, the story is told of a stranger who was startled to hear all the women in one of our churches breaking out at the end of the third line with the earnest cry of—

"O for a man,
O for a man!"

And his surprise was only abated when the choir chimed in and converted this amorous song into the more spiritual prayer of—

"O for a man-sion in the skies."

AN UNSANCTIFIED QUAKER.

A Methodist preacher, a traitor, formerly belonging to Hartford county, Maryland, returned thither a short time since a fugitive from Virginia. Having occasion to visit a store in the neighborhood, kept by a Quaker, he began, while there, to utter his treasonable sentiments.

"Thee must not talk so in my store," exclaimed the Friend. "Thee has left thy friends and come hither—thee must now go out of my store, or I shall put thee out, and thrash thee afterward."

"I thought that Quakers did not fight?" said the preacher.

"Friends who are sanctified never fight," replied the Quaker; "but I am one that is not; hence thee had better leave quickly."

The secessionist had not provided for this emergency, and judged it expedient to leave.

HUMAN.

A LEFT-HANDED CORRECTION.—In a late Scotch paper appears the following curious correction of a reporter's error:

SIR: In your report of a meeting of the New Monkland Parochial Board in The Advertiser on Saturday last, you represent me to have said, "We've all along had a very drunken set of officials." Although true, it is not what I have said. I said, "We all along had a very drunken set o' paupers in our parish."

I am, sir, your obedient servant,
ALEX. MONTGOMERY.

HUMAN GLORY!—The Roman Forum is now a cow-market, the Tarpeian a cabbage-garden, and the Palace of the Cæsars a rope-walk.

IN the way to heaven is narrow, it is not long; and if the gate be straight, it opens into endless life.—BISHOP BEVERIDGE.

THE POPE AND THE NOBLES.

In one of our London Exchanges we find the following extract of a letter from Rome, giving a reason why many of the Roman nobles desire the continuance of the temporal rule of the Pope:

It appears that many of the Roman nobles are bound to the present order of things by rather a singular tie. Their lands were granted to them in the days of papal nepotism by the popes, to whom they had the honor to be related, the said lands having been wrongfully and violently taken from their rightful possessors. The descendants of the original owners in many cases, still survive, and what is more remarkable, they have for these two, three, or more centuries persisted in putting in a legal claim to their lost lands, and holding out a threat of disputing the transfer. This has happened in the family of the Borghese, who usurped the territories of the celebrated house of Cenci, a junior branch of which family actually commenced a suit for the restoration of the enormous property during the revolution of 1848, and would probably have gained it but for the return of the pope. Many other princely and noble houses being situated like the Borghese, it is manifest that the pope, who upholds the grants of preceding popes, has no small lien on their fidelity.

THE "SILVER-RULE"—PASTE IT UP.

You all know the golden rule, "Do unto others as you would wish them to do to you." Here is a rule which is almost a part of the golden rule, but which we will put by itself, and because of its value, call it the "Silver Rule." —Think and say all you can of the good qualities of others; forget and keep silent concerning their bad qualities. You cannot conceive how much such a course will heighten your own happiness, and raise you in the esteem of your mates. Did you ever think any more of a boy or a girl because he or she found fault with others? Never call your schoolmates or playmates ugly, or cross, neither to their faces nor behind their backs. If they are ugly, or stingy, or cross, it does not make them better to talk or think about it, while it makes you love to dwell upon faults of others, and causes your own soul to grow smaller, and you become like the foul bird that prefers carrion for food. Rather tell all the good you can, and try to think of some good quality.

CHARITY FOR OTHERS' FAULTS.

What we look through determines what we see. I have made this conclusion from frequent glimpses at the office window and through it. Our neighbor just below passes frequently—judged through the middle pane of glass, second row, his nose is considerable above the middle of his face, and his eyes are green. A great mistake. He has bluish eyes, and his nose is quite equal to the average, both as to shape and position. Why, then, these false impressions he makes upon me in passing? Is it due to the window? Dear, dainty friend, do you suggest that it needs washing? I believe it does, and the glass is imperfect besides. A new, perfect pane of glass and some pure water would alter our neighbor's complexion as well as the window.

The world is all blood-stained when we look through a red glass; and grass-grown from sky to pavement when we look through a green one; so I say again, what we look through determines what we see.

There are some who look at the world through windows rendered misty with prejudices, and dimmed by self-love. The good and evil of another's life seen through them assumes shapes unreal as a dream. Oh! for the blessed washing of charity to give clear sight to such as these!

SOLDIERS' HEALTH.

The Sanitary Commission have reported that the general rate of disablements by sickness in the army is one hundred and four persons out of one thousand; whereas, only thirteen out of a thousand should be sick at any one time in common life. A Massachusetts regiment, after being a year at the seat of war, has lost no more men from all causes than would have been the case under the ordinary circumstances of home life. A New York city regiment, after three months of camping, lost but one man out of eight hundred, and he had heart-disease before he left home. But it was a regiment whose average of intelligence and culture was perhaps the highest among the whole Federal force. Both these cases show that camp-life is not necessarily fatal to health or life to a remarkable extent, and that the exercise of an intelligent care on the part of each individual soldier may almost banish disease from an army. And if the officers would co-operate with the men, would encourage them, and do all in their power to facilitate their efforts in this direction, the cost of the war and its duration would be most favorably modified. It is true that only one result is possible, even if Washington were laid in ashes, and the enemy were besieging New York and Boston—the annihilation of the "Confederacy;" still it is desirable to do this in the shortest time and at the least cost of life and treasure. To bring this about in the most enduring manner, while the Government is WISELY waiting on events, until the proper moment arrives for the consummating act, let each soldier for himself, and each soldier's friend at home, and each patriotic officer among too many who are not so! do all that is possible to keep the army in the very highest state of health; before health is efficiency! Just as Lord Nelson's ship was leaving England, he discovered that the flannel shirts of the men were six inches shorter than they ought to have been, and refused to go until the proper kind were furnished. He was ridiculed and called an "old granny." The result was, that while the rest of the fleet was decimated, he did not lose a man! and "his ship, in efficiency, was as good as any two others!" Aside from the dictates of love and humanity, a soldier's health should be the highest consideration of any officer who hopes to accomplish great results.

If any one item of health is a soldier is of greater importance than any others, it is a sound condition of the feet. It cannot easily be overestimated. It is the very first of the four great needs of a soldier—good feet, good stomach, good head, and a good heart, that is loyal to the core, to the authority and honor of his country. To have good feet, there should be good shoes and plenty of walking. A soldier's shoes should not have a high heel, should be made straight on the inside, to give the great toe room to spread out to the fullest; the soles should be abundantly wide, and not too thin. Good food; wearing woollen flannel all over next the skin, winter and summer, the latter most especially; dry bed-clothes; and the most complete ventilation, that is, a constant re-supply of out-door air every second, night and day; those are the grand points to be aimed at, with large fires kindled at sun-down in and around the encampment, and kept burning until sunrise. These precautions would save nine out of ten of all the disablements of the army, including both sickness and wounds; for the astounding testimony was given us to the British army in the Crimea, (see Soldier-Health, p. 142,) "where one man was under the surgeon's hands for wounds, twelve were under the doctor's for typhus fever, dysentery, and some other diseases brought on by bad food, bad camping arrangements, and the crowding and unvisitable dissipation of the men.—Hall's Journal.

TOBACCO.

The most universally consumed and least injurious of narcotics is tobacco. From the time of its first introduction to the civilized world, it has constantly enlarged its circle of consumption, and it is probable that there is not now a people on the earth which does not enjoy the luxury of the quid, the pipe, and the snuff-box. It has been estimated that the human family spends annually 1,250,000,000 dollars for tobacco. In 1851 the city of New York spent 1,050,000 dollars for cigars, or 240,543 more than was spent for bread. Notwithstanding the protests of moralists, the denunciations of physicians, and the frightful formulas of chemical analysis, the world continues to smoke and chew. Whether tobacco is injurious or not is still a mooted question, on both sides of which much may be said. Our reviewer thinks it is a very good thing. Undoubtedly total abstinence from all artificial stimulants is the best course for morals, for health, and for long life. The world would be better off in more respects than one if neither tobacco nor any other artificial stimulant had ever been invented or discovered.

PHYSICIANS CURING DIPHTHERIA BY THE SUCTION OF THEIR MOUTHS.

It is not long since one of the most promising of the younger members of the medical profession sacrificed his life in the voluntarily contracted contagion of diphtheria, in an attempt to clear, by the suction of his own lips the throat of an infant, dying strangled by the exudations of that fearful disease. Notwithstanding the proved danger of this expedient, however, it has not lacked, and will never lack imitators, for the sole reason that it is the promptest and often the only means of saving life.

We find an instance recorded in the Union Medicale for May, which should not be limited in its circulation to the medical press. The expedient, notwithstanding the operator well knew its danger, was practised, and with complete success in rescuing the child, by Dr. Edmond Besnette, a young surgeon of Angouleme. What adds to the satisfaction of the account, the child was not only saved by his heroism, but Dr. Besnette suffered no ill effects. This is attributed to his immediately rinsing his mouth and throat with strong brandy. The case is reported, and not by the noble young operator himself, but by his superior in the Angouleme Hospital, Dr. Claude Gigon.

THE BOOK TRADE SALE IN NEW YORK.—The end approaches, and the booksellers are going home. The attendance on Wednesday was slim, and prices ruled low until evening, when the chairs were mostly filled. Lee and Pratt labored zealously to keep up the market, and Joe, like "Pip's Joe, "went on with his hammer and clink—hammer and clink," but to no avail, for, with some exceptions, the books went slowly, and buyers would not pay the duplicating prices. W. B. Smith & Co. of New York did better than the others, for they disposed of something like 3,000 volumes in all—of which 1,000 were Willis's Poems, in plain and gilt muslin, turkey, and calf. Young's Night Thoughts, the Paradise Lost, and an 8vo. edition of the New Testament with Psalms were extensively sold; and three hundred copies of Youatt and Spooner on the Horse were called for. The Juveniles of this house found a good market, as those of all others have. Jacob Abbott's Lucy and Jonah books were favorites, as usual, some 700 volumes being taken; while no less than 500 dozen paper dolls—which are printed on sheets, costumes and all—went off.

The feature of the day's sale was the photograph album, of which several houses sold large invoices. This new manufacture has already reached an enormous development. As a matter of curiosity, we counted the invoices and styles, and find that there are fourteen houses engaged in the business. It has all sprung from the importation of French Albums by D. Appleton & Co. three years ago, and the example they soon set of commencing the manufacture for themselves.

WHAT CONSTITUTES A STATE.

There have been going the rounds of the press for several years, various extracts from the old poem, "What constitutes a State?" but most of them are changed or garbled, and none of them, as far as we have noticed, have been credited to the real author. This poem was written in 1781, by Sir William Jones, a native of London. The author was one of the most remarkable men of that age, and would have been distinguished in any era. He was born in 1746, lost his father in 1749, and was reared by his mother, a woman of uncommon endowments, and exceedingly well fitted for such a task. He began his school education at Harrow, continued it at Oxford, and afterwards pursued his studies on the Continent. He was the finest linguist of his time, and not only wrote in the Latin, French and German languages with great precision and elegance, but excelled in the oriental tongues, to which he gave years of enthusiastic study. His contributions to literature from the Arabic, Persian and Hindoo poets, are among the finest specimens now extant, the translations having been pronounced in some cases superior to the originals. He was a careful student of law, and in 1783 was appointed Judge in the Supreme Court of Judicature in Bengal, under the British East India Company, at which time he received the honor of knighthood. He was taken sick at Calcutta in 1794, and died after a few days' illness in the 48th year of his age.

Few men, living or dead, have acquired such deserved celebrity in so many different walks of life. As a statesman, jurist, philosopher and poet, he was justly celebrated, and his taste for belles lettres gave enthusiasm to all his literary pursuits. His prose was far more elegant than any specimens of the Addisonian school, and everything from his pen gave evidence of the most profound research. He was a great and good man, whose name must be revered wherever virtue and literature are cultivated.

He was at once an earnest advocate of reforms, and a stickler for law and order. He stood up boldly for the rights of the people, and at one time lost casts with the British Government for his defence of the American Revolution. He wrote a most spirited Latin ode to Liberty, dedicated to the struggling colonists, which was hailed as a masterpiece by all the scholars of Europe. We have been at some pains to procure a correct copy of the poem named in our caption, which we here subjoin. It is usually known by its first line, but we have prefixed the original title. Alcæus, it will be remembered, was a celebrated lyric poet of Mitylene, in Lesbos, contemporary with Sappho, 600 before the Christian era, whose muse was devoted to the praise of liberty, and who was the inventor of Acaic verses. The sentiment of the annexed ode was taken from a fragment attributed to Alcæus, which prefaced the poem when first published:—

AN ODE
In Imitation of Alcæus

BY SIR WILLIAM JONES.

What constitutes a State?
Not high-raised battlement or labor'd mound,
Thick wall or moated gate;
Not cities proud with spires and turrets crown'd
Not bays and broad-armed ports,
Where, laughing at the storm, rich navies ride;
Not starr'd and spangled courts,
Where low-brow'd baseness wafts perfume to pride.
No! — Men, high-minded men,
With powers as far above dull brutes endued
In forest, brake or den,
As beasts excel cold rocks and bramble rude;
Men, who their duty know,
But know their rights, and knowing dare maintain;
Prevent the long-aim'd blow,
And crush the tyrant while they rend the chain:
These constitute a State.
And sovereign law, that State's collected will,
O'er thrones and globes elate
Sits empress, crowning good, repressing ill;
Smit by her sacred frown
The fiend, Dissension, like a vapor sinks,
And soon the all-dazzling crown
Hides his foul rays, and all his bidding shrinks
Such was this heaven-loved isle,
Than Lesbos fairer and the Cretan shore!
No more shall freedom smile?
Shall Britons languish and be men no more!
Since all must life resign,
Those sweet rewards, which decorate the brave,
'Tis folly to decline,
And steel inglorious to the silent grave.

Abergavenny, March 31, 1781.

N. Y. J. of C.

Scotch papers announce an interesting republication. It is said that we are to have soon, from a tried and competent historian, a volume of history, in which some 1000 letters of John Knox, never before published, will be made the basis of some chapters on Scottish affairs.

WHO ARE THESE? WHENCE CAME THEY?

Not from Jerusalem alone
To heaven the path ascends;
As near, as sure, as straight the way,
That leads to the celestial day,
From farthest realms extends;
Frigid or torrid zone.

What matters how or whence we start?
One is the crown of all,
One to the hard and glorious race
Whatever be our starting-place;
Rang round the earth the call
That says, Arise, depart!

From the balm-breathing, sun-lored isles
Of the bright Southern Sea,
From the dead North's cloud-shadowed pole,
We gather to our gladsome goal—
Our common home in thee,
City of sun and smiles!

The cold rough billows hinder none;
Nor helps the calm, fair main;
The brown rock of Norwegian gloom,
The verdure of Tahitian bloom,
The sands of Mizraim's plain,
Or peaks of Lebanon.

As from the green lands of the vine,
We from the snow-wastes pale;
We find the ever open road
To the dear city of our God;
From Russian steppe, or Burman vale,
Or terraced Palestine.

Not from swift Jordan's sacred stream
Alone we mount above,
Indus or Danube, Thames or Rhone,
Rivers unnamed or unknown;
From each the home of love
Beckons with heavenly beam.

Not from gray Olivet alone
We see the gates of light;
From Morvan's heath, or Jungfrau's snow,
We welcome the descending glow
Of pearl and chrysolite,
Under the setting sun.

Not from Jerusalem alone
The Church ascends to God.
Strangers of every tongue and clime,
Pilgrims of every land and time,
Throng the well-trodden road
That leads up to the throne.

Christian Treasury.

A LOST CHORD.

SEATED one day at the organ,
I was weary and ill at ease,
And my fingers wandered idly
Over the noisy keys.

I do not know what I was playing,
Or what I was dreaming then;
But I struck one chord of music,
Like the sound of a great Amen.

It flooded the crimson twilight,
Like the close of an angel's Psalm,
And it lay on my fevered spirit
With a touch of infinite calm.

It quieted pain and sorrow,
Like love overcoming strife;
It seemed the harmonious echo
From our discordant life.

It linked all perplexed meanings
Into one perfect peace,
And trembled away into silence
As if it were loath to cease.

I have sought, but I seek it vainly,
That one lost chord divine,
That came from the soul of the organ,
And entered into mine.

—Adelaide Anne Procter.

"SAY, COME."

How simple and easy this duty! and yet alas! how much neglected! How few of the many, whose duty it is to say Come, ever think of the obligation! Have you ever heard of Christ? Do you know how great and precious a Saviour he is? Then you are commissioned to invite all whom you meet, to come to him for salvation. "Let him that heareth say, Come." Any one, and every one who has heard the gospel, no matter where or how, is both authorized and enjoined to preach it to others! It is his duty to say, Come, come to Jesus. It may not be his duty to enter the pulpit; he may not be called to go to the heathen; but he is commissioned to preach Christ. Every one who has ever heard of Christ, is thus commissioned. It is a duty that God has laid upon us all. It is your duty and mine; and we is me, and we to you, if this duty is not performed! Were you journeying in a vast desert where thousands and tens of thousands were famishing of thirst, and you chanced to find a spring of living water where all might obtain an abundant supply, would you not feel it to be a duty to tell every poor famishing pilgrim you met where that spring could be found? Assuredly you would. Every man who has the heart of a man would do this. And any who would refuse or neglect to publish such information, would be reckoned a monster. Well, are we not all journeying in such a desert—a moral desert—where vast multitudes are famishing for the water of life? Do we know where it can be obtained, and yet refuse to say, Come? We would not let the veriest wretch on earth perish of hunger if we could relieve him. We would make any effort and any sacrifice to relieve ourselves of so fearful a responsibility. Should we allow one poor pauper to die of hunger, having the power to prevent it, we would feel a burden of guilt that would greatly distress us. But have we no responsibilities touching the soul? Do we not meet many every day, who are without God and without hope?—who are going thoughtlessly in the broad road to death, and we know it? We cannot help knowing it. And what are we doing to save them? Do not say, I have no talent for such work. It requires no special talent. All that is required is to say, "Come." "Come to Jesus and be saved." It requires no great learning to do that! Any little child that has ever heard the story of the cross can do it. Say not, I have no time. It requires very little. You can say it all in a single breath; say it as you pass your friend in the street; when you meet him on the road—when he calls on business. If you saw his house on fire, or knew that his child had fallen into the well or cistern, and was in danger of drowning, you would find time to sound the alarm, and render all the aid demanded. Then why no time to warn him of danger infinitely greater? O, it is not time or ability we want. It is a mind to the work—a heart warm with love to Christ and to perishing souls. Say not this is the work of the minister—the missionary—the elder—the Sabbath School teacher. It is your work and mine. It is the work of all who have ever heard of Christ—and we, we, be to us all if we do not say, Come! Nor will it discharge our souls to say this in any timid, heartless manner. We must say it so as to be understood, and so as to make those we address, feel that the matter is important. If we saw a friend about to be crushed by a locomotive, we would not speak to him in a whisper—we would shout aloud! We could not help it. We would rush up to him and drag him, if need be, from the track. And shall we be less earnest in snatching immortal souls as brands from an eternal burning? Surely not. Then say, Come—come now—come at once, and without delay. Now is the accepted time—now is the day of salvation. To-day if ye will hear his voice, harden not your heart. Up—haste thee for thy life—tarry not in all the plain! Flee ye to to the mountains—even to the Eternal Rock, which is Christ.—Presbyter.

A Russian "Artist's Album," under the name of The Northern Light is in course of publication in St. Petersburgh. It is to contain copies of celebrated Russian paintings, scenes from Russian history, illustrations of Russian writers, and views of Russia.

Lovers of literature will hear with regret that the poet Uhland, the last of the great race of German minstrels, has been of late most seriously indisposed. His very advanced age renders his illness peculiarly alarming. Perhaps no German poet, after Goethe and Schiller, is so well known to English readers as this noble old lyrist and patriot.

HINTS TO CHURCH MEMBERS

As thousands of preachers are now going to their new fields we hear the question from all quarters, "how do you like our new preacher?" "Not very well," says one, "I think he is both dull and dry." I wonder if such complainers have ever prayed for their preacher. I suppose not. They seem to think it is the preacher's business to do his own praying as well as preaching; to study, and read, and prepare his sermons, and preach them without the hearer's aid.

But true preaching is not a mere intellectual exercise, that pertains to the mind alone, and has nothing to do with the heart, but it must come from and go to the heart; and unless the hearts of the hearers are engaged it cannot do that. If Paul, learned and zealous as he was, needed the prayers of those to whom he preached, much more do ministers of our day need them. I don't pretend to say your prayers will benefit the preacher, but if you pray much you will have a kind of sympathy, or fellow-feeling for him, which will cause you to listen more attentively to his preaching: and truths that once seemed old and common-place, will seem new and fresh, and in short, you will find the dullness was as much, or more, your own than the minister's, and that is what made his sermon dull.

What a vast amount of dull preaching the church is responsible for! Reader, the more you are exercised in prayer for your preacher, the more you will be blessed in hearing from him.

It frequently happens that people have some misunderstanding with their neighbors who attend the same church. These difficulties often create jealousy, and some people attempt to induce the preacher to adopt their personal quarrels. They want the preacher to manifest a dislike to those towards whom they feel inimical. They sometimes complain because he ignores their personal antipathy. But this is unreasonable; a minister should know nothing of your personal variances. He ought to be the bond of union in the church and society. Let him enjoy the confidence and affection of all his people by treating them all in a friendly manner, and showing partiality to none.

Don't wish him to be at variance with any of his people, because you are. Don't ask him to hear your complaint against your neighbor, nor to pronounce your proceedings just. If you want your preacher to unite the people and build up the society, and at the same time demand such things of him, you are unreasonable. If you regard his happiness, and usefulness, and the interests of the church, you will be glad to see him enjoy the confidence of all. If possible, live peaceably with all men. If you must have contention, with any of your neighbours, be sure'el that you do not embroil others in them. By all means allow your preacher to stand aloof from them.—Telescope.

THE CHURCH PAPER IN THE FAMILY.

We commend the following article to all who read or take church papers:

Perhaps one of the greatest blessings of the church paper, is the love for and attachment to the church it begets among the members of the Christian family. It is a living bond of union with all parts of Zion. We once listened to the inquiries of an aged grandmother, living in the southern interior of Pennsylvania, in regard to different ministers in our church. She was accustomed to sit by a window of her dwelling northwards towards a line of railroad near by, with spectacles on, reading the Bible, religious books, and her church paper. We asked her whether she knew this one or that one about whom she inquired, and she did not, but she had often read their names in her church paper. Here she made their acquaintance. How much there is in these very names to familiarize us with the church. And how much is to be learned from those names, and what stands opposite them often! Annually, or semi-annually, they appear with the contributions from their charges to the benevolent operations of the church. In the reports of the annual meeting of the Conventions, and of the consecration of new churches, and sacred communion seasons, they appear, until they become familiar to us as household names: yea, they are the names in the household of our beloved Zion.

Then there are the letters and communications from all portions of the church, containing words of comfort and cheer for the aged, of instruction and correction for the young. And the short and pointed articles of the editor, who comes to possess a true, fatherly affection towards his readers, with whom he had been in communication for many long years. And the sharp discussions that sometimes suddenly spring upon mooted questions, upon which all do not think alike, (aright we had written)—they too, often instruct as much, if not on the subject discussed, at least on the temper and spirit of the writers.

And what is all this worth in the family? Ah, who can estimate its value in drawing the minds and hearts of young and old towards the church we all love as a common heritage? It is a constant reminder of what is going on in the field of Christ. In the spring, when flowers begin to bud and bloom, through the dry heats of summer, in the autumn when winds carry the sear leaves around our dwellings and whistle in every opening and crevice, in the winter when storms rage and howl without, and old and young are gathered around the comfortable fire within, during all the changing seasons of the year, it pays us its regular visits, to remind us of the permanency and prosperity, the cares and trials of a church which will continue to exist until the end. And it leads us and aids us to love the church. It is a golden tie to bind us to dear brethren with whom we hope to dwell in eternity.

Parents! would you train your children to love the church? See to it that you teach them to read and value the church paper. Keep it from being destroyed. Read it yourselves, and teach them by your example, that you value it more than all papers beside. What though it may not come in gaudy dress and with exciting headings of thrilling worldly news? What though it may possess a plain and modest appearance beside some city paper, which has combined the church and the world to captivate and please? Still it is our church paper, and we love it more than all others. We have heard of some who have stopped the church paper because the times are hard, while perhaps double its cost went for other papers or articles of little or no worth, nay perhaps positive injury to their own children. Does this not argue a want of proper love for the church? If not, it shows at least, that such persons fail to comprehend the great value of a religious paper in the family.

Family Circle.

THE WOMAN AND THE SURGEON.

An interesting case has come to my knowledge within a day or two, where a New England woman, alone and friendless, achieved a great reform in one of our hospitals. The surgeon having charge of this particular hospital was a brute, treating the men in his charge, visitors, and indeed the surgeons beneath him, with contemptuous cruelty. Having political influence, it was not an easy matter to remove him, though there were a hundred acts of his, any one of which would or should be considered sufficient cause for his instant dismissal from the service. But every one beneath him was afraid to take the first step, for fear the brutal man would turn upon the person beginning the complaint, and with his superior position and influence crush the complainant. One day a New England woman came to the hospital to see her sick son. She soon met the chief surgeon, and was treated with coarse rudeness. If he could have his way, he said, he would not permit a woman to come near the hospital. It was in vain that she urged that she had not seen her boy for long months, and that he was now very ill, and perhaps dying. The monster continued to revile her, but dared not refuse her admittance to see her son. She soon found the surgeon in immediate attendance upon her boy, and told him of the treatment she had received from the chief surgeon. He replied that he was not at all surprised, the chief surgeon treated every body brutally. "Why then do you submit to such cruel outrage?" was the spirited woman's question. "I suppose, we are all of us afraid to make the complaint against him!" was the reply. The woman found that her son was incurably ill, and was the proper subject of a discharge. The assistant surgeon so informed her. She then sought the chief surgeon, and asked him to make a report to the Surgeon-General upon the condition of her son. He refused with a dreadful oath. The New England grit in the woman's heart took fire. "You stand there," said she, "and jeer at my sorrow. You use language toward me that a beast would be ashamed of. But let me tell you, that poor and friendless as I am, I am more powerful than you, and I will not leave Washington till I have exposed your brutality." She was as good as her word. She went at once to see Secretary Stanton. He referred her at once to the Surgeon-General, with a request that he would look carefully into the case, and if the facts would warrant her assertions, that he would mete out rigid justice to the hospital surgeon. The first act of the Surgeon General was to order the surgeon-in-charge to make a report upon the case of the woman's son. The report was returned the very next day, and its language was insolent in the extreme. The surgeon was angry at the woman's interference.

"This is enough," said the Surgeon-General "A man who will send me such a report is capable of all you charge against him. I will not take the trouble to examine the case. He shall be dismissed the service!" That very night, as the chief surgeon of Blank Hospital sat with his assistants around him, indulging in his usual bluster, a pleasant-faced gentleman appeared at the door and inquired for Surgeon ———, in charge of the hospital. That person was speedily pointed out to him. "I am directed to hand this to you from the Surgeon-General," said the stranger. The Surgeon opened it and found that it ordered him to hand over the hospital and supplies to the bearer, who would take charge of them, and, to conclude, dismissed the brutal Surgeon from the service. The New England woman had triumphed at last!

OLD TUNES.

The good old tunes of other days,
In which we sang our Maker's praise,
When life with us was young,
When music flowed from heart and tongue,
Oh how to memory now they rise,
Like angel notes from yonder skies;
For oft we sang them with the blest
Who now in heavenly mansions rest.

My father sang them; when a boy,
I heard their notes with gladsome joy,
And round his dying bed we raised
The words and notes in which he praised
The name of God, and sang of bliss
In purer, brighter worlds than this.

My mother sang them soft and sweet,
And oft her tones my spirit greet,
When dreams, beyond the upper air,
My soul on wings of fancy bear,
To that bright world to which she rose,
When leaving life with all its woes,
Oppressed with grief, of joy bereft,
An orphan I was early left.

I sang them with a brother flown
Where sin and sorrow are unknown,
And with a sister, oh how dear!
Whose notes now greet her mother's ear.
I sang them with a youthful bride,
Who early withered by my side;
They cheered her when life's setting sun
Shone on her heaven on earth begun,
And only ceased her soul to cheer
When heavenly music met her ear.
I sang them with a manly son,
Whose race on earth was early run,
And with a daughter bright and fair,
Who knows in heaven a mother's care.

I've sung them in the forest wild,
Where nature lovely towered and smiled,
I've sung them on the rolling sea,
Whose deep-toned surges joined with me
In sounding forth their Maker's praise,
Whose word can check, or wildly raise
The surging billows to the skies,
Or still them when to heaven they rise.
I've sung them in far distant lands,
Where rail the waves on classic strands;
And tears of grief would quickly come,
At thoughts of distant friends and home,
With whom, and where, I sang these lays,
The good old tunes of other days.

I've sung them with the wise and good,
As by Death's stream they joyful stood,
And saw beyond, the walls that rose,
Where blissful mansions greet the eyes.

How dear to me these noble lays,
The good old tunes of other days!
On earth I've sung them with the best;
And when I reach the heavenly rest,
I hope to sing them there with those
Who know no more life's cares or woes,
Where golden harps the notes shall raise,
That fill all heaven with endless praise.

THY WILL BE DONE

Old Betty was very poor, and sold matches for a living. She was converted late in life, and felt that she had a great debt of gratitude to pay to her precious Saviour, and but a little time to pay it in. She was, therefore, very active in doing good, visiting the sick, collecting money for the poor and for the heathen, giving something to those who were poorer than herself, and speaking to every one, where she had an opportunity, a word for Jesus. If she had but one talent, she would not bury that in the earth, but use it in his service. "The love of Christ constrained her." She believed and therefore spoke. How many under similar circumstances would plead that they had no influence, they could do nothing, they were too poor or ignorant to do any good. Not so with old Betty. She had tasted of the goodness of the Lord, and she must tell others what a rich feast she had found, and bid them come.

One day while engaged in her active duties she took cold, and was laid up with rheumatism and a severe cough. For many months she was confined to her bed, and unable to do anything for herself or others. An aged minister visited her while in this condition and asked her if it was not very hard to be laid aside from active duty, and how she was enabled to bear her long confinement so patiently. "Not at all hard, sir, not at all," said old Betty. "When I was well I used to hear the Lord say to me, day by day, 'Betty, go here; Betty, go there; Betty, do this; Betty, do that; and I used to do it, as well as I could; and now I hear him say every day, 'Betty, lie still and suffer.'"

What profound philosophy as well as devoted piety did this answer evince. It is foolish as well as wicked to rebel against the allotments of Providence. It is like the eagle beating its breast against the iron bars of its cage until it falls down exhausted. It does no good, but harm. We cannot change our condition by murmuring at it, but we can make ourselves and all around us very miserable. God knows where we can do most for him, and he puts us in that very place that is best for us and for all. It is a hard trial, one of the hardest no doubt, for an active and devoted servant of Christ to be rendered unfit for work. But we are very unwise to murmur at it. Those who are deprived of the privilege of laboring for Christ may suffer for him, and by their suffering in a Christian spirit do more good than they could in any other way. "The Dairyman's Daughter" did a far nobler work for Christ by suffering upon her couch than if she had possessed perfect health. She might have been a good milkmaid, and know how to make fine butter and cheese, and been a faithful daughter and sister and Church member; but who would ever have heard of her beyond her little circle. But from her sick bed her feeble voice had gone out through all the earth, and her words to the ends of the world. She is preaching in the language of almost every civilized nation. She little thought at the time of the greatness of the work she was doing. No one ever does who is doing a great work. She simply did her duty, and suffered meekly and humbly and cheerfully for her precious Saviour all that he saw fit to lay upon her. She lost her will in the divine will; and [illegible] of happiness and [illegible]

"Not my will, but thine, O God, be done," was the utterance of the happiest and most useful Being who ever trod the earth in human form, and it came from the deepest darkness of sorrow, and was the incense of a crushed and bleeding heart. The more we resemble him the happier we shall be, and the more good we shall do. When our wills perfectly harmonize with the di[illegible]

vine will—when we can feel as well as say "thy will be done on earth as it is in heaven"—then nothing can disturb us. Everything will please us, because it is the ordering of our heavenly Father.

Dr. Payson wrote near the close of his life: "O what a blessed thing it is to lose one's will! Since I have lost my will I have found happiness. There can be no such thing as disappointment to me, for I have no desire but that God's will may be accomplished. I can find no words to express my happiness. I seem to be swimming in a river of pleasure, which is carrying me on to the great fountain."—Presbyter.

LITTLE THINGS.

Suppose the little breezes,
Upon a summer's day,
Should think themselves too small to use
The traveller on his way;
Who would not miss the smallest
And softest one that blow,
And think they made a great mistake,
If they were talking so!

How many deeds of kindness
A little child may do,
Although it has so little strength,
And little wisdom too;
It wants a loving spirit,
Much more than strength, to prove
How many things a child may do
For others by his love.

DEATH ON THE PALE HORSE

BY J. D. STAVER.

DEATH, relentless and unsparing,
Daily rideth forth to slay;
Rage on all his features bearing,
Ne'er relieved by Mercy's ray.

Fierce on vacancy he grasps,
Looking mother left last night,
In his eyes fierce fury blazes,
And his brow is black as night.

On he rides with fierce abandon,
Never halting for respite;
Hurling forth his darts at random,
All unheeding where they strike.

Naught cares he for scent or essence,
For the loveliness of the strong,
So that in the race he's winner—
Heedeth none among the throng.

Beauty hath no charms to stay him,
Helpless innocence he spurns;
Vain for mercy 'tis to pray him,
To destroy he only turns.

See! those dreadful arms displaying,
Poised on high above his head,
Lightning shafts, to do the slaying
For the harvest of the dead.

In his train as he advances,
Come the scourges of mankind—
War, and pestilence, and famine,
All, his mandates seem to bind.

See he not that

No. 44, November 8 should be No. 45

No preceding, of November 1

is also No 44 !

THE CHRISTIAN RECORDER.

Published by the African Methodist Episcopal Church in the United States, for the Dissemination of Religion, Morality, Literature and Science.

Rev. Elisha Weaver, Editor. PHILADELPHIA, NOVEMBER 8. 1862. Vol. II.—No. 44.—New Series. Whole No. 96.

THE CHRISTIAN RECORDER

Is published every Saturday on behalf of the

AFRICAN METHODIST EPISCOPAL CHURCH,

BY

REV. ELISHA WEAVER,

General Book Steward,

No. 619 Pine Street, Philadelphia.

Notice. All letters and business pertaining to the Book Concern such as Orders, sale of papers, and all moneys for supplies, &c., must be sent to the Publishing House and all matters sent by express, and in our city, must be directed to E. Weaver, No. 619 Pine st.

All articles or matter of the Christian Recorder, must be directed to E. Weaver, Box No. 616 Philadelphia

TERMS

Two Dollars a year, payable in advance Single copies, five cents

ADVERTISEMENTS.

We solicit Advertisements of all descriptions, suitable for a religious newspaper, which will be published as follows:—

Cards of advertisements, inserted for one year, provided they do not exceed eight lines, for 3 dollars, payable included for eight dollars without the paper.—Six months, for six dollars paper included.—Three months, four dollars. one month, $1 50, paper in each case included

CORRESPONDING EDITORS OF CHRISTIAN RECORDER.

Rev. J. P. CAMPBELL, Rev. A. W. WAYMAN,
" J. M. WILLIAMS, " E. T. WILLIAMS,
" G. B. GRAHAM, " C. BURCH,
Rev L. ROSS

TO "BABY JULIA," WATCHING THE MOON.

Why so calmly lying, Julia,
Lying on thy mother's knee!
Art thou thinking, art thou dreaming,
While the moonbeams softly gleaming,
Cast their light on thee!

Does thine eye pierce farther, Julia,
Farther than to us is given!
As the angels art thou gifted!
Canst thou, where the clouds are rifted,
See thy native heaven!

Canst thou trace the moonlight, Julia,
Trace it through the summer air,
Trace it to the fairy bowers!
Dost thou catch the scent of flowers
That are blooming there!

Would that thou couldst tell us, Julia,
Tell us whether this be so!
Are there in that distant planet,
Valleys, rivers, walls of granite!
Surely thou must know.

Vain are all our efforts, Julia,
Vain—and thou alone canst see,
We had once that gift from heaven;
Now to thee the trust is given—
Stained by earth are we.

September 30, 1862.

DEAD.

"Two hands upon the breast, and labor is past."

How the shock stunned me when they said
"She's dead!" Ours only in the heartache:
To die is gain, and for her sake
Will we strive to be calm instead.
Why do my tears flow on! She's dead.

Sweet soul, whose loss we mourn to-day,
Thou truest friend, of gentlest heart,
Many for whom thou hast healed the smart,
Hiding thine own woes all away,
Look lovingly upon thy clay.

All beautiful and tender things
Blent with us if a part of thee,
Reflecting what thy love might be
In most exalted mindstrings.
To-day, the bride of Christ, she sings!

So faithful who on earth have been,
So meekly still on earth to stay,
How welcome near the throne are they,
The life eternal to begin!
How beautiful the crown they win!

The Christ to her hath made it plain,
That song of Sabbath evening's breath,
"By death I shall escape from death,
And life eternal blessed gain:
For ever with the Lord! Amen!"

P. G. T.

For the Christian Recorder.

COLORED SCHOOLS.

We are in the midst of a mighty revolution. The fierce and bitter contest between freedom and despotism shakes the continent. The result will, to a great degree, shape the destinies of nations yet unborn. More than those of any other nation or class of people on the globe, are our interests and liberties at stake. Can we be idle spectators at such a crisis? Let us continually beseech God to put forth his strong arm in behalf of the oppressed and down-trodden; and let us do all within our power to accomplish that for which we pray At this time more than at any previous time, should our schools be well conducted and filled to overflowing. A new era is dawning upon us. Our sons and daughters are to act in nobler spheres; are to move in higher circles. To imagine that they can act well the part that will be assigned them without a well cultivated and fully developed mind, is in the highest degree nonsensical The rising generation must not be permitted, or rather compelled to grope their way through the midnight darkness of ignorance, inactivity and superstition. The condition of our country, generations from far off periods in the future, justice, humanity and God, all unitedly demand that they be educated.

The colored teachers of Ohio are taking hold of the work in earnest. In 1860 they convened at Xenia and formed the Teachers' Association. Their first annual meeting was held at Springfield in 1862. The next meeting will be held in Cincinnati, commencing on the 25th of December, and will continue in session three days. The object of this Association is nothing less than the elevation of our oppressed and down-trodden people, and the education of Ohio's 14 000 colored youth. The work is a vast one, yet willing hearts and strong hands can do it. Already the number of colored schools in Ohio is 168; the number of colored teachers, 190. During the last eight or ten years the number of our schools and the number of our teachers has rapidly increased. Our schools are now better organized and better attended; our teachers are better qualified and more in earnest.

Let us strive, we intend to bring our schools up to a higher standard. The 14,000 colored youth of Ohio must be educated, yes, and all the colored youth of our country.

Cincinnati, Ohio J. G. MITCHELL.

WASHINGTON CORRESPONDENCE.

MR. EDITOR:—To snatch a feather from the wing of time with which to record a few passing events, and bid hush all bothering distractions till the work is executed, would not, I think, be out of place. The wheels of life must ever and anon revolve till touched by the chilly waters of death. And while they revolvingly speed their way through time's changing cycles, the greatest possible use must be levied upon its immunities. The best use must be made of the best advantages, and there is nothing ever offers itself at all times more favorably than the grace of God. In whatever condition or in whatever circumstance an individual may be placed, the great saving element is needful. In health it is a protection from the ungodly acts of the world; in sickness, a solace more comforting than can be obtained from the perishable objects of all sublunary things; in death, a sure protection from the anger of an incensed God, or the thundering denunciations of the judgment. With this heaven-donated virtue, the children of Immanuel are ever garrisoned and fortressed against every assailing danger. Hell's raging billows may roll and dash only to fall shattered at their feet, but stationed upon the mount of protection, they are insured against whatever may oppose.

Several Catholic sisters have been holding a festival this week for the benefit of the contrabands. I am informed they were largely patronized. It is a glorious thing that no denominational differences exist in regard to the contrabands, but every one appears to work regardless of sect. Rev. Caleb Woodyard, pastor of Second Baptist Church, has also a very fine festival going on in his church. Several of the industrious sisters of said church are holding up his hands pecuniarily, like sisters indeed. Rev. Woodyard is very much beloved by his congregation, and has a crowded church at all times. He has taken in some thirty-five members within five months.

The Quarterly Meeting of Rev. Jas. A. Handy came off last Sabbath, but owing to its being a rainy day, few persons were out

Rev. David Smith is still in the city, and has an extensive medical practice. I am informed that he is coining the dimes to his own desire. The Israel Lyceum, lately organized, is prospering flatteringly. The genius displayed by some young men that might have been considered raw material is astounding. It bids fair to be one of the noblest institutions ever connected with that church.

There is great complaint in high circles against the slow movements of General McClellan. I am informed that even members of the Cabinet are disgusted.

They have been holding a week's meeting in Israel Church, which was attended with evidences of God's approval H. M. T.

Washington, Nov. 1st, 1862.

For the Christian Recorder

DEAR EDITOR:—Please allow me a small space in your columns for a few lines in regard to some matters that have appeared in print, about the colonization of the colored people in Central America, or any other place, and as that has come to be one of the great questions of the day, and some of the colored people seem to be greatly alarmed at President Lincoln's scheme, let me tell them not to be alarmed, as they can use their own pleasure about going, and there will be no compulsion in the matter, and that the President only wishes those to go that are willing, and that are the proper persons to found a colony, men that have become tired of being foot-balls for the white man, those who have become weary of working for other people, and feel like doing something for themselves; last of all, those who feel themselves degraded, and are sick of hearing their wives and daughters slandered and insulted on the highways, and feel their position; those who are willing to sacrifice their lives for a better home, if such can be found. Such are the kind of men to found a colony in a foreign land, and if successful in their undertaking, will be treasured in the hearts of their countrymen as a Columbus or a Washington; but those that are satisfied with their present condition let them remain as they are; we have no objection, but for myself, I intend to seek a better position. Had we done so long ago, we would have been at the present time like other happy nations, for instance Liberia; but what are we now? Nothing, not even respected by our own people; let us try and make ourselves respected. Thousands are coming North daily, supposing they are free; but I see no free men of color in this country, no, not one to-day. God looks for a work from us, and if we remain idle, what can we hope to have done? We can never expect to become a great people. It is our duty to lay hold of this colonization scheme and carry it through to the end, and see what we can accomplish through the means offered to us. Let the people see we have the energy to accomplish the work set before us. Will we let Congress give us $5000, and make no effort to see what benefit can be derived from it? They say, what will be done with the negroes? Let them go where there will be equality, and they will act for themselves; and if every man of color feels the same as I do upon the subject, they will join heart and hands in building up a country where we can enjoy liberty to the utmost extent.

The administration has done all it can for us; furnished us with money, freed all the slaves; now let us delay at nothing, and show our pride as a people, and take hold of all that is given to us and build up a home for thousands of our brothers who have no place to lay their heads. We have worked long enough, as our fathers before us for other people; and if we love our wives, families and liberty, let us make one great effort to place ourselves in a better position, and delay is no longer.

We are certain the President has no wish to harm us by this colonization scheme; but instead of giving us $5000, and sending us to Central America, he could send us to the battle-field. This is my birth place, and I dislike to leave it, but for the precious boon of freedom, I will dare even death. Such are the kind of men that are going to found a colony W. C. D.

Newport, R. I. Nov. 1st, 1862.

POVERTY.

Bulwer says that poverty is only an idea, in nine cases out of ten. Some men with ten thousand dollars a year suffer more for want of means than others with three hundred. The reason is, the richer man has artificial wants. His income is ten thousand dollars, and by habit he spends twelve or fifteen thousand, and he suffers enough from being dunned for unpaid debts to kill a sensitive man. A man who earns a dollar a day and does not run in debt, is the happier of the two Very few people who have never been rich will believe this, but it is true as God's word. There are people, of course, who are wealthy, and enjoy their wealth, but there are thousands upon thousands with princely incomes, who never know a moment's peace, because they live above their means. There is really more happiness in the world among working people than among those who are called rich.

THE DUTY OF SMILING

How often do we see conscientious men, full of charity, seeking out objects of want, and bestowing them, whose deeds of beneficence are known only to the recipients and to God, and yet who are regarded as austere. These men have far less influence than they who are not their equals in intelligence and virtue. Whence? Mainly from the fact that they seldom smile—courteous in greeting acquaintances, and expressing in words their pleasure at their approach, but upon whose lips a smile is seldom found. Thus men misapprehend their character, and their influence is seriously impaired.

We infer the duty of smiling, having reference to the muscles of the face as well as to the feelings of the heart.

Should a man hypocritically smile when he does not feel like it? He should feel like it, and should do it when he meets his fellow-men in the ordinary intercourse of life.

From the Lutheran and Missionary

THE METRES OF HYMNS.

It is not an accidental nor unimportant matter, into what metre a hymn is thrown. The outward form has much to do with the inward life; and if

"Rhymes the rudders are of verses,
Of which, like ships, they steer the courses,"

it is no less true that the metrical form and structure exert a mighty influence on the thoughts and feelings which are committed to their keeping, and contribute much towards the result which stands before the eye and mind. It may have been a serious question with many a poet, whether he should throw his epic into heroic or blank verse, into the Spenserian stanza or Hexameters: and the success of the experiment has often depended on the justness of the choice. For each form of verse has a character of its own; and in proportion as that character harmonizes with, and is fitted to express the spirit and matter of the ideas in hand, will those ideas appear to best advantage, and be developed to their highest possible perfection. This applies not less to Lyric Poetry than to more ambitious sorts; and among the different kinds of lyric poetry, to Hymnic, the most important and clearly defined of all. The scope and object of Hymnic Poetry limit it necessarily to certain special forms of metre; yet among these forms there is great number and variety. The loose liveliness of many song and ballad measures is unsuited to sacred themes; and utility excludes the irregular rhythm of the ode. Yet within the boundaries of decorous, fitting, and regular rhythm, we shall find abundant supply for all the wants of the Church; and a column or two will not be wasted, devoted to the survey of the Metres in which Hymns are written, examining, as we go, the characteristics, merits, and aptitudes of the several measures.

IAMBIC METRES. (⏑ –)

By far the greater number of hymns are built on the foot called Iambus, comprising a long and a short syllable. Of this are composed all the Regular Metres, and some dozen of those called Particular, several of them old and familiar, others less known and used Of this sort are the ancient versions of the Psalms; all the hymns of Watts and Doddridge (with two exceptions, to be noticed hereafter;) nearly everything in Hymnology, until the time of Charles Wesley and the great Methodist revival, both in religion and sacred poetry; and since that day, the productions of those who closely follow the example of Dr Watts The Iambus has been generally regarded as the foot most suited to the needs of Church song; and its metres form the solid, sober, staid portion of our Hymnologic possessions, and are thus definite, because it is better to be so Much trouble would be avoided by an acquaintance with the nature, structure, and relations of the different measures, and by calling them by their right names. Much ignorance or carelessness exists in Hymn books in this respect. The old practice of designating everything not Long, Common, or Short, by one sweeping title of Particular Metre, is scarcely better than no notation at all. [Not much more satisfactory is the habit, in some modern Hymn books, of marking Common Peculiar Metre (C. P. M.) as 8, 8, 6; Long Metre, 6 lines, as, 8s; and the like.] Such errors produce, rather than save confusion. A little knowledge of Prosody would bear valuable accomplishment, which most choirs lack. To look slightly into the principles of things would help greatly in choosing and adapting tunes, and prevent many a blunder and many a confession of incompetency. But to our subject.

LONG METRE

is neither the oldest, the most popular, nor the most useful of measures, yet it is somehow regarded as the chief. A verse of four lines, each one comprising four Iambuses, or eight syllables, alternately short and long. That is the whole philosophy of it, yet how many singers know so much! We have many more Hymns and Tunes in long metre than are needed. The truth is, it is the most difficult of measures to write acceptably in. A versifier of mediocre talent, writing under no special inspiration, can take no surer way of downing his production to obscurity and uselessness, than by putting it in Long Metre. A hymn must have some remarkable merit—must be eminently earnest, touching, graceful, or dignified, to be tolerable in Long Metre. Otherwise, verses which might be respectable in Common or Short Measure, will be heavy, lifeless, and unfit to sing For examples of this, we need look no farther than our own Hymn book. If neither gods nor men will tolerate mediocrity in poetry at large, still less can it be allowed in Long Metre. Often a hymn has been visibly improved, and fitted for use, by striking out two syllables in the 2d and 4th lines, and so changing it from L. M. to C. M.

Yet for some purposes the measure is admirably suited For solemn strains of praise it is unsurpassed. Nothing is nobler or more appreciated than the notes of Old Hundred, joined to "Before Jehovah's lofty throne," or to Bishop Ken's famous Doxology. Dr Watts was the greatest master of this form of verse; and some of his Psalms, in it, are models of majesty and compact strength of language: we feel that no other measure could have answered the end so well. But Dr. Watts was unrivalled in that kind of poetical power; and even he fell often, and generally, far below his own standard. Dr. Doddridge's Long Metre hymns are mostly heavy; and few, by lesser men, possess the dignity and force which make the peculiar glory of Long Metre.

There is another lesser excellence of Long Metres. It is favorable to the expression of quiet, sober, devotional thought. Narrative, experimental, and meditative hymns have been written in it, with great success; for instance, "Return, my roving heart, return;" "Far from thy fold, O God, my feet." Charles Wesley also has used this measure for several most earnest petitions, in his own peculiar and inimitable manner. I annex examples of some of the two sorts of excellence; they are totally distinct, yet each is perfect of its kind They are from Watts and Wesley:

"Praise ye the Lord! 'tis good to raise
Our hearts and voices in His praise,
His nature and His works invite
To sacred pleasure and delight."

"I have no skill the snare to shun,
But thou, O Christ, my wisdom art:
I ever into ruin run;
But thou art greater than my heart."

It should be said, that that kind of Long Metre which rhymes by couplets, (except first example above,) is, as a rule, more lyrical than the other, where the rhyme is by alternate lines. And as we leave Long Metre: an instrument hard to play on, but in the hands of one skilled by art and nature, capable of discoursing excellent music.

COMMON METRE

is preferable to the last, by being more familiar to every experience and comprehension, more natural, and more easily sung It is the favorite metre of the Psalms, designed for general use In Rouse, especially, (the Scotch Kirk's version,) [illegible] (who died 1691,) and the few others prior to Watts, are mostly written in Common Metre; and it will doubtless keep its place, while the Church sings on earth, as the most standard, popular, largely used of measures. If we had no other, this possesses such melody and such variety, that it might be all things in itself. Its capacities are infinite; its excellencies are not of a single sort, but catholic and comprehensive. To every mood of mind, to every subject and style of sacred song, it adapts itself with a natural grace which makes it a pleasure either to read or sing. Doctrine, meditation, confession, praise and prayer are alike at home in it The various thoughts and feelings of a Christian mind in view of all subjects, sad, solemn or joyful—the vast range of experience, from the humble petition of a convicted sinner to the rhapsodies of ecstatic faith, can all be, and have all been expressed in the sweet and simple rhythm of Common Metre, as if that were their natural language. Among all the metres, it is the acknowledged stand-by. We cannot soon exhaust the excellent hymns and tunes which it comprises. Everybody knows "Come, Holy Spirit," "There is a fountain," "When I can read my title clear." There are few people who cannot sing Ortonville, Dundee, Ilaleraa. There is no instrument for the praise of God more precious than Common Metre.

But, as with all familiar blessings, we scarcely understand its value. Its metrical structure is so simple, that we seldom notice its admirable adaptedness to serve the purpose of sweet sounds. In fact, the measure is as musical, that he must be a poor rhymster—a mere machine poet—who cannot write smoothly and harmoniously in it. Dr. Doddridge had no ear for music, but he produced some hymns of consummate melody in Common Metre. Secular poets have used it with eminent success; many of our finest ballads and most elegant lyrics are in it; and any Hymn book will show specimens of no less perfection. Bishop Heber wrote in this measure with great elegance; and Charles Wesley used it with a master's hand. From many verses of the latter, flowing with equal grace, we give the following:

"Thy goodness and thy truth, to me,
To every soul, abound,
A vast, unfathomable sea,
Where all our thoughts are drowned.
Its streams the whole creation reach,
So plenteous is the store,
Enough for all, enough for each,
Enough for evermore."

SHORT METRE

has, I think, not been appreciated. The number of its hymns and tunes is considerably less than that of either Long Metre or Common Metre; yet it has more to recommend it than the first, while its capacities are not much inferior to those of the latter Like Common Metre, it is fitted alike for themes of mourning and rejoicing, of self-communing and of praise. But its peculiarity arises from the unevenness of the lines, and consists in a certain swelling and march of rhythm, which reaches its climax at the end of every verse It may be easily seen how this differs from the even stateliness of the lines in Long Metre, and from the regular melody of the couplets in Common Metre This circumstance makes the measure especially fit for hymns of joy, triumph, and praise, such as "Come, ye that love the Lord," "Awake, and sing the song," and one less known, of Kelly's:

"From Egypt lately come,
Where death and darkness reign,
We seek our new, our better home,
In hopes a rest to gain."

Continued through a whole hymn, the repeated effect becomes marked and impressive.

Short Metre is abundant, also, in hymns of a quieter class. Beddome excelled in largely for his unpretentious, epigrammatic lyrics, among them, "Did Christ o'er sinners weep!" and "Heirs of unending life." That it is very favorable to the language of self-examination and exhortation, may appear from the prevalence of such hymns as "A charge to keep I have," "My soul, be on thy guard," "And am I born to die?" Nor less so—to earnest, touching devotion, whether joyous or mournful—"My God, my life, my love," "Behold, the amazing sight!"

In all its uses it is an eminently lyrical measure, and its few fine tunes are very fine. It is nearly allied to Hallelujah Metre, and stands, as it were, on the border land between so called Regular and Peculiar Metres. PSYCHUS.

MILITARY AFFAIRS AMONG THE ANCIENT HEBREWS.

NO. I

THE ENROLMENT—EXEMPTIONS—DRAFT

At the present time, when so many of our countrymen, including a large number of our church members, have been called upon to bear arms, military affairs have assumed an unusual importance. The quiet current of our country's progress has been lashed into rage by the terrible things that are occurring. Men are looking into each other's faces with bewilderment, and anxiously awaiting the news of each day to hear of some happy change in the tide of events, which may afford some prospect of returning peace An unparalleled number of volunteers have given themselves cheerfully to the service of their country, and now the military draft is laying compulsion on many who respond with reluctant hearts. In this state of affairs, I have been led to consult "The Record," and have found, as Solomon long ago remarked, that there is nothing new under the sun The things that fill our minds with so much amazement are the same that have been of old

War is undoubtedly one of the very worst evils But experience has shown it to be a necessary evil. The great results of Providence have been wrought out by the antagonism of opposing forces There is, in the very conditions of their existence, a continual conflict of knowledge with ignorance, of science with superstition, and of the Church with the world. Peace or compromise in either of these cases, would arrest the world's progress, and prove the saddest of all calamities to the race.

There can be no question about the divine approval of war in necessary cases. Self-preservation is the first law of nature. Hence resistance is a duty where escape from the violence or oppression of an enemy is impossible This voice of nature finds its response in the war-trumpet of revelation. The wars against the Canaanites were expressly enjoined. Some of the best men whose names are on record were men of war. Even Abraham armed his trained servants to capture an invader. Gen. xiv. 14–16. Joshua was the hero of many battles. Gideon and Barak were armed with faith and the sword at the same time. Heb. xi. 32 David, whose whole life was a warfare, thanked the Lord for teaching his hands to war. Ps. xviii. 34.

Among the ancient Hebrews there was no regular army. By this I mean that there was no class who made war their business. They depended wholly on the militia, who were called out in cases of emergency As soon as the war closed, the entire force was disbanded. The first mention of an army in time of peace, was that of Saul, who kept two thousand men for his body guard, and one thousand for his son Jonathan. 1 Sam. xiii. 1, 2. David had two bands, called the Chorethites and Pelethites, which, according to Josephus, were his guards. In a later age, large armies were kept even in times of peace.

The enrollment, (of which we have a full account in the first chapter of Numbers,) included all the males of twenty years and upwards. One who had exceeded fifty years, could obtain his release The tribes and families were enrolled separately. Several classes were exempt

1 The whole tribe of Levi was left out of enrollment Those on the ground of their special appointment to the service of the tabernacle They were not, however, wholly excluded from [illegible] Speed of their wives' families as musicians, Num. x. 9, 10; and their special work was to blow the trumpet when the army moved into battle. In case the ark of the covenant was taken into battle, it was their duty to carry it. There is one case of great emergency in which they were armed, and posted as guards around the king's house. 2 Chron. xxiii 5–7. There are individual cases in which the sons of priests even became eminent in war. Benaiah, the son of Jehoiada, was appointed chief of the army by Solomon, in place of Joab whom he slew with his own hand. 1 Kings ii. 29–35. The manner in which this transaction is recorded, leads to the belief that it was no unusual thing for members of the priesthood to serve in the army. Yet, as a class, there is no doubt about the priesthood being exempt from military duty

2 If any man had builded a new house, which he had not yet occupied, he enjoyed a temporary exemption. From the title of the thirtieth Psalm, it was evidently the custom to consecrate a new dwelling with religious ceremonies, previous to its occupancy. This was a very appropriate service, designed to secure the divine blessing on the household God honored this custom so far as not even to allow the exigencies of war to interfere with its observance. An important effect of this exemption, besides its tender benevolence and encouragement to piety, would be to encourage improvement by stimulating the Hebrew youth to erect for themselves permanent homes. By this arrangement they ran no risk of leaving a house unfinished, or of leaving their families without shelter during their absence, or homeless in case they fell in battle.

3 In like manner, if any man had planted a vine or oliveyard, and had not yet eaten of its fruit, he was exempt. This arrangement had a similar foundation with the above. It had reference to the feelings of the proprietor, and also to the wants of his family. The tender vines and olive plants, upon which the support of the household depended, needed special attention No man need be deterred from planting a vineyard, under apprehension of being called to war before it had matured some fruit.

4. The man who had betrothed a wife and had not married, was exempt; also the newly married man for one year after his marriage. The Hebrews considered it a religious duty to rear offspring, and hence their laws, in various ways, encouraged marriage. Besides, it was the custom of the age to regard separation soon after marriage as deeply afflicting. Homer represents the case of Protesilaus as distressing almost beyond endurance, when obliged to go to the Trojan war, leaving his wife in tears and house unfinished.

5. The fearful and faint-hearted were allowed to return of their own accord. This regulation had in view the efficiency of the army. Much of the fighting was done hand to hand The result depended not so much on numbers, as desperate valor. The timidity of cowards would embolden the adversary, and occasion the risk of a panic Hence it is not unusual in ancient warfare to find one man putting to flight a company, or a few brave spirits chasing a whole army Three of David's captains broke through the whole host of the Philistines 1 Chron xi 14. Sometimes one could literally chase a thousand, and two put ten thousand to flight. Deut xxxii. 30 So we read in Homer, that Achilles and Hector, by individual prowess, sometimes drove whole squadrons Goliath, the Philistine, was regarded with terror by the entire army of Israel, from which they were relieved only by the personal valor of David. Sometimes a large portion of the army returned to their homes under this rule. Of thirty-two thousand, only ten thousand remained to fight the Midianites under Gideon. Judges vii 3 But this purging of the ranks only made victory the more certain.

The enrolled militia were required to hold themselves in readiness for service at all times. In cases of great emergency—as when the country was invaded by a powerful foe—the whole force, or at least all in the immediate vicinity of the enemy, was called out. But ordinarily, a part only were selected. There was no such thing as a levy, or draft by lot. The best material for the army was taken. Joshua fought the Amalekites with chosen men. Ex. vii 9, 10. And this was no exceptional case. The law did not regard equality of rights or obligations on the part of citizens, but the public safety. The same custom prevailed among the Romans. If it prevailed to a greater extent with us, our armies would be far more efficient, our hospitals would have fewer patients, and the list of mortality would be wonderfully curtailed. A. E.

WRESTLING JACOB

Come, O thou traveller unknown,
Whom still I hold, but cannot see!
My company before is gone,
And I am left alone with thee;
With thee all night I mean to stay,
And wrestle till the break of day.

I need not tell thee who I am,
My misery and sin declare:
Thyself hast called me by my name;
Look on thy hands and read it there:
But who, I ask thee, who art Thou?
Tell me thy name, and tell me now.

In vain thou struggle to get free,
I never will unloose my hold;
Art thou the man that died for me?
The secret of thy love unfold;
Wrestling, I will not let thee go,
Till I thy name, thy nature know.

Wilt thou not yet to me reveal
Thy new, unutterable name?
Tell me, I still beseech thee, tell,
To know it now resolved I am:
Wrestling, I will not let thee go,
Till I thy name, thy nature know.

What tho' my shrinking flesh complain,
And murmur to contend so long?
I rise superior to my pain;
When I am weak then I am strong:
And when my all of strength doth fail,
I shall with the God-man prevail

Yield to me now, for I am weak;
But confident in self-despair
Speak to my heart, in blessings speak,
Be conquered by my instant prayer:
Speak, or thou never hence shalt move,
And tell me if thy name is love.

'Tis love! 'tis love! thou diedst for me!
I hear thy whisper in my heart;
The morning breaks, the shadows flee,
Pure, universal love thou art:
To me, to all, thy bowels move,
Thy nature and thy name is Love.

THE ARREST OF DR. HAY.

Extended as the following notice is, we think it will be read with great interest. We extract it from the Harrisburgh Daily Telegraph, Oct. 30th

The illegal arrest of Rev. Dr. Hay—its cause—the hearing—honorable discharge

We have already announced that the Rev. Dr. Charles A. Hay, minister of the First Lutheran church in this city, had been illegally taken from his home on Tuesday morning, on the strength of telegraphic despatch from Gen. Wool to Gen. Wilson, asking the Provost Marshal to secure Dr. Hay and bring him at once under guard to his headquarters in Baltimore. In obedience to the despatch, Marshal Kleckner arrested Dr Hay on Monday evening, placing guard inside of his residence, and also one on the outer door. The Rev. Dr had been engaged to perform the funeral services of one of our oldest and most respectable ladies, Mrs. Judge Hummel, on Tuesday morning, but he managed to send word to Mr. William M Kerr, president of the Harrisburgh Bank, and son-in-law of the deceased, that he would be unable to attend, and that he was held a prisoner. Mr Kerr, who is well known to every man in this city as one of the most upright and loyal men in the country, made an attempt to have an interview with Dr. Hay, but he was not permitted to see him, nor would the guard accompany him so that he might hear all the conversation. Dr Hay was treated worse than a criminal guilty of a high offence.

The writer of this article saw Dr. Hay but a few minutes before the cars started, and upon examination of the paper on which the arrest was made, it was discovered at once that the whole proceeding was illegal, since by an express order of the War Department, it has been ordered that no person should be arrested unless by authority from the War Department direct, or the Judge Advocate, General Turner.—Dr. Hay, however, perfectly conscious that no offence had been committed, and acting as a loyal citizen, who would suffer any privation for the sake of supporting the government, submitted to this tyrannical proceeding, and accompanied the guard to Baltimore.

Before, however, we give the proceeding had before Gen. Wool, we will narrate the offence which Dr. Hay committed, in the judgment of the General, and for which he was summoned hence to answer.

During a late visit to Baltimore he met with the wife of one of the leading merchants in that city, who boastingly told him how those who openly sympathise with secessionists in Baltimore were permitted to take sick rebel prisoners captured in battle, to their homes, and quarter them among their friends, and that quite a rivalry existed among them to honor the rebel sick and wounded. This, of course, mortified Dr. Hay most extremely. It was almost too much for a man who had devoted day and night to the care of the sick Union soldiers, to hear, and knowing the lady intimately as truthful, he left that city with a sad heart, deploring that it could be possible that secessionists of Baltimore can nurse the sick rebels while our own Union soldiers are left to the tender care of hospital nurses.

Dr. Hay found upon reaching home that Rev. Dr. Lochman, a highly respectable and loyal clergyman of York, had made several applications to the Surgeon General, asking for the transfer of a loyal sick soldier from Camp Curtin Hospital to the hospital at York, so that his friends and relatives might minister to the sick soldier at home. This reasonable request had been denied to a loyal man who had been fighting and bleeding for his country. Feeling indignant at this contrast between the treatment of the rebel and loyal soldiers, he wrote the following card:

EDITOR OF THE TELEGRAPH:—I have just returned from Baltimore. Whilst there I fell in with a lady of well-known secession proclivities, who boasted of having brought away from Fort McHenry, by permission of General Wool, four of the wounded prisoners lately transferred from Frederick. I inquired if they were in any of the Baltimore hospitals "No, they are in the hands of OUR FRIENDS. A dozen ladies scrambled for them, but I had already promised them to others, and they are well cared for"

Now I wish to call public attention to this fact, which speaks for itself. Would the same General allow similar privileges to loyal ladies in behalf of loyal soldiers?

CHARLES A. HAY.

Harrisburgh, Oct. 24th, 1862.

Dr. Hay arrived at Baltimore at one o'clock, and was ushered at once into the Headquarters of General Wool. After waiting some time, the General appeared seemingly very much excited, and after examining several papers lying on his table, he accused Dr Hay with being the writer of different articles published in the Baltimore American, remarking at the same time that "they were all a pack of lies."

Dr. Hay replied coolly that he had never written anything for that paper

Gen. Wool then remarked that an article had been published over his own signature, at the same time still hunting in great excitement over his papers, but unable to find the article in question.

Dr. Hay then stated that he had published an article in the Harrisburgh paper, at the same time handing him the article cut from the TELEGRAPH.

Gen. Wool took the slip, read it, pacing up and down the room, and stating that "it was a pack of lies."

Dr. Hay answered coolly that he was not in the habit of telling lies.

After this conversation Dr. Hay gave a full history of the transactions at Camp Curtin, and of his visit to Baltimore, giving the author of the fact that secession prisoners had been taken from the fort and quartered among the secessionists of Baltimore

Gen. Wool stated that he had an official account of the transactions at Fort McHenry before him, but insisted that Dr. Hay had been wrong in stating that he had given permission to take these secession prisoners from the Fort, at the same time not denying that this had been done by the commander of the Fort. Gen. Wool read from the official report of Gen. Morris concerning the disturbances there, which corroborated many of the statements of Dr. Hay's informant, and satisfied him that the General to whom the lady referred was not Gen Wool

Dr Hay saw after this explanation that the deed had not been directly committed by Gen. Wool, yet it was done under his command, and he was responsible for it. He told the General at once that he had no hesitation in saying publicly that he had been in error in regard to the person granting such permission

This seemed to satisfy the General, who had no doubt heard of some in connexion with the affair, and he thereupon discharged Dr. Hay without condition

This illegal arrest and examination has ended in failing to disprove the fact that some one under the control of Gen. Wool, had permitted four secession prisoners to be taken from the Fort and quartered among secessionists in Baltimore, which privilege has been denied to Union soldiers. We are therefore glad that an opportunity has been given to investigate this matter, and we have no doubt, that the illegal arrest of Dr. Hay will bring about the discharge of incompetent officers (to use the mildest term,) and arrest abuses in the department of Gen. Wool, which have grown almost insufferable to loyal men.

The Baltimore papers have not been quiet on this subject, and it seems strange indeed, that Gen. Wool should find it necessary to arrest innocent men in the country, when he could find persons nearer home The following extract on the military management in Baltimore, we copy from the American of Monday last.

The Union men of this city know that they are a power, able, without the aid of a bayonet from a neighboring State, to protect themselves and to put treason at a discount; and may not much longer tolerate the growth of evils so dangerous to their peace, as the poisonous Upas tree to whose root the axe should be laid, and to destroy which the work is being urged

It is time, then, that the Government and the country should know that the loyal men of this city will not much longer patiently bear those grievances, and that they desire and demand such an administration of affairs here as will give them confidence in the discretion and patriotism of those having military authority in this department

Gov. Curtin telegraphed at once, when he ascertained the arrest of Dr Hay, to the War Department asking his immediate release — Secretary Stanton answered promptly that no authority had been given for such arrest, and desired to know by whom it was ordered.—This shows clearly that the whole responsibility rests upon Gen. Wool, and that he will have to answer for his conduct to a higher power. The Administration is not in the least to blame, and it was done without its knowledge. The whole matter will be laid before the War Department, and somebody discover that, however they may set the tyrant over a sick soldier and discharge rebel prisoners, they will not be permitted to drag loyal and better men from their homes with impunity

UGLY INSECTS.

"The sage, and the beetle at his feet, have each ministrations to perform."—TUPPER.

Oh, term not insects "ugly!"
There never yet was one
Of God's created creatures,
Since earth from chaos sprung,
But that possessed beauty,
Or proved a purpose wise;
So think of Him who made them,
And ne'er their form despise.

Ants are endowed with instinct
So wonderfully great,
That men, with reason gifted,
Might them their models make,
In various daily matters
Pertaining to this earth;
For industry and foresight
Are traits of sterling worth.

There's beauty in the beetle—
Look at his burnished wing;
And usefulness—he clears the ground
Of many a nauseous thing.
And as he aids to till the soil;
Thus we should ne'er condemn
His form as "ugly," nor forget
The good he does for men.

The earthworm is not lovely
To look upon, I ween,
But many a serious lesson
We from a worm may glean.
Did we but rightly ponder
That sad yet true decree—
"The worm, she is thy sister,"
How humble we should be!

Then call not insects "ugly,"
For God has made them all:
The huge, gigantic white ant,
And ladybird so small.
They all possess some virtue,
Are objects of His love,
Who says that not a sparrow falls
Unknown to God above.

ENGLISH WOMEN.

BY NATHANIEL HAWTHORNE.

I have heard a good deal of the tenacity with which English ladies retain their personal beauty to a late period of life; but (not to suggest that an American eye needs use and cultivation before it can quite appreciate the charm of English beauty at any age) it strikes me that an English lady of fifty is apt to become a creature less refined and delicate, so far as physique goes, than anything that we Western people class under the name of woman. She has an awful ponderosity of frame, not pulpy, like the looser development of our few fat women, but massive with solid beef and streaky tallow; so that (though struggling manfully against the idea) you inevitably think of her as made up of steaks and sirloins. When she walks, her advance is elephantine. When she sits down, it is on a great round space of her Maker's footstool, where she looks if nothing could ever move her She imposes awe and respect by the muchness of her personality, to such a degree that you probably credit her with far greater moral and intellectual force than she can fairly claim. Her visage is usually grim and stern, not always positively forbidding, yet saleny terrible, not merely by its breadth and weight of feature, but because it seems to express so much well-founded self-reliance, such acquaintance with the world, its toils, troubles, and dangers, and such sturdy capacity for trampling down a foe. Without anything positively salient, or actively offensive, or, indeed, unjustly formidable to her neighbors, she has the effect of a seventy-four gun-ship in time of peace; for, while you assure yourself that there is no real danger, you cannot help thinking how tremendous would be her onset, if preposterously inclined, and how futile the effort to inflict any counter-injury. She certainly looks tenfold—nay, a hundredfold—better able to take care of herself than our slender-framed and haggard womankind; but I have not found reason to suppose that the English dowager of fifty has actually greater courage, fortitude, and strength of character than our women of similar age, or even a tougher physical endurance than they. Morally, she is strong, I suspect only in society, and in the common routine of social affairs, and would be found powerless and timid in any exceptional strait that might call for energy outside of the conventionalities amid which she has grown up.

You can meet this figure in the street, and live, and even smile at the recollection. But conceive of her in a ball-room, with the bare, brawny arms that she invariably displays there, and all the other corresponding development, such as is beautiful in the maiden blossom, but a spectacle to howl at in such an over-blown cabbage-rose as this.

NARCOTICS.

THE North-American Review for October contains a valuable article on Narcotics. We shall do our readers a service by presenting some of its most important facts in a popular form. The use of narcotics is universal. Every people—from the savage, sunk in the lowest depths of pagan barbarism, to the highly enlightened Christian—has its favorite weed or gum, which is chewed or smoked for the purpose of producing that dreamy state in which

The Christian Recorder.

Philadelphia, November 8, 1862.

NOTICE

TO THE DISTRICTS OF PHILADELPHIA, NEW ENGLAND, OHIO, INDIANA, AND MISSOURI, OF THE A. M. E. CHURCH MINISTERS.

Dear Brethren:—As we have a number of superannuated ministers on the list in said Districts, therefore it will be expected that the ministers and preachers, on their circuits and stations, will do all they can to collect the two cent money; and we also recommend that the Class leaders be instructed to collect and set the amount on the Class book opposite each member's name, as also all the collections called, per Discipline, for the Annual Conference, and publish the same once every quarter, that it may be seen who they are that work for God and his cause. We think it is time to give credit to those of our people who do work, so that God's name may be glorified.

NOTICE.

Philadelphia, Nov. 1, 1862.

The following named elders are hereby notified to meet in the basement of Bethel A. M. E Church, on the 11th of this month, at 9 o'clock, A. M., to attend to the business assigned them by the last Annual Conference of this district in the case of Rev. Wm. James Fuller.

Rev. Joshua Woodlin.
" Richard Robinson.
" Peter Gardiner.
" Stephen Smith.
" Richard Barney.
" James Hollon.

HENRY DAVIS, Chairman.

NOTICE.

To the Executive Committee of the Book Concern of the A. M. E. Church:

You will please take notice that you are hereby notified to meet in the city of Philadelphia, on the 13th of November, 1862.

I make this announcement in order to save expenses, as the Sabbath School Association meets here on the 12th.

ELISHA WEAVER,
General Book Steward and Editor.

PROTRACTED MEETING.

Rev. J. P. Campbell, of Bethel Church, Philadelphia, is holding a series of meetings. There seems to be quite an interest manifested. The Lord grant that it may continue, for it is much needed in Philadelphia.

Quarterly Meeting at Deep Valley, Nov. 16th. Quarterly Conference at Patville on the 21st; at Reading, the 28th; at Downingtown, Jan. 5th; at Centerville on the 12th; at Bardsburgh on the 19th. JEREMIAH BULAUGH.

We have had our annual meeting for the election of officers for the Social, Civil and Statistical Association, on last Monday night, the result of which may be seen in another place. The Episcopal Church, St. Thomas', in Fifth street, have been holding evening meetings for every evening this week, Saturday excepted. Rev. Wm. Alston, of New York, is expected to take charge of St. Thomas' Church. We congratulate our old North Carolina friend upon entering upon his ardrous duty as a man of God.

LECTURES.

We propose to deliver some Lectures this fall and winter. The first one we shall deliver will be to the mothers of Philadelphia, at which time and place we want to see a full house. The subject ought to interest every feeling and thinking mother, for the welfare of her sons and daughters. We will announce the time and place of the first one.—ED.

PERSONAL.

Philadelphia has had the presence of two of our bishops, viz., Bishop Payne and Bishop Nearey, the latter of whom is the presiding Bishop of the Philadelphia district. They both have given us their presence in our book-store. Bishop Payne is looking very well. He only spent one night and day, or two pieces of days with us, and then left for Baltimore, where he will spend two weeks, at which time he will leave for Washington city, and will spend some two weeks there. Bishop Nearey has been travelling through his diocese, an account of which may be seen in our last week's paper. This is what we like, and what we think ought to be done by every Bishop, and if so, our people would know more about the condition of the church than what they really do. Every body admires Bishop Nearey's course in visiting his people, and publishing it in the Recorder.

ACKNOWLEDGMENTS.

Received of Bishop Nearey as follows:—

Wm. Jackson,	35
J. W. Taylor,	44
Walter Hawkins,	$1 00
Rev. R. R. Disney,	1 00
Rev. L. C. Chambers,	1 00
Rev. J. H. Shreeves, of Providence, R. I.	2 00

At an Adjourned Meeting of the Social, Civil and Statistical Association, held at the Benezet Hall, Monday evening, Nov. 3d, the following gentlemen were elected officers for the ensuing year.

President, ... J. C. Wears.
Vice Presidents ..... (Franklin Turner, U. B. Vidal
Recording Secretary, ... Rev. J. C. Gibbs, Corresponding " ..... William Still.
Treasurer, ... Jacob C White.

Executive Committee.

Henry Gordon, Robert Jones,
Wm. J. Price, S. Morgan Smith,
Rev. Stephen Smith, Dr. James H. Wilson
Moses H. Wheeler.

For the Christian Recorder.

MR. EDITOR:—Having completed my tour through the Freehold circuit, and also Allentown, and found them in good condition, and the people doing well as a general thing, I left for Bordentown on the 3d of November, where I shall remain till the 17th, at which time I shall leave for Bridgeton, N. J., remaining until the 24th, and will then visit the Cape May circuit, if the elder in charge will inform me at what point to meet him, and make provision for me to travel over his circuit. I will give farther notice in the future. W NARNEY.

VISIT TO SNOW HILL, N. J

In accordance with a most cordial invitation kindly extended to us by our Christian and gentlemanly brother, Joseph Smith, we left for the above named place on the morning of Saturday last, at the hour of 4 o'clock, P M. Taking the boat at the foot of Vine Street, we crossed the swiftly-gliding waters of the noble old Delaware, and gained the Jersey shore, where we found the cars in waiting We had not long to wait. The "iron horse" soon started on his swift flight, and steamed us along the rail

In a very short time we reached a little town called Haddonfield, where we got out, expecting to meet a conveyance for brother Smith and ourself. But, from some cause, the conveyance did not arrive—probably owing to some misunderstanding concerning the appointed time Determining to make the best of the thing possible, and nothing daunted, we concluded to walk it—the distance to be travelled being only about two miles.

We did walk it, and well did we consider ourself repaid by the beautiful sights which met our eyes as we journeyed on Looming up like some beautiful vision of nature, the tall pines and wavy cedars reared their grand old tops in the face of heaven—and stretched away in the distant horizon as far as the eye could reach. The sight was sublime. Instinctively our thoughts flew back to the merry days of our boyhood, when in childish glee we trod the sandy plains of North Carolina, in the sunny South. A feeling of sadness stole over us, and we thought of the sublimity of nature and of nature's God.

Oh! but we did keenly realize the beauty of such scenery. Brethren, you can't imagine what a nice time we had of it. Brother Smith seemed quite struck with our speed as a pedestrian—for he thought that as we had resided in the city so long, we had now lost all taste for walking; but, reader, you may just imagine in your mind how readily we could move over the sloping little hills and dales, beautiful in nature—beholding the foliage, bitten by stealthy Jack Frost, and drooping sadly down in decay to mother earth, reminding us of the shortness of time, and the certainty of a never-ending eternity.

In a little while we arrived at the place known as Snow Hill, which has all the appearance of a little town. We stopped at the house of Mr and Mrs Hodge, known better by the ministers of the Philadelphia district by the name of Mamma Hodge. She is really worthy of the title, being very kind and thoughtful. There are only the two together. Friend Hodge is about 74 years old, and moves about as though he were only 45. He is quite friendly and hospitable to preachers, but we are sorry to say that he is an old, experienced backslider, of which fact he is quite sensible. His wife, Mamma Hodge, is about 55 or 60, and does all of her own work, and a considerable for other people. She is a tried worker in Zion, and a great friend to the cause of Christ and His ministry. May the good Lord bless her and her husband.

After the Saturday night's rest, we woke up on another beautiful Sabbath morning, and at the proper time we repaired to the church, which was about a quarter of a mile from Mamma Hodge's. The church, we would just say, is about forty feet long by twenty wide, with a gallery all around it. In a little while it was filled to its utmost capacity, down-stairs and up-stairs, and many could not gain admittance.

The occasion (of the morning services) was the funeral of a young sister who had departed this life. The Society of which she was a member, by the name of the F lends of Christian Union of the Thomas Anderson and J. S. Cowis Society of Fork Landing, Burlington County, New Jersey. The members were on hand, in their full regalia, and they all marched in and took their station.

We are told that this Society is one of the best in this country. And that they have over three hundred dollars in one man's hands, just to hold for them, and he only gives them a note, and no interest. We say to that Society, that if they will lend us a hundred or two dollars to operate with in our business, we will allow them interest on it, and at the same time it will be doing good in two ways—to; your Society and for the Church. Let us know.

But to resume our subject. Brother Smith was solicited by the Society to preach her funeral sermon, which he did, from Revelation, 20th chapter and part of 21st verse—"And there shall be no more death." It was a sermon long to be remembered. Brother Smith preached a funeral sermon to suit us, for it is not every one who can do so.

At three o'clock, according to arrangement, we met again and preached for them. A glorious time we had, rest assured, dear reader. Then after we were through we laid the claims of our paper before them. Now comes the fruits of our labors, both from our members and friends, and the Wesleyans, which we take delight in recording. The whole list are residents of Haddonfield, New Jersey, contributing as follows:

The January, 1863

Mrs. Hannah A Saddler, paid,	50
James Adams, p	50
Mary Ann Hulbert,	50
Edward Miller, p,	50
Joseph M. Johnson, p.,	1 00
Mrs. M. Ann Jackson, p.,	50
Harrison Cornelius, p.,	50
Thomas Stokely, p.,	50
Mrs. H. Lewis, p	50
Stephen Thomas, p.,	50
Isaac Butler, p	50
George Colley, p.,	50
M. L. Haney, p.,	50

Aside from this, we had taken 65 copies of the Recorder with us, which number we disposed of at 5 cents per copy without any trouble whatever; and we could have easily disposed of one hundred copies.

Now, we say to our brethren, we want you to properly lay the claims of our paper before your churches, and they will take hold;—and if you don't get them to take hold, just send for us, and announce well the fact that we are coming, and give us a fair trial, like Brother Smith has done, and we can persuade them into it. We shall be satisfied then on the part of our connexion, of whom we are but the servant and agent to transact their affairs.

In conclusion, we will say that at night Brother Smith preached again. And, we must say that, it was one of Brother Smith's strong efforts. The meeting was closed by brother Edward Miller, a preacher of the old side, a man of good head, common sense, and a Christian May the Lord bless the Snow Hill people. And on the first day of January, 1863, we hope to see the renewal of the subscription from all those, and enough to increase it to twenty—and those forty dollars will gladden our heart on opening the letter on the first of second day of January. Remember that brother Hyard is authorized to act as agent for the whole place and neighborhood of Snow Hill during our absence

THE ELECTION.

In New York, New Jersey, Delaware, Michigan, and the Western States, there are many of the Democrats who are jubilant over their apparent triumph over the Republicans, and many of the Republicans heads are hung down. But permit us to say to the Republicans, "Hold up your heads, for there is only the beginning of good times." We find the following in the Tribune:—"At Tammany Hall on last Tuesday night, Mr Elijah F. Purdy occupied the chair, and said he hoped the nigger was rid of forever. But this was not deemed sufficiently explicit by a Hibernian present, who asked—'How is the nigger now?'—to which Mr. Purdy replied, 'My noble Celt, he is dead'" We would ask that august body, when did he die? I see many of them yet, walking about as happy as a king, while there is so much said about him as a hobby-horse, and as an excuse to make capital of to prejudice the minds of the ignorant, in order to carry certain points for position, so as to run the hand down into the pocket of the Government to buy their rum and cigars, &c., and to keep from hard labor. When the time is near at hand for the office to be filled, he had been a year or more studying how he can bring up the nigger question, as they call it, and the very first start he makes is to call up the ignorant voters, and treat them to rum and brandy. This he can afford to do, for he has run the whole length of his arm into the Government funds. He turns round two or three times, and then says—"Come up, gentlemen, and have another drink." Up they step, and each one takes a long horn. Says the aspirant for the office which he has been holding the second time, "Boys, there is a woolly-headed nigger in the woodpile He wants to come on an equal footing with the white man, and if you vote for Mr. A., his object will be to put niggers above white folks. Boys, won't you have another drink? Come up, boys, I have plenty of money, for I run my arm full length into the Government's pocket the past year," &c. This is the way that a great amount of prejudice is brought to bear against the poor innocent colored man

But there is one great consolation the colored man has. While such a class of the whites spend all their days in open violation of the word of God, in trying to oppress the poor colored man, the people of color have a building not made with hands, eternal in the heavens, where none but the pure, the upright, and the honest can go So we say you may kick him out of the woodpile if you can, but you can't kick him out of heaven.

ADDRESS OF THE UNION RELIEF ASSOCIATION OF THE UNION BETHEL CHURCH, WASHINGTON, D. C.

BRETHREN AND SISTERS: We appeal to you for aid in behalf of our poor, destitute, and suffering people from the South, who have come amongst us destitute of all the comforts of life, and in the most abject poverty and want, from the hoary-headed old man and woman, to the infant at the breast. They have fled from the storm of battle, from the fire and the sword, leaving everything behind them, and after a long and tedious journey, in which they have been taxed almost beyond human exertion, and through trials most severe, have sought an asylum in our midst, with the hope of finding peace and repose from the exciting scenes of this terrible war. They have continued to come until they have increased from hundreds to thousands, and still they come, some almost naked, and many without covering or a place to rest their heads upon at night, except the cold earth, which has already produced considerable sickness among them; and unless great exertion is made for their relief, there will be the most dreadful suffering among our unhappy and disconsolate brethren that has ever been experienced in the Capital of this once peaceful and happy nation. A great deal has been done for the relief of some of them, and there are friends, both white and colored, who are doing all they can for their good, but the means at their command are too limited for them to accomplish as much as they desire in these labors of love—to clothe the naked, feed the hungry, and administer those little nourishments so desirable and dear to the hospital patients, which is a pleasant duty to many benevolent and kind-hearted friends, who languish and lament the want of means for the furtherance of these objects in a more extended field of labor and a more general concert of action and aid We have organized an Association, and enclosed a copy of our constitution, hoping that it will meet your approbation, and, in the name of humanity, and the ties which bind us together in the bonds of a common brotherhood, you will give us all the aid in your power by contributing clothing for adults, or children of both sexes Bedding, or bed clothing, old or new, money, or any nourishment for the sick will be thankfully received by the Association, and faithfully applied by the Executive Committee Donations may be forwarded to the President of the Association

THOMAS E. GREEN,
No. 420 11th, between I and K Streets.
By order of the Association.

JAMES L. THOMAS,
HILLIARD BURK,
JOHN A. SIMMS, } Committee.

Washington, October 25, 1862.

"THEY SHALL BE MINE."

BY THE AUTHOR OF "SAVED FROM THE BACKWOODS."

"They shall be mine." Oh! lay them down to slumber
Calm in the strong assurance that He gives;
He calls them by their names, He knows their number,
And they shall live as surely as He lives.

"They shall be mine." Unarmed from earthly pillows,
Girt red from death's red sand, from mortal's child,
Called from the graves beneath old ocean's billows;
Called from each distant land, each scattered fold

Well might the soul, that wondrous spark of being,
Lit by His breath, clay's mate for heaven,
Stone in the circle which His love, forewoving,
Destined to glitter brightest round His throne.

But shall the dust, from earthly dust first taken,
And now long mingled with its native earth,
To life, to beauty, once again awaken!
Thrill with the rapture of a second birth!

"They shall be mine." They, as on earth we knew them,
The lips we kissed, the hands we loved to press,
Only a subtler life is living through them
Unfading youth, unchanging holiness

"They shall be mine." Children of sin and sorrow,
Give'st thou, O Lord, heaven's utmost verge to them!
No! for on earth they have the same whole heirship
An added light, a purged and costly gem!

"They shall be mine." Thought fails and fancy falters,
Striving to sound, to fathom love divine,
All that we know—no time thy promise alters,
All that we trust—shall be there

THE HOLY BIBLE is a well of truth; and faith is the vessel that draws up its refreshing waters

BELOW AND ABOVE.

Down below, the wild November whistling
Through the beech's dome of burning red,
And the Autumn sprinkling penitential
Dust and ashes on the chestnut head.

Down below, a pall of airy purple,
Darkly hanging from the mountain-side,
And the sunset from his eyebrow staring
Over the long roll of the leaden tide.

Up above, the tree with leaf unfading
By the everlasting river's brink,
And the sea of glass beyond whose margin
Never yet the sun was known to sink.

Down below, the white wings of the sea-bird
Dashed across the furrows, dark with mould,
Flying like the memories of our childhood
Through the trees, now waxen pale and old.

Down below, imaginations quivering
Through our human spirits like the wind,
Thoughts that rose, like leaves about the woodland,
Hope, like sea birds, flashed across the mind.

Up above, the host no man can number,
In white robes, a palm in every hand,
Each same work sublime for ever working
In the spacious tracts of that great land.

Up above, the thoughts that know not anguish,
Tender care, sweet love for us below,
Noble pity free from anxious terror,
Larger Love without a touch of woe.

Down below, a sad, mysterious music,
Wading through the woods and on the shore,
Burden'd with a grand majestic secret
That keeps sweeping from us evermore.

Up above, a music that entwineth
With eternal threads of golden sound,
The great poem of this strange existence,
All whose wondrous meaning hath been found.

Down below, the church in whose poor window
Glory by the autumnal trees is lent,
And a host of worshippers in mourning,
Missing some one at the sacrament

Up above, the burst of Hallelujah,
And (without the sacramental mist
Wrapped around us like a sunlit halo,)
The great vision of the face of Christ.

Down below, cold sunlight on the tombstones,
And the green, wet turf with faded flowers,
Winter-roses, once like young hopes burning,
Now beneath the ivy dripped with showers.

And the new-made grave within the churchyard,
And the white cap on that young face pale,
And the watcher, ever as it darkeneth,
Hushing to and fro with that long wail.

Up above, a crown'd and happy spirit,
Like an infant in the eternal years,
Who shall grow in love and light for ever,
Order'd in his place among his peers.

Oh the sobbing of the winds of autumn!
Oh the sunset streak of stormy gold!
Oh the poor heart, thinking in the churchyard,
Night is coming, and the grave is cold!

Oh the pale and pinch'd and sudden roses!
Oh the desolate heart, that grave above!
Oh the white cap, shaking as it darkens,
Round that shrine of memory and love!

Oh the rest forever and the rapture!
Oh the hand that wipes the tears away!
Oh the golden horses beyond the sunset,
And the hope that watches o'er the clay!

Dublin University Magazine.

THE APOSTOLIC SALUTATIONS AND BENEDICTIONS.

BY DR. A. J. OWEN.

If the patriarchal and Mosaic dispensations, serving as mere types and shadows of the good things to come, and not being the very image of those things, were yet so fraught with blessings, that patriarchs, priests, and kings were invested with official authority to bless those who waited for the word of the Lord, might we not, with reason, expect that this prerogative, or something like it, would constitute a prominent feature of the new dispensation? Was it the privilege of Moses to bless the people of God before he ascended Mount Nebo to die, and of David and Solomon to pronounce a benediction upon the great congregations convened on such occasions as the bringing of the ark to Jerusalem and the dedication of the temple; and was Paul, the servant and apostle of Jesus Christ, the High Priest of good things to come, and the mediator of a better covenant, established upon better promises, to be restricted to the simple utterance of his wish or prayer that the grace of his Divine Master might rest upon the churches which he had planted? We are slow to believe this The same line of argument which proves that the ordinance of infant baptism, resting, as it does, upon the Abrahamic covenant, and abrogated by no enactment expressed or implied, is the right and privilege a fortiori of those who live under a dispensation so much more ample in its covenanted blessings and mercies, demonstrates beyond a doubt, that no official prerogative, like that we are considering, belonged to the patriarchs, prophets, and kings of the Old Testament, which did not, in increased degree, belong to the apostles and evangelists of the new dispensation.

We pass, then, from the Old to the New Testament. In the very foreground is the Sermon on the Mount, the beatitudes of which cast far into the background the benedictions of the Old Testament, whether regard be had to the dignity of the one who pronounced them, or the richness and amplitude of the blessings themselves. Similar beatitudes or benedictions meet the eye throughout the gospels. "My peace I leave with you, my peace I give unto you; not as the world giveth give I unto you." In the spirit of this great utterance, which secures the possession of true and lasting peace to the soul of every believer, Paul, with no misgivings that he is doing something extra-official or presumptuous, announces in his salutations and benedictions, that the peace of God, through Jesus Christ, does, and ever will, abide with all true believers.

Was this an official prerogative too great to be granted to him and his fellow apostles? Did our Lord not say (Matt xvi 18,) that he "would give unto them the keys of heaven, that whatsoever they should bind on earth should be bound in heaven, and whatsoever they should loose on earth should be loosed in heaven," and did he not, when he had imparted unto them by his divine breath the Holy Ghost, also say, on another occasion John xx 22, 23,) "Whosesoever sins ye remit, they are remitted unto them; and whosesoever sins ye retain, they are retained?" Is it an unwarrantable stretch of authority for men clothed with such extraordinary powers to declare, in the name of their Master, that his graces, and always will be, with all who believe in his name? Interpreted as solemn averments of this great truth, the apostolic salutations and benedictions very appropriately introduce and close the epistles But if, through a mistaken apprehension that words of such gracious import cannot be uttered by human lips, we interpret them as mere prayers or earnest desires, their prominent position at the beginning and end of the epistles, we cannot but regard, is comparatively meaningless and incongruous We have only to ask, which of these interpretations comports best with the solemn promises, hopes, and consolations of the epistles, which serves as the most fitting introduction to and triumphant consummation of graces to be sought to view in the eighth chapter of Romans, the fifteenth chapter of 1 Corinthians, or the first chapter of Ephesians, and there can be but one reply namely, that interpretation which regards these salutations and benedictions as declarations of God's accredited ambassadors that the grace of Christ is the portion of every believer. Thus explained, the epistles serve to expand and illustrate the great idea of the salutation, which is again repeated with increased emphasis in the closing benediction

The only question which remains, and which may be disposed of very briefly, is, whether the ministers of Christ are authorized to pronounce these salutations and benedictions, in the sense in which they were authorized "When he ascended up on high, he led captivity captive, and gave gifts unto men. And he gave some apostles, and some prophets, and some evangelists, and some pastors and teachers; for the perfecting of the saints, for the work of the ministry, for the edifying of the body of Christ" (Ephes. iv. 8, 11, 12.) Were these ascension gifts designed only or chiefly for the apostolic age of the church? Were there no saints to be perfected, and no body of Christ to be edified, after Paul and his fellow laborers had ceased from their work on earth? May not the Christian minister now come before his people in the fulness of the gospel of Christ, as Paul was sure he should come to the church at Rome? Has he no official authority to pronounce words of peace and joy to those who are the Israel of God, and to whom in a special sense pertain the promises? Most assuredly he has. When he pronounces the salutation or benediction in the forms given by the Spirit of inspiration, it carries with it all that wealth of spiritual grace and peace which it was designed to convey when expressed by Paul, Peter, or John. It was not in their own name or by their own authority, but as ambassadors of Jesus Christ, that they uttered words of such blessed and comprehensive import Every minister of Jesus Christ, however obscure his position or humble his sphere, is commissioned to preach the same gospel which the apostles preached, and to feed the church with the same hopes and promises. There is no official prerogative, apart from their extraordinary apostolic powers as inspired teachers of truth, which he does not possess

But while the power to pronounce these salutations and benedictions in their full original sense is to be accorded to every ordained minister of Jesus Christ, the people should be carefully instructed in regard to the nature of this service, and its position in the ordinances and worship of God's house. They should be cautioned against attaching to it any mysterious virtue or efficacy, as though the minister who pronounces it has power to forgive sin, or bestow blessings. It should be well understood that no new or special spiritual gift is communicated by this ministerial act, but that it is the reiterated declaration of a truth as old as the Christian religion itself; that the grace of Jesus Christ is with his people, in accordance with the express provisions of his everlasting love ratified by his death on the cross, and that it will ever abide with them in this world and in that which is to come. The congregation should be explicitly taught that, although the language of these formulas embraces all who are within sound of the minister's voice, inasmuch as it is not his prerogative to withhold the riches of the gospel of grace from any who wait upon his ministration, yet the blessing contained therein belongs to and rests upon those only who are true believers, and even upon such has little vitality and force, unless they are in the lively exercise of faith to discern its full and gracious import.

It is to be feared that there is in all our congregations much misapprehension in regard to the nature and import of the benediction The people stand in reverential attitude during the pronouncement of this simple and sublime formula There is danger, however, of their coming to regard themselves as the passive recipients of a blessing, in reference to which their only duty is to assume a befitting posture. This may not be true of all Some, doubtless, have such enlightened views, as to attach to this part of divine service no vital saving power, only as it rests upon those who by faith in Jesus Christ appropriate it to themselves, as a pledge and earnest of God's unchanging love. But such is the natural tendency to rely upon forms and observances, and to substitute them for the living faith of the gospel, that no doubt with many the benediction is regarded as the actual conferral of a blessing, irrespective of that spirituality of mind in the recipient necessary to make it such

It has always seemed to us eminently befitting the relation which subsists between the minister and people, the one as God's ambassador, the other as a congregation gathered together to listen to the divine message, that public worship should be commenced with a salutation, not necessarily in a form composed in Old Testament language, but sometimes in that employed by Paul, "Grace be unto you and peace from God the Father and the Lord Jesus Christ." This solemn and affectionate announcement that the favor of God rests ever upon the congregation of his saints, would constitute a fitting introduction to the services of the sanctuary, and confirm the faith and animate the hopes of those who "wait upon the Lord," and seek in the ordinances of his house to renew their spiritual strength. A beautiful correspondence also would then be maintained between the commencement and close of public worship, and due prominence would be given to the great and comforting truth of the superabounding grace of God bestowed upon his people.

But whatever position may be assigned them in public worship, let not these salutations and benedictions be regarded, on the one hand, as possessing some mysterious, indefinable power, when pronounced by priestly lips, so that a blessing is communicated to the whole congregation irrespective of personal faith in Christ, nor on the other hand, as merely expressive of a wish or prayerful desire for the bestowal of the divine favor upon those in whose hearing they are pronounced let them rather be regarded as declarative of the great and fundamental fact of the gospel, that the grace of Christ abides with all his saints according to his promise, when about to lay down his life to bring in eternal redemption from sin and death.

LOOK AT THE PREACHER.

Yes, look at him while he is preaching.

1. Because he is speaking to you. He speaks to all that are present. You do not drop your head or avert your face when a friend or any man speaks to you in the house or the street. Acknowledge by looking that you are spoken to.

2 Because, looking at him is a proper return, so far as it goes, for his pains to interest you. He puts himself into communication with you, and your attentive gaze at him is obedience to his virtual solicitation that you be in communication with him. It is simple justice.

3. It is politeness too. You would call one rude and ill-mannered who should avert his face when you attempted to speak to him. Politeness in the social circle should go with you into the sanctuary

4 It is kindness too You can do the preacher service—perhaps a very great service. He is anxious to instruct or profit you, to some way. It will greatly help him to notice your fixed gaze It will cheer him. Perhaps he is troubled at his own conscious deficiencies, or at the inattention of others Your kind look is "cool water to a thirsty soul."

5. Would not you, if the preacher, like the same treatment now sought for him?—Would not that hearer's attentive gaze as you do you good? Can you refuse to do as you would be done by?

6 Look at the preacher because there is power in your example It will rebuke the unkindness and impoliteness of others, whose averted faces and wandering eyes show that the laws of kindness and courtesy have lost dominion in their hearts.

7. Look at him, because it will help you fix your attention more seriously and firmly upon the all-important truths he is trying to impress upon your heart

Here are seven good reasons for doing what will cost you but little effort, and which is certain to be profitable and kind to yourself profit, kind, cheering to the preacher, and greatly useful to others.—Sel.

THE GOSPEL HIDDEN FROM THE WISE AND PRUDENT

What a solemn, and equally true, statement of our great Teacher is this—the gospel a hidden, concealed thing to the carnal mind! "Thou hast hid these things from the wise and prudent" The "wise and prudent," in the general acceptation of the title, include the great men of the unregenerate; all those to whom the mysteries of the kingdom are not revealed; but, doubtless, our Lord had a special reference to the carnally wise, the lettered philosophers of the world, who, wise and prudent in the learning and science and arts of this life, were yet profoundly ignorant of the things of the Spirit of God. Now, this arises from no defect either in the nature of the gospel, or in the evidence of its divinity, or in the simplicity of its statements. There is everything in the gospel to awaken the intellect, to incite the imagination, to gratify the taste, to enlist the sympathies and sensibilities of the finest and most cultivated minds. Its themes of thought, its touches of [illegible] its unrealings of grandeur, its history, its philosophy, its poetry, its science, are such as to charm and feast the noblest intellect that ever shone in the world of mind. And when the soul at first wakes up to the sublimity and power of the gospel of Christ, it marvels and it wonders that all this magnificence and beauty and tenderness, all these sources of the highest thought and purest feeling, should have been so long and so deeply veiled from its view.

Nor does this ignorance of the gospel, and lack of interest in its revelations, arise from any deficiency of evidence. God has made nothing more demonstrably true than His gospel. If ever proof, self-evident and overwhelming, accumulated around an object, that object is the glorious gospel of the blessed God. Internal and external, immediate and collateral, positive and presumptive, the evidences of the truth of the gospel are many and mighty, convincing and conclusive, leaving the skeptic, unbelieving mind without one excuse to justify or palliate at Christ's tribunal the fearful crime of its rejection. If you, my reader, are rejecting the Bible on the ground of its unsatisfactory proof, on the plea of its lack of evidence, and at the same time, it may be, giving the fullest credence to some old wives' fable unsupported by one shadow of evidence, I bid you pause before you advance one step further, and ponder these solemn, searching words of Christ —"This is the condemnation, that light is come into the world, and men love darkness rather than light, because their deeds are evil." Light is come—the light of Christ, the light of revelation and the light of evidence. Not for want of light, then, will you finally be condemned. Then, for what? For your wilful rejection of that light. And why this rejection of the light? Because you love the darkness of sin! Examine yourself honestly, and ascertain if your infidelity, your skepticism, your unbelief, your quibbling and cavilling at the truth of the Bible, has not its seat, not in a mind that cannot be convinced, but in a heart that will not! Infidelity is not the child of reason; it is the deformed offspring of a depraved heart There is a love of sin—of some master, dominant sin—underlying all skepticism. The light is rejected, because the darkness is loved; the truth is renounced, because the sin is preferred. The Bible is hated and ignored, because it is against sin, and testifies of the world that the works thereof are evil We reiterate the statement, that atheism and infidelity are not the beauteous flowers of intellect, as some affirm, but the indigenous plants of a sinful and sin-loving heart. "The fool hath said in his HEART"—not in his head; the intellect could not affirm that—"there is no God." The words, "there is," are in italic, denoting that our translators have supplied them, needlessly we think, as that, viewing the passage as in the original, it would read —"The fool hath said in his heart—no God" —i. e., "No God for me, I want no God, though in my judgment I know that there is one." Such is the wisdom of the worldly wise and prudent Truly may the apostle affirm, "the wisdom of this world is foolishness with God," and "the wisdom of God is foolishness with men."

Nor does this blindness of the unrenewed mind to the glorious gospel of the blessed God arise from any want of simplicity in the gospel Inconceivably great, indescribably grand, transcendently sublime as is the gospel of Christ, it is the very essence of simplicity—as all God's works and ways are Was ever any scheme, any plan, any command so simple as this, "Believe in the Lord Jesus Christ and thou shalt be saved?" And yet, this is the whole gospel! This is the sum and substance of salvation! The first principles of Christianity, the elements of the gospel, are few and simple. And this forms the stumbling-block—the naked simplicity of "the truth as it is in Jesus" The "wise and the prudent" stumble, not at the profoundness, not at the grandeur, not at the difficulties of the gospel, but at its severe, its pure, its perfect simplicity. And because it subsists its mysteries to faith, and not to reason; appeals to the heart, and not to the intellect; demands the evidence of the child, and not the understanding of the philosopher; the silent, lowly, believing homage of the soul, and not the haughty, towering reasoning of the mind, the philosophizing, pharisaical, and proud of this world instantly, scornfully, and totally reject it.

Such is the solemn truth our Lord affirmed; and the entire analogy of Scripture maintains the fact. The gospel is a hidden glory to the unrenewed man. The apostle thus confirms the statement—"The natural man receiveth not the things of the Spirit of God: for they are foolishness unto him: neither can he know them, because they are spiritually discerned." The Greek is more emphatic—"he is not able to know them"—his spiritual organs are impaired; he has eyes, but the transcendent wisdom and sublimity of the gospel he sees not; he has ears, but the thunders of its threatenings and the soft breathing music of its doctrines he hears not With all his human acumen—his attainments in philosophy, his discoveries in science, his perfection in art, his power to sound the depths of human mystery, the Bible is to him—unenlightened, untaught, unregenerated by the Spirit—a book seven times sealed—he is not able to know it. And the poor, uneducated peasant, dwelling in some lowly cottage, with naught but his Bible and its Divine Author to enlighten and instruct him, shall travel far into the depths of revelation and sound their wonders; shall grasp the truths of the Bible, understand their meaning, feel their power, receive their comfort, and explain the mind of the Spirit with a lucidity, beauty, and power which might put to the blush many an acknowledged champion of literature and many a professed college divine. And what causes the difference? The cottage expositor of God's Word is taught by the Divine Spirit, the learned expositor of the schools still belongs to the worldly, wise and prudent," to whom the gospel is a hidden thing! My reader, become a disciple of Jesus! Quit the schools and the teaching of men for the school and the teaching of Christ. Receive the gospel as a little child. Become a fool that you may be wise Lay your human learning and philosophy, your pride of intellect and of merit, beneath the cross, and take your place at the Saviour's feet, and learn of Him, and be taught by Him the truth as it is in Jesus Be this your petition, urged importunately until the Spirit responds—"Open mine eyes that I may behold wondrous things out of Thy law."

O. Winslow, D. D.

RELIGIOUS ITEMS.

RESOLUTIONS.—Adopted by the Illinois Presbytery of the Reformed Presbyterian Church, at its late meeting in St. Louis, October 3, 1862;

1st. Resolved, That this Presbytery does most cordially indorse the proclamation of general emancipation recently issued by the President of the United States, and declares that it would have given us unfeigned satisfaction if it had been made unconditional and universal

2d That we express our unfeigned gratitude to the most high God, Ruler of Heaven and Earth, that he is thus giving intimations that he has arisen to set the oppressed in safety from their cruel and heartless oppressors.

3d. That it is the duty of Reformed Presbyterians, as Christians and patriots, to aid in suppressing this rebellion in every way consistent with our principles, and to effect the emancipation of the enslaved.

4th Believing that God is chastening the nation for its sins, so long persevered in, we call the nation to repentance and humiliation under the mighty hand of God, and we regard grief and painful apprehension the pride and impenitence of the nation in respect to its rejection of God's authority and the enslavement of man.

SAN FRANCISCO.—There has been one Congregational church in that city for several years. It is a large and flourishing church; Rev. Mr. Lacey is the pastor. Lately an effort is being made to form a second church on the same platform. Several of the members of Mr. Lacey's church are uniting with individuals who had not connected themselves with any church after reaching the city, and they are worshiping together in a small but comfortable house in a part of the city where such an enterprise is needed. They have secured the service of Rev John Kimball, a young minister of much worth. There are quite a number of Congregational churches in this new and rising state, several of which have able and devoted pastors. The country is large, and there is great need of able, self-denying ministers of the Gospel. The Lord raise up many such and thrust them into his whitening harvest.—Correspondence of Christian Mirror.

THE WORSHIP OF GOD.

"I and the lad will go and worship, and come again to you." Gen. xxii. 5

"And he said unto Moses, Come up unto the LORD, thou and Aaron, Nadab and Abihu, and seventy of the elders of Israel, and worship ye afar off." Ex. xxiv. 1.

"Ye shall not fear other gods, but the LORD who brought thee up out of the land of Egypt, with great power and a stretched out arm; him shall ye fear, and him shall ye worship, and to him shall ye do sacrifice." 2 Kings xvii 35, 36.

"Give unto the LORD the glory due unto his name: bring an offering and come before him; worship the Lord in the beauty of holiness." 1 Chron. xvi. 27; and repeated several times in the Book of Psalms

"He is thy Lord, and worship thou him." Psalm xlv 11

"O come and let us worship and bow down; let us kneel before the LORD our Maker." Ps. xcv. 6.

"Worship him, all ye gods" Ps xcvii. 7.

These, and many similar passages which might be quoted from the Scriptures, contain exhortations not to neglect the worship of God; reasons why he should be worshipped, and worshipped with becoming reverence; inducements to his worship; cautions not to give to any other, the worship which is due to Jehovah our Maker; calls to the rulers and great ones of the earth to worship him, &c. They all presuppose that if men admit the existence of a Supreme Being, and have some knowledge of his essential attributes, they cannot but know and feel that they ought to fear, revere me, and worship him. The great truth that God should be worshipped had its origin in the moral law of nature, and not in any positive precept. It is a self-evident and unavoidable inference from the glorious perfections of the LORD our Maker, and our relation to him as our Creator and kind Benefactor.

From the beginning, all holy men, i. e., all except those "who did not like to retain God in their knowledge," worshipped at his footstool. And they worshipped God in their families—they observed family worship; and to this let us turn our attention for a moment

Of Abraham God said: "I know him that he will command his children and his household after him, and they shall keep the way of the Lord" In the patriarchal age, every father was the sole prophet priest, and king in his own house Abraham would commend as a king, teach as a prophet, and offer sacrifice, which was then a leading part of divine worship. Hence, when he was about to sacrifice his son Isaac, as he was commanded for the trial of his faith, he said to his young men whom he left behind: "I and the lad will go and worship." And we find that in every place to which he removed he built an altar, and called on the name of the Lord. Thus he brought up his household in "the way of the Lord." Families or households at length grew up into tribes or nations. On the death of the father the eldest son succeeded him by the right of primogeniture, and again, on his decease, his eldest son succeeded. Hence the origin of monarchy, and of the right of the king's eldest son to sit on his throne after his death. Hence, also, the union of the sacerdotal and regal functions. Therefore we find that Melchisedec was a king-priest—the priest, as well as the king, of a tribe which had not as yet apostatised to idolatry. In contradistinction from those king-priests in the land of Canaan who sacrificed to idols, he is called, "priest of the Most High God."

Job's sons were enjoying gala days of

From the New York Observer

THE DUNKARDS

BY A DUNKARD

Bushtillsville, Woodcock Co., Md., Oct. 19, 1862.

A few days ago, looking over the Lutheran Observer, I discovered an article headed "Dunkards in Maryland," accredited for its origin to your paper. As a minister and member of that Society, I cannot let that communication pass without correction. We are charged with entertaining ideas of religion which we would regard as absurd "They believe that heaven is obtained only by penance and outward mortification in this life."—Not so. "They admit works of supererogation."—Not so. "And deny the eternity of future punishment."—A few members do, yet it is not preached. "They are small slaveholders."—Not so; they have ever been opposed to slavery. Occasionally a member violates that principle. "And are non-combatants" That is true; and where they are not exempt from military duty by law, as happily they are in Maryland, they have to suffer greatly for conscience' sake. As in Virginia, at this time, they are required to pay $500 for an exemption. Before that arrangement was made with the Confederacy, some paid as high as $1,500 for a substitute. With regard to what is said about marriage, not a word is true. So with regard to meats to be eaten; neither is it true that all speak in the congregation, except it is purely a council meeting.

But you may be desirous to know, by this time, what we do believe. Well, in brevity, we baptize none but believers, by a triune immersion, by a plunging way, the candidate in a kneeling posture. And while we believe baptism is initiatory in the church, we also believe baptism washes away sin previously committed, when preceded by true penitence and faith. We believe that when we commune, or have the emblems, bread and wine, distributed among us, representing the sufferings of our Saviour, that it should be done in the evening, preceded first by the washing of the members' feet; next in order, the partaking of a meal by all the members, which we denominate the Lord's Supper; then follows the communion.

These are, perhaps, all the distinctive features of our faith; we hold much in common with other professing Christians; our habits are generally plain, in many respects resembling the Friends, particularly as regards dress; opposed to all superfluity in any thing, yet we are not always successful in our opposition. Our people are generally industrious and frugal: as a consequence wealth accumulates, pride follows almost as a necessary consequence. Thus is verified the danger of riches, as the Saviour declared. I think you will but be doing us simple justice to publish this, with a request that all who copied the former article will also copy this. Yours, with great respect,

EMMANUEL SLIFER.

P. S.—History assigns our origin to Schwartzenau, Germany, in 1708. Our first minister's name, the same authority says, was Alexander Mack. The word "Tanker," or "Dunkard," by which we are known in history, we assume by way of convenience, yet we call ourselves "German Baptists," or Brethren. E. S.

Personal.

The venerable Lewis Cass attained his 80th year on the 9th inst.

The Rev. Dr. Hawks has accepted the rectorship of Christ Church, Baltimore, and removes to that city during the present week.

Rev Wm S. Smart, pastor of the Congregational Church at Benson, has been appointed chaplain of the Fourteenth Vermont Volunteers, and taken a vacation from his church, of nine months, to enable him to accept.

Mr. Corwin, the American Minister in Mexico, is very ill in the Mexican capital, and it is thought he cannot long survive.

Rev. Matthew Hale Smith has recently joined the Baptist Communion. Everybody knows who the ... Hale Smith is. He is half lawyer, ..., with a sprinkling of politician. He has ...terian, Unitarian and Methodist, off and on, ... years past, but now that he has joined the hard-shell Baptists, it is hoped he will cease to be "everything by turns and nothing long." The Rev Matthew, with all his shrewdness, however, is a tolerably clever fellow, though, as correspondent of the Boston Journal, it would not damage him much if he would cultivate a habit of veracity, just for variety's sake.

George W. Childs, of Philadelphia, has sold 75,000 copies of Parson Brownlow's Book, and paid the Parson $17,000 as copyright. The copyright on Dr. Kane's Arctic Exploration is $60,000, the largest sum ever realized by any author in the English language for copyright on one volume.

Brigadier-General Price of the Rebel Army, ...the Oath of Allegiance.—Brigadier-General Edwin Price, son of Major-General Price, of the Confederate army, has taken the oath of allegiance to the United States. He was captured near Warsaw, Mo., last winter, and since that time has been on parole. He was recently exchanged for General Prentiss, and, ... among the rebel camps at Grenada, Miss., returned to St Louis. He gives it as his opinion that the rebellion is nearly broken, and that the Confederate army can exist but a short time longer. He visited General Curtis' headquarters, and immediately on his return resigned his position under the Richmond Government, and gave his commission to General Curtis for the latter to send through the lines. After subscribing to the oath of allegiance, he announced his ... determination to observe it in both letter and spirit.

Gen Mitchell died at Beaufort, on the 30th ult., of yellow fever, which deadly epidemic is now prevailing there

Domestic Items.

Elections.—In Massachusetts the election on Tuesday resulted in favor of the Republicans. In New York the Democrats elected their State officers and a majority of Congressmen. In New Jersey the Democrats did the same. In Illinois and Delaware the vote is very close From the other States we have not heard enough to form any estimate of the result, except the probability that the Emancipationists have carried Missouri, certainly St Louis, and that Potter, of the Milwaukie district, in Wisconsin, is defeated. As a whole, there is a large Democratic gain.

News for Bachelors—According to the United States census of 1860 there were, at that time, about 780,000 more males than females in the United States, a fact unprecedented in the census of any other civilized nation. In most of the older States there is an excess of females, in Massachusetts 37,000 more females than males, while in Illinois there is an excess of 92,000 males; in Michigan 10,000 excess of males, Texas 37,000; in Wisconsin 13,000, in California 30,000; and in Colorado there are twenty males to one female.

Bishop Whipple on General McClellan—Bishop Whipple, Episcopal Bishop of Minnesota, after visiting the battle-field of Antietam, and the wounded in the hospital, writes as follows

"Never have I seen such love as these men have for McClellan The men would die for him. I am ashamed more and more of the injustice of the assault on him. A man who can take a demoralized army from defeat, and drive a superior force as he did, deserves no praise. One thing I do say don't dismiss McClellan or the men will not fight; and more, he is the only man that can take that army Better than all he is a Christian, and cares for his soldiers when wounded or sick. He told me the Minnesota First were as noble a regiment as ever honored any army, and never faltered a hair's breadth The boys send love to you Yours, faithfully,

H B WHIPPLE

Troy University—We learn from the Troy Times that the University building, with the land adjacent, has been sold at auction, in a suit commenced by the Union Bank against the University for the foreclosure of a mortgage upon which the sum of about $11,000 was due. The attendance at the sale was quite large. Only one bid, however, was received, and the property was struck off to Peck & Hoosen, for the sum of $7,000 This sum is not equal to the amount of the claim upon which the sale was made, which is a aggregate sum of the liabilities of the institution of which this was the third mortgage, to over $50,000 The University will be temporarily continued under its present organization Professors and students will remain, and classes will be conducted as usual, until new arrangements can be made. With the sale, however, ... of the Troy University, as such and under ... ends. The institution is now private pro...

...e Calhoun —Our way-ward Southern brethren, after shipping from the Union, find it hard to dwell together in unity among the nations. Colonel Calhoun, of South Carolina, formerly our Secretary of Legation at Paris, has just been murdered in a duel by Major Alfred Rhett, of the same State, a member of that notorious family of Rhetts whose low reputation by the point of the pen a track for several years past.

Secretary Smith, of the Interior, during his recent visit to Indiana, made a speech, in which he said

"Richmond will be taken, Kentucky will be freed of the rebel hordes, our armies will march into the heart of Georgia and Alabama, Vicksburg will be taken, the Mississippi will be kept open, Charleston, Savannah and Mobile would be possessed and held as New Orleans is, but he hoped the city of Charleston would be razed to the ground, its foundations ploughed up and sowed with salt, and an imperishable monument erected upon its site to mark the spot where treason was first developed, and to commemorate the doom that came upon it. And he had told Secretary Welles a few days ago to hurry up his cheese-boxes, so that the people would be gratified with its speedy accomplishment. He would never compromise with traitors, never—the war should be continued twenty-five years, to the end of the century, before he would yield one inch of territory for an independent Government. But the end is nearer than we imagine. Let the North remain true to the Union and give it united support, and all will be well"

Admiral Dupont's Report of the Capture of the Two British Vessel, SCOTIA and ANGLIA

Flag-Ship WABASH, Port Royal Harbor, S. C., October 29, 1862

SIR—I have the honor to report to the Department the capture, on the 24th instant, of the British steamer Scotia, by the United States barque Restless, Acting Volunteer Lieutenant E. Conroy, commanding, off Bull's Bay

The steamer was discovered at daylight standing towards Bull's Island. Acting Volunteer Lieutenant Conroy immediately got under way with his vessel, and at the same time sent two armed boats to the leeward of the steamer, which forced her to run ashore. He then ran in with the Restless to cut her off and keep her from running out, should she get off before the boats could reach her.

When the boats got alongside it was discovered that the Captain, an old offender named Lisby, with a gentleman and a lady, (passengers,) had left the steamer in an open boat

The crew were in a state of intoxication, so that they became almost unmanageable, and Lieut. Conroy ordered them to be transferred on board the Restless, and put in irons.

Lieutenant Conroy did not succeed in getting her off until the morning of the 26th, during which time he was compelled to anchor with the Restless within gunshot of the prize, to protect her, and, at low tide, his own vessel touched bottom several times, but without sustaining any material injury. He reports the loss by drowning of John Martin, seaman, of the Restless, and a fireman of the Scotia, in consequence of the swamping of a boat in trying to get out a hawser. In getting off the Scotia, and afterwards in bringing her to Port Royal, the engineers of that vessel rendered every assistance in their power, for which Lieut. Conroy presumed that they should receive compensation.

I have further the honor to report the capture at Bull's Bay, on the 27th, of the British steamer Anglia by the boats of the U. S. steamer Flag

The Restless, then under the command of Acting Master Griswold, (Lieutenant Conroy being temporarily under command of the Scotia,) had discovered the steamer entering Bull's Bay the evening before, but she having passed so far to windward of her, the Restless could not prevent her getting in, and having only one small boat belonging to the ship, Acting Master Griswold did not think it prudent to send her in pursuit—but he got the Restless in a position to command the channel, for the purpose of preventing the escape of the steamer.

On the next day the Flag, Lieutenant Conroy on board, on his way to join his vessel, arrived at the anchorage of the Restless, and on receiving the above information, Commodore Strong, under the pilotage of Lieut. Conroy, ran the Flag close to the bar, which his vessel could not cross, and despatched four armed gunboats, under Lieuts. Carpenter and Conroy, inside of Bull's Island.

The steamer was discovered on shore, near Jack Creek, about four miles from the entrance of Bull's Bay, but was soon safely got off, all of her officers and crew being on board, except the pilot and six men, who had gone to Charleston the evening previous. The crew rendered every assistance in getting her off. Lieut. Conroy then piloted the Anglia out of Bull's Bay and over the bar.

The Anglia, when captured, was almost out of coal, and was sent by Captain Gordon, senior officer off Charleston harbor, to be supplied. She is the same vessel which attempted, on the night of the 18th of September last, to enter Charleston harbor by Sanford's channel, but was headed off, though she succeeded in escaping in the darkness

I shall despatch both these steamers north as soon as possible.

Before closing this despatch I cannot forbear calling the attention of the Department to the energy and activity displayed by Acting Lieutenant Conroy, of the Restless

Very respectfully, your obt. servant,

S. F. DUPONT, Rear Admiral,
Com. S. A. Bloch. Signed.

A released prisoner from Richmond, who says he was on board the Merrimac No. 2, reports that that vessel is thoroughly and heavily clad with iron, and is in every way a tough customer. She has been completed about a month, and has made several trips to Fort Darling. She has as yet but one gun on board, but the other guns for her were all ready The machinery works well, and she can easily make eight miles per hour.

The New York City Tract Society has, during the last year, distributed 28,046 Tracts and 692 bound volumes.

Rev Mr. Hay Discharged from Arrest—Harrisburg, October 29th—Rev. C. A. Hay, whose arrest by General Wool was noticed in to-day's papers, had a hearing in Baltimore before that officer, and was discharged.

He returned home last evening The circumstances of the arrest are peculiar, and will be made the subject of an investigation

Never did an arrest cause more surprise than that of Dr. Hay, as he was widely known as a most devoted, active and indefatigable friend of the Union. His arrest will simply make his character and his services as a friend of his country more widely known.

Pennsylvania Legislature

ON JOINT BALLOT.

	U	R	D.
Senate,		20	13
House,		46	54
		66	67

Democratic majority, 1

From North Carolina—A Rebel Negro Brigade.

New York, Oct. 31st.—The steamer Hare arrived this morning from Newbern

The Wilmington (N. C) announces the arrival of seven regiments of negroes to garrison towns and fortifications during the sickly season. They have been in camps of instruction under white officers for three months.

The Rebellion.—The arrival of the steamship Ericsson from Port Royal has put us in possession of the facts respecting the attack by General Mitchell's forces, on Wednesday last, upon the Charleston and Savannah Railroad The expedition was one of some magnitude, consisting of the gunboats of Commodore Drayton and Ferry. The main body of the troops was landed under cover of gunboats at Mackay's Point, distant about fifteen miles from the railroad, and marched across the intervening country, a distance of about nine miles inland, where the enemy was met in force. A sharp fight of an hour drove him from his position, and making a second stand at a point two miles beyond, he was again compelled to retreat by our close pursuing troops The rebels made a third stand at the village of Pocotaligo taking the precaution to destroy the railroad bridge over the Pocotaligo river, thereby effectually preventing further pursuit. This victory was not achieved without severe loss on our side, and to fight appears to have been as hotly contested as any on a more extensive scale

While these events were happening at the front, Colonel Barton, with three hundred and fifty men, penetrated to the railroad at the Combahee, severing, during a few of the intervening days, the telegraph wire, besides tearing up a track laid with the rails, killing and wounding several, and capturing a stand of regimental colors

Commissioner Boutwell has also had what when the mark is of such a kind, is to be considered a merit, which is not to put on the required stamp, it will not be the party responsible to censure, while the stamp, cannot but add more to the cost to the maker Is this right?

General Grant [illegible] dated from St Louis on account of the effect of [illegible] Terry on the 27th ult., 1,400 rebels were captured by a body of Union troops under Colonel Lee, and sixty wagons [illegible] and captured Infantry, Grant also reports that the expedition to Cuckton, Ala., thirty miles [illegible] from New Madrid, under command of Captain Rogers, has been entirely successful, dispersing the guerrilla [illegible] burning [illegible] and capturing Colonel Clarke and one [illegible] Captain Clarke, three officers, fifty-seven men, [illegible] stands of arms, forty-two horses, thirteen mules, two [illegible] a large quantity of ammunition, forage, [illegible]

Mr. Buchanan's Reply to General Scott—The letter of Mr Buchanan closes thus "After a careful retrospect, I can solemnly declare, before God and my country, that I cannot reproach myself with any act of commission or omission since the existing troubles commenced. I have never doubted that my countrymen would yet do me justice. In my special message of the 8th of January, 1861, I presented a full and fair exposition of the alarming condition of the country, and urged Congress either to adopt measures of compromise, or, failing in this, to prepare for the last alternative. In both aspects my recommendations was disregarded.

I shall close this document with a quotation of the last sentences of that message, which are as follows.

"In conclusion, it may be permitted me to remark that I have often warned my countrymen of the dangers which now surround us. This may be the last time I shall refer to the subject officially. I feel that my duty has been faithfully, though it may be imperfectly, performed—and whatever the result may be, I shall carry to my grave the consciousness that I, at least, meant well for my country."

Late and Important From General McClellan's Army.

Headquarters Army of the Potomac, Nov 2, 10 P. M.

To His Excellency the President:

I have just received a despatch from Gen. McClellan, dated at Snicker's Gap, 6 P. M., stating that he has full possession of the Gap.

When General Hancock arrived there, it was held by the enemy's cavalry, who were at once driven out. A column of from five to ten thousand rebel infantry advanced to retake it, but were dispersed by the fire of our rifled guns.

The position is a strong one from either side.

It is said that Jackson and A. P. Hill are to the valley opposite.

General Pleasanton had driven the enemy's cavalry several miles beyond Union, at three o'clock, P. M., exploding one of the caissons, and capturing ten of their wounded, left behind.

(Signed) R. B. MARCY,
Chief of Staff.

An important arrest was made last Thursday, of parties carrying quinia and medicines to the rebels. A wagon loaded with sundry family stoves, and a carriage, in which was found quinine and morphine words, to Secession, $10,000, were captured by our outer pickets The occupants of the carriage, Mr. G. H. Bailey, Mrs. Turner, and Miss L. Buckner, were also arrested and searched

Miss Buckner had several pounds of quinine and morphine secreted about her person. Letters were found upon her and Mr. Bailey. The party and the goods have been forwarded to Washington. The parties came very near escaping.

Charles James Faulkner, sent Minister to France by Buchanan, used this language on the Emancipation Debates in the Virginia Legislature in 1862, while then advocating the complete manumission of every slave in Virginia:

"But, Sir, it is said that society having conferred this right of property on the slaveholder, it cannot now take it away from him without an adequate compensation, by which is meant full value. I may be singular in the opinion, but I defy the legal research of the House to point me a principle recognised by the law, even in the ordinary course of adjudications, where the community pays for the property which is removed or destroyed because it is a nuisance and injurious to society."

The Social, Civil and Statistical Association, of The Colored People of Pennsylvania open a subscription list to aid the freed men at Port Royal and other points where they may be located and respectfully ask the co-operation of the colored citizens and others in this city, or elsewhere, in money or clothing.

Any amount of value received will be acknowledged, with the name of the donor, in the Recorder, where a constant record will be kept.

Subscriptions may be sent to Jacob C. White, at the office of the Lebanon Cemetery, 711 Lombard Street, and also to William Still, 107 North Fifth Street, and to Rev. E. Weaver, 619 Pine Street.

PAID.

Statistical Society,	$50 00
Clayton Miller,	2 00
William Still,	5 00
Robert Adger,	2 00
Henry Minturn,	2 00
Catherine Johnson,	2 00
Vasti Locke,	2 00
Wm. Warricks,	2 00
Harriet Shorter,	1 00
Sarah S. Hawkins,	1 00
Rev. Jonathan C. Gibbs,	1 00
James P. Clay,	1 00
Benjamin F Hall,	2 00
S M S.,	2 00
Elizabeth Gordon,	1 00
F J Dreer,	5 00

It affords us pleasure to acknowledge the receipt of ten dollars, the proceeds of Miss Anna E. Dickinson's lecture at Concert Hall for the contrabands, contributed to the S. C. and Statistical Association, to be applied as intended. WM. STILL.

Cor. Sec. of S., C. and Statistical Association of the Colored People of Penna.

Married.

On the 3d instant, by Rev. T. Strother, Mr. SANFORD BOARDS to Miss ELVIRA SINGLETON.

Also, on the 23d instant, by Rev. T. Strother, Mr LORENZO DOW PARTRIDGE to Miss MARTHA WILSON all of Terre Haute, Ind.

On the 14th of November, by Rev. Joseph Smith, Theodore Williams and Miss Hannah Arthur. The marriage took place in Greenland, N. J.

ADVERTISEMENTS.

MRS MARTHA COLLINS,
730 Russell Street, above Fitzwater.

Begs leave to inform her friends and the public generally, that she has opened an INFANT SCHOOL for Boys and Girls, to whom she will pay special attention in teaching the primary departments of Reading, Writing, and Arithmetic, also Singing, upon the most reasonable and accommodating terms. She does not hesitate to say that she will be able to please all who may give her a trial.

MRS. S. SHORTER HAWKINS'
DRY GOODS, HOSIERRY, AND TRIMMING STORE.
No. 615 Lombard Street, Philadelphia

Mrs H. calls the attention of her friends and patrons to a new stock of Fall and Winter Goods, consisting of Delaines, Calicoes, Flannels, Muslins, Drills, Shawls, Raimond, and Hoop Skirts

N B. Regalia and Dress Trimmings still on hand. All will be sold as near the old prices as possible. Call and see

THE FARMER AND GARDENER,
A MONTHLY PERIODICAL,
Devoted to the Interests of Agriculture.
EDITED BY
A. M SPANGLER.

CONTENTS OF THE OCTOBER NUMBER

Agriculture: Should Manure Ferment and Decompose in the Barnyard or the Field?—Surface Application of Manure—Premium for Wools—On the Feeding Value of Straw—Is Breeding Horses, &c the Stock take the most after the Sire or Dam?—The Time to train Colts—Great annual sale of Shropshire Sheep Selecting Seed Wheat—Fattening Swine—How to Catch a Horse—Reducing and applying Bones—Cribbing—Fall Ploughing

Horticulture Strawberry Culture Empress Eugenie Strawberry—How to protect Raspberries and other Plants through Winter Synonyms of Strawberries The Raising of Onions—Interesting to Fruit Growers—Gathering and Storing Fruit Fine Garden Fruit in the Peach The White Doyenne Pear in France—Black Knot on Plum and Cherry Trees—The Effect of Lime and Ivy upon Plants Anthracnose, Sphæronema Gossypinum on Windows How Plants change their Characters—Summer Roses—Pruning Evergreens—The Egg Plant—Harvesting Beans—Apples and Pears Moonlight Planting—Fall Treatment of Flowers—Ribbon Flower Bed—Poetry: Ode to Pig-Tail, by Walter Elder

Editorial: A Glimpse at the Times—War nearer home—Patent Office Report—The Fly in the Wheat Dried Fruit Wanted—Send on your Subscriptions Sheep Breeding Ewe and Lamb Wethers

Home Department. How to make the best Cider The cure of Toads—Richmond Price Current for July—Farmers' Wives Implements for sugar-cane Cherry Rot—Why Salt is Healthy Hen Houses Sundays for Animals Turkey raising Faceties

TERMS $1 00 per Annum.

Specimen copies sent on the receipt of ten cents in postage stamps

W S YOUNG, Publisher,
No 52 N Sixth St, or 1023 Race St.
PHILADELPHIA

WILLIAM S. YOUNG.
STEAM POWER PRESS
Book, Job and Newspaper
Printing Office,
No. 52 NORTH SIXTH STREET,
PHILADELPHIA

Advertisements.

THE DAUGHTERS OF HOPE GRAND UNION Temperance Society met it being the thirteenth convention, April 10th, 1861. Representatives from Lodges are as follows

From Garnet Union No 4, D. of T.: from Phœnix Union, No. 8, D. of T., from Northern Union, No 18, D of T., Welsh Union, of Chambersburgh Pa from Dr. Rue Union, of Carlisle, Pa., from Mount Olive Union, No. 19, D. of T.: from Vanbrackle Union, No. 10, D of T., of Norristown, Pa

Officers installed to their several positions are as follows—

Grand P., Sister Bennet, Grand Associate Sister Burns Grand Treasurer, Sister Fauvett, Grand Conductress, C. Thompson, Grand Sentinel, A. E. Duckett, Grand Chaplain Sister Hall

G P P, Sister E. Rogers, G P P Sister Anderson,
" " E. Bowen, " " J. F Black,
" " M. H Bundy, " " E. A Green,
" " S Newman, " " White,
" " S. Davis, " " S Hall.

THE DAUGHTERS OF CORNISH SOCIETY

The Stated Quarterly Meetings of the Society, are held on the first Wednesdays of February, May, August, and November.

The meeting of the Board are held on the Wednesday previous to the regular stated meetings of the society

MRS. SARAH CARTER,
President
Mr. I. R Seymour, Secty

THE BOOK DEPOSITORY
OF THE
AFRICAN M. E. CHURCH,
No. 619 Pine Street,
PHILADELPHIA

We keep on hand, in connexion with our other books Sabbath School books of various kinds Question Books, Catechisms, Nos. 1, 2, and 3 We have a good assortment of such books as are generally used in the Public Schools Also, Stationery, Inks, Pens, Paper, Envelopes and Blank Books.

THE DEATH-BED OF THE REV. JOHN WESLEY

Wanted Canvassing Agents for the splendid large engraving here should be in every house of an admirer of that great and good man. The most liberal inducements are offered to those selling this print Send for Catalogue and Instructions

W. SMITH Publisher
243 South 3d Street Philadelphia

WANTED.—The charge of a Public School References as to ability can be given. Apply to
J. W. A., 1661 Helmuth St

ONE-PRICE CLOTHING,
OF THE LATEST STYLES,

Made in the Best Manner, expressly for RETAIL SALES Lowest Selling Prices marked in Plain Figures. All Goods made to order warranted satisfactory Our One-Price System is strictly adhered to. All are thereby treated alike JAMES & CO.,
Dec25 1y 604 Market Street

GOOD NEWS

To Tailors, Press makers, and to those wishing to be such Also, to owners of sewing machines, sleeve boards, and large families,—for in the use of the printed directions which each Instructor has you can learn to cut and fit perfectly, Ladies' Dresses, Boys and Men's Pants, Vests, Jackets, Pork and Over coats

Local and Travelling Agents Wanted.

Address REV WM. BRADLEY
Carrsville, Bucks Co., Pa.
(Or apply to Mrs Mary C. Weaver, (wife of the Editor of this paper,) 619 Pine St., Philada., Pa. Jan12—1y

JAMES DOWNS,
DEALER IN
NEW AND SECOND HAND
CLOTHING,
No 225 South Second Street,
No. 17—3mo. PHILADELPHIA

WILLIAM STILL'S
STOVE STORE,
107 NORTH FIFTH STREET, PHILADELPHIA.

The subscriber would respectfully inform his friends and all in want of good stoves, that he has now on hand a general variety of excellent PARLOR, COOK and CHAMBER STOVES, including Gas-burning, as well as other patterns, which he is selling at very low rates. He buys entirely for cash, of the best wholesale founders, and of course can sell much cheaper than those buying on the usual credit system. At any rate his friends are invited to give him a call and examine for themselves before purchasing elsewhere, as he feels that they would be convinced that it would be to their interest to give him their patronage Coal orders constantly on hand. WM STILL.

JOSEPH H. COLE,
CONTINENTAL RESTAURANT,
NO. 717 LOMBARD STREET, PHILA.,
(Above Seventh St., under Philadelphia Institute.)

Where he continues to keep always on hand the very best assortment of OYSTERS and other refreshments—hoping that all his friends and the public in general will favor him with their patronage

☞ Meals served at all hours. Families supplied with Oysters of the best quality and flavor at the shortest notice

☞ Also, public and private waiting done on the most reasonable terms. 1y

MISS JANE JOHNSON,

Respectfully informs her friends and the public, that she continues laying out and shrouding the dead,

☞ All orders will be immediately attended to.

RESIDENCE,
618 South 8th St.

"UNION COTTAGE,"
ATLANTIC CITY, NEAR THE INLET

The subscriber will always be happy to welcome her numerous friends, and the public in general.

TERMS:

Board per week,	$6 00
" " day,	1 25
Single meals,	50

S. H. WAILES, Proprietress

BOARDING
IN BROOKLYN

MRS S PLANT (formerly Richardson) respectfully announces that she has opened a first class BOARDING & LODGING HOUSE at No 97 Hoyt STREET Brooklyn, where she is prepared to accommodate the public on the most reasonable terms

Her house being located in a very pleasant part of the city, and within ten minutes' walk of Fulton Ferry, is made thus a very desirable and convenient place

BOARDING

Mrs. AMIA WILLIAM, of Cape May, will open the Ilaknet House for the season for the accommodation of all who wish to spend the season there, and she will spare no pains to make all comfortable. Those wishing to spend one, two, or three days, will find the Bunker House the right spot. Prices very reasonable 1m*4

COAL, STOVES, &c., &c.

The subscriber respectfully informs his friends and the public generally, that he has taken the store,

NO. 107 NORTH FIFTH STREET,

formerly occupied as the Anti Slavery Office, (where he has been engaged for the last fourteen years,) to occupy it henceforth as a place of business for the sale of

COAL, STOVES, &c

Having made arrangements with one of the first Coal Dealers in the city, to furnish the best qualities of Lehigh Schuylkill, &c, at the lowest Cash prices, he hopes to give full satisfaction in this branch of his business

He will also keep constantly on hand a general assortment of good NEW and SECOND HAND STOVES, FURNACES &c

Persons wishing Stoves taken down, stored away, put up, or cleaned, can be promptly accommodated by applying as above.

He hopes by energy and strict attention to business to obtain a fair share of patronage

WM. STILL.
107 North Fifth Street, Philadelphia.

REFERENCES.

J M M Kim,	Dr Caspar Wistar,
Samuel Rhoads,	James Mott,
Dillwyn Parrish,	Thomas Williamson,
Prof C D Cleveland,	W H Furness

WANTED.

One or two respectable colored men in a quiet and respectable family to lodge, where they can secure all the comforts of a home, with a furnished room

INQUIRE,
No. 424 South 7th St., Phila.

REV LEWIS S. LEWIS'
FAMILY LINIMENT
IS OFFERED WITH GREAT CARE,
EXPRESSLY FOR FAMILY USE

Its composition is very simple, containing nothing that is injurious in any form, and there is no danger in its use from exposure to the weather No family should be without it. Having a wish to benefit mankind in general, and those afflicted in particular and having had recourse to the article in several cases of rheumatism, bunions, chilblains, and other lameness, it proving to be a remedy in every case—I therefore recommend it to the public

CERTIFICATES

Providence, R. I., Nov. 27 1861

Rev. L. S Lewis: Dear Sir I have been afflicted with the rheumatism eleven years during which time I tried almost everything, but received no sure relief For the last four months my hands and joints were so swollen, that at times I could not walk or use my shipper. I procured a bottle of your Liniment, and at the first application was instantly relieved After using one or two bottles, I was enabled to enjoy the free use of my limbs Rev GEORGE A RUE

Newport, R. I., October 29, 1861.

Rev. L. S Lewis: Dear Sir I have been affected for a number of years, more or less, with a pain and weakness in my chest arising from some cause unknown to me. I made two applications of your Liniment, and was relieved. I was attacked with the diphtheria, and was cured by using your Liniment. Its worth has proved itself ten times its cost ANTHONY RANDOLPH

Newport, R. I., Nov. 19, 1861

Rev. L. S. Lewis—Dear Sir: I have been cured of stiffening in my joints by using your Liniment. I recommend it to all who are thus troubled.

RICHARD WHITE.

Newport, R. I., Nov. 17, 1861.

Rev. Mr. Lewis—Your Liniment is, truly, all that it is recommended to be. I have tried it, and it has successfully cured my bunions. SOPHIA TAYLOR.

Newport, R. I., Oct 7, 1861.

Mr. Lewis—Dear Sir: I have had a pain and stiffness in my neck and back for some time. I procured a bottle of your Liniment, and applied it twice, which effected a cure. I recommend it to the public

Mrs EVELINA DEMOND

Providence, Dec 10, 1861.

Rev L. S Lewis Dear Sir For upwards of three years I have been very lame at times, arising from a sprain. I have tried a great many things, without any definite results. I procured a bottle of your Liniment, and was effectually relieved. Mrs PHEBE A. MORSE

Newport R. I., Oct. 10, 1861.

Rev Mr. Lewis—I have been afflicted with the rheumatism for some time. I used your Liniment, which has removed it successfully. It has also cured my swelled joints. Mrs. ELIZABETH THOROUGHGOOD

Newport, R I., Nov. 20, 1861.

Rev. Mr Lewis My boy was troubled with the chilblain I applied your Liniment a few times, and it cured him. Mrs. ADELINE JONES

Steamer Perry, Sept. 3, 1861.

Rev. Mr Lewis—I have used your Liniment for rheumatic pains of long standing—also, lameness in the feet, &c. It is a perfect remedy where other things have failed. Mrs. SUSAN GARDINER

Providence, Rhode Island, Aug. 19, 1861

Rev. L. S Lewis—I have been afflicted for upwards of seven years with swelled joints. I have tried almost everything, without the desired effect At last I obtained a bottle of your Liniment, which relieved me successfully. Mrs. MARY A. JEWITT.

Providence, Nov., 1861.

Mr. L. S. Lewis—I had a very severe attack of rheumatism last fall, during which time I tried almost everything—but nothing so effectual as your Family Liniment. I would not be without it

Mrs. LUCY WATERMAN.

MANUFACTURED BY
REV. LEWIS S. LEWIS,
No 115 Meeting St., Providence, R. I.,
TO WHOM ALL ORDERS SHOULD BE ADDRESSED.
PRICE, 25 CTS. PER BOTTLE.

☞ Sold in Newport by Mrs. MARTHA J. RANDOLPH, No 1 Spruce Court. 1y

GEORGE G. EVANS'
ORIGINAL GIFT BOOK STORE,
No. 439 Chestnut Street.

NEW BOOKS! NEW GIFTS FOR THE NEW YEAR!

Call and look at our immense collection of BOOKS and PRESENTS for the season of 1861!

All the latest and best Publications, and a Gift with each Book purchased Beautifully and appropriately bound copies of the prose and poetical writings of all the standard British and American authors, together with an extensive and superb array of Miscellaneous Books, all embracing the choicest sullings from the fields of Literature!

Magnificent and costly presents, consisting in part of WATCHES, JEWELRY, AND SILVER WARE of the newest styles, and most exquisite finish. All Books are sold at the Publisher's regular prices, and every purchaser to the amount of $1 00, or more, is presented with a Gift, combining utility with ornament, varying in value from

FIFTY CENTS TO ONE HUNDRED DOLLARS!

Citizens' Strangers' Everybody' Bear this fact in mind, and make your purchase of Books at

GEORGE G EVANS,
MAMMOTH GIFT BOOK EMPORIUM,
Mar 9 6mo No 439 Chestnut Street, Phila.

MRS. H. S. DUTERTE.
General Undertaker and Furnisher,

Respectfully informs her friends and the public, that she still continues the Undertaking business at the old establishment, No 624 Lombard St., and being thankful for past favors, hopes still to obtain a share of the patronage of the public

Ready made Coffins always on hand. Also a handsome Hearse and Carriages, with careful drivers, to attend funerals on the most moderate terms.

G. M. ELKINTON & SON,
MANUFACTURERS OF
SOAP AND CANDLES,
116 MARGARETTA STREET, Philadelphia.

OLIVE SOAP,	SPERM CANDLES,
YELLOW "	ADAMANTINE "
PALE "	ROTEL "
BROWN "	KINGSFORD'S STARCH,
WHITE "	BARNETT'S "
CASTILE "	WAX,
HONEY "	TALLOW,
PALM "	SAL SODA
PONCINE "	SOFT SOAP.

March 2—1y

FINE CAKE BAKERY.
CONFECTIONERY AND ICE CREAM SALOON,
No. 804 South Street.

Ellis J Pose would announce that he keeps constantly on hand a general assortment of all kinds of Cakes, Creams, Jellies, and Pastries

Festivals, Balls, and Private Parties served upon the shortest notice, and warranted to give general satisfaction. Jan 19—1m

NOTICE

To the friends of Religious Literature and human progress of the City and County of Philadelphia

This certifies that Miss Mary Still is a legally authorized agent for the City and County of Philadelphia, Penna., to solicit subscribers and donations for the Christian Recorder of the African Methodist Episcopal Church of America.

We, therefore, take great pleasure to recommending Miss Still to the citizens and friends as a lady every way worthy of such a position, as well as trustworthy, and we do hope, as the enterprise is commendable, that those to whom she may present this writing will not turn her away without either subscribing or contributing to the great cause

(Signed) ELISHA WEAVER,
Editor & General Book Steward.
No. 619 Pine St., Phila.

For the Christian Recorder

BUCKS COUNTY SS.—TO ALL TO WHOM THESE PRESENTS MAY COME.

I, the subscriber, a Justice of the Peace, in and for the county of Bucks, do hereby certify that I am acquainted and know Emily Johnson, (formerly Rodney, who was married to Samuel Johnson, who was married before William Hawk, Esq., of Bristol, Bucks County, as appears by record on his docket; and after careful examination and mature reflection, I feel myself fully safe in saying that the said Johnson had a wife living at the time he married the said Emily Rodney, and further, as that I have the evidence of Daniel Kimmonl (local preacher of the Methodist Episcopal Church) Charles Emmons, (Class leader) and Benjamin Cummings, (white minister) that he had one or more wives living at the time he married the said Emily Johnson; and the evidence, an affirmation, of the said Emily Johnson, that he had a wife living at the time she married him, when, at the time she married him, she had no knowledge of.

Affirmed and subscribed before me May 6th, 1862. Wm Blakey J P } her Emily Johnston mark

THOMAS CHARNOCK,
GENERAL FURNISHING UNDERTAKER
No 427 SOUTH 6TH ST.,
Second Door Below Bethel Church.

OUR OWN BOOK-STORE.

Catalogue of Books for Sale at the Book Depository of the A M E Church, located at No 619 Pine St., Philadelphia, Pa.

	Retail prices
Pronouncing Bible,	$2 75
Watson's Biblical and Theological Dictionary,	2 50
Watson's Theological Institute, 2 vols.,	4 70
History of Methodism, 2 vols.,	2 50
Wheldon's Commentary on Matthew and Mark,	1 85
Horne's Introduction to the Bible,	65
Pentroe Theology,	60
The Poet Preacher	60
Saints' Rest	50
Pilgrim's Progress,	75
Defence of our Fathers. Bishop Emory,	60
Life of Wesley,	50
Carel's Dictionary of the Holy Bible, S S.,	60
Cobb's Concordance,	1 00
The Christian Warden Priestley,	75
Our Friends in Heaven,	60
The Sacred Hour. Rev. M. P. Gaddis	75
Sketch Book Rev W C Smith,	75
Missionary among the Cannibals,	65
Path of Life. Rev. D. Wise,	60
The Missionary to Many Lands,	55
Rudiments of Public Speaking,	50
The Life of Faith Exemplified. Mrs. H. A. Rodgers,	50
Little Foot-prints in Bible Lands	40
The New Lute of Zion. For Choirs,	75
Memoir of Carvosso,	45

FRIENDS FROM THE LAND WE LEFT.

[But few persons who have left their native land can read the following simple and touching lines without feeling their bosoms swell with emotions of love for the land of their birth and youthful days.]

It's sweet, in a distant land, to meet
Wi' ocht that tells o' hame,
That gars us mind o' by-gone days,
And makes us burne again,
Whiles unco little stirs the heart,
Its feelings to reveal,
And unco little brings to mind
The land we like me weel.

A budding flower, a briery bush,
A bird in the bit sae high,
An antrin word frae a friendly tongue,
Or a blink frae a kindly ee,
Will often gar the blood rin fast,
Or flush the cheeks with pride,
As they mind us o' the land we left
Across the Atlantic's tide.

It's sweet to meet wi' the gowan gay,
Or the bearded thistle keen,
Or the hawthorn, with its flowery sway,
Or a broken bank ase green,
For the saucy thistle's our emblem bauld,*
And the gowan lifts us ee,
And the thorn and bark thegither grow,
In the land ayont the sea.

It's sweet to sit by the Burnie's bank,
And watch its waters flow,
And track the minnows at their play
In the ripping brook below;
For it minds us how we wade the burn,
And plaited the rushes green,
Nor dreamed that time would bear us from
That well-remembered scene

It's sweet to hear the auge that sing
In simple Scottish strains,
Of Scotland's name, and Scotland's fame,
And Scotland's streams and plains;
But aye the awsecome o' the mag,
Where'er we live, shall be,
Auld Scotland! though we wander far,
We'll still remember thee!

But it's sweeter than the sweetest auge
That ever poet sung,
When far away from friends and hame,
To hear our mither tongue.
The simple, half-forgotten words,
Our blythesome burn-time knew,
How keenly they recall to mind
The land we dearly lue!

Then how sweet maun't be, in a place like this,
Unlooked for friends to find;
And, instead o' the stranger's cauldrif smile,
To meet with a welcome kind;
To meet the grasp o' the ready hand,
That betokens a heart as free;
And traces o' our auld-world hame,
On ilka side to see!

The auld ha' clock, frae the banks o' Tweed,
Still wags in this unco place;
And it stands at the wa', like a bashfu' bairn,
With its hands afore its face.
Let us, like it, keep wagging on,
Where'er our lot may fa',
Nor idly look, with vain regret,
To the land that's far awa'.

But still, though many a year has past
Since we frae hame did part,
Remembrance of our native land
Lies treasured in the heart.
The ties that bind us to its shores
By time shall ne'er be reft;
Where'er the land we live in be,
We like the land we left.

EVENINGS AT THE STATE FAIR.

FIRST EVENING—DR. FITCH ON GRAIN APHIS, MIDGE, ETC.

The following essay by Dr. Fitch on insects injurious to grain, was read the first evening of the late State Fair at Rochester. We give the discussion, following it as we find it in the Rural New Yorker.

Mr. Chairman and Gentlemen: I am requested to prefuce the discussion, this evening, by presenting to the audience some account of the Grain Aphis—an insect new to us in America, and which, during the past and present year, has been more prominent in the public regard than any other insect

In the grain fields of Europe this grain aphis has existed from time immemorial. It was scientifically named and described eighty-one years ago, by the distinguished German entomologist, Fabricius, who met with it in fields of oats, and therefore named it the Aphis Avenæ, or the oat aphis, he being unaware that it occurred equally common upon other kinds of grain also.

But our European accounts of it are quite meagre and imperfect. About all that we gather from them is, that it is an insect which shows itself upon the grain about the time of harvest, and that in some instances it has been known to be so multiplied, in particular places, as to literally swarm upon and cover the heads of the grain in many of the fields.

These few general facts, are all the information which the world has hitherto had of this insect. What became of it during the remainder of the year, where, and in what condition it lurks after harvest time, and until harvest time again approaches, had never been investigated. It was remaining for us in this country to trace out its abiding place and its habits during the autumn, winter and spring, and thus complete its history the year round, as we have been able to do within the past eighteen months—under the instruction of this Society, and under the auspices of the State of New York.

In this country, this grain aphis had never been observed, and it was not known that we had such an insect here, until last year, when it suddenly appeared in excessive numbers over all the New England States, and the State of New York, except here in its western section, and also in the adjoining districts of Canada and of Pennsylvania. Throughout all this vast extent of country every grain field was invaded by it; many of these fields were thronged, and a portion of them were literally covered and smothered by this insect.

This year it has moved westward, making its appearance in the same manner all over Western New York, Canada West, Northern Ohio, and at least a portion of Michigan, as I judge, from the numerous letters which have been sent me with grain-heads containing this insect, and from the notices of it in the public prints—whilst at the East, where it was so numerous last year, so that, except in a few localities, it would not have been noticed had not everybody been so eagerly searching for it.

But though this insect has only been noticed in this country the past and the present years, we do not suppose it has newly arrived upon this continent. It has no doubt been present in our grain fields heretofore; but in such limited numbers, and so scattered about upon the growing grain, that it failed to be observed. It is seventeen years ago that I began to examine the wheat midge, and in looking at that and other insects upon this wheat, I recollect I have occasionally seen this aphis. But as only two or three individuals of this kind were to be found at a time, I supposed it to be of no importance, and thus gave no attention to it, until it began to appear in such abundance the past year.

Although it is a common habit of plant lice to become extremely numerous, at times, upon the particular kinds of vegetation which they respectively infest, we meet with no recorded instance in which one of these insects has been known to become so suddenly and excessively multiplied over such a vast extent of territory as has happened in our country with this grain aphis the past and present years

I suppose almost every person in this audience has seen these insects crowded together upon the heads of wheat, of oats, barley, or rye, and has observed that they were a kind of plant louse, similar to what we frequently see upon the leaves of cabbages in our gardens, and on the apple, the cherry, and other trees. As it resembles these common and well known insects so closely in its form, its motions, and habits, it will not be necessary for me to give any particular description of it.

With regard to the mode in which it injures the grain, I would observe that it has a slender, sharp-pointed bill or trunk, which it holds under its breast when this implement is not in use. With this it punctures the leaves and stalks of the grain and sucks their juice. It thereby has no occasion to leave the particular plant on which it is born, as it always has an ample store of nourishment directly under its feet. Hence it has no use for wings to carry it, like other insects, from place to place in search of food. It needs wings for only one purpose, namely, to enable it to emigrate to fields of grain which are unoccupied, in order to start colonies in them. Only a small portion of these insects, therefore, acquire wings; and these fly away from the winter grain to plant their race upon the spring-sowed wheat and oats.

The latter part of June, when the grain has advanced so that the heads or ears begin to put forth, two most remarkable changes occur in this insect, whereby it appears to become another creature, a different species, in the middle of summer from that which is seen in the spring and autumn

One of these changes is in its habits. Before the heads appear, it lives singly, scattered about upon the leaves and stalks of the grain, and the young lice, as fast as they are born, leave their parents and wander away. But no sooner are the heads protruded from their sheaths preparatory to blooming and growing the kernels of the grain, than this aphis wholly forsakes all the other parts of the plant and becomes congregated upon the heads—evidently because the juices which the plant elaborates for the growth of its flowers and seeds are much more nutritious, more dainty and palatable to these insects, than are the juices which circulate in the leaves and stalks. They here fix themselves upon the base of the chaffs which envelop the kernels, and inserting their beaks, they suck out the juices which should go, first, to grow the flowers, and after that to fill and perfect the kernels. And now, the young lice which are born, instead of scattering themselves and travelling away, settle down closely around their parent, crowding so compactly together as they can stow themselves. Thus it comes to pass, that when these insects are numerous, as we have recently had them, in many of our grain fields, scarcely an ear can be found which has not a cluster of these lice around the base of almost every kernel, all with their tiny bills inserted therein, pumping out the juices which should go to swell and perfect the seed. Thus this grain aphis, from being a solitary insect, wandering about singly upon the leaves and stalks, becomes a gregarious insect, clustered together in flocks, and remaining fixed and stationary upon the lower or butt ends of the kernels

At the same time another change, equally remarkable, takes place in the color of these insects. So long as they nourish themselves on the coarse juices of the stalks and leaves, their bodies are all of a grass-green color. But, when they come to feed on the more delicate juices of the flowers, they begin to bear young of an orange color. One of the grass green insects having stationed herself at the base of a kernel, the next day, in the group of little ones around her, a yellow one will occur, all the others being green like their parent. A day or two later, as the nourishment she derived from the leaves becomes more dissipated from her body and replaced by that now obtained from the kernels, half the young she produces will be of this yellow color. And still later, all the young are yellow, no green ones being any longer born. And the old ones, after a time, dying and disappearing, all these insects, some weeks before harvest time, become changed to a yellow color, their hue inclining more to red in some, and yellow in others

It is truly curious that this green insect, thus, on coming to feed on the juices which grow the flowers, begin to produce young of a gay yellow color similar to that of the flowers.

By depriving the kernels of a portion of the milky juice which should go to swell and mature them, this insect causes the ripened grain to be more or less shrunken and light of weight.

Rye, however, grows so rapidly and ripens so early that it outstrips this aphis in its increase, and thus sustains no material injury from it. Winter wheat, ripening more slowly, experiences more injury. But the crops which ripen latest, and when this aphis has become multiplied to the greatest extent, namely, spring wheat and oats, become the most thronged and sustain the greatest injury.

Let us next inquire how it is that this insect is able to become so suddenly and so excessively multiplied as we have had it, in the Eastern part of our State last year, and here in its Western part this year.

I may observe that a hundred years ago it was a current opinion among men of science that certain insects and other creatures pertaining to the lower orders of the animal kingdom were generated spontaneously. But, more recently, when these instances of supposed spontaneous combustion came to be closely investigated, one after another of them were found not to be such So that at this day the scientific world discards the theory that there is or can be any such thing as spontaneous generation All living things descend from parents; and it is by a pairing of the sexes that young are produced, and that each species is continued in existence—some classes of animals bringing forth their young alive, others laying eggs from which their young hatch

Insects are of this latter kind They are all produced from eggs But in the generation of the plant lice, we meet with one of the most remarkable anomalies which we anywhere find in the works of nature. These insects bring forth their young alive, at one time, and they lay eggs at another time. All the plant lice which we see upon our trees during the spring and summer are females, and these do not produce eggs, but living young, which mature in a few days, and (wonderful to tell!) they are fertile, without any intercourse of the sexes. It is only when cold weather and frosty nights arrive, that males are produced. The insects then pair, and the females thereupon lay eggs. These eggs remain through the winter, to be hatched by the warmth of the following spring. The young from these eggs grow up and commence bearing living young, no males and no eggs being produced, except as the closing act of their operations in autumn

Such are the general facts with regard to the generation of the insects of this aphis group. And I had supposed it would be the same with this grain aphis. Some of you may have been present and heard the remarks which I made on this subject at our Fair at Watertown a year ago I stated that the eggs of this insect would probably be found late in autumn, scattered about upon the leaves of the fall sowed wheat and rye—which eggs would hatch with the warmth of the following spring, to start the insect upon the grain again this year. But when frosty nights arrived last autumn, and when the aphis on the apple trees was found paired, and the females were busy depositing their eggs, to my surprise, nothing of this kind occurred with this aphis upon the grain. The mature lice continued to produce young ones, until they and their young became congested upon the leaves of the young grain by the advancing cold of the season. And in this state they were buried beneath the snows of winter, and with the warmth of the ensuing spring they were thawed, and returned to life again.

To be better assured upon the subject, I placed some of these insects on grain growing in flower-pots and kept during the winter in a warm room In this situation they continued alive and continued to bear young through the whole winter season.

Thus I have watched this grain aphis the year round, so closely, that I am perfectly assured no eggs were laid and no males produced. Occasionally an individual was noticed, varying somewhat from the others, and which I have, therefore, suspected might be a male; but, on imprisoning such specimens in vials over night, I have invariably found young lice with them next morning

When, and under what circumstances, males occur—if they ever do occur—is yet remaining to be discovered. At present it seems as though these insects might go on forever, producing young, without any intercourse of the sexes

With regard to their fecundity, those which have no wings, and which remain on the stalks of grain on which they are born, are much more prolific than those which have wings and wander abroad. By enclosing them separately in vials, I found the winged females quite uniformly gave birth to two young lice in a single night, whilst the wingless ones produced four in the same time We frequently see young lice produced in the day time, but fewer appear to be born than during the night The winged ones are much slower in coming to maturity I placed several young lice, the morning after they were born, upon some grain growing in a flower-pot, and on the third morning afterwards, I found four little ones around each of them, showing that the wingless ones come to maturity in three days. It will thus be seen with what prodigious rapidity these creatures multiply. They almost double their numbers daily. A single one producing four young daily, and these becoming equally prolific when they are three days old, her descendants in twenty days, if all live, will number upwards of two millions. This will serve to explain to us how it is that this insect becomes so excessively numerous upon the grain at harvest time, as we have seen it

As they multiply so rapidly, it is evident no vegetation which they infest would escape destruction from these plant lice, if nature had not herself provided most efficient means for checking and subduing them. We accordingly find that these insects are preyed up on and consumed by other insects, to a greater extent than are any other kinds of injurious insects wherewith we are molested. There are whole groups and tribes of predaceous insects, which sub-ist exclusively upon the plant lice of different kinds

A tribe of very small Ichneumon flies, named Aphidius, are parasitic destroyers of these insects—puncturing and thrusting an egg into the body of the aphis, from which hatches a minute worm which feeds within the aphis till it kills it. I have found two species of the parasites destroying the grain aphis

Another most efficient destroyer is the Lady Bug or Coccinella, of which there are numerous species, all of which are continually searching plant-lice to feed upon, these being the sole nourishment of the lady bug, both in its larva and its perfect state.

In addition to these are the Syrphus flies, the golden-eyed flies, and the lace-winged flies, all mortal enemies to the different kinds of Aphis.

By such means is it that these plant lice upon the grain as on other vegetation, are usually but a transitory evil—these their foes and destroyers, always gathering around them wherever they become numerous, and multiplying until they overbalance and subdue them

Some one asked for a description of the Lady Bug. Dr. Fitch described it as follows: It is about the size and shape of half of a small pea, of a yellowish red color, with round, black spots upon it.

Question.—Is it poisonous to animals?

Dr Fitch knew a singular instance where swine had been pastured in a field where the lady bug was numerous All of the herd were taken sick, and some of them died The swine were removed from that field to another, and such as were so removed recovered. Dr. F said that it was possible that the swine were poisoned by eating large quantities of the lady bug; for if it is taken in the fingers and crushed, an acrid juice is emitted, which is doubtless poisonous, inasmuch as it is the insect's only means of defence. He had thought it possible that this particular herd of swine might have been poisoned by it.

Question.—Is there any prospect of the Aphis becoming a permanent pest in the country?

Answer.—I think not. Its enemies are too numerous for that Not more than a single year at a time, will they be likely to ravage in a single locality. As before said, they seem to be migrating westward.

Q.—Is the midge a permanent pest? is it plenty here at all seasons?

A.—There is no doubt that the midge is plenty in all parts of the country. The character of the season governs its ravages. If the latter part of June is wet, look out for the midge; if dry, there is no danger. In dry weather it cannot subsist on the uplands; it returns to the lowlands.

T. C. Peters.—We are fast reaching the maximum of former years in the amount of wheat sown in Western New York, and it is an important matter to us to know how to avoid the ravages of the midge. Do you recommend thorough culture?

Dr. Fitch.—Strong growing wheat will produce despite the midge. Yes, I do recommend thorough culture as one of the preventives of the ravages of the midge; also of the Hessian fly and other insects.

Q.—What is the effect of the work of the aphis upon the grain—upon the kernel?

A.—The insect extracts the juices from the plant, which aid in developing and maturing the kernel This diminishes the size of the grain—sometimes virtually destroying it, for the substance is almost gone.

Mr. Geddes, of Onondago, does not agree with Dr. Fitch concerning his theory with reference to the existence of the midge. He doubts if the midge exists in as great numbers one year as another or if they are present at all; for prior to the past six years he had failed to get a crop of wheat for some years on their account; while the past six years he had grown it successfully His success, he thinks, is not due to dry Junes, but to the fact that the midge had disappeared He doubts too if his success is due to superior culture; for he used to summer fallow all his land; now he turns it over and seeds after barley, oats, &c., &c

T. C. Peters.—So far as white wheat is concerned, the theory of the effect of the season upon the ravages of the midge upon it, is correct. But the Mediterranean is the only variety that can be grown now safely He thinks the white wheat has very much degenerated.

Other gentlemen present coincided with him in this matter, and united in asserting that the best mode of redeeming white wheat was to change the seed. It was further agreed that the Mediterranean had greatly improved by cultivation—that it was "bleaching out."

Mr Bishop, of Wyoming, asked if early or late sowing had not had to do with checking the ravages of the Aphis?

Dr. Fitch replied, yes. Its ravages are greatest on the late sown wheat. Late sowing is not advised, if the object is to avoid its ravages. The same remark applies conversely to the midge. It does not so seriously affect the late, as the early sown wheat

Prest Connell.—Have you observed the Aphis in the ground around the roots of the barley?

Dr. F. had so discovered it.

Mr Geddes.—Why is it that the midge should have appeared one year, and not doubled the second and tripled the third, &c, &c? He thought the midge was disappearing.

Dr. Fitch said there were two successive years when the midge disappeared, and then the third year appeared again, and was very destructive. He does not think it was because the midge passed away from the country, but because the season was not favorable to its development—or at least not favorable to its operations on wheat—it passed to some other grain.

At this point there was a rambling conversational discussion upon the relative value of different varieties of wheat. Much of this the reporter was unable to hear. But he heard enough to establish the fact that there were many present who believed the Mediterranean the safest and best wheat to sow; that it was improving in character, while the white wheat of the Genesee Valley was deteriorating A few claimed that better flour could be made from the Mediterranean than from any other wheat.

EXERCISE OF MIND ESSENTIAL TO HEALTH.

The perfect health of the lower animals is not the perfect health of man. The one having more nervousness, demands corresponding life

If we would have healthy bodies, our brains must be regularly and vigorously used. The Greeks employed gymnastics, but neglected not earnestness in art, speculation, and politics. They had the mental life full of energy and beauty, as well as the athletic and graceful frame.

How we weary of the novel and light literature, and yet endure protracted study over works requiring mental grasp!

TALKS ABOUT WAR.

RANK, INSIGNIA OF RANK.

In an army every man's power and his pay depend on his rank—that is, upon the office that he holds If he is a private soldier, he has no power or authority He has only to obey orders Above the private soldier there are more than a dozen ranks or grades of officers going up from the Corporal to the Lieutenant-General.

Every officer is required to wear something which on duty that shows just what his rank is These are called the badges or insignia of rank. When you meet a man in the street at home, you can't tell whether he is a lawyer, or a doctor, or a farmer; whether he is a rich man or a poor man But the moment you meet a soldier, you can tell whether he is a private or an officer, and if an officer, just what his rank and his pay are—that is, if you understand all about these badges or insignia of rank. Let me, then, explain them to you.

Officers are either commissioned or non-commissioned. The commissioned officers are appointed by the Governors of the States in the volunteer army, and by the President in the regular army Then are nine grades of commissioned officers whose pay ranges from $100 a month up to $800

The commissioned officers all wear shoulder straps. These are pieces of cloth one and three eighths of an inch wide and four inches long, bordered with an embroidery of gold a quarter of an inch wide. The color of the cloth in the shoulder-strap tells to which arm of the service the officer belongs. In the artillery the cloth is scarlet—in the infantry it is light blue, and in the cavalry it is yellow. General officers, that is, those above a Colonel in rank, and the Staff officers of these rank, wear dark blue shoulder-straps

A Second Lieutenant, who is the lowest commissioned officer, has nothing inside of the gold bordering of his shoulder-straps. A First Lieutenant has a little gold embroidered bar just inside of each end of the border of his straps, and parallel with the end. A Captain has two such bars in each end; that is, four in each strap A Major has, instead of the bars of gold, a gold embroidered leaf in each end of each strap. A Lieutenant Colonel has a silver embroidered leaf in each end of each strap. A Colonel has a silver embroidered eagle in the middle of each strap. A Brigadier-General has a silver embroidered star with five rays in the place of the eagle. A Major-General has two such stars in each strap A Lieutenant-General has three stars, the centre one being larger than the other two

Whenever you see a man with shoulder-straps on, you know he is a commissioned officer; and you can tell what arm of the service he belongs to by the color of the cloth in his straps, and what his rank is by what is worked or embroidered inside of the border of his straps.

Non-commissioned officers all wear chevrons upon both sleeves of their coats, between the elbow and the shoulder. These chevrons are made of silk or worsted binding half an inch wide. In the artillery the binding is scarlet; in the infantry light blue, and in the cavalry yellow. The chevron is in the form of a letter A turned upside down. The point or angle of the A being turned towards the elbow.

A Corporal has two bars of worsted binding on each sleeve. A Sergeant has three bars. An Orderly Sergeant, has three bars and a lozenge or diamond above them in the open angle which they make. An Ordnance Sergeant, who has charge of the ammunition, has three bars and a star in silk binding. A Quartermaster's Sergeant has three bars and a tie in silk. A Sergeant Major has three bars and an arc over them in silk. A Hospital Steward has a half chevron of green cloth on each arm, and a "Caduceus," or snake twisted around a rod, embroidered yellow silk

The non-commissioned officers are appointed by the Colonel of the regiment, and may be reduced to the ranks, that is, made private soldiers again, whenever he thinks that they neglect their duty, or are guilty of any crime. The Corporals get no more pay than privates—namely, $13.00 a month The Sergeants get $17 a month. The Orderly and Hospital Steward, $20. The Sergeant Major and Quartermaster Sergeant $21.

You see that there is a great difference between the pay of commissioned and non-commissioned officers. But the non-commissioned officers are supplied by the government with food, called "rations" in the army, and with $42.00 worth of clothing every year. The commissioned officers have to feed and clothe themselves

REMARKABLE ROMANCE IN REAL LIFE

AN AMERICAN PRESTER JOHN—A NEW YORK SAILOR RULING A CHINESE CITY—LIFE AND PROPERTY SUBJECT TO HIS WILL.

The great lands of the Orient, the homes and cradles of fancy and romance, have not entirely renounced their old character. Occasionally, amid the smoke of battle, we have wafted to us a little breeze from the far East, a bit of fairy life and romance worth

——the good old days
Of the Caliph Haroun Alraschid.

The latest advices from China inform us, through the medium of private letters, of the unprecedented career in that country of a young American of this State, who, though but twenty-nine years of age, has reached a position which reminds one of the dim legends of Prester John Here is a brief recountal of the story of adventure:—

About twelve years ago Edward Forester, country lad, born in Jefferson county, in this State, decided, like a great many other boys, to go to sea. His friends opposed the idea, but, of course, the love of ocean life was too strong to be resisted, and young Forester joined those who "go down to the sea in ships." He was successful, and soon became the mate of a whaling ship, though then scarcely beyond his majority.

In Honolulu Forester made the acquaintance of a merchant of Hakodadi, and went with him to Japan Here he remained two or three years engaged in commercial pursuits. Thence he went to China, where he was taken into the Imperial service. He became popular both with the foreigners and native authorities at Shanghai, and was finally made second in command to Gen Ward, in place of Col Margrave, who was severely wounded in some recent engagement.

In this capacity the quondam sailor continued to be much liked, and now enjoys the confidence of all the Mandarins in the province, and is admitted to their confidence, as well as the highest and most exclusive Chinese Society. At one time he led a band of two hundred men against the Rebels, only nine of them returning, the rest having been all killed. He has now twenty thousand troops under his command

For his services he has been made a Mandarin of the Blue Button, and his name stands high in Pekin. His rank obliges him to keep at least twelve servants. The latest letters received from him (to May 1st) state that he is in command of the city of Soungkaing, sleeps with the city keys under his pillow; while not one of the 200,000 inhabitants of the place—not even the highest Mandarin—can enter or leave without his permission, and at a word from him any individual out of that 200,000 may lose his head

Mr Forester enjoys also the friendship of Admiral Hope, General Mitchell, and the other English and French officers in China. Admiral Hope he reports as severely wounded in a recent fight

On the 1st of May the English, French and imperialist troops were preparing to attack Chinfoo, of which Forester will be made Military Governor. He predicts the removal or deposing of the so-called Heavenly Emperor within a year

Such is the brief and brilliant career in the East of a genuine specimen of Young America The American Mandarin has friends and relatives living in this city, as well as in the North on part of the State who will learn with satisfaction and pleasure of his influence and power in far-off lands

N. Y Post, ub.

Family Circle.

THE MISSIONARY CHILD.

Beneath the eastern sunshine
A little maiden play'd;
Her life seemed filled with happiness,
Unknown to evening shade.
A mother's gentle hand was seen
In fragrant fondness twining,
And the love light of a father's eye
Beam'd on the child with blessing.

Beneath the eastern sunshine
There march'd an armed band,
And loud the dreadful war cry,
Was raised throughout the land;
Then many a loving father
Went forth in coat of mail,
And returned no more to bless his child,
Or stay the widow's wail

Beneath the eastern sunshine
With aching heart and head,
A crouched weary captive
Were by the victors led
Among them was the little maid,
From home and country driven,
And the only Friend she had not lost
Was her Father's God in heaven.

Still 'neath the eastern sunshine,
Though 'mid a stranger race,
The little captive served her God
And sought His helpful grace;
And in the heathen household
Where'ever her lot trodwell,
To those around she told of Him
Who doeth all things well.

Beneath the eastern sunshine
A haughty noble rode,
Eager to prove the healing power
Of the little maiden's God,
To the home he left a leper foul,
In health and peace he came,
And the heart so proud now humbly bow'd
Before Jehovah's name.

Ah, surely Heaven's own sunshine
Was resting on the maid,
As timidly her trembling tones
The word of life convey'd!
Upon the evergreen of a child
Angels might come and look,
And the "Gold for a memorial"
In God's most blessed Book. Issa

—Juvenile Missionary, Magazine.

IN A MINUTE

"Henry," said Mrs. Williams to her son, who was employed in drawing horses on a slate, "there are hens in the garden; go and drive them out, or they will do mischief there."

"Yes, ma'am," said Henry, "I will go."

Mrs. Williams left him, in order to attend to her domestic matters. He kept on drawing. Did he mean to disobey his mother? Oh, no. He said in sincerity "I will go;" but added, mentally, "in a minute." He had nearly finished a picture of a house. He wanted to finish it before he went. It would take him but a minute. He did not finish it as soon as he expected. When it was nearly finished according to his original plan, a new thought struck him, and he rubbed out a part of his work, and thus his "minute" became a very long one. In fact, he was so occupied with his work, that he forgot his mother had spoken to him. In about a quarter of an hour his mother came to him and said, "Henry, the hens are back again in the garden, and they are scratching up our flower-bed."

"Are they?" said Henry, in a tone of surprise. "I'll drive them so far away that they won't get back again very soon" Henry intended to make the impression on his mother's mind that he had promptly obeyed her by driving out the hens, and that they had made their way back again

That was deceiving her. It was acting a lie instead of telling one, and it was just as bad Henry never made false statements to his mother. He would have felt deeply grieved if any one had accused him of telling a falsehood. Young persons must not deceive themselves in regard to this matter. A lie consists in deceiving. Deceit can be practised by actions as well as by words.

Henry came into the house weeping. "What is the matter?" said Mrs. Williams.

"The hens have scratched up all my flowers, and have dug great holes in the bed to dust themselves in. The seeds I had planted were just coming up, and they are all scratched up. Why didn't you tell me they were there before they had destroyed my bed?"

This was not very respectful language for a boy to use to his mother. He felt angry and guilty, and wanted somebody to blame. I think it quite likely the reader has felt and acted in a similar way.

This language brought his disobedience to light. Until he spoke thus, his mother thought he had driven the hens out when she told him to, and that they had come back again. She now suspected he had not

"How far did you drive them when I told you they were in the garden?" said she, in a tone that convinced Henry that she knew he had not heeded her command

"I waited just a minute till I had finished my house, before I went. If you had told me they were on my flower-bed, I should have gone at once"

"You should go at once whenever I tell you to. Your remark implies that you will obey your mother when it is for your interest to do so. That is not obedience. You are to do what your parents tell you to do, because they tell you to do it. If you do the act from selfish motives, and without regard to their authority, you do not obey them. Besides, you waited more than 'just a minute' It is now nearly or quite half an hour since I spoke to you. The hens were then just coming in at the further end of the walk. If you had obeyed me, they would not have touched your bed. The loss of your flowers is a just punishment for your disobedience."

"I didn't mean to wait so long. I meant to wait just a minute, and then I forgot that you told me."

"That is no good excuse. To forget a duty does not excuse us from performing it. Life would be a very different thing from what it now is, if forgetfulness of a duty atoned for not doing it. If you intend to obey your parents, you must do what they tell you to, when they tell you"

"I do mean to be obedient"

A neighbor coming in at that moment broke off the conversation Henry retired not at all satisfied with himself and with what had taken place If he had thought over matters as he should have done, he would have formed, at least, two resolutions. 1, Never to act a lie, 2, To render a prompt obedience to his parent's commands.

CHILD'S CHRISTIAN ALPHABET

A is an Advocate, Jesus his name,
B is a Babe, in weakness who came;
C the Comforter, Christ's dearest Friend,
D the Deliverer to bring you relief.
E the Eternal, the Ancient of Days
F is the Faithful, all worthy of praise,
G is our God, and our Guide from the fall,
H is the Highest and Holiest of all
I is the Innocent Victim who bled,
J is the Justifier, the great and the dead
K is our King, let our hearts be his throne,
L is the Lamb that was slain to atone
M is Messiah, by prophets foretold,
N is the Nail-[illegible]
O the Omnipotent, make him your stay,
P is the Portion that ne'er shall decay,
Q is the Queen, the church of Christ's choice,
R the Redeemer, O, head ye his voice
S is salvation from hell and from sin,
T is the Truth, let her rule you within,
U the Unspeakable Gift of our God,
V is the Vine where each branch has abode
W is the Way to the Father on high,
X our example to live and to die,
Y is his Yoke that is easy to bear,
Z is his Zeal for the honor of his care
Virtues to emerge the trust of our heart
Our Brother, our Prophet, our Priest, Lord, thou art.

"On parent's knee, a helpless, new-born child,
Weeping, thou sit'st, while all around thee smiled!
So live, that, sinking in thy last long sleep,
Then, then, may'st smile, whilst all around thee weep!

In conversation do not exalt yourselves, but bring [illegible]

Advertisements.

TO THE READERS OF THE CHRISTIAN INSTRUCTOR.

A CARD.

[illegible] CLOTHING MADE CLOTHING AT MODERATE PRICES, and finding that many gentlemen would prefer their clothing MADE TO ORDER if they could secure at the same time REALLY FIRST CLASS STYLES, and at REALLY REASONABLE PRICES, we have, at the earnest solicitation of our patrons, organized, in connection with our extensive Ready Made Salesroom, a complete CUSTOM DEPARTMENT in which the prominent features are,
1st. Fine and Medium Materials made up in First Class Style
2d [illegible]
3d [illegible]
4th A [illegible]
An extensive assortment of the choicest imported and domestic fabrics from the New York and Philadelphia markets, suitable for Cloths, Pants, and Vests, always on hand

In our Ready Made Salesrooms can always be found every variety and style of well made fashionable clothing, [illegible] ready. PRICES MODERATE

☞ A visit is solicited

WANAMAKER & BROWN,
MERCHANT TAILORS AND CLOTHIERS,
"OAK HALL,"
S. E. Corner SIXTH AND MARKET STREETS
JAMES WANAMAKER, [illegible]

☞ ESTABLISHED IN 1796 ☜
McALLISTER AND BROTHER,
OPTICIANS,
No. 728 Chestnut Street,
PHILADELPHIA,
Nearly Opposite Masonic Hall,

Lately removed from the old Stand, Chestnut St. above Second.
Spectacles, Mathematical Instruments, Spy Glasses, Philosophical Apparatus, Opera Glasses, Thermometers, Microscopes, and Microscopic Objects, Tape Measures, Prisms, Pencils, Magic Lanterns, Stereoscopes and Stereoscopic Pictures. A Wholesale and Retail

A Descriptive and Illustrated Catalogue furnished on application, and sent by Mail, Free of Charge. 6y1

PURE WHOLESOME BREAD.

THE UNFERMENTED BREAD

Is the most pure, wholesome and nutritious BREAD that can be used

Its superior quality is certified by several hundred of our most prominent physicians, who use it constantly

Families supplied in all parts of the city, and the Bread is kept by all prominent grocers.

W. E. CAMP, Exclusive Manufacturer,
Corner of Broad and Ratherford Sts.

PIANOS & MELODEONS.

The largest [illegible] assortment and cheapest stock in America [illegible]
All instruments sold subject to approval, guaranteed for five years
[illegible]
1102 and Chestnut sts., Philadelphia.

KURTZ'S CHURCH HISTORY.
NOW COMPLETE.
LINDSAY & BLAKISTON, PHILADELPHIA,
HAVE NOW READY
A TEXT-BOOK OF CHURCH HISTORY,
By JOHN HENRY KURTZ,
Professor of Theology in the University of Dorpat.
COMPLETE IN TWO VOLUMES
VOLUME I—To the Reformation. VOLUME II—From the Reformation.
PRICE $5.00.

"It is perhaps the best manual extant on this subject, in any language and better adapted than any other to the tastes and habits of mind of American students. It is faithful, terse, graphic, and is enriched with numerous [illegible]"—Methodist Quar. Review.

"It is an admirable work of reference. The history is extremely condensed, and a vast amount of information is given in the fewest possible words. It is particularly full in accounts of the development of theological doctrines, and of the operation of political influences on the history of the Church. The classification and arrangements are excellent, the references to authorities are everywhere abundant and the leading outlines of the history are presented with great clearness."—New Englander.

L. & B. ALSO PUBLISH
KURTZ'S MANUAL OF SACRED HISTORY a Guide to the Divine Plan of Salvation, according to its Historical Development. Seventh American edition. In one vol. Price $1.25
The admirable Manual of Sacred History translated by Dr. Schaeffer, constitutes a rich contribution to our theological literature. It has been favorably received by Christians of all denominations
KURTZ'S BIBLE AND ASTRONOMY. An Exposition of Biblical Cosmology and its relation to Natural Science. Second revised edition. [illegible] Price 1.25
KURTZ'S HISTORY OF THE OLD COVENANT. 2 vols., octavo. [illegible] Price 4.00
MERZDORF'S ENCYCLOPEDIA OF PROTESTANT THEOLOGICAL AND ECCLESIASTICAL LITERATURE. In two vols. Royal Octavo. [illegible] Price 4.00
LINDSAY & BLAKISTON, Publishers,
25 South Sixth St., above Chestnut, Philadelphia

SABBATH SCHOOL LIBRARIES.
BEAUTIFUL, NEW AND SAFE BOOKS
AT LOW PRICES.
RECENTLY PUBLISHED FOR LIBRARIES.
PICTORIAL CATALOGUES MAILED FREE TO SUPERINTENDENTS AND OTHERS.

These books are filled with the most interesting matter, written with great care, and beautifully illustrated. Calculated not simply to amuse, but so to instruct and interest the children that they may become [illegible] of God

ALSO, a choice selection of books, beautifully bound in flexible covers, for the ARMY AND NAVY.

All the publications of the American Tract Society, instituted at Boston in 1814, may be found at

ALL THE PROMINENT BOOK-STORES IN PHILADELPHIA

Also, at JOHN G. BROUGHTON'S,
No. 5 North Ninth St., New York Office,
NICHOLSON BROUGHTON, Jr.,
Department 28 Cornhill, Boston

JOHN COCHRAN & CO.,
Importers and Jobbers of
Hosiery, Gloves and Fancy Dry Goods,
NO. 18 NORTH FOURTH ST., ABOVE MARKET,
PHILADELPHIA.
Ribbons and White Goods, Undershirts and Drawers, Embroideries and Handkerchiefs, Watches and Jewelry, Combs, Brushes, &c.

Dr. J. GOODWILLIE,
DENTIST,
816 South Eleventh Street, below Spruce,
PHILADELPHIA.

SUPERIOR FRENCH CONFECTIONS,
MANUFACTURED BY
AUGUSTUS TILLMES, No. 1202 CHESTNUT ST.,
Put up neatly in 1, 2 and 5 pound boxes, without extra charge. Also, A LARGE VARIETY OF RICH BONBONS, suitable for [illegible] presents. A fine selection of CIGARS and TOBACCO constantly on hand.
Dealers [illegible]
A. TILLMES, 1202 Chestnut St.

1862. 1862.
THE PENNSYLVANIA CENTRAL RAILROAD.
THE GREAT DOUBLE TRACK ROUTE
THE CAPACITY OF THE ROAD IS NOW EQUAL TO ANY IN THE COUNTRY.
THE GREAT FREIGHT LINE TO THE WEST

The Keystone over Line Mail and Fast Line, Sabbath excepted
Mail Train leaves Philadelphia at [illegible] 7.10 A M
Fast Line " " [illegible] 11.30 A M
Express Train " " [illegible] 10.30 P M
Parkesburg Accommodation leaves Philadelphia at [illegible] 5.05 P. M
Harrisburg " " " [illegible] 2.30 P M
Lancaster " " " [illegible] 4.05 P M
Trains for West (Sunday at 8.45 A. M., at 10 noon, and at 6 P M
Passengers for Pottsburg, Williamsport, Elmira, Buffalo, Niagara Falls, and intermediate points, leaving Philadelphia at 8 A. M and Fast Mail at 11.30 A. M.
For further information apply at the Passenger Station, S. E. cor. of Pittsburgh and Market Streets

PITTSBURG, FORT WAYNE & CHICAGO RAILWAY.
TO ALL POINTS IN THE WEST, SOUTH WEST, AND NORTH WEST.
In direct connection with the Pennsylvania Central Railroad
SUMMER ARRANGEMENT,
Commencing May 5th, 1862
TIME TO [illegible] CINCINNATI, CHICAGO AND INDIANAPOLIS St. Louis, and the West, shorter, than by any other route
WESTWARD TRAINS

Leave	Fast Line	Mail	Express
Philadelphia,	12.00 M	7.10 A M	10.30 P M
"	4.05 P M	1.05 P M	4.00 A M
Pittsburg,	4.00 A M.	7.15 A M	11.30 P M
Arrive at [illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	7.00 A M
" [illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	7.30 A M
" Chic

THE CHRISTIAN RECORDER.

Published by the African Methodist Episcopal Church in the United States, for the Dissemination of Religion, Morality, Literature and Science.

Rev. Elisha Weaver, Editor. PHILADELPHIA, NOVEMBER 15. 1862. Vol. II.—No. 45.—New Series. Whole No. 97.

THE CHRISTIAN RECORDER

Is published every Saturday on behalf of the

AFRICAN METHODIST EPISCOPAL CHURCH,

BY

REV. ELISHA WEAVER,

General Book Steward,

No 619 Pine Street, Philadelphia.

Notice.—All letters and matters pertaining to the Book Concern or the paper, must be directed to Rev Elisha Weaver, Box No. 1165, Philadelphia, and all matters sent by express, and in our city, must be directed to 619 Pine Street, Second Door.

All articles or matter intended for the Recorder, must be directed to E. Weaver, Box No. 1165, Philadelphia

TERMS

Two Dollars a year, payable in advance. Single copies, five cents.

ADVERTISEMENTS.

We will insert advertisements [illegible] suitable for a religious newspaper, which will be published as follows:

[illegible] Advertisements, must not be more or less than [illegible] eight lines [illegible] dollars paper [illegible] or multiplications without the proportionate number of [illegible] are paper [illegible] three months, four times. One month, $1 00, paper in each case included

CORRESPONDING EDITORS OF CHRISTIAN RECORDER.

Rev J P CAMPBELL, Rev A W WAYMAN,
" J M WILLIAMS, " E T WILLIAMS,
" G H BRADHAM, " C BURCH,
Rev L BOBB

FIFTY AND FIFTEEN

With gradual gleam the day was dawning;
Some lingering stars were seen
When swung the garden gate behind us,—
He fifty, I fifteen.

The high topped chaise and old gray pony
Stood waiting in the lane:
Idly my father swayed the whip-lash,
Lightly he held the reins.

The stars went softly back to heaven;
The night fogs rolled away,
And runs of gold, and crown of crimson
Along the hill tops lay.

That morn, the fields they surely never
So fair an aspect wore;
And never from the purple clover
Such perfume rose before.

O'er hills, and low romantic valleys
And flowery by-roads through,
I sang my maniest songs to cheer,
That he might sing their tune.

Our souls lay open to all pleasures,
No shadow came between;
Two children happy with their leisure,
He fifty, I fifteen.

* * * * * *

As on my couch in languor lonely
I weave beguiling rhyme,
Comes back with strangely sweet remembrance
That far removed time.

The slow-paced years have brought sad changes
That morn and this between;
And now on earth my years are fifty,
And his, in heaven fifteen

[illegible] DYING.

[illegible] W. H. C. SOMER.

[illegible] voice of complaining
[illegible]halinde and dell;
[illegible]inging, and crochets are singing
[illegible] song of farewell!
[illegible]ees, but where are the roses
[illegible]l with her tresses of gold?
[illegible]re sighing, where darkly are lying
[illegible]beaten leaves on the mould

[illegible]ooking me, for barren before me
[illegible] hills that I loved when a boy;
No more in shadows of oak on the meadows
Stout mowers their scanning enjoy.
The stubble, how lonely! weeds shooting up only
Where grain clothed the generous soil,
And reapers were swinging their cradles and singing
Blithe strains to enliven the toil.

Cattle are wading where willows are shading
The low, shallow bed of the stream;
Thistle down floating, is sadly denoting
That summer will pass like a dream.
The harvest moon, sailing through mist, is unveiling
Her dusk like a blood-painted shield,
While school-boy and maiden, their baskets fruit-laden,
Are home from the blackberry field.

Dark swells of ocean, with long-measured motion,
Moan as they break on the shore;
Airy tongues wailing for beauty's cheek paling,
Chime in with the desolate roar.
Stars have grown dimmer, less dazzling the glimmer
Of the fire-fly lamps on the lawn;
Flocks cease chiddling, are honey-drops holding,
But light from the landscape is gone.

Throned on the thistle, the botanist's whistle
Made cheerful the meadows of June;
Mead larks saluting the morn with the fluting,
Replied to his rapturous tune.
Hoarse crows are calling, and first leaves are falling,
But still a mild loveliness reigns;
A sweet haunting sadness, though vanished in gladness,
And glory from nature, remains.

WASHINGTON CORRESPONDENCE.

Mr. Editor:—Again the snow flakes have carpeted our sometimes dusty then muddy city Every thing looks white and pure, and if some celestial visitor, upon whom the charm of deception could effect its bewilderment, were to visit our wicked and corrupt metropolis, he might suppose all was purity and perfection

They have been holding a series of meetings in Israel Church for the last two weeks, the result of which has been the conversion of many souls. The entire church presents a more spiritual aspect at present, than she has for some time.

Last Sabbath, the 2d inst., the second quarterly meeting of the grand Sabbath School Union was held in Israel Church, at 3 o'clock, P. M. This association is composed of delegates from the various Sabbath Schools of the entire city, organized by Bishop Payne and the late Rev. John F. Cook, seventeen years ago.

The meeting was opened by singing and prayer, roll called, minutes of the previous meeting read and approved. The President, Mr. John Thos. Johnson, then called for the quarterly reports of the various schools, the majority of which were very intelligently represented. And the flattering reports which came from many of the schools indubitably showed, that neither industry nor discretionary genius commensurate to the work were lacking. After which the following gentlemen addressed the audience:—

Rev. Adolphus W. Winkfield, who spoke to children. His remarks were very pathetic, and suitably adapted to the tender feelings of the young. Likely, no one then present could have ingratiated himself into the youthful minds, and retained their attention more successfully, than did Mr. Winkfield. I also think the good brother is destined for the work of the Christian ministry, as the zeal and burning fervor which is manifest in his gestures, glows in his countenance, burns in his words, yet threaded with so much Christian love, bespoke a fitness for some higher calling in the Christian church.

Rev. Alexander Sandy, of the Third Baptist Church, spoke to the teachers. His remarks were very pointed, and uncompromising with non-attendance of Sabbath School teachers. He paid a [illegible]ing tribute to those trifling parents who [illegible]y or mean to discharge their parental [illegible]ne showing the almost impossibility [illegible]th School rearing children for God, when the parents took no interest in their religious training.

3d, John Thos. Johnson, President, spoke to the parents. His remarks evinced no small acquaintance with literature. He handled his subject in a masterly manner and demonstrated clearly, that the reflection of cast could only be abrogated by the force of literary competition.

Mr H. A. Wormly is the Secretary of the Association. This gentleman has the appearance of one who possesses the ability adequate to whatever position may be in reserve for him.

Upon the whole, the demonstration told well for those who are engaged in the work of youthful culture.

I had the pleasure of visiting Baltimore this week, where I found assembled the Executive Board of the Baltimore Annual Conference Missionary Society, which Board is composed of Rt. Rev D A Payne, and Revs J M Brown, A W. Wayman, J A Handy, B F Tanner Jas Lynch, H M Turner. They were in session three days, during which time some heavy discussions took place. Two applications for establishing missionary fields were presented. One was sent from Africa, and the other from South Carolina. The application from Africa was largely and warmly debated upon. Not being authorized by the Board, I forbear giving the result of its proceedings; but will merely state to the members of the Baltimore Annual Conference, that they will soon be officially notified to raise the sum of thirty five cents from each and every member of their circuit or station, to meet the exigencies of our missionary demand. The Board adjourned to meet in Washington the 1st Monday in December.

I also met in the Monumental City the distinguished lecturer and very popular orator, Mr. Wm. J. Watkins. Baltimore is his birth place, and no man ever experienced from his friends a more cordial reception, upon his return from Hayti. He has been lecturing for some time to crowded houses, though an admission fee has been charged. No lectures among our people have been so well attended. I will give you the subjects which he has been discussing:—

1st. The colored people of the United States—our defects, our duties, and our probable destiny

2d. The relation of the colored population of the United States to the present crisis.

3d. Human progress.

4th. Our wants, as a people.

He has surpassed the expectations of all by his splendid elocution, his inimitable power of description, his bold and vivid imagery, his burning satire, and his glowing eloquence. He first lectured by invitation of the Galbraith Lyceum, though the Baptist Church in which he was to lecture was refused at a very late hour by Rev. Noah Davis, (colored,) on the ground of Mr. Watkins' abolition notoriety.

The Presbyterian Church, of which Rev. Hiram Revels is the learned and faithful pastor, was tendered, and crowded to overflowing, and he has since lectured in Bethel and Sharp Street Churches. Thus, the people rebuked the needless timidity, the suicidal jealousy of old decrepid fogyism. A man of Mr. Watkins' calibre cannot be suppressed, and I am glad to know that no man among us has more ardent friends than he. May the Lord prosper him in his efforts to instruct and to elevate those who so much need his counsels.

I am informed that the Fifteenth St. Presbyterian Church has employed a temporary pastor. He is a white minister, and said to be a very good man, but only an ordinary preacher. May Heaven bless his labors.

The Central American Expedition will be delayed for some three or four months. The reason of which is, that the President concurs with the views of Secretary Seward, in first making a treaty with the Government of New Granada, so that all emigrants will be entitled to the protection guaranteed by the United States Government, and this treaty must be ratified by Congress. I suppose this arrangement has constituted the basis of Mr Seward's heretofore urged objections. I am informed that the prospective Governor, Mr Joseph E Williams, will occupy an office in the Interior Department till the expedition is ready.

H. M. T.

Washington, Nov. 8th, 1862

For the Christian Recorder.

Lawrence, Kansas, Nov. 4th, 1862

Mr. Editor—I drop a few lines to your paper, to let the friends know over east how we are getting along here in Kansas. I reached my charge on the 18th day of October, and found the society in quite a low state, in consequence of the war. Many of the brethren were called into the service in defence of the state from invasion, and are still in camp near Fort Lincoln, well armed and equipped. Cheering news reached here on Sunday morning, that a portion of the colored Regiment had an engagement with a band of guerillas, on last Thursday, and after 3 hours' hard fighting, succeeded in driving them from Kansas soil, killing 20 and wounding a great many. There were 8 colored soldiers killed, and Lieut. Crow, a white officer. The informant said that the blacks fought with a valor, never surpassed by any soldiers. I think the battle will have a telling effect among the whites here, many of them at least who have predicted that the colored men would run if they came into battle: they are convinced that they will fight. There was quite an excitement here on Sunday night. A report gained currency somehow that Quantrill, the notorious bushwhacker, was going to invade Lawrence that night. The Home Guards were soon in their places, with muskets in hand, ready to give him a warm reception. The women did not sleep on their arms, but I learn that many of them slept in their daily attire with sandals or shoes on, not knowing what moment they would have to take their leave of the city, but thank God, the day broke on us all safe again, and all is quiet again in the city. We have commenced a protracted meeting, and there is indication of much good being done. There were 8 persons forward to the altar of prayer last night, and they seemed to be deeply engaged, and the church is becoming aroused. May God pour out his Spirit upon us. More anon.

J M. WILKERSON.

For the Christian Recorder.

Rev. Weaver,—I thought that I would furnish this Communication, from the western border of the Indiana Annual Conference. Well, I visited Muscatine, found the church in a backslidden state, and my young brother doing all that he could do. I spent a week with them, preached five times, lectured the Sabbath School and parents, for the school was like the church, very thinly attended, notwithstanding Bro. A. Clark was trying hard to keep the Sabbath School in existence. I on the Sabbath attended to the baptism of children, and at night the sacrament of the Lord's supper, after which the doors of the church were opened, for the reception of members or probationers. Two came forward and joined the church. The Altar or Mourners' bench was prepared, and invitation given: seven came forward for the prayers of the church, and before I left that city, one of the mourners, a contraband, found peace to her troubled soul. Since that time four others have professed, and Bro Paine writes me that the interest of the meeting was still increasing in Keokuk. We are striving to arouse from sleep. We held our first Quarterly Meeting, the 26th and 27th of October, had a pleasant time, two joined the church, and we expect to have a good time yet, a refreshing season from the Lord, and we are preparing the paschal lamb for New Year's night. When our brethren, by order of our good President, declared that we shall leave Egypt, then we will sing,

The year of Jubilee is come,
Return ye ransomed sinners home

So this last Sabbath I have just spent at Quincy. I preached on Saturday night and Sunday morning, met the Sabbath School at three o'clock, found seven teachers, thirty five children an unseen visitor present. After hearing them read and passed through their catechism, I delivered a short lecture, and the school closed. Last night Bro M T. Newsome and myself administered the sacrament of the Lord's supper. The presence of the Lord was with us, and I am led to believe that the good Lord will bless the labors of his servants in Quincy yet, although they had become alienated from the paths of duty. To-night the love-feast. I think that we will be able to send several subscribers for the Recorder, to commence with the first of the year. Receive my respects. Remember me to your lady. No more, but remain your fellow laborer in Christ,

ABRAHAM T. HALL.

For the Christian Recorder.

Bro. Weaver.—I suppose sir, you would like to hear from the old prairie State since I entered on my field of labor. I have made two rounds on the circuit, which is one hundred and fifty three miles long. My first Quarterly meeting came off on the 18th and 19th of October in Galesburg. Truly the Lord was with us there. Bro. Moses Allen, a local preacher from Pennsylvania, who has recently moved to Knoxville, Ill., assisted me. Bro Allen is acquainted with many of our eastern ministers. One joined the church on probation, two were baptized by pouring, and some 40 took sacrament. Galesburg is a very handsome little city, located in a fertile prairie, 100 miles from Quincy, 168 miles from Chicago, 45 miles from Burlington, Iowa, and 50 miles from Peoria. The Railroads cross at Galesburg, going to each one of the above named cities, which makes it a place of considerable business. The iron horses are hauling contrabands of war in there, and they are uniting with our church. Galesburg is a place that is noted for education. It has a new school Presbyterian college, a fine large female Academy, and also a Universalist College. Both white and colored go to school together.

I will now say a something about the Christian Recorder and Repository. Sir, as I promised in our Annual Conference, I am doing all I can to get subscribers for each of them.

N B—I now send you four new subscribers' names, and also enclose to you $2 00, to pay their subscription the January R Allen, Peoria, Ill., 50 cents, Mrs N A Wells, Bloomington, Ill 50 cents, Mrs Helen Yancy, Bloomington, Ill., 50 cents, Miss Nancy Cooper, Bloomington, Ill, 50 cents. Yours for universal liberty, and the extension of Messiah's kingdom over all the earth. W. J. DAVIS.

Bloomington, Ill., Nov. 4th, 1862

ANNIVERSARY ADDRESS

[Continued from No 93]

The God of the Universe is a just God; and he is pouring out his wrath upon the country in political dissension, rebellion and cruel war: to avenge for the many wrongs inflicted upon an oppressed and helpless race.

The general impression of the people who come here to-day, is to celebrate the anniversary of emancipation in the West Indies; but I beg leave to say that we have some here to commemorate another day. The act on that day is highly important to our race; and amidst the din of battle and the clash of murderous arms, the joyous shouts of emancipation and freedom go up in one continuous outburst of thanks and praises to God for unbounded goodness in loosening the bonds of slavery from many of our race in the District of Columbia. Thank God that is one step toward ameliorating the condition of many of our countrymen. The recognition of Liberia and Hayti also deserve notice by us, as being calculated to elevate us in some degree. We see with all the civil commotion, bloodshed and devastation, the executive Department of this nation has done more for us than has been done heretofore.

I would say as a people we should be as forbearing as possible upon the issue that is now agitating the public mind, and let us look well to our own interests. We cannot do this better than by constant cultivation of the mind, moral and social improvement, which are the great influences that work for our elevation among nations.

No nation on earth has ever been recognized by enlightened governments unless they have made sufficient progress in art and science to take a high position among the intellectual nations of the earth. Hence if we ever expect to be a people that nations will honor, we must make the most rapid advancement inward the hill of fame. A new energy should be instilled into the mind of every colored man in this country; a determination [illegible] will to conquer all difficulties that may arise before him.

There is one great and important feature that I wish to impress deeply upon the mind of every one present, and that is UNION. Alas! we are sadly deficient in this. We need more unanimity of action, unanimity of purpose, and unanimity of feeling, to make us a prosperous race. We are not self sacrificing. We are too selfish; too jealous of each other's prosperity to ever effect great good among ourselves. Fellow citizens, I hope that the glorious sentiments which have been uttered this day will never be effaced from the memory of those who are participating in the pleasures of this grand demonstration. Honorable freemen, I feel that the day of our future glory is dawning, that ere long the bright sun of our destiny will break forth from behind the dark cloud of oppression and adversity, and will shed its benign and effulgent rays over a down-trodden race, who will once more be crowned with the blessings of liberty, happiness, and refinement.

J. W. H. S.

DESCRIPTION OF PEKIN.

BY AN ENGLISH MISSIONARY.

An opportunity was afforded me of seeing Pekin early in the present month a little before the relaxation of the restrictions on passports. I send you this brief account of some of the things I saw.

The streets and gates are singularly regular. The Tartar city is square. There are two gates in each wall, placed opposite to each other; but the south wall has three gates instead of two, the middle one being in front of the Imperial palace. Conceive of walls from forty to sixty feet high, and thirty five feet wide, crowned with lofty towers, of several stories, over the nine gates and at the corners. Had not the Chinese Government yielded, our troops would have found no little difficulty in forcing an entrance through such bulwarks. So said a Colonel of one of our regiments to me lately, and with reason.

The Tartar city is three miles and a half across. In its centre is the Imperial city, which, within a triple wall, encloses the palace. The approaches to the top of the wall consist of gradually rising slopes suitable for cavalry to mount and close to the gates. Some of them are open, and invite the visitor to ascend them. From the wall in the vicinity of the south central gate, there is a fine view of the palace. A succession of yellow tiled roofs are seen stretching far to the north. Between them is 'Prospect Hill,' or 'Hill of Beauty,' an artificial mound made to beautify the palace.

Let the reader suppose himself to be walking from this spot to the handsome terre-plain to the eastward; he will observe the English and French flags waving, on his left, over gay, green-tiled roofs, which once protected princes of the Imperial family. He will also notice the Russian church very near them, and nearer yet to the wall he may observe a street where a crowd of Coreans are congregated. Their clothes are of white cotton, manufactured by themselves. A handkerchief is tied around their unshaven heads. They wear laced shoes. In all these points differing from the Chinese, they exhibit also a bustling, disputatious, quarrelsome disposition, which scandalizes those who watch them. But this may wear off on better acquaintance. They drive bargains with ginseng, the root whose tonic virtues are so celebrated in China, in a stout paper, and strong odor, all of them products of their own peninsula.

After turning the angle of the wall, the Astronomical Observatory comes into view. It is an open terrace adjoining the wall, and equally high. On this terrace are displayed the beautifully cast observing instruments of Verbiest. They are of bronze, and appear to have been executed with great accuracy. The large celestial globe is six feet in diameter. After a century and a half of exposure to skyey influences, they look fresh and capable of being used to advantage. Below this 'terrace for observing the stars,' there are seen lying on a slight elevation at the bottom the astronomical instruments made in the Mongolian dynasty, nearly six hundred years ago, by the Chinese mathematician, Kwo-shou king.

Near the Observatory is the Examination Hall, where thousands of students gather to acquire distinction in a struggle for literary honors. I met several candidates who had just arrived by steamer from Canton. Lower degrees are granted in the provinces; but that of Doctor in Literature is Arts given in the capital. They were Masters of only who braved the inconveniences of a sea voyage, rather than be cheated by the disordered state of the intermediate provinces in their purpose of reaching Pekin. Only 200 out of 5,000, they told me, can receive the coveted honor. Their own chance was not a bad one, because, coming from remote provinces, twelve or fifteen hundred miles distant, they would share in the advantage gained by the equitable distribution which the Emperor makes of the 200 diplomas among the provinces to which candidates belong.

LIFE IN THE ALPS.

BY MARY H. C. BOOTH.

Pontresina, Switzerland.

Here, among the white hills of God—

"Where the first word of creation Loudly through the air yet rings"—

the world is just as he made it. No despot dare desecrate his altars of freedom here; for the Alpine mountains are his holy temples—his shrines, the little hills. Pomps and vanities and idleness have nothing in common with the majesty of mountain nature. Switzerland belies herself in her cities. The real Switzer can no more be transplanted from his native Alps than can the chamois. Let him go out into the world; he wonders at first, and listens; he hears but the clink of the dollar! It comes to be music by-and-by. Back in the stillness of twilight he wanders; faintly and more faint

"The echoes of the voice of God
Are sounding in his soul."

Down in the valleys, the dollar; up on the hill-tops, God's smile! He waits in the cities and wavers. Men call him avaricious. He is but human. The chamois goes bounding the high hill-sides. The dear old chamois! They grow on the mountains together. Look, pretty creature, he comes! Back to the Alps and the chamois, never again to wander—never again to roam!

I have just returned from a six hours' promenade, or rather clambering, upon the Montenasch glacier. It lies at the foot of the Rosatch Alp, nearly opposite the Pitz Languard, by the valley of Pontresina. It is a branch of the great Bernina glacier, which extends for an uninterrupted distance of fifty miles. The range of the Bernina Alps border upon Italy. They vary in height from 8,000 to 12,000 feet.

After an energetic tramp of three hours, during which we scarcely felt the incumbrance of our bodies, owing to the exhilarating effect of the light bracing air of the glacier, we paused to rest; and, having seated ourselves upon a pile of rocks in a glacier dell, partook of the welcome luncheon with which our provident guides had provided us. It consisted of bread, cheese, wine, and Italian sausage. The sausage, which one can eat if one must, is made of the meat of donkeys.—Independent.

"How changed the scene since merry Jean Baptiste
Paddled his pirogue on La Belle Riviere,
And from its banks some lone Loyola priest
Echoed the night song of the voyageur."

LIBERALITY OF GERMAN CONVERTS.—Rev. L. S. Jacoby writes to The Missionary Advocate a report of the amounts collected in the German Conference during the year. The total sum is $7,510, with 1,753 members in full connection, and 824 on probation. He says:

"You will be astonished when you look at the sum that has been collected. Consider also that several churches have been built: Ludwigsburg, Basle, Edwege, and Bremerhaven; and the members gave nobly to this object. I thought our church would be pleased to see that our poor Germans do all they possibly can."

PROTESTANT AND CATHOLIC LITERATURE IN GERMANY.

It is a remarkable fact that while the German Confederation counts about twenty-three millions of Protestants, the literature of the country is overwhelmingly under the control of Protestants. An immense majority of the new books published from year to year are by Protestant authors. The number of periodicals edited by Protestants is at least ten times as large as that published by Catholics. The Protestants have more Universities than the Catholics, and even at the Catholic Universities the most distinguished professors are Protestants. Nearly each of the learned societies known under the name of academies of science is under the predominant influence of Protestantism.

The fact of this remarkable inferiority is generally admitted by Catholics. They are, however, not quite agreed as to its causes. Sometimes they are candid enough to count the general lethargy and indifference of priests and people as one of the causes; and we have found, even in Catholic papers of Germany, statements on this subject which we consider obvious exaggerations; as, for instance, that of the several thousand publishing houses, only a few dozens were controlled by Catholics; that the aggregate list of subscribers to all the Catholic papers of Germany did not reach the number of priests, and so forth. At other times the Catholic papers endeavor to explain their inferiority in literature by attributing to German governments gross partiality in the patronage of literature; and as a principal argument for this charge, they refer to the great discrepancy in the number between the Protestant and Catholic professors at the Universities. They demand that the governments should appoint at the state universities no more Protestant professors than the Protestants, by the numerical proportion of the Protestant population in the several states, are entitled to; and they indulge the hope that such a policy would have a telling effect on the aspects of German Literature.

DR.

This demand for a division of the professorial chairs among the Protestants and Catholics, according to their respective population, has been made with special tenacity by the Catholic party in the Prussian parliament. Ever since Prussia has received a constitutional government, they have urged the matter upon the attention of the two Chambers. The statistics collected by them are of the highest importance and interest, and deserve to be well pondered, for it can easily be shown that they prove something quite different from what the Catholic party finds in them. The following are the most important points:

Prussia has six complete universities, Berlin, Bonn, Breslau, Halle, Konigsberg, Greifswalde, and one half-university, Munster, (with only two faculties, theology and philosophy, while the complete universities have two more, law and medicine.) Of these institutions three are strictly denominational; Halle and Konigsberg admitting only Protestants, and Munster admitting only Catholic professors. The other four are open to professors of both denominations. The statutes of Greifswalde exclude likewise Catholics; but the spirit of the age has broken down the restriction, and occasionally a Roman Catholic professor has been admitted. Berlin (without reckoning the Protestant faculty of theology) has ninety-two professors, of whom three are Catholic, one is Jewish, and the rest are Protestants. The University of Breslau is founded and conducted on the principle of absolute parity between the Catholics and Protestants. Each party has its own theological faculty, and all the other chairs are open to the most accomplished candidates, whatever may be their religion. In the period from 1811 to 1861, the relation between the professors of the two denominations in the three non-theological faculties has been as follows: one hundred and two Protestants and twenty-three Catholics. The University of Bonn is, like Breslau, based on the parity principle. The relation between the two Churches was, in 1861, in the faculty of law, six Protestants and four Catholics; in the faculty of medicine, ten Protestants, two Catholics; in the faculty of philosophy, twenty-seven Protestants, ten Catholics.

These figures are, of course, most mortifying to the Catholic party, and, to console themselves, they raise the cry of parcitality. But the Government finds it easy to refute this charge. It need only refer to the fact, that the Catholic students of the kingdom are at liberty to complete their course of studies without attending any lectures of Protestant professors. They might furnish therefore as many candidates for the professorial chairs as the Protestants. But it is well known that such is not the case. There are half a dozen Protestant candidates for every chair to one Catholic. These candidates for professorial chairs at the Universities generally receive without difficulty the right of giving lectures, without receiving any salary from the state, and they are thus called Privatdocent. Now, the relation between Catholics and Protestants in this class of lecturers, on whose appointment the Government has little or no influence, is nearly the same as in the class of professors, above referred to. In selecting the professors, the Government of Prussia is guided by the literary reputation of the candidates. Now, in every science, the number of Protestant authors is large, that of Catholics small; and unless the Government of Prussia should be compelled to adopt the principle to inquire first into each candidate's denominational connection, and make his promotion dependent more on his religious opinions than on his scientific attainments, the number of Catholic professors must necessarily remain inferior to that of Protestants, until they, by their own exertions, conquer a far more prominent and honorable place in the province of Literature.—Independent.

LIGHT AND SHADE

BY MRS A. D. WOODBRIDGE

I won't not weep always, tho many a tear
Must fall on life's pathway, so lonely and drear,
But o'ers in the desert love's fountain is free,
And mercy's sweet words are manna to me.

I would not smile always, for oft on the air,
Comes the deep sigh of anguish—the voice of despair—
Yet o'er for the wretched, whose hopes are all riven,
Still, still, there is joy—there is rapture in heaven.

I would not fear always, tho' error's dark cloud
Gathers thick, the last beacon of faith to enshroud,
The bright Sun of Righteousness shines through the gloom,
And the rainbow of promise o'er arches the tomb.

But I would hope always, till o'er my rapt soul
The waves of fruition unceasing shall roll;
Then, then shall this restless, worn spirit, be free—
My Saviour! 'tis waiting a summons from thee,

Christian Watchman.

GREED OF GAIN.

"When goods increase, they are increased that eat them." Eaters come from all sides, for the rich are always subject to claims proportionate to their wealth. Luther says, "This is a wonderful and a glorious saying: 'An avaricious man is never contented: he is always scraping and collecting.' And for whom does he gather? Whatever he may fancy, it is as the proverb says—'a niggard will have his splendor.' So warns the Scripture, and such is the lesson of experience from the beginning of the world, that all hoarded up treasures, especially such as are due to injustice, find their distributers and devourers, either during the life, or after the death of the avaricious collectors, who themselves get nothing but the toil and labor. King Solomon was also a rich king. Who made use of his great possessions? His royal household. Who uses, who eats and drinks up the wealth of princes? All manner of attendants, troopers, servants, waiters, officials, and innumerable other fellows who do not in the least deserve it. Whoso, then, gathers riches, gathers devourers. Therefore why plague thyself to collect much and to increase thy treasure? However many possessions thou hast, thou canst not do more than fill thy belly and clothe thy poor body. If God gives thee riches, use thy share as thou usest thy share of water, and let the rest flow on; if thou doest it not, thy gathering will still be in vain."—Hungenberg on Ecclesiastes.

SPIRITUAL BALANCE-SHEET.

We hope parents and teachers will take pleasure in explaining the following spiritual balance-sheet to their children and pupils. It is a good subject through which to interest them in spiritual things.

"For I reckon that the sufferings of the present time are not worthy to be compared with the glory that shall be revealed in us."—Rom: viii. 18.

How frequently we dwell on present trials and sufferings, rather than on "the glory which shall be revealed in us!" We think more of the "light affliction which is but for a moment," than of the "eternal weight of glory" which is in reserve for us. Paul was a man who knew how to work experimentally on suffering and trial. Perhaps no one ever endured so great a variety of suffering as he did, and no mortal ever had such manifestations of the Divine glory. I never think of the above text but I imagine a sort of a spiritual balance-sheet laid before the tried and afflicted Christian, drawn up by one who is fully competent, under Divine influence, to give such a detail of losses and gains, and of riches in actual reversion, as will not fail to cheer amidst the trials and vicissitudes of which he is the object, if he will but calmly and prayerfully, and in faith, consider this statement, relying on the faithfulness of that God who influenced the apostle to draw it up for the consolation of the children of God.

Let us now take a glance at the balance-sheet, in the hope that we also may arrive at the same conclusion as did the Apostle Paul.

DR.

"THE SUFFERINGS OF THE PRESENT TIME."

In labors more abundant.
In stripes above measure.
In prisons more frequent.
In deaths oft.
Five times received I forty stripes, save one.
Thrice was I beaten with rods.
Once was I stoned.
Thrice I suffered shipwreck.
A night and day have I been in the deep
In journeys often.
In perils of robbers.
In perils of my own countrymen.
In perils by the heathen.
In perils in the city.
In perils in the wilderness.
In perils in the sea.
In perils among false brethren.
In weariness and painfulness.
In watchfulness often.
In hunger and thirst.
In faintings often.
In cold and nakedness.
Besides those things which are without, that which cometh upon me daily, the care of all the churches.

Total. "Light afflictions, but for a moment."

CR.

"THE GLORY TO BE REVEALED IN US."

For we know that if our earthly house of this tabernacle were dissolved, we have a building of God, a house not made with hands, eternal, in the heavens.

Eye hath not seen nor ear heard, neither hath entered into the heart of man, the things that God hath prepared for them that love him.

That he might make known the riches of his glory on the vessels of mercy, which he hath prepared unto glory.

Henceforth there is laid up for me a crown of righteousness, which the Lord, the righteous Judge, shall give me at that day; and not to me only, but unto all them also that love his appearing.

When Christ, who is our life, shall appear, then shall ye also appear with him in glory.

And so shall we ever be with the Lord.

Total. "An eternal weight of glory."

The Apostle Paul, having carefully examined the foregoing account, deliberately makes the following declaration: "I am persuaded that neither death, nor life, nor angels, nor principalities, nor powers, nor things present, nor things to come, nor height, nor depth, nor any other creature, shall be able to separate us from the love of God, which is in Christ Jesus our Lord."

MINISTERIAL CONFESSION.

Soon after the first great defection took place from the principles of the Second Reformation, and judgments were sent upon the nation and Church of Scotland, a remarkable paper entitled "The Sins of the Ministry," was prepared and published by distinguished servants of Christ, who bewailed the course of the apostacy that had entered. This was in 1651, after the admission of Malignants to places of power and trust, consequent upon the passing of the "Public Resolutions." The ministry of that day made in this remarkable paper a very full confession of their own sins, as among the principal causes of bringing down tokens of Divine judgment upon the Church and the land. We insert a number of the principal heads of Confession as suggesting matters for solemn consideration to ministers and candidates for the sacred office.

SINS BEFORE ENTERING THE MINISTRY.

"Lightness and profanity in conversation, unsuitable to that holy calling which they did intend, not thoroughly repented of. Not studying to be in Christ, before they be in the ministry; nor to have the practical knowledge and experience of the mystery of the gospel in themselves, before they preach it to others. Neglecting to fit themselves for the work of the ministry, in not improving prayer and fellowship with God, and opportunities of a lively ministry, and other means, and not mourning for these neglects. Not studying sufficiently, nor resolving to take up the cross of Christ. Negligence to entertain a right and sense of sin and misery; not wrestling against corruption, nor studying of mortification and subduedness of spirit. Rom viii 14, 15."

SINS IN ENTERING THE MINISTRY.

"Entering to the ministry without respect to a commission from Jesus Christ; by which it hath come to pass, that many have run unsent. Entering to the ministry not from the love of Christ, nor from a desire to honor God in gaining of souls, but for by-ends, for a name and for a livelihood in the world, notwithstanding a solemn declaration to the contrary at admission. Too much weighed with inclination to be called to the ministry in a place where we have carnal relations. Rom. i. 1—15."

CONFESSION IN RELATION TO MINISTERIAL DUTIES.

"Not entertaining that edge of spirit in ministerial duties, which we found at the first entry to the ministry. Great neglect of reading, and other preparation; or preparation, merely literal and bookish, making an idol of a book, which hinders communion with God, or presuming on by-gone assistance, and praying little. Trusting to gifts, parts, and pains taken for preparation, whereby God is provoked to blast good matter, well ordered and warded. Careless in employing Christ, and drawing virtue out of him, for enabling us to preach in the Spirit and in power. In praying for assistance, we pray more for assistance to the messenger, than to the message which we carry, not caring what become of the word, if we be with some measure of assistance carried on in the duty. The matter we bring forth is not seriously recommended to God by prayer, to be quickened to His people. Neglect of prayer after the word is preached, that it may receive the first and latter rain; and that the Lord would put in the hearts of His people what we speak to them in His name. Neglect to warn, in preaching, of snares and sins in public affairs by some; and too much, too frequent and unnecessary speaking by others of public business and transactions. Exceeding great neglect and unskillfulness to set forth the excellencies and usefulness of [and the necessity of an interest in] Jesus Christ, and the new covenant, which ought to be the great subject of a minister's study and preaching. Speaking of Christ more by hearsay, than from knowledge and experience, or any real impression of him upon the heart. The way of most ministers preaching too legal. Want of sobriety in preaching the gospel; not savoring any thing but what is new; so that the substantials of religion bear but little bulk. Not preaching Christ in the simplicity of the gospel, nor ourselves the people's servants, for Christ's sake. Preaching of Christ's preaching anent Christ's leaving of the land, without brokenness of heart, or stirring up of ourselves to take hold of him. Not preaching with bowels of compassion to them that are in hazard to perish. Preaching against public sins, neither in such a way, nor for such an end, as we ought,—for the gaining of souls, and drawing men out of their sins, but rather because it is of our concernment to say something of those evils. Bitterness, instead of zeal, in speaking against malignants, sectaries, and other scandalous persons; and unfaithfulness therein. Not studying to know the particular condition of the souls of the people, that we may speak to them accordingly; nor keeping a particular record thereof, though convinced of the usefulness of this. Not carefully choosing what may be most profitable and edifying; and want of wisdom, in application to the several conditions of souls, not so careful to bring home the point by application, as to find out the doctrine; nor speaking the same with that reverence which becomes His word and message. Choosing texts, wherein we have something to say, rather than suiting to the condition of souls and time, and frequent preaching of the same things, that we may not be put to the pains of new study. Such a way of reading, preaching and prayer, as puts us in those duties further from God. Too soon satisfied in the discharge of duties and holding off challenges of conscience with excuses. Indulging the body, and wasting much time idly. Too much eyeing our own credit and applause; and being taken up with it when we get it, and unsatisfied when it is wanting. Timorousness in delivering God's message; letting people die in reigning sins without warning. Studying the discharge of duties, rather to free ourselves from censure, than to approve ourselves to God. Not making all the counsel of God known to his people; and particularly not giving testimony in times of defection. Not studying to profit by our own doctrine, nor the doctrine of others. For most part, preaching as if we ourselves were not concerned in the message which we carry to the people. Not rejoicing at the conversion of sinners; but content with the outthriving of the Lord's work amongst his people, as suiting best with our minds; fearing, if they should thrive better, we should be more put to it, and less esteemed of by them. Many, in preaching and practice, bearing down the power of godliness. We preach not as before God, but as to men; as doth appear by the different pains in our preparation to speak to our ordinary hearers, and to others to whom we would approve ourselves. Not making the ministry a work in earnest, as a thing to be accounted for in every duty; which makes much laziness and unfruitfulness; doing duties ex officio, not ex conscientia officii, rather to discharge our calling than our conscience. Phil. i. 3—8."

THE REMEMBRANCE OF JESUS.

(A THOUGHT FOR AUTUMN.)

Christian disciple, remember Him who, though he was rich, yet, for your sake became poor. Place yourself in His soul's stead, if you can. Think of the pinchings of poverty, of hunger, thirst, the want of shelter and of home; think of privation, exposure, the pelting of the pitiless storm, of night coming on, and nowhere to lay your head; think of the feeling of despair, which would overwhelm the soul to find yourself in such a state—friendless, homeless, outcast! The thought is almost more than we can bear; yet Jesus Christ endured the bitter reality: and in so doing, he has taught a lesson of perpetual obligation to his disciples—to sympathize with the poor in their trials, to enter into a compassionate sense of their infirmities, to feed the hungry, and clothe the naked, to relieve the necessitous, and, by the timely offices of Christian love, to lighten the burdens of the afflicted soul. "The poor," saith Jesus, "have ye always with you;" and they are here to call forth the tender charities of the Christian heart, to exercise us in the merciful duties of our holy religion, and to awaken in us the deepest feelings of gratitude towards God, who has made us to differ, in the allotments of His providence, from so many of our fellow men. Our duty, then, is apparent. It is enforced by the teachings of Him who himself became poor, that in all the conditions of life he might be a merciful High Priest in things pertaining to God.

Christian disciple, think of Him who, for our sake, became poor; think of Him as destitute, and without a home; think of Him when the spectacle of want is before your eyes, and remember that He will recognise as done to himself what you do to them. Oh! awful doom of the unmerciful Christian who turns away from his own flesh, and bids the suffering leave his dwelling unrelieved! He did not think it was the Man of Calvary who stood there! he thought it was his neighbor, whom he had aided before, and whom old age and want again and again drove to his comfortable home. But no; it was Jesus, in the person of that poor disciple. Those repro

The Christian Recorder.

Philadelphia, November 15, 1862.

NOTICE

TO THE DISTRICTS OF PHILADELPHIA, NEW ENGLAND, OHIO, INDIANA, AND MISSOURI, OF THE A. M. E. CHURCH MINISTERS

Dear Brethren:—As we have a number of superannuated ministers on the list in said Districts, therefore it will be expected that the ministers and preachers, on their circuits and stations, will do all they can to collect the ten cent money; and we also recommend that the Class leaders be instructed to collect and set the amount on the Class book opposite each member's name, as also all the collections called, per Discipline, for the Annual Conference, and publish the same once every quarter, that it may be seen who they are that work for God and his cause. We think it is time to give credit to those of our people who do work, so that God's name may be glorified.

FALL AND WINTER GOODS.

Mrs. S. Shorter Hawkins, the Christian and accommodating lady, has improved her fall and winter stock of de laines, calicos, flannels, muslins, shawls, &c. She also keeps on hand regalia and dress trimming. Persons wishing to buy a supply for the fall and winter, on a fair and cheap scale, should go to No. 615 Lombard Street, Philadelphia. For farther particulars, we refer you to her advertisement in another column.

NIGHT SCHOOL.

A first-rate chance for getting an education. Let all who can, go to the well known and established night school in Raspberry Alley, kept by the Quaker friends, for the benefit of the colored men and women of Philadelphia, who have not had an opportunity of getting an education in their younger days. They can now get it free, by attending this school. Will not every man and woman who wants to learn to read and write, go to the Friends' Night School? They have the best of teachers, and our good friend, Mr. Allen, who is the principal, I believe, put into our hands the report for 1862, of which we will have occasion to speak again. Those who want books for said school, will come to our book store, No. 619 Pine Street. We will also freely give any information concerning said school.

OUR WESTERN BRETHREN.

We refer our readers to our Kansas letter, which will, no doubt, be found interesting to all. It will be seen that Kansas makes use of her able bodied colored citizens to defend her against the rebel invaders of the State, and that they make noble and brave soldiers. May the good Lord bless our young brother Wilkerson in his new field of labor. We publish also a very interesting letter from Rev. A. T. Hall, of Keokuk, to which we refer our readers.

HYMN BOOKS.

We are getting letters every week from brethren requesting us to send them hymn books. We will say again that we have not more than seven or eight hymn books in the store, and have not got any more to bind up. We fell one hundred short of our number. The brethren have sent in for them and stripped us of all. Hence we have neither books nor money as yet. And here let us say that not a single brother who writes for books has sent us one red cent. Now how brethren can think that we can live and pay thirty or forty dollars every week, and get bread to eat, and pay house rent, gas bills, &c., is a mystery yet to be fathomed. Brethren ought to think while we try to do good for the connexion, and send a collection now and then.

ACKNOWLEDGMENTS.

Mr. Thos. Anderson, Moorestown,	50
Mr. Michael Johnson, West Philadelphia,	1 00
Mr. Anthony Ballard, Germantown,	1 00
Rev. H. M. Turner, Baltimore,	5 00
Miss Lavinia Gales, Boston,	1 00

Northern Union, No. 16, Daughters of Temperance, intend celebrating their fourteenth anniversary on Thursday evening, Nov. 20th, at Union Church, Coates Street below Fifth. The Hope Grand Union, and all subordinate Unions working under Hope Grand Union, are invited to attend. Addresses will be delivered by the pastor in charge, Rev. Anthony L. Stanford, and Rev. Elisha Weaver.

THE FREEDMEN'S ASSOCIATION.

MR. EDITOR:—We, the Committee of the Freedmen's Association, the members and well wishers of the A. M. E. Union Church, on Coates Street, below Fifth Street, have purchased, collected, and made up clothing for men, women, and children to the amount of $757, and have sent them to Washington to the Union Relief Association of Union Bethel Church, to be distributed among the so-called contrabands.

Mr. EDWARD YOUNG, Secretary,
Rev. HENRY DAVIS, Chairman.

LECTURE AT THE INSTITUTE FOR COLORED YOUTH.

Last Thursday night Prof. J. Collins lectured to the school and others upon the subject of Cuba. He commenced a little before we arrived. He gave a sketch of the forms and habits of that people; of there being only one religion—the Roman Catholic; of the cathedral, where the remains of Christopher Columbus were deposited.

BISHOP NAZREY.

A mistake occurred in our 95th number in regard to Bishop Nazrey's whereabouts. Instead of remaining in Bordentown up to the 17th inst., he will remain in Philadelphia until the 17th inst., and will then leave for the Bridgeton Circuit under Rev. J. Woodlin.

HOLINESS

Holiness will constrain us to lead an exemplary life before God and man. For if we hate sin our conduct will show it by forsaking sin, and turning to the Lord. If we love God for his holiness, we will mingle with delight in his service. If we love thy law for its purity, we will rejoice in rendering obedience to its commands.

WILMINGTON AND RETURN

This city has, so far as we know, been loyal and loyal to the Government, much more so than many other portions of the State. Our route to the city was down the Delaware River upon the Wilmington packet, which plies between Philadelphia and Wilmington. Our good brother Sluby, who is the elder in charge of our church in that city, extended to us an invitation to come down and spend the Sabbath with him and his flock, and it would cost us nothing. We enjoyed our trip very much upon the floating waves in the steamer or packet. Last Sabbath it snowed pretty much all day long, and you may imagine that Wilmington had her share of slush and mud. We attended church three times that day, and spoke twice for them, morning and evening, and Rev. Brother Sluby preached in the afternoon. There was not a very large turnout at either of the services, but better in the evening than during the day. There are a great many of our people in Wilmington, and some as intelligent minds as we find any where, according to their opportunity for improvement. There is our friend and brother Cooper, who teaches every day school for the people, a man of no ordinary ability, and who by the way is a steward in our church. Brother Hamilton, also, is another good brother of much information. He, too, is one of Bro. Sluby's stewards. There is one thing that attracted our attention, and it would be well for the church if they would drop the habit, and that is, slumbering or nodding, which some would call sleeping. Bro. Sluby is possessed of studious habits, and is laboring hard for the prize essay on the renowned Luther, and all we have to say to the Baltimore brethren is, that if any of them get the prize it will be by the skin of their teeth. We laid the claims of the Recorder before the friends and members of the church at Wilmington; and though we did not do much, we are thankful for those we did get. Many expressed a desire, but had not the means. They promised to be on hand by the first of the year, with a club of fifteen cash subscribers.

We are pleased to acknowledge the following, up to the 1st of January, 1863:—

Frisby J. Cooper,	50
Daniel P. Hamilton,	$1 25
Rev. Peter S. Williams,	35
Ann E. White,	35

We also disposed of some papers. We are glad to find that the Recorder is almost universally beloved by pretty much all classes who chance to read it. And as Bishop Nazrey wisely said, all that is needed upon the part of our brethren is to make a little stronger effort, and the work will go on.

We were very sorry on our return from Wilmington to find a bundle of Recorders returned from a good brother who has got considerably in our debt, and caused us to pay double postage for the connexion. If that good brother did not wish to take them any longer, why did he not keep the papers, and tell us by way of writing that he could not take them any longer? I am sure it would have shown the part of a financier in behalf of the church. By not doing so he robs himself. We hope to receive a letter from that good brother giving his reasons for pursuing such a course, and containing twelve or fifteen dollars, and all will be right.

For the Christian Recorder.

LETTER FROM FRANKFORD

The Jubilee of the A. M. E. Church took place on the 14th day of October, under the pastoral charge of the Rev. Richard Robinson. At which time the committee of arrangements had a tent located in an open lot near Brown St., and had provided a very large dinner, and all enjoyed themselves with refreshments in abundance. In the midst of our feasting, the Revs. Davis and Fuller gave very eloquent discourses on the occasion. At 7 o'clock in the evening, the whole assembly repaired to the church, and the Rev. William Moore, of Trenton, delivered a very elaborate address, followed by the Rev. William Fuller; and, after enjoying themselves about an hour and a half in said church, they returned back to the tent with songs of praise to the living God for bringing the church out of the debt of $1400, which she has been laboring under for many years. Such was the joy manifested by the young as was never expressed on any other occasion, and we trust that the labors thereof will never be forgotten in the annals of time. Our prayer to God is, that, through the labors of the ministry, many who are sitting in the region and shadow of death may hearken to the voice of God and be saved.

Frankford, Oct. 14th, 1862

THE SABBATH SCHOOL CONVENTION.

The Sabbath School Convention met on Wednesday last, and had a fair representation. Rev. Bishop Nazrey was chosen Chairman, and Revs. Roberson and Campbell were chosen Vice-Presidents. The Revs. Woodlin and Schureman were appointed Secretaries. The Convention appointed a Committee to bring business before the Convention for action. We had, upon the whole, a very pleasant time. The Convention adopted a union organization for the Philadelphia District, and appointed a Committee to draft by-laws and a constitution for the government of said society. Convention held a day and a half, and then adjourned to meet at the call of the President of the meeting. Although the Convention did not come up quite to our views, yet it is an effort to diffuse more intelligently religious principles in the minds of our young and rising generation. The Convention did one thing that every District under the jurisdiction of the A. M. E. Church should do; that is, they recommended that all books wanted for the Sabbath School shall be bought from the Book Concern of the A. M. E. Church. Let all of our people do the same, and send us the money for what they want.

A VERY SAD ACCIDENT

As our Rev. and esteemed aged father Roberson was on his way from the Sabbath School Convention to his home in Frankford, Pa., being compelled to stand on the front platform of the cars, when near the Episcopal Hospital, there was a cart on the track, and as it was turning from the track, it is said one of the wheels sprang off and struck the Rev. father, breaking his arm near the shoulder, and knocking him speechless. As the City Railway Companies have refused to admit colored people inside the cars, they ought, therefore, be made to pay for it. A man of his age and worth—a man whose moral and religious status is not to be equalled of his age—a man of God to be treated so! God save the people!

For the Christian Recorder.

O, THOU ART GONE!

Boston, Nov. [illegible], 1862.

MR. EDITOR:—Please give this a place in your noble paper. I notice in your last column a very interesting letter from the Rev. H. M. Turner, concerning the contrabands in Washington. We are also glad to hear from them, and to learn the condition of them, as we, the colored citizens of Boston, are alive and trying to do for them. Also, one thing particularly, I noticed in his answer to Rev. J. P. Campbell, that a hospital was much needed for the contrabands. His question was, Can we have it? I say yes, we can, for old Massachusetts is ever ready to do her share with the rest of her sister States. And I believe that every little child would be willing to save one cent per week, as well as the gentlemen [illegible] for that great and noble cause.

[illegible]
A [illegible]
O'er thy dear form I've breathed a last farewell!
My dear, dear brother, how shall language tell

[illegible]
Securely destined to the silent tomb;
[illegible]
Of pleasure past, of joys which once have been,

But all are past, and I myself must wail,
A dreary mourner, and sad desolate;
But hush, my wayward heart be still,
And humbly bend to meet thy Father's will.

He called you, brother, from this world of care,
The holy joys of Paradise to share:
Thy happy soul has found a glad release,
And breathest now the air of love and peace.

And shall I mourn, when thou, so truly blest,
Hast found a home of pure and lasting rest!
O, no; but upwards will I fix my trust,
And then, O then, when this poor drooping dust

Shall sleep in death, most gladly will I rise
[illegible]
In yonder heavens, washed pure from every stain,
O brother, dear brother, we soon shall meet again!

In memory of Mr. ANOS N GALE, who died in the city of Boston, on the 7th day of July, 1862. Written by his much beloved sister, LAVINIA.

MY PLAYMATES.

BY GEORGE WILBER SE.

COME, see my cunning playmates,—
[illegible]
We have such merry frolics,
[illegible]
My Newfoundland's my pony;
I ride upon his back,
Or, harnessed to my carriage,
I drive him on the track.

With sober coat, and shaggy,
Of such majestic size,
With more as truly noble,
And such expressive eyes,
With gait so quiet and stately,
I think him quite a steed;
The kingly nature of him
He graces well indeed.

And here's my curly spaniel,
Full many a mile we've run,
For [illegible]
He's just the dog for fun.
My things he often catches,
And bounds away so fleet,
Then back he circles with them,
And lays them at my feet.

He chases too, my kitty,
And Malta likes the race;
But if he barks too loudly,
[illegible]
Yet strikes him very softly,
And he politely bows,
As if to ask her pardon
For all his harsh "wow, wows."

And you must see my cosset,
A snowy lamb is he;
And all his antic frskings
Are innocent and free.
And then I've doves so gentle
They light upon my head,
Or sit upon my shoulder,
And from my hand eat bread.

My playmate group is pleasant,
And we have pastimes rare;
We're all good friends together,
And troubled by no care.
We have no noisy quarrels,
Our family agree;
And, sporting in good nature,
We're happy, gay, and free.

Home Monthly.

INCIDENTS OF THE BATTLE FIELD.

Within a few feet of each other, lay two young men wounded by cannon balls, and near to death. Mr. H. approached one of them, and told him he had but a little time to live. He replied that he was a Christian, and enlisted prepared to die at any moment. He asked for a Bible, as he had left his in the knapsack thrown away on the battle-field—the treasure his mother gave him. Another copy was brought, a chapter read, prayer offered, and he died in the triumphs of gospel hope.

When the other dying young soldier was addressed on the subject of personal salvation, he replied with an oath that he didn't care whether he died or not, and after a kind entreaty to prepare to meet God, he answered, in a musing mood, "No, sir; after having lived such a life,—for I have never prayed,—I will not let you pray with me now. I will face the music; I will die as I am." Soon he was gone, a monument of that "hardness of heart and blindness of mind" which attends a fatal departure from God.

PENNSYLVANIA ANNUAL MEETING.

The Thirty-sixth Annual Meeting of the Pennsylvania Colonization Society was held on Monday evening, October 13, 1862, at the Rooms of the Society, No 609 Walnut Street, Philadelphia. An unusually large number of our prominent and influential citizens were present. The Rev. W. W. Spear, D. D., was called upon to preside, and Robert B. Davidson, Esq., was chosen Secretary.

After the reading and approval of the Minutes, and the transaction of other business, the Annual Statement of the Board of Managers for the year ending September 30, was submitted and approved. The following extracts will interest our readers.

RECAPTURED AFRICANS.

Advices of an encouraging character continue to proceed from the Liberian Republic. Prosperity attends all interests. Peace has prevailed. Agriculture is meeting with greatly increased attention. It is peculiarly gratifying to be assured that the beneficence and humanity extended to the four thousand five hundred native Africans taken by our government cruisers from slavers, and landed in that thriving State between August 20th, 1860, and May 20th, 1861, [illegible] less than nine months—have been worthily bestowed, and that they are duly advancing in knowledge, virtue and the [illegible] of Christian life. We trust that no change will be made in the disposition of recaptured Africans, but that the policy inaugurated by President Monroe will be faithfully adhered to—that of returning all such to their native Continent.

THE SLAVE TRADE.

It is believed that the shipments of slaves from the western regions of Africa have been much reduced of late—owing mostly to the operation of the new treaty between the Governments of the United States and Great Britain, which authorizes the detention and search of suspected craft, in certain localities, by the men of war of each nation. Before many months, we trust, the exigencies of affairs at home will allow our authorities to enlarge the squadron in that quarter, and substitute steamers for sailing vessels. It may not be too much to express the further hope that ere long the government of Great Britain may unite with our own in another measure to put an end to this execrable traffic, and that is to demand that the only government that now admits of its being carried on within its limits shall cease to encourage or allow it. Settlements of civilized colored men, scattered along the African seaboard, as the most effectual barriers in the prosecution of this high crime against humanity. Liberia has swept this terrible evil from nigh seven hundred miles of the coast—her own territory—and in this regard is worthy of the best wishes, active sympathy and liberal support of Christendom.

EXPLORATIONS OF LIBERIA.

Considering the employment of our Navy in the promotion of valuable public interests or enlarging the boundaries of science, what more noble and important mission could be prosecuted by our Government, than an exploration of the interior of western Africa—that large tract of country lying east of the Republic of Liberia. The preliminary investigations have been made

The channels of commerce which might thus be opened would doubtless prove an ample compensation for [illegible] has [illegible] employment for her ships, work for her people, and a market for her manufactures. Her appropriation for the exportation of the Niger during the [illegible], was $12,000 or $15,000. Another efforts have met and are meeting with marked success. Her importations from Western Africa for the first six months of the last and present year, as officially published, are as follows—in American currency:—

	1861.	1862.
From British possessions on West Coast of Africa,	$350,030	$295,985
From other parts of the West Coast of Africa,	2094,610	3242,265
Total,	$2,149,740	$3,647,820

This return exhibits also a surprising growth of the products of this region of West Africa, and their absorption by that sagacious people. The trade is admitted to be very [illegible]

RECOGNISED BY THE UNITED STATES.

A bill having this object in view was reported by the Senate Committee on Foreign Relations, and passed in that body by a vote of thirty-two yeas to seven nays. It subsequently met with the approbation of the House of Representatives by a vote of eighty-six yeas to thirty-seven nays; and received the signature of the President, June 5th, 1862. A diplomatic representative, Abraham Hanson, Esq., has proceeded to Monrovia, via England. The Government of the United States, therefore, ranks as the twelfth power of the world that has acknowledged Liberian independence, and joined in the elevation of the American colored race to the dignity of nationality. We also take pleasure in being able to state that a treaty, just and liberal in its nature, is now in course of negotiation between the two—mother and daughter—Republics.

THEIR PERMANENT HOME.

Never has the welfare of the colored population in our midst attracted so universal and profound interest among all patriots, philanthropists, and Christians, as at this day. It is conceded that here they cannot attain perfect social equality and the highest happiness, and that independence, culture, and position, can be achieved only by removal. Whither, then, will they go? "To Africa. Emigration to any part of this continent, or its isles, can at the most, be but a temporary expedient. The causes that impel their departure from the United States will produce the same results wherever the white man rules. The laws of climate, soil, races, and civilization, do not essentially change. Colonization in Central America can only be a brief halt in the march to their ancestral land. To this issue the increasing attractions of Africa are evidently pointing. Civilization and religion are beautifying her with graces that cannot fail to enkindle desire in her dispersed children. Agriculture is adorning her hills and valleys. Education is moulding the rude natives into civilized people. Art is lending her charms to the region that has for centuries been a grief to humanity. Every year augments the attractiveness of Africa, and the time is rapidly approaching, when her 'sons from far' and 'her daughters from the ends of the earth' will flock to her in admiration and joy."

The Society proceeded to an election, which resulted as follows, when an adjournment took place:

President.—JOHN P. CROZER.
Recording Secretary.—ROBERT B. DAVIDSON.
Treasurer.—WILLIAM COPPINGER.

THANKSGIVING DAY IN PENNSYLVANIA

The Governor has issued the following proclamation:

In the name and by the authority of the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania, Andrew G. Curtin, Governor of the said Commonwealth.

A PROCLAMATION.

Whereas, It is a good thing to render thanks unto God for all his mercy and loving-kindness; therefore

I, Andrew G. Curtin, Governor of the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania, do recommend that Thursday, the 27th day of November next, be set apart by the people of the Commonwealth as a day of solemn Prayer and Thanksgiving to the Almighty, giving him humble thanks that he has been graciously pleased to protect our free institutions and Government, and to keep us from sickness and pestilence, and to cause the earth to bring forth her increase, so that our garners are choked with the harvest; and to look so favorably on the toil of his children, that industry has thriven among us and labor has its reward; and also that he has delivered us from the hands of our enemies, and filled our officers and men in the field with a loyal and intrepid spirit, and given them victory; and that he has poured out upon us (albeit unworthy) other great and manifold blessings.

Beseeching him to help and govern us in his steadfast fear and love; and to put into our minds good desires, so that by his continual help we may have a right judgment in all things; and especially praying him to give to Christian Churches grace to hate the thing which is evil and to utter the teachings of truth and righteousness, declaring openly the whole counsel of God; and most heartily entreating him to bestow upon our civil rulers wisdom and earnestness in council, and upon our military leaders zeal and vigor in action, that the fires of rebellion may be quenched; that we, being armed with his defence, may be preserved from all perils, and that hereafter our people, living in peace and quietness, may from generation to generation, reap the abundant fruits of his mercy, and with joy and thankfulness praise and magnify his holy name.

Given under my hand and the great seal of the State, at Harrisburg, this twentieth day of October, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and sixty-two, and of the Commonwealth the eighty-seventh.

ANDREW G. CURTIN.

By the Governor. ELI SLIFER,
Secretary of the Commonwealth.

SABBATH SCENES IN HYDE PARK.

The friends of the Sabbath in England have vainly resisted the incoming of continental Sabbath usages. Between the upper mill stone of a selfish aristocracy, with Lord Stanley as its leader, and the nether mill-stone of the pauperised classes, marshalled by the "Sunday league," the Sabbath has been ground to powder in the metropolis. After a long contest, Sydenham Palace was opened to its thousands of stockholders on Sabbath, and Sabbath bands were authorized by Government in Hyde Park. The remonstrances of the best friends of public morals, in view of this dangerous innovation, were unheeded, and the experiment has been carried out of gathering countless thousands of people in the splendid pleasure grounds of London, to enjoy their Sabbath pastime.

The latest British journals bring us quite instructive illustrations of the results of this experiment. The violators of the Fourth Commandment found an easy transition to the violation of the Sixth. During two or three successive Sabbaths, the bands of music gave way to bands of rioters. A graphic account is given of the second Sabbath's riot, witnessed or participated in by about 200,000 people, with a free use of fists, clubs and dirks, and resulting in [illegible] or life. The immediate subject of the quarrel was the appointment of "Irish roughs" [illegible] musicians in the interest of Garibaldi. The fight raged for hours, and until darkness and the appearance of large bodies of police compelled a truce—until another Sabbath.

Occurrences like these may serve to moderate the Pharisaism that attributes to Republican America, in a time of war, the lawlessness which manifests itself in monarchical England in a time of peace. Perhaps they may be overruled for the recovery of [illegible] from the scandalous drift toward its desecration in the metropolis of a Sabbath-keeping kingdom.

We [illegible] our very satisfaction in the fact that the attempts made three or four years ago, to pervert our noble Central Park into a Sabbath pleasure ground, with bands and boats, and refreshment rooms for Sabbath-breakers, were also [illegible] Saturday is the gala day here, as it should be, and as we trust it will be, for all time—thanks to a majority of the Commissioners, and the timely action of our faithful Sabbath Committee. [illegible] the adoption of the European holiday Sabbath; it would bring with it the monster riots of Hyde Park, or the conscienceless sports of the Bois de Boulogne, with the mysterious sphynx of the Tuileries in the back ground.

New York Observer.

HOW TO WRITE FOR A NEWSPAPER.—As a general rule short [illegible] are the best liked. A gentleman in a bank once told us when we asked him to subscribe for a certain quarterly review; Read a Review! why I never read anything longer than a telegraphic dispatch. But I will take it and send it to brother, who is a minister in the country. The public like a short article when it is a condensation.

This introduces a second idea. An article to be printed should absolutely have something in it. If professed argument, it should be conclusive; if pathetic, it should moisten the eye; if an anecdote, it should have a sharp point; if philosophy, it should go to the primitive; if practical, it should fly like an arrow to its work; if spiritual, it should awe the soul that reads it.

MRS. SENATOR HARLAN, of Iowa, who has been an angel of mercy among the sick and wounded in our army, writes from Culpeper, Va., after the recent bloody Cedar Mountain fight, as follows:

It was truly affecting to see how grateful they all were for the smallest attention. One of these, a Colonel of a Pennsylvania regiment, was partially paralyzed. After he had eaten the nourishment we had prepared for him, he said to Mrs. Fales and me, speaking with the greatest difficulty, "I will be the friend of your husband as long as I live; and you, Captain," turning to Captain Hodge, "may God bless you; I will never forget you."

As we were bending over another, a private who had been mortally wounded in the head, trying to stop the flow of blood from the wound, he looked up at us and said in a plaintive voice, "How good it looks to see women; it makes me think of my mother and home." He inquired, "What are your names?" When we told him he remarked, "I am done with this, but I will remember you in another world." He was bleeding to death, and expired in fifteen minutes afterwards.

Although it seems to do the sick men good to see ladies—and doubtless women can do many things for the sick better than men can; yet I am sorry to say, many who are admitted to the hospitals are perfectly worthless. They have not sense enough to take care of themselves at home, much less to take care of the sick in the army. They require more waiting on ten times over than all they do is worth. They try the patience of the officers beyond measure, and I am not surprised that they should feel annoyed often on that account, to see women coming within the lines. We had a sample of them yesterday morning. An officer came to our door at an early hour with a couple of ladies, and requested us to provide for them, as they had been riding in the cars for some hours, without any thing to eat. We had but one plate, one knife, one tin cup left, having given every thing else to the hospitals. We, however, prepared food and fed them. We then asked the ladies if they had brought hospital goods to distribute. They said, "No." We inquired if they had come as nurses. "No," was the answer. Well, we continued, what is the object of your visit? They replied, "To look after the sick and superintend." I need hardly add that such women are worse than useless. In the place of helping others the men are worn out waiting on them. A large number of the women, officers' wives, surgeons' wives, sanitary women, and so called nurses, whom I have seen within the lines, I am compelled to believe, go to be waited on and not to help the suffering. We want workers; women who have sense enough to take care of themselves, and the strength and nobleness of heart to wait on the sick.

GEORGIA AGAINST THE CONSCRIPT LAW

We stated two or three days ago that the Elbert County, (Georgia) Supreme Court had decided the Confederate Conscript Law to be unconstitutional. We have since received a fuller account of the proceedings in the case.

The matter having been brought before the Court on a writ of habeas corpus, the following point, among others, was presented:

"The conscript act is unconstitutional; and therefore the act itself, and all regulations and orders based upon it, are likewise void."

The argument of the Court upon the points raised is of great length. We append the concluding paragraphs of the decision:

"In the preamble of our Confederate Constitution care is taken to assert and maintain that the States are sovereign and independent. In what sense can this be said of Georgia, if every man of her militia can be taken from under the control of her constitutional Commander-in-chief without his consent? Must he abdicate his most important duties by permitting himself to be disarmed of his forces, and all this, too, in violation of his oath of office, in case he should think them necessary for the protection of the State?

"If Congress can pass a conscript act with certain exemptions, they can pass it without exemptions. No one will deny this. If, therefore, they have the power to prescribe what shall—(here are a few words in our copy of the decision that cannot be made out)—may take the Governor, General Assembly, and the whole Judiciary, and thus annihilate the State Government.

"The palpable infraction of the Confederate compact is sometimes—issued, principally—defended on the plea of necessity. What dangerous fallacy! We have expended one hundred thousand lives and untold millions of money to maintain the Constitution and the independence of the States, and shall we now violate it, and destroy the State Government? As reasonably might we commit suicide to avoid personal danger.

"Nor is this plea of necessity true in fact. The conscript law can only furnish men. We have, and had before, State laws to reach every man in the State, between eighteen and forty-five, and to say the conscript law was necessary to procure men is to maintain the arithmetical absurdity that there is more men in the country between eighteen and thirty-five than between eighteen and forty-five.

"Whereupon, and for these reasons, it is ordered and adjudged by the Court that the act of the Confederate Congress, known as the Conscript Law, and entitled 'An act to further provide for the public defence,' is void; and the plaintiff, James M. Lyon[illegible] is discharged from the custody and control of SIDNEY P. BAKER, and from the custody and control of the Sheriff of this Court, and he set at liberty to go wherever he pleases."

GRANARIES OF THE WEST

The following extract is from Mr. Trollope's recent travels in the United States:

I was at Chicago and at Buffalo in October, 1861. I went down to the granaries and climbed up into the elevators. I saw the wheat running in rivers from one vessel to another, and from the railroad vans up into the huge lofts on the top stories of the warehouses. [illegible] run up hill as easily as they do down. I saw the corn measured by the forty bushel measure with as much ease as we measure an ounce of cheese, and with greater rapidity. I ascertained that the work went on, week day and Sabbath, day and night incessantly; rivers of wheat and rivers of maize ever running. I saw men bathed in corn as they distributed it in its flow. I saw bins by the score laden with wheat, in each of which bins there was a space for a comfortable residence. I breathed the flour, and drank the flour, and felt myself to be enveloped in a world of bread-stuff. And then I believed, understood, and brought it home to myself as a fact, that here in the corn lands of Michigan, and amid the bluffs of Wisconsin, and in the [illegible] plains of Minnesota, and the prairies of Illinois, God had prepared the food for the increasing millions of the Eastern world, as also for the coming millions of the Western. I began then to know what it was for a country to overflow with milk and honey, to burst with its fruits, and be smothered by its own riches. From St. Paul down the Mississippi by the shores of Wisconsin and Iowa—by the ports on Lake Pepin—by La Crosse, from which one railway runs eastward—by Prairie du Chien, the terminus of a second—by Dunleith, Fulton, and Rock Island, from whence three other lines run eastward, all through that wonderful state of Illinois—the farmer's glory—along the ports of the great lakes, through Michigan, Illinois, Ohio, and further Pennsylvania, up to Buffalo, the great gate of the Western Ceres, the loud cry was this: "How shall we rid ourselves of our corn and wheat?" The result has been the passage of 60,000,000 bushels of breadstuffs through the gate in one year! Let those who are susceptible of statistics ponder that. For them who are not I can only give this advice: Let them go to Buffalo next October and look for themselves.

ENGLISH TAXATION.

London, Sept. 13, 1862.

Just at this time, when your new system of taxation is going into operation, and especially when the English Press is making such a fuss about that system, it may interest you to know something of the condition of the English people in this respect. Groaning, as they do, beneath the excessive burden which they have to bear, their sneers at us seem rather out of place, especially as even the extraordinary demands temporarily made upon American citizens do not yet begin to rival those perpetually fastened upon themselves, and from which there is no possibility of future escape.

Strolling not long since, through some of the most beautiful portions of Kent, I picked up, accidentally one of the forms used by the official Assessors, a copy of which is left with every resident, who is compelled to fill up the blanks and return it to that officer, under a penalty, in case of failure, of no less than two hundred and fifty dollars. From this paper I glean the following particulars:—

For every person employed in the following capacities, a tax of one guinea (say five dollars) is [illegible] viz:—Master of Her Majesty's Horse, Steward, Master of the horse, Groom of the Chamber, Valet de Caambre, Butler, Under Butler, Clerk of the kitchen, Confectioner, Cook, House Porter, Footman, Running Footman, Coachman, Groom, Postilion, Stable Boy, or Helper in Stables, Gardener, Park-keeper, Game-keeper, Huntsman, Whipper-in, or by whatever name or names male servants really acting in any of the said capacities shall be called, or whether such male servants shall have been retained or employed in one or more of the said capacities. Also every such servant hired with any carriage or horses for one year or any longer period. Also, on all male persons employed in any of the above capacities, and not being servants to their employers, if such employers are chargeable for a servant or carriage, or for more than one horse. Also, on all waiters or servants employed to wait on guests, or in any of the above capacities in Taverns, Coffee-houses, Inns, Ale-houses, or any other house licensed to sell wine, &c., by retail, and in Hotels or Lodging houses, although not licensed, except occasional waiters. Also, on all male persons retained for Husbandry, Manufacture, or Trade, and employed as Coachman, Postilion, Groom, or helper in the stables, if the master of such person shall be chargeable for any carriage or for two or more horses kept for the purpose of riding or drawing carriages.

On all servants under eighteen years of age, employed in any of the above capacities, and on Under Gardeners and Under Game-keepers, a tax of two dollars and a half a head is laid.

On four wheel carriages, if drawn by two or more horses or mules, the tax is about seventeen dollars; if drawn by one horse or mule only, ten dollars; if their wheels are less than thirty inches in diameter, and they are drawn by two or more ponies or mules, neither of which exceeds thirteen hands in height, the tax is about eight dollars; and if drawn by only one such pony or mule, it is five dollars.

Two-wheel carriages, drawn by two or more animals, exceeding thirteen hands in height, pay ten dollars each; if by one such animal, three dollars and a half; if drawn by a pony or mule, under thirteen hands, the tax is two dollars and a half.

In the above cases the tax is the same, whether the party owns or hires the carriage by the year.

On carriages used by common carriers, if not otherwise taxed under some license, the duty, if with four wheels, is about eleven dollars; if with only two wheels, about six dollars.

On all horses or mules exceeding thirteen hands in height, the tax is five dollars, except in the cases of farmers, bailiffs, shepherds or herdsmen, rectors, vicars, curates, Roman Catholic priests who have taken the oath, Dissenting ministers and teachers not following any regular occupation, except that of schoolmaster, physicians, surgeons and apothecaries, who may each keep a single animal on payment of two dollars and a half. Other horses, ponies, mules, and the beasts used by common carriers also pay two dollars and a half.

Dogs, of any description, are taxed about three dollars each, but no man is compelled to pay for more than sixty-six; so that a pack of hounds, of that or a larger number, pays about two hundred dollars per annum.

Every individual, master or servant, who wears hair powder, pays an annual duty of about five dollars and a half.

Any person having plate, or a seal-ring, or any article bearing a crest, or other armorial device, or using paper for letters or envelopes impressed with a crest, is liable to a duty of a little more than three dollars; and if he is so unfortunate as to be the owner of a first-class four-wheel carriage, this duty is increased to about twelve dollars and a half.

I think this hair-powder and stamped-envelope tax may be set off against our tax on crinoline, and some other articles.

But this is only a single paper that is periodically thrust before every citizen of England, and does not embrace a half or a quarter of the demands made by the Government upon the people. When you come to add to this the poor rates, water rates, and other rates almost nameless and numberless, and wind up with an income tax of more than ten per cent, I think you will be ready to conclude that the English people submit to a burden infinitely greater than has yet been imposed in the United States. When you find the Government collectors taking from every individual about fifty per cent. of his ordinary income, (a state of things which I trust will never be known here,) you will begin to realize something of the present [illegible] of the system of taxation in this blessed country.

OUR CONSCRIPTS AS COMPARED WITH THOSE OF EUROPE.

Recent events have familiarised the people with the drafting laws of the United States. It may be a matter of interest to compare them with those of foreign Governments.

The regiments of England are generally filled by recruiting, but if those means fail, recourse is had to the ballot, and the requisite number is drawn from men between 17 and 25 years of age. The time of service is five years, and to peace the man can be called out to exercise for from three to fifty-six days. In time of war, the militia is placed on the same footing as the regular army.

The general conscription law of France embraces all between twenty and twenty-seven years of age. Substitutes can be offered. The term of service is four or five years, and a fourth part of the recruits are held as a reserve.

In Russia, no substitute can be tendered, but a dispensation can be purchased for a thousand rubles. Estate holders and the higher classes enjoy exemption. Under the banners all serfs become free. Russia presents almost the appearance of a vast camp. Her villages embrace the following classes:

1st. The master colonist—the pater familias.
2d. The assistant, who assists in cultivating the land.
3d. The agricultural soldier, who aids him when off duty.
4th. The reserve man, who is substituted for the soldier in case of need.
5th. The cantonists, from thirteen to fifteen.

The laws of Turkey are, in many respects, similar to those of France. The ballot brings 25,000 men under the banners, each conscript order being made for a special district.

Sardinia requires universal service, from the twentieth year, the men being in two classes—the ordinanza, for eight years uninterruptedly, and the provinziali, for six years. Substitutes are allowed.

Austria, with an army of 450,000 men, of whom 50,000 are cavalry, has but little need of severe drafting regulations. Her Cossacks, when 13,000 conscripts were demanded, in 1858, marched 120,000 on Vienna. Men are liable from twenty to fifty years of age, to serve in the field, and to sixty years, in domestic service.

The son of a count performs military duty alongside of a tailor's apprentice, in the monarchy of Prussia. Such is the effect of the Landwehr system. The first levy is organized for immediate service, and is drawn from men between twenty-six and thirty-two years of age. The second levy includes those between thirty-two and thirty-nine years.

The States of the German Confederation have distinct laws. Saxony requires six years' service, with the privilege of substitution. Nassau, Mecklenburg Schwerin and Oldenburg are the same. The laws of Wirtemberg render men under 32 years liable to serve. Electoral Hesse allows substitutes, and requires citizens from 20 to 30 to take up arms. Brunswick requires seven years' service, with two years in the reserve.

The conscripts in Sweden are chosen from all those capable of bearing arms between 20 and 25 years of age. The classes are five in number.

The ballot in Denmark selects those who must serve eight years in the army, including two years in the reserve. The first levy includes those under 38 years of age, and the second, those under 45 years.

Universal conscription is the law of Belgium. The ballot is used and substitutes are allowed. The term of service is eight years, of which about one-half is spent on furlough.

The War Reserve of the Dutch is in three levies, including all those between 25 and 35 years of age who are capable of bearing arms.

OPERATIONS OF THE CHURCH OF ROME AMONG THE GREEKS.—Says a Paris letter to a contemporary:—

"The Holy Father takes the liveliest and kindest interest in Eastern affairs. He appears fully convinced that his Pontificate is destined to witness important events in the East, in which he hopes to find consolation for the sorrows he experiences elsewhere. 100,000 francs has been collected by the members of the Oriental schools, and placed at the disposal of the Sovereign Pontiff, who has desired that the greater [illegible] assigned to the Greeks, who have [illegible] less than others. They have received fifty thousand francs, the [illegible] been divided between the Bulgarian [illegible] menians. Since the abjuration [illegible] tion, nearly two thousand Greeks [illegible] ple have asked admission into the [illegible] Church. Arrangements for them to worship [illegible] sequently much needed. According to [illegible] foreign Pontiff, the fifty thousand francs [illegible] have been allotted to them will [illegible] purchase of a site and the commencement of the building of a church. The Holy Father also intends founding, in Constantinople, a seminary of the Greek Rite, for the education of Greeks. A Bulgarian seminary will be established at Adrianople; it has been entrusted to the Polish Fathers of The Resurrection. The Pere Charles Kaczmarunster, with two other Fathers, have commenced their labours. The establishment of a Bulgarian hierarchy is contemplated. M. Arabajelemi and the Pere Raphael will shortly be consecrated Bishops, and soon afterwards another Bulgarian priest will be consecrated, as well as a Pol

Domestic Items.

Stamped Envelopes.—Postage stamped envelopes [illegible] pounds, and had that, leaving their dead and wounded on the field." When I tell you to reciprocate your [illegible] ments, and be ready at the morning's alarm to follow [illegible] pleasure of the [illegible] see worthy colleagues, and of the country and [illegible] it. I have not received the re- [illegible] ports of the various [illegible] I have now to tell [illegible] the magnificent [illegible] the battle and the [illegible] Rebels in the [illegible] Mc- [illegible] Dana, Kelly, Meagher, Burns and a host [illegible] others, to mention. They numbered, according to their own authority, nearly forty thousand men — almost double your own numbers. You fought them into the position we desired on the third, punishing them terribly, and on the 4th or three hours after the infantry went into action, they were completely beaten. You [illegible] and pursued [illegible] twenty three officers and men; some of their most [illegible] officers falling, among whom was the gallant Col. Rogers, of the Second Texas, who bore their colors at the head of his storming column to the edge of the ditch of "Battery Rodenelt," where he fell. Their wounded, as the sworn rolls, must exceed five thousand. You took two thousand two hundred and sixty-eight prisoners, among whom are one hundred and thirty-seven field officers, captains and subalterns, representing

> 53 regiments of Infantry,
> 10 regiments of Cavalry,
> 13 batteries of Artillery,
> 7 Battalions,

making sixty-nine regiments, thirteen batteries, seven battalions, besides several companies. You captured 3,300 stand of small arms, fourteen stands of colors two pieces of artillery and a large quantity of equipments. You pursued his retreating columns forty miles in force with infantry, and sixty-nine miles with cavalry, and were ready to follow him to Mobile, if necessary, had you received orders. I congratulate you on these decisive results. In the name of the Government and the people, I thank you. I beg you to unite with me in giving humble thanks to the Great Master of all for our victories."

A New Paper.—An Anti-Slavery, paper in the French language has just been started in New Orleans. It is called L'Union, and addresses itself, in particular, to the French people of color, to whom it appeals in stirring articles, to join the Union troops and aid them in the establishment of a "Republican system without stain, of a democracy without fetters." The first number reproduces a letter, addressed two years ago by Victor Hugo to a Haytien poet.

The Price of Coffee.—Coffee, since the passage of the new tariff act, and the very material falling off of supplies, has matured considerably in price. One year ago Rio coffee could be bought at from eight to ten cents per pound. At the present time the price is thirty and thirty-one cents.

Advanced Prices.—Barley and Barley Malt have advanced during the past week, from fifteen to twenty cents per bushel. Hops have also advanced two cents per pound. This is indeed sad news for lager beer brewers, and must cause the shedding of many Teutonic tears.

High Price of Cotton.—Cotton, which sold in this city less than eighteen months ago for fifteen cents per pound, was disposed of yesterday at sixty-three cents cash, and more was desired at the same figure.

Increase in the Price of Petroleum.—The low stage of water in the West, and the increase of consumption, have made a very material advance in the present petroleum. The refined article has risen from thirty to fifty cents per gallon. The exports from this port since the first of January have been over two millions. The exports from New York during the same time reached five millions of gallons.

A Noble Fellow.—The Lycoming Gazette, in detailing incidents of the draft in that county, mentions the following:—"Probably the most striking instance of disinterested generosity occurred in Porter township. Andrew Taylor, a man of large family and limited means, was drafted, when William Hoover, of Pine Creek Township, Clinton county, who is in no way related to Taylor, voluntarily went to him and, without pay, had his name entered as a substitute, because, as he said, Taylor had too large a family to leave and go to war.

At a War Meeting.—Last week at Chicago, some one offered a cow to the first married volunteer. The first volunteer was a single man, who stepped forward amidst enthusiastic applause, some cheering the man and others the cow. "Gentlemen," said he, "I belong to the class that can't be cowed."

The First Rifles made by machinery to use the Minnie ball, or its equivalent, were made at Windsor, Vermont, and Hartford, Conn., for the English government. The machinery and tools for the armory at Enfield, England, were made at Windsor, Vt.; Hartford, Conn., and Chicopee, Mass.

The Rev Mr. Talbott.—The "old friend" of Gen. Nelson, and whom, it will be recollected, he baptized within fifteen minutes of his wanton, violent outrage, alluded thus confidently to the effect of the ceremony in his funeral address:

"When I was called to attend him, at his request, I found him rapidly passing away. I almost spoke to him, and found him conscious that he was dying, and I found that the instructions must be brief. I asked him of his belief in Christ our Saviour. I exhorted him to forgive every human being against whom he had any malice, and he did. I repeated the Apostles' Creed, and asked him if he would be baptized in that faith. He replied, 'Baptize me in that faith, quick! now! for I am going!' He turned his face full upon me. I sprinkled the drops of the bright new birth upon the brow where clustering human hair [illegible] and I breathed a fervent prayer to God that his Spirit would seal to his soul the beautiful sign, and give the warrior forgiveness, rest. Conscious to the last, his repentance was as deep and fervent, his conviction as overwhelming, as I ever saw, and his last audible words were a prayer for the forgiveness of his sins. I did baptize him in the faith of God and his Son Jesus Christ, and of the holy church. I received the dying confession. Back again, at last, and in that holy church whose breast is broad enough for eighteen centuries to lay their hoary heads upon, humbly as a child, he found a place to die!"

Advance of the Army.

Rappahannock, Va., Nov. 6.—Gen. Pleasanton to-day reports that Gen. Jackson occupies Chester Gap with his rebel command.

The town of Warrenton was occupied by our troops at 3 o'clock this afternoon, we taking the prisoners belonging to the 3d Virginia Cavalry, and two infantry soldiers, who stated that their regiments had gone up the valley.

Gainesville, Va., Nov. 7.—General Reynolds' corps, of General McClellan's command, took possession of Warrenton yesterday, the enemy evacuating it without fighting.

The Alabama in Chase of an American Ship.—New York, November 7th.—The bark Mary Rice, of Yarmouth, N. S., reports, October 30th, in latitude 41, longitude 69.30, saw two ships, one of which was believed to be the Alabama, which was in pursuit of the other, and gaining rapidly. The latter was believed to be an American. They were heading northeast by east, and distant eighteen or twenty miles.

A Daughter of Semmes in Philadelphia.—A daughter of the great Semmes is now in Philadelphia, and her mother and two sisters reside in Washington, while the father is cruising the ocean, sinking, burning and destroying everything that crosses his path bearing the flag of the United States—the flag that covers and protects his family.

General McClellan Relieved from Command.—Sharpsburg, Va., Nov. 5.—The order relieving General McClellan from the command of the Army of the Potomac was received at headquarters at Hagerstown last night.

It was entirely unexpected to all, every one was taken by surprise.

Gen. McClellan and his staff will leave to-morrow for Trenton, where he is ordered to report.

The order was delivered to him by Gen. Buckingham in person.

The last official act of the late commander of the Army of the Potomac was the issuing of an address to the troops of a few words, informing them that the command devolved on General Burnside, and taking leave of them.

From the Army of the Potomac

Headquarters Army of the Potomac,
Warrenton, Monday Evening, Nov. 10.

At 9 o'clock last evening all the officers belonging to the headquarters assembled at the General's tent to bid him farewell. The only toast given was by Gen McClellan, being—"The Army of the Potomac."

General McClellan and staff, accompanied by Gen Burnside, to-day bid farewell to the army, making a procession the several army corps. As the General rode through the ranks, the torn and tattered banners of the veteran regiments were dipped to greet him, while the thousands of soldiers gave vent to their feelings [illegible] cheers.

The General and his staff will leave by special train to-morrow for the North.

[illegible] Headquarters [illegible] Gen. Burnside [illegible] has taking command of the army:

"In accordance with General Orders No. 182 issued by the President of the United States, I hereby assume command of the Army of the Potomac. Patriotism and the exercise of my every energy in the direction of the army, aided by the full and hearty co-operation of its officers and men, will, I hope, under the blessing of God, lead to success. Having been a witness of the [illegible] I assume their command. To the Ninth corps, so long and intimately associated with me, I need say nothing. Our business are ideal. We have [illegible] but want a personal confidence in the unswerving loyalty and determination of the gallant army now intrusted to my care. I accept its [illegible] with the steadfast assurance that the just cause must prevail."

Gen McClellan's Farewell to the Army.—Warrenton, November 11.—Major-General McClellan [illegible] Warrenton Junction a salute was fired. During the night he had received an application [illegible] ranks, when the whole command [illegible] the enemy's capital would be a new parting scene. He said, in response, while on the platform of the train, at last:

"I wish you to stand by General Burnside as you have stood by me, and all will be well. Good-by."

To this there was a spontaneous and enthusiastic response.

The troops were also drawn up in line at Bristow and Manassas Junction, where similar scenes were [illegible] and where General McClellan was complimented with enthusiastic cheers.

The party arrived here this afternoon just in time to take the five o'clock train of cars for Baltimore.

The cars being detained, owing to some impediment on the track, Gen. McClellan reorganized the many soldiers quartered in that vicinity, when he was greeted with [illegible] cheers.

The following farewell order to the troops composing the Army of the Potomac was read yesterday morning on dress parade:—

Headquarters Army of the Potomac, Camp near Rectortown, Nov. 7, 1862.—Officers and soldiers of the Army of the Potomac:—An order of the President devolves upon Major-General Burnside the command of this army. In parting from you, I cannot express the love and gratitude I bear to you. As an army you have grown up under my care. In you I have never found [illegible] of coldness.

The battles you have fought under my command will proudly live in our national history.

The glory you have achieved, our mutual peril and fatigue; the graves of our comrades fallen in battle and by disease, the broken forms of those whom wounds and sickness have disabled, are the strongest assertions which can exist among men united still by an indissoluble determination that we will ever be comrades in supporting the Constitution of our country and the nationality of its people.

GEORGE B. McCLELLAN,
Major-General U. S. Army.

The War in Virginia—Gen. Sickles Moving to Rappahannock Station—Gen. Sigel Looking after Jackson.—[Special despatch to the Washington Star.]—Manassas Junction, November 9.—It is understood here that a considerable portion of Gen. Sigel's force have moved from their late position in front of us along the line of the Manassas railroad. Take it for granted that dismission is to attend especially to the possible movements of Jackson, who is believed to be still in the valley.

Gen. Sickles is on the way to-day to Rappahannock Station, with sufficient infantry and artillery to hold the important bridge there post permanently, with the assistance of Bayard's Cavalry, who have had it in possession, uninjured, (though requiring strengthening to bear our numerous army trains,) for twenty-four hours past.

Major-General Burnside, I believe, continues his headquarters at Warrentown for the time being.

The Present Situation.—General Rosecrans, with the army of the Ohio, is on the way South, through middle Tennessee. General Grant is moving down into Mississippi. Gen Curtis is operating on the opposite bank of the great river in Arkansas. General McClernand is organizing his army, with its face towards the Gulf. General Granger is marching through middle Kentucky. General Cox is making headway up the valley of the Kanawha, and, far away beyond any of these, General Schofield has just driven the rebels from South-west Missouri, where men are beginning to cast their eyes forward to the day of deliverance of the patriots in Northern and Western Texas. Thus we have a sketch—and but a hurried sketch—of the land operations in progress, which it would be fatal to have interrupted.

On the Mississippi Admiral Porter is preparing to clear away the obstructions at Vicksburg, so as to open up the great highway of the North-western States to the Gulf. Charleston, as may be seen by Beauregard's [illegible] proud boast of the coming retribution. Savannah and Mobile are to receive attention, and generally the work on the coast commenced last winter is to be completed during the present.

Foreign Summary.

The Tory Aristocracy.—The London Freeman thus refers to what is beginning to be popularly understood:

"Our English aristocracy make a capital political harvest out of the American war. Of course, as men professing humanity, they deplore the bloodshed, but, as haters of popular power, they chuckle over Republican calamities. At the very commencement of the quarrel we predicted that our aristocrats would sympathize with the South, even before they hoped it would succeed. They regarded the South, historically, as first peopled by Cavaliers, the North as colonized by Roundheads. They saw in Southern planters men regarding trade as beneath them, and labor as disgraceful, men living in wealth and luxury on immense estates, cultivated, not by political serfs only, but by bondsmen—they looked on such men as by birth and status their nearest American representatives, and they, like the planters, indeed, themselves, despised the Northerners as a set of tradesmen and mechanics. Democracy was but nominal in the South. The omnipotent slaveholders held a lower class in a political subjection as complete as the personal subjection of their negroes. They were a race of landed despots—there or four hundred thousand slaveholders holding the sex or seven millions of workers in Southern States completely in their power. English Toryism and Landlordism could but regard them, therefore, as the cream of American society."

Loss of American Travel.—At a meeting of the South-eastern Railway Company, the one over whose roads the continental traffic chiefly passes, the Chairman, in moving the adoption of the semi-annual report, stated, among other causes affecting the prosperity of the line, that "the continuance of the civil war in America, by withdrawing from Europe a large number of American travellers—an increasing class of passengers of late years—has had an averse effect upon the railway, considerably [illegible] in proportion to the [illegible] ding English lines." It is to be hoped that the despatches of the [illegible] are now [illegible] very little by all classes of the English community at large.

There are in Great Britain 1,010 Roman Catholic chapels and stations, 12 [illegible] 30 monasteries, 162 convents, 1,288 bishops and priests, and nineteen military chaplains. There has been a considerable increase, through various influences, during the last ten years.

During the year 1861 the British and Foreign Bible Society sold in Italy, through their agents and nearly thirty colporteurs, about thirty thousand copies of the Scriptures, in whole or in part, many of them in [illegible] languages. The [illegible] through the [illegible] depositories, and about three hundred copies more.

The Edinburgh City Mission employed last year 70 agents, of whom 32 gave their whole time to the work. Of the entire number 50 were males and 20 females. By their labors 60,000 persons were brought under the influences of the Gospel, of whom two-thirds never attended a place of worship.

The city of Paris contains a population of 1,700,000 souls, and 78 theatres, concerts and ball-rooms. The number of Roman Catholic places of worship is 65, furnishing in all accommodation for only twenty-six thousand persons.

Sabbath Schools in Ireland.—Answers to these queries have been returned from a large number of the congregations, from which your committee regret that [illegible] one of the congregations in the Assembly—that those who are able to read are almost without exception, [illegible] weekly meetings for preparation and prayer; that almost all the schools are opened and closed with devotional exercises; that there has not [illegible] much done for missions during the past as in the previous year, and that there are three hundred and [illegible] ten without any.

The promise to enlarge room for petroleum has become so great at Liverpool that the Mersey Dock Board have just decided to go at capacious warehouses near the Great Float at Birkenhead, at a cost of some thirty thousand dollars.

Ballooning.—Mr Glaisher, the celebrated scientific aeronaut, and Mr Coxwell, the great daring aeronaut of the age, last week ascended in a balloon to the almost incredible height of six miles. The observations of the former will prove most valuable to science, but both gentlemen had a narrow escape from destruction. Mr. Glaisher became totally insensible at about the fifth mile, but Mr. Coxwell went on until his hands were frozen, and he was just able to pull the cord attached [illegible] with his teeth, and [illegible] to the earth. Mr. Coxwell [illegible] to [illegible] with most extraordinary [illegible] at all.

A [illegible] Paris [illegible] Bonaparte [illegible] Dr. Lacroix [illegible] papers, who [illegible] ing a jury at 80 roquet- [illegible].

The English public expressed [illegible] horror at intelligence when it was brought under their notice. They were not aware that the finding of the body of a dead child was of so common an occurrence that there were instances of it every day. So common was it that the police seemed to think no more of finding a dead child than they did of finding a dead cat or a dead dog."

Conspiracy in Russia.—A letter from St. Petersburg [illegible] The Nord [illegible] says that a conspiracy existed in Emperor's life, [illegible] world. [illegible] attempt at assassination, which would have been made on the Emperor, in the subject of [illegible] Rome, which was [illegible] at Zarskoje Selo, has happily recovered an anonymous letter acquainting him with all the details of the intended attempt. The person took place as announced, but previous to the arrival of the Emperor, all the officers were called out of the ranks, formed into a circle, and had their pockets searched. In the pocket of one of them, said to be an ex-lieutenant of the Emperor, a loaded revolver was found."

Japan.—Jeddo, the capital of Japan, is without exception, the largest and most populous city in the world. It contains the vast number of 1,300,000 dwellings, and 5,000,000 of human souls. Many of the streets are nineteen paramaris in length, which is equivalent to twenty-two English miles.

In Lombardy, it is reckoned that out of every one hundred persons [illegible] from birth [illegible] read, in Piedmont, twenty-four; in Tuscany, seventeen; in Rome's [illegible] one; in Naples, matters are even worse. According to the report of the General-Inspector of Schools, of the 1,845 congregations of the provinces [illegible] have no schools, and in a population of 6,000,000 souls, only 67,10 have received any education. Quite recently several elementary schools have been established in Naples, and are very numerously attended. Count Cavour, before his death, designated a great part of his estate for the purpose of promoting the education of the people.

Spiritual Destitution in Liverpool.—A writer in the "Church and State Review," a new and handsomely printed periodical, just started under the auspices of the well-known Archdeacon Denison, tells us that in Liverpool there are 2,341 public houses and beer shops, or one to 160 of the population. Of these, 175 are licensed [illegible] unquestioned, and 97 are licensed for gambling. In the same city, 28 adults in every 10,000 die prematurely, while in other parts of England the number is only 46. "Shall, indeed," the writer adds, "it is to think that while fleets of ships sail up the Mersey, bringing into the port of Liverpool wealth such as Crœsus never knew, there should be a depth of destitution, and a deeper depth still of vice, immorality—physical and social—a degradation unreached by any of the schemes of the benevolent; and for which Christ's holy Catholic Church at present offers no remedy. Thousands are lingering in unspeakable misery in cellars, unvisited, through the lack of laborers, by the ministers of Christ, the unhappy victims of physical and moral pestilence, etc. Multitudes are utter strangers to the name and [illegible] name of Christianity. Numbers, for want of [illegible] and want of sympathy, fall into the delusions of Mormonism, or are the ready prey of any spirited pretender. Meanwhile, every nameless and shameless vice is perpetrated in the dark alleys of this modern Tyre." [illegible] "All the arises from the simple fact that while the devil's emissaries are active and powerful, the Church agencies have been too few or too powerless. Thus, while temptation and vice stare you in the face at every turn, the preventives and remedies are to be sought out with comparative labor and difficulty."—Christ. Times.

Just Punishment.—The Levant (Constantinople) Herald says that the Porte has notified Mr. Edward Joy Morris, American Minister to Turkey, that the firman ordering the execution of Achmat, one of the assassins of Rev. Mr. Coffin, has been sent to Adana. With respect to the other assassin, Hafil, who has been also condemned to death, the Cannakam of Pavas has pledged himself to deliver him to the Government within the interval of three months.

Letters from Egypt represent the cotton crop in that country as a complete success, and opening dazzling visions of future wealth. Prices rule from three and four times the former average, and the value of the coming crop is estimated at [illegible] Turkey has [illegible] also produce for the English market about 60,000 bales from her Asiatic provinces.

Married.

On the 30th of October, 1862, by Rev. Henry Davis, in Philadelphia, Mr. Moses Ricks to Mrs. Paulena Ricks, both of Philadelphia.

Died.

At her residence, in Terre Haute, Ind., October 29th, 1862, Mrs. Mary Bonds, in the 65th year of her age.

Sister Bonds has been a widow about fifteen years. She has been an exemplary member of the A. M. E. Church for twenty-five years. Her disease was scrofula in its most aggravated form. She endured great bodily suffering; but bore her affliction with Christian fortitude, and looked forward with joyful anticipation to the time when her suffering should be over. She died in the full triumph of a living faith. She leaves three children and a large circle of friends and acquaintances to mourn her loss. Farewell, dear sister, thou art gone from the church militant, on earth, to join the church triumphant, above the skies

> O, how happy is she now,
> With her crown upon her brow!
> Oh, how happily does she sing
> Worthy is my Saviour King.

P. H.

The Social, Civil and Statistical Association, of The Colored People of Pennsylvania open a subscription list to aid the freed men at Port Royal and other points where they may be located, and respectfully ask the co-operation of the colored citizens and others in this city, or elsewhere, in money or clothing.

Any amount of value received will be acknowledged, with the name of the donor, in the Recorder, where a constant record will be kept.

Subscriptions may be sent to Jacob C. White, at the office of the Le Lamon Cemetery, 711 Lombard Street, and also to William Still, 107 North Fifth Street, and to Rich. Wesner, 61 Pine Street.

PAID

Statistical Society,	$50 00
Clayton Miller,	2 00
William Still,	5 00
Robert Adger,	2 00
Henry Minturn,	2 00
Catherine Johnson,	2 00
Vasti Locke,	2 00
Wm. Warwicks,	2 00
Harriet Shriver,	1 00
Sarah S. Hawkins,	1 00
Rev. Jonathan C. Gibbs,	1 00
James P. Clay,	1 00
Benjamin F. Hall,	2 00
S. M. S.,	2 00
[illegible]	1 00
P. J. Dreer,	5 00

It affords us pleasure to acknowledge the receipt of ten dollars, the proceeds of Miss Anna E Dickinson's lecture at Concert Hall for the contrabands, contributed to the S. C. and Statistical Association, to be applied as intended. Wm. Still,

Cor. Sec. of S. C. and Statistical Association of the Colored People of Penn.

ADVERTISEMENTS.

MRS MARTHA COLLINS,
730 Russell Street, above Fitzwater.

Begs leave to inform her friends and the public generally, that she has opened an INFANT SCHOOL for Boys and Girls, both sexes, who will pay special attention in teaching the primary departments of Reading, Writing and Arithmetic, also Singing, upon the most reasonable and accommodating terms. She does not hesitate to say that she will be able to please all who may give her a trial.

MRS [illegible] SHORTER HAWKINS'
DRY GOODS, HOSIERRY, AND TRIMMING STORE,
No 618 Lombard Street, Philadelphia

Mrs H calls the attention of her friends and patrons to a new stock of Fall and Winter Goods, consisting of Delaines, Calicoes, Flannels, Muslins, Drills, Shawls, Hamerial, and Hoop Skirts.

N B Regalia and Dress Trimmings still on hand. All will be sold as near the old prices as possible. Call and see

Advertisements.

THE DAUGHTERS OF HOPE GRAND UNION Temperance Society met at being the fifteenth convention, April 6th, 1862. Representatives from Lodges are as follows:—

From Garnet Union No 4, D of T [illegible] from Phœnix Union, No 5, D of I [illegible] from Northern Union No 10, D of I, Webb's Union, of Chambersburgh Pa., from Oil Best Union, of Carlisle, Pa., from Mount Olive Union, No 19 D of I [illegible] from Vanbrackle Union No 15, D of I, of Norristown, Pa.

Officers installed to their several positions are as follows:—

Grand P., Sister Bennett; Grand Associate, Sister Burris; Grand Treasurer, Sister Lavertie; Grand Conductress, C. Thompson; Grand Sentinel, A. E Dunbar; Grand Chaplain, Sister Hall

G P P, Sister E R [illegible], to P P Sister Anderson,
" " E Brown, " " J I [illegible],
" " M. H. Henry, " " E. A Clark,
" " S Newman, " " Wood,
" " S. Davis, " " A Hall.

THE DAUGHTERS OF CORN ST SOCIETY
The Stated Quarterly Meetings of the Society are held on the first Wednesdays of February, May, August and November.

The meeting of the Board are held on the Wednesday previous to the regular stated meetings of the society.

Mrs Sarah Carter,
President.
Mr. I. R Stevens, Sec'y.

THE BOOK DEPOSITORY
OF THE
AFRICAN M. E. CHURCH,
No. 619 Pine Street,
PHILADELPHIA.

We keep on hand, in connexion with our other books Sabbath school books of various kinds, Question Books; Catechisms, Nos. 1, 2, and 3. We have a good assortment of such books as are generally used in the Public Schools. Also, Stationery, Inks, Pens, Paper, Envelopes and Blank Books.

THE DEATH-BED OF THE REV JOHN WESLEY

Wanted Canvassing Agents for this [illegible] work. [illegible] Address [illegible] Publishers,
W. M. SMITH, Proprietor,
702 South Third Street, Philadelphia.

WANTED.—The charge of a Public School. Reference as to ability can be given. Apply to
J. W. A., 1641 Helmuth St.

ONE-PRICE CLOTHING,
OF THE LATEST STYLES,
Made in the Best Manner, expressly for RETAIL SALES. Lowest Selling Prices marked in Plain figures. All Goods made to order warranted satisfactory. Our One-Price System is strictly adhered to. All are thereby treated alike.
JONES & CO.,
Dec25-1y 604 Market Street.

GOOD NEWS
To Tailors, Dress makers, and to those wishing to be such. Also, to owners of sewing machines, sizing-boards, and large families,—[illegible] Parts Vests, Pants, Sack and Frock Coats.

Local and Travelling Agents Wanted.
Address REV WM SHADDY
Carpenters Basket P.
Oct 30 1y Mrs Mary Warner, wife of the late [illegible] paper [illegible] Pa. Jan 25

JAMES DOWNS,
DEALER IN
NEW AND SECOND HAND
CLOTHING,
No. 225 South Second Street,
No 17 3mo. PHILADELPHIA

WILLIAM STILL'S
STOVE STORE,
107 NORTH FIFTH STREET, PHILADELPHIA.

The subscriber would respectfully inform his friends and all in want of good stoves, that he has now on hand a general variety of excellent PARLOR, COOK and CHAMBER STOVES, including Gas burning, as well as other patterns, which he is selling at very low rates. He buys entirely for cash, of the best wholesale purchases, and of course can sell much cheaper than those buying on the usual credit system. At any rate his friends are invited to give him a call and examine for themselves, before purchasing elsewhere, as he feels that they would be convinced that it would be to their interest to give him their patronage. Coal orders constantly on hand. WM STILL.

JOSEPH H. COLE,
CONTINENTAL RESTAURANT,
No 717 LOMBARD STREET, PHILA.,
(Above Seventh St., under Philadelphia Institute,)

Where he continues to keep always on hand the very best assortment of OYSTERS and other refreshments—hoping that all his friends and the public in general will favor him with their patronage.

☞ Meals served at all hours. Families supplied with Oysters of the best quality and flavor at the shortest notice.

☞ Also, public and private waiting done on the most reasonable terms. 1y

MISS JANE JOHNSON,
Respectfully informs her friends and the public, that she continues laying out and shrouding the dead.

☞ All orders will be immediately attended to.

RESIDENCE,
618 South 8th St

"UNION COTTAGE,"
ATLANTIC CITY, NEAR THE INLET

The subscriber will always be happy to welcome her numerous friends, and the public in general.

TERMS.

Board per week,	$6 00
" " day,	1 25
Single meals,	50

S. H. WAILES, Proprietress.

BOARDING
IN BROOKLYN

MRS E PLANT (formerly Richardson) respectfully announces that she has opened a first-class BOARDING & LODGING HOUSE at No 97 Hall STREET, Brooklyn—where she is prepared to accommodate the public on the most reasonable terms.

Her house being centrally located in a very pleasant part of the city, and within five minutes' walk of Fulton Ferry, is made thus a very desirable and convenient place.

BOARDING.

Mrs. AMIA WILLIAM, of Cape May, will open the Banker House for the season, for the accommodation of all who wish to spend the season there, and she will spare no pains to make all comfortable. Those wishing to spend one, two, or three days, will find the Banker House the right spot. Prices very reasonable. Sept

COAL, STOVES, &c., &c.

The subscriber respectfully informs his friends and the public generally, that he has taken the store,

NO. 107 NORTH FIFTH STREET,

formerly occupied as the Anti-Slavery Office, (where he has been engaged for the last fourteen years,) to occupy it henceforth as a place of business for the sale of

COAL, STOVES, &c.

Having made arrangements with one of the first Coal Dealers in the city, to furnish the best qualities of Lehigh, Schuylkill, &c., at the lowest Cash prices, he hopes to give full satisfaction in this branch of his business.

He will also keep constantly on hand a general assortment of good NEW and SECOND-HAND STOVES, FURNACES &c.

Persons wishing Stoves taken down, stored away, put up, or cleaned, can be promptly accommodated by applying as above.

He hopes by energy and strict attention to business to obtain a fair share of patronage.

WM STILL,
107 North Fifth Street, Philadelphia

REFERENCES.

J M McKim,	Dr Caspar Wistar,
Samuel Rhoads,	James Mott,
Robert Purvis,	Thomas Williamson,
Paul C D Cleveland	W H Furness

WANTED,
One or two respectable colored men in a quiet and respectable family to lodge, where they can secure all the comforts of a home, with a furnished room.

INQUIRE,
No. 424 South 7th St, Phila.

REV LEWIS S. LEWIS'
FAMILY LINIMENT
IS PREPARED WITH GREAT CARE,
EXPRESSLY FOR FAMILY USE

Its composition is very simple, containing nothing that is injurious in any form, and there is no danger in its use from exposure to the weather. No family should be without it. Having a wish to benefit mankind in general, and those afflicted in particular—and having had recourse to the article in several cases of rheumatism, bunions, chilblains, and other lameness, it proving to be a remedy in every case—I therefore recommend it to the public.

CERTIFICATES

Providence, R. I., Nov 27, 1861.

Rev. L. S. Lewis—Dear Sir: I have been afflicted with the rheumatism eleven years, during which time I tried almost everything, but received no cure relief. For the last four months my limbs and joints were so swollen, that at times I could not walk or use my slippers. I procured a bottle of your Liniment, and at the first application was instantly relieved. After using one or two bottles, I was enabled to enjoy the use of my limbs. Rev GEORGE A. RUE

Newport, R I., October 29, 1861

Rev. L. S. Lewis—Dear Sir: I have been cured of a number of years, more or less, with a pain and weakness in my chest, arising from some cause unknown to me. I made two applications of your Liniment, and was relieved. I was attacked with the diphtheria, and was cured by using your Liniment. Its worth has proved itself ten times its cost. ANTHONY RANDOLPH

Newport, R. I., Nov. 19, 1861

Rev. L. S. Lewis—Dear Sir: I have been cured of stiffening in my joints by using your Liniment. I recommend it to all who are thus troubled RICHARD WHITE.

Newport, R. I., Nov. 17, 1861.

Rev. Mr. Lewis—Your Liniment is, truly, all that it is recommended to be. I have tried it, and it has successfully cured my bunions. SOPHIA TAYLOR.

Newport, R. I., Oct 2, 1861.

Mr. Lewis—Dear Sir: I have had a pain and stiffness in my neck and back for some time. I procured a bottle of your Liniment, and applied it twice, which effected a cure. I recommend it to the public Mrs EVELINA DEMOND

Providence, Dec 10, 1861

Rev. L. S Lewis—Dear Sir: For upwards of three years I have been very lame at times, arising from a sprain. I have tried a great many things, without any definite results. I procured a bottle of your Liniment, and was effectually relieved. Mrs PHEBE A. MORSE

Newport, R. I., Oct. 16, 1861.

Rev. Mr. Lewis—I have been afflicted with the rheumatism for some time. I used your Liniment, which has removed it successfully. It has also cured my swelled joints. Mrs. ELIZABETH THOROUGHGOOD.

Newport, R. I., Nov 20, 1861.

Rev Mr Lewis—My boy was troubled with the chilblains. I applied your Liniment a few times, and it cured him. Mrs. ADELINE JONES.

Stranger Ferry, Sept. 3, 1861.

Rev. Mr Lewis—I have used your Liniment for rheumatic pains of long standing—also, lameness in the feet. Re It is a perfect remedy where other things have failed Mrs. SUSAN GARDINER.

Providence, Rhode Island, Aug. 19, 1861

Rev. L. S. Lewis—I have been afflicted for upwards of seven years with swelled joints. I have tried almost everything, without the desired effect. At last I obtained a bottle of your Liniment, which relieved me successfully. Mrs. MARY A. JEWITT.

Providence, Nov., 1861.

Mr. L. S. Lewis—I had a very severe attack of rheumatism last fall, during which time I tried almost everything—but nothing so effectual as your Family Liniment. I would not be without it. Mrs. LUCY WATERMAN.

MANUFACTURED BY
REV. LEWIS S. LEWIS,
No. 115 Meeting St., Providence, R. I.,
TO WHOM ALL ORDERS SHOULD BE ADDRESSED.
PRICE, 25 CTS PER BOTTLE.

☞ Sold in Newport by Mrs MARTHA J. RANDOLPH, No. 1 Spencer Court. 1y

GEORGE G. EVANS'
ORIGINAL GIFT BOOK STORE,
No. 439 Chestnut Street.

NEW BOOKS! NEW GIFTS FOR THE NEW YEAR!

Call and look at our immense collection of BOOKS and PRESENTS for the season of 1861!

All the latest and best Publications, and a Gift with each Book purchased. Beautifully and appropriately bound copies of the prose and poetical writings of all the standard British and American authors, together with an extensive and superb array of Miscellaneous Books, all embracing the choicest castings from the fields of Literature!

Magnificent and costly presents, consisting in part of WATCHES, JEWELRY, AND SILVER WARE of the newest styles, and most exquisite finish. All Books are sold at the Publisher's regular prices, and every purchaser in the amount of $1 00, or more, is presented with a Gift, combining utility with ornament, varying in value from

FIFTY CENTS TO ONE HUNDRED DOLLARS!

Citizens! Strangers! Everybody! Bear this fact in mind, and make your purchase of Books at
GEORGE G. EVANS,
MAMMOTH GIFT BOOK EMPORIUM,
Mar 9 6mo No. 439 Chestnut Street, Phila.

MRS. H. S. DUTERTE,
General Undertaker and Furnisher,

Respectfully informs her friends and the public, that she still continues the Undertaking business at the old establishment No 641 Lombard St., and being thankful for past favors, hopes still to obtain a share of the patronage of the public

Ready made Coffins always on hand. Also a handsome Hearse and Carriages, with careful drivers, to attend funerals on the most moderate terms.

G. M. ELKINTON & SON,
MANUFACTURERS OF
SOAP AND CANDLES,
116 MARGARETTA STREET, Philadelphia.

OLIVE SOAP,	SPERM CANDLES,
YELLOW "	ADAMANTINE "
PALE "	BOUGIE "
BROWN "	KINGSFORD'S STARCH,
WHITE "	BARNETT'S "
CASTILE "	WAX,
HONEY "	TALLOW,
PALM "	SAL SODA
PONCINE "	SOFT SOAP.

March 2—1y.

FINE CAKE BAKERY,
CONFECTIONERY AND ICE CREAM SALOON,
No. 801 South Street.

Ellis J Peer would announce that he keeps constantly on hand a general assortment of all kinds of Cakes, Creams, Jellies, and Pastries

Festivals, Balls, and Private Parties served upon the shortest notice, and warranted to give general satisfaction. jan 19 1m.

NOTICE.

To the friends of Religious Literature and human progress of the City and County of Philadelphia:

This certifies that Miss Mary Still is a legally authorized agent for the City and County of Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, to solicit subscribers and donations for the Christian Recorder of the African Methodist Episcopal Church of America

We, therefore, take great pleasure in recommending Miss Still to the citizens and friends as a lady every way worthy of such a position, as well as trustworthy, and we do hope, as the enterprise is commendable, that those to whom she may present this writing will not turn her away without either subscribing or contributing to this great cause

(Signed) ELISHA WEAVER,
Editor & General Book Steward.
No. 519 Pine St., Phila.

For the Christian Recorder

BUCKS COUNTY SS.—TO ALL TO WHOM THESE PRESENTS MAY COME.

I, the subscriber, a Justice of the Peace, in and for the county of Bucks, do hereby certify that I am acquainted and know Emily Johnson—formerly Rooney, who was married to Samuel Johnson, who was married before William Hawk, Esq., of Bristol, Bucks County, as appears by record on his docket; and after careful examination and mature reflection, I feel myself fully safe in saying that the said Johnson had a wife living at the time he married the said Emily Rooney; and further say that I have the evidence of Daniel Emmons, Local preacher of the Methodist Episcopal Church, Charles Emmons, (Class leader) and Benjamin Cummings, (who is exhorter) that he had one or more wives living at the time he married the said Emily Johnson; and the evidence, on affirmation, of the said Emily Johnson, that he had a wife living at the time she married him, which, at the time she married him, she had no knowledge of.

Affirmed and subscribed before me March 10th 1862 Wm Blakey J P her

Emily X Johnston
mark

THOMAS CHARNOCK,
GENERAL FURNISHING UNDERTAKER
NO. 427 SOUTH 6TH ST.,
Second Door Below Bethel Church

OUR OWN BOOK-STORE.

Catalogue of Books for Sale at the Book Depository of the A. M. E. Church, located at No. 619 Pine St., Philadelphia, Pa.

	Retail price
Pronouncing Bible,	$2 75
Watson's Biblical and Theological Dictionary,	2 50
Watson's Theological Institutes, 2 vols	4 70
History of Methodism, 2 vols.,	2 50
Wheelan's Commentary on Matthew and Mark,	1 85
Horne's Introduction to the Bible,	85
Positive Theology,	60
The Poet Preacher,	60
Saints' Rest	50
Pilgrim's Progress	75
Defence of our Fathers. Bishop Emory,	60
Life of Wesley,	50
Cavel's Dictionary of the Holy Bible, S S.,	60
Cole's Concordance,	1 00
The Christian Maiden. Priestley,	75
Our Friends in Heaven,	60
The Sacred Hour. Rev. M. P. Gaddis,	75
Sacred Rock. Rev W C Smith,	75
Missionary among the Cannibals,	65
Path of Life. Rev. D. Wise,	60
The Missionary in Many Lands,	85
Reminiscences of Public Speaking,	50
The Life of Faith Exemplified. Mrs. H. A. Rogers	50
Little Foot-prints in Bible Lands,	40

THE TRUNDLE BED.

As I recovered through the attic,
I entered the children's room
As it pattered on the shingles
And against the window plane,
Peering over chests and boxes
Which with dust were thickly spread,
Saw I in the farthest corner
What was once my trundle bed

So I drew it from the recess
Where it had remained so long,
Hearing all the while the music
Of my mother's voice in song,
As she sung in accents sweetest
What I since have often read:
"Hush, my dear, lie still and slumber,
Holy angels guard thy bed."

As I listened, recollections
That I thought had been forgot,
Came with all the gush of memory,
Rushing, thronging to the spot,
And I wandered back to childhood,
To those merry days of yore,
When I knelt beside my mother
By this bed upon the floor.

Then it was, with hands so gently
Placed upon my infant head,
That she taught my lips to utter
Carefully the words she said.
Never can they be forgotten,
Deep are they in memory graven:
"Hallowed be thy name, O Father!
Father! who art in heaven."

Thus she taught me; then she told me
Of its import great and deep;
After which I learned to utter
"Now I lay me down to sleep."
Then it was, with hands uplifted,
And in accents soft and mild,
That my mother asked: "Our Father!
O do thou now bless my child!"

Years have passed, and that dear mother
Long has mouldered 'neath the sod,
And I trust her sainted spirit
Revels in the home of God.
But that scene at Summer twilight
Never has from memory fled;
And it comes in all its freshness
When I see my trundle-bed.

"BE COURTEOUS," AT HOME.

1 Peter iii. 8–12

Why not be polite? How much does it cost to say, "I thank you?" Why not practise it at home—to your husband, to your wife, to your children, your domestics? If a stranger does you some little act of courtesy, how sweet the smiling acknowledgment! if your husband or wife, ah! "it's a matter of course"—no need of thanks.

Should a visitor or acquaintance tread on your dress—your best, very best—and by accident tear it, how profuse you are with your "Never minds," "Don't think of it," "Accidents will happen." If a husband does it, he gets a frown, if a child, it is punished

"Ah! these are little things," say you. They all tell mightily upon the heart, let me assure you; and little as they are, they disturb peace, or create pleasure in the family circle.

A gentleman stops at a friend's house, and finds it in confusion. He does not see anything to apologize for—" never thinks of such matters " Everything is right—cold supper, cold room, crying children—"perfectly comfortable!" Goes home where his wife has been taking care of the children or attending the sick, and working her life almost out. Then he does not see why things can't be kept in order; "there never were such cross children before!" No apologies accepted at home. Oh! why not look at the sunny side of home as well as abroad, and try pleasant words instead of surly ones!

Why not be agreeable at home?—Why not use freely that golden coin of courtesy? How sweetly those little words sound, "Many thanks," or "You are very kind!" Doubly, yes, thrice sweet from the lips we love, when smiles make the eyes sparkle with the light of affection!

Be polite to your children. Be courteous to your servants. Do you expect them to be mindful of your welfare, to grow glad at your approach, to bound away to do your pleasure before the request is half spoken? Then with all your authority mingle kindness and cheerfulness. Brothers and sisters, be amiable, be courteous among yourselves and your servants. If at table one person be speaking, listen kindly till he has finished, and then you will meet the same attention, and much family love will arise from this mutual forbearance. "Don't be always dawting," but try to be pitiful and self-denying for the Lord Jesus Christ's sake, and yours will be a family where the Holy Spirit shines, and where Jesus will come to dwell.

ONLY A JEW'S HARP.

This toy, once so well-known and so great a fa-ite among school boys, seems now almost forgotten. Occasionally, with an invoice of German goods, it crosses the Atlantic,—but it is seldom ordered. It is generally seen, rusting its life away in idleness, in the shop-windows of those ancient dames in our sea-board towns who dispense pencils, peppermint-drops, and peanuts to the urchins of the neighborhood.

Yet in the hands of skilful performers, great are the capabilities of this despised toy. It is in common use throughout Europe, more especially in the Netherlands and among the peasants of Tyrol. It is also known in Asia; and the Greeks of Smyrna call it, in imitation of its sound, biambo. The origin of this instrument is lost in the long lapse of time, but it evidently derives its name from the Jews, who are, and have always (i. e., from time immemorial) been great venders of it. Some are of opinion that its proper title is jaw's harp, but this is probably a mere fancy.

Composed of two parts only, a body and a tongue, and these too, of rude workmanship, it makes no pretensions to beauty or grace; still, at the skilful touch of a friend, its wierd-like music so entrances the senses, that its ungainly appearance is ignored. The body, a bar of iron bent somewhat in the form of a horse-shoe with elongated points; the tongue, a thin strip of steel joined at the upper part of the body, is elastic and bent at the end, so that the fingers may touch it more readily. This tongue produces in itself only a sound which serves as a drone, although it appears to set like the bow of a violin in exciting other sounds, by breaking the current of air from the mouth; the acuteness or gravity of which are determined by the pressure of the lips and the size of the cavity of the mouth.

The memoirs of Madame Genglis first made known the astonishing proficiency of a poor German soldier in playing the jew's harp. This musician was in the service of Frederick the Great, and finding himself on duty under the windows of the king, played this, his favorite instrument, with so much skill, that Frederick thought he heard a distant orchestra. Surprised on learning that such an effect could be produced by a single man with two jew's harps, he ordered him into his presence. The soldier refused, alleging he only could be relieved by his colonel, and that, if he obeyed the king he would punish him the next day for having failed in his duty.

Being presented the next day to Frederick, he was heard with admiration, and received his discharge and fifty dollars. His name was Koch—he had no knowledge of music, but owed his success entirely to natural taste. He made his fortune by travelling about and performing both in public and private. He lived in Vienna till past eighty. He used two jew's harps at once, in the same manner as the Tyrolese, and produced the harmony of two notes struck at the same moment, which was considered by the musically curious as somewhat extraordinary when the limited powers of the instrument were considered.—Musical Review.

RARE COIN

A great rarity in the shape of a coin has lately been sold at Paris; namely, a silver one struck of at Breslau in 1751. Among the persons employed at that time in the mint, was an Austrian, who, out of hatred to Frederick II, of Prussia, who had taken possession of Silesia by right of conquest, conceived the idea of revenging himself on that monarch in the following manner: The motto on the coin, Ein reiche thaler, (a crown of the kingdom,) he divided in such a manner as to make it read, Ein reich nesel er, (he stole a kingdom.) The King ordered these insulting coins to be all melted down, but some few of them still exist

PAY FOR BRAIN WORK

AUTHORS

Wilkie Collins is said liberally for the story of "No Name," now being published in Dickens' All the Year Round, and Sampson Low, the London publisher, will also pay him $20,000 for the copyright, to publish, when completed in the periodical, in the usual book form. Anthony Trollope has commenced another novel, "The Small House at Allington," in the Cornhill Magazine, which pays him $25,000 for it. In the same magazine Marian Evans, author of "Adam Bede" has an Italian story, entitled "Romola," (almost as dull as Mrs Stowe's "Agnes of Sorrento,") for which the modest sum of [illegible] has been paid. Then, there is a most exciting tale, called "Aurora Floyd," now publishing in Temple Bar, well paid for there, of course, for which, to be issued in book form when completed, a publisher will pay $20,000 to the fair author—she, we breathe it as a particular secret, being a Miss M. E. Brandon, who had previously written some rather good poetry, and has another three-volume novel: "Lady Audley's Secret," advertised to appear in the first week of this present October. Here, for four novels, each of which has had the bloom brushed off by previous appearance in magazines, is the immense sum of $100,000 paid, besides what the authors have respectively received from the editors of the magazines aforesaid.

ARTIST

The pencil seems to be as well paid just now as the pen. We shall mention one noted instance. In 1858, William Powell Frith, then in his fortieth year, produced a picture called "The Derby Day," for which to engrave a print from, one Mr. Flatow paid him 3,000 guineas, (only $15,750,) and then cleared nearly the whole amount by exhibiting the paintings to the public at 25 cents a head. For another picture, "The Railway Station," also by Mr Frith, the same speculator paid 8,750 guineas, ($45,935,) the largest amount received by any living artist for a single work. This, also, has been exhibited, and up to the middle of September, 83,000 persons, (whose admission yielded $20,754,) had visited it, many of them also subscribing for the costly engraving about to be made from it. Mr Flatow has now commissioned Mr. Frith to paint him three smaller pictures of London life, for which he will be paid ten thousand pounds, or $50,000 of our money. The subjects are to be "Morning," a scene in Covent Garden; "Afternoon," showing Regent-street in the full tide of fashion; and "Night," being the Haymarket, at a late hour, when vice prevails, and the worst aspect of metropolitan life is observable. Here, for five pictures in four years, one London artist receives $110,750. It would appear nearly incredible, but is true.—Dr. Mackenzie.

LIFE AND LETTERS OF IRVING.—"The new volume of the Life and Letters of Washington Irving, edited by his nephew, Mr. Pierre Irving, just published, stands out among the books of our necessarily scanty list as a book which would be welcome at any season among our clubs and circulating libraries. It comes down to a period more within the circle of sympathies of the present generation than the preceding volume. There are many who will read it, who will well remember the literary circles of 1820–1832, in which Washington Irving, then in the prime of life, was a distinguished lion. American and American authors were not much in fashion among us in those days; readers did not then count by millions; and the comparatively small body for whom books were then written and published were incredulous of anything good coming from that uncouth people, whom aristocratic travellers reported to be incessantly engaged in worshipping dollars, clearing forests, and growing corn and cotton.

"The 'miasion,' as the phrase is, of Washington Irving appears to be to dispel this delusion. His style was singularly free from everything like literary trick, or what is now called sensational writing. Goldsmith, of whose life he made a pleasant narrative, was his model: but he added to the original a grace of his own, and a kind of humor which was certain to be relished among English readers. Apparently impressed with the necessity of vindicating his countrymen from English prejudice by his own simple example, he set up for a fine gentleman among us, and did not escape, among enemies, the reproach of being a coxcomb. But he grew in favor here in a degree to which no American author had yet attained. It was whispered among fashionable folks that this unexpected importation from the United States had become secretly convinced of the superior charm and more congenial character of English refinement, and would not go back to his own country at any price; in fact, that he was in spirit no American at all, but one who had been born in that country by a sort of freak of nature."—Lond. Publish. Circular

A WORD TO MINISTERS.—MISTAH EDITAH: The-ah sh no few ah than fou-ah ministas to ou-ah place, and num-ah-ous othas of ou-ah acquaintance, who have a singul-ah defect in thei-ah delliv-ah-y, o-ah (or) ra:h-ah thei-ah pronounciation, being unable to sound the lett-ah r when occ-uhring (occurring) in wo'ds o-ah syllables following a vowel. These pu'sons have ou-ah hea-ah-tiest (beartiest) sympathy in so fah as thei-ah defect is nat-uh al (natural) o-ah unavoidable; but we have the uncha-ah-tableness to suspect that this, in gen-uh-al is not a nat uh-al but an assumed defect—assumed to give prettiness or peculia uh-ty to thei-ah speech; and in so fah as this is the case, they have ou-ah seve-ah-est censhah, (censure)—Independent

HOW BODIES ARE EMBALMED.

Embalming, which is coming much into practice of late, is thus performed:—The modern embalmer finds an artery into which he can place the nozzle of an injecting syringe. The artery in the upper part of the arm, called the brachial, or the artery in the neck, the carotid, answers the purpose. Into this artery, the embalming fluid, consisting of alum, or corrosive sublimate, is injected until it permeates every structure. The solution sometimes retains its fluidity; sometimes it is so constituted that while it is warm in the fluid, on cooling it sets, and becomes more or less hard. After the injection, the artery is closed, the opening through the skin is neatly sewn up, and the operation is completed. Great numbers of the officers of the army, who have fallen in the engagements in Virginia, have been embalmed in this manner by Dr. Holmes, of Brooklyn, New York, and sent home to their relatives.

QUICKSILVER MINES IN CALIFORNIA.

Among the inexhaustible resources of California, quicksilver is one of the most interesting and profitable, for the simple reason that the cost of mining and extracting the metal from its ore, the cinnabar, is the least expensive of all the costly and valuable ones, such as gold, silver, and copper. The yield of quicksilver is from 5 per cent down to 25 per cent, and the mode of separating is quite simple.

The New Almaden mine has sixteen furnaces, producing daily one hundred flasks of seventy five pounds of quicksilver each. There are numerous other cinnabar mines, and the likelihood is that quicksilver will soon form an important item of export.

Cinnabar, when ground fine, is called vermilion It was much an article of traffic by the Indians along the coast as their red paint. From them the early white settlers of California learned the locality

A VALUABLE CAT.

For some days last week, says the New Bedford Mercury, the servant in charge of the city residence each morning, at the back door of the house a number of eggs. She was puzzled to account for the circumstance, until a neighbor discovered a cat bringing an apple by the stem, and depositing it at the door, and then going away and repeating the operation. On Saturday morning, the Major, who is the owner of the animal invaluable as a purr-veyor, discovered thirteen pears and an apple, as the result of the previous night's foraging of puss. Of street integrity, our friend investigated the case, and found that his cat, though regardless of the rights of property, was an excellent judge of pears and apples, having selected her plunder from the grounds of Mr. Thomas A Green, who has had rare success in the culture of fine fruit. The Major has made [illegible] by acceptance of the spoils, and so we tell the whole story. We learn that the cat is not for sale.

USE OF LEAVES

In many sections of our country, oak leaves are extensively used as bedding for domestic animals They are gathered in the forests in autumn, and stored in some convenient place till wanted. This affords them time to dry, which increases their power of absorption, and renders them more valuable in taking up and preserving the liquid voidings, and also facilitate, through this means, the decomposition of the vegetable fibre when used as a manure * * * We spread leaves around the trunks of trees, the blossoming of which it is desirable to retard in spring; we apply them also in "mulching," the object of which is to retain moisture in the soil for the benefit if trees newly transplanted.

In compost, also, we may often see the value of leaves strongly exemplified, for experience has long assured us that few more really valuable accessions can be made to the compost heap or yarn, than that obtained from the forest. In the cultivation of young fruit trees, this species of dressing is now greatly valued. From one to two years are required to prepare them for this purpose, according to the particular use to which they are to be applied. Any kind of forest leaves will be found valuable for this purpose. All that is necessary is to afford them time to decompose. The foliage of the alder, bass, poplar, willow, and other similar trees, is more readily decomposed than that of the elm or oak; but they possess less consistence, and consequently tend less to the increase of the compost head.—N. E. Farmer

HEADING LATE CABBAGES.—It sometimes happens, either through the lateness of the season, or neglect in early planting, that cabbages do not head completely before cold weather sets in. These are often fed out to cattle, or thrown away, while by a little care they might be made to head during the fall and early winter. To accomplish this, proceed as follows: first, make a wide drench, and transplant the cabbages into it, setting them together in a triple row At each end of the row, drive in a crotched stake, and lay a rail from one to the other, to form a ridge pole a foot or more above the cabbages. Make a roof of old boards or slabs, one end resting on the pole, and the other on the ground, so as to shed water. Over this, lay a little straw, six or more inches thick, of earth, making the surface smooth and hard, so as to be nearly rain-proof. At each end of the row, leave a ventilating hole, which must be loosely filled with straw in cold weather. Cabbages so managed, will continue to grow, and will fill up their heads considerably before mid-winter. When taken out in spring they will be tender, crisp, and beautifully blanched.—American Agriculturist.

GOD IS LIGHT

Eternal Light! Eternal Light!
How pure the soul must be,
When placed within thy searching sight
It shrinks not, but with calm delight,
Can live and look on Thee!

The spirits that surround the throne
May bear the burning blaze;
But that is surely theirs alone,
For they have never, never known
A fallen world like this!

Oh! how shall I, whose native sphere
Is dark, whose mind is dim,
Before the Ineffable appear,
And on my naked spirit bear
The uncreated beam!

There is a way for man to rise
To that sublime abode;
An offering, and a sacrifice—
A Holy Spirit's energies—
An advocate with God.

These—these prepare us for the sight
Of majesty above,
The sons of ignorance and night
Can stand in the "Eternal Light"
Through the "Eternal Love."

Baptist Miscellany.

LOVE WITHOUT DISSIMULATION.

Love is essential to true religion. It is an invariable accompaniment of the new birth, communicated in regeneration, and flowing out of a renewed heart, as water flows out of a fountain. As certainly as Christians are taught of God to believe the gospel, so certainly they are taught of Him to love His people. "But as touching brotherly love," says Paul to the Thessalonians, "ye need not that I write unto you; for ye yourselves are taught of God to love one another" There can be no true religion without love. "Though I speak with the tongues of men and of angels, and have not love, I am become as sounding brass or a tinkling cymbal. And though I have the gift of prophecy, and understand all mysteries and all knowledge; and though I have all faith, so that I could remove mountains, and have not love, I am nothing. And though I bestow all my goods to feed the poor, and though I give my body to be burned, and have not love, it profiteth me nothing." 1 Cor. xiii. 1—3.

But the Apostle insists on undissembled love "Let love be without dissimulation" (Rom. xii. 9;) literally, "Let love be unhypocritical." The language implies that there is such a thing as feigned love. Not only is love sometimes pretended where it does not exist, but even hatred in some instances assumes that appearance. Thus, Joab on one occasion took Abner aside as if he meant to speak with him quietly, and smote him there under the fifth rib, that he died; and on another occasion, while pretending to make the kindest inquiries respecting the welfare of Amasa, he took him by the beard with the one hand to kiss him, and slew him with a sword that lay concealed in the other. Judas, too, betrayed the Son of Man with a kiss. But this is the wolf in sheep's clothing—hatred attired in the guise of love. 2 Sam. iii. 27; xx.[Luke xxii. 47, 48.

The Apostolic precept requires "love unfeigned," and forbids the profession of affection without a corresponding feeling in the heart. It is in direct opposition to those hollow compliments which abound in the world, and which it is to be feared, are but too common in the church. Let us instance a few cases: —When public speakers, for example, laud each other to the skies on the platform, but slight or despise the objects of their adulation in private circles, that is "hypocritical love;" but when they avoid flattering on the platform, and endeavor to uphold each other's reputation in their private intercourse with the world, this is "love without dissimulation" When parties endeavor to upset the authority of a ruler, civil or sacred, by worming themselves into the favor of the people by "good words and fair speeches" as Absalom did, that is "hypocritical love;" but when they maintain the prerogatives of lawfully constituted authority, though it should be at the expense of making themselves unpopular, when these prerogatives are invaded, this is "love without dissimulation." When persons pretend to sympathise with injured innocence, and yet do not stand up in defence of those that are wronged (Prov. ix. 12.) that is "hypocritical love;" but to pluck the spoil out of the teeth of the wicked as behold chap xxix 17, [illegible] "love without dissimulation." To say to a brother or sister who is "naked and destitute of daily food, depart in peace, be ye warmed and filled, and [illegible] are needful for the body," that is "hypocritical love;" but to visit the sick, feed the hungry, and clothe the naked, this is "love without dissimulation. [illegible] and prefers to sympathize with each in the absence of the other, "that is "hypocritical love;" but to drive away the "backbiting tongue" with "an angry look," to make as many allowances for the absent party as truth will permit, to speak of one's faults to his face, and of his virtues to those who bear him ill will, this is "love without dissimulation"

"True Christian love is distinguished by sincerity Hence it is called "love unfeigned," and "love out of a pure heart" "And this I pray," says Paul to the Philippians, "that your love may abound yet more and more in knowledge and in all judgment; that ye may approve things that are excellent; that ye may be sincere and without offence till the day of Christ" Sincere love is expressed more by deeds than by words. The actions speak louder than the voice Thus Jesus proved the sincerity of His love by dying for His people, and he is our pattern as well as our propitiation. "Hereby perceive we the love of God, because He laid down His life for us: and we ought to lay down our lives for the brethren." 1 John iii 16 J. B

DIVIDING WITH GOD.

A merchant, in answer to inquiries, refers back to a period when, he says, "In consecrating my life anew to God, aware of the insnaring influences of riches and the necessity of deciding on a plan of charity before wealth should bias my judgment, I adopted the following system:—

"I decided to balance my accounts, as nearly as I could, every month; and reserving such portion of profits as might appear adequate to cover probable losses, to lay aside, by entry on a benevolent account, one-tenth of the remaining profits, great or small, as a fund for benevolent expenditure, supporting myself and my family on the remaining nine-tenths. I further determined, that if at any time my net profits, that is, profits from which clerk hire and store expenses had been deducted, should exceed $500 in a month, I would give twelve and a half per cent.; if over $700, fifteen per cent.; if over $900, seventeen and a half per cent; if over $1,100, twenty per cent.; if over $1,300, twenty-two and a half per cent.; thus increasing the proportion of the whole, as God should prosper, until, at $1,500, I should give twenty-five per cent., or $375 a month. As a capital was of the utmost importance to my success in business, I decided not to increase the foregoing scale until I had acquired a certain capital, after which I would give one quarter of all my net profits, great or small; and on the acquisition of another certain amount of capital, I decided to give half; and on acquiring what I determined would be a full sufficiency of capital, then to give the whole of my net profits.

"It is now several years since I adopted this plan, and under it I have acquired a handsome capital, and have been prospered beyond my most sanguine expectations. Although constantly giving, I have never yet touched the bottom of my fund, and have been repeatedly astonished to find what large drafts it would bear. True, during some months I have encountered a salutary trial of faith, when this rule has led me to lay by the tenth, while the remainder seemed inadequate to my support; but the tide has soon turned, and with gratitude I have recognised a heavenly hand more than making good all past deficiencies.

"This system has been of great advantage to me, enabling me to feel that my life is directly employed for God. It has afforded me happiness in enabling me to portion out the Lord's money, and has enlisted my mind more in the progress of Christ's cause. Happy privilege, which the humblest may enjoy, of thus associating the common labors of life with the grateful service of the Saviour, and of making that which naturally leads the heart from God, subserve the highest spiritual good

"This system has saved me from commercial dangers, by leading me to simplify business and avoid extensive credits. It has made me a better merchant; for the monthly pecuniary observations which I have been wont to take, though often quite laborious, have brought me to a better knowledge of the state of my affairs, and led me to be more cautious and prudent than I should otherwise have been. I believe this system tends to enlarge the Christian's views, increase his disinterestedness, and lead him to shun the tricks of trade. My own observation also confirms the belief, that even warm-hearted Christians must determine beforehand on the system they will adopt, if they would secure the benefits of the gospel plan to themselves, under the grace and providence of God, or its happy results to the cause of Christ."

RULES FOR USING THE TONGUE.

The tongue is called in the Bible "an unruly member." Our own experience accords perfectly with the statement, and observations on the tongues of others have satisfied us of the fact. We think the following rules, if carefully followed, will be found of great use in taming that which has not yet been perfectly tamed.

1. Never use your tongue in speaking anything but truth. The God of Truth, who made the tongue, did not intend it for any other use. It will not work well in falsehood, it will run into such inconsistencies as to detect itself. To use the organ for publishing falsehood, is as incongruous as the use of the eye for hearing, or the ear for smelling.

2. Do not use your tongue too much. It is a kind of waste-gate to let off the thoughts as they collect and expand the mind; but if the waste-gate is always open the water will soon run shallow. Many people use their tongues too much. Shut the gate and let streams of thought flow in till the mind is full, and then you may let off with some effect.

3. Never let the stream of passion move the tongue. Some people, when they are about to put this member in motion, hoist the wrong gate—they let out Passion instead of Reason. The tongue then makes a great noise, disturbs the quiet of the neighbors, exhausts the person's strength, but does no good. The whirlwind has ceased, but what is the benefit?

4. Look into the pond and see if there is water enough to move the wheel to any purpose before you open the gate; or plainly, think before you speak.

5. Never put the tongue in motion while your respondent has his in motion. The two streams will meet, and the reaction will be so great that the words of neither will reach the other, but come back in a blinding sprinkle upon himself.

THE LORDS PRAYER A MISSIONARY PRAYER.

Not only does the whole prayer aim at the advancement of Christ's kingdom, but in three distinct petitions, it directs us to pray for the coming of that kingdom, before we ask even for our daily bread.

Hallowed be thy name. Where sin abounds, God's name is not hallowed, but profaned; his attributes are despised, his worship neglected, and his altars overthrown to make way for idolatry and superstition. The prayer is, that God, as a Father, may be every where feared, and reverenced, and loved; that he may be sanctified in every heart, and honored and obeyed in every life; and that all may seek and find their happiness in him.

Thy kingdom come. The kingdom which is "righteousness, and peace, and joy in the Holy Ghost;" the kingdom whose head is Christ. For the coming of this kingdom we are to pray, till every where its doctrines are taught, its ordinances observed, its laws obeyed, and its Spirit diffused, to the glory of God and the salvation of men

Thy will be done on earth, as it is in heaven. We pray that God's will may every where be supreme; that every human will may be brought into perfect accordance with it; and he will may be done on earth as it is in heaven, cheerfully, universally, continually, till the whole world shall become [illegible] the world to Christ

Such are the three great petitions of this prayer; all closely connected, and mutually dependent, and each presenting [illegible] the world to Christ

Is this prayer our prayer? In the sincerity and fulness of our hearts can we and do we offer [illegible] through Christ can we, and do we, even before asking for daily bread, send up habitually, in all the fulness of its meaning, the prayer,—"Hallowed be thy name; thy kingdom come; thy will be done on earth, as it is in heaven?" If so, then we shall feel the importance of Christ's kingdom. Wherever the gospel is not preached, we shall feel that it should be. Far above all personal aims, far before any worldly object, we shall prize and seek first the kingdom of God and his righteousness. The coming of Christ's kingdom in its purity and power, will be the burden of our desires and supplications. In the closet, the family, the monthly concert, the public devotions of the sanctuary, our earnest prayer will be that the Holy Spirit may be poured out continually, that Christ's kingdom may come, and his will be done on earth, as in heaven.

We shall also give for the extension of Christ's kingdom. "Will you lend us in prayer?" said the chairman of a missionary meeting [illegible] rable minister of Christ The latter, as he rose, began feeling in his pocket, as if for something to give, when the former, supposing he had been misunderstood, said, "I did not ask you to contribute, but to pray" "Yes, yes," was the reply, "I know it, but I cannot pray without giving too." In the same spirit we should give as well as pray for the establishment of Christ's kingdom, as stewards of the manifold gifts of God. First giving ourselves to the Lord, we shall do what we can that others may be led to him Acting on the great principle of the Bible, that every Christian is a missionary in the sphere where God has placed him, we shall live for the upholding of his kingdom, as he gives opportunity. In our hearts, in the family, in the neighborhood, in the Sabbath-school, in the church, through the land, to the end of the earth, we shall do all in our power that the wide world may be redeemed, and its kingdoms become the kingdoms of our Lord and his Christ, that he may reign forever and ever.

Let us ask for grace that we may ever pray this missionary prayer, and ever live in accordance with its spirit

Abridged from the Am. Messenger

Family Circle.

PRUDY'S WHITE TEA

BY SOPHIE MAY.

"Blessings on the blessed children!" said Aunt Madge, coming into the nursery with a newly ironed apron for Susy. "So we little folks are going out to spend the day, are we?"

"Yes," said Prudy, dancing in high glee, "grandma wants me to go, and I'm going. I mean to do every single thing grandma wants me to."

"I wish you would go with us, Aunt Madge," said Grace, pouting, "we don't have half so good times with Aunt Louise."

"No, we don't!" said Prudy, "she wants us to 'take care' all the time. She don't love little girls when she has the nervous."

Almost while they were talking, Aunt Louise came into the room, looking prettier than ever in her new pink dress. She was a very young lady, hardly fifteen years old.

"Come, Prudy," said she, smiling, "you run up stairs and get my parasol, will you, that's a darling!"

But Prudy was picking a pebble out of her shoe, and did not start at once

"Ah," said Aunt Louise, drawing on her gloves, "Prudy isn't going to mind me!"

"Well, don't you see me getting up out of my chair? There, now, don't you see me got clear to the door!" said the child

"Oh dear!" said poor Aunt Louise, "what shall I do all this long day with three noisy children? I'm afraid some of them will get drowned, or run over, or break their necks! You see if something awful doesn't happen before we get back!"

"Oh, I hope not," replied her sister Madge, laughing.

"Here's your parasol, auntie," said Prudy, coming back. "I know who I love best of any body in this house, and it ain't the one that's got her bonnet on! It's you, e-r-e-s-t aunt, M-i-g, Madge!"

"Well, you ought to love your aunt Meg, all of you," said aunt Louise, laughing, "for she thinks you children are as lovely as little white rose-buds. Come, are you all ready? Then run along, and I'll follow after."

"Oh I'm so glad I'm alive," cried little Prudy, hopping on one foot "I hope I shall never die!"

"I just mean to be careful and not get a speck of dirt on my clean apron," whispered Susy to Grace. "I wish I'd brought my bib."

They had such a pleasant walk through the streets of the beautiful village, "in the sunshine calm and sweet." When they had almost reached Aunt Mary's house, Aunt Louise said:

"Now tell me if you're going to be good children, so I shan't be ashamed of you?"

"Why yes, indeed, auntie," said Grace, looking quite grieved.

"Oh, auntie," said Susy, "did you think we were going to be naughty?"

"No, you'll mean to be good, I dare say if you don't forget it. And you'll be a nice, dear little girl, won't you, Prudy?"

"I don' know," said Prudy, coolly.

"Don't know? Why, do you think I should have taken you visiting, if I hadn't supposed you'd try to be good?"

"Well, I didn't say I wouldn't," replied Prudy, with some dignity. "I said 'I don' know,' and when I say 'I don' know,' I mean yes."

"Well, I'm sure I hope you'll do the very best you can, and not make anybody crazy," sighed Aunt Louise.

By this time they had gone up the nice gravel-walk, and Grace had rung the door-bell Aunt Mary came to the door, opening her arms as if she wanted to embrace them all at once.

"Dear little souls," said she, "come right into the house and let me take off your things! I've been looking for you these two hours. This is my little nephew, Lonnie Adams. Shake hands with the little girls, my dear."

Lonnie was a fair-haired, sickly little boy, seven years old. The children felt acquainted with him at once. It was so pleasant in Aunt Mary's shaded parlor, and they took such delight in looking at the books and pictures, that they were all sorry when Aunt Louise "got nervous," and thought it was time they went off somewhere to play

"Very well," said dear Aunt Mary, "they may go with Lonnie all over the house and grounds if they like."

So all over the house and grounds they went in a few minutes, and at last came to a stand-still in Bridget's chamber over the kitchen, tired enough to sit down awhile—all but Prudy, who "didn't have any kind of tiredness about her."

"Look here, Prudy Parlin," said Grace, "you mustn't open that drawer!"

"Who owns it?" said Prudy, putting in both hands.

"Why, Bridget, I suppose"

"No, she doesn't," said Prudy, "God owns this drawer, and he's willing I should look into it as long as I'm a mind to"

But I'll tell Aunt Louise, you see if I don't That's the way little Paddy girls act that steal things!"

"I ain't a stealer," said Prudy "Now Gracey Clifford, I saw you once, and you was [illegible] cream out the cream-pot! Oh, here's a ink stand!"

"Put it right back," said Susy, "and come away"

"Let me take it," cried Lonnie, seizing it out of Prudy's hands

"I'm going to put it up at auction. I'm Mr Nelson riding horseback," said he, jumping on a stand "I'm ringing a bell. Oh yes! Oh yes! [illegible] my fine, fresh ink!"

"Give it to me," cried Grace, "it isn't yours!"

"Fresh ink, red as a lob-ster!"

"This minute," cried Grace

"As green as a pea. Who'll bid? Going! Going!

"Give it to me, Lonnie," said Susy, getting into a chair and reaching after it "You ain't fair a bit!"

"Do you say you bid a bit? It's yours. Going! Gone! Knocked off to Miss Parlin!"

Somehow in knocking it off out came the stopper, and over went the ink on Susy's fair, white [illegible] dress, frightening

"Don't tell that I did it!" cried he. "You know I didn't mean to. Won't you promise not to tell?"

"Yes," said Susy; though she ought not to have promised any such thing

Oh dear! Oh dear! what was to be done? Little black streams were trickling down the apron on to the dress. Grace pulled Susy to the sink, and Prudy thought she meant to put her into the washbowl, and tried to help

"I guess this honey soap will take it out," said Susy; but with all their washing and rinsing they could not make black white, any more than the poor negro could, who scoured his face

Stop a minute," cried Grace; "soap only makes it worse. Ma puts on milk."

"Oh dear, I wish we had some!" said Susy; "how can we get it?"

"I'll go milk the cow," said little Lonnie, anxious to do something

"I'll tell you what we'll do," said Grace; "we'll send Prudy down stairs to Bridget to ask for some milk to-day"

"I like milk and water the best," said Prudy, "with lots of sugar"

"Well, get that," said Grace. "It's just as good; and come right back with it, and don't tell about the ink getting spilled

Aunt Mary and Bridget were talking up the dinner when Prudy went down into the kitchen, calling out:

"Oh, Bridget, may I have some white tea?"

"White tay, is it?" said Bridget, "and what may that be, now?"

"Oh, some white tea in a cup, you know, with sugar. They let me have it every little once in a while."

"Milk and water, I suppose," said Aunt Mary; "hadn't you better wait till dinner, my dear?"

"But the girls can't wait," said Prudy, "they want it now"

"Oh, it's for the girls, is it?"

"Yes, but when they've washed the apron, I can drink the rest—with white sugar in it."

"The apron," said Aunt Mary, "what apron?"

"Oh, nothing but Susy's! I told grandma I'd be good, and I did be good—it wasn't me spilt the ink"

"Has some ink been spilled?" said Aunt Mary, and she rose from her chair and stopped beating the pudding sauce.

"Oh, I ain't a going to tell," cried Prudy, beginning to tremble. "I didn't, did I? They wouldn't 'low me to tell!"

Aunt Louise, passing through the kitchen, caught some of the last words, and rushed up stairs two steps at a time

"Just as I expected! Oh Susy Parlin, you naughty, naughty girl! What have you been into? Who spilled that ink?"

"It got tipped over," answered Susy, in a fright, but not forgetting her promise

"Of course it got tipped over! but not without hands, you careless girl! Do you get your shaker and march home as quick as ever you can. I must go with you."

Lonnie should have come forward now like a little gentleman and told the whole story, but—he had run away.

"Oh auntie," said Grace, "she wasn't a bit to blame—she"—

"Not a word," said Aunt Louise, "she shouldn't meddle with ink. If she was my little girl, I would have her sent to bed for the day. That dress and apron ought to be soaked this very minute. Susy never can keep out of mischief!"

"Och," muttered Bridget, who was listening at the stairs; "it's not much like the child's mother she is! A mother can [illegible] by when the children does such capers, and wait thil they get more sinse"

Poor little Susy had to go home in the noonday sun, hanging down her head like a guilty child, and crying all the way. Some of her tears were for her soiled clothes, some for her auntie's sharp words, and some for the nice dinner she had left.

"Oh Aunt Madge," sobbed she, when they had got home. "I kept as far behind Aunt Louise as I could, all the way, so nobody would think I was her little girl. She was ashamed of me, I looked so."

"There, there, try not cry," said Aunt Madge, as she took off Susy's soiled clothes.

"But I can't stop crying, I feel so bad! If there's any body that gets into a fuss, it's always me. Why is it always me? I'm all the time making some kind of trouble, and I wish there wasn't any such girl as me!"

Tears came into Aunt Madge's kind gray eyes, and she made up her mind that the poor little child should be comforted. So she quietly put away the silk dress she had been trying to finish, and after dinner took the fresh, tidy, happy little Susy across the fields to Aunt Mary's again, where the unhappy day was finished very joyfully after all.

"The truth is, Louise," said Aunt Madge, that night after the children were in bed, "Lonnie spilled that ink and Susy was not at all to blame! You scolded her without mercy for being careless, and she bore it all, because she would not break her promise to that cowardly boy!"

"Oh, how unjust I have been!" said Aunt Louise.

"You have, indeed," said Aunt Madge. "Only think what a trifling thing it is for a little child to soil her dress! And what a great thing to have her keep her word! Susy has a tender heart, and it grieves her to be blamed unjustly, but she would bear it all rather than tell a falsehood. For my part, I am proud of such a noble, truthful little niece"

COURTSHIP IN "HARD TIMES"

The following story of an English merchant's courtship when business was "pressing," may serve as an example while times are so very "hard:"—"The lady called at his counting house, and said that her business was to consult him on the propriety, or otherwise, of her accepting an offer of marriage which she had received. Now, for the first time, occurred to the merchant the idea of the holy estate in his own case. 'Marriage,' said he, listlessly turning over some West India correspondence. 'Well, I suppose everybody ought to marry, though such a thing never occurred to me before.—Have you given this gentleman an affirmative answer?' 'No.' 'Are your feelings particularly engaged in this matter?' 'Not particularly.' 'Well, then, Madam,' said he, turning round on his stool, 'if that be the case, and if you could dispense with courtship, for which I have no time, and think you could be comfortable with me, I am your humble servant to command' There were some people who thought that the lady had a purpose in going there; but if so, she prudently disguised it. She said she would consider the matter. The merchant saw her out with the same coolness as if she was merely one of his correspondents, and when she was gone five minutes, was once more immerged in his letters and ledgers. A day or two after he had a communication from the lady accepting his offer, very considerately excusing him from an elaborate courtship, and leaving him to name the 'most convenient day'—They were married"

THE WOMEN OF A NATION

I do not hesitate to say that the women give to every nation a moral temperament, which shows itself in the politics A hundred times I have seen weak men show real public virtue, because [illegible] were supported them, not by advice as to particulars, but by fortifying their feelings of duty, and by directing their ambition More frequently, I must confess, I have observed the domestic influence gradually [illegible] heater, self-seeker, thinking of public business only as a means of making himself comfortable—and this simply by contact with a well conducted woman, a faithful wife, an excellent mother, but [illegible] was entirely absent — Inquirer

(From the Youth's Evangelist)

WHAT CAN I DO?

A TRUE STORY

Robert S—— was the son of poor, filthy, and drunken parents They professed the Roman Catholic faith; but at the time I knew them they were so reduced by intemperance that they could not, or would not, attend even the services of their own church As I said, they were poor, and Robert, then about seven years old, was put to work with his father He was already a very bad boy, and soon learned to swear like his father For years he lived in ignorance—ignorance of that I cared [illegible] when one

No. 47 should be No. 46

dating series correct.

THE CHRISTIAN RECORDER.

Published by the African Methodist Episcopal Church in the United States, for the Dissemination of Religion, Morality, Literature and Science.

Rev. Elisha Weaver, Editor. PHILADELPHIA, NOVEMBER 22, 1862. Vol. II.—No. 47.—New Series. Whole No. 98.

THE CHRISTIAN RECORDER

AFRICAN METHODIST EPISCOPAL CHURCH

REV. ELISHA WEAVER,

No. 619 Pine Street, Philadelphia.

All letters and matters pertaining to the Book and subscribers' subscriptions, and all moneys belonging to the Book Concern or to the paper, must be directed to Rev. Elisha Weaver, No. 619 Pine St. All articles or matter for the Christian Recorder must be directed to the Rev. [illegible] Philadelphia.

TERMS

Two dollars a year, [illegible] Single copies, five cents.

ADVERTISEMENTS

We solicit Advertisements of all descriptions, suitable for a religious newspaper, which will be published as follows.

Cards or Advertisements, inserted for one year, provided they do not occupy more than [illegible] square, [illegible] will be charged [illegible] with the paper. Six months for six dollars paper included. [illegible]

[illegible]

Rev. J. P. CAMPBELL, Rev. A. W. WAYMAN,
J. M. WILLIAMS, P. T. WILLIAMS,
G. H. GRAHAM, [illegible]
Rev. L. ROSS

Poetry.

For the Christian Recorder.

FOR THE NATION

ISAIAH XXXII. 15

Say, in this wild, corrupted nation,
Blessed with a few who seek the Lord?
Say, in there one in every station
Who loves to obey Jehovah's word?

Are all agreed to increase the sadness
Of these dark and gloomy times?
Do all run on in head-strong madness
And scorn repentance at the throne?

Is this, indeed, our sad condition?
No—let me bless the God of grace!
There are a few, who, with contrition,
Lament for sin before his face.

Let me encourage their confession,
Their strong entreaties for this land;
Though it is a time of great transgression,
Yet surely God is still at hand.

Yet, humble souls, pray without ceasing
To you the Lord will lend an ear.
While sins and judgments are increasing,
O, pray in faith and persevere.

O, pray! nor be too much dejected:
Ask all in Jesus' worthy name,
Your suit shall never be rejected—
Through him we may forgiveness claim

Can manners join in each petition!
Nor tempt the Lord by your delay.
He gives repentance and remission
To all who do sincerely pray

Let every soul, in every station,
Join their assistance. Who can tell
But God may turn and bless the nation,
And send contention down to hell.

WILLIAM HAZZARD

For the Christian Recorder

ASK WHAT I SHALL GIVE THEE

1 KINGS III 5.

Shew me the soul to doubts exposed,
That such this question as proposed,
Ask, saith the Lord, and let me know
What I shall now on thee bestow

Say what thy wants and what thy woes,
Dost thou in me thy trust repose?
Art thou, my friend, sincerely true?
Speak, for thy spring of thought I view.

Art thou to nearness inclined?
Ask, and I will sublimate thy mind
Dost thou want love to Jesus' name?
Ask, and his matchless love proclaim.

Dost thou want peace and pardon sealed
Ask, for they wait to be revealed.
Dost thou want faith and holy fear?
Ask, and behold the blessing near.

Dost thou want strength 'gainst sin to fight?
Ask, and I'll make thee strong in might.
Dost thou want light and life divine?
Ask, and eternal life is thine.

Wilt thou be made completely whole?
Ask, and I'll renovate thy soul.
This instant ask, arise and pray,
Nor lose such blessings by delay

My kind and worthy friends, Adieu! May peace be multiplied to you! WM. HAZZARD.

For the Christian Recorder.

FREEDMEN AT FORTRESS MONROE, VA.

BRO. WEAVER:—At your request, I present to the public through you a brief view of the operations and wants among the Freedmen, among whom I have been laboring for more than a year past. With authority from Washington and Fortress Monroe, I commenced labors about Sept. 1, 1861 I made appeals for clothing, and several hundred barrels of new and second hand were distributed; books and teachers were sent, and a number of scholars organized, and numerous meetings and other missionary operations established. I was called to confirm the marriage of a number who, under the slave system, had lived together, or "taken up with each other," by mutual consent. Fortress Monroe and the vicinity near Hampton were the first scenes of my labors. As soon as the advance of our army permitted it, last Spring, we built a church and school house out of the ruins of the old Court-house—a place of injustice and oppression, thus being converted into a place for the education and salvation of the oppressed. There in sight of the whipping-tree, with its bark lacerated with the same strokes that fell on quivering flesh, we are teaching a free education and a free religion. Our work has now spread to Yorktown, Newport News, Norfolk, Portsmouth, and Suffolk, and has been attended with great success. Our first school in Hampton being first organized, is first in advancement. Its first teacher was the lamented Mary Peake, a free colored lady, whose memoir is soon to be published, and will be read with great interest. The present teacher is Miss P. Day, from Central New York, aided by several assistants. It now numbers 500, in two departments. On the 29th ult., I had the pleasure of attending a Quarterly rehearsal. The order of the school compared favorably with the best regulated schools of any section of our country, while all the exercises were marked with close attention and general [illegible] almost motionless silence for several minutes—an excellent discipline of self-command. The examination in different branches was very satisfactory, evincing capacity and assiduity on the part of both [illegible] a facility in reckoning, that will prevent the rising generation from being as subject to imposition as the present, and it was gratifying to hear many, who, a few months ago, commenced with the alphabet, reading with great fluency and propriety. Conspicuous among them were little Daisy Peake and Maria Cheeseman, each five years of age. Little Maria, at that early age, has the stability of riper years, and is often employed as monitor to keep the smaller classes. The speaking, considering the time devoted to preparation, disclosed the elocutionary powers of the Anglo Africans, as one of their peculiar characteristics. But the singing showed them capable of special excellence in music. In solo, semi chorus and chorus, the performance [illegible] every respect the school may be regarded as an excellent model for like efforts among Freedmen elsewhere. And in view of present educational success among this long neglected race, we must exclaim, what hath the Lord wrought! Several of the teachers employed are colored, and there is want of others, as ministers and teachers. Our [illegible] fruits of a full harvest of better things to come. And without claim to prophecy we may express the assurance that there is a better day coming. But before that better day arrives, we must supply the present pressing want.

[illegible] slaves are in good condition, morally, educationally, and physically,—many of them signally illustrating the ability of the colored man to take care of himself when "turned loose" on the continent.

But government has recently taken large numbers of able bodied men into service, and left thousands of women and children in Camps near Fortress Monroe and Norfolk, supplied with provisions, but quite destitute of clothing and bedding,—especially of shoes. Articles, new and second hand, will reach them by being sent to C. B. Wilder, Supt. Fortress Monroe, Va. The Quarter Master of this place is authorized to transport them free of charge.

L. C. LOCKWOOD,
Missionary

For the Christian Recorder.

A MOTHER'S LOVE

October the 28th, 1862

What are the correct views on this subject? Why is a love so deep planted in the bosom of the mother, that no language can describe it? You have seen the child die, and heard the lamentations of the father. The wailings of David over his son still ring in our ears, but the sorrows of the bereaved mother are too deep for wailing. You never hear her voice on such an occasion. Nature has given her no means by which to convey the agony of her sorrows. Why has God created this love in her heart?

The Indian mother who hangs her infant to the bough of the tree, and sings her wood song while the winds rock it, thinks no further than to rear up her child to be a warrior or a hunter. The African mother who carries her infant on her back to her daily toil, may think no further than that he may be a slave under a kind master, and the heart of the mother can never grow cold; her offspring may go out one by one, and be scattered to the four quarters of the globe, but the rivers that run, and the mountains that rear their heads, and the long deserts that lie between her and them, neither loosen her love, nor loosen the bonds which hold them to her heart. Time and distance do nothing towards extinguishing eternal fires, which burn in her heart from the moment that she first gazed on the face of her babe, to that in which she closes her eyes in the slumbers of death. She never remits her care, her anxieties, or her love for him.

The great object before the mother then, is to train up her child for eternity, for the service and presence of God to everlasting ages

And is it of any great consequence, whether as he passes through the streets he have the applause of beggars and of the vile of all classes? The good in the land will honor him. Let your child have heaven honor him, the Redeemed Church, and angels, and Christ, and God, the Father, and of what consequence are the honors of earth?

Suppose your son [illegible] among strangers, of what consequence is it whether he travel as a poor man's son, or a rich man's? The journey of life will soon be over, and he will never be asked whether he were rich or poor; you may not see him the object of admiration here, but hereafter you may see him stand among the sons of light at the right hand of Jesus.

JOSEPH C. CLARK

Woodbury, New Jersey

For the Christian Recorder

[illegible], Oct. 20, 1862

Dear Friend:—I am a native of Kent County, State of Delaware. The history of my being in Philadelphia to-day, is this. The colored people in Kent County, are the objects of hate, on the part of those whose sympathies favor the present rebellion against the government. Numbers have suffered to some extent, by being murdered and expelled from their home. These are facts to which I am witness. About two weeks ago, I was attacked, at least my house was surrounded about twelve o'clock at night, by a party of men who commanded me to clear my house in five minutes. I answered from the upper window, my back-room, that my family could not quit in such short time, as my family were sick; they then said that I could leave myself. Thinking it best for me to leave, and supposing that I was the principal object of their search, I came out by another door than that which they were guarding; and had got some distance from the house, before I was discovered by them, when they commenced firing shot at me. I ran and they pursued me, firing all the time, some of the shot taking effect, though not to any serious extent.

I am here now without any means of subsistence, my season's labor being left to the mercy of those whose vow is, that no negroes like me, about the wars, and the principles which enter into it, shall remain among them.

You may well judge, what the condition of my family is at present, and under the circumstances which I have mentioned. I am anxious to bring them to this city as early as possible.

There can be no doubt, but that plunder is a great object in these raids, which have occurred [illegible].

Any assistance from the public will be thankfully received. If I have employment, I can [illegible] indulgence of a friendly public.

Yours respectfully.

[illegible]—An English barrister who was accustomed to train students for the practice of law, and who [illegible] why he put students, from the very first, to the study and analysis of the most difficult parts of the sacred Scriptures?" "Because," said he, "there is nothing else like it in our language for the development of mind and character."

For the Christian Recorder.

MR. EDITOR:—Having some business with a minister who is a member of Bethel church, I called at his residence, and not finding him there I was informed that he was at the church. I proceeded to the church, and on entering the church I was surprised to find a number of persons there conversing, of both sexes. I remained at the door a few seconds to inquire of some of the members, if the meeting was a private one or not, but I was unable to get the desired information, however, I was informed that I could remain. But, as the gentleman I wished to see was not present, I withdrew without a knowledge of the nature of the meeting. But in a short time I found my friend, whom I was seeking, and he informed me the meeting was a convention, and invited me to go back with him. The invitation was accepted, though quite busy and should have been at my [illegible] at that hour; but I could not think of such a thing as there being a Convention of Coloured persons, called for the purpose of advancing the Coloured Race in any degree, and I [illegible] to be present if there was any avenue through which I could get admission and proceeded with my friend to the church. I had been seated but a few moments before I was surprised to learn that coloured children had been and was yet taught in Sabbath Schools by white teachers, within a few squares of Bethel church, and that they were not taught the Methodist Doctrines, though their parents were Methodists.

Again that the books used in the Sabbath-schools of the A. M. E. Church had been purchased at other Book stores and not at our own. This was almost too much for me to patiently bear, but it was followed by what I considered still worse. That was a resolution "requesting the ministers and teachers," for fear I have mistaken the words of the resolution, I will say it requested those whose duty it was to purchase the books, to buy them at their own book store.

But before the question was put to vote, the General Book Agent was called upon to answer, what was supposed to be, important questions, viz:—1st. Can you furnish such books as are needed? the answer was "I can," and will if called upon, and if I should not have those particular books at the time, give me one week's notice, and you can be accommodated. 2d. Will you sell them as cheaply as they can be obtained at other book stores? Answer, as cheap as they can be bought at any wholesale store in New York. 3d. You must not refer to New York but Philadelphia. To this the General Agent informed the gentlemen that New York was the general depot, and the place where books could be bought cheaper than in any other city.

Now, Sir, whilst these questions were being put to the Agent and answered, you cannot imagine my feelings. It was with great difficulty that I kept my seat. But knowing that I had no rights that the convention was bound to respect, I remained silent.

Now, Sir, let me call your attention to what, I think, is a great mistake with our people, and I must say a burning shame. 1st. If I am correctly informed, there are over forty thousand members of the A. M. E. church in this country, and they have only one weekly newspaper, and that is only [illegible] the General Book Steward, and many of the subscribers of the said paper are not members of the Methodist Church. Is it not painful to think that forty thousand members of the church will not sustain a single paper as it should be, what is or should be the influence of those forty thousand earnestly engaged to obtain subscribers? Should not each one have influence sufficient to obtain one outside of the church to subscribe? Yes, they should average at least three,—this being done it would give the paper a circulation [illegible] sixty thousand copies, and this being accomplished how long would it be before the A. M. E. church Book Concern would stand No 1 with all denominations?

But instead of this being done, the convention is of necessity, compelled to pass a resolution to request the leading members of the connexion to encourage their own Book Concern. Sir, just think of it, is that resolution to appear on record twenty years hence that our own people would not encourage their own store and labor, and go and place their means in the hands of their most [illegible]

I appeal to you, Sir, if possible have that resolution expunged from the minutes of your next meeting, and if any one object, open the door of the church and point to the sacred tomb of the [illegible] and ask them what he would say, if it was possible for the dead to speak. He would say, encourage [illegible] everywhere, and in every branch of business. If proof of this be demanded, refer them to the Rev. Stephen Smith, and ask him if that same Father and Founder did not send to him at Columbia, and buy all the lumber that he used in building two houses in Pine St., and solely because he was a coloured man? And what would he say now if it were possible for him to see how far his own beloved and long oppressed people had retrograded. How unwilling they are to maintain their reputation, and their independence, that he made so many sacrifices to obtain. I have no doubt that he often thought of what comfort and consolation it would be to his children, and his children's children. The concerns also think he was always the first of his race in this country to adopt plans for the independance of his own people, and that they would continue to improve. But, oh! where are they now, or where will they be if such a resolution must stand recorded on the minutes of the [illegible]

But, Sir, never let it so remain; let it be expunged: I would suggest this,—That every Elder, Deacon, or Preacher that has charge of a church or congregation, shall make it a duty to impress it upon his people at least once a month from the pulpit, and inform them of the great necessity of encouraging their own people by the purchase of books from their own book store, supporting the Editors to do the same in their closets and the teachers in their schools, and not rely in Philadelphia, but throughout the connexion [illegible] that in twelve months, you will see great and good effects.

Now, a word about the [illegible] that already alluded to. They were asked in a mild manner, and I am well persuaded they were intended [illegible] Long acquainted with the parties that asked them. I am thus satisfied of the fact.

But I only complain of this,—It is a question that I never asked a gentleman or brother, "Will you accommodate me as cheaply as other persons." But I try him and if I think his prices are high, reason with him, and it may be that he can explain the cause.

I should be glad if I could be allowed through the columns of your paper, to say something about the great necessity of our people to encourage each other, but lest it might be thought by some that I had some selfish motives, I will refrain. I have only to say, that I feel it my duty to encourage my own people, when and wherever I can. I have never bought but one ton of coal from any one but Messrs. Smith and Vidal,—I never ask them is their coal as cheap as other people, or do they give good weight.

But a few weeks ago I had an occasion to visit a lady's dwelling, and seeing that her coal bin had just been replenished, I inquired of her the amount of coal received. She answered, One and a half tons, the price paid for it, $6.50. For curiosity I took a tape from my pocket and took the dimensions as near as possible, and on my return home, I found that I had just received a ton myself, and upon measurement from the same tape, I think that she had about one bushel more coal than myself. Now, if that bushel weighs 1000 pounds, then her ton was as good as mine; but if not, I got the best weight and at a cheaper rate.

The same day I met another lady, and in conversation learned that she was going out to Broad Street, to purchase a ton of coal, for which she said she would have to pay seven dollars, and that it was too bad these hard times. I answered, Yes, but I thought she could do better, that Smith and Vidal could furnish her coal cheaper. Then of course she asked if their coal was good. My reply was, that I was not a judge of coal, but knowing that my wife was,—who was a friend of her's, I told her that my wife had been using their coal for eight or ten years, and had found no fault yet. [illegible] the trouble. Finding the next question, I said they will give you good weight, and if she would go with me I would go to the office and learn the price, as I wished to pay for a ton I had just received. But like other women, not wishing to be hurried into measures, she declined, and said she would return home; if I would see Mr. Smith, she would wait until I returned. I proceeded immediately to his residence, and was informed by Mr. Vidal that the coal could be delivered that day for six dollars and twenty-five cents per ton. I returned and reported, and after a few minutes she told me if he would let her have it for six dollars she would take it. My patience being tried I did not return. I was afterwards informed that she had purchased the ton of coal at seven dollars, and not that at six dollars and twenty-five cents. I have only mentioned this circumstance as one among the thousands that occur with our people.

WILLIAM H. [illegible]

Philadelphia, Nov. 19, 1862

ALONE WITH JESUS

Alone with Jesus! leave me here,
Without a wish, without a fear;
My pulse is weak and faint my breath,
But is he not the Lord of death?
And if I live, or if I die,
'Tis all the same when he is nigh.

Alone with Jesus! ye who weep,
Seek comfort elsewhere [illegible]
My [illegible]
And yours—O, I have proved it long,
But when had earthly friend the power
To comfort in a dying hour!

Alone with Jesus! O how sweet
In health to worship at his feet!
But sweeter far, when day by day
We droop, and pine, and waste away,
To feel his arms around us close,
And in his bosom find repose!

Alone with Jesus! how secure;
Vile in myself, in him how pure,
The tempests beat, the waters beat,
They harm me not in my retreat.
Night deepens—and its gloom and chill
[illegible]

Alone with Jesus! what a calm
The infant in its mother's arms!
Before me death and judgment rise,
I turn my head and close my eyes.
There's naught for me to fear, or do,
I know that he will bear me through!

Alone with Jesus! [illegible]
I even see my friends through him;
Time, space, all things, below, above,
Reveal to me one Life, one Love:
That One in whom all glories shine
All beauties meet—that One is mine!

THE FORGIVEN ARE FORGIVING

What we feel God is to us becomes very much the determining tone of our character to others. That person who looks up to God as an angry and revengeful judge, ever exacting, will look forth upon [illegible] acting also and never giving. But he who is taught to look up to God as forgiving and giving, and that continually, will go forth the exponent of the same holy and beautiful spirit; forgiving [illegible] for Christ's sake has forgiven us. Let me explain, however, that this forgiveness of your brother, this forgiveness of injury, is not a mere stifling of temper. There are men, constitutionally, of a proud, haughty spirit, who may have received a great injury; their spirit is chafed, they are irritated, vexed, but such is their pride that they do not show it. They dwell upon the offence—they cherish the revenge in their own hearts; and would not show that they were chafed or irritated, or let an expression escape their lips that they are so. This is not forgiving one another; forgiveness of one another is in the heart; it lies in the subduedness of the heart, the warming of the affections, the sanctifying of all the feelings. It is not silence without, but inner kindness. It is not management for the sake of appearance, but it is love in the inmost recesses of the human heart. And this feeling is happiness. Is it not, now, one of the striking incidental proofs of the divine origin of this blessed book, that everything it recommends so far contributes to the present happiness of man, and everything it dissuades from so far discourages what would do men injury? Fallen as our nature is, it feels that all the malignant passions are springs of wretchedness. Revenge, envy, hatred, malice, all uncharitableness, are stings that enter [illegible] And, on the other hand, fallen as we are, difficult as it may be, love, charity, peace, forgiving one another, thinking the best of everybody, wishing well to every human being, are emotions so far fraught with happiness. And if there be one happy emotion upon earth, it is first the sense that we are forgiven, and only second, our spirit of forgiveness. [illegible] The great poet has reflected the same sentiment when he said,—

It droppeth, as the gentle rain from heaven
[illegible]
It blesseth him that gives and him that takes
'Tis mightiest in the mightiest. It becomes
[illegible]

So true is it, "Blessed are the merciful." We see in these truths the true extinction of war, national, social, universal. It is not a Peace Society, or Peace [illegible] tions, that will ever arrest the ravages of war. It is the sinner, not the soldier, that makes war. It is [illegible] the cannon its dread mission. It is man's evil heart, not the firebrands or the match, that ignites the gunpowder. And the reform that is to end in universal peace is the regeneration of every heart; and only when every heart is regenerated, and not till then, will war cease. Terrible as war is, terrible as it is in our present experience, yet it is, and will be, and will bless more, until man personally becomes man forgiven, and through the force of that forgiveness learns to forgive as he is forgiven. I do not say that every war is the result of passion on our part. No doubt there are sinfulness and imperfection in it. The only war that this blessed gospel admits is a defensive one; and even such war is exceptional; it provides for it as a thing that will be. When kings on their thrones, when cabinet ministers in their cabinets, when fathers in their families, when masters in their places of business, shall all pray from the depths of the heart, "Forgive us our debts, as we forgive our debtors," then and only then—then and only then, when Christ shall come, and the kingdom shall be His, and His glory shall lighten every soul, the sword shall be beaten into the ploughshare, and the spear into the pruning-hook, and the nations shall learn war no more.—Dr. [illegible]

TESTIMONY OF AN AGED SAINT

At a prayer meeting held recently, at one of our watering places, a distinguished clergyman rose and said:

"I have twice in my life, been brought very low by illness, so that I supposed myself near the eternal world. The first time, I had a great sense of the worthlessness of earthly things. Everything connected with this life seemed small—exceedingly small—and of little consequence. I did not wish to return to it, and engage again in its bustling scenes. They seemed too trivial to engage the attention of an immortal being. I longed to bid them adieu, and depart to a brighter world where the wicked cease from troubling, and the weary are at rest.

"The second experience was quite different. I was [illegible] and I was thankful for the privilege of living in this world, and of doing good even in the smallest things. I saw that every act of life took hold on eternity—that it was a great privilege to live here, that I might do something, even if it were but a small act, to advance the Redeemer's kingdom; and that no effort put forth in this direction, with reliance upon divine aid, could be lost. It appeared to me an unspeakable privilege to live here, to do anything, however small, to promote the glory of God, and the good of man. I wished to come back to life for this purpose. The speaker added, with deep emotion: "It seemed to me that, to get this deep impression was worth all the suffering of a severe illness."

MELANCHOLY DAYS

"The melancholy days have come, the saddest of the year,
Of sodden woods, and wailing winds, and meadows brown and sere." —Bryant.

"Yes, indeed, the melancholy days have come." I said to myself as the rain beat against the windows, and the wind brought successive showers of yellow leaves to the ground. Every thing seemed dismal on that first day of November, and I felt a premature shiver as I thought of the cold, icy clouds that would continually be coming up somewhere between me and the shy November sun.

Nov. 3d—Well, I awoke this morning expecting another day of wailing winds and all the other dismal et ceteras the poet has appropriated to November. "The melancholy days," indeed! Why, I awoke this morning in the softest air and sweetest light that ever blessed an autumn day. And I have lived to see its sun go down in mellow beauty, and to shame myself for the chills and dreariness too soon anticipated.

How the katy-dids and crickets have revelled to-day in the few green boughs left by the early frosts, and the too domestic fly has been all alive in the glad sunshine. Some writer speaks of a summer day, in her experience, that was a poem; and friend Clio by my side, and I conclude that this first sweet greeting of the month of gloom has been another. "And yet," says Clio, "I don't exactly like that expression, 'a poem.'" "Oh!" I reply, "the poetry, my friend, is all in the soul of him who notes the [illegible] to-day, with its fallen leaves, and dripping skies, and melancholy presentiments, was also a poem; but sadder, darker, more suggestive of the dreary side of life."

Has not each day of our life, despite its great cares, and its little cares, its vexations and its cloudy skies, a poetry and a beauty of its own, and a deep meaning to the attentive soul? We have much to say—every one has—of days of beauty or of sadness; days of trial; days of gloom; but the brightness or the darkness, the pleasure or the sorrow of any day, springs more from the beholder's own mind, than from the outer world. Sunshine has no light for a sad heart, music is often but the voice of wailing to an afflicted spirit.

Would we have the days always bright and cheerful, we must make our lives so. The poet's [illegible] days will have little sorrow for the healthful, happy beings. Our days, made bright by duties well or nobly done, will have no need of mourning with the "wailing winds," or shivering with a sympathetic chill, because the [illegible] woods are bare and the meadows brown.

Let us always be looking for sunshine, though the clouds may sometimes lower above our heads. By cheerful, dutiful obedience to the good of every day, let us make of each one a sweet and happy poem, that will be beautiful in recollection, lovely in repetition.

Another thought connected with the closing hours of such a day. How will it seem to have been spent, as seen from eternity? Have its thoughts, desires, and acts been such as can then be reviewed with no remorse for evil done—with no regret for duties left undone?

Thus might we profitably question each day as it takes its place with those that have gone before into the vast eternity, adding thereto the prayer of the Psalmist, "So teach us to number our days, that we may apply our hearts unto wisdom."

A GENERAL JUDGMENT

Disbelievers in revelation have sometimes questioned the necessity and propriety of a general judgment, on the ground that every man's doom [illegible] death. It is to be remembered, however, that the purpose of the judgment is not simply to decide each man's doom for eternity, but also to reveal the character of God as a moral Governor in its true light, and to justify before the universe his dealings with his creatures.

In referring to the last day, Paul speaks of it, [illegible] to teach that one important design of the judgment is to reveal to men the righteousness of the divine administration. God's justice is now often called into question; his treatment of sinners is said to be arbitrary and unrighteous. The existence of moral evil, the inability of man, and the fearful doom denounced against the impenitent are often represented, by unbelievers and skeptics, as evidence of a lack of justice in God's dealings with men. A most important purpose in view, therefore, in a general judgment, is the vindication before all men of the divine righteousness. "The Lord cometh, to execute judgment upon all, and to convince all that are ungodly among them of all their ungodly deeds, which they have ungodly committed, and of all their hard speeches which ungodly sinners have spoken against him."

The judgment will furnish complete and lasting refutation of all objections, drawn from the course of Divine Providence, against God's perfect justice. Every mouth will be stopped, and the ways of God to man will be fully justified. Thus a final judgment will be both proper and necessary, though death fixes every man's condition for eternity.—The Examiner.

LACUSTRINE HABITATIONS.

A work has been recently published in France by M. Troyon, entitled the Lacustrine Abodes of Men, or the relics of primeval antiquity discovered in the lakes of Switzerland. It appears that the boatmen on those lakes have, from time immemorial, observed in various places near the shore, under the calm transparent water, the heads of numberless wooden stakes protruding through the deposit which is generally found at the bottom. Along with these large blocks of wood have been visible, stags' horns of great size, bones, and fragments of pottery. There was a lurking traditional belief that these were the remains of dwellings, occupied by the people of ancient times who built on the lakes in order to shelter themselves from wild beasts. For centuries, however, no one had been tempted to look closer into these scattered fragments of a forgotten world. It was not until the year 1854 that the attention of scientific men was called to the discovery, and the result of the earliest investigations on the subject was to establish the existence of a submerged "lake village" in a certain part of Lake Zurich. This discovery was rapidly followed by others. Similar sites have been traced in Lakes Constance, Geneva, Neufchatel, Bienne, Morat, Sempach, and in several smaller ones. Indeed, they now seem to multiply in the zeal-books of archæologists with almost inconvenient rapidity. Two years ago twenty-six such village-sites had been described in the Lake of Neufchatel alone; twenty-four in that of Geneva; sixteen in that of Constance; and the amount of ancient objects recovered from their debris has reached a truly formidable magnitude. Twenty-four thousand of these have been raised from a single locality in Lake Neufchatel. "We are still very far," says M. Troyon, "from having recovered all the relics imbedded in the silt of the lakes and peat of the valleys. Nevertheless we are by this time acquainted with a sufficient number of points of remarkable richness to enable us to give, by their description, an idea of that ancient population which had the habit of living on these waters."

These people were of smaller stature than the present inhabitants of Europe, as is shown by the diminutive size of their ornaments, and in particular by the grasp of the handles of their implements. They were a race of hunters; arrow heads and lance-heads, and the bones of wild animals are heaped around their dwellings. They were also pastoral, for the bones of sheep and oxen, and in some instances of a small species of horse, are found in close juxtaposition with those of the deer, the wild boar, and other beasts of the forest. They were, to some extent, agricultural, for grains of wheat and barley, kernels of cultivated fruit, nuts, and cakes of unleavened meal, and even slices of small apples and pears, as if cut for preserving, are found among the relics. There are less certain traces of mats, or cordage, of hemp or flax. These pre historical men had their domestic animals, and fed their dogs with the relics of their dinner; for almost all the bones containing marrow are broken, while many of them are marked by the teeth of dogs.

SUPPORT OF THE MINISTRY.

In a recent address the Rev. Dr. Guthrie made an earnest appeal to Christian parents to devote their sons of promise to the ministry, and to Christians generally to provide more generously for the maintenance of those who hold the sacred office. The foreign correspondent of one of our exchanges gives the following quotation as dispensing of a "pious evasion" of the duty of providing for the [illegible] ministry at the present time:

It was contained in a remark made by a lady to the wife of a poor minister of a wealthy congregation, who, by keeping boarders, had to eke out a living that some of the merchant princes in his congregation could have paid out of their own pockets and never missed it. The lady, rustling in silks, and in a blaze of jewels, went to visit the minister's wife, more a lady than herself, with the exception of the dress. The lady condoled with the minister's wife on the straitened circumstances and means of the minister, and she condoled thus: "Ah, my dear!" looking into the pale, care-worn face of the excellent woman, "My dear," she said, "your reward is above!" From the bloodless lips of some poor sinner in an unfurnished garret, where the man of God has gone to smooth the dying pillow and to minister consolation in that last dark hour, I have been thankful to hear those words, "Your reward is above" but from the silks and satins—disgusting! It is cant, the vilest cant, and enough to make religion sink in the nostrils of the world. Would that saying pay the minister's stipend—pay the minister's accounts? Fancy the worthy man going to his baker or his butcher, and instead of paying down money turning up the white of his eyes, saying, "Your reward is above" I fancy they would say, "O no, my good sir, that will not pay the bill!" And I say what does not pay the bill does not pay the minister's stipends as they ought to be paid.

LO! I AM WITH YOU

Amid that prostration of earthly hopes, when unable to glance one thought on a dark future, when the stricken spirit, like a wounded bird hes struggling in the dust, with broken wing and wailing cry, longing for pinions to fly away from a weary world to the rest and quiet of the grave; to that hour of earthly dissolution, he who has the keys of death at his girdle, nay, who has tasted death himself, and better still, who has com- [illegible] cheer you, to comfort you, to support and sustain you. I, who once wept at a grave, am here to weep with you; I will be at your side in all that trying future; I will make my grace sufficient for you, and my promises precious to you, and my love better than all the earthly affection. The one is changeable—the one must perish; I am the strength of your heart and your portion forever.

PREACHING POLITICS.—In Dr. Sprague's [illegible] the life of Dr. David Ely, of Huntingdon, Conn., in which may be found a very good illustration of [illegible] now a days. The Doctor was a zealous friend of the cause of the American Colonies in the days of the American Revolution, and among his people were a good many tories, who were on the watch for his words. He was charged with preaching politics in a neighboring parish, and it was thought proper to trace the report to its source. The parish was visited, and inquiry [illegible] "Well, sir if he did not preach politics, he pr[illegible] "What did he say?" "Why, he said, Thou shalt not steal!"

COME TO JESUS

BY WM. BRAND [illegible]

"Lead me, Saviour, like a Shepherd, lead us."

Children! hear the Saviour saying,
With a voice of tender love,
"Come to me, my voice obeying,
[illegible]
Come to Jesus!
Come and seek the home above.

Learn of Him, the meek and lowly,
He will give you strength and grace;
In his footsteps, pure and holy,
Now begin the heavenly race.
Come to Jesus!
He will be your resting place.

While the days of youth are winging
Swiftly in their rapid flight,
Come, with joy and gladness bringing,
All the hopes that charm the sight.
Come to Jesus!
Make his service your delight.

He is kind and all-forgiving,
He is still the children's Friend;
Gracious Shepherd! He is living,
And he chosen will defend.
Come to Jesus!
He will keep you to the end.

Jesus from his throne [illegible]
By his voice of tender love;
Come, before him humbly falling,
Seek the glorious rest above.
Come to Jesus!
Come and find the rest above.

Christian Intelligencer.

THE IMMORTALITY OF THE SOUL.

Some [illegible] have been so deluded as to cause them to deny this great doctrine; affirming that man is no better, in his final state, than the beasts of the field. This appears singular in the extreme—why man, who is endowed with such valuable reasoning powers, and with a mind susceptible of such great development and increase, should imagine himself calculated to exist only during the short career allotted him this side the grave. It [illegible] why man given at first such a weak and imbecile mind, which strengthens only by exercise and observation, and that slowly? Why is he not at first blessed with a fully developed reason, competent to guide him discreetly through the various vicissitudes of life, since, according to their doctrine, this is the ultimate end of his existence? Why should man be permitted to toil from day to day, and from year to year, until his eyes are dimmed with age, and his body tottering over the grave, endeavoring to improve himself and prepare for usefulness and intellectual enjoyment? For, when he has become thus fitted to live and employ his improved talents for the benefit and happiness of himself and his fellow beings, his physical abilities are worn out and inadequate to the task. How, then, shall he be repaid for his industrious toil? Does it not appear from this, that it would have been more to his advantage had he been content with nature's gifts as presented, without uselessly wasting his time to improve them?

If truth be the foundation of this doctrine, why do we not rather behold man possessing a mind capable of immediate perfect development and full attainment in mental acquirements? Why are we gifted with conscientiousness—a sense of right and wrong, and an innate desire for the ultimate triumph of good over evil? Why is it that we seldom, if never meet with contentment in man, but always this habit of looking forward with confident desire to a change for the better—to better times, to an improvement in everything; for we seldom yield for a moment to despair. Let a man be cast down in what manner he may, he still believes he will not always remain so, but hopes it will be better with him, in some manner, ere long.

Now, we see not the least mark of this disposition in the beast, which all acknowledge to be destined only for this world. If the beast receives sufficient food and shelter, and is mercifully used, he appears fully satisfied and contented, desiring [illegible]

These few thoughts are, I think, sufficient to scatter to the wind this erroneous doctrine of the mortality of the soul in the mind of a reasonable person. Who can fail to believe that man is destined for endless ages of eternity? Is it not a [illegible] that we improve our blessed privileges this side the grave, our minds and souls shall strengthen, and grow in purity and holiness, becoming more and more like the great Creator of the universe? We can, also, at one thought, see the great sin of wasting our time—allowing the precious gifts of God to pass unnoticed and unimproved. Need it surprise us, if, after a life of sin and neglect, our immortal souls be consigned to endless punishment? Nay, might we not rather be more surprised that we are not stricken down in the midst of our daring [illegible] ness? I need not refer any one to the word of God for [illegible] every one knows the incontrovertible evidences therein given. If nature and nature's God declare the immortality of the soul, why should insignificant man dare to deny it? Let us rather labor for the everlasting salvation offered us by grace, through Jesus Christ, our only hope.

P.

TRUST IN GOD.

"Put not your trust in princes, nor in the son of man, in whom there is no help," is an old precept, well known and easily repeated. One would think that such a precept would be accepted at once in times of distress. But, though we can talk about it nobly, and recommend it to others when everything goes smoothly with us, how prone we are to go to one and another for help in seasons of affliction; forgetting to look up to the hills whence cometh our help. Hence so many passages in God's Word declaring the folly of trusting in man, and directing our attention to Him alone who can succor in time of need. Hence, too, it is that we are so often like the heath in the desert, not seeing when good cometh.

PUT YOUR SHOULDER TO THE WHEEL.

There's a voice that speaks within us
In we own no craven heart,
As we [illegible] on pathway
Taking our appointed part;
And it bids us bear our burden,
Heavy though it seem and feel,
[illegible]
Put our shoulder to the wheel

What though clouds are darking o'er us,
They but hide a tranquil sky,
Or should storm drops fall around us,
Soon the sunshine bids them dry.
[illegible]
Heart, be stout and true as steel!
[illegible]
Put your shoulder to the wheel.

Fainting hands will never aid us
To upright the load of care;
"Up and stirring" be your motto,
Work to suffer, strong to bear.
'Tis not chance that guides our footsteps,
Or our destiny can seal;
With a will then, strong and steady,
Put your shoulder to the wheel.

Men of worth have conn'd the lesson
Men of might have trod its truth,
Aged lips have breathed the maxim
[illegible]
And be sure throughout life's journey
Many a wounded heart would heal,
If we all as friends and brothers
Put our shoulder to the wheel.

We hear a great deal about the duty of filial obedience, but who says anything about parental [illegible] [illegible] time [illegible] and not so much among the poor as among the rich. It is not enough to bequeath money to children. Give them counsel, example, discipline—that is, give them a share of your time.

The Christian Recorder.

Philadelphia, November 22, 1862.

REPORT

Look here, brethren, read this, and remember it, too:—

The meeting of the Executive Committee, and their appeal to the ministers having the charge of circuits and stations and to the members of the A. M. E Church, is as follows:

Dear Brethren and Friends:—According to the authority vested in our Editor and General Book Steward, he called together the Executive Committee of the Book Concern on the 15th of November, at which time we had a very pleasant interview together in relation to the present flattering condition of the Book Concern and the wants of the Church.

Brethren, let us tell you for once that the Book Concern is really in a prosperous condition—and how it is that our Editor and General Book Steward has so managed to keep the Book Concern and paper in the hopeful condition in which we find it, and with such scant means, we confess we are at a loss to know—and more especially in times like these, when many a firm and paper, with a much larger capital, have succumbed. But, brethren, in order to hold this position, and to keep up a growing interest throughout the connexion, there are means needed—first, there is a very great demand for hymn-books in every direction in the connexion, and our Editor and General Book Steward has informed us there is only about seven or eight in the store, and has no more to bind up. Therefore, the Committee deem it advisable, in view of such a demand for our hymn-books, and especially in the Western country, to advise our General Book Steward to get out another edition, so that our people may be supplied. Tracts, too, brethren, it will require about $500. This should be done without delay. We therefore recommend to each elder, deacon and preacher to properly lay this vital matter before their congregations, and to take up a free-will collection, and to forward the same to the Gen. Book Steward and Editor, so that it may be in his hands by the 15th of December, or 20th, at the farthest—and he will give each credit through this paper. Now we ask our brethren, shall the Book Steward have the amount? We will answer for the Philadelphia district—our portion will be forthcoming. We also recommend to our Bishops, while travelling around, to speak of this matter.

Committee.—William Moore, L. S. Lewis, W. H. Waters, Stephen Smith, and W. D. W. Schureman.

ELISHA WEAVER, Chairman.

CONCERT AT NATIONAL HALL.

Mr. A. Burris and his troupe propose giving one of their interesting concerts for the benefit of the contrabands in Washington, D. C. We bespeak a full house on the occasion, for two reasons—first, because the object is a humane one, and an act of much-needed charity; second, we believe that the manner in which the concert is to be conducted will secure an overflowing and intelligent audience.

The musical talent and ability of Mr. Burris and his company of artists are too well known to need any special reference from us. They have done much, and their untiring efforts should meet with a liberal patronage from an appreciating and generous public.

NOTICE.

We recommend to all of our ministers and members of the Church to read a common-sense article written by Dr. Longfellow, which we think will be sufficient to open their eyes—and then to act accordingly.

NOTICE

The Ladies of the Dorcas Society will hold a Grand Social Repast at the Philadelphia Institute, Lombard Street, on Thursday evening, the 27th instant, 1862—the proceeds to be applied to the benefit of the Society. Admission, only Ten Cents. ☞ Tickets can be had at the Book Store, No. 619 Pine street.

We hope to see the Hall crowded on the occasion, for the Society has done much good—and they most certainly deserve great praise for their untiring energy.

PUBLIC LECTURES AT OUR HIGH SCHOOL.

In our issue last week we briefly called attention to the lecture at the High School rooms, Lombard Street above Seventh, by Professor John Collins. The lecture was on Cube. It was full of instruction, given in a very free, lively and interesting manner. It was illustrated by over thirty drawings and sketches. Such a lecture one could not attend without being both entertained and instructed. It was the first of a course of lectures to be given at the same place, on topics of scientific, literary, and religious interest. We desire to call the attention of our readers to this course. It will consist of ten or twelve discourses, which are all prepared with particular reference to imparting instruction in an interesting and entertaining manner. They will be given one every two weeks, and are open free to all. We are sure that all of our readers, especially our young friends, ought, as far as possible, to attend. An hour once in two weeks cannot be better spent by our young friends. We invite them to attend.

The second lecture of the course will be given by Professor E. D. Bassett, next Wednesday evening, 26th inst., on the Atmosphere. It will be fully illustrated by numerous experiments with the air-pump and by other means. Remember, next Wednesday evening, beginning at 8 o'clock.

ACKNOWLEDGMENTS

Of Rev. S. T. Jones, of Steubenville, O., for hymn-books,	$6 75
Rev. S. T. Jones, for Recorder,	1 00
Mrs. Dorsey,	1 00
Mr. P. R. Brake, of Frankford, Pa.,	1 25
Of Rev. James Lynch,	1 00

NOTICE.

By request, Dr. H. J. Brown of Burlington, will deliver another of his interesting scientific lectures on Philosophy and Phrenology, in Bethel Wesley Church, Lombard Street, on Wednesday evening next, November 26th. The lectures will be illustrated with a beautiful collection of life size paintings. Admission 10 cts. The lecture will commence at 7½ o'clock precisely, and will conclude with a public phrenological examination.

J. A. WILLIAMS, Pastor

GREAT devotion to literary pursuits, without active exertion, often engender indigestion and want of manliness.

PASSING AWAY.

Having received intelligence on last Tuesday morning that our much esteemed and beloved brother in the gospel, Father Roberson, of Frankford, was very low, and rapidly sinking, I gave notice to the Rev Stephen Smith, and we at once agreed to go out and see him. Brother Smith got out his carriage, and we started at 1 o'clock for Frankford. Brethren and friends, you may imagine our feelings as we drew near his quiet homestead—language cannot describe the emotions that pressed our heart-strings as we alighted from the carriage at his door. Several persons were standing around in the yard, whose countenances bore the imprint of sadness. We entered the door, and with slow and muffled tread we approached the bed side of the dying hero. We saw the finger of death hovering over his calm brow. We were told by his dear motherly wife, and several other persons around his couch, that he knew no one, failing even to recognise his wife. I knelt down by his bed-side, and asked him if he knew me. At once he opened his eyes, as from a deep meditation, and whispered out that it was Elisha. (He used to address me that way.) He told me it was all well with him, praise the Lord. He also recognised Brother Smith, one of the old east elders now in the church. We left for home that evening, with no hopes of again seeing him alive in this world. While we are writing, we are almost confident that he is in that better land with saints and angels. But while we pen these lines, we cannot but mourn over the manner in which he lost his life—by being compelled to stand on the front of the cars on that rainy, disagreeable night—an old man of God, some seventy years of age—a burning shame to an enlightened people, in a Christian land. We could not have expected more among the savage nations. Had he been some lazy thief, or a drunkard, it would have been bad enough then, but more excusable. As we shall say more about our father and brother again, we will close by saying that if he has departed this life, we shall more definitely refer to him.

DIED.

On last Tuesday night, at two minutes after 11 o'clock, at his residence in Frankford, the Rev RICHARD ROBERSON, a minister of long-standing in the A. M. E. Church departed this life. His funeral will take place on Sabbath, the 23d inst. His remains will be conveyed to the church in Frankford, of which he was the elder in charge, and, after some remarks shall have been made, he will be conveyed to the mother dust.

A great and good man has passed away. The aged Christian warrior has thrown aside his shield and buckler, and entered into his rest. He was a man of much moral and religious worth. The Philadelphia Conference has lost one of her old, tried and trusty defenders. He leaves behind him to mourn his loss a very dear and motherly wife. Farewell, Father Roberson—but we hope to see you again.

We refer our readers to a report of the ministers

A MEETING ON THE DEATH OF REV RICHARD ROBERSON.

A number of the ministers of the A. M. E. Church Assembly this morning, Nov. 20th, 1862, at 10 o'clock, at Bethel Church, Sixth Street, pursuant to the call of Rev. J. P. Campbell, for the purpose of taking under consideration the departure and funeral service of the Rev. Richard Roberson, who departed this life at 11 o'clock, P. M., on Tuesday night, the 18th, aged about 70 years. The Rev. J. G. Bulaugh was appointed Chairman, and A. L. Stanford Secretary

Resolved, That a committee of five, consisting of three Itinerant and two Local Elders, be appointed to draft a series of resolutions, expressive of our deep feeling of regret, in consequence of the demise of our venerable father and brother, the late Rev. Richard Roberson. Committee appointed, viz., Revs. J. G Bulaugh, A. L. Stanford, E. Weaver, S. Smith, and J. P. B. Eddy.

Resolved, That the committee be requested to report on Saturday morning at ten o'clock, at Bethel Church.

Resolved, That the Bishops and ministers be hereby notified of the death of one of the eldest Itinerant ministers connected with our wide spread connexion. His funeral services will be solemnly performed on the following Sabbath, at his residence in the city of Frankford, between the hours of 1 and 2 o'clock, P. M., from thence his remains will be conveyed to the church of which he was pastor in said city, where religious services will commence at 3 o'clock, after which the body of this tried and faithful friend to the cause of Christianity, will be placed to rest in the silent sepulchre.

The committee appointed, with the approval of all present, recommend the above notice through the Recorder, as being the most expedient way of communicating the said news to many friends of the deceased.

Chairman.—J. G. Bulaugh.
Secretary.—A. L. Stanford.

DIED.

We also record the death of Mrs. Thomas Todd, the wife of Bro. Todd, who is one of the oldest members in Bethel Church. Sister Todd departed this life on last Tuesday morning, the 18th inst. She died in living triumph of faith in Jesus. Brother Todd, her husband, must be about 60 years old.

THE VISITATION OF THE HOLY SPIRIT

We believe that the Holy Spirit has really paid a pleasant visit to Bethel A. M. E. Church, in Sixth Street, Philadelphia. The Rev. J. P. Campbell, who is the elder in charge, conducts the revival in the name of our good Lord. There has been a number of conversions. Sometimes, when the Church is praying for the Lord to bless them, a revival, and to be with them, certain obstacles arise which tend to impede the movement. Rum is the first that comes around the altar, and sometimes it prevents those from coming who would otherwise do so. They look at the moral status. But the good work has been going steadily on in Bethel Church. We think that no one need be ashamed [illegible] the most of them at any rate. [illegible] grace in the hearts, and that they may ever prove to [illegible] the cause of Jesus will did [illegible] they might live [illegible] Our heart's desire and prayer to God is, that a radical change in the moral condition of our people in this city should be speedily effected. There is a work for each Christian to do to bring this state of things about. Oh, Christians, let us work together sweetly, let us see eye to eye, let us see as one man, let us pray as one prayer—and God will most surely bless the effort.

WASHINGTON CORRESPONDENT.

Mr. Editor.—Among the most interesting occurrences that have taken place since you last heard from your correspondent, is the removal of Gen McClellan, that man who was Napoleonized through the papers, and crowned by negro chattel-makers, monarch of America. It was thought by many here, as it was thought of John C Calhoun in South Carolina, that if McClellan would die the world would end, but [illegible] earth lies."

Though I am informed that a few military epaulet straps, became strangulated at the idea, and resigned; but with that exception I believe every body thinks it was done through military necessity.

Abraham Lincoln will yet write his name upon the pages of History, so indelibly, that time's indefatigable cycles shall never be able to efface it. Not only has he proved himself above the fledges of partyism, by killing Gen. Fremont on the one side, and Gen. McClellan on the other, but that proclamation, over which the triumphant notes of heaven rolled along the confines of bliss, with evidences of higher ecstasies, than customarily, reverberated in overpowering rapture, across the boundaries of light and felicity, will tell upon the annals of eternity in character, of such splendor, as shall gild the name of Abraham Lincoln forever. Would that Milton's poetic notes could unthread the maze of his virtues, and they were engraven in the rock of ages. But his acts will stand emblazoned in colors of glaring glory, amid the retinue of the world honored, till the sun of time shall set no more to rise.

The choir of Israel church assisted by some of the celebrated vocalists of Union Bethel, and 15th Street Presbyterian churches, gave a grand concert for the benefit of said church, on last Monday and Tuesday nights. The concert was conducted by Prof. J. F Wilkerson, whose acquaintance with musical science none will question. I deem it inexpedient to deal in personalities in this matter, as so many would be entitled to a panegyrical notice, that adequate remarks might be an intrusion upon your columns. But the pieces were well selected and judiciously executed. The singing, however, was much better the second than it was the first night. This grew out of the fact, that they neglected on the first night, to ventilate the church, and the crowd being so dense, the oxygen of the air was soon exhausted or absorbed, and the house became so impregnated with carbonized matter, that a harsh hoarseness soon followed, which materially disturbed the symphony of the music. But that annoyance was arrested the second night by a more philosophical discretion. And thus nature and art were brought into harmony, with such a glorious success, that the rhapsodical modulations which poured wave after wave through the ravished audience, held them enchantingly till the spell was broken by its finis, and then laudatory acclamations burst forth, the shouts, whistles, hand claps and feet stamps, in every part of the house. The concert upon the whole was a grand affair, and not unproductive of a moral lesson.

Several distinguished ladies, belonging to said church, have been holding what they call a festival in the new lecture room for the past week. The names are too numerous to give in detail, but Mrs. Casandra Dent, a lady of unflinching nerve, was the prime mover of it.

The several colored churches in the city were notified last Sabbath to send five delegates on Friday night to Union Bethel church, as business of importance would demand their attention. In accordance with said notice they met, at which time they temporarily organized themselves into a meeting, by electing Mr. William Slade as chairman and secretary pro. tem., &c. The object of the meeting was then stated, to be for the purpose of organizing upon some systematic basis, a plan by which the contrabands in our city could be cared for, and the commiseration of the various churches could be converged into Union Relief Associations, and stop that too long practised fraud, which has been going on by parties assuming to be friends, when their acts prove them inveterate enemies to our people. They, however, adjourned without doing more than laying out the plan of operation. I will give a fuller account in my next.

This afternoon a terrible explosion took place in the hospital lot, near Seventh Street bridge. It appears they had some powder condemned by the Government, to which they set fire, and the powder proved to be a great deal better than they anticipated. And thus it made the most terrific report ever heard by any in this city. It appeared that the very foundations of the earth gave way, and not only did hands shake and tremble, but the very air vibrations were so dreadfully intensified, that for whole squares it shivered every glass window to atoms. In many places it not only broke the glass, but knocked out the entire sash, split doors and silenced clocks.

I was told that the excitement would likely injure some persons considerably.

The first Baptist church have granted their pastor, Rev. Mr. Leonard, a furlough for six months, for the purpose visiting Liberia. Rev. Mr. Maddan, recently from the Allegheny Institute, is employed to fill his place till his return.

A venerable sister many years a member of Israel church, viz.: Sylvia Wilson, died yesterday, Nov. 14th, at 6 o'clock, P. M., after a week's sickness. She will be remembered by several ministers, as her house was always the receptacle for that class of care-burdened travellers.

President Lincoln has been for several days refusing to see any one, however high their position. He is either preparing his message, or don't intend to be swerved from his principles.

H. M. T.

Washington, Nov. 15th, 1862.

NOTICE

We have on hand bottles of liniment gotten up by Rev. J. C. Lewis. This medicine [illegible] and we can offer it to the public [illegible] and all [illegible] get of us will have it. Any [illegible] which [illegible]

A child of six years falling asleep at church during a long Sabbath evening discourse, waking before its conclusion, innocently asked: "Mother, is it this Sabbath night or is it next Sabbath night?"

For the Christian Recorder.

NOT AT AFFLICTIONS.

DEAR FRIENDS:—While travelling through the scenes of time, we meet with many trials and afflictions; but, thank God, they are the means which our heavenly Father uses to recover us from the influence of this sinful world, and to promote our usefulness here and our happiness beyond this vale of tears. Hear what the Psalmist says: "Before I was afflicted, I went astray; but now have I learned to keep thy law." Who knows to what extremity of sin and folly we might have gone, had God not laid the rod of afflictions upon us? Eternal [illegible] earth lies."

[illegible] laws, and walk not in his judgments, he will visit their transgressions with a rod, and their iniquities with stripes. Sometimes we set our affections inordinately upon a dear brother or sister, perhaps a lovely child. In this we sinned. God saw that we were growing earthly-minded. He commissioned the messenger of death to remove that idol out of the way, that we might find our all in him. He hath declared that he doth not willingly grieve nor afflict the children of men; but his faithfulness prompted him to remove from us that which he foresaw would prove our ruin. By this he calls us back to himself, that we may lose sight of the things that would bind us to earth, and place our affections on things heavenly and divine. Afflictions serve as a test of Christian graces. When he hath tried us, we shall come forth as gold. It was by afflictions that I was brought to the Saviour. Again, I say, afflictions are designed to promote our happiness hereafter. They yield the peaceable fruits of righteousness to those that are exercised thereby. Therefore, let us not mourn at afflictions, but rather rejoice, knowing that our light afflictions, which are but for a moment, will work out for us a far more exceeding and eternal weight of glory. And at the last day we shall stand with that company which no man can number, which have come up through great tribulation—have washed their robes and made them white in the blood of the Lamb.

H. A. B. J.

MR. EDITOR:—It is but three weeks since I was informed that there was such a paper as The Christian Recorder. I have purchased three of Bro Shreeves, and, indeed, I have become very much interested in this paper; and I am happy, indeed, to see that our people, who, for many years, have been ground down to the earth by the iron heel of affliction, are not ashamed nor afraid to come up and let their enemies know that they are a people that are not brutes; but men and women, possessing intellects as well as themselves.

Yours, truly,
HESTER A. B. JAY.

Providence, R. I.

For the Christian Recorder

I will say a word in reference to brother Shreeves; he has been quite successful thus far. The society seems to be becoming more active and spirited, and he has some awakenings, and there seems to be an impression made upon the consciences of many, tending toward good. The Sabbath-school is in a thriving state, and quite encouraging. They had quite an interesting exhibition for the benefit of their library, the purchasing of books, &c., on the 13th. They had a crowded house, and were insisted on to have it over again, to which they consented, and it will come off on the 19th inst.

In conclusion I would assign brother Shreeves from department, he being a young man, a strictly correct Christian gentleman. Pray for him, that he may, as Joseph of old, ever be able to care for and feed his flock, with wholesome food, and be the instrument of gathering in the lost sheep.

L. S. LEWIS.

For the Christian Recorder.

MR. EDITOR:—The past week has been one of some interest in our city, in a religious, as well as a literary point of view.

Rev. James Lynch has just closed a protracted meeting of some considerable interest. Many were added to his charge. They bid fair to become useful in their day and generation.

Rev. Bishop Payne has been in our city for two weeks. He preached a very able missionary sermon in Bethel Church on Sabbath before last. He showed the importance of our Church waking up to the great subject of missions. He also informed the congregation that there would soon be an opening in South Carolina.

Bishop Payne also preached last Sabbath in the Sharp St. M. E. Church, to a very large congregation. His text was Deut. v. 20. The sermon was much admired by all who heard it.

On last Thursday night a large and intelligent congregation assembled at Bethel Church, to witness the presentation of a gold headed cane to Bishop Payne, by the young gentlemen of the several lyceums of our city. The presentation speech was made by Mr. Jas. H. A. Johnson, of the Galbreath Lyceum. It was short, but much to the purpose. He assured the Bishop that the only motive which actuated them to present him that cane was a desire to show their appreciation of him as a Christian minister and a scholar.

Bishop Payne replied, thanking the young gentlemen for their kindness in presenting him a staff upon which to lean as he treads the down-hill of time. He said he should remember their kindness throughout his future life. He urged them to go on in their literary pursuit until they become scholars of the first magnitude.

On the same occasion, Mrs E. L. Tillman, on the part of the ladies of our city, presented to the lady of Rev James Lynch, a beautiful set of China. By this act of kindness Mrs. Lynch is assured that she is welcome to our city.

On last Saturday morning, the "Mary Caroline Stevens," (the Colonization Ship) sailed from the port for Liberia, Africa. Among the passengers were Mrs. Alexander Crummel and Mrs. McKinney Armstrong. We recognised among the passengers the familiar face of Rev. John Seys, the long and tried friend of African Colonization. There were several very intelligent young men from St Thomas also on board. We wish them all a pleasant and safe passage.

Mr Wm J. Watkins, the gifted orator, is lecturing to large congregations in our city. Mr. W., as a lecturer, has no superior in this state.

[illegible] A. M. E. Church recently by [illegible] York Pa., will be ordained on next Sabbath, the 23d inst. We hope to see many of our friends there to help us [illegible] Conference next year.

A. W. W.

Baltimore, Nov. 12th, 1862.

Doctor—"John, did Mrs. Green get the medicine I ordered?" Druggist's Clerk—"I guess so, for I saw crape on the door this morning."

FAST LIVING.

It is painful to know how many families strive desperately and yet unavailingly, to "get ahead" in New York City; the failure arising too often from their setting out with a style of living which was decided on in ignorance of what it ought to be, in consequence of forming an opinion from those who were living beyond their means, or who had resources greater than their own, thus the strife to "keep up," involves those excessive efforts, those anxious toils and corroding cares which eat out all the joys of life, undermine the health, and make a premature grave, leaving children with no other heritage, but the necessities of the same toils and cares, with the same false ambitions, and to make of life a failure, also!

THE BLIND.—It is stated that there are about [illegible] the proportion being greater near the equator and less toward the poles. In Egypt, one in every hundred of the population is blind, while in Russia the proportion is about one in one thousand; the average throughout Europe is one in 1400. In the United States there are about 18,000 blind persons, averaging one in 1550 of the population. The first efforts to ameliorate the condition of the blind, as a class, were made in Paris in 1782, when a school was established with such success that similar institutions were soon commenced in many parts of Great Britain. The first school of the kind in this country was opened in Boston in 1832, and Mr Bowen was one of six children who were first gathered within it. There are now sixteen of these benevolent organizations in the country.

HOW TO BUILD AN ICE HOUSE

Since publishing the following mode of constructing our own ice house two years since, we have received numerous applications for a copy of the paper containing it, and by others that we would republish it. To republish is the best we can do. The success of the house has more than met our expectations, which were confident. When well packed there is comparatively no waste.

We built our own house, twenty feet square, all above ground, enclosing the same with tongue and groove plank—one and a quarter inch thick—with battened joints. Next inward of this we [illegible] dressed boards nailed on horizontally. Within this was placed [illegible] dressed boards, [illegible] and grooved, and placed also horizontally. The latter space or chamber was packed with spent tan, charcoal dust, and rice chaff, in equal parts. This we are satisfied is the best arrangement for the protection of ice from the exterior heat of summer. However heated the outer surface may become, it will not communicate that heat through the air chamber to the contiguous chamber filled with packing. Besides, the space packed is constantly chilled by its contiguity to the large body of ice within.

In our own structure we carried the inner ceiling to and under the rafters, so as to create an air space under the roof. In this, however, were left ventilating openings, so as to avoid the accumulation of heated air. The sides of the ice should have a packing of saw-dust, shavings or straw, closely pressed next to the ceiling, and well covered on the top when filled.

MAXIMS FOR PARENTS.

(FROM A HANDBILL PUBLISHED IN BIRMINGHAM.)

"When the ground is soft and gentle, it is time to sow the seed; when the branch is tender, we can train it easiest; when the stream is small we can best turn its course."

1. Begin to train your children from the cradle. From their earliest infancy, inculcate the necessity of obedience, instant, unhesitating obedience. Obedience is very soon understood even by an infant. Read Prov. xxii. 6; Col. iii. 20; Eph. vi 1—3.

2 Unite firmness with gentleness. Let your children understand that you mean exactly what you say. Gen. xxiii. 19; 1 Samuel iii. 13; 1 Timothy iii 4.

3. Never give them anything because they cry for it.

4. Seldom threaten; and be always careful to keep your word. Prov. xiv. 18; xxiii 13, 14; Lev xix. 3.

5. Never promise them anything unless you are sure you can give them what you promise.

6. Always punish your children for wilfully disobeying you, but never punish in a passion. Be calm as a clock, yet decisive. Prov. xiv. 29; [illegible]

7. Do not be always correcting your children; and never use violent or terrifying punishments. Take the rod (as Solomon says,) let it tingle, and pray God to bless it. A little boy had been guilty of lying and stealing. His father talked with him on the greatness of his sin, told him he must punish him, represented to him the consequences, as far worse than his present punishment, and then chastised him. [illegible] child, and from that time he shunned both [illegible] what you have forbidden under the same [illegible] 9. Teach them early to tell the truth on all occasions. If you allow them to shuffle and deceive in small matters, they will soon do it in greater, till all reverence for truth is lost. Prov. xii. [illegible]

10. Be very careful what company your children keep. He that walketh with wise men shall be wise; but a companion of fools shall be destroyed. Prov. xiii 20.

11 Make your children useful as soon as they are able, and find employment for them as soon as possible. Prov. x 4, xviii 9, xix. 15; 2 Thess. iii 10.

12. Teach your children not to waste anything; to be clean and tidy; to sit down quietly and in good order to their meals; to take care of, and mend their clothes; to have a place for everything, and everything in its place." 1 Cor xiv. 40; John vi. 12.

13 Never suffer yourself to be amused by an immodest action; nor, by a smile, encourage those seeds of evil which, unless destroyed, will bring forth the fruits of vice and misery. Eph. v. 11, 12.

14 Encourage your children to do well; show them you are pleased when they do well. Prov. i. 1, 9.

15. Teach your children to pray, by praying with and for them yourself. Maintain the worship of God in your family, if you desire His blessing to descend on you and yours. Josh. xxiv. 15 Psalm ci 2.

16. Impress upon their minds that eternity is before them, and that those only are truly wise who secure eternal blessings. Say, "My child, what concerns you most, what I am most anxious about, is not what you are to be, or to possess here, for a little while; but what you are to be, [illegible] 15; Matt. xix 14

[illegible] they would wish their children to be; for it is only by the power of the Gospel of Christ in our own hearts that we shall be enabled to bring up our children for God.

GENTLEMANLY LADIES.—In a railroad car the seats [illegible] by a [illegible] one of the ladies, with a smile, hesitating, with this," said the gallant Hibernian, "yer welcome [illegible] and time, for a smile from such gentlemanly ladies!" and he retired hostily to the next car, amid the cheers of his fellow passengers.

CHRONOLOGY OF THE WAR

1860.

Meeting of South Carolina Secession Convention
[illegible]
Major Anderson moves [illegible] Fort Moultrie to Fort Sumter
John B. Floyd resigned position as Secretary of War
[illegible]

1861

Jan 1 Ben Wade introduces [illegible] in the Senate
Departure of South Carolina Commissioners from Washington
Buchanan—Fast
Mississippi Convention passed ordinance of secession
State of the Union
Florida and Alabama passed the ordinance of secession
[illegible]
Navy Yard at Pensacola seized by the rebels
Secession ordinance passed by Georgia Convention
Jeff Davis withdrew from the Senate
[illegible]
Feb 4 Mint and custom house at New Orleans
The Montgomery Convention organized
[illegible]
Jeff Davis elected President and Alexander H. Stephens Vice President of the Southern Confederacy by the Montgomery Convention
Jeff Davis Inaugurated
Mar 4 Pres Lincoln arrived in Washington
Texas declared out of the Union
Cowrie from the Montgomery Government at Washington
[illegible]
April 11 President's call for 75,000 men
[illegible]
Massachusetts Sixth regiment attacked in Baltimore
New York Seventh regiment reaches Washington
Gosport Navy Yard abandoned
24,000 stand of arms taken by Illinois troops from St Louis Arsenal
Capture of Camp Frost at St Louis by General Lyon
General Butler enters Baltimore
Ordinance of secession passed by North Carolina Convention
Telegraphic despatches seized throughout the South
[illegible]
Battle of Boonville, Mo.
Marshall Kane arrested
[illegible]
Battle of Carthage, Missouri
Rich Mountain, Western Va
[illegible]
Battle of Bull Run
General Fremont arrives at St. Louis
General McClellan arrives at Washington
Battle of Dug Spring, Mo.
[illegible]
Battle of Wilson's Creek, and death of General Lyon
The banks agree to take $50,000,000 of Government loan
Capture of Forts at Hatteras
General Fremont's proclamation
General Grant takes possession of Paducah
Battle of Summerville, Western Va
The President modifies Fremont's Proclamation
Battle of Cheat Mountain, Western Va
Surrender of Lexington, Mo.
National Fast
Munson's Hill evacuated
Wilson's Zouaves attacked at Santa Rosa Island
[illegible]
Attack on our fleet at the mouth of the Mississippi
Battle of Ball's Bluff and death of Senator Baker
[illegible]
Zagonyi's charge at Springfield
Gen. McClellan appointed General in-chief
Battle of Belmont, Mo
Capture of Port Royal, S. C.
General Halleck appointed Fremont's successor
[illegible]
Fast in rebel States
News of the capture of Mason and Slidell
The rebels attack Fort Pickens
Congress met
General Phelps landed troops at Ship Island
Battle of Camp Alleghany
Stone fleet sunk in Charleston harbor
Battle of Drainsville
News of the settlement of the Trent affair

1862.

Jan. 9 General Burnside's fleet sailed from Annapolis
18 Banks defeated Humphrey Marshall
Secretary Cameron retires from the Cabinet (about)
[illegible]
Feb 13 Battle of Mill Spring and death of Zollicoffer
20 Expulsion of Mr Bright of Indiana from the Senate (about)
25 Capture of Fort Henry
[illegible]
Feb 6 Fort Donelson
16 [illegible]
27 Nashville occupied (about)
Mar. 6—8 Battle of Pea Ridge
Destruction of the Cumberland and Congress by the Merrimac
Manassas evacuated by the rebels
[illegible] of Newbern
Evacuation of New Madrid by the rebels (about)
15 [illegible]
28 Battle of Winchester
Apr. 6, 7 Shiloh or Pittsburgh Landing
7 Surrender of Island No 10 to Com Foote
11 Fort Pulaski
[illegible]
[illegible] of New Orleans
Evacuation of Yorktown
Battle of Williamsburgh
Gen Wool takes possession of Norfolk
Battle of West Point
[illegible]
Head [illegible]
Naval battle near Fort Wright on the Mississippi
[illegible]
The Merrimac blown up
Robert Small runs the steamer Planter out of Charleston
The Monitor and Galena repulsed near Fort Darling on James River
Hunter's proclamation annulled by the President
Federal Victory at Lewisburgh, Western Va.
Col. Kenley's 1st Maryland regiment routed at Front Royal
May 8 Gen Banks retreats through Winchester
23 Evacuation of Corinth
31 and June 1 Battle of Fair Oaks or Seven Pines
6 Great naval victory before Memphis
8 Battle of Cross Keys
8 Port Republic
18 Rebel raid at White House, rear McClellan's army
26—July 1 Retreat at James Island near Charleston
Great battles in front of Richmond
26 President Lincoln calls for 300,000 volunteers
July 1 Congress adjourns
10 The rebels attack Murfreesboro
16 General Pope takes command of the Army of Virginia
The rebel iron clad gunboat Arkansas succeeds in passing our fleet to Vicksburg
21 The President calls for 300,000 militia
Aug 1 Battle of Malvern Hill
5 Engagements at Cumberland Gap
Battle of Baton Rouge, and destruction of the Arkansas
6 Gen McCook murdered by the rebels
Great War Meeting at Washington, and speech
[illegible]
Battle of Cedar Mountain
Surrender of Independence, Mo
[illegible]
Indian massacres in Minnesota begin
[illegible]
Williamsburg evacuated by the Federal troops
Guerilla raid on Catlett's Station
[illegible]
Battle of Kettle Run
Battle of Richmond, Ky.
Second Battle of Bull Run
[illegible]
Battle of Chantilly, Gens Kearney and Stevens
[illegible]
General McClellan assumes command at Washington
[illegible]
[illegible]
[illegible] Md., and Munfordsville, Ky.
Surrender of Harper's Ferry
[illegible]
Battle of Antietam
Rebel evacuation of Maryland
Retreat of Price at Iuka
Emancipation Proclamation of Pres Lincoln
Convention of Loyal Governors at Altoona Pa

GENERALS OF THE SOUTHWEST

ROSECRANS.—Major General WM. STARKE ROSECRANS is about five feet eight inches; firmly built—his shape displaying his German origin—his motions are quick, his mind almost intuitive. His age is about forty two. His face is weather-worn, but bears a warm, cordial style, which never leaves it. When conversing he looks you square in the face. There is no air of superiority in his manner, he approaches you as a friend, talks to you as a friend, and bids you good day as a friend. His orders to officers are given with a pleasant recognition of their rights. He cannot but be popular, it is constitutional. He has now a big job on his hands, but it will be done in a soldierly manner.

CRITTENDEN.—Major General Thos L. CRITTENDEN (son of Hon John J.) is perhaps thirty-eight years of age, five feet nine inches; little in form, and active in motion; his hair, eyes and beard are quite dark, his face weather-beaten, bearing a strong resemblance to his father's. General CRITTENDEN is mild natured, gentlemanly [illegible] and has an affable shake of the hand and a pleasant word for all, in fact, a true Kentucky gentleman. As an officer he is [illegible] deservedly popular with his officers and men; is a good, not a great, soldier, and I think an honest, true-hearted patriot.

HOUSEAU.—Here are form and features that give the world assurance of a man. Major-General LOVELL H. ROUSSEAU, in form and feature, is probably the most conspicuous General in the American army. He is full six feet two inches in height, of heavy, muscular frame, at the same time lithe and active. His face says fight all over it. He is very dark-featured, big-whiskered, and eyes like coals of fire, and a nose decidedly of the pugilistic curve. He lives the Union and fights it [illegible] He led the first regiment of [illegible] into the city of Louisville after the war began—the Louisville legion. He did this against the protest of large numbers of influential tender footed Unionists, who feared that the bloody scenes enacted at Baltimore would be re-enacted. But he told them he was prepared for the issue, and should seek it. His regiment was not molested, but on the contrary was received with the most marked manifestations of gratification. It was a great blow for the Union cause in Kentucky. After that day BRECKINRIDGE, PRESTON and other Secessionists, deemed it valorous to get out of the State.

DUMONT.—Brigadier General EBENEZER DUMONT, our Indiana General, is full five feet four inches in height, his legs monopolizing the lion's share of his longitude; weighs about 110 pounds; [illegible] hair, and moustache very dark, in fact, quite Frenchy. He is perhaps forty-five years of age. General DUMONT has the reputation of being a good soldier.

BOYLE.—Brigadier-General JAMES T. BOYLE is post commander here. In height he measures five feet eight, inclined to corpulency, and perhaps forty years of age. His complexion is fair, his hair light and curly. He is well suited to his place; cordial, gentlemanly, ready to do a favor, attentive to his duties, and hates Rebels, whom he denounces in good SAXON.

JOE PARSONS—A MARYLAND BRAVE

A correspondent of the Boston Transcript, writing from the hospitals of Alexandria, relates the following anecdote:—Joe enlisted in the First Maryland Regiment, and was plainly a "rough" originally. As we passed along the hall we first saw him crouched near an open window, lustily singing, "I'm a bold Soldier boy," and observing the broad bandage over his eyes, I said, "What's your name, my good fellow?" "Joe, sir," he answered, "Joe Parsons." "And what is the matter with you?" "Blind, sir, blind as a bat." "In battle?" "Yes, at Antietam. Both eyes shot out at one clip." Poor Joe was in the front, at Antietam creek, and a Minnie ball had passed directly through his eyes, across his face, destroying his sight forever. He was but twenty years old, but he was as happy as a lark! "It is dreadful," I said. "I'm very thankful I am alive, sir. It might ha' been worse, yer see," he continued. And then he told his story.

"I was hit," he said, "and it knocked me down. I lay there all night, and the next day the fight was renewed. I could stand the pain, yer see, but the balls was flyin' all round, and I wanted to get away. I couldn't see nothin' though. So I waited and listened; and at last I heard a feller groanin' beyond me. 'Hello!' says I, "Hello, yourself,' says he. 'Who be yer?' says I—a Rebel?' 'You're a Yankee,' says he. 'So I am, says I; 'What's the matter with you?' 'My leg's smashed,' says he. 'Can't yer walk?' 'No,' 'Can yer see?' 'Yes.' 'Well,' says I, 'you're a Rebel, but will you do me a very little favor?' 'I will,' says he, 'if I kee.' Then I says, 'Well, ole butternut, I can't see nothin. My eyes is knocked out; but I ken walk. Come over yere. Let's git out o' this. You p'int the way, an' I'll tote yer off the field on my back.' 'Bully for you,' says he. And so we managed to git together. We shook hands on it. I took a wink outer his canteen, and he got on to my shoulders.

I did the walkin' for both, an' he did the navigatin.' An' of his didn't make me carry him straight into a Rebel Colonel's tent, a mile away, I'm a liar! How'sever, the Colonel came up, an' says he, 'Whar d'yer come from? who be yer?' I told him. He said I was done for, and couldn't do no more about'n; an' he sent me over to our lines. So, after three days, I came down here with the wounded boys, where we're doin' pretty well, all things considered." "But you will never see the light again, my poor fellow," I suggested, sympathetically. "That's so," he answered, glibly, "but I can't help it, you notice. I did my dooty—got shot, pop in the eye—an' that's my comfort'n, not my fault,—as the old man said of his blind hoss. But—I'm a bold soldier boy."

THE SNAKE IN THE GRASS.

BY JOHN G. SAXE.

Come listen a while to me, my lad,
Come listen to me for a spell;
I'll tell a tale to you
For a moment be dumb,
For your uncle is going to tell
What befell
A youth who loved liquor too well.

A clever young man was he, my lad,
And with beauty uncommonly blest,
Ere with brandy and wine
He began to decline,
And he passed for a person possessed.
I protest,
The temperance plan is the best.

One evening he went to a tavern, my lad,
He [illegible]
And there spied a [illegible]
Rum, brandy and such,
There [illegible] right,"
What your aunt might entitle a fright.

The fellow fell into a snooze, my lad;
'Twas a horrible slumber he takes
He trembles with fear
[illegible]
Oh! how he quivers and shakes
When he wakes,
And raves about horrid great "snakes!"

'Tis a warning to you and me, my lad!
Next morning he took to his bed;
And he never got up
[illegible]
Though properly physicked and bled;
And I treat,
Next day, the poor fellow was dead!

You've heard of the snake in the grass, my lad—
Of the viper concealed in the grass,
But
Man's deadliest foe
Is a snake of a different class,
Alas!
'Tis the viper that lurks in the glass!

[illegible]
(A passion I think rather low,)
Don't visit to see 'em,
[illegible]
'Tis very much better to go
And visit a regular show.

Domestic Items.

Observance of the Sabbath

[illegible] Washington [illegible] general order has been issued respecting the observance of the [illegible] Sunday [illegible]

[illegible] Monroe, Washington [illegible] 1861, [illegible] and Navy, directs and enjoins the orderly observance of the Sabbath by the officers and men in the military and [illegible]

"The importance, for man and beast, of the proper rest of one day in seven, the right influence on the character of the soldier, a becoming deference to the best sentiment of mankind, a Christian people, and a due regard for the Divine will, demand that Sabbath labor in the army and navy be reduced to the measure of strict necessity.

"To [illegible] and [illegible] Navy [illegible] should not suffice, nor the cause they defend be imperiled by the profanation of the day and name of the Most High. At this time of public distress, adopting the words of Washington in 1776—'Men may find enough to do in the service of God and their country, without absolutely disowning themselves to vice and immorality.'

"The first general order issued by the Father of his Country, after the Declaration of Independence, indicates the spirit in which our institutions were founded, and [illegible] be defended.

"The General hopes and trusts that every officer and man will endeavor to act as becomes a Christian soldier, defending the dearest rights and liberties of his country."

(Signed) ABRAHAM LINCOLN.

National Finances.—The public debt of the United States may be divided into three classes—that contracted prior to the loan of $250,000,000, granted in July, 1861; the loan of that date, and those authorized by Congress at its last session.

The amount of debts of the first class will probably reach about $118,000,000. Of the second class, the $250,000,000 loan, $150,000,000 is made up of the 7 3-10ths, of which about $132,000,000 have been issued; $50,000,000 6 per cents due in 1881, and 50,000,000 of the demand notes, which were made receivable for dues at the custom House. About one-half of these are already cancelled, and are being retired at the rate of two hundred thousand dollars daily. Their places, however, are supplied by what are termed "new issue" of demand notes.

Since the passage of the Act of July, 1861, the Government has relied chiefly upon its demand notes—upon the deposits made with several of the Sub-Treasurers, and by the issue of certificates of indebtedness. Of the latter about sixty-six millions dollars have been issued. Of the new issue of Treasury notes, about one hundred and eighty million dollars are already in circulation. The Department is now paying them out at the rate of six hundred thousand dollars daily.

Of the [illegible] million [illegible] dred dollars have been issued. The exact amount of deposits with the Sub-Treasurer on call is about sixty-five million dollars. The aggregate [illegible] of the Department, consequently, will foot up as follows:—

Debts contracted prior to July, 1861,...	$118,000,000
Bonds bearing 7 3-10 per cent. interest,	132,000,000
Bonds bearing 6 per cent. interest, payable in 1881,.....	50,000,000
Certificates of indebtedness,.....	66,000,000
Deposits with the Sub-Treasury, and payable on call,.....	65,000,000
Treasury notes, now issued,.....	140,000,000
Custom House notes,.....	23,000,000
The Five-twenty year bonds,.....	18,571,100
Total indebtedness,.....	$855,571,100

The statement, we believe, is approximately correct, taking the figures as they stand on the 25th instant, and making the liabilities of Government considerably less than the current estimates. It should relieve all apprehension as to any embarrassment to be caused by our public debt. The interest on the total amount at six per cent. is only $39,214,266. But only $419,571,100 draw interest, reducing the charge upon the Treasury from this quarter to $25,974,266. To meet this charge we have the revenue from customs, which will probably equal $60,000,000, the present year, and the revenues from the extraordinary sources recently provided.

Where the Flood of Bank Paper Comes From.—By recent statements of the Banks in the three principal cities of the Union, their circulation and specie were as follows:

	specie.	circulation.
New York, Nov. 9,.....	$38,794,763	$9,782,490
Boston, Nov. 10,.....	7,885,980	8,194,125
Philadelphia, Nov 16,.....	5,221,621	4,709,487
Total,.....	$52,284,230	$22,675,472

This exhibit is quite suggestive. By the last annual report (1861) of the state of the Banks in the United States the specie and circulation of those in the loyal States were set down thus.

Specie,.....	$61,242,603
Circulation,.....	$146,240,847

By a comparison of these two tables it will be seen that the Banks of New York, Philadelphia and Boston hold more than five-sixths of all the specie to the credit of the Banks of the loyal States in 1861, and that, at the same time, they have issued less than one-sixth of the paper circulation emitted by the Banks of the same States.

Antidote for Chloroform.—Dr. Lambelle, the eminent Paris physician, says an electric shock is sure salvation to anybody dying from the effects of an overdose of chloroform.

Snow fell in Rome, Georgia, on the 20th of October.—Mercury, 1st.

Profanity in the Army.—The following order has been issued by General Howard for the suppression of profane swearing in the army:

"The General commanding this division has noticed with extreme pain, on the part of officers and men, the constant and very general use of profane oaths. He need not remind any thinking man of the vulgarity and meanness of this practice, nor speak of it as a positive violation of God's law, but will simply appeal to the good sense and better feelings of the members of his command, and urge them, by all they hold dear, to abstain from insulting Him whose protection they need.

By command of Gen. O. O. Howard."

How Pontoon Bridges are Made.—Pontoon boats are flat-bottomed, thirty feet long, two and a half feet wide at the bow, and five feet wide at the stern, swelling out at the sides to the width of six feet. Each fits on a running-gear of four wheels, and is used as a baggage-wagon for the pontoniers, carrying its proportions of string pieces and of plank. On reaching a river the boats are unloaded, floated across by a cable made fast up the stream, then the string pieces are laid across, from one boat to the next, and on these are placed the planks, each twenty-one feet long, which form the gangway of that width. It is a fine sight to see a regiment come to a river bank with a pontoon train, unload and launch their boats, moor them in a line, and in less than five minutes from the time when the word "halt!" was given, have a bridge say six hundred feet in length, over which an army can safely pass with artillery and luggage.

The Rice Crop.—A very large amount of land in this State was this season planted in corn, and it was reasonable to expect an enormous crop, capable of supplying that species of food in superabundance at a low price. But the season was marred by a drought, and in many parts of the State the corn crop was seriously injured, so that there will be no superabundance, and scarcely more than was produced last year from much less land planted in that greatest of cereals. The production of rice, too, the year, has been curtailed to a considerable extent by the removal of planters from the tide-water region.

Still, the season for rice has been good, and those who have planted have generally made good crops. If saved, the rice crop will very materially aid in supporting our people and the army collected for our defence. We therefore trust that [illegible] will be made by the planters to reap the fruits of their summer's exertions, and that our authorities will afford every facility and co-operation in making this large resource of subsistence available. It is a matter of no trifling importance to our people, and to the operations of our [illegible] Timely [illegible] trouble, and expense and suffering [illegible] ber 1st.

The Great Eastern.—Some months since, the steamer Great Eastern arrived at New York, but in going through the Sound she struck a sunken rock and stove a large hole in her bottom. She still remains at one of the piers of New York, unrepaired, and there is no dock large enough to receive her, that her repairs [illegible]

Her officers dare not cram the steam in her as she is, and the only way of getting at the hole is by building a coffer-dam under her. This is now being attempted, but it is not certain that the experiment will be successful. She is represented as a very filthy craft—no pains being taken to keep her clean or even decent.

A Queer Ship.—The "Keokuk," one of our new armored vessels, is said to be a very queer ship, and, if the description of her which we have seen be true, she is [illegible] queer. [illegible] every gun will be carried entirely below water. There will be not a port-hole, save in the cabins. A projectile in the stern will sink her. There was no keel laid to the centre of the [illegible] looking craft, but one at the bow and another at the stern, both of which extended toward the middle of the hull about sixteen feet. A seven foot ram protrudes from the bow. It is of cast iron throughout, and bears a resemblance to the [illegible] of up to the time.

A Ball Given by Thieves.—This is a [illegible] world. The announcement, though, [illegible] announced a ball [illegible] in the form of thieves, a ball [illegible] on Tuesday night last at a ball at Seventh Street Hall. A Thieves' Ball! Four hundred persons were in attendance.

There was no redeeming feature to this ball. The men who whirled the women in the many dances would pick your pocket at the street corner. The women [illegible] were plenty, oaths were as cheap as brass rings—[illegible] and golden bonds glittered in the head-dresses [illegible] mirth as guilt can feel when it dreams recollection is a momentary pleasure. The faces that peered into the glasses were representatives of those in the "Rogues' Gallery," at the Central Station. And these men and these women called themselves "Farmers' Sons and Mowers' Daughters."

Home, they say, exists among thieves, and the records of the ball were understood to be for the benefit of a professional hero who had committed a robbery in [illegible] Water [illegible] admirable gathering for the Quaker City in the year 1862.

The War in the South West.—Cairo, November 15.—All the partisan rangers who have been pillaging the country around Memphis have been disbanded by Pemberton and attached to regiments.

Cotton is reported to be coming forward again in considerable quantities in consequence of [illegible] ment.

The Grand Army of the Potomac

ITS ORGANIZATION.

[illegible] of the Army of the Potomac, November 15th—the following order was [illegible]

Headquarters Army of the Potomac, }
Near Warrenton, Va., Nov 15 }

GENERAL ORDER, No 184.

First—The organization of a portion of the army into three general divisions is hereby announced

Three grand divisions will be formed and commanded as follows

The Second and Ninth corps will form the right grand division, and will be commanded by Maj. Gen. E. V. Sumner.

The First and Sixth corps will form the left grand division, and will be commanded by Maj Gen. W. B. Franklin.

The Third and Fifth corps will form the centre grand division, and will be commanded by Maj. Gen. Joseph Hooker.

The Eleventh corps, with such other troops as may hereafter be assigned to it, will constitute a reserve [illegible]

Assignments of cavalry and future details will be announced in future orders.

[illegible] with instructions from the War Department [illegible] ments will have power to decide such questions relating to the internal management of their commands as are now forwarded to these headquarters for final action.

Major General Sigel will exercise all the powers in respect to his command above assigned to the commander of a grand division. Those cases which can only be decided by the departments at Washington, [illegible] departments without reference to these headquarters.

A Success in Western Virginia.—Washington, November 11.—The following despatch was received at the headquarters of the army:

Headquarters, Cincinnati, }
Nov. 12 }

To Major General H. W. Halleck, General-in-Chief

General Kelly, on the 10th instant, attacked Imboden's camp, eighteen miles south of Moorfield, Hardy county, Virginia, and routed him completely, killing and wounding many, and captured his camp, with fifty prisoners, a quantity of arms, and a large number of horses, cattle, hogs, wagons, &c. The enemy was entirely dispersed, and fled to the mountains.

(Signed) H. G. WRIGHT,
Major-General Commanding.

Battle of Bayou La Fourche.—New York, November 16th.—Advices from New Orleans report that the [illegible] under General Weitzel met the enemy at Labadieville, and defeated them after a brisk fight. Upwards of two hundred of the enemy were killed, wounded or taken prisoners, and one piece of artillery was captured.

The rebels were pursued towards Berwick's Bay—where Gov. Moore was supposed to be.

Our loss was eighteen killed and seventy-four wounded.

The rebels captured were paroled.

From General Burnside's Army.—Warrenton, Nov. 17th.—The Army of the Potomac is in motion. Gen. Hooker advanced early this morning. He will be followed during the day by the veteran divisions of Sumner and Franklin.

Our army moves with renewed vigor and spirits—and we may look for interesting news whenever the [illegible]

Jackson is retreating behind Manassas Gap.

The Indians.—On Monday evening, of last week, President Lincoln received a telegraphic despatch from Gen. Pope, transmitting the names of three hundred Minnesota Indians condemned by court martial to be hung for their participation in the horrible massacres in that State, and requesting his approval of the sentence of the court martial. The President immediately telegraphed to Gen. Pope to have sent on by mail a synopsis of the evidence adduced before the court martial for his inspection. It is reported that "the President has resolved that such an outrage, as the indiscriminate hanging of these Indians must certainly be, shall not take place, but will confirm the sentence of the court so far as inflicting punishment upon the guilty is concerned."

Whittier, the Quaker poet, is a candidate for the Senate of Massachusetts. He was once elected to the House from Haverhill.

Brig.-Gen. Neal Dow, of "Maine Law" fame, is commander of Pensacola and the surrounding country, in place of Colonel Wilson, of the New York Zouaves.

Rear Admiral Foote has lost three children within the last half year. The third died at New Haven, on Monday, October 20

Gen. Jameson.—The [illegible] death, at his home in Oldstown, Maine, of Brigadier General Charles D. Jameson. His age was about thirty-five years. He was by profession a lumberman and merchant.

Doctor Berrien, for many years rector of Trinity Church, New York city, died, November 7th, at his residence in Varick street, in the 75th year of his age. His health, for some weeks past, had been very infirm, and his demise, therefore, was not unlooked for. Doctor Berrien [illegible] of New York. He probably married more men and women, and baptized more children, in his day, than any other clergyman in the United States. As a pastor, he was earnest and faithful, and as a man he was respected and beloved by a wide circle of relatives and friends.

General Cass and the Proclamation.—A private letter from Colonel F. A. Eastman, of Chicago, dated Detroit, October 31, to one of the editors of the Chicago Tribune, contains gratifying information. He called upon the Hon Lewis Cass, to pay that venerable statesman his respects, and what transpired we give in Mr. Eastman's own language

"I told General Cass that I had always admired and supported him as a Democrat, but that perhaps he would not regard me as a Democrat now, as I had pledged my support to the [illegible] and to all war measures. He replied, 'You are right. The Government is right. You young men must sustain it.' Invited thus to continue the conversation, I said, 'But I approve of the Emancipation Proclamation and all.' The old patriot responded promptly, 'So do I.' [illegible] general topics, he came back to the Proclamation again. He also owned that whether or not the President had the constitutional right to declare the slaves free, the President's friends did not strengthen the measure by claiming it to be constitutional. 'I do not deny,' he said, 'that there is that in the Constitution to justify the act; but the circumstances of the country justify it.' He did not feel its effects upon the South."

Death of Hon James Madison Porter.—Easton, Nov. 11.—Hon James Madison Porter died at his residence in this place, this morning, in the 76th year of his age.

He was a son of General Andrew Porter, of the Revolutionary War, and himself served in the War of [illegible] the War of 1812-14, while Mr. Porter was a law student in Philadelphia, the city was threatened by the British, and he volunteered and served as a [illegible]

Mr. Porter was a prominent member of the Convention to amend the Constitution of Pennsylvania, and one of the most prominent members of the Convention. In March, 1843, President Tyler appointed him Secretary of War, [illegible] death of President Harrison

Prince De Joinville on the War.—What he thinks of our Armies and the Volunteer System.—Prince de Joinville, who, with his two nephews, the Count de Paris and the Duke de Chartres, made the campaign of the Potomac, has been furnishing to the Revue des Deux Mondes a description of the two armies, with some curious hints for volunteer officers. The following extracts are interesting:—

[illegible] OF THE VOLUNTEER SYSTEM.

[illegible]

As soon as Congress has voted the number of men, they calculate at Washington the quota which each State must furnish, according to its [illegible] and population. This examination being made, each Governor announces [illegible] his jurisdiction. The regiment, of one battalion only, is the American military unit. Affairs [illegible] is influence in the State, or among a certain portion of the population, which will enable him [illegible] too to the party, &c. From among the persons thus presented the Governor makes the choice. Generally the person upon whom the choice falls has had it down [illegible] of the regiment, and thus Mr Smith-So, a lawyer or a doctor, never having handled a sword, but feeling within himself an improved vocation, becomes a Colonel at the start, and puts himself in connexion with all the recruiting agencies, and with all the furnishers of equipments and clothing supplies for the future regiment. The next thing is to find the soldiers, and that's the difficulty, for there is a great deal of rivalry. They apply to all their comrades in the country, and resort to various plans. This is done quickly and well in America, for they have an inventive mind. Most frequently they find some friends, who, seized [illegible] recruits if they be made—the one captain, the other lieutenant, another sergeant, and so forth. The framework is formed and partly filled up; it only remains to complete it. It is then that recourse is had to [illegible] both in pompous terms all the advantages presented by entering into the corps. They go among the Catholic priests to procure freshmen, and give the coveted privilege of subtership to the individual that promises the [illegible] Governor, who approves everything. The regiment is mustered, clothed, equipped and forwarded by railroad to the seat of war. Sometimes, even frequently, the grades are made to depend on election; but that is generally only a formality, as everything has been arranged [illegible]

The inconveniences of this system are apparent. The officers, from the Colonel down to the lowest in rank, do not know the first word of the military art, [illegible] they have any real aptitude for it, and have warlike qualities, it remains for them to prove it. The soldiers have no illusion on this point. "They know [illegible] them," say they of those who command them. Therefore there is no superiority of knowledge on the part of the officer over the soldier, and no superiority of action [illegible] Most frequently, also, it is with an idea of being a candidate for political office that the officer has taken up arms. It is to make himself a name in the eyes of the voters, and these future voters are the soldiers. What would become of the popularity they expect to enjoy if they were rough to the soldiers, or showed themselves too exacting in the service? From all these causes result the want of authority with officers, and the want of respect among the soldiers, growing neither out of rank nor discipline. All that has been ameliorated by force of necessity, and in the school of experience. Even from the beginning there were exceptions to it; some Colonels, impelled by a real vocation, or animated by an ardent patriotism, knew how to overcome the obstacles placed in their path.

Sometimes, an officer of the regular army, [illegible] of distinguishing himself, and having enough influence in his State, raised a regiment and obtained from it an admirable result. Thus, a young engineer lieutenant, named Warren, was marvellously successful with the Fifth New York Regiment, of which he was Colonel. That regiment served as engineers and artillery at the siege of Yorktown, and having again become infantry, conducted itself as the most veteran troops at the battles of the Chickahominy, where it lost half its force. And yet these were volunteers—but they felt the knowledge and superiority of their chief. Most generally, however, the chief is a comrade, [illegible] [illegible] to the [illegible] [illegible] of the regiment, and thus Mr Smand

WEEP NOT

O precious word, by Jesus brought
To the poor widow—Weep thou not
When sore privation is my lot,
When, plagued by Persecution's hand,
I find no rest in all the land,
Weep not, saith Jesus, it is I
Who take away and give again;
Remember what I did at Nain
When I, too, meet that mortal foe,
Lo, Jesus hails me in the night:
O precious word, by Jesus brought
While in my heart these accents dwell,
I bid all gloomy grief farewell

Rebecca Mayo.

NOW

Arise, for the day is passing
While you lie dreaming on,
Your brothers are cased in armor,
And forth to the fight are gone.
Your place in the ranks awaits you;
Each man has a part to play;
The past and the future are nothing
In the face of the stern to-day

Arise from the dreams of the morning
Of gaining a hard-fought field,
Of storming the airy fortress
Your life may have deeds of glory,
Of honor; God grant it may!
But your arm will never be stronger,
Or needed as now to-day

Arise! If the past detain you,
Sad or bright, she is lifeless ever;
Cast her phantom arms away.
Of a noble strife to-day.

Arise! for the hour is passing,
Is the enemy marching to battle,
Stay not to brighten your weapons,
Or the hour will strike at last,
You will wake and find it past.

Household Words.

From the Lutheran and Missionary

PEW BLEMISHES.

We refer not to the construction or adorning of the pews in our churches, although there are many things about them that sadly interfere with the comfort of worshippers. The old high-backs, over which we used to peep on our tip-toe, the wooden low-backs on which you can scarcely rest your elbow, the broad seats which refuse to allow the knee joint to work naturally, or the narrow seats from which you are continually sliding towards the centre of gravitation, are all "blemishes" that ought to be avoided in every sanctuary. But these are not the things we have in our mind's eye now. Neither do we allude to those blemishes often found on the backs or seats of pews, in the shape of knife-cuts or pencil marks, nor to the filthy stains on the pew floors in the shape of tobacco juice, the perpetrators of which deserve to be driven from God's house with a stronger whip of cords than that which was laid on the backs of the money chan; ers of old

We refer now rather to such blemishes as are found in the people who occupy these pews in our churches. And when we speak now of anything wrong in our pews, let it be understood as referring to their occupants

I. THE SLEEPY PEW

Some pews in our churches appear to be rented or occupied for the same purpose as you would engage a room at a hotel, that you might take a sleep and enjoy a rest. Some people are scarcely in their pews until they fix for sleep, and go asleep. Some plead constitutional infirmities, &c &c., but it is strange these infirmities should overcome them only on Sundays. We scarcely think if every worshipper realized the presence of God in his temple, and the awful issues that may hang on every service, they would be so filled with trembling as to shut out all possibility of sleep. The misfortune is, many good people enter upon the services with a sort of melancholy emptiness of mind and heart waiting to be acted upon by the influences of the sanctuary, and thus without any effort or intention, fall asleep. Affinity is the true antidote to sleep. In place of coming to church to be acted upon, people should come to act themselves, to keep their thoughts busily employed in self-examination, prayer, praise and meditation, and we feel confident there would be no temptation to sleep during service, and thus blemish the pew

II. THE SILENT PEW

This pew is just behind the other. Its occupants do not sleep, or if they do, it is with their eyes open. But they are silent. They take no part in the worship of God. They look coldly on, never raise a note of praise to their Creator, and by their expressionless faces disclose the fact that no emotion or thought is ever disturbed or excited. No wonder the pulpit sometimes is dull, when so many pews are blank, when there is no response of eye to eye, soul to soul, or tear to tear. We attended Rev. H. W Beecher's church one evening last summer. When the hymn was announced (to which was affixed an old familiar tune) the whole congregation arose, and every tongue in that congregation of thousands appeared to be unloosed to sing a song of glory. As Mr. Beecher sat there, with the multitude before, behind, above, around and beneath him, sending up their voices like the sound of many waters, we could see the fire kindling in his soul and shining out of its windows as he gazed around on the throng, which soon explained the secret of his power in uttering thoughts that breathed and words that burned. No pulpit can be dead that faces a congregation of living pews

III. THE CRITICAL PEW

Not every person who enters God's house, comes there to worship, neither does every person that listens to its instructions, do so to be profited. Many listen only to criticise. Something in the doctrine, language, or manner, &c., of every sermon displeases them, and forms a prolific theme for their terrible sarcasm. There are some pews in nearly every church that allow no Sunday to pass without discovering at least a mote in the pulpit, the choir, or their neighboring pews Well, all we can say now is, we pity them Like the orang-outang who thinks the hideousness of his countenance belongs to the brook, in whose clear waters it is reflected, these miserable people imagine the faults with which they are too familiar belong to their neighbors, in place of themselves Ah! reader, if you belong to this unhappy class, get rid of the "blemish" at once; but remember "it goeth out only by fasting and prayer."

IV. THE WORLDLY PEW

In this pew you always see the height of the fashions prominently and painfully displayed Every article of dress is carefully arranged to appear to the best advantage. The attention which in the beauty of holiness is sought to be supplied by an excess of the beauties of flowers and flounces, and the money that should be appropriated to pay for the rent of the pew, is applied to pay for its ornaments. But alas! these ornaments sadly belie the poverty of spirit that lies beneath them, and therefore we number them with the blemishes of the pew. From this pew there often come up cadences of whisperings and utterings from thought less or sacrilegious lips which never heard the invitation—"and let all the earth keep silence before him," but unwilling to listen themselves.

[illegible] them who are chatting to go in

Not always empty, but too frequently so. The least unpleasantness of weather, the least feeling [illegible] event to keep some pews vacant In vain do the [illegible] to such as profess to love God! The duties of the sanctuary stand open, the minister stands ready for his duty in the pulpit, God sends His Spirit down to bless, the showers of grace descend, but [illegible]

O ye pews, heed me your care! Repent of your ways and put these and other and all "blemishes" from you, and you will put new life and power and joy in the pulpit that stands before,—and new life and power and joy to the church of which you are a part, and new life and power and joy in the souls that dwell within you BETA

EXTRACTS FROM MARSH'S "ORIGIN AND HISTORY OF THE ENGLISH LANGUAGE"

"Persons whose attention has not been specially drawn to the subject are little aware of the difficulty, I will not say of imitating or of writing down but even of hearing the peculiar sounds of foreign languages An anecdote may serve to illustrate this. There is a Persian word in very common use throughout the East—bakhsheesh—meaning a gift or a present It is the equivalent in meaning of the old English largess, and is employed by the attendants on great men and strangers, when gifts are made or expected, in just the same way The Turkish articulation of all words is exceedingly distinct, and the particular word, [illegible] which every traveller in Turkey hears [illegible] with an emphasis that makes it very impressive to the ears of a stranger; hence one would imagine that its true pronunciation would be readily seized by the obtusest ear. Notwithstanding this, a distinguished gentleman who had passed most of his life in foreign lands, and had spent many years at Constantinople in a diplomatic capacity, was unable to come any nearer to the sound of bakhsheesh than bon chhanch. He thus writes in one of his published letters:—"There is only one word in all my letters which I am certain (however they may be written) of not having spelt wrong, and that is the word bakhshish, which signifies a present!

[illegible] "This shallowness of popular English and American [illegible] feated than in the extravagant commendations which have been bestowed on some modern dictionary makers, as philosophical expositors and [illegible] der a constant temptation to save themselves labor by building on the foundation of their predecessors, and to study dictionaries, not literature. Thus they acquire the habit of regarding words as completely significant individuals, and they are prone to multiply descriptions, to make distinctions where no difference exists, and especially to ascribe to single vocables meanings which belong either to entire phraseological combinations, grammatical agglutinations, so to speak, or to a different member of the phrase from that to which they assign them."

[illegible] which is, in its nature, relative and conditional, to formulate that which in itself does not constitute an individual and complete idea, to make technical definition a mouthpiece for words which ought to be allowed to speak for themselves by exemplification. . . . . There does not exist a dictionary of any language, living or dead, whose definitions are to be considered evidence to the exact meaning of words."

PET WORDS AND TRANSIENT FORMS OF SPEECH

"Every generation, every year almost, has its pet words, applications, forms, and combinations, originating now in some accidental circumstance, now in some theory, early association, habits, or caprice of a favorite writer, which, for the time, constitute unsightly excrescences upon the body of the speech, but finally drop off and are forgotten To take single words: it is difficult at this moment to find a page in a popular French writer which does not contain the word preoccuper, or some of its derivatives. On the other side of the Channel, I must instance a more unfortunate case The epithet lovely can fitly be used only of beings capable of exciting, by their moral and physical perfections, the passion of love, and, at the same time, of reciprocating it. That only is lovely which is both [illegible] In the affectation and exaggeration which so often characterise the phraseology of polite society, this unhappy word was [illegible] and it soon became the one epithet of commendation in young ladies' seminaries and similar circles, where it was and is applied indiscriminately to all pleasing material objects, from a piece of plum cake to a Gothic cathedral. Ruskin unluckily adopted this school-girl triviality, and, by the popularity of his writings, has made it almost universal, thereby degrading, vulgarizing, and depriving of its true significance one of the noblest [illegible] (English Language — Pages 504, 505, note.)

SHAKSPERIAN TEXT.

The occurrence of so many obviously incorrect passages of Shakspeare's plays has led to a great [illegible] the Saturday Review says, very justly, in regard to this:—"Few and doubtful as are the facts of Shakspeare's life, there are features of his character, as depicted in his writings, on which we may rely securely. From these we are warranted in pronouncing him among the most healthy minded of men. His faculties were as well harmonized as those of Sophocles or Goethe. His imagination is not more potent or palpable than his good sense; his wit, inexhaustible as it was, did not surpass his wisdom When, therefore, we find—account being duly taken of the state of English language and thought in his time, and their diversity from our own—his writings obscure or unequal to the occasion, are we not warranted in believing that we read what he did not write, and that for such blemishes we have often to thank the corruption of the players or the carelessness of the printers? For the latter, the condition of the text in the early editions affords abundant proof; and the former is rendered highly probable by the unscrupulous dealings in every age of the servants of the scene with an author's words."

Shakspeare was extremely careful of his poems. The general correctness of the text of the "Venus [illegible] little reason to doubt that he personally corrected [illegible] ceivable reason he appears to have lost all control over the publication of his plays. He cannot have been unconscious of their value. But it is difficult, on any other supposition, to account for his neglect of them.—Methodist.

[illegible] head for his immense strength and skill in all athletic exercises, very frequently had the pleasure of lighting people who, led by curiosity, came to try if they could settle him or not. Lord D a great pugilist amateur, had come from London on purpose to fight the athletic Scot. The latter was working in an enclosure at a little distance from his house when the noble lord arrived. His lordship tied his horse to a tree, and addressed the farmer: "Friend, I have heard a great deal of talk about you, and I've come a great way to see which of us is the best man" The Scotch[illegible] the middle of the body, pitched him over the hedge, and then set about working again. When his lordship had got up: "Well," said the farmer, "have you anything more to say to me?" "No," replied his lordship, "but perhaps you'd be kind enough to throw me my horse!"

PRACTICAL ANSWERS TO PRACTICAL QUESTIONS

1 Is it right that in connection with religious [illegible] the choir, and the voluntaries and interludes occupy nothing a portion of the time appointed for worship? "The purpose of the organ is to incite calm, devo[illegible] drive or overpower, which often seems to be the aim of accompanyists They should rather follow them lead, always playing their parts modestly though firmly, and with correctness and dignity Voluntaries, Interludes, &c., should occupy the smallest possible space, so that they will fulfill the [illegible] in connection with religious worship?—"To nothing more than this does the adage apply, 'A place for everything and everything in its place' Such melodies as drinking songs, love ditties, or what not, though pretty enough of themselves, have worldly, if not low and degrading associations connected with them, and are not only ill-fitted, but insulting to the presence and worship of the great God."—Dr. Clark.

3 Is it right in singing to slide and drag the voice from one tone to another as we see to be esteemed elegant and fashionable at the present day? —"The portamento must be well distinguished from the disgustingly ill toned drawling of one tone into another, which is like the sound produced [illegible] by slowly running the finger up or down the same string. This is not singing, though it is by many practised as such, and so called. Give each note its absolute value as common sense will dictate, and the difficulty is at once obviated "—Hawes

4 Is it right to abuse language in singing, as many do, by calling the, thee—fe, ter—ly, bee, &c. Webster and other authorities give but one pronunciation of these words, and "there is [illegible] as in correct speaking and declamation and unquestionably they can be, so as not to interfere with any established rules of vocal art, and be all the more intelligible to the listener."—Dwight's Journal of Music

5 Is it right in teaching the young to play the piano, to occupy their time and attention with polkas, dances, operatic medleys, &c?—"The assurance has often been given by the authors of such music that they were designed for no such purpose; give them exercises, studies and real pianoforte compositions that they may first learn how to apply them; if their taste leads them no higher, let them amuse themselves with such things, when the skill already acquired will enable them to play them without the usual labor and drudge[illegible]

6. Is it right when one person is playing or singing, at the request of others, for some to converse either aloud or to whispers, in their presence? —"It is ungrateful and discourteous, and should [illegible] When [illegible] was playing a duet with his pupil, Ries, before a company of court ladies, at Vienna, on hearing them commence to talk, he snatched the hand of his pupil from the instrument, saying, "I do not play before such swine."—Hauchler

7. Is it right to estimate the skill of musical performers, vocal or instrumental, by the rapidity of their execution?—"To sing a simple melody with purity and taste, or to play a fugue and interpret it properly, exacts and evinces more talent and skill than the performance of the most difficult [illegible] quire merely rapidity of execution. It is a great error to suppose that mere agility of fingering or rapidity of executing music, displays a great musician or singer"—S Thalberg

THE KOHINOOR DIAMOND.

It will doubtless be remembered that the Kohinoor [illegible] exhibited under royalty's permission, in 1851, greatly disappointed beholders by its want of brilliance, and its entire deficiency in the production of the shifting flashes of color which constitute the distinguishing glory of the chemical equivalent of anthracite coal, so highly prized in all stages of human society. Up to that period, the Kohinoor had remained without any other than the original cutting it had received from Indian lapidaries at the time of its discovery. The Queen and Prince Consort, being desirous of adding to its brilliant cutting, confided it to Messrs Garrard for that purpose, at the close of the exhibition. By some accident, during the many adventures undergone by this marvellous stone, a large piece had been split off at the cleavage plane; and the desired improvement, owing to this injury, could only be effected at a great sacrifice in its weight. So successfully however has this very difficult undertaking been accomplished, and so greatly has its apparent size, as well as brilliancy, been increased by the operation, that the loss of weight is more than compensated. For the cutting of this splendid gem, a small steam-engine was built in their premises by Messrs Garrard; and two workmen were imported from Amsterdam—still the classic home of the lapidary's art—expressly to conduct the work, which [illegible]

The Queen and Prince Consort took the liveliest interest in the preparations for its accomplishment; and the late Duke of Wellington was allowed the honor of cutting the first facet, the hand of the illustrious veteran being carefully guided during the operation, by the two Dutch artists aforesaid. In its present state, the Kohinoor is oblong, about an inch in width, and an inch and a quarter long; slightly rounded at the corners. It is set in an arabesque border of small diamonds, of exquisitely graceful design, whose style may be best described as being suggested, apparently, by the lines of the old Bourbon fleur-de-lys This setting, somewhat longer than broad, is in harmony with the proportions of the stone itself, is more than double the size of the jewel. It is furnished with hooks and clasps, cunningly hidden at the back of the setting, by means of which it can be used as a brooch, put into a bracelet, or inserted into the crown. The Queen is very partial to the Kohinoor in its new state; and frequently wears it. So magnificent is it, thanks to the skilful cutting and setting which have so wonderfully transformed it, that the other great diamond of the Exhibition—the "Star of the South," exhibited by the Dutch, and larger than the Kohinoor, looks, in comparison with the latter, like a lump of rock crystal only As the "Star of the South" is waiting for a buyer, its owners are endeavoring to cry up its money-value, and pretend that it is worth a couple of millions sterling; an estimate whose gross exaggeration is evident from the fact that the far purer and more beautiful Kohinoor, as now cut, is valued, with its setting, at £150,000

The Directors of the Bank of England recently received an anonymous letter, stating that the writer had the means of access to their bullion-room. They treated the matter as a hoax, and took no notice of the letter. Another more [illegible] bullion room at any hour they pleased to name [illegible] appointing "some dark and midnight hour" for [illegible] lantern in hand, repaired to the bullion room, locked themselves in, and awaited the arrival [illegible] to the floor were without much trouble displaced, and in a few minutes the Guy Fawkes of the bank stood in the midst of the astonished Directors. His story was simple and straightforward An old drain ran under the bullion room the existence of which had become known to him, [illegible] away enormous sums. Inquiry was made No thing had been abstracted, and the Directors rewarded the honesty and ingenuity of their anonymous correspondent—a working man who had been employed in repairing the sewers—by a pro[illegible]

THE mind of a man of genius is a focus which [illegible] lights and fires of ten thousand surrounding [illegible]

ECONOMY IN BURNING COAL

The price of coal and in fact of almost every article used in the family, demands the practice of great economy by every housekeeper. The fact that many families are supplied with fuel from the coal gleaned from ashes thrown into the streets, is proof of the need of economy in [illegible] Not is there any waste in the [illegible] ted on my heart Is there, in this free and enlightened country, no redress for wrongs like these? I ask this repeatedly, and am as repeatedly assured there is none. All I can do, therefore, is to write a clear statement of the circumstances under which I suffer, in the hope that my fate may prove a warning to other young bachelors, and lead them to beware of bazaars and [illegible]

I am a young man of good family, with a handsome allowance, and first rate expectations. I suppose I should be called a catch by match-making mammas and their daughters I am a captain in [illegible] whiskers are unexceptionable. Altogether, till misfortune overtook me, I was as pleasant, good-looking a young fellow as ever flirted at a waltz, or made love at a picnic

One morning last July, while lounging in my quarters at Dover, and doing nothing in particular, I received the following pink note

"DEAR CAPTAIN BRANTHWAYTE:—We have all been very busy here getting up a fancy fair in aid of the endowment fund of a new church at Clay cum-Stickle The Rev. Augustus Needall has kindly consented to undertake the responsible duties of the incumbent, but his principles will not allow him to enter on his new and arduous sphere until the endowment fund is completed. The dear man says so wisely and feelingly: 'How can I administer to the wants of a numerous and starving flock, when so many of the bare necessaries of life are wanting to myself?' So we want about £2000 more to make up a nice little income, and build him a commodious parsonage, and then we shall do charmingly. His excellent wife is aiding us, heart and soul; and you, I am sure, will likewise contribute your mite, and bring over some of your brother officers to do the same The day is fixed for next Thursday. Bring your friends to lunch at my house, and do not fail me

"Yours, sincerely,

"CECILIA PRYOR

"P. S.—There will be a ball in the evening at the Assembly Rooms for the same object. Tickets, £1 1s. How many will you have?"

Now, I knew Mrs Pryor was a busy, meddlesome person, but I also knew that pretty girls [illegible] off forthwith, promising to bring over half a dozen friends, for whom tickets might be secured Thursday being fine, we set off in high spirits, and reached Pluckwell in time for a good lunch at Mrs. Pryor's, after which we started for the scene of action.

We soon reached the large field in which the [illegible] paid cheerfully, it being the first demand. In the field, we found the usual wheel of fortune, gipsy's tent, refreshment stall, and one large marquee with gaily dressed counters and still more gayly dressed girls behind them. Crowds of people moved about the field, looking as miserable [illegible] as we do on funerals. [illegible] my companion exclaimed "Hullo! Branthwayte, look at that little creature there standing on the chair." I looked round, of course, little thinking what would be [illegible] and [illegible] by the sweetest little fairy eyes ever looked upon. There she stood on a chair, before a little looking glass, trying on a pink hood, which she was endeavoring to persuade some idiot to buy

Never before had I seen such charming unconsciousness, such naïveté, such grace. I don't know what she had on; it was something white, and cloudy and angelic. But much clothing seemed superfluous in her case, for clouds of golden curls fell showering to her tiny waist, and were brushed back from the sweetest, gentlest, and withal most piquant face in the world. (I am aware that I am using a great many adjectives, but really the [illegible] deserves them.)

My first feeling on seeing her was that I had never truly loved till then; my second, an almost irresistible inclination to knock down that driveling maniac, who was actually hesitating about buying the hood. He said it would be of no use to him Fool!

In a moment I was beside the chair and, speechless with emotion, I tendered a sovereign for the precious article.

"Ah! that's capital," she said, with the sweetest look of gratitude. "Why, Mr Screwker has been doubting whether he would give me fifteen shillings for it. I hope you don't want any change?"

"Change!" I gasped; "never"

"Then come to our stall," she said, jumping daintily down from her elevated post, "and I will find some of my very own work for you."

I, of course, followed her to a large stall, where three other charming girls and a handsome mamma [illegible] and [illegible] I gave [illegible] price for a cigar-case, which she said she had worked. (I don't believe she had, for it was hideous.) Of course, too, I had to buy something quite useless of all the three sisters, and to put into all the raffles, winning at last a large wax doll, several sizes larger than a child of six months. As this last acquisition embarrassed me a good deal, I gave it back to her, and afterwards saw her sell it over again for a considerable sum to a good natured old gentleman

"You make a capital shopwoman," I said

"Ah, yes, I have some tolerable dodges. I did a good business before you came in faded sixpenny bouquets, which I sold for five shillings. They were so worthless that a good many people gave them back to me, and I sold them over again. I sold one nine times, and made forty-five shillings [illegible] "at the folly of some people," with a sly glance at me. I ventured on a tender reproach: "And nothing whispered to you to keep a bouquet for [illegible] bad, a beauty, if you like;" and off she danced, and waving me back, when I would have followed; and beckoning to an elderly grave looking person, who stood by the stall, and who was to all appearance the father of the charming quartette.

She soon came running back breathless, her hands full of lovely rosebuds. On the way she attacked that stingy Mr Screwker who would not buy the hood, and whom she now tried to tempt with a half opened Glorie de Dijon

"How much do you want for it?" said he.

"Whatever you please," was the demure reply.

He pulled out a handful of silver, and was, I suspect, looking for a sixpence, when in a moment she pounced on the whole handful, with an "Oh, thank you, you are too generous," and swept it into her pocket. The fellow's dismay was delicious to behold; but he could only submit, for she was off [illegible] right and left, till, when she reached me, there was only one left

"Now, what will you give me for this?"

"Anything, everything, all the money I have left," I cried thrusting my hands into my pockets But alas! they were empty; nor could all my [illegible] fourpenny piece. Imagine my dismay

"My dear girl," I stammered, "you see this is all I have left."

"Oh, you surely can't intend to be so mean?" when I ran all the way up the garden to fetch them, and pricked my finger, and made it bleed and she held out a little white punctured forefinger to verify her words. "You have your watch," she added, "and you can redeem it to-morrow." I own I felt rather staggered at this My watch was a valuable family relic, set with brilliants, and on the safety of which depended the favor of an aged and gouty uncle, of crabbed disposition, [illegible] were fixed on me, and seemed to wonder at my delay All prudential considerations vanished I placed the watch in the outstretched hand, and received the rose bud from the other

"Wear it to night, and I will dance with you," she whispered, as our eyes met for a moment

She turned away with a faint blush, and I left the field to dine and dress for the evening. Did I say? and dress? I suppose I performed these operations, but I have no recollection of anything of the sort. I could only dream of the past, and hope for the future. If it had been for any one else in the world, I should have said that I was going to make a fool of myself. But any infatuation for her, so far superior to all existing creatures, could not but elevate and honor any man whom she might choose to accept So I started for the ball at ten o'clock, fully determined to propose at once She was late, but at last I saw her coming up the stairs, followed by her three sisters, with the mamma and the clergyman I had seen with them in the afternoon I fancied her eyes rested on the rose bud in my buttonhole, and that they beamed with a soft approbation. Cheered by this tacit encouragement, I seized hold of the first steward I met, and begged him to introduce me to "that young lady," pointing her out. I thought his face wore an amused smile as he complied [illegible] sounding circumstances, so anxious was I to catch her name. The usual formula was pronounced: "Captain Branthwayte—Miss Nevil." Was that the name? I could not be sure. I had no time to think about it, before the waltz began at once, and I seemed to be floating in a sea of bliss with an angel in my arms, keeping time to the music of [illegible] way sofa, where I resolved to ask her to be mine [illegible] must have been rather unintelligible at first, for she [illegible] But when I managed to stammer out that I knew I was "quite unworthy of her, yet if the devotion of a lifetime," &c. she said quietly: 'I think you must mistake me for one of my sisters." I assured her such a mistake was quite impossible. "Then, you could not have heard my name."

"Oh yes," I said—"Miss Nevil I listened particularly for your name, and heard it quite well."

"My name is Mrs Needall. You must have seen my husband standing by my stall. The bazaar was for the endowment of our church and to [illegible] Of course I was [illegible] more, and took more money than any one; and I think you were my best customer," she added, with a triumphant toss of her little head that completely maddened me. I rushed from the room, took the next train back to Dover, and here I have been ever since, a most miserable man! I had not the heart to redeem my watch; so that, in addition to my other troubles, I may have incurred the lasting displeasure of my uncle, and lost the chance of some thousands a year. All this because I was fool enough to go and be swindled at a fancy fair

[illegible] to show how bad the fairs in England are. Of course nobody has ever heard of anything in the remotest degree like the above, in our country. [illegible]

THE FAIR

Mine is a case that should appear in the police reports rather than in the pages of this publica[illegible] My [illegible] [illegible] [illegible]

THE CHRISTIAN RECORDER.

Published by the African Methodist Episcopal Church in the United States, for the Dissemination of Religion, Morality, Literature and Science.

Rev. Elisha Weaver, Editor. PHILADELPHIA, NOVEMBER 29. 1862. Vol. II.—No. 48.—New Series. Whole No. 99.

THE CHRISTIAN RECORDER

is published every Saturday on behalf of the

AFRICAN METHODIST EPISCOPAL CHURCH

BY

REV. ELISHA WEAVER,

General Book Steward,

No 619 Pine Street, Philadelphia.

Notice.—All letters and matters pertaining to the Book Concern subscriptions, sale of papers and [illegible] must be directed to the Book Concern or the paper, must be directed to [illegible] Weaver, No 619 Pine Street, Philadelphia, and all matters sent by express, and to our city, must be directed to Rev. Elisha Weaver, No 619 Pine St.

All articles or matter for the Christian Recorder, must be directed to E. Weaver, Box No 630, Philadelphia.

TERMS

Two Dollars a year, payable in advance. Single copies, five cents

ADVERTISEMENTS

We solicit Advertisements of all descriptions, suitable for a religious newspaper which will be published as follows:—

Cards of Advertisements inserted for one year, provided they do not exceed eight lines, two dollars per square; for every square without the paper, fifty cents for six dollars paper is mailed three months, four dollars,—one month, $1.50, paper in each case included.

CORRESPONDING EDITORS OF CHRISTIAN RECORDER.

Rev. J. P. CAMPBELL, Rev. A. W. WAYMAN,
" J. M. WILLIAMS, " E. T. WILLIAMS,
" O. H. GRAHAM, " C. CHURCH,
Rev. L. ROSS.

Poetry.

For the Christian Recorder.

ARISE AND BE DOING.

BY WM H MYERS.

"Arise and be doing, and the Lord will be with thee."
1 Chron. xxii. 16

Arise and be doing, and the Lord will be with thee;
He power will shield and protect thee from harm:
O, do not sit idle, when so much doth need thee,
But go forward relying on Jehovah's strong arm.

Arise and be doing, whilst youth is before thee,
Whilst the mind is untrammeled by vice or by sin,
And wait not for age, with its sorrows, to come o'er thee,
And expect then to rise 'mid its confusion and din.

Arise and be doing. O, reject not the warning!
Accept and improve it ere the moments have past,
For age is the evening, and youth is the morning
When deeds can be done that forever will last.

Arise and be doing, for a work is assigned thee;
Perform it with vigor and with all of thy might;
For why wilt thou suffer its chance to bind thee
In fetters of darkness, which deprives thee of light?

Arise and be doing, for a new light is gleaming
Upon our conditions, long lonely and sad.
The day star of freedom, in splendor, is beaming,
And bids us arise for the work to prepare.

Arise and be doing, tho' trials assail thee,
And foes in armed phalanx stand forth in array.
Our God he is with thee; he never will fail thee,
But will bring thee out conqueror in his own good way.

Then, arise and be doing. Let us all be employed
In doing something to promote the best interest of man,
Until vice and oppression shall at last be destroyed,
Then forever we'll reign at our Father's right hand.

Washington, D. C., Nov. 24th, 1862.

LETTER FROM BOSTON.

Boston, Nov. 20, 1862.

Mr. Editor:—A public meeting was held in the Twelfth Baptist Church, Boston, (Rev. L. A. Grimes,) on the evening of November 10th, for the purpose of hearing the statements of Mrs. Keckley, President of the Contraband Relief Association of Washington.

The Rev. J. Sella Martin was chosen Chairman. Mrs. Keckley, being introduced, gave a highly interesting account of the doings of the Association, appealing to her audience in an earnest and feeling manner to continue their efforts in behalf of the unfortunates at Washington and Alexandria. Several gentlemen present spoke seconding the appeal of Mrs. Keckley.

The statements of Mrs. Keckley were highly interesting, and coming from one fresh from the spot, and bearing upon their face the impress of truth and earnestness, they made a deep impression on the minds of those present.

It was voted to place in the hands of Mrs. Keckley a sum of money remaining in the hands of the Treasurer of a former meeting, together with the sum collected on that night, amounting to twenty-seven dollars. Mrs. Keckley was invited to meet with the two relief associations of Boston, on Tuesday and Wednesday evenings. Her visit to Boston has been one of interest. We hope much good will grow out of it. Yours, most respectfully, L. G.

For the Christian Recorder.

INTERESTING SCENE IN BETHEL CHURCH, BALTIMORE.

On Thursday night last a presentation of a handsome and costly China tea set was made to the wife of Rev. James Lynch, by a committee of the following ladies: Mrs. Caroline Barnes, Mrs. Eliza Tilghman, and Miss Lucy Cooper. Mrs. Tilghman, with a countenance beaming with geniality, kindness and good humor, with much ease and grace, made the presentation on behalf of the ladies. Mrs. Lynch received the gift in person, and while tendering her thanks, assured the ladies that she would ever cherish the gift. The matronly and soul-inspiring form of sister Barnes seemed to hover over all, and infuse life in the whole assembly—a true worker for the church, we all know how to prize her.

The interest of the occasion was intensified by the presentation of a handsomely carved gold headed cane to Rev. D. A. Payne, D. D., by the Lyceums of Baltimore city. Mr. James H. A. Johnson made the presentation address. Bishop Payne received the gift, and his response was truly affecting when he alluded to the fact that "he appeared before the audience with a constitution broken down—shattered—almost gone—by hard labor, of thirty years, for the advancement of his race, and that beautiful cane would support his tottering frame until he sat him down by Jordan's stream," the tears glistened in the eyes of many, who can bear witness to his devotion to his race.

Addresses were made by many of the most talented young gentlemen of the city. Mr. A. Handy and Mr. Jas H. Jordan particularly distinguished themselves.

Mr. Wm. Jas. Watkins was on hand, and added to the interest of the occasion by a few pertinent, racy and eloquent remarks.

Mr. George A Hackett, so noted for his gallantry as well as his activity, assisted in the arrangements of the evening, and helped to make everything pleasant

Bethel Church choir sent forth strains of sweetest music. How could we have had anything but a pleasant time? Delightful music, pretty ladies, with smiling faces, oratory, and gentlemen so obliging, Bishop Payne, in his most pleasant mood, stationed preachers all around him, and a young bride, with the crimson hue of modest blush upon her cheek, all united to render delightful the occasion.

About five hundred persons were present

Sister Barnes, knowing that Rev. James Lynch's church was much embarrassed by debt, managed the affair so as to yield a clear profit of fifty dollars

Last, but not least, the generosity of the trustees of Bethel Church, shone out in their giving the use of the main audience room for the exercises; while in the basement those true church workers, Mrs. Toogood, Mrs. Brown, and Mrs. Thomas and Wilson prepared that which refreshed the inner man and increased the proceeds

Several gentlemen, among whom we will mention Mr. William H. Brown, were indefatigable in their exertions to have an event, or, as Mr. Watkins fitly termed it, an episode that would long be remembered.

Mrs Lynch retired delighted with her gift, and the trustees retired delighted with the money. Rev. James Lynch asked the blessing of God on them all, and the assembly retired

Ascetney

For the Christian Recorder.

RESPECTS OF A FRIEND

The sudden demise of our late brother, the Rev. Richard Roberson, has cast a gloom not only over the church and congregation of which he was pastor, but over all the kindred churches so far as the circumstances of his death have become known.

The writer of this Eulogy, having had an intimate acquaintance with the deceased, for a period exceeding thirty-four years, has thought proper to pay this last act of respect to an aged and esteemed friend, and his wisest counsellor

To those acquainted with our late brother, it would be superfluous to attempt to delineate his character of Christian virtues, his uniform uprightness, his charitable acts, his friendly intercourse, his disinterested kindness, his fervent prayer for the success of the gospel, all of which was seen and known by those who had his acquaintance; but to the stranger it may be a lesson of wisdom, it may stimulate him to reflection, it may cause him to make greater exertions to copy the virtues of those who have gone to that bourn from whence no traveller returns, and to reflect on the uncertainty of life, and that it may lead to emulation, has been the object of submitting these few words. Father Roberson was an ornament to his church, walking humbly before his God. Truly may it be said, that a great man has fallen in Israel

H. B.

Philadelphia, Nov. 25th, 1862.

REPORT OF THE COMMITTEE ON THE DEMISE OF THE LATE REV. RICHARD ROBERSON.

Dear Brethren:—Ministers of the A. M. E. Church, Philadelphia district: we, your committee appointed to draft a series of resolutions expressive of our deep feeling of regret, in consequence of the demise of our venerable father and brother, the late Rev. Richard Roberson; beg leave to report, viz.

Whereas, It has pleased the Great Disposer of all events to remove from our Itinerant ranks, a faithful yoke fellow and father in the gospel, Rev. Richard Roberson, from amid the severe trial and suffering of the present world, to the fair climes of a brighter and better land—a country that is heavenly;

Whereas, The death of father Roberson was caused by a fatal occurrence, while upon the platform of the city cars of Philadelphia, the position in which he was placed, being the result of absolute treachery existing in the breast of the white race against the colored in this city;

And whereas, Father Roberson has been for many years a faithful travelling minister of the A. M. E. Church, having been a member of the New York, Baltimore, and Philadelphia districts, also having labored for some time in New England and the island of Hayti, whose labors have been successful in the general extension of our beloved connexion;

And whereas, This faithful minister of God was one of the bright suns in the firmament of the A. M. E. Church, whose general deportment in life was exemplary, and his style of pulpit delivery peculiarly commanding, and as he at 11 o'clock, P. M., on the 18th of Nov., 1862, departed this life in glorious triumph;

Resolved, Therefore, that while acknowledging the Divine hand in this dark dispensation of Providence, we deeply deplore the loss of our beloved father and brother, for truly in his departure, this branch of the church militant has witnessed the shadows of the evening stretched out.

Resolved, That while we deeply regret that our father and brother has fallen a victim to death caused by wicked treachery, we have need to be consoled that he shines brighter amid the celestial sons of glory and bliss.

Resolved, That in his departure, the ministry of the Philadelphia district of the A. M. E. Church, also of the connexion, in general must acknowledge the loss of one of the most able, tried, untiring, and faithful defenders of Christianity in said church.

Resolved, That our heartfelt sympathy and condolence be with the widow, relatives, and friends, who are left to mourn the loss of the late Rev. Richard Roberson, and that a copy of these resolutions be sent to his bereaved widow.

R Weaver,
S. Smith,
J. P. Campbell,
} Committee.

Chairman.—Rev. J. C. Bullauin.
Secretary.—Rev. A. L. Stanford.

Albert was a great regular in school; feet, hands and tongue were never lazy, attentions to the detriment of that quiet so much desired there. One day, being more troublesome than usual, his teacher became displeased with him, and pointing to a seat in the corner, she sternly commanded him to take it. Albert obeyed, with a comical air, and with a flourish of infantile triumph, said, "Been wantin' to sit there all the mornin', but durse'n ask you."

The Duke of Wellington said, some five years ago, that there was not then in the British army a general who would know how to march twenty-five thousand men through the gateway into or out of Hyde Park

GEMS.

SELF-RESIGNATION: (OR DEVOTEDNESS OF HEART.)

The excellent Worthington, in his well known treatise on Self-resignation, says, "Self-resignation is the way to true rest,—a holy rest; the Sabbath of the soul, as St Austin calls it. If thou wilt enjoy the true rest, and keep the inward sabbath, thou must not do thine own ways, nor speak thine own words, nor find thine own pleasure (to borrow those words in Isaish lviii.) thou must cease from thine own works, as the phrase is, Heb. iv. 10 As the soul groweth in resignation, it returns more to its rest; it comes to be more as it would be by being more restored towards its original constitution, its first state. The resigned soul enjoys religion in all the sweetness and privileges thereof; it is prepared to taste and see how good the Lord is. To him that overcometh (that overcometh his own will,—these lusts that war against the soul,) shall be given the hidden manna, and the white stone with a new name written in it, known by him only that receiveth it; and a stranger intermeddleth not with his joy. Such a one hath meat to eat which the world knows not of, and is fed with the food of angels There is indeed, pain, in the first tearing off our wills from those things they cleaved and stuck fast to. As it is said of the milch kine that drew the ark, their calves being shut up, they went lowing all the way that they went to Bethshemesh. So it is with souls in their passage to resignation;—they, then parting with what was dear to them, fondly beloved, and eagerly pursued by them;—with that, in fact, which was their life and nature.

But they are no sooner arrived at this state but the bitterness of death is past,—the bitterness of the death of the old corrupt man; the hour of travail is over, and they remember no more the anguish, for joy that the new man, created after the image of God, is born within them. They have broken through the difficulties of the way and got out of the wilderness, over Jordan; and their feet are on the Holy land,—the land of righteousness and peace. Henceforth, the ways of religion are not (as before) grievous, but paths of peace and ways of pleasantness; flowery and sweet, rosy and soft ways. Religion is now become their temper, constitution and life; and sin is grievous, strange, and hard to them. 'Tis not so troublesome to be patient as to be passionate; to forgive as to revenge. Humility is more easy to them than pride; chastity and purity are more sweet than lust and sensuality. The inward voice of such a soul is, 'I delight to do thy will, O my God!' There is no such liberty as to be free to good, and enlarged to spiritual obedience. He that is so, hath an empire within him; he is in his own power; he hath victory over the world,—both the good and evil things of it; his mind is unhampered, disenthralled and set loose; and it is lord over those, whom before it obeyed. And what a glorious conquest is this! 'There is no victory more glorious,' says St. Cyprian, 'than that whereby we become conquerors over inordinate affections.'

[Let it be observed that by "resignation," throughout this treatise, Worthington means self-resignation of heart.]

WE SHOULD DO EVERY THING IN THE BEST MANNER.

"However mean or inconsiderable the act, there is something in the well doing of it which has fellowship with the noblest forms of manly virtue. Thus every action, down even to the drawing of a line or uttering of a syllable, is capable of a peculiar dignity in the manner of it, which we sometimes express by saying it is truly done, (as a line or tone is true;) so also, it is capable of dignity still higher in the motive of it. For there is no action so slight, nor so mean, but it may be done to a great purpose, and ennobled therefore; nor is there any purpose so great but that slight actions may help it much, most especially that chief of all purposes, the pleasing of God." Hence, George Herbert,

A servant with this clause
Makes drudgery divine;
Who sweeps a room as by thy laws,
Makes that and the action fine.

Ruskin.

PERSEVERANCE AND STABILITY.

The wonderfully enlightened Baxter, in speaking of perseverance, says, that, "Where faith hath kindled so much love to God and heaven and holiness, that it is become a divine nature in the soul, and operateth, as the love of children to parents, above mere reason, as a fixed habit, like a nature; then, grace cometh, to some, confirmed, and not movable." "Some there are," says Bishop Taylor, "who dare not sin—they dare not omit their hours of prayer, and they are restless in their spirits till they have done; but they go to it as to execution—they stay from it as long as they can,—they drive, like Pharaoh's chariots, with the wheels off, sadly and heavily. But he that is grown in grace, and hath made religion habitual to his spirit, is not at ease when he is doing the works of the old man; he rests in religion; and comforts his sorrows with thinking of his prayers."

QUEEN ESTHER'S ENTRANCE.

BY REV. THOS. GUTHRIE, D. D.

Within the palace, but without the throne-room of Shushan, Queen Esther stands. They who enter the King's presence unsummoned, do it at the peril of their life; and resolved in a good cause to dare the penalty, she stands there with her jewelled foot upon the grave. A noble spectacle! not so much for her unrivalled beauty, still less for the splendor of her apparel, as for the resolution to venture life, and either save her nation or perish in the attempt. In her blooming youth, in the admiration of the court, in the affections of her husband, in her lofty rank, in her queenly honors, she has everything to make life attractive. Her's is a golden cup; and it is foaming of pleasures to the brim. But her mind is made up to die; and so, with a silent prayer, and "If I perish, I perish," on her lips, she passes in, and now stands mute and pallid, yet calm and resolute, outside the ring of nobles, to hear her doom. Nor has she to endure the agony of a long suspense. Her fate, which seems to tremble in the balance, is soon determined. No sooner does the monarch catch sight of the beautiful woman, and brave and good as beautiful, whom he had raised from slavery to share his bed and throne, than her apprehensions vanish. The clouds break; and she finds, as we often do with Christ, that her fears have wronged her lord. Instantly his hand stretches out the golden sceptre; the business of the court is stopped; the queen, the queen! divides the crowd of nobles; and up that brilliant line she walks, in majesty and in charms that outvie her gems, to hear the blessed words, What wilt thou, Queen Esther? and what is thy request? it shall be given thee even to the half of the kingdom.

What wilt thou, Queen Esther? is but an echo of the voice which faith catches from the lips of Jesus; and the whole scene presents but a dim, imperfect image of that which heaven presents when the gate rolls open, and angels and archangels making way for him, a believer enters with his petitions. Was that beautiful woman once a slave? So was he. In her royal marriage was lowliness allied to majesty? So it is in his union, by faith, with Jesus Christ. And as to her royal apparel, the diadem, the cloth of gold bedecked with sparkling gems, in which her maids have attired their mistress, why, in the righteousness that clothes, and the graces of the Spirit that adorn him, the believer wears a robe which wins the admiration, not of men's but angels' eyes, and shines even amid the glories of a city whose gates are made of pearls, and whose streets are paved with gold. To the half of his kingdom, the Persian promised whatever his queen might ask; and generous, right royal was his offer: it helps us, by its very meanness, as a mole-hill at the foot of a mountain, as a taper's feeble, yellow flame held up against the blazing sun, to form some estimate of the boundless grace of our Lord Jesus Christ. Half his kingdom! He offers nothing by halves. His promise is illimitable. All mine is thine. Confining his generosity neither to kingdoms, nor continents, nor worlds, nor heaven itself, he lays the whole universe at a poor sinner's feet. Away, then, with fears and cares! There is nothing we need that we shall not get, nothing we can ask that we shall not receive. It pleased the Father that in him should all fulness dwell. Transferring divine wealth, if I may so speak, to our account in the bank of heaven, and giving us an unlimited credit there, Jesus says, "All things, whatsoever ye ask in prayer, believing, ye shall receive."

From the Lutheran and Missionary

WAIT AND SEE THE END.

If our eyes were always open to the sad, as well as to the beginning of troubles, we should find our experience similar to that of the merchant in the following story:—

"A merchant was one day returning from market. He was on horseback, and behind him was a valise filled with money. The rain fell with violence, and the good old man was wet to the skin. At this he was vexed, and murmured because God had given him such bad weather for his journey. He soon reached the borders of a thick forest. What was his horror on beholding on one side of the road a robber, with levelled gun, aiming at him and attempting to fire! But the powder being wet by the rain, the gun did not go off, and the merchant giving spurs to his horse, fortunately had time to escape. As soon as he found himself safe, he said to himself: 'How wrong was I not to endure the rain patiently, as sent by Providence! If the weather had been dry, I should not, probably, have been alive at this hour, and my little children would have expected my return in vain. The rain which caused me to murmur, came at a fortunate moment, to save my life and preserve my property."

It is thus with a multitude of our afflictions—by causing us light and short suffering, they preserve us from others far greater and of longer duration.

THE NEWSPAPER PRESS.

We notice that some of our contemporaries in the New England States, New York, and other parts of the country, have raised the price of their circulation as well as their advertising rates. This action on their part has been rendered necessary by the sudden and enormous increase in the price of paper, the mantica, the increase in labor, and the diminution in the sources of supply. Paper is the material item in the composition of a newspaper, and, in the business of journals of large circulation like The Press, it is necessary to make provision a long way ahead, and to be prepared to anticipate any contingencies that may arise. There are two qualities of paper in general use among newspapers—that made of rags, and that made of straw and bleached. The former is of a clear surface, pure, white, and prints a soft and bright impression. The sheet on which this article is printed is a specimen of rag paper, the principal ingredient being cotton and the pulp, and refuse of cotton stuffs. The straw paper is a cheaper fabric, rough, brown, and brittle, discoloring with age and use, and often breaking into flaky fragments. This is becoming more generally used, as it is a cheaper fabric. But the price of bleaching has risen so highly, that straw paper is beginning to feel the effects of the coming crisis, and, in addition to the diminished supply and increased demand, we have the probability of a still greater advance. Printing inks are also advancing, partly because many of the ingredients composing ink have doubled and trebled in price. The effect of this is to cause the adulteration of inks, the printing of a pale sheet, and the production of an unsatisfactory newspaper.

HOW WIND INSTRUMENTS AFFECT THE HEALTH.

Mr. Alphonse Sax has written an article in La France Musicale, regarding the healthfulness of different instruments, from which we translate some passages. He says:

"I hear it said every day,—and it seems that physicians agree with the popular belief,—that wind instruments, and particularly brass ones, predispose to pulmonary complaints. . . . . I do not pretend to speak on matters of medical science. I only wish to oppose real facts to an opinion which I think to be erroneous. . . . . The son of a manufacturer and performer myself, I have been brought into contact with thousands of artists who play on these instruments which are thought to be so injurious to the health, and yet only three of these have, so far as I know, died of lung complaints Besides this, it is important to know—and the fact has been proved—that these were not the victims of their profession, but of excesses of all kinds, to which they were addicted.

"Persons who practice wind instruments, are, in general, distinguished—and anybody can verify the statement—by a broad chest and shoulders, an unequivocal sign of vigor. In the travelling bands that pass through our cities, who has not seen women playing the horn, the cornet, the trumpet, and even the trombone and ophicleide, and noticed that they all enjoyed perfect health, and exhibited a considerable development of the thorax? In an orchestra a curious circumstance can be noticed; and that is the corpulence, the strength which the players of wind instruments exhibit, and the spare frames of the disciples of Paganini. The same may be said, with more reason, of pianists.

"If I may be allowed to cite a personal instance, I will say that our family of twelve children was condemned, by the faculty, to pulmonary consumption. This sinister prediction of the physicians was realized by eight of us; but the other four—those who from early childhood blew upon wind instruments—still remain in full health, with every appearance of long life. Artists who play upon wind instruments are generally possessed of good appetites, easy digestions, and, after copious meals, they are able to play without fatigue or inconvenience, four or five hours. If, by chance, they are forced to suspend their use for a time, they lose their appetite, the digestion becomes difficult, and the general well-being and regular functions of the organs are disturbed. I have proven all this in my own person. In 1847, from certain causes, I was deprived of my flute and all other instruments for three months, and I became ill from the lack of that pulmonary exercise to which I was accustomed. When the crisis of my illness was over, I resumed my instrument, and my convalescence was so rapid that Dr. Requin was astonished. That wind instruments may produce the best effects, it is important that the professor should teach his pupils the mode of breathing. Respiration should be taken with the whole chest; first, because a large quantity of wind permits the best execution of a musical phrase; and secondly, because by this kind of exercise, the respiratory organs may acquire strength and energy

"The piano, the organ, the violin, obliged the artist unconsciously to nervously contract his chest to a musical phrase which demands sentiment, soul, the executant appears to wish to transfer his own life to the inanimate instrument under his hands, and render it, at will, sad or gay, full of excitement or rapture, as he is himself excited or rapt. He identifies himself with it; they exist through each other, and are but one. It is only on this condition that he becomes a true artist. But what does this condition cost him? He has sought to transfer his own life into the instrument; and might not one think, indeed, that his life is passing, when his troubled and gasping respiration is observed."

"The grave influences upon the health do not, cannot exist for those who perform wind instruments. However instinct with emotion the musical phrase may be, the full employment of the lungs is indispensable to the production of the sounds. . . . We may therefore conclude that if the practice of string instruments is prejudicial to the health, especially to persons predisposed to affections of the lungs, the practice of wind instruments is, on the contrary, of a nature to prevent these affections, or to diminish their violence in such persons. We should say that the exercise of wind instruments is to the organs of respiration what gymnastic exercise is to the body in general.—Musical Times

WEBSTER AND WIRT.

Daniel Webster was once engaged in a case in one of the Virginia courts, and the opposing counsel was William Wirt, author of the Life of Patrick Henry, which has been criticised as a brilliant romance.

In the progress of the case Mr. Webster produced a highly respectable witness, whose testimony (unless disproved or impeached) settled the case, and annihilated Mr. Wirt's client. After getting through the testimony he informed Mr. Wirt, with a significant expression, that he was through with the witness, and he was at his service. Mr. Wirt rose to commence the cross-examination, but seemed for a moment quite perplexed how to proceed, but quickly assumed a manner expressive of his incredulity as to the facts elicited, and coolly eyeing the witness a moment he said:—

"Mr K——, allow me to ask you whether you have ever read a work called Baron Munchausen?"

Before the witness had time to reply, Mr. Webster quickly rose to his feet and said:—

"I beg your pardon, Mr. Wirt, for the interruption; but there was one question I forgot to ask the witness, and if you will allow me that favor I promise not to interrupt you again"

Mr. Wirt, in the blandest manner, replied, "Yes, certainly," when Mr. Webster, in the most deliberate and solemn manner, said:—

"Sir, have you ever read Wirt's Patrick Henry?"

The effect was so irresistible that even the judge could not control his rigid features. Mr Wirt himself joined in the momentary laugh, and turning to Mr. Webster, said, "Suppose we submit this case to the jury without summing up?" which was assented to, and Mr. Webster's client won the case.

MARRIAGES OF CONSANGUINITY.

M. Boudin, so well known for his researches in medical statistical questions, thus concludes an interesting inquiry concerning the effects of marriages of consanguinity: 1. The opinions hitherto delivered, whether for or against the hurtfulness of these marriages, have for the most part not been based upon conclusive proofs. 2. It is the statistical method that can alone supply a scientific solution of the problem. 3. It results from my own researches that consanguineous marriages are contracted in France at the rate of 2 per cent.; and that deaf-mutes are the issue of consanguineous marriages in the proportion of 28 per cent at the Paris Imperial Institution, 25 per cent. at Lyons, and 30 per cent. at Bordeaux. 4. Marriages between nephews and aunts are contracted in France in the proportion of 0.014 per cent. (fourteen thousandths per cent.) while deaf mutes are the results of such marriages in the proportion of 2.04 per cent. In other words, deaf-mutes resulting from such marriages are 145 times more numerous than they should be. 5. Marriages between uncles and nieces are contracted in the proportion of 0.04 per cent. (four hundredths,) and the deaf-mutes resulting from such marriages reach 1.61 per cent., i. e., the danger of engendering deaf-mutes is 40 times greater in this kind of alliance than it is in ordinary unions. 6. Marriages between cousin-germans are contracted in the proportion of 0.77 per cent. and deaf-mutes are produced in the proportion of 18.47 per cent., i. e., 24 times more frequent than they should be. 7. The proportion of deaf-mutes proceeding from consanguineous origin would be still greater if we could take into account those which proceed indirectly from consanguineous marriages. 8. While at Berlin the proportion of deaf-mutes is but 6 in 10,000 among the Christians, it is 27 in 10,000 among the Jews. 9. In nearly the whole of the cases the deaf-mutes issuing from consanguineous marriages have parents who are perfectly healthy and exempt from hereditary affections. 10. When male and female deaf-mutes intermarry, not being consanguineous, the children they produce, with rare exceptions, are exempt from dumbness and deafness. 11. In the face of such facts as these, the hypothesis of a morbid hereditariness employed for the explanation of the frequency of deaf dumbness among infants the results of consanguineous marriages, is radically false. 12. The hypothesis of the pretended harmlessness of consanguineous marriages is contradicted by the most evident and well-verified facts, and can only be excused by the difficulty, or rather the impossibility, of giving a physiological explanation of the production of infirm children by parents who are physically irreproachable. M. Boudin, in proof of the practical importance of this kind of inquiries, states that in 1851 more than 15,000 men have been exempted in France from military service on account of deaf-dumbness, dumbness, or deafness.—Report de Mem. de Med. Militaire and Medical Times

THE MODEL EDITOR.

Artemus Ward thus describes him:

The Bugle Horn of Liberty is one of Baldinsville's most eminentest institootions. The advertisements are well written, and the deaths and marriages are conducted with signal ability. The editor, Mr Slinkers, is a polish'd, sharcastic writer. Folks in these parts will not soon forgit how he used up the Eagle of Freedom, a family journal published at Snoutville, near here. The controversy was about a plank road. "The road may be, as our contemporary says, a humbug, but our aunt isn't baldheded, and we haven't got a one-eyed sister Sal! Wooder if the Editor of the Eagle of Freedom sees it?" This used up the Eagle of Freedom feller, because his aunt's head does present a bald appearance, and his sister Sarah is very much one-eyed. For a genteel home thrust, Mr. Slinkers has few ekals. He is a man of great pluck likewise. He has a fierce nostril, and I b'lieve that if it wasn't absolutely necessary for him to remain here and announce in his paper, from week to week, that our Government is about to take vig'rous measures to put down the rebellion"—I b'lieve, the illustrio man would enlist as a Brigadier Gin'ral, and git his bounty

CARDS

Mr Romaine was once addressed by a lady, who expressed the great pleasure she had enjoyed in his preaching; and added, that she could comply with his requirements, with one exception

"And what is that, madam?" asked Mr. Romaine

"Cards, sir"

"You think you could not be happy without them?"

"No, sir, I know I could not"

"Then, madam, they are your god, and they must save you."

This pointed admonition led to serious reflection, and, finally, to the abandonment of such unworthy pleasure.

A GHOST STORY.

A friend of mine, a medical man, was on a fishing expedition with an old college acquaintance, an army surgeon, whom he had not met for many years, from his having been in India with his regiment. McDonald, the army surgeon, was a thorough Highlander, and slightly tinged with what is called the superstition of his countrymen, and, at the time I speak of, was liable to rather depressed spirits, from an unsound liver. His native air was, however, rapidly renewing his youth; and when he and his old friend paced along the banks of the fishing stream in a lonely part of Argyleshire, and sent their lines like glassy gossamers over the pools, and touched the water over a salmon's nose, so temptingly that the best principled and wisest fish could not resist the bite, McDonald had apparently regained all his buoyancy of spirit. They had been fishing together for about a week with great success, when McDonald proposed to pay a visit to a family he was acquainted with, which would separate him from his friend for some days. But whenever he spoke of their intended separation, he sank down into his old gloomy state, at one time declaring that he felt as if they were never to meet again. My friend tried to rally him, but in vain. They parted at the trouting stream, McDonald's route being across a mountain pass, with which, however, he had been well acquainted in his youth, through the road was lonely and wild in the extreme. The doctor returned early in the evening to his resting-place, which was a shepherd's house lying on the very outskirts of the "settlements," and beside a foaming mountain stream. The shepherd's only attendants at the time were two herd lads and three dogs. Attached to the hut, and communicating with it by a short passage, was rather a comfortable room, which "the Laird" had fitted up to serve as a sort of lodge for himself in the midst of his shooting-ground, and which he had put for a fortnight at the disposal of my friend.

Shortly after sunset on the day I mention, the wind began to rise suddenly to a gale, the rain descended in torrents, and the night became extremely dark. The shepherd seemed uneasy, and several times went to the door, to inspect the weather. At last he roused the fears of the doctor for McDonald's safety, by expressing the hope that by this time he was "owre that awfu' black moss, and across the red burn." Every traveller in the Highlands knows how rapidly these mountain streams rise, and how confusing the moor becomes in a dark night "The black moss and red burn" were words that were never after forgotten by the doctor, from the strange feelings they produced when first heard that night: for there came into his mind terrible thoughts and forebodings about poor McDonald, and reproaches for never having considered his possible danger in attempting such a journey alone. In vain the shepherd assured him that he must have reached a place of safety before the darkness and the storm came on. A presentiment which he could not cast off made him so miserable that he could hardly refrain from tears. But nothing could be done to relieve the anxiety now become so painful.

The doctor at last retired to bed about midnight. For a long time he could not sleep. The raging of the stream below the small window, and the thuds of the storm made him feverish and restless. But at last he fell into a sound and dreamless sleep. Out of this, however, he was suddenly roused by a peculiar noise in his room, not very loud, but utterly indescribable. He heard tap, tap, tap, at the window, and he knew, from the relation which the wall of the room bore to the rock, that the glass could not be touched by human hand. After listening for a moment, and forcing himself to smile at his nervousness, he turned round, and began again to seek repose. But now a noise began, too distinct and loud to make sleep possible. Starting and sitting up in bed, he heard repeated in rapid succession, as if some one was spitting in anger, and close to his bed—"Fit! fit! fit!" and then a prolonged "whir-r-r" from another part of the room, while every chair began to move, and the table to jerk. The doctor remained in breathless silence, with every faculty intensely acute. He frankly confessed that he heard his heart beating, for the sound was unearthly, so horrible, and something seemed to come so near him, that he began seriously to consider whether or not he had some attack of fever, which affected his brain—for remember, he had not tasted a drop of the shepherd's small store of whisky! He felt his own pulse, composed his spirits, and compelled himself to exercise calm judgment. Straining his eyes to discover anything, he plainly saw, at last, a white object moving, but without sound, before him. He knew that the door was shut, and the window also. An overpowering conviction then seized him, which he could not resist, that his friend McDonald was dead. By an effort, he seized a lucifer box on a chair beside him, and struck a light. No white object could be seen. The room appeared to be as when he went to bed The door was shut. He looked at his watch, and particularly marked that the hour was twenty-two minutes past three. But the match was hardly extinguished when, louder than ever, the same unearthly cry of "Fit! fit! fit!" was heard, followed by the same horrible "whir-r-r-r," which made his teeth chatter with great rapidity. Then the movement of the table and every chair in the room was resumed with increased violence, while the tapping on the window was heard above the storm. There was no bell in the room, but the doctor, on hearing all this frightful confusion of sounds again repeated, and beholding the white object moving toward him in terrible silence, began to thump the wooden partition, and to shout at the top of his voice for the shepherd, and having [illegible] his head under the blankets.

The shepherd soon made his appearance in his night shirt, with a small oil lamp, or "cruesy" over his head, anxiously inquiring, as he entered the room—

"What ails, doctor? What's wrang? Pity me, are ye ill?"

"Very!" cried the doctor. But before he could give any explanation a loud whirr was heard, with the old cry of "Fit!" close to the shepherd, while two chairs fell at his feet! The shepherd sprang back, with a half-scream of terror; the lamp was dashed to the ground, and the door violently shut.

"Come back!" shouted the doctor. "Come back, Duncan, instantly, I command you!"

The shepherd opened the door very partially, and said, in terrified accents—

"Hude be about us, that was awfu'! What [illegible]

"Heaven knows, Duncan," ejaculated the doctor, [illegible] "but we must pick up the chairs, and I shall strike a light."

Duncan did so in no small fear; but as he made his way to the bed in the darkness, to get a match from the doctor, something caught his foot; he fell, and then, amidst the same noises and tumults of chairs, which immediately filled the apartment, the "Fit! fit! fit! fit!" was prolonged with more vehemence than ever! The doctor sprang up, and made his way out of the room, but was several times tripped, by some unknown power, so that he had the greatest difficulty in reaching the door without a fall. He was followed by Duncan, and both rushed out of the room, shutting the door after them. A new light having been obtained, they both returned with extreme caution, and, it must be added, fear, in the hope of finding some cause or other for all those terrifying signs. Would it surprise our readers to hear that they searched the room in vain?—that, after minutely examining under the table, chairs, bed, everywhere, and with the door shut, not a trace could be found of anything. Would they believe that they heard during the day how poor McDonald had staggered, half dead from fatigue, into his friend's house, and falling into a fit, had died at twenty two minutes past three that morning? We do not ask any one to accept of all this as true; but we pledge our honor to the following facts:

The doctor, after the day's fishing was over, had packed his rod so as to take it into his bedroom; but he had left a minnow attached to the hook. A white cat who was left in the room swallowed the minnow, and was hooked. The unfortunate gourmand had vehemently protested against this intrusion into her upper lip by the violent "Fit! fit! fit!" with which she tried to spit the book out; the reel added the mysterious "whir-r-r," and the disengaged line, getting entangled in the legs of the chairs and table, as the hooked cat attempted to fly from her tormentor, set the furniture in motion, and tripped up both the shepherd and the doctor; while an ivy-branch kept tapping at the window! Will any one doubt the existence of ghosts and a spirit-world after this?

I have only to add that the doctor's skill was employed during the night in cutting the hook out of the cat's lip, while his poor patient, yet most impatient, was held by the shepherd in a bag, the head alone of pass, with hook and minnow, being visible. McDonald made his appearance in a day or two, rejoicing once more to see his friend, and greatly enjoying the ghost story. As the doctor finished the history of the night's horrors, he could not help laying down a proposition very dogmatically to his half-superstitious friends, and as some amends for his own terror. "Depend upon it," said he, "if we could thoroughly examine into all the stories of ghosts and apparitions, spirit-rapping, et hoc genus omne, they would turn out to be every bit as true as my own visit from the world of spirits, that is—great humbug and nonsense."

We leave this heterodox sentiment with confidence in the hands of the illustrious dead, who spend so much time in disturbing furniture without even the apology of a hook and minnow. We have no doubt that Milton, Dante, Shakspeare, or probably Newton or Bacon, if properly invited, will cheerfully come as guests to any tea-party of true-believers in London and Boston, to contradict in the most authoritative manner the doctor's profane skepticism. We shall be glad to hear the views of these distinguished men, who it is alleged, though dead, yet speak; and we shall be proud to add them to our staff, and to number them among the contributors to Good Words. We despair of the cat. She has been silent ever since her great debut into spirit land. Her lips though sealed, are sealed.—Dr. Macleod in Good Words.

WHO IS MY NEIGHBOR.

The neighbor! It is he whom thou
Hast power to aid and bless,
Whose aching heart or burning brow
Thy soothing hand may press.

The neighbor! 'Tis the fainting poor,
Whose eye with want is dim,
Whom hunger sends from door to door,
Go thou, and succor him.

The neighbor! 'Tis that weary man,
Whose years are at their brim,
Bent low with sickness, cares, and pain;—
Go thou and comfort him.

The neighbor? 'Tis the heart bereft
Of every earthly gem,
Widow and orphan, helpless left;—
Go thou, and shelter them.

The neighbor! Yonder toiling slave,
Fettered in thought and limb,
Whose hopes are all beyond the grave;—
Go thou, and ransom him.

Where'er thou meet'st a human form
Less favored than thine own,
Remember 'tis thy brother worm,
Thy brother, or thy son.

Oh! pass not, pass not heedless by;
Perhaps thou canst redeem
The breaking heart from misery—
Go, share thy lot with him.

FOR PU

The Christian Recorder.

Philadelphia, November 29, 1862.

REPORT.

Look here, brethren, read this, and remember it, too:—

The meeting of the Executive Committee, and their appeal to the ministers having the charge of circuits and stations, and to the members of the A. M. E. Church, is as follows:

Dear Brethren and Friends: According to the authority vested in our Editor and General Book Steward, he called together the Executive Committee of the Book Concern on the 13th of November, at which time we had a very pleasant interview together in relation to the present flattering condition of the Book Concern and the wants of the Church.

Brethren, let us tell you for once that the Book Concern is really in a prosperous condition—and how it is that our Editor and General Book Steward has so managed to keep the Book Concern and paper in the hopeful condition in which we find it, and with such scant means, we confess we are at a loss to know—and more especially in times like these, when many a firm and paper, with a much larger capital, have succumbed. But, Brethren, in order to hold this position, and to keep up a growing interest throughout the connexion, there are means needed—first, there is a very great demand for hymn-books in every direction in the connexion, and our Editor and General Book Steward has informed us there is only about seven or eight in the store, and he has no more to bind up. Therefore, the Committee deem it advisable, in view of such a demand for our hymn-books, and especially in the Western country, to advise our General Book Steward to get out another edition, so that our people may be supplied. To do this, brethren, it will require about $500. This should be done without delay. We therefore recommend to each elder, deacon and preacher to properly lay this vital matter before their congregations, and to take up a free-will collection, and to forward the same to the Gen. Book Steward and Editor, so that it may be in his hands by the 15th of December, or 20th, at the farthest—and he will give each credit through this paper. Now we ask our brethren, shall the Book Steward have the amount? We will answer for the Philadelphia district—our portion will be forthcoming. We also recommend to our Bishops, while travelling around, to speak of this matter.

WILLIAM MOORE,
W. H. WATERS,
STEPHEN SMITH,
W. D. W. SCHUREMAN,
ELISHA WEAVER, Ch'n.

THE CHRISTIAN RECORDER.

We would again say to those of our friends and brethren who are in debt to us, and especially to the RECORDER, to be so kind as to forward their money to us; for you may know that we stand greatly in need of it, also we would not ask you for it. We also hope that every one who respects the General Conference of the A. M. E. Church, will comply with the Committee's appeal, at the time set forth in their application; and those of our ministers who fail to see the Committee's appeal, we hope that any of the stewards, or even members, will have the kindness to call their preachers' attention to it, so that there can be no excuse, for now is the time to work. We would also say, that if the money be raised, we can then give brethren a chance to sell them in time, say until the sitting of their Conference, if they cannot settle before. Let the whole Connexion speak. We think that we can speak for the Indiana and the Missouri Conferences in behalf of each minister having charge. What says Bishop Quinn? The RECORDER will show the amount which each minister takes up in their station, on their different appointments. There is one other reason why the Committee's appeal should be strictly complied with, and that is, we are told by the Committee, that Bishop Payne states that he has now got the History of the A. M. E. Church complete, and ready for the press, with the approval of the Committee. Therefore, we should like to have it ready by the sitting of the General Conference, or before.

REVIVAL

The good work of the Lord has been going on in Bethel Church. Last Friday night, a week ago, the Rev. J. P. Campbell had his converts to mount the platform in front of the pulpit, to give in their experience, after which he would offer them to the Church on trial. There were some thirteen converts, and two had been reclaimed. May the Lord ever bless, and keep them faithful unto death.

The Rev. B. Philip Reynolds, M. D., V.D.M., of England, who has been in this country a few months, was in Bethel Church last Sunday night, the 23d inst., which was the first time he ever was in a colored church, and the first time he ever heard a colored man preach. He is said to be a strong advocate for liberty. He preached for Elder Campbell on the night of the 24th He proved himself to be master of what he was talking about. The Lord go with him wherever he goes.

Rev. A. W. Wayman, of Baltimore, was also in our city two days, or more, and preached for Elder Campbell on the night of the 26th inst. He looks very well. We are glad to hear of our old friend and brother in the Lord, Rev. William Jackson, and his kind lady; but we are sorry to hear of her illness. We shall look often now to hear from Brother Jackson.

NOTICE.

The Trustees of the A. M. E. Book Concern are hereby notified to meet in Philadelphia on the 9th of December, 1862. They are as follows:—Rev. Henry Davis, Mr. Abraham Fields, Rev. Stephen Smith, Mr. Isaiah Weir, Rev. B. Roberson, (deceased,) Rev. James Hollen, and Elisha Weaver, Chairman. Please to meet at 2 o'clock, P. M., punctually.

NOTICE

TO THE DISTRICTS OF PHILADELPHIA, NEW ENGLAND, OHIO, INDIANA, AND MISSOURI, OF THE A. M. E. CHURCH MINISTERS.

Dear Brethren:—As we have a number of superannuated ministers on the list in said Districts, therefore it will be expected that the ministers and preachers, on their circuits and stations, will do all they can to collect the two cent money; and we also recommend that the Class leaders be instructed to collect and set the amount on the Class book opposite each member's name, as also all the collections called, per Discipline, for the Annual Conference, and publish the same once every quarter, that it may be seen who they are that work for God and his cause. We think it is time to give credit to those of our people who do work, so that God's name may be glorified.

NOTICE.

The Rev. W. A. Alston, Rector of St. Thomas' Church, will be instituted to-morrow (Sabbath) 30 inst., in the morning, by Bishop Potter. Sermon by Dr. Hare.

A STRONG AND HUMANE APPEAL.

The "Independent" of New York has a strong and humane appeal to England, by Mr Frederick Douglass, to Great Britain, for non interference with this government. The ground upon which he predicates his appeal upon is sufficient to hold the old Mother Country (?) spell-bound on the subject of non-interference. We recommend our readers to get that paper and read it, it is the 20th of November

LECTURES.

On last Thursday night we had the pleasure of hearing Mr E. B Bassett lecture, his subject was the Atmosphere; a subject which seems dry to an uncultivated mind, but we assure all that it is a subject of great moment. After this lecture was over, we went to hear Dr. Brown, of Burlington, deliver one of his lectures on Phrenology. We never heard Dr. Brown before, and would say, that he lectures with as much ease, if not more so, than any one we have ever heard upon the subject. He is a second Fowler, though a colored man.

PAPER.

Paper has undergone a tremendous and sudden advance in price. We notice that the rates of the daily and weekly papers have been increased. The Advocates of the A. M. E. Church have raised to two dollars and a half. We have not yet determined whether or not we shall follow the general example by raising the subscription price of the Christian Recorder

THE DORCAS SOCIETY.

The above worthy organization had quite a pleasant time at their little mental feast on last Thursday night.

NOTICE.

Unless our brethren come immediately to our assistance, we shall be most unwillingly compelled to materially decrease the size of our paper. The present dimensions of the Recorder is 28 by 42. But, if we make the contemplated curtailment, it will be reduced to 26 by 32. The former size costs us from 20 to 22 cents per pound, while the latter is but 17 cents per pound. It now remains for our subscribers to say whether the change in size shall be made or not—whether they would rather pay two dollars and twenty-five cents per year, or have the present proportions of the paper reduced

FATHER ROBERSON'S FUNERAL

The funeral services of the remains of that great hero of the cross of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ, took place as follows:—At one o'clock, the omnibus came in front of Bethel Church, in which a number of ministers of the New York and Philadelphia Conferences, with several ladies and gentlemen, to the number of twenty-four or twenty-five, took seats, and were driven out to Frankford Church, where we found the church-yard and street full of friends, white and colored. We alighted, when the ministers formed and marched to the house of the old soldier, where we found another large crowd in the street, in the yard, and in the house. A way was opened up for us to march in through the house, so that we could see the remains of this old veteran.

Rev. J. P. Campbell gave out the hymn—

"Hark! from the tombs a doleful sound!
My ears attend the cry;
Ye living men, come view the ground
Where you must shortly lie."

We then marched out, formed a procession, and proceeded to the church. The procession was very large, extending the length of two squares, or more, and there were hundreds who did not march with us. The corpse having been placed in front of the pulpit, the church was crowded to its utmost capacity, while there were hundreds who could gain no admittance, and had to stay outside. Rev. Stephen Smith commenced by reading, and singing the hymn—"And am I born to die, to lay this body down?" Prayer was addressed to the Throne of Grace, by Rev. J. P. B Eddy. Rev A. L. Stanford read 1st Corinthians, 15th chapter. The Rev Stephen Smith then arose and spoke of the departed hero, and of his long standing in the Church. The Rev. Henry Davis followed next, who spoke of the sainted Roberson. Rev Elisha Weaver was next in rotation to speak of the man of God who had gone from labor to reward—as he, too, had been with him the last day prior to the death blow which he received, and after he had received said blow. The Rev. Theodore Gould followed, in conclusion of the remarks, who also spoke very affectionately over the corpse. The friends and relatives then took their farewell sight of that beautiful corpse, after which we marched out in front of the church, where he was let down into the sepulchre, when Rev. W. D. W. Schureman read the funeral service in a grave and solemn manner, until he had gone through with all except the Lord's Prayer and the dismissal, which was performed by Rev. J P. Campbell. We then returned to our places of abode.

There must have been not less than six or seven hundred people present; and had it been at Bethel, there would have been not less than five or six thousand. Brethren of the Philadelphia Conference, and of the Church in general, we have lost a faithful, zealous, and unflinching soldier, who for many years wielded the sword for Jesus and His Church. He was esteemed and beloved by all; but his work is done; his trials, troubles, and afflictions are over. To day he plays on the golden harp. To-day he soars from mansion to mansion. To-day he enjoys the Christian's rest, which Jesus said He would prepare for all the faithful. Oh, dear father, we envy thee not! but will labor on to meet thee in that rest. From the rough winds and tides of this life, we bid thee farewell, but do resolve to see you again.

As we shall have occasion to speak of this good man again, through the columns of this paper, we shall stop for the present.

DIED

Sister Hannah Cornish, wife of Rev. John Cornish, departed this life on Sunday night, the 23d inst. We are informed that her hope was anchored in the Lord Jesus Christ. She leaves behind her a dear husband to mourn her loss. His field of labor is Bucks County Circuit

FUNERAL.

The funeral of the wife of Rev. John Cornish took place on Thursday last, (Thanksgiving Day,) and was attended by a large concourse of sorrowing relatives and friends

THE DESTINY OF THE A. M. E. CHURCH

BY THE STEWARD

The destiny of the A. M. E. Church depends upon the episcopacy, elders, deacons, and preachers having charge of the people

1st No country, with claims of government, has ever been known to stand long where the law was not respected by the subjects of that country The law demands respect, and it is the imperative duty of the executive of the law to see that it is respected in all of its ramifications. Any neglect on the part of the executive would prove his timidity and unfitness for such a responsible position. In A. D. 249, which was the seventh persecution under Decius, who was stimulated to attempt the very extirpation of the name of Christian,—and it was unfortunate for the gospel, that many errors had about this time crept into the Church,—the Christians were at variance with each other; self interest divided those whom social love ought to have united; and the virulence of pride occasioned a variety of factions.

2d The same is true of every branch of the Church militant, in every century, in the past, as well as in the present. Each branch of the Church has certain rules and regulations, by which they are to be governed. All persons making application for membership, take obligations upon themselves to love, cherish and obey all of her laws, rules, and regulations; to be careful that the least one of those rules are not trampled under their feet, but to study each one: that is to say, make yourself familiar with all of them, and, as far as lies in your power, comply with them. Now the A. M. E. Church, which covers a vast deal of territory, is, to all intents and purposes, a branch of the Church of Christ; and as such, she has once in every four years, a large legislative body, which meets at the time and place fixed upon from time to time by said body. In this body they make such laws and regulations as may be thought best for the time being. It is true that, on those occasions, we should legislate prayerfully, coolly, and calmly; so that whatever is done, should be done to the glory of God. But this is not always the case; for as there are sometimes many minds of different opinions, there will be a little contention, for each will think that his way is as good as any one's else, if not better. Therefore, some of the laws may not be just as they should be; so we let it run until we meet again.

3d. These laws having been made, the question presents itself to us in this form: Who are to see that these laws, rules, and regulations are strictly carried out? Who are to set the example? Bishops, ministers, or the members in said Church, who are under them. And how is this to be brought about?

(Continued.)

CITY CARS AND COLORED PASSENGERS.

At the annual Union Thanksgiving Meeting of the churches of the Reformed Presbyterian and United Presbyterian denominations in this city, held on Thursday afternoon, at the church of Rev. William Sterrett, 22d Street, near Callowhill, addresses were made by Rev. Messrs Crow, Price, Dr. Wylie, George H. Stuart, and others.

Mr. Price, of Frankford, referred, in a feeling manner, to the death of Rev. Richard Roberson, as the result of his exclusion from a Frankford car, and being compelled, on a dark and stormy night, to occupy the platform of said car.

At the conclusion of the meeting, Rev. A. G. M'Auley, of Kensington, rose and offered a resolution that a committee, consisting of six laymen, (three from each of the denominations here represented,) be appointed to print and circulate a petition in favor of permitting all respectable or well-behaved persons to occupy the cars, irrespective of condition or color. The resolution was adopted by the meeting without dissent, and the following persons appointed to attend to the matter:—Dr. M'Murray, Alexander Kerr, Thos. Stinson, Wm. Getty, Wm. S. Young, and another person, whose name we do not recollect.

WASHINGTON CORRESPONDENT.

Mr. Editor:—There is nothing of importance that has transpired, since you last heard from us. There is some excitement here, in regard to a report, which has gained currency, relative to Jackson marching upon Washington, though it is thought to be a mere sensation report, got up by some traitorous sympathizer, for the purpose of producing an effect.

The friends of humanity are preparing to give a grand dinner to the contrabands, on Thursday, 27th inst., at which time there will be several distinguished persons, who will deliver addresses to them. We hope it will be a grand affair.

Bishop Payne is in the city, and will preach to-morrow, at Israel church. He looks to be the very picture of health.

I stated in my last, that I would give in full, the proceedings of the contraband convention, held at Union Bethel church, but as nothing of importance was done more than the election of officers, I will merely insert their names, for the benefit of the public

William Slade, Esq., President,
William H. Wilson, Vice President,
John T. Johnson, Recording Secretary,
James L. Thomas, Corresponding Secretary,
Benjamin F. Lannon, Treasurer.

The committee for drafting a constitution were, John T. Johnson, William H. Wilson, James L. Thomas.

The convention meets again on the 27th inst., at 2 o'clock, P. M., at which time I hope things will be brought to a working status.

Mr. William Slade, the President, is the right man in the right place. While I have no personal acquaintance with the gentleman, yet it affords me pleasure to say, that we need have no hesitancy or fears, that the position held by him will not be more than satisfactorily filled. His amiable traits of character which must necessarily be brought to a higher state of development, by virtue of the responsibilities of his present position, will rank him among the brightest gems of Washington.

The most of our churches will observe Thursday, (Thanksgiving day,) with religious services. H. M. T.

Washington, Nov. 22d, 1862.

RIDICULE.—It is not our criminal actions that we require courage to confess, but those that are ridiculous and foolish.

GLORY AND PROSPERITY.—It is better to look round on prosperity than back on glory.

BLESSED are they who see the day of glory, but more blessed are they who contribute to its approach.—SECKER

"Thou water to purge away sin,
Take all our thoughts in golden rain
Fall in our cave-like hearts, and, save
Their pathway, naught is found again.—H. L. Abbey.

For the Christian Recorder
DELHI INN, Nov. 20th, 1862.

Mr. Editor.—After my long silence to you, caused by the disadvantage of my appointment from Vincennes circuit to Blue River circuit, I now take this opportunity of communicating to you. I arrived in Dublin, Sept. 12th, stopped at Bro. James Wallace's, whom I found to be right, and a very hospitable gentleman. I made one round on my circuit, and found it in a low and discouraging condition at every point. Two weeks after my arrival here, my wife came. On the same day of her arrival she was seized with a malignant attack of bilious fever, which was very severe, but through the mercy of God, she was restored to health again Since then I have been around my circuit twice. At Blue River I found a very flattering prospect of doing much good, also at Connersville. Seven joined the church, and others appeared to be much interested

I held my Quarterly meeting at Dublin, on the 10th, 11th and 12th of October, at which time the good Lord owned our weak efforts, in trying to expound his word. Five joined the church, and four were happily converted to God.

On the 14th, Bishop Quinn paid us a visit, and preached us a very interesting discourse.

Through an invitation given by Bro. Trevan, at Richmond, I visited him, and we had a good time together.

I expect to commence my protracted meeting at Blue River, on the 22d, if the Lord is willing. Pray for us. Now in regard to the Recorder and Repository, we have presented their claims, and have the promise of some subscribers, to begin the 1st of Jan., 1863.

Very Respectfully,
WILLIAM JACKSON.

For the Christian Recorder.
XENIA, Nov. 23d, 1862

Dear Brother in the Lord:—Please permit me to ask you a few questions, through your valuable paper, for information, and to appease suffering humanity. There is a family here, one man, his wife, child and a woman as a servant, of our colour, inhabitants of the Haytien government They came here without means of support, and the man is an educated man and a printer by trade. He says he was teaching school, where he came from. He can speak several different languages, but he really does seem too lazy to work at any and every thing, to make a living for his family, and he got a great notion to return to Hayti, but had no means to go with, he being the only one in the family that can speak our language. The friends here held a meeting, and agreed to hold a levee, which we did. Made some $55 to send them away. About this time some changes took place, in those officers, &c., and he says he cannot find out any thing about them, whether they are still taking emigrants to Hayti or not, and as the family is in a suffering condition, we are willing to send them to Boston or New York, so that they may get to those people. Any information will be thankfully received, at your earliest convenience. I am with due regard,

Your obedient servant,
JOHN COUSINS, JR

This has been here ever since July last.—ED.

For the Christian Recorder.

ACKNOWLEDGMENTS.

The social, civil and statistical association, acknowledge the following contributions to the Contraband Fund:

Lewis Seymour,	$1 00
Juniata Hart,	25
Sarah M Douglass,	1 00
J. M. M Douglass', (penny collection,)	1 00
Ruth Harding,	1 00
Rev Peter Gardner,	1 00
Mrs. Chase,	80
By Mrs. H. S. Duterte:—
James Brown, $1.00; M. Poor, $1.00; Mr. Lyons, $1 00; S. S. Hawkins, $1.00; H. S. Duterte, $1.00; Dr. Parlow, $1 00; George Curtis, $1.00 Hannah Mead, 50 cts.; D Parlow, Jr., 25 cts.; Mr. Douglass, 25 cts.; Mr Martin, 25 cts; Mrs D Parlow, 25 cts.; John Coulter, 25 cts.; cash, 25 cts; Thomas Glasgow, 5 cts; cash, 25 cts.; cash, 50 cts.; John Irvin, 25 cts; Mrs. Irvin, 25 cts.; Rev. Mr. Hardy, 10 cts.; Mrs. Lane, 25 cts., Mrs Landaway, 25 cts.	$10 90
By Mrs. Gertrude Offett: (From Sunday School of 1st Presbyterian Church.)	$30 51
By Moses Wheeler:— Rosetta Johnson, $1 00; John Deputy, Jr., $2 00; W. H. Price, 50 cts.; William Hopkins, 25 cts.	$3 75
By Morris Brown:— (From the A. M E. Church of St. Thomas,)	$2 81
By William Still:— (Rebecca White, $30 00; Abigail Goodwin and others, $17.00; Dr. J. Still, $5 00,)	$42 00
Clayton Miller,	1 00
Making	$146 52

JAMES C. WHITE, Treas.

Nov. 19th, 1862.

The following amounts have been previously received:

Clayton Miller,	$2 00
William Still,	5 00
Robert Adam,	2 00
S. M. S,	2 00
Henry Minton,	2 00
Catherine Johnson,	1 00
Vashti Locke,	2 00
William Warwick,	2 00
Harriet Shorter,	1 00
Sarah S Hawkins,	1 00
Rev S. C Gibbs,	1 00
James P. Clay,	1 00
Benjamin F Hill,	2 00
Anna E. Dickinson,	10 00
Appropriation by Association,	50 00
Making,	$84 00
Whole Amount,	$230 52

H. W., Treas

LEND YOUR PAPER

"A good instrument should not be lost any more than a good opportunity. A religious newspaper containing impressive paragraphs, admonitions, affecting narratives; showing the power and excellence of religion, cautions against the snares of a wicked world, raising exhibitions of the value of the soul, and a hearty recommendation of the Saviour, is an instrument which should not be thrown away. It must let such a paper be taken up as soon as your family have read it. You have neighbors who never see a religious paper, and probably never will, if left to themselves. These paragraphs will be fresh and attractive to them, and will be read. Mark some of the most striking pieces with your pen and hand the paper round among your neighbors. See that it goes to a good number of families. This may cost you a little time and attention but it is one of the most ready ways of doing good. The children in your neighborhood, the apprentice in his shop, and boarders in his house, may there read that which they never will forget; and the scrap which you throw away might save many souls, if it was put into circulation. There are secular papers enough which you can cast up and burn without compunction. But when the press has sent out, in any form, a message of salvation, do not stop it. Send it forward."

CHINA.

JEWS IN THE CELESTIAL EMPIRE

Many theologians and historians, both Jewish and Gentile, have advanced theories relative to the position of the various lost tribes. Every few years discovers some hitherto unknown community of Israelites in some foreign part of the earth But the most curious account that we have heard for some time was recently related by a Jewish officer in the British navy. It is as follows:

At the breaking out of the English war with China, he received his commission as lieutenant, and went to the seat of war, and served under Commander Rollins. Our friend was assigned the command of a small vessel carrying three guns, for the purpose of penetrating the rivers and streams of the interior, and preventing any hostile assemblages. He seldom advanced further than five or six miles from the principal rendezvous; but, on one occasion, tired of cruising about in the same places so often and meeting no opposition, he proceeded ten miles up the river, and still found no hinderance. He sailed on till he had advanced about thirty miles into the interior of the country, passing several cities and villages, but seeing no fortifications, and not being molested in any way

He was about to retrace his course, when, looking ahead, he thought that there appeared something in the distance resembling a fortification He determined to ascertain the nature of the place, and headed the ship for it. When he approached, he was surprised by seeing multitudes of Chinese junks and other small boats approaching the vessel. He ordered the decks cleared for action, in case of a fight. As the enemy approached nearer to the ship, they let fly a cloud of weapons and stones, which, however, did no injury. The lieutenant, thinking to scatter them, had one of his guns loaded with grape-shot, and poured it into them where the crowd appeared thickest. It must have done considerable execution, for now they raised a yell. They attempted to climb up the sides, but were met on every side by the sailors. Now the fight began in real earnest. With all their guns employed, it was as much as the Britishers could do to keep the natives from gaining a footing on board of the vessel.

The Chinese fought desperately; their leader, a tall, majestic-looking man, wielding a long, straight sword, seemed by his presence to inspire them with increased bravery. Seeing this an attempt was made to capture him. He had effected a footing on board for himself. A shot through the bottom of the canoe cuts off his retreat, and there is no hope for them but fighting till more come to their relief. After a brief struggle the capture of the chief is effected, and all the belligerents cease fighting. The British vessel then attempted to make its way out of the river; but the natives, as they perceive this, raise such a yell as we never heard before, and the chief, extending his hands, addresses his captors in a language which did not resemble the Chinese in any respect. The lieutenant was astounded at recognising the familiar tones of the Hebrew language. Thanks to his parents, in his youth he had received a good Hebrew education, and was able to carry on a conversation with the chief, who told him that if he would give him up he would promise that they would not be molested, but permitted a free egress, and also, if he desired, he would show him his city. The officer accepted the proposition, and, accompanied by him as a safeguard, and also a body of men from the ship, they visited the town. It was an immense city, surrounded on all sides by walls and fortifications, and contained over one million of inhabitants, all Jews. In no other part of the Chinese Empire are there any Jews. Here they are allowed every privilege. They can carry their produce to other cities, and trade with them, but are not allowed to emigrate. They have their own laws, and their chief officer is a Jewish Rabbi, who, with twenty others, enact laws, decide disputes, and deal out justice to the inhabitants of the city. In this tribunal is vested the power of life and death, and from their decision there is no appeal. They keep a standing army of the young men of the place to protect their city. Their laws command the observance of the Jewish religion; but their rites and ceremonies differ from ours in many respects. They observe the Sabbath on what is to us Thursday, but still they call it the seventh day. Their synagogues are the most beautiful buildings that are to be seen in the empire. They are all built in one style, which resembles a mixture of the Gothic and Corinthian, and are ornamented by beautiful pagodas. Each synagogue is capable of holding over 2,000 worshippers, and generally consists of a large hall, with an arched roof all of stained glass, which presents a beautiful appearance. The roof is supported by pillars of variegated marble, ornamented by fine porcelain cornices. On all the pillars are hangings of fine silk and damask. The building is illuminated by handsome candelabras, holding long and thin tapers of the whitest wax.

The holy ark is a beautiful structure in itself, and is approached by nine steps of the whitest marble. On opening the doors and drawing the curtain, the whole building is flooded by the light which issues forth. In every available spot inside the ark candles are placed, which are kept burning continually, but still are not seen. The effect, as may be imagined, is beautiful. In each house of worship there are three "sapheorem," which are written on pure white vellum. These are handled with the greatest care, and only by the priest himself. Woman are not allowed to enter the synagogues, except on holidays and days of festivity. In the aggregate, their rules are in strict accordance with our religion, and are sensible in themselves. The military leader who had been taken prisoner, together with the priests, spared no pains to make themselves understood, explaining everything which they thought would prove interesting.

The party spent about six hours examining the place and then returned to the ship, laden with presents, and what were to them curiosities. The officer has still in his possession several cabinets, not over four feet square, which contain over three hundred drawers and secret places

The most interesting curiosity which he received was a prayer book, written on Chinese vellum, which he presented to the British Museum. Several little articles yet remain in his possession, which are highly treasured by him.

Thus, a community of Israelites exist in Oriental China never heard of before, yet consisting of over one million souls, speaking the original sacred tongue, keeping their own laws, and possessing documents which record events in their history thousands of years ago.

COLLECTORS.

The passion for collecting is both varied and widely diffused. The objects which interest one mind may have no attraction for another, whose penchant lies in another direction, and yet each pursues its purpose with a tenacity almost invincible. Within due limits, the passion may be prosperous and useful, and yet it tends to what amounts to a mania, often ridiculous and expensive. In young persons it serves to concentrate attention and incites to perseverance, and we should be disposed to encourage it as a guard against idleness and listlessness, if not against practices positively vicious. The boy who collects plants for an herbarium, or minerals and coleoptera a cabinet, is usually employed at once in the study of nature, and is neglected alike duty and even in the time of pursuit as an agreeable recreation. The love of science and the love may be thus promoted. Besides the collection of the parts after he has read their study, there are many suggestions of curious phenomena about the manifestations of this passion. Books, for instance, are valuable, as the depositories of knowledge, and no one, who appreciates literature, can be blamed for seeking to multiply such stores, but when books are valued chiefly in proportion to their rarity, or some adventitious peculiarity of typography, the case is altered, and a species of mania is observable. One person, who would hesitate to give one hundred dollars for a Bible in beautiful typography, because of its modern date, may eagerly offer his thousands for one in black letter, because it is old. It is on record that an English nobleman gave upwards of eleven thousand dollars for a volume, because of its [illegible] rarity. Surely this was [illegible] of madness, and, although a case perhaps unparalleled, even to this day fabulous prices are given for books which have no other claims to notice than their extreme rarity.

DR. CUMMING.

I had the good fortune of hearing Dr. Cumming twice—forenoon and evening—in his own church. This church is situated in the heart of London, in a dark, crowded, smoky, dismal corner, opposite Drury Lane Theatre, not far from Holywell Street, and within earshot of some of the worst places in the city—just the locality for a Christian church. Light in darkness, purity in the midst of corruption, a spring of living water bubbling up in the heart of the desert, an ark of safety amid the surging of the great sea of wickedness—such is the church in the world, and such, in its place, is this church in the gloomy shadow of Drury Lane Theatre. The building looks sufficiently ancient to be a contemporary of Henry the Eighth. It is not large, and has no pretensions to architectural beauty. The pulpit is in the side, and deep tiers of galleries run along the front and the two ends. Two thousand persons can be accommodated with sitting or standing room within the sound of the preacher's voice. The audience is always large, and is highly respectable—for Dr Cumming is one of the most attractive preachers in London, and his talents are a sufficient counterpoise to the disadvantages of locality.

It was a cloudless autumn day on which I attended, and yet the GAS had to be kept burning ALL DAY! I believe it is seldom that service can be conducted in this church without more or less of artificial light.

In a previous letter I think I gave some account of the energy with which Dr Cumming's congregation carry on missionary operations in the dark district which surrounds them. This is a characteristic of every healthful church here—not content with merely keeping its members together, and feeding the lambs already within the fold—not afraid to gather in the outcast and the poor, and make them partakers of the rich gospel feast. In this respect let the churches of the Old Country be an example to ours in the new world.

Dr. Cumming, on entering the pulpit, assumed the attitude of prayer for a few minutes, and then gave out a Psalm, which was sung by the people standing. The singing was admirable. He gave out two or three chants, which were well sung.

The habit of singing the prose version of the Psalms is becoming more common, and I must say it is a very great improvement. It would take a congregation some time to learn the music of CHANTS, but once learnt what so beautiful! This is the good old scriptural way. Neither the Jewish church nor the Early Christian church knew anything of rhyme. Hymns are good, the "Psalms of David in metre" are incomparably better; but best of all are the "Psalms" in their grand simplicity, as you find them in the heart of the Bible. Dr Cumming's congregation can sing them with great effect, the volumes of melody swelling high above the noise of organ or of choir.

The Doctor read a chapter, making a few observations, as he went on I was much amused with one of his explanations: Having read, "free course," he added, "that is, unobstructed circulation." Several of his "explanations" were equally lucid. Himself a Scotchman, he spoke severely of the Scotch people for their irreverence in the house of God—for not offering up prayer on entering the church—for "bolting out when the service is over, as if a wild beast were rushing after them ready to tear them limb from limb." He also censured them for "the doleful and awful faces with which they go to the Lord's Table." He said that in Scotland the Lord's Supper was generally dispensed but once a year and was regarded with superstitious dread. There were days of fasting and preaching before it, and there was preaching after it. The scriptural idea was altogether forgotten, and what should be the happiest day of the year was looked upon as something awful. He thus gave his hearers an idea of Scotland and Scottish modes of conducting worship and dispensing the Lord's Supper which tended to make them better satisfied with the way things are conducted in London. It is not for me to say whether the Doctor was wholly right or wholly wrong. I confess that I have seen people "bolting out" at too fierce a rate from the House of God; and the Sacrament of the Lord's Supper may be abused, but I could not see much good in telling the faults of poor Scotch folk here, even if all he said were perfectly true. After dealing with the faults of Scotland in this fashion, the eloquent preacher proceeded to inculcate the duty of mutual forbearance in non-essentials. There should be no dispute between Presbytery and Prelacy. It should be matter of indifference whether we use a liturgy or do without it—whether or not we have instrumental music in our churches Those were the three points which he addressed as "non-essentials." He told us of some cases in which a man must remove the "diluvial deposit of self conceit." Puseyism he characterized as "Homœopathic Popery." He mentioned that he had often seen as many as FOUR ministers of the Episcopal church among his audience, and that he had had frequent intercourse with them. His text was, "Quench not the Spirit." The sermon was interesting, but evidently not studied with sufficient care, and hence its somewhat heterogeneous character. I am informed that he frequently indulges in severe criticism of Scotland and Scottish habits—the fact being that there is but little love lost between him and his native country—his Prophetical predilections making him the subject of ridicule there. On the whole I left the church in the morning not well satisfied. I therefore returned in the evening. His subject then was the "Parable of Lazarus and the Rich Man."

This evening discourse was in every respect admirable. I was thankful that I heard it. The preacher put forth his whole strength. He was in earnest, and dealing with a subject the most solemn and appalling that can ever fall to the lot of man. He confined himself to his subject and to Scriptural truth. He was thoroughly orthodox and evangelical—sound, eloquent, earnest—all that he carries a bearer of a message from God to dying men. The thronged congregation paid the stillest attention, and nothing was to be heard but calm, clear, soft voice of the preacher proclaiming the truth. Most agreeable was the contrast with the morning service; yet the very contrast made this discourse all the more impressive.

I am glad to learn that the Doctor now avoids the "Prophetical" line which was once his forte. It is not safe to predict that he is permanently cured of his erroneous notions in that direction, but I believe there is a great improvement. I heard not a whisper in either of his discourses, on his old hobbies, and this was a most agreeable disappointment. Dr. Cumming's strength lies in his evangelical doctrine. He preaches the Gospel faithfully, and on his vagaries are forgiven and forgotten. My own impression of him now is very favorable. He lacks the boldness, the magnificent strength, the opulent spontaneity of Spurgeon: he lacks the rich imagination, the classic elegance of James Hamilton: he lacks the calm, unassuming dignity, the profound originality of Henry Melville;—yet he must deservedly take rank with the Princes in Israel. As a sound Protestant, as a faithful evangelist, as an attractive popular writer, Dr. Cumming has done and is doing good service to his generation.

Presbyterian Witness Halifax

DYING WORDS OF MELANCTHON

It is related that Melancthon, just before he died, says and wish to be at some brave passages of Scripture read, and this desire having been not he was asked by his son-in-law, Sabinus, whether he would have anything else, to which he replied in these emphatic words, "Mihi nihil, non Christus" (nothing else but heaven.) And shortly after this he breathed his last. Will did one who sought to embalm his memory in verse, say

He sun went down in cloud on shore,
Around upon the main so fair,
In lovelier array.
But not like earth's declining light,
That comes and goes in night,
The [illegible] shore and [illegible] sea,
No bound, no setting beam can know,
Without a cloud or shade of woe,
In that eternal day.

IRISH MISSIONS.

Professor GIBSON read the report of the Continental Mission. He said, that as a friend from Italy was to address the meeting, he would not detain them long. The only facts to which he would allude particularly, were in regard to the financial affairs of the mission. He regretted that the contributions in aid of this most important field of operation were not increasing as they ought to do. Five years ago they had a balance on hand of £3,300; that balance was now reduced to £970; and they had claims in regard to the church in Canada and New Brunswick which amounted to about £700, leaving only between £200 and £300 to meet the important claims of France, Italy, and Belgium. He trusted that by the time the next annual statement was to be read, that the report would show a better state of things. He then read the report as follows:—

"The appeals for aid by our Continental brethren have been of late both numerous and urgent, and it is a matter of congratulation that this church is in a position to render them some encouragement and aid. The countries among whose several populations we have contributed during the past year to the dissemination of the truth are—France, Belgium, Switzerland, and Italy.

"FRANCE.—The Christian efforts in which we have been led to take a special interest, aiding them by grants from our funds, are—The Union of Evangelical Churches, a religious community for which we must ever feel a lively and fraternal regard, and with which are associated the honored names of Monod, Audebes, Pisch, and others, whose praise is in all the churches. The Evangelical Society of France, in connexion with which an unusual amount of effort has of late been concentrated upon the capital itself, where, while the Government has been surrounding it with fortresses and bastions, the society have sought in the strength of God to erect the true fortifications of schools and churches, by which to conserve the interests and extend the real glory of the empire. The Evangelical Society of Lyons.—The civil war in America, and the state of trade, generally, have deeply affected the manufacturing interest in this great mart of industry, and in the contributions, both for ordinary and evangelistic purposes, there has been a consequent diminution. The Central Society of Evangelisation.—When it is borne in mind that this society has constituted since its formation a rallying point for the evangelical party in the National Reformed Church of France, and that it has greatly contributed to the work of purification and revival, its operations will not fail to call forth our prayerful co-operation Although the aid which has been given to these seven agencies has only amounted during the year to £300, it is a gratifying circumstance that a bond of affiliation has thus been formed between this church and the representatives of that noble Protestant community, so famous in contending for the truth in days of old. For centuries has the papacy been the blight and bane of France, degrading her people, and now more than ever making a tremendous effort to darken her naturally bright intelligence, to undermine her moral strength, and bring her down to the dust again. But there are gratifying indications that the old enemy shall be eventually foiled in his attempts, and amid the reigning superstitions, there are assuring evidences that the Sun of righteousness has arisen with healing in his wings.

"IN BELGIUM.—The Missionary Church, which has received from us £150, and which tree to the name it bears, seeks to evangelise the community in which it is placed, while it has had peculiar trials, has also had peculiar encouragements during the year. One pastor, for instance, writes—'We have seventy applicants for communion, eighteen of whom have been entirely detached from the Church of Rome. Of our congregation, which including children, amounts to 650, only twelve were originally Protestants; the remaining 638 were not long ago Roman Catholics.

"During the past year an unusual amount of interest was awakened on behalf of the Swiss Churches, by the holding in Geneva, in September, of one of those great evangelical conferences, which form so peculiar and hopeful a characteristic of these times. Christians from the lands of Voltaire, Gibbon, Rousseau, and Frederick the Second, found in the middle of the nineteenth century a rendezvous in that city, which in the middle of the eighteenth had obtained a painful notoriety as the central seat of the infidelity of that unhappy period. The spirit of no earlier day predominated in their councils, and before they separated, they resolved that the third centenary of the death of Calvin should be celebrated in 1864, by a suitable recognition of the work achieved by the great reformer, and the erection of a permanent memorial of that commemoration. In such an object all true Protestant communities will rejoice to co-operate. The Evangelical Society of Geneva has received from the funds of our Continental mission, £100.

"Foremost in importance in restoring to Italy the blessings of the Reformation, is the Waldensian Church.—When the first deputies, commissioned by the Assembly to visit the Vaudois in 1855, appeared among them in their village capital, these interesting people, so long broken by persecution, had scarcely done more than timidly and cautiously plant their foot on a few spots beyond their native valleys. That they have not been inactive in the interval, or slow to enter by the great door and effectual which has meanwhile been opened, is attested by the fact that they have already above thirty churches and stations spread over all parts of the Italian peninsula, as well as Sicily, extending from Aosta and Courmayeur, as they

RELIGIOUS ITEMS.

We quote from a letter of Rev. Dr. E. C Wines the following notice of the convicts' prayer-meeting in Sing-Sing prison:

The meeting is regarded as an experiment, and none are permitted to attend but those who have completed their work for the day. The meeting last Monday was the third of the kind that had been held So far, every thing has gone satisfactorily. Rarely, if ever, have I attended a religious service more solemn, interesting, or touching. Some thirty or more convicts gathered in the chapel, and spent an hour together in prayer and religious conference. The Chaplain presided, and took a general oversight and direction of the meeting. But the prayers and addresses were made by the prisoners themselves; and, considering the character and culture, or rather the want of culture, of the persons offering them, they were quite remarkable. Probably a half dozen short prayers were offered, and as many brief addresses made, interspersed with the singing of hymns. They were direct, earnest, and fervent; and some gave evidence of deep emotion. Several mentioned that their attention had been but recently turned to the subject of personal religion. A marked peculiarity of the prayers was, that in almost every instance confession was made in the first person singular. One convict, who was not able to attend, sent in a request for the prayers of his fellow-prisoners. It is impossible, of course, for man to read the heart; but the whole tone and spirit of the meeting were significant of sincerity in those who took part in it. The hour spent in the "convicts' prayer-meeting" was truly one of the most intense interest, and has left a record upon the memory which nothing can efface.

Ministers in the South—We learn from the South, that the Rev. Dr. Palmer is now residing in Columbia, South Carolina, where he is engaged temporarily in filling the Professorship in the Theological Seminary, made vacant by the death of the Rev. Dr. Thornwell. The Rev. Dr. Leyburn is residing at Athens, Georgia, and is there discharging his duties as Secretary of the Committee of Domestic Missions. The Rev. James McNeill, formerly Secretary of the American Bible Society, has left his post as editor of the North Carolina Presbyterian for a time, and entered the army. The Rev. Dr. Dabney, Professor in the Union Theological Seminary, is also in the Southern army, and is acting as an aid to General "Stonewall" Jackson. We have seen an order, issued by General Jackson, signed, "R. L. Dabney, Assistant Adjutant General."

The Theological Seminary of St Charles Borromeo—The object of this well known institution is to educate young gentlemen for the Roman Catholic ministry. It is located at Eighteenth and Race streets, and the maintenance of the students depends, to a considerable extent, upon the charity of the Catholics of the Diocese of Philadelphia. Students are placed in the branch preparatory Seminary, located near Rockdale, Delaware county, and from thence transferred to St. Charles, where their ecclesiastical course is generally completed. Some of the students are, however, sent to the American College at Rome

The collections referred to are made annually by volunteer members of the laity, who make exertions among their friends and neighbors to realize, individually, as much as possible. The amounts collected in each parish (each Roman Catholic Church having one assigned to it) are then placed in the hands of the Treasurer, who generally is the pastor of the congregation, and on about the Feast of the Saint (occurring annually on the 4th of November,) the returns are paid in to the general Treasurer, and frequently amount to from seven to ten thousand dollars

On last Sabbath morning it was announced from the altars of the Roman Catholic Churches of the city, that the Treasurer will close his books to-day (Friday.) Those whose names are not presented in as season will be omitted in the Annual Report, which will be prepared, as usual, for general distribution.

Florence Nightingale—The subjoined paragraph from the London Times of the 6th instant, will be read with regret:—"We regret to learn that there is only the very slightest foundation for the report of Miss Nightingale's restoration to health. She is able to remove from one place of residence to another—a very few miles—once a year, but she is scarcely able to leave her bed in the intervals, and quite unable to struggle with the flood of correspondence and applications of all kinds which the report of her partial recovery has brought upon her.

Personal.

Death of Brigadier General Francis E. Patterson—The accidental shooting of Brigadier-General Francis E Patterson on Saturday last occasioned much feeling among the men attached to Brigadier-General Sickles' Division—and particularly among those attached to the New Jersey Brigade. The circumstances of the tragedy were, essentially, as follows:—

It was the habit of General Patterson to place a revolver under his pillow on retiring for the night in his tent. This was done on Friday night last. About daylight on Saturday morning he awoke, and, for some purpose, displaced the revolver from under the pillow on which he slept, with his right hand, and while changing it to the left, probably with the intention of hanging the weapon up near his couch, it exploded. The barrel at the moment pointed towards the person of the reclining man, and the whole of the contents were received on his left breast, passing, it is believed, through the heart, and causing instant death.

The pirate Captain Semmes was placed upon the retired list by the United States Naval Board, because he was a "that man," and therefore an inefficient officer. As the old logics objected to his 2 10 nail them, what a pity it is, says Vanity Fair, some of them can't overtake him in his 290.

General Price's Son Pardoned.—The President has given Brigadier-General Edwin R. Price, son of Major-General Sterling Price, both of the rebel army, a free and a full pardon of all treasonable, felonious, and other crimes and misdemeanors whatever against the United States committed up to the 18th of November. General Price was taken prisoner some time since, paroled by Generes. Halleck, and afterwards exchanged for General Prentiss. Subsequently he resigned his commission in the rebel army, and his friends appealed for his pardon While on his parole and residing in Chariton county, Mo., he is said to have exerted himself to maintain peace and order by driving off the guerillas, and it is thought by some of the Unionmen of Missouri that his pardon will have a beneficial effect in that State.

The New Secretary of War.
[From the Richmond Enquirer, Nov 10.]

James A. Seddon, Esq., of Goochland county, Va., has been appointed Secretary of War, to fill the vacancy occasioned by the resignation of General G. W. Randolph. While Mr. Seddon has not been a great deal in public position, he has always borne a high reputation for ability and sagacious statesmanship It will be remembered that Mr Seddon was one of the Commissioners sent by the Virginia Legislature to attend the Peace Conference in Washington, near the close of Buchanan's Administration. He represented the Richmond district in the United States Congress, from 1845 to 1847, and from 1849 to 1851

Confederate Senator Elected—Milledgeville, November 19th, 1862—Herschell V. Johnson was elected Confederate Senator today.

Acquittal of Dr Moran—Baltimore, November 22d.—Dr Moran, the late surgeon to examine parties in Frederick county, Md., expert to draft, who was recently arrested on a charge of malfeasance in office, has been tried at Washington, and honorably acquitted.

United States Senator from New Jersey.—Trenton N J Nov 22d—Governor Olden has appointed Richard Field, of Princeton, United States Senator, to fill the vacancy caused by the death of the Hon John R Thompson The term will expire on the 4th of March next

Bishop Simpson—It is stated that Bishop Simpson, of the Methodist Episcopal Church, contemplates making Washington his permanent place of residence, and the pastors of the Methodist churches have held a meeting to extend a cordial reception to the Bishop and his family.

Hon. Luther Bradish has been elected to the Presidency of the American Bible Society, to fill the vacancy caused by the death of the Hon. Theodore Frelinghuysen.

Rev. R. Howard Wallace, of Little Britain, Orange County, New York, has been appointed chaplain of the 109th Regiment N Y. Volunteers, raised chiefly in Orange.

Rev John B Pinney, LL D., has been recognised as Consul General of the Republic of Liberia for the United States. We rejoice, for the sake of the interests of Liberia, in the appointment. A better selection could not have been made. Dr. Pinney was formerly Governor of Liberia, and for many years past has held the position of Secretary of the New York State Colonization Society.

Rev Dr Campbell, formerly of Petersburg, and well known, died at London, on the 18th of September last. In the year 1835 he sailed for India, joined the Indiana Mission, and took his station at Saharanpur, where he spent twenty-seven years in honorable and successful missionary labor. For many years before leaving Philadelphia he was in the ministry-room of Wardle & Brothers, and to the day of the death of Benjamin H. Warder, senior partner of the firm, Dr. Campbell kept up a correspondence with him. Warned of danger a few months ago, Dr. Campbell sought inward off death by proceeding to the Mission Retreat, at Landour, in the mountains, but failed—and there died

Hon William Ballard Preston—This gentleman, who was one of the Senators of Virginia in the Confederate States, died at the residence of Montgomery county, last Sabbath. He was about 70 years old at the time of his death, and had been Senator one year. He was the eldest son of the late Governor Preston, of Virginia, and was educated at Hampden Sidney College where he graduated in the year 1821. When the University opened in 1825 he was one among the first that matriculated. It was there that he received the rudiments of his legal education. In 1827 he came to the bar in Montgomery county, and gradually rising to the head of it, he practiced with great success in that and the adjoining counties for many years, if we are not mistaken, even to the day of his death.

About the year 1830 he was elected to the lower house of the Virginia Legislature, where he soon acquired an enviable reputation as a debater and a the rough man of business. He retired from the Legislature after a few years to resume his practice at the bar, but was returned to the State Senate again about the year 1839. At that time he was already one among the most prominent men of the State, and his reputation continued to increase, he was made a member of his Cabinet by General Tyler. Upon the death of that lamented chief, he retired to private life. He devoted, of late years, a great portion of his time to the subject of internal improvements, and was believed to possess as thorough a knowledge of the resources of Virginia as any man in the State. He was elected to the Senate last winter.

Domestic Items.

A Rainy Spell—Last week was what might literally be termed a "soaker." Sunbeams were as scarce as honest people, and rain-drops as plenty as blackberries in June. It seemed to get in the habit of raining and couldn't break itself. Umbrella stores, passenger railway cars, and hackney coaches reaped a rich harvest, and afternoon promenaders remained under cover. Stores were lighted with gas at a time that "old Sol" should have been performing the functions of his office. 9.25 inches of rain fell during the week, making 93,481.25 gallons to the acre.

The Louisiana Sugar Crop.—The first instalment of the new sugar crop was received in New Orleans on the 30th ult. The prospects are not favorable for saving any considerable proportion of it, though if the usual force of negroes was available, the largest crop ever raised in the State would be gathered this season. The negroes have been as insubordinate during the season that no wood has been secured, and there being no coal on hand, there are none of the usual requirements for taking off a crop of cane available.

Martin Van Buren's Will.—The will of President Van Buren has been admitted to probate at Hudson. It is dated January 13th, 1860, and commences as follows:—"I, Martin Van Buren, of the town of Kinderhook, county of Columbia, and State of New York, heretofore Governor of the State, and more recently President of the United States, but for the last and happiest year of my life a farmer in my native town, do make and declare the following to be my last will and testament," &c.

All in Silver Bricks.—It is proposed in Virginia City, Nevada, to ship immediately to the East for the benefit of the Sanitary Fund, the sum of $20,000, and in the novel currency of all or bricks. The Territorial Enterprise says:—"This shipment will be made in solid silver bricks, stamped with an appropriate inscription, and will prove the biggest advertisement for Nevada Territory that ingenuous brains have yet conceived. Those silver bricks will be curiously examined and commented on by many a one in New York, who would forget in fifteen minutes after he heard it, the fact that $20,000 in gold coin or treasury notes had been sent from the unknown land of Nevada

Atlantic Telegraph—Mr Cyrus Field has been speechmaking at Manchester, and other large English towns, in favor of the new Atlantic Telegraph which it is proposed to lay, in order to connect England with her North American colonies. Surely, Mr Field is merely taking much pains in the matter. It must be obvious to British subjects that it will be greatly to the advantage of England to connect her province of Nova Scotia with her American possessions, by a submarine telegraph from Valentia to Nova Scotia. The expense of this the United States, naturally or by private speculation, shall be submitted for money to meet the cost of this great benefit to England is not reasonable Preparations for the Battle at Fredericksburg.—Last night was a busy one in Fredericksburg, the inhabitants being engaged in removing their persons and property. The military authorities were also not idle, as daylight this morning revealed to view a line of earthworks to the right and rear of the town—the result of last night's labor. Our artillery is now being placed in the most favorable positions, while the encampments, which were within range of the enemy's guns, are being moved further back from the river.

There are very strong reasons for not opening upon the city to-day, unless we are forced to do so by the enemy. The rebels have just fired a few shots, but no response has been made

Occoquan and vicinity are infested with a gang of incendiaries, who are doing great damage. On Monday night two immense barns, one owned by Mr Joseph Wible, and another by Dawson & Cohen, were both destroyed, with their valuable contents of hay and grain.

From the Upper Potomac—Harper's Ferry, Nov. 21.—We have a rumor that Jackson is still in the vicinity of Winchester with an army of forty thousand men The general impression is, however, that he is retiring in the direction of Gordonsville. All is now quiet along the lines though General Geary is sending out reconnoissances daily to notice the movements of the enemy.

A reconnoissance over the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad by one of the Superintendents gives some idea of the extent of damage to the track of the Ohio Railroad by the rebels. The main track is torn up to the extent of about twenty-two miles, the rails rendered useless by heating, and the ties all burned. There is about an average of seventy rails to the mile only fit for relaying. The bridges at Martinsburg are all destroyed,

In the United States Supreme Court at Washington the black silk robes are abolished, the new members being averse to them, and at the next session the judges will sit in simple broadcloth.

We are glad to see the passenger railway corporations returning to reason. The action of the Board of Presidents in asking twenty per cent. to the cent of fare, when no other reason was assigned than that one or two small roads were not earning the twelve and fifteen per cent. dividends earned by other roads caused universal indignation, and is being repudiated by many of the leading roads. The Presidents of the roads on Fourth & Eighth, Chestnut & Walnut, Market and Tenth & Eleventh Streets, have declared they will not assent to the arrangement of the Board of Presidents. This will, of course end the matter, and we shall have no such scandalous tax as that originally intended. The determination of these Presidents in repudiating this outrage, deserves the thanks of the community.—Press

The graveyard at the south-west of the town of Warrenton, Virginia, attests how fearful has been the mortality among the Confederates. In this cemetery there are over a thousand new-made graves—the most of them being from the Cotton States. Georgians, from the inscriptions on the rough head-boards, seem to be in the majority. How the soldiers from this State have suffered since the war broke out. The mass of the rebel troops at Antietam were from Georgia. Fresh garlands of flowers are placed daily on many of the graves.

The War in Tennessee.—Nashville, November 21.—The expedition of two regiments of infantry, under Col. Carden, which has been scouring the country between here and Clarksville, has returned, having captured forty-three rebels, eighteen others, twenty mules, and a hundred muskets.

Another flag of truce, with rebel ladies for the South, will leave to-morrow.

A scout has arrived from Knoxville, which place he left on the 18th. There were no troops there, except the sick and convalescents. He understood that the rebel troops had gone West. At McMinnville there was a considerable force of conscripts from the surrounding counties. At Sparta there was a small force of rebels. He saw no other rebel troops, except at Kingston, where there were a few

General Rosecrans has ordered the release of three thousand bales of cotton, which were seized for the purpose of using them for breastworks in the vicinity recently. They will be shipped North as soon as the railway is open.

The enemy still evince a disposition to fight at Tullahoma.

The Last Words of a Dying Hero.—The following touching letter was written by Colonel Broadhead, of the Michigan Cavalry Regiment, who was killed in one of the battles at which General Pope commanded. Its touching pathos and high toned patriotism will awaken fresh regrets for the death of a brave soldier:

My Dearest Wife:—I write to you, mortally wounded, from the battle-field.—We are again defeated, and are thus reaches you your children will be fatherless

Before I die, let me implore that, in some way, it may be stated that General —— has been outwitted and that —— is a traitor. Had they done their duty as I did mine, and had led as I did, the dear old flag had waved in triumph.

I wrote to you yesterday morning. To-day is Sunday, and to-day I sink to the green couch of our final rest

I have fought well, my darling, and I was shot in the endeavor to rally our broken battalions. I could have escaped, but would not until all hope was gone, and was shot,—about the only one of our forces left on the field. Our cause is just, and our generals, not the enemy, have defeated us. In God's good time He will give us victory.

And now, good-by, wife and children.—Bring them up, I know you will, in the fear of God and love for the Saviour But for you and the dear ones dependent I should die happy I know the blow will fall with crushing weight on you Trust in Him who gave manna in the wilderness.

Dr. Nash is with me. It is now after midnight, and I have spent most of the night in sending messages to you.

Two bullets have gone through my chest, and directly through the lungs. I suffer but little now, but at first the pain was acute. I have won the soldier's name, and am ready to meet now, as I must, the soldier's fate. I hope that from heaven I may see the glorious old flag wave again over the undivided Union I have loved so well.

Farewell, wife and babes, and friends—We shall meet again. Your loving,

THORNTON

General McClellan's Speech.—"My Friends—I thank you cordially for the spontaneous if belated regard I accept it, not for myself, but for the Army of the Potomac, whose I once commanded, and to which you are so deeply interested. [Tremendous and continued cheering. Three cheers for the "Army of the Potomac"] Every letter from Yorktown to Antietam has added new proofs of the courage and devotion of the citizen soldiery of New York, and has increased the great debt of gratitude due to them by their country. [Cheers.] No portion of the broad Republic has more lavishly poured out its millions of treasure and thousands of brave men in the cause of our country than this great metropolis. [Cheers.] At the commencement of the struggle no community was more prompt in responding to the appeal of the Government for aid. No community has a greater stake in the success of our cause than this. None is more closely bound by the ties of kindred to the army with which I have been so long associated. [Great cheering.] I, therefore, and my former comrades with me, will feel doubly honored by the occurrence of the evening, and it is with a heart full to overflowing with gratitude that I again thank you for your presence to-night. [Great cheering.]

You know, that I am still a soldier, therefore you will expect no speech from me, and will now permit me to say good-night. [Long-continued cheering.]

Rags and Paper.—If the price of paper increases as much during the next three months as it has during the past three, it must have the effect of stopping many papers which are now published by political parties, merely for the sake of having organs. It will also stop off many other ephemeral publications, such as yellow-covered literature, and even some papers that hold out will so contract their dimensions, by using smaller type, that the supply of paper will be found ample in a very short time. Papers as well established as to fear no reverse will raise the price of subscription, but in the end the smaller and cheaper publications will take their places. Taking these things into consideration, then, it becomes necessary for everybody to assume the office of a domestic economist. Every one is interested in this, for, although it may not be a very lucrative employment, it will certainly do much towards keeping the price of paper from advancing higher

ADVERTISEMENTS.

MRS MARTHA COLLINS.

730 Russell Street, above Fitzwater.

Begs leave to inform her friends and the public generally, that she has opened an INFANT SCHOOL for Boys and Girls, to whom she will pay special attention in teaching the primary departments of Reading, Writing, and Arithmetic, also Singing, upon the most reasonable and accommodating terms. She does not hesitate to say that she will be able to please all who may give her a trial.

MRS. S. SHORTER HAWKINS'
DRY GOODS, HOSIERRY, AND TRIMMING STORE.
No. 615 Lombard Street, Philadelphia

Mrs H calls the attention of her friends and patrons to a new stock of Fall and Winter Goods, consisting of Delaines, Calicoes, Flannels, Muslins, Drills, Shawls, Diamond, and Hoop-Skirts.

N B. Regalia and Dress Trimmings still on hand All will be sold as near the old prices as possible. Call and see

WM. H. LONGFELLOW,
SURGEON DENTIST.
No 1126 Rodman Street.
Between 11th and 12th, and Lombard and South Sts.
PHILADELPHIA

Every department of Dentistry attended to
Persons waited on at their residence, if desired
Nov 1.

Advertisements.

THE DAUGHTERS OF HOPE GRAND UNION Temperance Society met, it being the thirteenth convention, April 10th, 1861. Representatives from Lodges are as follows:—

From Garnet Union No. 4, D. of T.; from Phenix Union, No. 8, D. of T.; from Northern Union, No. 16, D. of T.; Webb's Union, of Chambersburgh, Pa.; from Dr Bias' Union, of Carlisle, Pa.; from Mount Olive Union, No. 10 D. of T.; from Yanbrackle Union, No. 15, D. of T., of Norristown, Pa

Officers installed to their several positions are as follows:

Sister M. P., Sister Bonnet, Grand Associate, Sister Burrie; Grand Treasurer, Sister Fawcett; Grand Conductress, C. Thompson, Grand Sentinel, A. E. Dubbart; Grand Chaplain Sister Hall

G. P. P., Sister K. Roberts, G. P. P. Sister Anderson,
" " E. Bowen, " " J. F. Bush,
" " M. H. Bundy, " " E. A. Clark,
" " S. Newman, " " White,
" " S. Davis, " " S. Hall.

THE DAUGHTERS OF CORINTH SOCIETY.

The Stated Quarterly Meetings of this Society are held on the first Wednesdays of February, May, August, and November.

The meeting of the Board are held on the Wednesday previous to the regular stated meetings of the society.

Mrs. Sarah Carter, President.
Mr. L. R. Seymour, Secty.

THE BOOK DEPOSITORY
OF THE
AFRICAN M. E. CHURCH,
No. 619 Pine Street,
PHILADELPHIA.

We keep on hand, in connexion with our other books Sabbath School books of various kinds; Question Books; Catechisms, Nos. 1, 2, and 3. We have a good assortment of such books as are generally used in the Public Schools. Also, Stationery, Inks, Pens, Paper, Envelopes and Blank Books.

THE DEATH-BED OF THE REV. JOHN WESLEY.

Wanted (canvassing Agents for the splendid large engraving, back should be in every house and at the face of that great and good man. The work is selling with a rush to those selling this print. Send for Catalogue and Inscription.

WM. SMITH Publisher,
102 South Third Street, Philadelphia.

WANTED.—The charge of a Public School. Reference as to ability can be given. Apply to J. W. A., 1041 Hetherington St

ONE-PRICE CLOTHING,
OF THE LATEST STYLES,

Made in the best Manner, expressly for RETAIL SALES Lowest Selling Prices marked in Plain Figures All Goods made to order warranted satisfactory Our One Price System is strictly adhered to. All are thereby treated alike. JONES & CO.,
Dec25-1y 604 Market Street

GOOD NEWS

To Tailors, Dress makers, and to those wishing to be such. Also, to those wishing a variety of Shapes, and large families.—Price of Set by parcel Post, those which each Subscriber has; you can have a set of Fashionable Ladies' Dresses, Boys' and Men's Pants, Vests Jackets, Sacks and Over coats

Local and Travelling Agents Wanted.

Address REV. WM BRADLEY
Carlisle, Cumberland Co. Pa.

Or, apply to Mrs Mary C. Watson (wife of the Editor, this paper) 819 Pine St., Philada., Pa Jan 2-1y

JAMES DOWNS,
DEALER IN
NEW AND SECOND HAND
CLOTHING,
No 225 South Second Street,
No 17—3mo. PHILADELPHIA

WILLIAM STILL'S
STOVE STORE,
107 NORTH FIFTH STREET, PHILADELPHIA.

The subscriber would respectfully inform his friends and all is want of good stoves, that he has now on hand a general variety of excellent PARLOR, COOK and CHAMBER STOVES, including Gas-burning, as well as other patterns, which he is selling at very low rates. He buys entirely for cash, of the best wholesale foundries, and of course can sell much cheaper than those buying on the usual credit system. At any rate his friends are invited to give him a call and examine for themselves before purchasing elsewhere, as he feels that they would be convinced that it would be to their interest to give him their patronage. Coal orders constantly on hand. WM. STILL.

JOSEPH H. COLE,
CONTINENTAL RESTAURANT,
No 717 LOMBARD STREET, PHILA,
(Above Seventh St., under Philadelphia Institute.)

Where he continues to keep always on hand the very best assortment of OYSTERS and other refreshments—hoping that all his friends and the public in general will favor him with their patronage.

☞ Meals served at all hours. Families supplied with oysters of the best quality and flavor at the shortest notice.

☞ Also, public and private waiting done on the most reasonable terms 1y

"UNION COTTAGE,"
ATLANTIC CITY, NEAR THE INLET

The subscriber will always be happy to welcome her numerous friends, and the public in general.

TERMS

Board per week,	$5 00
" day,	1 25
Single meals,	30

S. H WAILES Proprietress

BOARDING
IN BROOKLYN

MRS S. PLANT (formerly Richardson) respectfully announces that she has opened a first-class BOARDING & LODGING HOUSE at No. 97 HIGH STREET, Brooklyn—where she is prepared to accommodate the public on the most reasonable terms.

Her house being located in a very pleasant part of the city, and within five minutes' walk of Fulton Ferry, is made thus a very desirable and convenient place.

BOARDING

Mrs AMIA WILLIAM, of Cape May, will open the Breakwater House for the season, for the accommodation of all who wish to spend the season there, and she will spare no pains to make all comfortable. Those wishing to spend one, two, or three days, will find the Breakwater House the right spot. Prices very reasonable. 1sept

COAL, STOVES, &c., &c.

The subscriber respectfully informs his friends and the public generally, that he has taken the store,

NO. 107 NORTH FIFTH STREET,

formerly occupied as the Anti-Slavery Office, (where he has been engaged for the last fourteen years,) to occupy it himself with as a place of business for the sale of

COAL, STOVES, &c.

Having made arrangements with one of the first Coal Dealers in the city, to furnish the best qualities of Lehigh, Schuylkill, &c., at the lowest Cash prices, he hopes to give full satisfaction in this branch of his business

He will also keep constantly on hand a general assortment of good NEW and SECOND-HAND STOVES, FURNACES, &c.

Persons wishing Stoves taken down, stored away, put up, or cleaned, can be promptly accommodated by applying as above.

He hopes by energy and strict attention to business to obtain a fair share of patronage.

WM STILL,
107 North Fifth Street, Philadelphia

REFERENCES.

J M McKim,	Dr Casper Wister,
Samuel Rhoads,	James Mott,
Duncan Parrish,	Thomas Williamson,
Prof C D Cleveland.	W H Furness.

WANTED.

One or two respectable colored men to a quiet and respectable family to lodge, where they can secure all the comforts of a home, with a furnished room.

INQUIRE,
No. 424 South 7th St., Phila.

A few respectable men can be accommodated with board or lodging, on reasonable terms, at 1627 Lombard Street

N B.—Also a room to let. 3mo.

REV LEWIS S. LEWIS'
FAMILY LINIMENT
IS PREPARED WITH GREAT CARE,
EXPRESSLY FOR FAMILY USE.

Its composition is very simple, containing nothing that is injurious in any form, and there is no danger in its use from exposure to the weather. No family should be without it. Having a wish to benefit mankind in general, and those afflicted in particular—and having had recourse to the article in several cases of rheumatism, bunions, chilblains, and other lameness, it proving to be a remedy in every case—I therefore recommend it to the public.

CERTIFICATES
Providence, R. I., Nov 27, 1861

Rev L. S Lewis Dear Sir: I have been afflicted with the rheumatism eleven years, during which time I tried almost everything, but received no sure relief For the last four months my limbs and joints were so swollen, that at times I could not walk or use my slippers. I procured a bottle of your Liniment, and at the first application was instantly relieved After using one or two bottles, I was enabled to enjoy the free use of my limbs. Rev. GEORGE A. RUE

Newport, R. I., October 29, 1861.

Rev L S Lewis Dear Sir: I have been afflicted for a number of years, more or less, with a pain and weakness in my chest, arising from some cause unknown to me. I made two applications of your Liniment, and was relieved. I was attacked with the diphtheria, and was cured by using your Liniment It's worth has proved itself ten times its cost. ANTHONY RANDOLPH

Newport, R. I., Nov. 19, 1861.

Rev. L. S. Lewis—Dear Sir: I have been cured of stiffening in my joints by using your Liniment. I recommend it to all who are thus troubled. RICHARD WHITE.

Newport, R. I., Nov 17, 1861.

Rev. Mr. Lewis—Your Liniment is, truly, all that it is recommended to be. I have tried it, and it has successfully cured my bunions SOPHIA TAYLOR.

Newport, R. I., Oct 7, 1861

Mr. Lewis—Dear Sir: I have had a pain and stiffness in my neck and back for some time. I procured a bottle of your Liniment, and applied it twice, which effected a cure. I recommend it to the public Mrs EVELINA DRMOND

Providence, Dec. 10, 1861.

Rev L S Lewis Dear Sir: For upwards of three years I have been very lame at times, arising from a sprain. I have tried a great many things, without any definite results. I procured a bottle of your Liniment, and was effectually relieved Mrs PHEBE A MORSE

Newport, R. I., Oct. 10, 1861.

Rev Mr. Lewis—I have been afflicted with the rheumatism for some time. I used your Liniment, which has removed it successfully. It has also cured my sweenied joints. Mrs ELIZABETH THOROUGHGOOD

Newport, R I, Nov 20, 1861.

Rev Mr Lewis—My boy was troubled with the chilblains. I applied your Liniment a few times, and it cured him Mrs. ADELINE JONES.

Stonehill Place, Sept 3, 1861.

Rev. Mr Lewis—I have used your Liniment for rheumatic pains of long standing—also, lameness in the feet, &c. It is a perfect remedy where other things have failed. Mrs. SUSAN GARDINER.

Providence, Rhode Island, Aug. 19, 1861

Rev. L. S Lewis—I have been afflicted for upwards of seven years with swelled joints. I have tried almost everything, without the desired effect. At last I obtained a bottle of your Liniment, which relieved me successfully. Mrs. MARY A. JEWITT.

Providence, Nov., 1861.

Mr L. S. Lewis—I had a very severe attack of rheumatism last fall, during which time I tried almost everything—but nothing so effectual as your Family Liniment. I would not be without it Mrs. LUCY WATERMAN.

MANUFACTURED BY
REV. LEWIS S. LEWIS,
No. 115 Meeting St., Providence, R. I.,

TO WHOM ALL ORDERS SHOULD BE ADDRESSED.

PRICE, 25 CTS PER BOTTLE

☞ Sold in Newport by Mrs. MARTHA J. RANDOLPH, No 1 Spruce Court. 1y

GEORGE G. EVANS'
ORIGINAL GIFT BOOK STORE,
No. 439 Chestnut Street.

NEW BOOKS! NEW GIFTS FOR THE NEW YEAR!

Call and look at our immense collection of BOOKS and PRESENTS for the season of 1861!

All the latest and best Publications, and a Gift with each Book purchased. Beautifully and appropriately bound copies of the prose and poetical writings of all the standard British and American authors, together with an extensive and superb array of Miscellaneous Books, all embracing the choicest cullings from the fields of Literature!

Magnificent and costly presents, consisting in part of WATCHES, JEWELRY, AND SILVER WARE of the newest styles, and most exquisite finish. All Books are sold at the Publisher's regular prices, and every purchaser to the amount of $1 00, or more, is presented with a Gift, combining utility with ornament, varying in value from

FIFTY CENTS TO ONE HUNDRED DOLLARS!

Citizens! Strangers! Everybody! Bear this fact in mind, and make your purchase of Books at GEORGE G. EVANS
MAMMOTH GIFT BOOK EMPORIUM
Mar 9 6mo No 439 Chestnut Street, Phila.

MRS. H. S. DUTERTE,
General Undertaker and Furnisher,

Respectfully informs her friends and the public, that she still continues the Undertaking business at the old establishment, No. 634 Lombard St., and being thankful for past favors, hopes still to obtain a share of the patronage of the public.

Ready made Coffins always on hand. Also a handsome Hearse and Carriages, with careful drivers, to attend funerals on the most moderate terms.

G. M. ELKINTON & SON,
MANUFACTURERS OF
SOAP AND CANDLES,
116 MARGARETTA STREET, Philadelphia.

OLIVE SOAP,	STEARN CANDLES,
YELLOW "	ADAMANTINE "
PALE "	BOUGIE "
BROWN "	KINGSFORD'S STARCH,
WHITE "	HARVEY'S "
CASTILE "	WAX,
HONEY "	TALLOW,
PALM "	SAL SODA
PORCINE "	SOFT SOAP.

March 1—1y

FINE CAKE BAKERY.
CONFECTIONERY AND ICE CREAM SALOON,
No. 801 South Street.

Ellis J Poor would announce that he keeps constantly on hand a general assortment of all kinds of Cakes, Creams, Ices, and Pastries

Festivals, Balls, and Private Parties served upon the shortest notice, and warranted to give general satisfaction. Jan. 18—1m.

NOTICE.

To the friends of Religious Literature and human progress of the City and County of Philadelphia:

This certifies that Miss Mary Still is a legally authorized agent for the City and County of Philadelphia, Penna., to solicit subscribers and donations for the Christian Recorder of the African Methodist Episcopal Church of America.

We, therefore, take great pleasure in recommending Miss Still to the citizens and friends as a lady every way worthy of such a position, as well as trustworthy, and we do hope, as the enterprise is commendable, that those to whom she may present this writing will not turn her away without either subscribing or contributing to this great cause.

(Signed) ELISHA WEAVER,
Editor & General Book Steward.
No. 910 Pine St., Phila.

For the Christian Recorder.

BUCKS COUNTY SS.—TO ALL TO WHOM THESE PRESENTS MAY COME.

I, the subscriber, a Justice of the Peace, in and for the county of Bucks, do hereby certify that I am acquainted and know Emily Johnson—formerly Rodney, who was married to Samuel Johnson, who was married before William Hawk, Esq., of Bristol, Bucks County, as appears by record on his docket; and after careful examination and mature reflection, I feel myself fully safe in saying that the said Johnson had a wife living at the time he married the said Emily Rodney; and further say that I have the evidence of Daniel Kinmond (local preacher of the Methodist Episcopal Church) Charles Kinmons, (Class leader) and Benjamin Cummings, (who is exhorter) that he had one or more wives living at the time he married the said Emily Johnson; and the evidence, on affirmation, of the said Emily Johnson, that he had a wife living at the time she married him, which, at the time she married him, she had no knowledge of.

Affirmed and subscribed before me May 6th, 1862. } her Emily X Johnston mark
Wm Blakey J P

THOMAS CHARNOCK,
GENERAL FURNISHING UNDERTAKER
No 427 SOUTH 6TH ST.,
Second Door Below Bethel Church

OUR OWN BOOK-STORE.

Catalogue of Books for Sale at the Book Depository of the A. M. E. Church, located at No. 619 Pine St., Philadelphia, Pa.

	Retail price
Pronouncing Bible,	$2 75
Watson's Biblical and Theological Dictionary,	2 50
Watson's Theological Institute, 2 vols,	4 70
History of Methodism, 2 vols,	3 50
Whedon's Commentary on Matthew and Mark,	1 85
Horne's Introduction to the Bible,	65
Positive Theology,	60
The Poor Preacher	60
Saints' Rest,	50
Pilgrim's Progress,	75
Defence of our Fathers. Bishop Emory,	60
Life of Wesley,	50
Cotel's Dictionary of the Holy Bible, R. S.,	60
Cobb's Concordance,	1 00
The Christian Maiden. Priestley,	75
Our Friends in Heaven,	60
The Sacred Heart. Rev M. P. Gaddis,	75
Sketch Book. Rev. W. C. Smith,	75
Missionary among the Cannibals,	65
Path of Life. Rev. D. Wise,	60
Dr Macanulay in Many Lands.	55
Rudiments of Public Speaking,	50
The Life of Faith Exemplified. Mrs. H. A. Rodgers	50
Little Footprints in Bible Lands	40
The New Lute of Zion. For Choirs,	75
Memoir of Carvosso,	45
Young Man's and Young Lady's Counsellors,	50

HYMN BOOKS.

Fine Morocco, with Clasp,	1 12
" " without Clasp,	90
Plain Cloth,	80
New Discipline,	25
Love Feast Tickets, per hundred,	16
Clark on the Promises,	30
Theological Compend,	25
Local Preachers' License, per dozen,	38
Local Exhorters' License, "	38
Marriage Certificates, etc

SABBATH SCHOOL BOOKS.

Lectures to Young Men,	40
Harry Budd,	51
Village Blacksmith	40
Infant Teachers' Manual,	30
Claude's Essay,	40
Gerald and his Friend Philip,	30
Daisy Dawes	30
Girls at School,	30
What Norman Saw in the West,	30
Jane Atherton's Year at School,	30
Little Tiger Lily,	30
Sweet Cora Bell,	35
Hannah Lee	30
Dairyman's Daughter	30
Fletcher's Appeal on Common Sense,	30
Christian's Philosophy	40
Memoir of Mrs. Rodgers,	30
Lights in the Valley,	30
Holy Angels,	30
Sylvia Austin,	35
Resurrection of the Dead,	25
Bible Pictures for Children,	25
Margaret Maxham. A book for Young Ladies,	25
Stories in Verse,	25
Home Pictures,	25
Minnie Wingfield,	30
Young Gold Seeker,	30
Self-willed Susie,	50
Life of White-foot,	12
Fletcher's Perfection,	25
Christian's Pattern	15
Little Amy's Falsehood and Four Little Words,	11
Gold Dollar,	50
Hetty,	50
Hard Text,	15
Jennie,	15
My Missionary Book,	15
Our Father in Heaven,	15
John Bliss,	15
Stories in Rhyme,	13
Also, a variety of smaller ones too tedious to mention.
Sabbath School Hymn Books, per dozen,	1 50
Catechisms, No. 1, per dozen,	25
" No 2, "	38
" No 3, "	50
Questions on the Old Testament,	12
Questions on the New Testament, per dozen,	1 50
Consecutive Questions on Matthew,	15
" " Mark,	12
" " Luke,	12
" " John,	12
Also, a variety of Sabbath School Almanacs, little Hymn Books, Missionary Tracts, etc.

PUBLIC SCHOOL BOOKS.

Course of Composition and Rhetoric,	1 00
First Lessons in English Composition,	00
Weld's Latin Reader, per dozen,	6 00
Greenleaf's Com. School Arithmetic, per doz

THE BIBLE-WOMAN IN LONDON.

A new feature has lately appeared in the exertions of benevolent persons among the distressed poor, and on the lower strata of London life. The Bible-woman is not merely a distributer of the Bible, as the name seems to indicate, but a distributer of all sorts of good things among the families of the poor. She is selected from the better informed and Christian women of the lower class. Sometimes she has risen from the very depths of St. Giles' parish by the instrumentality of the city missionary or the Scripture reader, or the district visitor. She receives 12s. 6d. a week for her services. She sets out every day to visit the sisterhood of sorrow, suffering, and poverty, ostensibly and directly to introduce the Bible, additionally and practically to see what can be done to help the helpless, and to say what can be said to comfort the downcast. It must be obvious to every reflecting mind that a true and cheering word often does more to lift a wretched mother out of her misery than a donation of money or clothes, needful in their place. The mere vulgar philanthropist does not understand this; he recognises no value in anything he can't handle, or weigh, or measure with a foot-rule; but kind words spoken by homely lips waken echoes that do not die, and inspire energies long laid prostrate that rise up and walk. The peculiar adaptation of this movement lies in the fact that the visitor is a woman and the objects visited are mothers and wives. The visitor is not a fine lady, full of sentimental benevolence, afraid of dirt and vulgarities, and keeping well to the windward of the subjects of her instruction; but one who has also been in poverty and trouble, who has lost infants, and knew not how to raise money to bury them—who had a husband and is a widow—who wrestled with poverty and nakedness, and hunger, and can tell what she felt, and how she got out of it, or got comfort in it—"Quæque ipsa miserima vidi et quorum pars magna fui." Such a message knocking at the door of sickness must be welcome. It is human nature in its finest and purest type, giving off its sympathy and sacrifices and services to those who rarely hear a kind, and never an encouraging word.

Since the institution of this new class of laborers in the services of sorrow and suffering, about three years ago, 27,000 Bibles have been sold among the very poorest. The importance of selling, as distinguished from giving, cannot be exaggerated. Bibles lightly got are lightly held by the poor. What they receive gratis finds its way to the pawnbroker's shop in the course of a week or two, while the book for which they have paid 10d. in weekly half-pence, is retained and valued as hard-earned property, and only parted with in the last extremity. It seems to be the universally operative law among the poor that money raised by begging, and Bibles received gratuitously are not valued and speedily squandered. This is the common experience of these Bible-women, and we believe, the experience of the various societies which have directed their labors towards the elevation and instruction of the very lowest. In London alone, 160 Bible-women are visiting the neglected poor from house to house, pointing out ragged schools for their children, places of worship for their parents, clothing clubs, and mothers' meetings, and all other means of ameliorating their lot, and above all, their homes. In improving the domestic condition and management of the homes of the poor these visitors have done incalculable good. It is easily proved that the poor pay a higher price than the rich for everything they consume. They are ignorant of every element of thrift and economy. They live in filth and damp, and emid drying linen and on wet floors. The first victims of epidemics and first, owing to their exhausted constitutions, to sink under its attacks. A discreet and sympathising Bible-woman—we can write from personal knowledge—shows the poor woman where the best and most economical soap can be bought, where fuel can be had at a reasonable price. How easily good soap can be made at a reasonable cost, and the room kept clean and dry, and sweet, at no great expenditure of labor.

One offers a blanket early in the season, as soon as half of the price of it is paid in weekly pennies, and frocks and petticoats for the children cast off by the rich, are given as presents and rewards for tidiness. The effect of persistent treatment of this sort is soon apparent. It should never be forgotten that the poor man flies to the gin-shop, not only because he likes gin, but because he finds there a gas-light, a fire, a sanded floor and a newspaper. He is driven from home by its discomforts, and drawn to the gin-shop by far less objectionable attractions than gin. It is on this account that we cannot rely for the creation of temperate habits on the pledges and prescriptions of teetotal societies, but on the increased comforts, convenience, and cleanliness of the poor man's home. The wife and mother makes home. What she is it becomes. Her temper, tidiness, and economy are its very air, and light, and warmth. On her the Bible-woman sets with a force and a success which no other instrumentality has reached, and through her on children and fathers with a permanence it is impossible to dispute. We have no desire to question, far from it, the value of the labors of the city missionary. He is first and remains longest where vice, and fever, and ignorance reign. But, viewing the action of the Bible-woman on domestic and social life, regarding it as a means of training the poor from the dunghill and netting them, not indeed among princes, but among the decencies of the earth, we hold the mission of the Bible-woman to be a practical, comprehensive and effective agency. It secures an entrance inaccessible to others. It makes the sale of the Bible a pioneer to a many-sided and kindly influence. It receives a welcome which woman full of sympathy will always receive from woman full of sorrow. It supplies a link long lost, and occupies a field long neglected, and we hope it will receive an encouragement and support long withheld.—London Times.

THE EXTENT OF THE CREATION.

The distance of the nearest fixed star had been ascertained. It was the achievement of the illustrious Bessel. To reckon the distance of that star in miles would only bewilder. We must assume another unit, namely, the velocity of light. In eight minutes light rushes from the sun. From the highest fixed star it comes not in less than ten years, and would require thousands to cross our galaxy. Employing this standard of measure, the lecturer sets forth, in a way we have not space to report, the vast extent and wonderful duration of God's works, and their probable unity as one unspeakably grand system with a common centre. On this point of a common centre for all creation there might be two opinions; either the whole revolves about a common centre of gravity—a mere geometrical point—or round some wondrous body or mass sufficient to sway the whole into harmony; the only immovable thing that is—of magnitude past utterance, unimaginable, a boundless orb, surpassing in its own stupendous solidity all the firmaments of immensity together rolled—a region of God born resplendence, of light inaccessible and full of glory, the heaven of heavens, the home of light, the holy of holies, the throne and the sanctuary of the ineffable I AM!

Before the awful throne I leave you. I leave you there to wonder and adore. I leave you in the great presence of the Omnipotent. I leave you to look upon the Ancient of Days, who was before all things. But while I leave you thus, in awful reverence prone, and penetrated with the insignificance of yourselves and your dwelling-place, I put you in remembrance that the Creator's love is as boundless as his power as lasting as his eternity, and that he has been pleased to choose this little world of ours as the scene of the most marvellous work that creation has ever beheld, and fruit man as the subject of a restoration even more glorious than the wearing of a firmament; for a living mind is better than a dead universe, and the raising of a new creature from the ruins of a lost soul is at once the grandest and the costliest achievement of Omnipotence.—Le Comte Nairne.

NO VICES—NO VIRTUES.—"I recollect once being outside a stage in Illinois, and a man alighting by me offered me a cigar. I told him I had no vices. He said nothing, smoked for some time, and then grunted out, 'It's my experience that folks who have no vices have few virtues.'"

HYMN FOR THE UNIVERSE.

Roll on, thou Sun, forever roll,
Thou giant, rushing through the heaven,
Creation's wonder, nature's soul,
Thy garb with rich array angels craven,
The planets die without thy rays,
And darkness with its star-veil'd way
Flies in terror command each ray,
Thou brighter ardors in their keep.

Roll, lovely Earth! and still roll on,
With nature's many beauty bound,
While sun-rays, stars, the purple Moon,
Pursue thee through the blue profound;
And angels with delighted eyes
Behold thy tents of mount and stream,
From the high walls of paradise,
Swift-wheeling like a glorious dream

Roll, Planets! on your dazzling road,
For ever sweeping round the sun;
What eye beheld when first ye glowed!
What eye shall see your courses done!
Roll in your atomic majesty,
Ye deathless splendors of the skies!
High altars, from which angels see
The increase of creation rise.

Roll, Comets! and ye million Stars!
Ye that through loneliness nature roam;
Ye memories on your flame-winged cars;
Tell us in what more glorious dome—
What orb to which your lamps are dim,
What kingdom but by angels trod—
Tell us, where swells the eternal hymn
Around His throne—where dwells your God!

THE JEW'S LEAP.

Captain Riley, and his fellow-sufferers from shipwreck, in their journey from Santa Cruz towards Mogadore, crossed a remarkably dangerous and frightful pass called "The Jew's Leap." "The path," says Captain Riley, "which we were obliged to follow, was not more than two feet wide in one place, and on our left it broke off in a precipice of some hundred feet deep. The smallest slip of the mule or camel would have plunged the beast and its rider down the rocks to inevitable and instant death, as there was no bush or twig or anything to lay hold of, by which a man might save his life. Very fortunately for us, there had been no rain for a considerable time previous, so that the road was now dry. Rain told me it was never attempted when it was wet, and that many fatal accidents had happened there within his remembrance. One of these accidents he said he would mention

A company of Jews, six in number, proceeding from Santa Cruz to Morocco, came to this place with their loaded mules, after sunset, but in the twilight, and being very anxious to get past the precipice before night, they did not take precaution to look out and call aloud before they entered on it; for there is a place built at each end of this dangerous piece of road, from which a traveller may see if there are others on it, and the path or road not being quite half a mile in length, a person, by shouting lustily, can be heard from one end to the other. A company of Moors had entered at the other end, going towards Santa Cruz, at the same time; and they also, supposing that no others would dare pass it at that hour, came on without the usual precaution. When about halfway over, and unfortunately in the very spot where the parties met, there was no way of passing each other, or turning about to back either way. The Moors were mounted as well as the Jews; neither party would retire, nor would any one except the foremost get off his mule. The Moors soon became outrageous, and threatened to throw the Jews down headlong. The Jews, though they had always been treated like slaves, and forced to submit to every insult and indignity, yet finding themselves in this perilous situation, without the possibility of retiring, were unwilling to break their necks merely to accommodate the Moors. The foremost Jew carefully dismounted by getting over the head of his mule, bearing a stout stick in his hand; the Moor nearest him did the same, and came forward to attack him with his scimitar. Both Jew and Moor were fighting for their lives, as neither could retreat; the Jew's mule was first pitched down the craggy steep, and dashed to atoms by the fall. The Jew's stick was next hacked to pieces by the scimitar; when, finding it impossible to save his life, he seized the Moor in his arms, and springing off the precipice, both were instantly hurled to destruction. Two of the other Jews and one of the Moors lost their lives in the same way, together with eight mules! and the three Jews who made shift to escape, were hunted down and killed by the relations of the Moors who had lost their lives on the pass, and the pass has ever since been called "The Jew's Leap." It is, indeed, enough to produce dizziness, even in the head of a sailor; and if I had been told the story,' said the captain, "when I was sitting on this frightful ridge, I am not certain but that my imagination might have disturbed my faculties, and rendered me incapable of proceeding with safety along this perilous path." We must admit that it is a story to which we can listen with much more composure on a bright morning at one's own fireside, than on a dusky evening at the edge of the precipice.

A SINGULAR DISCOVERY OF MURDER.

A few years ago, a Mr. Martin was murdered at a place called Bilgay, and this murder was afterwards discovered in a most singular manner. The crime was committed on the 9th of February, on the high road, at one o'clock in the afternoon. The shot entered Mr. Martin's heart, and he fell down dead. He was returning from collecting some small sums of money, and had only five guineas about him, of which he was robbed, as well as of his watch and ring. The charge of the gun was rammed down with a written paper. This had been carefully taken up and carried away with the body. The writing was still legible. On this piece of paper there were expressions which are used in glass manufactories; but the paper was old, and bearing a date of near fifteen years back. Upon this single indication, the officer went to the owner of the glass manufactory at Bilney, examined his books, and succeeded in finding an article relative to the delivery of some glass, of which the paper in question was the bill of parcels. The suspicion immediately fell on the son-in-law of this individual. The man had been out of the country for ten years, and had only recently returned. Orders were given to arrest the person suspected. When the officers came to him, he was on his knees in a state of terror. In his fright he confessed the murder, and then showed where the watch and ring were to be found concealed beneath the thatch of his house. By this slight event of an undestroyed scrap of paper, justice overtook the offender. The remarkable manner in which offenders are detected, was lately seen in the case of a robbery. After the robbery, an officer, while walking in the streets of London, met two men of ill repute, and remarked that both of the men were wearing new boots. He took it for granted that these men had been confederates in some burglary, and that these boots were the results of the spoil. Upon this slight circumstance, the officer apprehended the men, and these men proved to be the identical persons who had committed the recent robbery, to which there was not the slightest clue, had not the offenders been betrayed by their own boots!

THE BRITISH REVENUE

The total revenue of the United Kingdom for the year ending June 30th, 1862, amounted to £69,685,780, derived from the following sources:

Customs,	£23,611,000
Excise,	18,047,000
Stamps,	8,657,945
Taxes,	3,154,000
Property Tax,	10,519,000
Post Office,	3,551,000
Crown Lands,	299,000
Miscellaneous,	1,802,844

Compared with the preceding year, the revenue shows a net decrease of £2,177,305, the falling off having taken place in the excise duty on paper, which has been abolished, and in property tax, which has been reduced during the year. The items of customs, stamps, post office, and miscellaneous show a fair increase over those of 1861. The last quarter differs but slightly from the corresponding one of last year.

The London Times, in its review of the government finances, observes, that for some time to come, to make ends meet the country must look not to any increase in the revenue, as to a decrease in the expenditure.

STEWART AND THE DRY GOODS TRADE

The Continental Monthly for November contains a sketch of Stewart and the Dry Goods Trade of New York, from which, as our readers may be curious to know something of this celebrated merchant, we gather a few facts.

Mr Stewart was, in his early years, engaged in teaching, but soon changed his employment for a small mercantile business. He commenced with but a limited capital, and opened a store on Broadway in 1827. This little concern in which he then was salesman, buyer, financier, and sole manager, has gradually increased in importance until it has become the present splendid establishment, whose name and fame are heard everywhere. The marble block which the firm now occupies was built nearly twenty years ago. It had been the site of an old-fashioned hotel called the 'Washington,' which had been destroyed by fire. Mr. Stewart bought the plot at auction for $70,000, a sum which now would be considered beneath half its value. To this was subsequently added adjacent lots in Broadway, Reade, and Chambers streets, and the present magnificent pile was reared. This establishment, large as it is, is still too small for the increasing business. Hence another mercantile palace has been erected by Mr. Stewart, in Broadway near Tenth street. This is intended for the retail trade, and is, no doubt, the most convenient as well as the most splendid structure of the kind in the world. After the retail department shall have been thus removed up town, the present store will be devoted to the wholesale trade. The firm of A. T. Stewart and Co., consists of Mr. Stewart and two partners, one of whom, Mr Fox, resides in Manchester, the other, Mr. Warton, in Paris. These gentlemen, with other persons acting as agents in the principal cities of Europe, are constantly engaged in furnishing the house with supplies of goods.

The amount of annual sales is not known to any but the managers of the concern. It has been estimated at from ten to twenty millions. In the retail department, the proceeds of which are included in this estimate, the daily sales vary, according to the weather and the season, from three thousand to twelve thousand dollars.

If the question be asked, by what means Mr. Stewart attained his present position, the answer is, by patient toil and forty years of close application to business. His remarkably fine taste in the selection of dress articles, by means of which he was always able to have better goods than his competitors, probably led to his first success. But an accidental quality like this, without the other elements of talent, could never save a merchant from bankruptcy. Mr. Stewart has everything reduced to a perfect system. Each branch of his trade is under a special manager, who is selected with a view to his qualifications for that department. The numerous failures which take place among the business men of New York give him his choice among them for his managers, so that he is always able to find the kind of men he needs and whom he can trust. He is an accurate judge of character, possessing a penetration which enables him to read man at a glance; so that it is rarely, if ever, that he is deceived. He sits close in his office, is seldom seen in the sales-rooms, or among his clerks, yet seems to know everything that is going on throughout the establishment.

It is said, so accurate is his comprehension of all the departments, that his clerks sometimes imagine that he has an invisible telegraph girdling the whole building. The men have a saying that if any one of them is absent, he is the one to be first called for.

But few of the thousands who trade at Stewart's ever get sight of the proprietor. He is only to be found at his office, which is situated on the second story, on the side of the house looking into Chambers street. Here he sits at his desk, absorbed by his responsibilities, directing the various energies of the great body of which he is the head. None, except a man of the highest executive ability, could endure the constant care, the earnest effort. He is the hardest worker in the concern.

It is not generally known that during these hours of application, and while engrossed in the management of his immense operations, no one is allowed to address him personally until his errand or business shall have been first laid before a subordinate. If it is of such a character that that gentleman can attend to it, it goes no further, and hence it rests with him to communicate it to his principal. To illustrate this circumstance, we relate the following incident: A few weeks ago a person entered the wholesale department, with an air of great importance, and demanded to see the proprietor. That proprietor could be very rarely seen, as he was sitting in his office, but the stranger was courteously met by the assistant, with the usual inquiry as to the nature of his business. The stranger, who was a government man, bristled up and exclaimed, indignantly, 'Sir, I come from Mr. Lincoln, and shall tell my business to no one but Mr. Stewart.' 'Sir,' replied the inevitable Mr Brown, 'if Mr. Lincoln himself were to come here, he would not see Mr. Stewart until he should have first told me his business.'"

Mr. Stewart's aspect and manners are plain and simple. There is nothing in his appearance to denote that he is more than a quiet, prosperous citizen, of respectable position in society.—Methodist.

THE JUDGE AND HIS DEMIJOHN.

A good story is told of Judge Lewis, of New Hampshire. He always kept a demijohn of good Jamaica in his private office for his particular friends. The judge had noticed for some time past, that on Monday morning his Jamaica was considerably lighter than he had left it on Saturday night. Another fact had established itself in his mind. His son Sam was missing from the paternal pew in church on Sabbaths. One Sabbath afternoon, Sam came in and went up stairs rather heavily, when the judge put the questing politedly to him—"Sam, where have you been?" "To church, sir." "Had a good sermon, Sam?" "Very powerful, sir; it quite staggered me." "Ah, I see," said the judge, "quite powerful—quite powerful!" The next Sabbath the son came home rather earlier than usual, and apparently not so much "under the weather." His father hailed him with, "Well, Sam, been to the 'Second Methodist' again to-day?" "Yes, sir." "Good sermon, my boy?" "Fact was, father, that I couldn't get in; the church was shut up and a ticket on the door." "Sorry, Sam; keep going—you may get some good by it yet." Sam says that on going to the office for his usual spiritual refreshment, he found the "John" empty, and bearing the following label: "There will be no service here to-day, the church is temporarily closed."

THE WANDERING JEW.

A Polish Jew, one Abraham Kalisch, having come to London to gain his livelihood as a peddler, and by begging from his wealthier brethren, was once assailed, on passing London Bridge, by a Christian, whom his long, reddish beard seemed to displease, and who, after some abuse in words, violently pulled the said beard. The crowd that quickly gathered, pitying the case, inoffensive Jew, laid hold of the assailant, and delivered him over to the police. He was prosecuted, in due course, and sentenced to pay to Abraham Kalisch the sum of thirty pounds damages. As soon as Abraham Kalisch had the thirty pounds in his pocket, and some ten pounds beside, previously earned by "trade," he returned to Poland, and made his appearance in his native town as a wealthy man, the owner of forty pounds—more than six hundred florins! Scorning the wretched life of a peddler, he now opened a shop with a glass front, and stocked it well with old clothes, and even with some new ones, besides boots and ribbons. He thus became the envy and pride of the community. All people were at a loss to understand how Abraham Kalisch in so short a time had become so rich in London; nor did Abraham Kalisch ever, by word or hint, betray his secret, until one evening when Leib Chasid, an old friend of his, and with a reddish beard like his own, seated with him at the fireside, said: "Abraham Kalisch, may you live long! Have you any idea of returning to London?"

"Leib Chasid, I have not," replied Abraham Kalisch.

"As true as you live?"

"As true as I live."

"Well, then, Abraham, why will you withhold from a brother the secret by which you made your fortune in that city? You left this country a poor ragged youth, and God Almighty sent you back as the wealthy Abraham Kalisch. Do you think the Lord performs such things for the benefit of a single individual alone, and not for your starving brother? May you live long! but would you appear before His throne with the responsibility of having left in misery a brother, whom a word from your lips could have made happy? Would you? May envy be far from your soul; but by your silence you incur the suspicion of envying a brother the chance of becoming as happy and wealthy as yourself. Now, in His holy name, I conjure thee, brother, to intrust me with thy secret and I promise never to return to this town, and never to set up shop in competition with thee."

Abraham Kalisch replied, "Who can see the ways of God? They are mysterious; and it is a mystery how I became rich; but as true as God lives, I will tell you all about it.

"Well, I am listening, brother; my heart stands still from anxiety."

"Now, Leib Chasid, suppose you go to London, and when there you ask for a bridge called London Bridge. You walk upon that bridge, when there will come a man who will curse you and pull your beard, upon which this man will pay you thirty pieces of gold. This is all."

The same evening Leib Chasid left for London. Although many, many years have elapsed since then, he still walks up and down London Bridge, and if at midnight, on passing along the bridge, you meet a man in a black robe (caftan,) and with a long, reddish beard, who whispers to you: "Zupf mee" (pull my beard,) it is Leib Chasid.

MISCELLANEOUS.

THE law is a pretty bird, and has charming wings. 'Twould be quite a bird of Paradise, if it didn't carry such a terrible bill.

THE men who deserve, if they do not find, the greatest favor among women, are husband-men.

A PLUSH of hope renders toil and trial beautiful, as the sunbeam gives a sparkle to the winter's frost.

To all men the best friend is virtue; the best companions are high endeavors and honorable sentiments.

A MAN can't help what has been done behind his back, as the scamp said when he was kicked out of doors.

WHAT can the poor Rebel Confederacy do now?—moneyless, saltless, ramless, hopeless, lawless, and Godless.

DURING a recent visit of the school-ship Massachusetts to Hyannis, the citizens were invited to visit the vessel, and many did so. One old lady, after looking all over a nicely polished brass cannon, remarked, "Why! what a big spy-glass that is."

AT the Yale commencement exercises on the 31st ult., as the long line of assembled wisdom was entering the church—grave professors, venerable alumni, ambitious graduates, etc.—a rural gentleman standing by innocently interrogated, "What regiment is that?"

FIGHTING FOR FAME.—Two boys going home one day, found a box on the road, and disputed who was the finder. They fought the whole afternoon without coming to a decision. At last they agreed to divide the contents equally, but on opening the box, lo and behold! it was empty. Few wars have been more profitable than this to the parties concerned.

THE GREAT EASTERN.—Some months since the steamer Great Eastern arrived at New York, but in going through the sound she struck a sunken rock, and stove a large hole in her bottom. She still remains at one of the piers of New York, unrepaired, and there is no dock large enough to receive her, that repairs may be made. Her officers dare not cross the ocean in her as she is, and the only way of getting at the hole is by building a coffer-dam under her. This is now being attempted, but it is not certain that the experiment will be successful. She is represented as a very filthy craft, no pains being taken to keep her clean, or even decent.

Family Circle.

THE BIRD'S NEST

There's a nest in the hedge-row
Half hid by the leaves,
Amid the spray's white blossoms,
Bend o'er it like eaves.

God gave them their lodging,
He gives them their food,
And they trust he will give them
Whatever is good.

Ah! when your pure blessings,
My child, you forget,
When for some little trouble
You murmur and fret,

Hear sweet voices singing
In hedges and trees—
Will you be the less thankful,
Less trustful than these?

—Presbyterian.

THE BELOVED WIFE.

Only let a woman be sure that she is precious to her husband—not useful, not valuable, not convenient, simply, but lovely and beloved; let her be the recipient of his polite and hearty attentions; let her feel that her care and love are noticed, appreciated, and returned; let her opinion be asked, her approval sought, and her judgment respected in matters of which she is cognizant; in short, let her only be loved, honored and cherished in fulfillment of the marriage vow, and she will be to her husband, and her children, and society, a well spring of pleasure. She will bear pain, and toil, and anxiety; for her husband's love is to her as a tower and fortress. Shielded and sheltered therein, adversity will have lost its sting. She may suffer, but sympathy may dull the edge of her sorrow. A house with love in it—and by love, I mean love expressed in words, and looks, and deeds, for I have not one spark of faith in the love that never crops out—is to a house without love, as a person to a machine; the one is life, the other mechanism.

The unloved woman may have bread just as light, a house just as tidy as the other, but the latter has a spring of beauty about her, a joyousness, an aggressive, and penetrating, and pervading brightness, to which the former is a stranger. The deep happiness in her heart shines out in her face. She is a ray of sunlight in the house. She gleams all over it. It is airy, and gay, and graceful, and warm, and welcoming with her presence. She is full of devices, and plots, and sweet surprises for her husband and family. She has never done with the romance and poetry of life. She is herself a lyric poem, setting herself to all pure and gracious melodies. Humble household ways and duties have for her a golden significance. The prize makes the calling high, and the end dignifies the means. Her home is a paradise, not aimless, not pointless, but still a paradise; for "Love is Heaven, and Heaven is Love."

A LITTLE girl of three years, from beyond the Mississippi, who had never seen an apple-tree in full bloom, saw one in Ohio. She lifted her fat hands in the attitude of devotion, and exclaimed, "See God's big bouquet!"

I ASKED little Carrie once—
"When you eat a cookie with a hole in it, what do you do with the hole?"
"Oh," replied she, with perfect seriousness, "I leave the hole."

"THERE, now," cried a little girl while rummaging a drawer in a bureau, "there, now, grandpa has gone to heaven without his spectacles."

A STORY ABOUT PERU.

I am going to tell you a story about some strange people who lived in a far off country long ago. Get your book of maps. Find out the map of South America. Do you see that narrow strip of land bounded on the west by the Pacific ocean, hemmed in on the opposite side by a vast range of mountains? That country used to be called the Empire of Peru. Those mountains are the Andes. Volcanoes flame up here and there; frightful rents are in their sides, but high above all the smoke and moss, even above the clouds, the bolder peaks lift their heads in a veil of dazzling snow, and a great bird called the condor looks down at them as his broad wings bear him where scarcely any other bird would dare to soar.

People say that the name Andes means "copper," but these old mountains deserve to be called "gold mountains" instead. For many a mine of gold lies, no doubt, hidden in their dark depths, and the streams that rush down their sides carry golden seeds. Three hundred and fifty years ago the Peruvian Indians lived in the shadow of the Andes under the rule of their race, or king. In some places the gold lay so near the surface that a shrub accidentally pulled from the mountain side by some active climber, as he tried to scale the rugged steps of splintered rock, was enough to reveal the precious ore beneath. The finder would, of course, like to enrich himself; but if the Inca heard of the treasure he would claim it all. The entire gold of the country was considered the Inca's property, which he might use in ornamenting his palace, or present to the Temple of the Sun; for the Peruvians worshipped the sun, moon, and stars.

You are much shocked at this idolatry, I am sure. It is indeed a dreadful thing to be ignorant of the true God. But the Indians in Peru had no Bible. They saw that the sun was gloriously bright; that it gave light and warmth to everything, woke up the flowers and ripened the waving fields of corn; so, not knowing God who made the sun and calls himself "the Father of lights," they verily prayed to the works of his hands. They built temples, and adorned them with precious stones and masses of pure gold, to which they gave the pretty name of "sun tears." There were temples of the moon, also; but they were not so large or grand as those of the sun, and all the ornaments in them were made of silver. The stars and the rainbow, the thunder, lightning, and the planet Venus were also honored with incense and prayers. A great number of priests lived near the temples, ever ready to offer sacrifices of animals, grain, flowers, and sweet-scented gums, or join in one of the many feasts which were celebrated every month in honor of the sun.

But this was not all; for on grand occasions, such as the crowning of their Incas, the birth of an heir to the throne, or a great victory, a little child or a lovely young girl was cruelly chosen as the victim. So you see the hearts of these sun worshippers were cold, and dark, and wicked. Yours and mine are cold, and dark, and wicked too, except the love of Jesus has shone into them.

Instead, however, of wondering at the ignorance of the Peruvians, we are rather surprised that they made so many guesses at the truth. Perhaps they faintly remembered that their fathers had learned ages before, when the sons of Noah began to people the world a second time. They had some notion of heaven and hell, and knew that the soul lives forever, and that the body will rise again. But instead of laying their friends' bodies in the dust, as we do, to sleep until the resurrection morning, they made many efforts to preserve them from decay. So successful were these attempts, that if we had been in Cuzco, their greatest city, and had been allowed to walk through the Sun temple there, we might have seen long rows of dead kings and queens, not in their coffins, but sitting in golden chairs, dressed in royal robes, with their heads bent forward, their hands crossed on their bosoms, and their dusky faces wearing the wrinkles or the smile they had borne in life. And still sadder and stranger it would have been to see hundreds of the friends and servants of the dead Incs murdered with his tomb, that they might go to keep him company in another world. On some of the grand festivals invitations used to be sent out in the dead king's name, and a great party gathered at his house. Then the embalmed king was carried there, and placed at the head of his own table, and the guests ate their feast in presence of their ghastly host.

Would you like, now, to hear about the schools in Peru, and how the children managed to learn their lessons without books? Every child was obliged to be busy: idleness was punished as a crime. The little girls learned to spin and weave. The boys were taught to be masons, or stone-cutters, or road-makers, or miners. Some of them learned to make the gold and silver articles that adorned the palaces and temples, and many were trained to be soldiers; for the Peruvians were ever ready to fight with their neighbors. Doubtless, the little boys thought it would be very grand to carry a sword, and shield, and bow, and wear gay feathers, while they marched to battle under the rainbow flag of the Incs. They forgot that war always makes some children orphans, and that, next to sin, it is the most awful curse of our world.

But it was only the children of the rich who were taught what we would now call "book learning." These were put under the care of "amautas," or wise men, who told them stories about what happened long ago, taught them to speak their own language correctly, and instructed them in the laws and religion of Peru. These were their history, grammar and geography lessons. But no little Peruvian boy had to learn his alphabet, or write a copy, or bring his slate for sums. The use of letters and figures or even picture-writing, such as had been employed by the Egyptians and Mexicans, was unknown in Peru, so, of course, they had no books there. How do you think, then, they communicated their thoughts to persons at a distance, or laid them up for future generations? They tried to do so by means of quipus. The quipus was a cord made of many different colored threads, twisted together and tied in knots. Quipu means a knot. The different colored and many knotted threads had various meanings; red signified war; white, peace; yellow, gold; and the knots were so arranged as to express any desired number. Still, though the Peruvians learned to be very skilful in using these knotted cords, they were a poor substitute for written or printed characters. The quipus could at best only suggest thoughts, while with us twenty-six little letters can be made to express everything we know, desire, or love, bring to us the very words of those long dead, and convey our own to the most distant parts of the world. So, you see, that if the Peruvian children had no lesson-books, they had no story-books either. Worst of all, they had no Bible.

How much longer they might have lived under the government of their Incas, we cannot say, had not a nation far across the sea been tempted to invade the country. These people were the Spaniards. The prize which tempted them to Peru was gold. About 1511 a report reached Spain that there was a country on a distant shore, where gold and silver were as plentiful as iron was in Europe; but the exact position of this land remained a matter of doubt. Although some unsuccessful attempts at discovery were made very early, it was not until the close of the year 1531 that Francisco Pizarro, whose name has become famous in history for his cruelty, avarice, ambition, courage and success, landed in Peru. The simple natives were unable to resist the superior skill of European soldiers; the Inca was taken prisoner and slain, his treasures seized, and his chief city plundered. After ten years of bloodshed, Peru passed into the hands of Spain; but Pizarro, who had at the price of so much sin and sorrow won this bright Indian jewel for his country's crown, fell a victim to the hatred of his own countrymen. He was secretly killed in the city of Cuzco, where he had gained his greatest triumphs and committed his greatest crimes.

Sad indeed is the story of the conquest of Peru; but saddest of all, that men who bore the holy name of Christian, and carried the cross as their badge, should have had a little of the spirit of Jesus, who came into the world, not to destroy men's lives, but to save them.—Truth's Champion.

Advertisements.

TO THE READERS OF THE CHRISTIAN INSPECTOR.

A CARD.

It having been said to an impossibility, hereabouts, to obtain CUSTOMER MADE CLOTHING AT MODERATE PRICES, and [illegible] MADE TO ORDER CLOTHING AT ONE PRICE, we have, at the earnest solicitation of our patrons, organized, in connection with our extensive ready Made Salesroom, a system of CUSTOMER DEPARTMENT, in which the prominent features are, 1st. Fine and Medium Materials made up in First Class Styles. 2d. Unexceptionable Fitting Garments. 3d. PRICES FOR CASH ONLY. FIVE PER CENT. DISCOUNT. 4th. A corps of the most celebrated artists in this country. An extensive assortment of the choicest fancy cassimeres and vestings, suitable for Church, Parlor, and Table, always on hand.

In our Ready Made Salesroom can always be found every variety and style of well made fashionable clothing, ready for use.

PRICES MODERATE.

A visit is solicited.

WANAMAKER & BROWN,
MERCHANT TAILORS AND CLOTHIERS,
"OAK HALL,"
S. E. Corner SIXTH AND MARKET STREETS.

JAMES PRICE, Salesman.

ESTABLISHED IN 1776.

McALLISTER AND BROTHER,
OPTICIANS,
No. 728 Chestnut Street,
PHILADELPHIA,
Nearly Opposite Masonic Hall,

(Lately removed from the 101 Branch, Chestnut St. above Second.)

Spectacles, Mathematical Instruments, Spy-Glasses, Philosophical Apparatus, Opera Glasses, Thermometers, Microscopes, and Microscopic Objects, Tape Measures, Platina Points, Magic Lanterns, Stereoscopes and Stereoscopic Pictures. By Wholesale or Retail.

Our priced and Illustrated Catalogue furnished on application, and sent by Mail, Free of Charge.

PURE WHOLESOME BREAD.

THE UNFERMENTED BREAD

Is the most pure, wholesome and nutritious BREAD that can be used.

Its superior quality is certified by several hundred of our most prominent physicians, who use it exclusively.

Families supplied in all parts of the city, and the Bread is kept by all prominent grocers.

W. E. CAMP, Patentee, Manufacturer,
Corner of Broad and Baltimore Sts.

PIANOS & MELODEONS.

The largest, most elegant, and cheapest stock in America, and on the most reasonable terms.

All instruments sold subject to approval—guaranteed for ten years.

J. E. GOULD,
Nos. 1 and 3 North Ninth St., Philadelphia.

KURTZ'S CHURCH HISTORY.

NOW COMPLETE.

LINDSAY & BLAKISTON, PHILADELPHIA,
HAVE NOW READY
A TEXT-BOOK OF CHURCH HISTORY,
By John Henry Kurtz,
Professor of Theology in the University of Dorpat.

COMPLETE IN TWO VOLUMES
VOLUME I—To the Reformation. VOLUME II—From the Reformation.

PRICE $3.00

"It is perhaps the best manual extant on this subject, in any language, and better adapted than any other to the wants and habits of mind of American students. It is faithful, terse, graphic, and is sustained within moderate limits."—Methodist Quarterly.

"It is an admirable work of reference. The history is extremely condensed, and a vast amount of information is given in the most possible words. It is particularly full in accounts of the development of theological doctrines, and of the operation of political influences on the history of the Church. The classification and arrangements are excellent, the references to authorities are everywhere abundant, and the leading outlines of the history are presented with great clearness."—New Englander.

L. & B. ALSO PUBLISH

KURTZ'S MANUAL OF SACRED HISTORY, a Guide to the Divine Plan of Salvation, according to its Rise and Development. Seventh American edition. In one vol. 12mo. Price $1.25

The admirable manual of Sacred History, translated by Dr Schaeffer, is entitled to a most cordial welcome from all Christians. It has been favorably received by Christians of all denominations.

KURTZ'S BIBLE AND ASTRONOMY. An Exposition of Biblical Cosmology and its relation to Natural Science. Second edition. Price 1.25

KURTZ'S HISTORY OF THE OLD COVENANT. 3 vols., octavo. Price 6.00

HERZOG'S ENCYCLOPEDIA OF THE LATEST THEOLOGICAL AND ECCLESIASTICAL LITERATURE. In two vols. Royal Octavo. Price 6.00

LINDSAY & BLAKISTON, Publishers,
25 South Sixth St., above Chestnut, Philadelphia.

SABBATH SCHOOL LIBRARIES.

BEAUTIFUL, NEW AND SAFE BOOKS

AT LOW PRICES.

RECENTLY PUBLISHED FOR LIBRARIES.

PICTORIAL CATALOGUES MAILED FREE TO SUPERINTENDENTS AND OTHERS.

These books are filled with the most interesting matter, written with great care, and beautifully illustrated. Colored not simply to amuse, but to be instructive and interest the children that they may become citizens of God.

ALSO, a choice selection of books, beautifully bound in Gothic covers, for the ARMY AND NAVY.

All the publications of the American Tract Society, instituted at Boston in 1814, may be found at

ALL THE PRIMARY BOOK STORES IN PHILADELPHIA

Also at

JOHN G. BROUGHTON'S,
No. 1334 Chestnut Street, New York Office,
NICHOLSON BROUGHTON, Jr.,
Jan23-6mos Depository No. 1 Spruce Street.

JOHN COCHRAN & CO.,
Importers and Jobbers of
Hosiery, Gloves and Fancy Dry Goods,
NO. 13 NORTH FOURTH ST., ABOVE MARKET,
PHILADELPHIA.
Ribbons and White Goods, Undershirts and Drawers, Embroideries and Handkerchiefs, Watches and Jewelry, Combs, Brushes, &c.

DR. J. GOODWILLIE,
DENTIST,
316 South Eleventh Street, below Spruce,
PHILADELPHIA.

SUPERIOR FRENCH CONFECTIONS,
MANUFACTURED BY
AUGUSTE TIELMEN, No. 1302 CHESTNUT ST.
Put up neatly in 1, 2, and 3 pound boxes, without extra charge. Also, A LARGE VARIETY OF FRENCH CONFECTIONS suitable for holiday presents. A fine selection of Fruits and Cream constantly on hand.
A. TILLMES, 1302 Chestnut St.

1862. 1863.

THE PENNSYLVANIA CENTRAL RAILROAD.

THE GREAT DOUBLE TRACK ROUTE

THE CAPACITY OF THE ROAD IS NOW EQUAL TO ANY IN THE COUNTRY.

THE GREAT SHORT LINE TO THE WEST

The Express Mail Daily. Mail and Fast Line, Sabbath excepted.
Mail Train leaves Philadelphia at — A. M.
Fast Line " " — A. M.
Express Train " " 11 30 A. M.
Harrisburg Accommodation leaves Philadelph

THE CHRISTIAN RECORDER.

Published by the African Methodist Episcopal Church in the United States, for the Dissemination of Religion, Morality, Literature and Science.

Rev. Elisha Weaver, Editor. PHILADELPHIA, DECEMBER 6. 1862. Vol. II.—No. 49.—New Series. Whole No. 100.

THE CHRISTIAN RECORDER

Is published every Saturday on behalf of the

AFRICAN METHODIST EPISCOPAL CHURCH,

BY

REV. ELISHA WEAVER,

General Book Steward,

No 619 Pine Street, Philadelphia.

Notice.—All letters and matters pertaining to the Book Concern subscribers, sale of papers, and all moneys belonging to Book Concern or for paper, must be directed to Rev Elisha Weaver, Box No 324, Philadelphia, and all matters sent by express, and in our city, must be directed to E. Weaver, No. 619 Pine St.

All articles or matter for the Christian Recorder, must be directed to E. Weaver, Box No 450, Philadelphia.

TERMS.

Two Dollars a year, payable in advance. Single copies, five cents.

ADVERTISEMENTS.

We solicit Advertisements of all descriptions, suitable for a religious newspaper, which will be published as follows:—

Cards or Advertisements, inserted for one year, provided they do not exceed eight lines, ten dollars, paper included; not eight dollars with out the paper,—six months, for ten dollars, paper included,—three months, four dollars,—one month, $1.50, paper in each case included.

CORRESPONDING EDITORS OF CHRISTIAN RECORDER.

Rev. J. P. CAMPBELL, Rev. A. W. WAYMAN,
" J. M. WILLIAMS, " B. T. WILLIAMS,
" G. H. GRAHAM, " C. BURCH,
Rev. L. ROSS.

Poetry.

For the Christian Recorder.

O, THOU ART GONE!

BY MRS. ELIZA DIXON.

Her form was graceful, and her eyes were bright,
Like morning skies when robed in cloudless light—
A queenly dignity sat on her mien:
With pride I spoke it, and 'twas plainly seen
Her God she loved the most, her husband next.
From duty aught could turn her. No pretext
Urged by a friend could lead her from the truth.
Pure as a sunbeam from her very youth,
Who did not love her! Who did see her face
But saw a mirror full of light and grace!
Hers was an angel's heart, as pure and high
As the bright sun that gilds the noon-day sky.
Oh! Hannah, Hannah, thou art gone, my love,
To see the glories of the world above.

O, holy virtue! Such thy pleasures are,
They banish sorrow, and they banish fear.
Thy gifts are crowns; thy palaces are gold,
Rising in grandeur, glorious to behold;
Thy gates are precious stones, thy rivers love;
Thy fruits the glories of the climes above.
No fang of asp, no scorpion's sting is there,
No breath of sin pollutes the limpid air.
There is not heard the voice of stormy strife,
And death ne'er treads that land of endless life.

Selected for the Christian Recorder.

[illegible].

Alone, at midnight, as he knelt, his spirit was aware
Of somewhat falling in between the silence and the prayer;

A bolt's dull clanger that hath sped so far, it thinks and does
So soon as it hath reached the ear wherein its errand lies;

And as he rose up from his knees, his spirit was aware
Of somewhat, forceful and unseen, that sought to hold him there;

As of a Form that stood behind, and on his shoulders prest
Both hands, to stay his rising up, and somewhat in his breast.

In accents clearer far than words, spake, "Pray yet longer, pray,
For one that ever prayed for thee, this night hath passed away;

"A soul, that climbing hour by hour the silver-shining stair
That leads to God's great treasure-house, grew covetous; and there

"Was stored no blessing and no boon, for thee she did not claim,
(So lowly, yet importunate!) and ever with thy name

"She linked—that none in earth or heaven might hinder it or stay—
One Other Name, so strong, that thine hath never missed its way.

"This very night within my arms this gracious soul I drew
Within the Gate, where many a prayer of hers had gone before;

"And where she resteth, evermore one constant song they raise
Of 'Holy, holy,' so that now I know not if she prays;

"But for the voice of praise in Heaven, a voice of Prayer hath gone
From Earth; thy name upriseth now no more; pray on, pray on!"

WASHINGTON CORRESPONDENCE.

Mr. Editor:—Though I am laboring under a severed head, yet a few words from the capital might be of interest to some.

Our city is verging back to its usual activity, or to that activity which it usually presents in time of Congress. Senators, Representatives, Clerks, Phonographers, &c., are pouring in continually, preparatory to the opening of one of the most telling sessions which I think will ever convene in Washington. The results of this Congress will touch the nation's heart-strings more than any previous one, not because destinies fraught with more interest should depend upon it, (except to the colored) but because that around which the nation's sympathy twirls, will be touched. I may be mistaken, I hope I am; but if any one will closely watch the sentiments of this nation as they are expressed in the papers, speeches, orations, and periodicals throughout the entire country, they will see that many who profess loyalty, had rather see the nation severed to atoms, than that the oppressed should go free. The deep concern now with thousands, is what the President is going to do with the negroes? They will tell you that they ought to be free. But if he is freed, what is he going to do for a livelihood, and where is he going to locate, &c.?

I would like to have the pleasure of whispering into their ears, the following words:

1st. That if we are freed, we intend to do as other men and women do:—Just as we please. Work when we get ready, eat when we have it, wash when we get dirty, sleep when it is night, get up in the morning, get married when we are suited, fight wars if we can't have peace, serve God or the devil, and die when we can't live But we never intend to be human chattels again, World without end, Amen

2d. As to where we are going; we have all the world before us. We are going to visit each other; going to pray when we get ready; in short, we are going just where we please; going to church, going to stay here, going away, going to Africa, Hayti, Central America, England, France, Egypt, and Jerusalem; and then we are going to the jail, gallows, penitentiary, whipping-post, to the grave, heaven, and hell. But we do not intend to be sent to either place unless we choose. But I tell you what we will have to do; If this nation don't mind, we will have to settle this American war. Talk about the mediation of France and England! We will be the mediator, if things don't change.

But you ask what am I grumbling about. Has not the President issued his emancipation proclamation? Yes, he has, but the hearts of the people have not The President has, but the country has not; and it must be done; else God will blow out the sun, burn up the sea, and thunder his wrath abroad.

Rev. Bishop Payne preached a missionary sermon last Sabbath afternoon in Israel Church. It had been announced on Saturday through the papers, and consequently it brought together a large concourse of both white and colored. His reasoning was masterly, but did not carry upon it that fervid pathos which often distinguishes his able efforts. He also lectured on Monday night before the Israel Lyceum, an organization lately formed. In this effort the Bishop so far surpassed the most sanguine expectations, that one could hardly value the lecture for admiring the man

Those who heard it will never forget it. The papers spoke of him the next day, as being acquainted with the encyclopedia of science, and an oriental and modern linguist; at the conclusion of which, he paid a glowing tribute to the industry of the pastor and congregation of Israel Church, for the improvements lately made thereon.

Prof. A. M. Green lectured before the Island Literary Association on Monday night, 20th inst. The subject was, "Things learned in the School Mythology." Permit me to say, that he handled his subject in a manner, that it appears none but the Professor could have done. He went back in the fields of Mythology, and brought out symbols browed with an inferential lustre; and canvassed them in such majestic diagrams, portraying them at the same time, in all that archetypal homogeneousness, which were peculiar in their day; so beautifully, that those present could not forbear saying, You are a smart man.

Thanksgiving day was celebrated in all circles throughout the city. But we will merely notice that part which relates to the contrabands.

Several members of the Freed Men Association, resolved, with the assistance of the several colored churches, to give the contrabands a dinner, as an expression of our regard, and of their welcome in our midst. However, the different churches last Sabbath collected for that purpose very liberally. The Asbury M. E. Church (colored) collected $51; Union Bethel A M E. Church, $30; 15th street Presbyterian, $27. Israel Church took up no collection, but by the advice of the pastor, each one sent whatever they chose to give to the pastor's study; from whence it was carried to the contraband quarters in a wagon Consequently on Thursday morning his office was thronged with incomers and outgoers, bringing baked chickens, turkeys, pigs, pies, custards, apples, almonds, candies, &c., to the amount of about $50; some estimated it at about $60, but I think it was worth about $50. I did not hear what the first Baptist Church did, but I am certain it acted nobly. Neither did I hear the sum from the other churches. But every thing was in order by 12 o'clock, at which time they commenced dining. The number of contrabands and citizens present were about two thousand, many of whom (I mean citizens) joined in the jaw-working operation.

Shortly after one o'clock, a stand was erected, and everybody clustered around. The President of the day introduced Rev. Bishop Payne, whose address was much admired. After which, Senator Pomeroy, Rev. Mr. Mitchell, Emigration Agent, the President's Private Secretary, Professor A. M. Green, Rev. H. M. Turner, and others none less estimable, delivered addresses.

The contrabands evinced through the entire course of the many lectures, a great deal of intelligence. The lectures were made up of the best of language, and many points were abstrusely stated, but when any thing suited them, it would be responded to, by glory to God, or Amen, or Hallelujah. It let gainsayers see, that we could understand something else, besides, dis, dat, and dem. But the most contemptible thing about the affair was, that some tried to turn it into an emigration meeting; now I am not so tight-brained, as not to want any thing said about emigration. My sentiments are, let it be discussed, and let those go who wish, and those stay who desire; let us have a free expression about it, for all this helps to develop intellect; it sets men to studying the physical and geographical condition of the globe. But to talk about moving the colored people from this country is foolishness. Though Professor Green in his able speech on the occasion, tore the entrails out of those who broached the subject, I am sorry that any thing was said only what tended to their elevation.

The contraband convention met the same evening at Union Bethel Church, but for want of the constitution, adjourned without doing any thing more than discharging the committee which had been appointed to draft it, and appointing another. Some resolutions were offered and passed. I was very much surprised to see them adopt Jefferson's Manual as a parliamentary guide; a book never designed to govern deliberative bodies, but prepared only for Legislative and Congressional halls. The President, however, (Mr. Wm. Slade) entered his protest to it; yet, on the other hand, the house loomed with intelligence: some exemplary speeches were made. They meet again on next Thursday evening. I have been requested by a member of the C. S. S. Society, to mention the trial of Mr. E. M. Thomas: all I care to say about it is, Felix quem faciunt aliena pericula cautum.

Several marriages came off on the 27th inst., but we will only mention two.

Miss Harriet S. Middleton, to Mr. Wm. P. Rider, by Rev. I. D. Brooks.

And Miss Mary Ann Burke, to Mr. Benjamin C. Bennett, by Rev. H. M. Turner

There was also a grand supper given in Ebenezer Church, Georgetown, D. C., on the evening of the 27th inst. H. M T

Washington, Nov 28th, 1862.

Mr. Editor:—Whereas, Several letters have been sent to me, from the North, and many relative to business demanding an immediate reply.

And Whereas, Several have been detained in the office for weeks, consequent upon not being numbered, please let me request them through your columns, to address South East Street, 03, Washington, D. C.

H M Turner.

No day without a line—Nulla dies sine linea—the maxim of an eminent painter. Practice makes perfect

For the Christian Recorder.

LETTER FROM BISHOP NAZREY

Mr Editor:—After a few days' silence, I again speak to the Church and the numerous readers of the Recorder about matters and things according to notice. The Sabbath School Convention met in Philadelphia; and, after spending some hours in deliberating on the best method of promoting the interest of the Sabbath School, we adjourned, and under sorrowful circumstances, which was the injury that prejudice exposed Father Robinson to, and in a few days terminated in his death. We hope the Church will, in the future, have the benefit of the deliberation. I then resumed my travels, and visited Brother Woodlin's circuit, and found everything in order; and, though it was a rainy week, still we visited every appointment; after which I returned to Philadelphia, as I could not hear anything of the whereabouts of the Elder on Cape May Circuit

I have noticed the appeals of the Editor and General Book Steward to the itinerary brethren in behalf of the Book Concern, saying to them that they had got the books from the store, and did not send the money for them, which left him unable to print or bind any more; therefore, he could not supply those who are continuously calling for books. I also saw a report coming from the committee having the management of the Concern, which speaks favorably of the office otherwise than a want of means. Well, brethren, such ought not to be the case. Though we may form our individual objections to some things that may not exactly come up to our notions, yet we should support that which is doing good, and is existing under laws made by ourselves. There never was a time when a circulating medium was so much needed among our people as at this time of passing events. It appears to me that there has been sufficient warning in this District since the rise of the last Annual Conference, to move every itinerant preacher in the A. M. E. Church to do his duties as per Discipline, in relation to the Book Concern.

First. Brother Schureman, who has not, perhaps, passed 38 summers, ruptured a blood vessel, and but for a skilful physician, he may have been helpless, and unable to do any kind of labor for many years, and where was the means of his support? The second case was that of the Rev. Richard Robinson, an old and well tried itinerant minister of Christ, and who was elected one of the vice-presidents of the Convention, and started from the performance of that important duty for his home—a distance of 5 miles; but, before he reached there, affliction met him in such a horrid manner that the physician could not even find the pieces of bones in his arm. If the Lord had suffered that old servant of the Church to have remained long, where was his support to come from? We have no more right to believe they would have been taken any better care of than those who are on the superannuated list. Now, and again, there is not one itinerant preacher that the liabilities of those or other disasters are not as many against them individually as were those of whom I have spoken; and is it possible that they will not attend to the means that look to their support under these circumstances? I say is it possible for men of their standing—men of their sense? Is it the act of wise men to so neglect their own interest? See Discipline, page 219, section 16. It shall be the duty of every preacher having the charge to do all in his power to make a collection of 2 cents per month from each member at the end of each month or quarter, &c., having a twofold object in view; and that is, the literature of the Church and its worn out itinerant ministers; and I hope none will disregard this important subject, for if they do, they must remember the door through which they are to pass at the Annual Conferences. See Discipline, page 225, section 7. The application of that law, in all the Annual Conferences, or its penalty, would be worth 2000 or $3000 to the Church annually; and, for want of its application, we are tending to disgrace. Preachers and people are requested to read and think on these things.

Having been in the field nearly all the time since last February, I shall now cease travelling for awhile until the winter storms pass over a little, but shall still be at work, as the work of a Bishop never ceases. The Church will hear from me all the time. All communications will be directed to the General Book Steward, No. 619 Pine Street, Philadelphia, until recalled.

W Nazrey.

CHRIST STILLING THE TEMPEST.

BY MRS HEMANS.

Fear was within the tossing bark,
When stormy winds grew loud,
And waves came rolling high and dark,
And the tall mast was bowed.

And men stood breathless in their dread,
And baffled in their skill—
But One was there, who rose and said
To the wild sea, Be still!

And the wind ceased—it ceased—that word
Passed through the gloomy sky;
The troubled billows knew their Lord,
And sank beneath his eye.

And slumber settled on the deep,
And silence on the blast,
As when the righteous fells asleep,
When death's fierce throes are past.

Thou that didst rule the angry hour,
And tame the tempest's mood,
O, send thy Spirit forth in power,
O'er our dark souls to brood!

Thou that didst bow the billow's pride,
Thy mandates to fulfil,
So speak to passion's raging tide,
Speak and say, Peace, be still!

PSALM CX. [S. M.]

The Lord said to my Lord,
"Have thou thy royal seat
On my right hand, till I shall lay
Thy foes to earth thy feet."

God shall thy rod of strength
Extend from Zion's hill;
Thine enemies afar shall bend,
And do thy sov'reign will.

Thy willing people come
To thee in day of power,
In holy beauties from morn's womb:
Thine best youth's dewy shower.

The Lord, who cannot change,
Hath sworn, "To thee consign,
As by Melchizedek were borne,
Priesthood and kingly reign."

The Lord on thy right hand,
Shall tread in his just wrath,
On many a monarch's impious head,
Along his victor path.

O'er heaps of slain he goes,
But first bows lowly down,
At the pour ru'let slakes his thirst,
Then rises to his crown.

LETTER FROM MUSCATINE.

Muscatine, Iowa, Oct. 30th, 1862.

Bro. Weaver:—I thought it my duty to let the friends know, through your columns, what we are doing out here in the West. Well, the war fever is very high here. The President's proclamation takes well with the great mass of the people; but there are some few who have raised a hubbub about it, fearing that the slaves would come up here and get ahead of them. But I need not take time to tell you who they are, or what they are, for you all know them

But to something else. We have had a protracted meeting going on ever since our Quarterly Meeting on the 18th, and the Lord has blessed our labors. We have had eight happily converted to God, and five mourners yet at the anxious seat crying for mercy. The Church seems to be awake to her duty, and her members seem to be growing in grace and the knowledge of the Lord. The Sabbath school is still prospering, though the Superintendent is quite sick at the present Most of the conversions that have yet taken place were Sabbath School scholars. Thank the Lord for Sabbath schools. The chaplain of the 35th Reg Iowa Vols., preached for us last evening, the 29th inst., from Prov. iv. 23. He is an able speaker, and explained the text in a manner satisfactory to all.

I have not been able to raise the amount to send you for the paper, nor have I succeeded in obtaining any subscribers as yet. But I am not discouraged; for I think when our meeting is over, so that I can have a little more time to spend in that way, I shall succeed.

I must now close for this time. I will write again as soon as something of interest occurs. Pray for us that the Lord may still pour his Spirit upon the church, and that there may be added to it many of such as shall be saved in his kingdom

Yours in Christ,

E C. Joiner

LETTER FROM PROVIDENCE.

Mr. Editor—Permit me for the first time since I have been in Providence, to inform you of the condition of our church in this city. It may be interesting to some to hear how we are getting along here. Our condition is very good, notwithstanding the distracted state of the country. The good work of the Lord is still going on. We had quite a reviving time at our Quarterly Meeting, which came off on the 24 of Nov. We had the help of the Rev Lewis S Lewis of Providence, and Rev. Wm. Johnson of Boston; the good Lord crowned the work with the outpouring of his Spirit. On Tuesday the 4th, we had our love feast, and we had a rejoicing time, for the Lord was with us. We had one convert, and others were inquiring the way to Jesus, the Lamb of God, that taketh away the sin of the world. We have had several converts lately, and some have been added to the church. May the good Lord continue his work. As for the temporal concerns of the church the Rev. Bishop Nazrey spoke of them in the 95th number of the Recorder, when speaking of his visit to the New England Conference district But I will say in addition to what the Bishop has said, that we are going to remain in our old place of worship this winter. I had the pleasure of marrying on the 27th of Nov., Mr. Ichabod Northup, of Providence, and Miss Charlotte M. Lewis, of Thompson, Conn. Among the guests were the Rev. Deacon Dorrell, Rev. Henry Scott, Rev. R. Parker, and Mrs. George T. Downing of Newport, R. I. It proved to be a very pleasant affair. J P. Shreeves.

Providence, Nov. 29th, 1862.

CONTRABANDS.

If there is any class of people, who, at this crisis demand the sympathy and immediate notice of the colored citizens of the North, it is assuredly the contraband. Chained to the oppressor for a century, devoid of light and knowledge, he is now suddenly awakened from his thraldom, to find himself penniless and surrounded by an almost insurmountable wall of prejudice. The thousands who swarm around the Federal Army have to work out for themselves an industrial and self-supporting character and that under innumerable disadvantages Many of them have successfully attained this end. Uncle Sam, by the force of events, has opened his heart sufficiently to strike off their chains, and they are all returning him thanks by faithfully doing his drudgery. The men are best fitted for this work; so while they follow the army, digging trenches and throwing up breastworks, the women and children are obliged to remain in the rear and support themselves; these are they that call forth our sympathy—these are they that demand in unmistakeable language, our immediate assistance. There are thousands of them at Fortress Monroe, Hilton Head, Cairo, and other places; and although the Government supplies them with food, they are in want of other necessaries that sustain life. Winter is hard by, and they must have blankets and comfortable clothing, or they will perish and die to our utter shame. They are now no longer brutes and chattels, but women and children; and if we do not stretch forth our arms to their relief, the curse is upon our head. We have hoped and prayed to this end, and now that the object is gradually accomplishing, one must pray less and work more. In this great national effort we are compelled to work and to suffer; for if we do not, we will achieve no national credit. There are many colored men that have suffered and are suffering for this cause. My appeal is not to them; it is to those that are not awake to their natural salvation. Contraband Aid Societies should be formed in every colored community, and every person should lend liberally

The colored citizens of Xenia have vowed not to be last in the race. A Contraband Aid Society has been formed here, and is under good headway, to which donations are daily given and monthly fees paid by the members. Investigating committees are also formed to furnish employment to the numerous contrabands that are flocking to our midst from the Kanawha. Our efforts are progressing finely, and Xenia bids fair to sustain her character. And females enter into the work with a nobleness of character that does them credit, earnestly applying their needles to the making and repairing of the goods that are donated, besides contributing largely to the obtaining of these goods

Our efforts are only begun, and we hope that every colored community will follow in the wake.

Yours for the cause,

J C Maxwell.

Xenia, Nov. 29th, 1862.

WHERE THERE'S A WILL, THERE'S A WAY.

"It can be done, and it shall be done," shouted the shrill, piping voice of Mrs. Jones, as she rose from the dinner-table, with indignation sitting upon her pale and wrinkled brow She did not utter another word; but her resolution was formed—for life or death—for weal or woe.

Mr. Jones was a stout, athletic old gentleman, verging on to the allotted three-score years and ten; but his eye was not dim, neither was his natural force abated, and he furnished a rare instance of a green, old age He often boasted that he was the first male white child born west of the Blue Mountain; and he inherited large and valuable estates on the banks of the beautiful Susquehanna, between Northumberland and Milton, or just above the ancient, Indian town of Shamokin. Nature had endowed him with a genial, jovial disposition, whose predominant characteristic was an irresistible propensity to enjoyment. After having received what was then styled a liberal education, he began at the early age of eighteen to manage his own estates, and to live as he listed upon their ample proceeds. And in a right jolly mood did the days and hours pass away

A favorite, and rather singular, amusement was, at odd times, to skip pennies upon the river, to see them glide along upon the glassy bosom of the water, and when pennies failed, he would sometimes finish the sport with silver coins.

One day while thus engaged, he was suddenly startled by the violent clatter of horse's hoofs, and looking up he beheld a magnificent steed, mounted by a female figure, careering towards him with the speed of the wind. He had just time to exclaim, "Good heavens!" when the horse, making a false step, the fair rider was precipitated to the earth. He was hastening with all possible speed to the rescue; but she sprang to her feet, exclaiming, "Have you firearms by you, sir? there is an enormous panther but a short distance up the way, and I have just escaped his terrible clutches, and he has frightened the wits out of my horse, and I fear he will be upon us again in a moment!"

But he calmed her fears by saying that it was not the nature of that animal to pursue his prey when it escaped at the rate at which she had been riding. In the mean time the horse, being relieved of his burden, slackened his speed, and presently, coming to a dead halt, turned around and walked deliberately back to the spot where his rider had fallen.

Mr. Jones assisted the unfortunate young lady in remounting, and insisted upon leading her horse by the reins, to prevent a recurrence of the recent catastrophe; but she peremptorily forbade any such interference with her liberty, and thanked him for such an implication of her cowardice and bad horsemanship. And, giving her horse the rein, she was soon out of sight; but not before Mr. Jones had made the politest bow of which he had any recollection since he had forgotten the instructions of his dancing-master.

"Proud as Lucifer! Wild as an antelope, and beautiful as Venus herself!" said Mr Jones inwardly, as he shouldered his rifle, which was his constant companion. If she thinks she is so competent, why let her go; I am sure I don't care. But I shall go and see about the panther.

Traversing a distance of perhaps half a mile, and turning a sharp bend, the monster at once became visible. He was sitting in the middle of the road, bracing himself up with his fore-paws, looking like a disappointed cur. The moment his eye caught the approaching form of Mr. Jones, he crouched down and gathered himself ready for a bound. Now, Mr. J. was a sure shot, and hence, without trepidation, he advanced within a hundred paces of his mark, and levelling his piece, he pulled the trigger, and the cold lead entered the hot brain of the beast, just between the eyes. It was like a nail driven in a sure place; for, having rolled upon his huge side, he made no movement beyond a slight tremor of the limbs. He measured twelve feet from tip to tip, and weighed four hundred and eleven pounds.

As might readily be supposed, the killing of such an animal created a wonderful gossip in all the region round about. Mr. Jones was looked upon, especially by the children, as a public benefactor for ridding the neighborhood of such a pest. But he himself had but little pleasure in contemplating the good deed he had accomplished. Indeed, to tell the truth, he rarely ever thought of it; for his mind had been so shocked by the perils of the young lady, that she was not out of his thoughts day nor night. And many attribute it to this fact, I know not how correctly, that she afterwards became Mrs. Jones.

They were now fairly embarked together upon the tide of life, happy in each other, although their views and tastes were widely different. She was highly aristocratic in all her notions of the fitness of things in human society, and would not, even to save her life, place herself below her set. He associated with any company that would afford him a joke and a laugh. She gratified her ambition in the display of extravagant and costly parties, while he discovered his highest gratification in chasing the deer upon the mountain, or drawing the speckled trout from the cool ripples, accompanied by a few congenial spirits and free-and-easy boon companions. She kept horses of rare and noble blood and pedigree, undoubted to the twelfth generation; and he kept hounds, from the fleet-footed greyhound, with graceful form and pointed nose, to the keen-scented, loud-mouthed trailer, with heavy dewlap and ears like leather aprons. It was, of course, but a short time until a large and expensive establishment was created, whose daily wants were well adapted to make trouble in the department of the finances. But, as yet, all things went merry as a marriage-bell, and it would not be generous at this time to disturb the bounding current of enjoyment. We will leave them now, and pass over a period of forty years.

The scene is changed. It lies five and thirty miles from the other, and is situated in the Muncy valley. The house is a little, unpainted frame shanty, with one room up stairs and one down. The domain is a lot of about fifty acres, in which Mr Jones holds an inalienable life estate There is no stable, and there are no horses; but half a dozen hungry hounds are lying in a semi-circle at the door, intently studying the philosophy of steam as it rises from the dinner-pot. This is all that remains of the grand estates and high life. Here Mr. and Mrs Jones are passing down the declivity of life. All the property they possessed that was liable to a writ or an execution, went long ago to pay their debts, and there are thousands still unpaid. Their children have grown up and left them, one to a home like their own in the vicinity, one to the far West, and one they know not whither.

Mrs. Jones could not now be recognised as being identical with the gay young wife of forty years ago. She is now past sixty, and age, ill health, disappointment and real sorrow have all left legible outlines upon her countenance. But she is still a vigorous talker, and it is exceedingly interesting to hear her trace, step by step, her genealogical descent from the house of Orleans on her mother's side, and from Charlemagne on that of her father. Mr. Jones, of course, looks older; otherwise he is little changed. He is in good health and quite happy, and divides his time between fishing, hunting, and telling stories at the public houses in the neighboring villages of Stumptown and Hardscrabble. At the last named art he is an adept, and like a certain preacher who is still living,—he needed but a single idea to begin with. Upon this he can frame a true story of an hour's length. But while I have been relating this, dinner has been prepared, and the aged couple are seated at their frugal meal, which is enlivened by the following conversation:

"I want that upper bed in the garden spaded this afternoon," said Mrs. Jones.

"Yes, my dear; Oh! yes, the garden must be dug; but I really cannot do it just now. You must wait till some other time."

"The same old story over, wait, wait, wait; I tell you it must be done to-day, for to-morrow is the longest day, and the cucumbers must be planted at early dawn,—a habit in which I have not failed for thirty years."

"You should have told me about this sooner."

"Sooner! Have not I asked you twenty times before to do it?" answered Mrs. Jones, wrathfully.

"Well," said Mr. J., "the upshot of the matter is, I have not time, and it is too hot to work to-day in the broiling sun, and the ground is so dry and hard that it is literally impossible to spade it before we have rain. I tell you, my dear, it cannot be done."

"It can be done, and it shall be done," was the emphatic reply, which closed the dialogue.

It is a comfortable evening in August, and the venerable pair are seated at the tea-table.

"What famous cucumbers these are; they are really delicious Where do they come from?" inquired Mr. Jones

"From the bed that could not be dug," was the curt and cutting reply.

Mr J. looked vacant for a moment, and then recollecting, he said, "Oh! did you get some one to dig it?"

"No; I dug it myself, and no thanks to any one."

"Why, Mrs. Jones, you astonish me! You, a frail, old and sickly woman, do work that a strong, healthy man might well be afraid to undertake!"

Here he paused, and presently exclaimed—

"But that shows what a power the will possesses over the other faculties of our nature. And, if people would only use it as they should, how much misery and wretchedness would be avoided, and what great good might be accomplished that is never begun, and scarcely thought of. Why, if my will had thus and uniformly asserted its authority over my other faculties, I should never have formed the detestable habits that have proved my ruin. I should have saved my estates and added to their value at least ten-fold, instead of being oppressed by debt, the payment of which is the remotest idea that could occupy my mind. I should have done more than this; I should have risen; I was always conscious that I possessed talent; but I never could force myself to use it. If I had only possessed more will-power, I should have gone to the Legislature and been a benefactor, and thence to Congress; and, perhaps, this very day, I would have been President of the United States. And you, my dear, why you would be mistress of the White House, and have fifty servants and carriages, with outriders and horses, of the very best blood, and—"

"I do wish you would stop your ranting," said Mrs J

"Ranting!" exclaimed Mr. J., "It is not ranting; but truth, sober truth. Why, my dear, there is yourself now, if the action of your will was uniform, you would be a perfect angel in reality, as you were in appearance when I married you. I mean if you had always exercised as much will in cultivating your moral disposition, in curbing your pride and extravagance, in bridling your ungovernable temper—"

"Mr. Jones, I tell you to hush this moment," interrupted the shrill, commanding voice of Mrs J.

"Well," he resumed after a moment, "if you will not allow me to speak of you, why there is the Rev. Mr. Pliable. A little exercise of the authority of the will over his sleepy energies, would prevent him from wasting the most valuable portion of the day like a sluggard in bed, and give him abundance of time to visit the people of his parish five times where he does not visit them once. It is really all that is wanting to make him a useful pastor and a star preacher. And there is deacon Smith, it only requires a little more will to resist temptation, to obviate the necessity of his coming so frequently before the vestry. The fact is, if it were mine to dictate how every man should use his will, I could soon ennoble every individual, Christianize the household, renovate the church, reform the state, regenerate the world, and render this mundane sphere a perfect paradise."

From the Lutheran and Missionary.

DISAPPOINTED BUT INSTRUCTED

Sometimes a very important truth comes to us in an unexpected way. It enters the heart, so to speak, at the back door, quietly and in unpretending guise But, having gained access, it puts on a royal crown, and reigns over the soul by its own right. Early in the history of the writer's family an event of this kind happened, a record of which may perhaps be of help to other parents. Deeply conscious of our own inexperience, my wife and I sought advice concerning the government and training of our eldest child from a friend of unpretending but deep piety, whom we knew to be remarkably successful in the management of children. We were thinking—at least I was—of some elaborate system with many details and many specific directions. But how was I taken all aback by the short and simple answer! It was for substance as follows: Be careful not to have too many commands, but see that they are all promptly obeyed. Let your children grow up in the habit of obeying you as a matter of course. Be careful of your spirit and manner, for here your children will be like you. They will imitate your tones, looks and ways, generally. When parents are kind and gentle in their words and manners, they may hope that their children will be the same: but when they speak in excited tones and manifest a hasty spirit, the children will do so too. You must expect that your children will be very much what you are yourselves."

And the lecture ended! I was disappointed very much, as was Naaman the Syrian, when he received from the prophet the simple direction to go and dip himself seven times in the Jordan. But the more I reflected on the advice of our friend, the more it grew in my appreciation. I thought of my own father. He was taken away in my childhood, and has lain in the grave now forty-five years. But I remember, as distinctly as yesterday, that we children always expected to obey him without hesitation and without reasoning on the subject. Why? Because he always thought before he spoke, and then gave his commands calmly, as one who knew that he had authority We understood also, from some little incidents that occurred in the family, that if necessary, obedience would be enforced. Next I thought of my teachers in the common school There was one to whom we boys always rendered prompt and exact obedience; not because we had ever reasoned on the matter or talked it over among ourselves, but from instinct. Here "instinct is a great matter." We read the man's character instinctively, and we knew that he must be obeyed. Then there was another whom we calculated to obey somewhat loosely. We did not mean to be too much out of the way, nor did we care about being very exact; for we had measured him too, and knew how far we might safely go. It is not the quantity of government, but its quality, that secures prompt obedience. When commands are considerately given and firmly enforced from the beginning, there will be, in general, no difficulty. But a moody unequal government, to-day very severe, to-morrow very lax, will spoil everything.

Then, as to the other part of our friend's admonition, that we should be careful of our own spirit and manner, its importance cannot well be overestimated. It is surprising how accurately little children read character. They do not reason—that is, not consciously—but with their exemplification eyes they look directly into the soul. As far back as my memory can reach, I know how much the word was worth of every one with whom I had near intercourse; that is, I knew whether he or she was truthful in regard to promises and threatenings; and all the children around me knew the same. Of course we all know who had self-control in little things as well as great, and who acted under the impulse of passion. Further than this, we knew from many little things in the daily life, which, because we were children, we did not fail to notice, how much meaning there was in mom's profession of supreme love towards God and concern for the salvation of their fellow-men. A child may not be able to gauge the contents of a barrel in a mathematical way; but only give him a chance to stand by and hear its sound and see its motions as it is rolled over the rough ground, and he will know with certainty whether it is full or empty. So a child that lives under the same roof with you, professed follower of Christ, and witnesses your daily life, will feel, if he cannot describe, the sincerity or hollowness of your profession. And remember it is not simply nor chiefly your character that is at stake, but his salvation. His youthful soul is plastic like wax. It is the divine law that it should be moulded and fashioned by the influences that surround it. Whether you will or not, you are every day making the little child that sits on your knees what you are yourself. If you are irritable, selfish, moody, or careless in regard to your word, you are forming him, notwithstanding all your good advice to the contrary, to be like yourself. If you are boastful and fond of vain show, crooked and deceitful in your dealings with your neighbors, or given to gossip and backbiting, you cannot hope that he will be modest, truthful, and kind in all his words and ways. If, instead of setting your affections on things above, you are worldly in your affections, he will feel the power of your example in his immortal soul. With your feet and eyes directed towards the treasures of this world, and both arms reached out in the full pursuit of them, in vain will you advise him to lay up for himself treasures in heaven. He will go the way he sees you going, not the way he hears you talking. Good advice, sustained by a corresponding life, is very precious. Such advice is true fire, and it will warm and burn. But advice contradicted by the life is (to borrow one of Dr. South's figures) only a flame painted on an altar. Even a little child knows that it is intended simply for show, and therefore he never attempts to warm his hands by it. What an immense formative power over their children has God committed to parents; and a power, too, which they cannot help exercising daily for good or evil! How solemn the account they must render of it at the last day! Let it be the holy ambition of every father and mother to be able, by God's helping grace, to say then: "Behold I, and the children which God hath given me."

Sherord.

THANKSGIVING HYMN.

Great God, we thank thee for the life
Which we this day enjoy;
Our grateful hearts to thee would rise,
And praise our tongues employ.
Thy goodness crowned our early years—
Thy mercy follows still;
And through our few remaining days
Teach us to know thy will.
O who can count thy favors sent,
Or number blessings given,
More numerous than the fallen leaves,
Or all the stars of heaven.

We thank thee for the morning light,
For twinkling, vigil, orbs of night;
For noontide breeze, for gentle flow
Of streamlets murmuring soft and low;
For crystal dews and gentle showers;
For rainbow hues and blooming flowers;
For music borne upon the air
From feathered songsters sweet and fair;
For fragrance wafted on the gales;
For mountains high, and lovely vales;
For azure sky and silver moon;
For quiet eve and sultry noon;
The river's deep majestic tide,
And fertile vales extending wide;
For fragrant fields and fruitful trees;
For limpid lakes and rolling seas—
All these thy gracious hand has given,
All these the bounteous gifts of Heaven.

This beauteous world proclaims thy love,
It bears thy stamp impressed;
It paints the weary heart above
To oceans of peace and rest;
It tells of God—it shows his power,
In wisdom fully planned,
Its oceans roar and billows tower
At His divine command

We thank thee, Lord, for daily bread,
And countless blessings on us shed;
For sheltering roof at well supplied;
For needed wants well attended;
For friends, and home, and kindred dear;
For loving smiles, affection's tear.
We thank thee for a goodly land—
The home of freedom's chosen band;
The exile's hope from tyrant power,
A refuge to oppression's hour.
O save her now from perils great—
Steer thou, O Lord, the ship of state.
Confuse her foes, and from this night
Bring thou a morn of peace and light;—
May treason, crushed, no more assail;
Still thou the storm and hush the gale—
And then triumphant to thy praise
Our noblest hymn of thanks we'll raise.

But earthly anthems not alone
Demand our ardent praise;
We are immortal thou hast shown,
And born for endless days:
That here on earth our life's begun,
Which does not cease with death,
And countless years have yet to run
When we resign our breath.

We thank thee for redemption's plan
To save, exalt, and succor man;
And for thy word, which points the way
From night and shades to realms of day.

Thy gifts so lavishly bestowed
Should melt our hearts with love,
And lead us in that pleasant road,
Which ends in joys above
Grateful and humble may we be
For all thy mercies given,
And sing at length, from sin set free,
Thy endless praise in heaven. W. H.

Ancram, New York, Nov. 27, 1862

THE HEART.

O, could you read the human heart,
Its strange, mysterious depths explore,
What tongue could tell or pen impart
The riches of its hidden lore!

Hid from the world's distracting eye
What deep and burning feelings play,
Which o'en stern reason's power defy
And wear the sands of life away.

Think not beneath a smiling brow
To always find a joyous heart,
For wit's bright glow, and reason's flow,
Too often hide a cankering heart.

The bird with bruis'd and broken wing,
Oft tries to mount the air again,
Among its mates to gladly sing
Its last melodious dying strain.

The fire that lights a flashing eye,
May by a burning heart be fed,
Which in its anguish yearns to die,
While yet it seems to pleasure wed.

O, do not harshly judge the heart,
Though cold and vain it seems to be;
Nor rudely rend the veil to part
That hides its deep, deep mystery!

The Christian Recorder.

Philadelphia, December 6, 1862.

REPORT.

Look here, brethren, read this, and remember it, too!—

The meeting of the Executive Committee, and their appeal to the ministers having the charge of circuits and stations, and to the members of the A. M. E. Church, is as follows:

Dear Brethren and Friends:—According to the authority vested in our Editor and General Book Steward, he called together the Executive Committee of the Book Concern on the 13th of November, at which time we had a very pleasant interview together in relation to the present flattering condition of the Book Concern and the wants of the Church.

Brethren, let us tell you for once that the Book Concern is really in a prosperous condition—and how it is that our Editor and General Book Steward has so managed to keep the Book Concern and paper in the hopeful condition in which we find it, and with such scant means, we confess we are at a loss to know—and more especially in times like these, when many a firm and paper, with a much larger capital, have succumbed. But, brethren, in order to hold this position, and to keep up a growing interest throughout the connexion, there are means needed—first, there is a very great demand for hymn-books in every direction in the connexion, and our Editor and General Book Steward has informed us there is only about seven or eight in the store, and he has no more to bind up. Therefore, the Committee deem it advisable, in view of such a demand for our hymn-books, and especially in the Western country, to advise our General Book Steward to get out another edition, so that our people may be supplied. To do this, brethren, it will require about $500. This should be done without delay. We therefore recommend to each elder, deacon and preacher to properly lay this vital matter before their congregations, and to take up a free-will collection, and to forward the same to the Gen. Book Steward and Editor, so that it may be in his hands by the 18th of December, or 20th, at the farthest—and he will give each credit through this paper. Now we ask our brethren, shall the Book Steward have the amount? We will answer for the Philadelphia district—our portion will be forthcoming. We also recommend to our Bishops, while travelling around, to speak of this matter.

WILLIAM MOORE,
W. H. WATERS,
STEPHEN SMITH,
W. D. W. SCHUREMAN,
ELISHA WEAVER, Ch'n.

ACKNOWLEDGMENTS.

Rev. H. J. Shreeve, of Providence, R. I.,	2 00
Rev. Jeremiah Young, of Reading,	1 00
Bro. John Cousins, of Xenia, O.,	1 00
Rev. E. T. Williams, of N. Haven, Conn.,	1 15
Mr. and Mrs. Francis Jackson, of Providence, R. I.,	1 00

LETTER.

We have received a letter from Rev. G. A. Rue, of Boston, who is appointed in the place of Rev. Jacob Mitchell, announcing his safe arrival and of the work before him. We hope the good Lord may bless brother Rue in his labors to build up Zion.

QUARTERLY MEETINGS.

December 13, 14, at Valley Hill.
December 21, at Pottsville.
December 28, at Reading.
January 5, 1862, at Downingtown.
January 12, at Centreville.
January 19, at Birdsborough.

JEREMIAH BULAUGH.

QUARTERLY MEETINGS.

December 20, 21, at Bordentown.
December 27, 28, at Allentown.
January 3, 4, 1863, at Cookstown.
Quarterly Conference at Fairhaven, Freehold Circuit, January 17.

JEREMIAH YOUNG.

LECTURE TO MOTHERS, AND ALL OTHERS.

Rev. E. Weaver will deliver a lecture to the mothers of Philadelphia, as a Union Lecture, in Brick Wesley Church, Lombard Street, just below Sixth. This lecture is intended to wake up mothers to their duty. It will be worth five dollars to all. We hope to see the church crammed and full on an occasion of this kind. We charge only 15 cents, which we hope no one will refuse to give; one-half the proceeds to go to the benefit of the Christian Recorder, which we have been publishing in this city for the benefit of all. Will every mother come, and persuade others to come? There are a number of ladies who have tickets for sale, and they can be had also at our Book Store, No. 619 Pine Street. We hope to be able to sell 500 tickets. We shall look to see who our friends are. The lecture will be delivered on Wednesday evening, Dec. 10th, at 7½ o'clock.

ELISHA WEAVER.

DR. LONGFELLOW.

This professional gentleman, as a Surgeon Dentist, is at No. 1126 Rodman Street, Philadelphia. We refer our readers to his advertisement on the fourth column of the third page of our paper. We recommend all ladies and gentlemen, who desire to get rid of the toothache, and want their teeth plugged in the best of order, to go to Dr. Longfellow, No. 1126 Rodman Street.

ST. THOMAS' CHURCH.

Last Sabbath morning we were at St. Thomas' Church, to see our old friend and brother, Rev. William Alston, installed. The services were very solemn and impressive, and were performed before Bishop Potter installed him. After half past 11 o'clock, Dr. Hare arose and took his text from the Gospel by Mark, 11th chapter and 13th verse. He did not have his sermon written, as is the usual custom in that church, and we were told that he never did write his sermons. It was as masterly a sermon as we have ever heard. We congratulate Rev. William Alston and flock with great success.

LETTERS FROM BRETHREN.

We have received letters from a number of brethren, speaking of their fields of labor. One from Rev. P. Myers, of New Albany, Ind. Glad to hear from you, my brother. May the Lord bless you. One from Brother Cousin, of Xenia. All right, Brother Cousin. One from Mr. Rue, of Boston, Mass. That is right, Brother Rue; do all you can for the cause. One from Brother Chase, of Lynn, Mass. The Lord be with you, my brother.

THE DESTINY OF THE A. M. E. CHURCH.

CONTINUED.

We answer, first, that it is the duty of the functionaries of the A. M. E. Church to see and carry out all of her laws, rules, and regulations, as far as it is practicable. But, then, where should the starting point be with the functionaries? Why, it seems to be clear to our mind, that it should begin in our Annual Conferences. Each one should administer the law alike, as far as in his power: that is to say, there should be, upon the whole, a oneness in every Conference, for the good and the spread of our beloved Zion. There should be link to link—that all things may be done to the honor and glory of God. The ministers who are truly called to preach the Gospel of the blessed Jesus—who are honest in their souls—who are loyal, and want every point of the law carried out, as far as practicable, are the persons who look to see that the functionaries enforce the law alike. This is right. But, to do this, we claim that, as an African M. E Church, with a plurality of Bishops, one thing is essential to the execution of these laws, for the good of all mankind who chance to fall under her liberal regulations. That thing is this: at least once a year, if not twice, the functionaries should meet, at some central point, for prayer, and counsel together upon each other's manner, as to how certain points of law, which may be considered somewhat difficult to understand, are understood by them; and then to decide how they will, in union, recommend the carrying out of those apparently difficult measures until the meeting of the next General Conference. They should, in this council, have every district before them, the kind of material that is in them, and what changes would really be necessary in any one or more of them—by way of exchanging some of the elders, out of one district, (for awhile, at any rate,) to another, for either the spiritual welfare of some portion of the work, or in a financial point of view. This is, we think, highly important in an Episcopal Church having more than one Bishop. It is important, first, because the functionaries ought to be a unit; and if there is not a unit among the Bishops, there will not be a unit in the next grade of ministers, who are also executives of the law. Again, where these regulations are kept up among Episcopal Bishops, rest assured that it has, and will have a telling influence over all other departments in the Church. No one, we presume, dare question this; for where there is union, there is strength.

In England, November, 1661, seven Bishops were sent to the Tower of London, a place which was surrounded with walls and a broad, deep ditch. In this confinement they were kept for not reading the King's declaration for liberty of conscience, (intended to bring the Roman Catholics into ecclesiastical and civil power,) and were tried in June, 1688, and acquitted on the 29th or 30th of said month. Now, in all probability, had not those Bishops held a consultation, and then and there declared that they would be a unit, and though they may have been separated for miles, yet there seemed to have been nothing which could be brought to bear to sever them in relation to what they conceived to be the best for the welfare of the Church and people who were committed to their care. Had they, while each one was in his diocese, administered the laws just to have suited their own peculiar views, there would not, nor could not have been a union, neither with the Bishops nor the people; for everybody have their friends; hence, when they were brought before the King, they were united, and therefore acquitted.

Now, we say to the Church, that wherever this state of things exists in the episcopacy, though hell may rage and vent his spite, Christ will save His heart's delight. Reasoning from the fact that such is the link or bond of love—that there is no place where the enemy can creep in, whereby he might do injury, so the destiny of the A. M. E. Church depends much upon the link of the functionaries.

(Continued.)

TO OUR SUBSCRIBERS AND OTHERS.

It is now nearly two years since the revival of the Christian Recorder, and its enlargement to the present size. The Recorder, like all other things, has had its trials—it has felt the thumps and kicks. But be it remembered, my readers, that it has stood up through all the storm, and made its way to each subscriber as regularly as the weeks rolled around. The cry has been among the people, that they are willing to give in aid and support of a paper published by our people, if it would live. Well, it has lived two years. What say you now? Many of the weekly papers have advanced from $2.00 to $2.50, and some as high as $3.00 a year. We ask every candid and thinking man and woman, friend and foe, if any such there be, shall the Recorder be sustained? Will you determinedly give it your influence, by way of paying two dollars, cash? Will you recommend it to the favorable attention of your neighbors and friends, as well as to each brother and sister in the church? Will you speak to your elder—to your deacon—to your preacher? Will you help him to swell the number in your church—in your neighborhood? Let each one set to the work, and rest assured that success will attend. Will not each subscriber get two, and send us $2 by the first day of January, 1863? As all subscriptions end on the first day of January, will brethren be kind enough to keep this before their people? Let us turn over a new leaf, brethren.

We do believe that all real friends to religious literature, and this paper, will come up to our call. We say to our city subscribers that we shall, the good Lord willing, give all our patrons a call with the carrier, at which time we will expect $2 to be put in our hand. Will every lady and gentleman commence now and lay it by for the Recorder? We hope you will, for we have a number of bills to pay on or about the first of January, and are depending upon our friends, real friends, to stand by us. As we shall say something more or less until the first of the year, we will stop.

BISHOP NAZREY'S LETTER.

We hope that all of our brethren will read Bishop Nazrey's letter well, and then act accordingly; for it is just in place.

NOTICE

TO THE DISTRICTS OF PHILADELPHIA, NEW ENGLAND, OHIO, INDIANA, AND MISSOURI, OF THE A. M. E. CHURCH DISTRICTS.

Dear Brethren:—As we have a number of superannuated ministers on the list in said Districts, therefore it will be expected that the ministers and preachers, on their circuits and stations, will do all they can to collect the missionary money, and we also recommend that the Class leaders be instructed to collect and set the amount on the Class book opposite each member's name, as also all the collections called, per Discipline, for the Annual Conference, and publish the same once every quarter, that it may be seen who they are that work for God and his cause. We think it is time to give us all to those of our people who do work, so that God's name may be glorified!

(For the Christian Recorder.)

VINCENNES, Ind., Nov. 10th, 1862.

MR. EDITOR:—I avail myself of this opportunity of writing to you, and as this is the first time that I have ever been permitted to write to the Christian Recorder, I will tell you how we are getting along in this portion of the Lord's vineyard.

Rev. H. B. Smith has had his first Quarterly Meeting, and we had a good time, though not such a time as I have witnessed here in the last past year. The Lord was with us during the time in which it was held—one week.

I wish to say something about our Sabbath School, which is in a fine condition. It numbers seventy-five scholars, and we would like to have the Christian Recorder as a Sunday School paper, as we had before, and we would like to know how much it would cost per year; for we felt lost when we gave it up. Also, I would like to know if you have any question book on the Old Testament, with answers to it, and if you have let me know the price of them. I was looking in the Christian Recorder, but did not know if any of them were suitable.

M. STEWART.

To our Vincennes letter we would just say, that we feel glad to hear from you, away out on the Wabash river. In relation to the question books on the Old Testament, we have them, but not with answers to the questions; better without. As regards the Sabbath School being supplied with the Recorder, we only say that the Vincennes brethren have the right view, and that if our Sabbath Schools in general will take hold of it, we will publish one side of the paper with the cuts and pictures, as we did before.

NOTICE

The Philadelphia Library Co. will celebrate their 20th anniversary, on Tuesday evening, Dec 9th, 1862, in the Lecture room of St. Thomas' Church, Fifth St. below Walnut. The President, D. B. Bowser, will deliver the Introductory address. Addresses will be delivered by Rev. William J. Alston, late of New York; Thomas M. Chester, of Harrisburg, and S. Morgan Smith. The exercises to commence at 8 o'clock. Tickets of Admission, 10 cents. To be had of D. B. Bowser, J. C. Bowers, Chas. Bustill, S. M. Smith, Franklin Turner, Wm. P. Price, J. C. White, Jr., F. C. Revels, Jas. S. Douglass, Moses Wheeler, James Prosser, and at the door.

For the Christian Recorder.

De Quincey, speaking of the grandeur and subtility of the human spirit, says most beautifully, "that all of our thoughts have not words corresponding to them; many of them in our yet imperfectly developed nature can never express themselves in acts, but must be appreciable by God only, like the silent melodies in a great musician's heart, never to roll forth from harp or organ."

In connexion with this idea, in how sublime a light does His name, —The Word—place our Saviour. Jesus Christ is the word of God, him in whom the Father's thought has found full and perfect utterance. "For I know the thoughts that I think concerning you," saith the Lord, "thoughts of peace and not of evil, to give you an expected end."

A FRIEND.

MAXIMS.

They have much to do with the character of a community. Maxims not only form a nation's sentiment and action, but they are also indicative of a nation's thought and inner life.

Cicero styles maxims "the salt-pits of a nation." So, also, a man's favorite maxim is often the embodiment of his leading idea and aim—the die imprinting itself on his whole character and history.

Washington's maxim, imprinting itself on his whole character, was—Never put off till to-morrow what ought to be and can be done to-day.

Talleyrand's maxim was—Never do to-day what can be put off till to-morrow. Talleyrand true to his maxim, had no principle. He avowed that a blunder was worse than a crime. He lived by expedients. A wily politician, a perpetual office holder, he could not found a State, nor be an example to a race of freemen.

Torstenssohn, of the school of Adolphus, and the prosecutor of the Thirty Years' War, shattered by disease or deformity, not being able to walk or ride on horseback, carried at the head of his forces on a litter, he was yet the resistless, terrible, and victorious commander. Schiller says, his maxim was—Never count your enemies. In the heart of Germany, with his little force of Swedes, he marched against the finest armies and most renowned generals of Europe. He always fought, always attacked, however brave, strong, or numerous the enemy might be. He used vigilance and foresight—warding off perils and seizing advantages—but he dashed on the foe with fiery valor, inspiring the assailant and appalling the resisting force. He possessed that sublime courage which fears no danger and shrinks from no enemy. Torstenssohn felt that he was contending for truth, right, and humanity, against the gigantic tyranny of Austria. The brilliant succession of victories, freeing central Europe from the deadly evils of Austrian oppression, showed the grandeur and might of the maxim—He never counted his enemies.

Pelissier's maxim was—Il faut casser les oufs pour faire des omelettes—One must break eggs in order to make omelettes. The "eggs" of Pelissier are men. The omelette made by "breaking" them are fortune, fame, victory, dukedom, and a marshal's baton.

John Say's favorite maxim was—Never to desert a friend and never count an enemy. This maxim was reproduced in the man.

No day without an act of love—the maxim of the benevolent Lavater. It made him rich in good works and happy memories.

"COAX HIM, BOYS, COAX HIM."

Two boys passed my window one bright morning, carrying heavy pieces of furniture. One of them also held a string attached to a large dog's head. The dog was unwilling to trot very rapidly, and much to the lad's annoyance, would insist upon resting every few steps. The large boy grew impatient, for it was a hard work to carry such a heavy load, and at the same time drag the dog.

"Kick him, Jim, kick him," said he; and Jim set down his burden and began to kick; but the dog only growled, and refused to stir. Then Jim took a stick and began to beat him; but the obstinate fellow only whined, and remained perfectly still.

What was to be done? The boys were beginning to despair, when Frank Gage came along. "Coax him, boys, coax him," was Frank's manly suggestion. Some boys would have pouted, and thought Frank had nothing to say in the matter; but these seemed relieved by the advice, and began to pat "Trim," and speak kindly to him. What was the result? Why, "Trim" wagged his tail approvingly, and trotted off briskly.

Does not this little incident illustrate the power of kind words? There is a great deal of power and meaning to kind words and action. A little hymn you all know, says, "Kind words can never die." Have you ever tried the experiment? There is scarcely a person living who does not like a little coaxing and encouragement, and scarcely a person who cannot be influenced by gentle words and treatment. Be kind to everybody and every thing about you, always remembering the text, "Be not overcome of evil, but overcome evil with good."—Child's Paper.

NECESSITY OF DIVINE WASHING.

What are the directions which Elisha gives to the dignified invalid? He sends him word, saying, "Go and wash in Jordan seven times, and thy flesh shall come again to thee, and thou shalt be clean." Certainly this was a piece of advice as strange as it was unexpected, and surprised Naaman to such a degree as completely to ease him down from all the loftiness of his hopes. But who can mistake the deeply typical nature of the prophet's message? Even with respect to sin, the spiritual leprosy, we can only present a similar thing to that which Elisha ordered for his patient, a bath, a washing, a plunging—though certainly in a different flood to that of an earthly stream.

The prophet testifies that "for the house of David, a fountain is open for sin and uncleanness." And such is really the case. Plunge into it, thou guilty criminal, or thou mayst rub the skin from thy hand without eradicating the bloody spot from it. "If I wash thee not," said the Saviour to Simon, "thou hast no part with me." Read the first part of this sentence with a three-fold emphasis, and the one thing needful will fully unveil itself to thee.

Let the emphasis first rest upon the letter "I." "If I wash thee not." He must do it. Wash thyself with whatever, and in whatsoever thou pleasest—yet if Jesus do not wash thee, thou wilt continue unclean in the sight of God. Wash thee with good works, almsgiving, and devotional exercises. It will prove advantageous to thee; the world will commend thee. But thou must remain destitute of the commendations of the Most High, as long as thou art not washed by Jesus' hands. Let others wash thee by flattering opinions respecting thee, by favorable testimony and good report. This will also be of some profit to thee, but if thou desirest more than the applause of the world, take to heart the words, "If I wash thee not, thou hast no part with me."

"If I wash thee not." The emphasis lies upon the word wash if we read the sentence in another manner. It is not enough that Jesus does some particular thing for thee; he must wash thee, for thou art filthy from the crown of the head to the sole of the foot. "But," sayest thou, "he teaches and instructs me." And so a dunce might boast, and yet perish. "But he has heard my prayer and conferred benefits upon me." This he has done to many who are now consuming in the hottest hell. "And he preserves me from many ebullitions of sin; he often knocks at my door, and frequently refreshes me with his words." Be it so. The question here is, Has he washed thee? If not, whatever else he may have done to thee, we betide thee! It is the washing alone which proves effectual.

Read a third time, "If I wash thee not," and lay the emphasis on the word thee. "I know very well that I must be washed," sayest thou. But this knowledge is not sufficient. "I have also directed many to the fountain of the house of David." That may be: but hast thou been thyself in this bath? "This and that individual also received the forgiveness of their sins." We wish them joy upon the occasion. But listen; "If I wash thee not," saith the Lord, "thou hast no part with me." Hear it, and awake from thy delusion. O take this saying of the Lord, addressed to Simon, home with thee, as directed also to thee. I really know of nothing more important to inscribe on the tablets of the memory, than these words in their three fold reading. He must wash—thou must be washed—and He must wash thee, or else thou wilt remain what thou art, a sinner, and worthy of death.

THE FRUITFULNESS OF AGED CHRISTIANS CONSIDERED AND URGED.

PSALM XCII 14.

They shall still bring forth fruit in old age; they shall be fat and flourishing.

"I remember," said God to Israel, "the kindness of thy youth, and the love of thine espousals." And this is true of all God's faithful servants, who entered into early and sincere engagements to be his, that he graciously remembers them. As an evidence of this, he hath made suitable provisions for their continual progress in wisdom and piety, and to prevent their being weary in well-doing. The ordinances which he hath instituted, and the promises which he hath made in his word, are adapted to answer this important end. Our text is one of those precious promises made to old disciples; and, as appears from the foregoing verse, hath a reference to religious ordinances, and their great usefulness in promoting the fruitfulness of the saints. I desire the particular attention of you, my aged friends, to it; as it will at once suggest to you a most important duty, and a strong encouragement.

The Psalmist, by a beautiful allegory, or figure, represents the righteous as trees planted in the house of the Lord; and then adds, "They shall flourish in the courts of our God." But in one respect the comparison fails. Trees, when they are grown to their bulk and maturity, begin to decay; then they generally produce less fruit, and what they produce is less valuable than in former years. But the righteous "shall still bring forth fruit in old age." They shall grow like trees, but not decay like them. Nature indeed decays; but grace, in which their real, valuable growth consists, shall continue to thrive. "They shall be fat," that is, strong and healthy; they shall be "flourishing," or (as the word signifies) green in holiness, peace, and joy. For the illustration of these words I would observe, that they express both the duty and the privilege of aged saints. Let us consider each.

I. The text expresseth the duty of the righteous.

Namely, to bring forth fruit in old age. It will be proper to consider the fruits which may be expected from them, and then show, how reasonable it is that they should produce them.

1. Let us consider the fruits which may be expected from them. And these are, in general, the fruits of knowledge and holiness. "It may be reasonably expected that they should be fruitful in knowledge;" be wise and judicious Christians; not children in understanding, while they are old in years, but strong men in Christ, filled with all knowledge, especially of the scripture and divine things, and able to instruct and admonish others. They should be fruitful likewise "in holiness and every good work;" eminent and exemplary for the discharge of every Christian duty; remarkably devout and serious, just and charitable, humble and heavenly-minded. Thus, St. Paul intimates, "that the aged men should be sober, grave, temperate, sound in faith, charity, in patience: the aged women likewise, that they be in behaviour as becometh holiness, not false accusers, or evil speakers, not addicted to slander and censoriousness, not given to much wine, but teachers of good things." But let us dwell a little upon the proper fruits of age; the graces which are particularly necessary for aged Christians to abound in, and which are peculiarly ornamental and lovely at that season. One is, great patience, meekness, and quietness of spirit. This is most needful for them amidst their pains, infirmities, and natural decays. If they have accustomed themselves to the government of their passions and to self denial, it will be easy and natural for them to manifest this amiable disposition. Their expectation of soon leaving this world and all its vexations, and putting off the body with all its infirmities, should promote and increase their resignation to the divine will, and their meekness and gentleness to all about them. To be weaned from the world and ready for death, is another fruit of age. All, especially the aged, should consider themselves as "pilgrims and strangers on earth." Their time is just ended; therefore they should not be desirous about or desirous of the riches and honors of this world. They should renounce its trifling pleasures, and be content and thankful, whatever their lot may be. Death and eternity should be much in their thoughts. They should be willing to leave a world where they know so little of God, and see do him as little service, and where their converse with him and enjoyment of him is so broken, interrupted, and imperfect. Again, a heavenly conversation is a proper fruit of age. It becomes the old to think much of the end of their journey, and their everlasting home. It becomes the righteous to meditate frequently on the salvation to which they are approaching, to the city with our eternal almost their Father's house, its employments, and the happiness which he hath there provided for all his children. Thus should their affections be set on things above, and heaven be the general, delightful subject of their thoughts and converse. Once more, a deep concern for the honor of God, the support of religion, and the good of mankind, should be found in all aged Christians. Thus should they grow in usefulness; "shewing God's strength to this generation, and his power to them that are to come." Their exhortations to others should be frequent and serious, as their words are weighty and impressive. Their prayers should be daily poured out for the piety and happiness of their families, of the church and the world; and they should breathe out their souls in fervent desires, that Christ and his cause may be glorified through the earth. They should, as far as they are able, extend their charity to the necessitous, particularly the aged poor, and especially contribute to support and promote the interest of religion. Let me now show,

2. How reasonable it is that such fruits should be found in them. It may be expected, from considering the nature of religion, as a vital principle, or the divine life in the soul. It is as natural for the spiritual life to grow, as it is for a living child, except the one and the other be diseased or neglected. If there be no progress in the ways of righteousness, no fruitfulness in old age, it is to be feared that there never was a real principle, no effectual work of grace, in the heart. If some have flourished for a season, and then decayed and become unfruitful, it is an evidence that they never have had a root in themselves. If any are good for nothing when they are old, there is reason to suspect they have been good for very little all their days. For true grace is growing: therefore, the path of the just is compared to "the shining light, which shineth more and more to the perfect day;" and a religious principle, or a work of regeneration, is compared by our Lord to "a well of water springing up unto everlasting life." Again, fruitfulness may be expected from aged Christians, through the natural force of habit and custom. Having been so long in Christ's school, we reasonably expect that they should have made a great progress in knowledge and religious skill; that they will be expert in the exercises of devotion; have a greater command of their passions and tongues, than younger persons; and not be, like them, tossed about with every wind of doctrine, or the sport of vanity and temptation. Having been trained up from their childhood in the way in which they should go, "when they are old, they will not depart from it." They have had more acquaintance with, and longer experience of, the goodness of God, the sinfulness and proclivities of Christ, the evil of sin, the emptiness of the world, and the pleasures of religion: and, therefore, their hearts will be more strongly influenced to judge and act accordingly. Further, they have, on some accounts, more advantages and fewer temptations than others. They generally have, or might have, less to do with the world than others; less commerce and converse with it, and fewer cares and anxieties about it. They have, by length of time, been undeceived in their expectations from it. Considering the short space before them, they have fewer temptations to oppression, injustice, fraud, envy, and discontent. Their bodily decays are a good preservative from the dangers which others are in, from fleshly lusts and sensible gratifications. They have less trouble from the appetites and desires of the body; more time to converse with God, with the Bible, and their own hearts, than the young and the busy; and, therefore, they ought to be more steady and abundant in the service of God. To this we are to add, that they may expect peculiar assistances from the Spirit of God, in proportion to their many prayers and improvements. "To him that hath shall be given." As it may be presumed that they have highly valued, earnestly sought, and carefully cherished, the influences of the Spirit of grace, they may expect a more abundant communication of them, and that the effects thereof will appear in their continual fruitfulness. There is ample provision made in the covenant of grace, that God will carry on the divine life in them; by a supply of the Spirit of Jesus continued to the end; that "the righteous shall hold on his way, and he that hath clean hands shall be stronger and stronger." Thus we have seen, that it is the duty of aged Christians to be fruitful in knowledge and holiness, in patience, in heavenly-mindedness, and a zeal for the support of religion. We have also seen, whence it may reasonably be expected that they should be so; even from the nature of religion, as a living principle in the soul; from their being habituated to the exercises of it; from some peculiar advantages attending their circumstances; and, above all, from the influences of the Spirit. I observe,

II. The text may be considered as expressing the privilege and happiness of the righteous.

As a gracious promise made to them, that they "shall flourish in the courts of God, and be fruitful in old age;" that time, which impairs their strength and every thing else in the natural world, shall improve their graces; meliorate or refine their fruit. And this they are to expect from divine influences attending the means of grace. God will not forsake them, nor take away his Holy Spirit from them: he will perform the good work begun in them, till the day of Christ. His powerful grace shall be exerted to preserve them green and flourishing to the end. The faithfulness of God is engaged to do this. Therefore, the Psalmist adds, in the verse following the text, "To show that the Lord is upright," or faithful to his promises. He then subjoins his own testimony to the truth of this; "He is my rock;" I have found him kind, powerful, and faithful in supporting the religious life in the soul, under all my difficulties and trials; and you will also find that "there is no unrighteousness in him." But it may be asked, Is this always the case? Do we not hear aged Christians, who appear to have been eminently holy and useful, sometimes lamenting and complaining of their leanness and unfruitfulness? And do we not see other aged persons, though they make no such complaints, evidently showing to all who know them, that they are almost fruitless and worthless? What shall we say to these things? "Is there uprightness with God? God forbid!" As to the first sort, who complain of their leanness, I would observe, that they sometimes mistake their own case and state. They find their affection to God and the Redeemer not so warm and lively as formerly; that there is more languor and distraction in their devotions; that they cannot so easily fix and command their thoughts, and are less affected with divine things than in time past. But all this may be owing to the decays of nature; their faculties may be weakened; their memories impaired: and it is well known that aged persons are less affected with objects of joy and sorrow than others. Their minds are less impressible than formerly. This is the natural consequence of age; and many middle-aged, yea young persons, of a relaxed habit, weak nerves, and languid spirits, experience the same. But consider, my companions in this tribulation, that, though the fervor of the affections may be lessened, the judgment may be more settled, the will more determined for God and religion than heretofore, and we may with firmer purpose of heart cleave to him. Sin may be more mortified than ever it has been, and the soul gradually advancing towards maturity in grace and fitness for heaven. We may have a more calm and yet resolute zeal for Christ and his interest than ever. These are to be considered as marks of fruitfulness and evidences for glory, and when these are experienced, the decrease of spiritual warmth and affection should not discourage us. Aged Christians may also be led to these complaints, by mistaking what their present duty is. You are sometimes ready to blame and condemn yourselves because you do so little to serve your God and your generation. But probably you are incapable of active services. Submission and patience seem to be the present duties of your age and circumstances. Allow me to express, in this connexion, that beautiful representation which Milton makes to this case, when he is lamenting his own blindness:

"God doth not need
Either man's works, or his own gifts. Who best
Bear his mild yoke, they serve him best. His state
Is kingly. Thousands, at his bidding, speed
And post o'er land and ocean without rest.
They also serve, who only stand and wait."

But, with regard to some aged persons, their unfruitfulness is their own fault. God doth his part, but they will not do theirs. They are too much engaged in, and devoted to, the world; wrapt up in their own secular interest; and will do nothing or little, for the good of their fellow-creatures. They have contracted a habit of complaining: are fretful and peevish to all connected with them, and will neither speak nor look cheerfully; whereas "the joy of the Lord is the strength" of the soul. They neglect to mortify the sins that easily beset them, and grow formal in religious duties. They take no pains to exercise their faculties, and therefore these decay; just as some lose their limbs for want of motion and exercise. On these accounts, instead of being fruitful in old age, they are like shrubs, or "the heath in the desert." But nothing contributes so much to their unfruitfulness, as their becoming indifferent to religious ordinances; thinking themselves too wise and too good to need any further improvement; or, if they attend them, taking no pains to impress the truths and motives of the gospel on their hearts, and to engage their souls in the exercises of prayer and praise. There is one error into which aged Christians are apt to fall, and which is of most pernicious influence; but I choose to express it in the words of the pious Dr. Owen: "They are ready to think and say, that the preaching and religious exercises, which they had in former days, were far to be preferred above what they now enjoy; and they despise the ministers of the present age in comparison with their fathers. But the change is in themselves. They have lost their spiritual appetite. Being grown full of themselves and conceited of their own abilities, they have not that taste and relish for the word which they had formerly: and this is both the cause, and the evidence, of the decay of all their other graces." So that the fault is their own. They are not straitened in God, but in themselves. But with regard to many aged Christians, it must, in justice, be said, that their attendance upon ordinances is most regular, early, and serious, and their respect to their ministers very honorable and encouraging; and it is much to be wished, that all the younger would imitate their example. Having thus considered the text as expressing both the duty and the privilege of aged saints, I proceed to make some improvement of the subject.

APPLICATION.

1. Let aged Christians labor after greater fruitfulness. If you are not sensible, fathers, that there is room for further improvement in grace, you have not yet learned the first instruction in Christ's religion; to be poor in spirit, humble and lowly in heart. If you are not sensible, that you are in danger of decays and spiritual declensions; that they will prove injurious, and may be destructive to your souls, you are but "children in understanding;" yea, "know nothing as ye ought to know." But I hope and believe you are sensible of these things. Let me entreat you, therefore, to make it your great ambition to be fruitful, growing Christians: and in this let all your cares and thoughts centre. To that end, be often examining what fruit you produce, what ground you gain in the Christian race, and how the work of grace goeth on in your souls. Keep near to God by prayer, and watch in holy duties against that drowsiness and languor to which your infirmities expose you. Stir up yourselves to take hold on God; as "from him all your fruit is found." If you cannot address his throne with as much affection as formerly, do it at least with as much seriousness. Let your delight be in the law of the Lord, and meditate in it day and night. "Then you will be like a tree planted by the rivers of water, which bringeth forth his fruit in his season; and whose leaf shall not wither." Think of the dying words of the aged and learned Salmasius; "Oh! I have lost a world of time: had I but one year longer, I would spend it in reading and meditation upon David's psalms and Paul's epistles." Remember, also, that the promise in the text is made to those who "are planted in the house of the Lord." Continue your love to God's house and worship, and forsake not the good way, in which you have found so much edification and comfort. Live by faith in the all-sufficient Saviour, and abide in him to whom you are united, as the branches in the vine, and then you will bring forth much fruit. How dreadful will it be, if, after the kindness you have received from God, you give him reason to say of you, as he did of the Jews, "Thou hast been weary of me, O Israel." To excite you to this holy ambition to be fruitful, growing Christians, consider that your own peace and comfort depend upon it. To find grace thriving while nature is decaying, will support you under your infirmities, and open a fountain of pleasure, when all other sources of it are dried up. It will remove your doubts, enliven your hopes, and brighten your prospects of glory. After the apostle Paul had described his persecutions and sufferings, he adds, "Nevertheless we faint not;" and the reason follows, "Though our outward man perisheth, yet the inward man is renewed," or gains fresh strength, "day by day." If they who had an appearance of religion, and some zeal for it in their younger days, become cold, selfish, and indifferent, what comfort can they have? Nay, indeed, as I hinted above, it seems a proof of a heart naturally barren and destitute of saving grace. Consider again, that your continual fruitfulness will be for the honour of God and your profession. It will show, as the Psalmist observes, that "he is your rock, and that there is no unrighteousness in him." "Herein is my Father glorified," saith our Saviour, "that ye bring forth much fruit." It reflects an honour upon his word and ordinances, and the influences of his Spirit, that they make the aged, with all their natural decays, spiritually strong and healthy, and vigorous in every grace. And finally, it will be an example and an encouragement to others. It may lead the young to think more favorably of religion, and to love the house of God. They will suspect the usefulness of the means of grace, if they see you declining. If you, who have long tried the ways of God, forsake them, or go on slowly or mournfully in them, what a discouragement will this be to them! For their sake, and the sake of religion, do not put a stumbling-block before them. Let these motives engage you, "not to be slothful in business, but fervent in spirit, serving the Lord." See that the graces of the Christian character be in you and abound, that you may not be barren and unfruitful in the knowledge of our Lord Jesus Christ; that you may adorn his doctrine, and hold fast your confidence to the end.

2. They who would bring forth fruit in old age must begin betimes to do so. My young friends, if you desire a holy, honorable, and happy old age, you must early cultivate your understandings, be ingrafted into Christ by faith, and be joined to the Lord by a solemn self-dedication. You must now lay in a stock of useful knowledge; contract habits of piety, subjection and self-government; and take the greatest pains to root out and subdue those passions and desires which are contrary to them. Religion is to be learned as a science, by thought and reading, practice and habit; and all under the influence of divine grace, which must be duly and earnestly sought. If you trifle away your youth, it is to be feared you will trifle away your age too. While you despise or pity old trifflers, remember that it was the idleness and barrenness of their youth, that made them worthless and despicable in age. I speak upon a supposition that you may live to be old; but that may not happen. It is great odds against any one that he will not. You now enjoy the means of grace. God now expects fruit from you. Year after year he comes, seeking it, and if he find none, he may say, "Cut down this fruitless tree; why cumbereth it the ground?" To the young, to all, I say, "The axe is laid to the root of the tree; and every tree that bringeth not forth good fruit is hewn down and cast into the fire." I add once more,

Love the great ordinances of public religion. Let me again remind you, that our text is spoken of those who are "planted in the house of the Lord," that is, who use his house and ordinances statedly and seriously attend upon them, and strive to improve them to the purposes for which they were instituted. They may be regularly attended, and yet the soul continue barren. There may be the leaves of an outward profession, but no fruit. Unless you are planted in God's house by faith and love, and make a serious, religious business of religious exercises, engaging the heart and affections in them, your attendance will be in vain. But where there are right dispositions and views, ordinances are adapted to promote the fruitfulness of Christians, and God hath promised his blessing with them. The Lord's supper is particularly suited to further our spiritual nourishment and growth in grace. In a word, all Christian ordinances have an evident tendency to revive and maintain the impressions of religion: to strengthen aged Christians under their burdens; to assist their thoughts in meditation and devotion; to comfort them with the views of the divine promises; to make the glories of their Father's house more familiar and delightful to their minds, and to reconcile them to the thoughts of death. I conclude with addressing you all, and especially the aged, in the words of the apostle; "God is my record, how greatly I long after you all in the bowels of Jesus Christ. And this I pray, that your love may abound yet more and more in all knowledge and judgment; that ye may be sincere and without offence, till the day of Christ, being filled with the fruits of righteousness, which are by Christ Jesus, to the glory and praise of God." Amen.

RICHARD BAXTER.

REV. DR. WILLIAM BATES,—called "the silver-tongued Bates"—was the contemporary of Richard Baxter, and quite intimate with him. Describing him as a sermonizer, he says:

"In his sermons there was a rare union of arguments and motives, to convince the mind and gain the heart; all the fountains of reason and persuasion were open to his discerning eye. There was no resisting the force of his discourse, without denying reason and divine revelation. He had a marvellous facility and copiousness in speaking. There was a noble negligence in his style; for his great mind could not stoop to the affected eloquence of words. He despised flashy oratory; but his expressions were clear and powerful, so convicting the understanding, so entering the soul, so engaging the affections, that those were as deaf as adders who were not charmed by so wise a charmer. He was animated by the Holy Spirit, and breathed celestial fire to inspire heat and life in dead sinners, and to melt the obdurate in their frozen tombs."

We are quite prepared to hear such testimony to Baxter, when he himself, addressing his brother ministers, said:

"Oh, brethren, what men should we be in skill, resolution, and unwearied diligence! Did Paul say, 'Who is sufficient for these things?' And shall we be proud, or careless, or lazy, as if we were sufficient? As Peter saith to every Christian in reference to the great approaching change, 'What manner of persons ought we to be in all holy conversation and godliness!' so might I say to every minister, Seeing all these things are upon our hands, what manner of persons ought we to be in all holy endeavors and resolutions for our work! This is not a burden for the shoulders of a child. What skill doth every part of our work require! How much of moment is every part! To preach a sermon, I think, is not the hardest part, and yet what skill

Har wood Hospital, near Washington, D. C. Nov 20th, 1862.

I have lately been looking for a little time to give you some account of this large receptacle for the sick soldiers of our army—which is only one of many of the same kind, though, perhaps not on so large a scale.

"Harewood" is the name given to this place by Corcoran, the wealthy banker, who has expended some three hundred thousand dollars ($300,000) on the grounds, (which embrace between two and three hundred acres) in planting ornamental shrubbery and shade trees, and in fertilizing the soil, &c. &c. But Corcoran's daughter was to the "Manor" Her husband was and for aught I know, now is the Private Secretary of the legate ambassador, Stoleti, and soon. Whether this had any influence in the selection of this spot for a hospital, or not, I do not know; but at any rate the government did not deem it any too good a place for the object for which it is now appropriated—a home for the sick.

Since I have been here, we have had at one time, no fewer than thirty-three hundred (3,300) patients on the list But now the convalescents are almost daily returning to their Regiments. Others are obtaining furloughs and getting their discharges to go home; and not a few, thanks be to our Saviour, are receiving their discharge from earth to heaven; and if we confide in the word of God, we must believe that some are discharged from this world to the world of woe!—all of which diminish, faster than the new comers increase our number. We all have lived in tents, of which there were about five hundred, averaging from six or seven to a tent, until now.

To this large encampment there is a Chaplain, Rev. John B. Meek, formerly from Pennsylvania, a good man, and highly esteemed in the hospital, not only for the artless simplicity and suavity of his manners, under the dictates of a kind heart, but for his sincere piety. On account of his feeble health, he is allowed an assistant, a lay-preacher of his own selection, who, together with the Chaplain, visits the sick daily, and distributes through all the tents, such reading matter in the form of Testaments, Tracts, papers, &c., as he can obtain for that purpose.

Besides the regular religious services on the Sabbath, we have a daily union prayer-meeting, which is well attended. And it is here we meet the religious element of the hospital. At our first meeting, after reading the Scriptures and singing the song of Zion, we knelt before God, and before rising from our knees, six prayers were offered. From that time to the present, we have found that the daily union prayer-meeting has been the point of deep and affecting interest to the soldiers, and an effective means of reviving the feeble in spirit, and of unfolding the love which were hiding, for the quickening spirit of the Divine Christianity.

It would be difficult for me to describe the deep toned feeling which has been unfolded in the prayers of the soldiers on these blessed occasions. After praying for themselves and their loved ones at home, they pray for the army—for their brethren who are suffering on the battle-field, for their officers, for the President, and for the country—and that the war may be brought to a speedy and honorable close.

So large a hospital as this requires an extensive laundry, which has been supplied with help from the "contraband colony," which means the place for our poor colored brethren, whom the rebellion had driven from slavery to freedom. Among the many women brought from this colony, was Rachel Sutherland, who, with her husband and five children, came with the Brigade who were guarding the shores of Maryland in Charles County, nearly opposite Aquia creek to Washington. Sandy, Rachel's husband, an able-bodied man, who had obtained employment in one of the city hospitals, in an attempt to come out to Harewood hospital to visit his wife and children, was caught by the slave-hunters, and, under the fugitive slave-law, thrown into jail. Rachel becoming wearied with waiting for her husband, went in search of him, and she also was caught and lodged in jail, but not with her husband. Like criminals of the highest order, they were not allowed to see and converse with each other. There was Rachel in one room, actually "weeping for her children;" three of whom, one only an infant, she left at Harewood; and one, whom the slave-catchers had found at a place where he was employed, and hand-cuffed, and lodged him in jail in Port Tobacco, Maryland, where he is to remain, so says his master, until the war is over; with her husband in another room, mourning over his sad misfortune of being, for aught he knew, far removed from his wife, then close by him.

A friend to Rachel, who knew of her fate, and knew that her babes were crying for her while she was weeping for them, laid her case before Colonel Doster, the Provost Marshal, who found that both Rachel and her husband were "snatched up" while under "military protection," and proceeded, on the ground of military necessity, with a pass to the jail in Washington, and first demanded the person of Rachel, then of her husband. I had the pleasure of seeing parents and children, "a happy family," (all excepting the two eldest now in slavery again) together again under a safer protection than they or the slave hunters were aware of.

My reason for making this notice is, to give this important information through your paper, that if from Maryland, loyal as she is, or from rebellious Virginia, slaves come into our army, and are there fed, clothed, and employed, and paid wages on a contract for the army, slave-hunters must, to say the least, ask permission to carry them off. Rachel, for example, had by her ability and industry elevated herself to the head of our laundry It was a military necessity that she should be returned to her place. I have been over and looked at Sandy at his work in the hospital in the patent office, and seen him enjoying the confidence of his employers. But, alas for the beauties of slavery! be it in a loyal or disloyal state. Rachel told me that she weaned her master when a babe—that she watched over him tenderly through his childhood and youth—that he came early into possession of the estate—that she felt for him a tender affection; only that he would get into such terrible passions lately, and beat her so badly, that she could not stand it with him any longer. His beating her had produced a lame side, and she got herself and family off to save their lives. It was an interesting fact, that Rachel in pursuit of her husband, got into jail, and by that means got her husband out of jail, and has enlisted hundreds into a sympathy with her love of freedom.

Domestic Items.

Northern Sugar.—One of the results of the war may be the independence of the North and West of the Southern States for sugar, if not for cotton. Much attention is given to the cultivation, not only of the maple, but of the sorghum and beet, for sugar. The sorghum, a kind of sugar cane, has already been proved in the West, and its culture will be greatly increased. It is said that 150 gallons of syrup from an acre in Illinois is a small yield, and that 300 gallons have been produced. Ohio will produce 15,000,000 gallons of sorghum syrup this year. As but from three to five millions of plantation molasses and refined syrups were formerly imported into Cincinnati to supply this territory, of which that city was the market, it appears that the great West is already independent of Louisiana plantations.

The Springfield Armory.—This invaluable national establishment is now, as for many months back, working at its full capacity to supply the Springfield rifled musket. During the month of October it manufactured 20,000 muskets, and is now turning them out at the rate of eight hundred per day, which are shipped directly to the Government as fast as they are manufactured. Twenty-eight hundred men are constantly employed in the various workshops. Almost every mechanical operation, even to the cutting of the hole for the lock, is done by machinery, some of which is extremely complicated, and was devised for its present use

A Discharge from all the Forts.—A week or so ago the authorities at Washington issued a general jail delivery order, liberating the prisoners held for political reasons, in the several forts in the harbors north of Washington. In pursuance of that order, we have to-day the pleasure of announcing the release of all the persons heretofore held in custody at Fort Warren. It is scarcely dealing in metaphor to say that no discharge from the forts in question has ever been more gladly received by both those within and those without Canal Tolls.—Albany, Nov. 28.—The amount received for canal tolls, from the opening of navigation to Nov. 23, 1862, was $5,078,480.

Efficiency of Express Companies.—Rev. D. Hunt reports that but a single box of twenty-five thousand sent from the Buffalo Aid Society to the Sanitary Commission at Washington, had been lost—and that more than compensated for the immense energy which marks its proceedings. The officers of the Boston Auxiliary Association report that every package sent from this city to Washington has been promptly received, with the exception of one case of goods which was accidentally left at Philadelphia, and after the delay of a few weeks, found its way back to No. 21 Summer street

Increase of Flour and its Price.—The amount of flour passing East, or sent through Buffalo, en route to New York, from January 1 to November 1, 1862, was, in round numbers 6,(000,000 bushels—11,000,000 more than in 1861, and 47,000,000 more than in 1860—and yet flour is nominally about two dollars a barrel more this year than either of the past two years, in consequence of the depreciated currency.

Effect of the late Rains.—The effect of the late rains may prove highly beneficial to the Union cause The following from the New York World will convince you:

"The heavy rain-storms of the past week occur at a period when they will prove of immense importance in a military point of view. The war has languished, east and west, because of the low stage of water in all the streams by which our military forces expect to penetrate the insurgent States. Neither the Tennessee nor Cumberland have been navigable; the Mississippi even was unavailable for military purposes, and vast quantities of needed army stores were at Pittsburgh and Cincinnati because of the low water of the Ohio. Our military operations east were retarded because of the low stage of water in all the Virginia streams, as long as the Potomac and Rappahannock were fordable, even to a team, until now. Their condition must be considered more than is generally understood in view of what General Burnside is about doing. And if, as has been given out, there is to be another demonstration up the York or James river, the rain will favor the movement. From these considerations it will be seen how timely have been the recent rains."

The President's Message.—A universal popular desire was gratified in this city on Monday evening last, by the publication of the President's Annual Message to Congress. It discusses the usual topics of administration, but its main interest will be found in two themes—the regulation of the finances for the war, and the subject of Emancipation

Our space will not permit giving it in full to our readers, but we condense and give the main points:

Taking it up in the order of arrangement adopted by the President, we find that our foreign relations are undisturbed except by claims growing out of our blockade of the Southern coast. Some of these claims are clear and are at once redressed; others are questionable, and for the settlement of these, mutual commissions are proposed to foreign governments, which, although kindly received, have not yet been agreed to. In all other respects our Foreign affairs are improved. The slave trade treaty with Great Britain is working well, as is also the new commercial treaty with Turkey. From this latter, and the treaties with Liberia and Hayti, improved commercial advantages are expected. A convention with Hanover has abolished the vexatious Stadt duties.

The prompt emancipation of our negroes abroad does not seem to work well. Several South American States protest against our sending them to their territories. Liberia and Hayti are, thus far, the only States to which African colonists can be sent, and to them the blacks are unwilling to go.

The project for connecting the United States with the old World by telegraph across the ocean, and by San Francisco, to connect with the Russian Overland Telegraph, has been favored by the President, but he does not give the details

Our organized territories are in a prosperous condition, and some are expected to make early application for admission as States. Their mineral resources the President thinks should be rapidly developed, and to this end he recommends that extraordinary measures be adopted in the way of explorations of their mineral resources, and the publication of the results in Europe and at home, to attract emigration and settlement

To the War and Navy Reports but brief reference is made. In Post Office affairs there is a gratifying improvement. The receipts from the loyal States in the year ending June 30th, 1862, were $8,299,820, which is within $750,000 of the total receipts from all the States in 1860-61. The expenditures for the same years were as follows:—$11,125,364 in 1861-62, against $13,606,759 in 1860-61, showing a decrease of about $2,481,000 on the last year, and of $3,776,000 as compared with 1860. The deficit has been reduced from $4,550,000 to $2,221,000. Foreign Governments have been invited, and some have agreed to meet in a Postal Convention, to simplify the rates of foreign postage, and to facilitate the transmittance of the foreign mails.

The public lands have ceased to be a source of revenue, but $37,476 having been received from that source on the quarter from July 1 to September 30, of this year. After the 1st of January, when the Homestead Act takes effect, the expenses can hardly be expected to support the Land Office and the cost of bringing the lands into market.

Our Indian affairs were lately in a bad condition A simultaneous rising seems to have been plotted from the Mississippi to the Rocky Mountains. It, however, spent its force in Minnesota, where it appears that not less than eight hundred men, women, and children were massacred. The President expresses no opinion upon the punishment of the savages who were captured in suppressing the revolt.

He briefly discusses the past and future plans of finance. The vast expenditures for the war have been met with unusual promptitude and certainty, and the National credit fully maintained. Large issues of United States notes have been unavoidable; but they have become a valued and universal currency, saving to the people immense sums in discounts and exchanges But a return to specie payments must be kept in view, and it is considered doubtful whether such a circulation, payable in coin, can be permanently maintained. The President, therefore, recommends the organization of Banking Associations, under a general Act of Congress, to which the Government is to furnish circulating notes upon a pledge of United States bonds. This, it is argued, would improve the currency, protect labor, furnish a cheap and safe exchange, and make a steady demand for the Government bonds.

The receipts into the Treasury for the fiscal year, were $583,885,247; and the disbursements for the same period were $570,844,701, leaving a balance, July 1st, 1862, of $13,040,547. Of these sums, however, $96,660,922 were expended in the redemption of the public debt, and should be deducted from both sides, which leaves the virtual receipts and expenditures for the year as follows:—

Receipts, ... $487,788,821 97
Expenditures, ... 474,783,788 10

Upon the subject of emancipation there are nearly three columns of earnest and impassioned appeal to the South. After showing that there can be no division of our territory; that geography is irrevocably opposed to it; that the outlets of the Valley of the Mississippi belong to all the people of that Valley and their successors forever; that there is no line, crooked or straight, that will do for a boundary; that even slavery would suffer by such a division; that there is no possible sovereignty that would not multiply, and not mitigate evils among us, that if there should be separation, re-union would be forced, however much of blood and treasure that process would have cost, the without slavery the Rebellion never would have existed, that without slavery it would not continue, and that the strife can be ended, with no concession by one party or the other, after showing all this, he comes down to the following proposition to amend the Constitution of the United States:

"Article —. Every State wherein slavery now exists, which shall abolish the same therein at any time or times before the 1st day of January, in the year of our Lord one thousand nine hundred, shall receive compensation from the United States as follows, to wit:—

"The President of the United States shall deliver to every such State, bonds of the United States, bearing interest at the rate of 6— for each slave shown to have been therein by the eighth census of the United States, said bonds to be delivered to such State by instalments, or in one parcel, accordingly as the same shall have been gradual, or at one time, within such State, and interest shall begin to run upon any such bonds only from the proper time of its delivery as aforesaid. Any State having received bonds as aforesaid, and afterwards re-introducing or tolerating slavery therein, shall refund to the United States the bonds received, or the value thereof, and all interest paid thereon.

"Article —. All slaves who shall have enjoyed actual freedom by the chances of the war, at any time before the end of the Rebellion, shall be forever free; but all owners of such who shall not have been disloyal, shall be compensated for them at the same rate as is provided for States adopting the abolishment of slavery, but in such a way that no slave shall be twice accounted for.

"Article —. Congress may appropriate money and otherwise provide for colonizing free colored persons, with their own consent, at any place or places without the United States."

Thus, the President thinks, as a plan of mutual concession, which will spare the evils of sudden emancipation, and be a prudent and economical measure compared with war. Before the measure could be consummated, the burden would be distributed over a period of years. This plan he recommends, as a practical way to secure the early restoration of the Union, but as additional means to that end, and the President seems to think that it would secure peace more speedily and maintain it more permanently than by force alone, and its cost would be less than the cost of war.

It closes with three words:

"Fellow citizens, we cannot escape history We, of this Congress and this Administration, will be remembered in spite of ourselves. No personal significance or importance can spare one or another of us. The fiery trial through which we pass will light us down in honor or dishonor to the latest generation.

We say, "We are for the Union." The world will not forget that we say this. We know how to save the Union. The world knows we do know how to save it. We—even we here—hold the power and bear the responsibility. In giving freedom to the slave we assure freedom to the free—honorable alike in what we give and what we preserve. We shall nobly save, or meanly lose the last best hope of earth. Other means may succeed, this could not fail. The way is plain, peaceful, generous, just—a way which if followed, the world will forever applaud and God must forever bless.

December 1st, 1862 ABRAHAM LINCOLN

The Report of the Secretary of the Navy.—The report of the Secretary of the Navy is a voluminous, but highly interesting document.

The naval operations and achievements during the past year are carefully and fully reviewed; and, while the exploits of the various vessels comprising the North and South Atlantic and the Eastern and Western Gulf Squadrons, and the Western Flotilla, are alluded to in complimentary and congratulatory terms, the service rendered by the vessels blockading the ports on the Southern coast is pronounced to have been an effective that even foreign statesmen who, a few months since, proclaimed a perfect blockade to be a "material impossibility," now acknowledge it to be conclusive and effectual.

The distribution of the naval force, the gun boat fleet, the James river flotilla, the success of the various expeditions South and West, the ravages of the "290" and other privateers, the present and past condition of the Navy, the introduction and importance of ironclads, the importance and necessity of a yard and depot for an iron-clad Navy, the advisability of establishing a naval depot on one of the rivers in the Valley of the Mississippi, the defences of our harbors, the Naval Academy, and other subjects connected with the Department, are briefly, or as extenso, referred to by the Secretary.

We are told that nearly the entire seaboard of the insurgent region—from Norfolk and the outlet of the Chesapeake, through Roanoke, Newbern and Beaufort, N. C., Port Royal, Tybee, Fernandina, Key West, Pensacola, to New Orleans and Galveston—is practically in our hands, held fast and irrevocably under the guns of our navy, or else garrisoned and governed by our military force, and but a short time can elapse before the few remaining ports which are still in the possession of the Rebels will be reduced to our occupation and authority.

In March, 1861, there were forty vessels in commission in the United States Navy, and in all but seven thousand six hundred men, two hundred and seven only of whom were on the Atlantic coast. At present, there are afloat and progressing to rapid completion four hundred and twenty seven vessels, carrying three thousand two hundred and sixty-eight guns, and of the capacity of three hundred and forty thousand and thirty-six tons. The seamen and other employees now on board the vessels, number twenty-eight thousand, while at the navy yards and stations twelve thousand mechanics and laborers are daily employed.

The Secretary of War, in his report to the President, after detailing the military operations of the past year, points to the fact that the Department of the Pacific has been free from any of the calamities occasioned by the rebellion, but an earnest and deep sympathy has been manifested by the loyal citizens of the Pacific States in support of the Union cause.

From a survey of the whole field of operations, it is apparent that whatever disasters our army may have suffered at particular points, a great advance has, nevertheless, been made since the commencement of the war,—which fact the Secretary proceeds to show.

The Union forces are now in the field under able commanders, stronger than ever, resolute and eager to be led against the enemy, and to crush the Rebellion by a vigorous winter campaign. The Armies of the Potomac and the West stand ready to vie with each other in the quickest and heaviest blows against the enemy.

Taught by experience the ruin of inaction and hazard of delay, a spirit of earnest activity seems to pervade the forces of the United States beyond what has hitherto been exhibited. In the numerous battles and engagements that have occurred, our armies in general have displayed the courage and determination that should inspire the officers and soldiers fighting in defence of their Government.

Under the calls of July and August, there are already in the field over four hundred and twenty thousand new troops, of which three hundred and ninety-nine thousand are volunteers, and three hundred and thirty-two thousand of them have volunteered for three years or during the war. It will be remembered that the call was made at one of those periods of despondency which occur in every national struggle.

An Attack on Newbern.—Newbern, Nov. 21.—On Tuesday, some four thousand rebels, under command of Brigadier General Martin, attempted to drive in our pickets and take the city. They advanced on the Trent road from Pollocksville, and succeeded in driving, after a brisk skirmish, the pickets a short distance. Some eight hundred of them were marched through the woods, seven miles, to capture two companies of the 27th Massachusetts, and one company of the 24th Massachusetts, stationed at Batchelder's Creek, on the railroad.

The rebels met with a hot reception, and were defeated in their attempts, falling back in disorder, retreating on a double quick. The rebels thought to take us unawares, but Colonel John Kurz, our efficient Provost Marshal then in command of the post, was prepared at all points.

Desertions from the rebel army are quite frequent. Fifteen deserters came in on the 16th.

Rumors from the Front.—Falmouth, Va., via Aquia Creek, Nov. 29.—From various rumors prevailing in camp, but evidently emanating from headquarters, no blow will be struck by this column until Banks, with the force now concentrated at Newport News, and on Long Island, is ready to move by Suffolk and Petersburg, upon the south side of Richmond.

It is known here that the Massachusetts regiments recently landed at Newbern and Hatteras Inlet, will garrison Southern North Carolina, whilst Gen. Foster's veterans will advance by the way of Weldon to join Banks at Suffolk.

Banks' force, when he effects a junction with Foster, will be fully seventy-five thousand. The rebels, it is believed, intend to attack Burnside before Banks is ready to move, and thus, if possible, overwhelm both columns in detail.

Southern News.—Cairo, Nov. 27.—The Galveston News, of the 7th instant, says that Sam Houston made a secession speech in Brenham lately.

Advices from Holly Springs, Miss., to Saturday report that nearly the entire population has emigrated. All the stores and most of the private residences were closed. A small Confederate force was there, but not quartered permanently.

The U. S. troops occupy Hudsonville, seven miles north of Holly Springs.

The Georgia Legislature passed a law recently for obstructing all the navigable streams in the State, and appropriating half a million for that purpose.

The First General Convention of the Episcopal Church, of the Confederate States, met at Augusta on the 19th inst.

Execution of the Murderer of an American Missionary in Turkey.—Washington, Nov. 28.—Commodore Dutton, of the ship Constellation, in a letter to the Navy Department, dated Smyrna, the 5th inst., says he had just received advices from our Consul at Beirut, Syria, that the Sultan's firman for the execution of the murderer of Mr. Goung, the American Missionary, reached Adana, at which the Constellation was still at anchor near that place, and the criminal was immediately beheaded in the presence of a vast concourse of people and without any popular outbreak, as had been anticipated

The War in Kentucky.—Louisville, Nov. 27.—An order which has been just issued by Gen. Boyle, gives much satisfaction to the conservative men in this section, and is complimented by the press. It is in substance as follows

"Headquarters of the District of Western Kentucky."

Louisville, Nov. 27.

"All commanding officers serving in this district, are ordered not to permit negroes to enter their camps, and all officers and privates are forbidden to interfere or intermeddle with slaves in any way."

Stirring News from Burnside's Army.—Fredericksburg to be Attacked.—Washington, December 2.—Stirring news from General Burnside's head-quarters came in last night, indicating that he is on the point of making an attack upon Fredericksburg. Heavy siege guns were down on Saturday night, and it is evident that whatever the obstructions may have been in the way of an advance, General Burnside will make the attempt speedily to go forward.

He has had difficulty with the war department without a doubt, and especially with General Meigs, and it was reported last night that Meigs had been removed, with what truth it is impossible to ascertain to-day. All things are now arranged, and the understanding is perfect between General Burnside and General Halleck.

There is but one drawback, and it is a considerable one—the bad roads. They are in a terrible condition, and there is a prospect to-day that we are to have continued wet weather. If so, an advance is next to impossible.

Our reports from scouts, spies and deserters are all concurring that it is difficult to say whether the Rebels are withdrawing to Richmond, or only to their second tier of batteries.

Personal.

Mr. Holt's Position.—The Washington National Republican has the following explanation of the change of opinion which the changes in circumstances have wrought in Mr Holt's mind.

"As a Kentuckian, Mr. Holt naturally desired to see the Union without injury to slavery, and he has not yielded the hope of doing so, until events have demonstrated that it cannot be realized. One year ago he resisted the proclamation of General Fremont, offering liberty to the slaves of rebels To-day, he sustains the proclamation of the President, declaring all slaves to be free, in such States as shall remain insurrectionary after the first of January. The change which the progress of time has wrought in his mind is going on constantly among the genuine friends of the Union in the Border States. It has just manifested itself most signally in the election in Missouri. A few more courageous utterances, like this of Mr. Holt, will finish the good work."

Dr. Candlish.—On the 28th, at a breakfast in the Hopetoun Rooms, Queen Street, Edinburgh, Dr. Candlish was presented with a testimonial, consisting of a deed of trust, for behoof of himself and family, vesting the sum of £5000; a bank receipt for the sum of £520; and a piece of plate of the value of £120. The testimonial has been presented to the Reverend gentleman by his friends, "as a tribute of their esteem for his worth, of their admiration of his talents, and of their gratitude to God for the pre-eminent services which he has rendered to the interests of Christ's Crown and kingdom, both in his defence of the principles, and his conduct of the affairs of the Free Church of Scotland." Lord Dalhousie presided at the presentation.

William H Allen, LL.D., has resigned the presidency of Girard College, which he has held for the past thirteen years.

Foreign Summary.

Prussia seems likely at no distant day to be in the throes of a revolution. King William, notwithstanding the excitement in his capital, appears to be incapable of appreciating the storm he has provoked,—so true is it, according to the old axiom, that those whom the gods destroy they first make mad. In Berlin, the people are highly incensed, and the unconstitutional conduct of the Sovereign is discussed with great fury under the windows of the royal palace. Meetings of the electors have been held, but, hitherto, they have kept themselves within the limits of the law. One of their first acts was to propose a vote of thanks to the House of Commons for the patriotic spirit with which the representatives—to use the correct circumlocution of the Crown—a bad sign for the King, and showing an imminent determination to confront him. This address, we learn, has been signed in every part of the city, and the presumption is, that the provinces will sympathize with the spirited movement in the capital. The next session will bring matters to a crisis.

A Consultation has taken place respecting Garibaldi's wound, at which no less than seventeen physicians were present. The wound was probed to find the bullet, but without success. It is still believed to be in the ankle. The general state of Garibaldi's health is good, but a complete recovery cannot be expected for some time.—There are rumors of a change of Ministry at Rome, and it is said that Antonelli is to be succeeded by a Cardinal of liberal sympathies, who has long enjoyed the favor of the Pope. This statement, which rests on the authority of the Roman correspondent of a French paper, requires confirmation.

The Revolution in Greece has disappointed no one who has paid attention to what has long been passing there. In fact the exiled King Otho did all that he possibly could to disgust the Greeks, and he succeeded. He appears to be a weak man, unfit from the first to meet the wishes of the people, and his wife was the actual ruler. His Bavarian partialities was the first cause of offence, and he made the Germans thoroughly detested in the little kingdom. All chance of his restoration is at an end, and the dynasty of Otho, so far as the Greek people are concerned, is gone for ever. Nemesis pursues him fate, because he was the sole cause of the ruin which he has brought on himself. Even the officers and the men employed about his person did all that they could to further the revolution. He has not left behind him, it is said, a solitary partizan. A ruler who could produce this result was evidently unable to govern himself, much less govern others. He has arrived at Venice, and the leading European Powers will now have to find a successor to the vacant throne.

The Gazette of last night, it will be seen, contains some important news from China, showing a new complication there between the authorities, which the Hon. Mr. Bruce has forwarded to Earl Russell. Mr. Bruce is fond of high-handed measures, and we never see or hear the mention of his name without dreading another conflict with the celestials. In the instance, some tea appears to have been stopped for increased transit duty, and a gunboat was dispatched under the command of a lieutenant, by order of Mr Bruce, which seized all the mandarin and Chinese junks, and this caused the release of the tea so seized. A mode of proceeding like this is not calculated to make our relations with the Chinese government either friendly or permanent.

Abolition of Slavery in the Dutch West Indies.—The law for the abolition of slavery in the Dutch West Indies (already announced) passed the States General of Holland by a majority of 45 to 7. The following are the regulations adopted respecting the slave abolition at Surinam:

1. The abolition of slavery on the first of July, 1863
2. The owners to receive a compensation of 300 guilders (one hundred and twenty dollars) for each slave.
3. The supervision of the State not to continue for more than ten years at the outside.
4. The Government encourages immigration, and offers for that purpose, for a period of five years, premiums not to exceed a million of guilders (four hundred thousand dollars.)
5. Fixed labor to be obligatory on all the emancipated.

ADVERTISEMENTS.

TO THE FRIENDS OF OUR PATRIOT DEAD.

Repeated applications having been made to the subscriber to establish a branch of his business in the vicinity of the late battle fields, with a view of reducing the cost of bringing home the bodies of the dead, he respectfully announces that he has now established a branch at Bonnaroon, Md., and is prepared to attend to the business at greatly reduced rates. Orders from a distance promptly attended to.

The Burial Casket

furnished by me is equal to any other in use with regard to security, economy, and entire absence of any of the unpleasant circumstance which generally surround similar articles. Wherever used it has given entire satisfaction, and the subscriber challenges comparison with any Casket now before the public

Much complaint has been made of the extortious practised by unprincipled men engaged in this business, which the subscriber will honestly avoid.

JOHN GOOD, Undertaker.
No. 921 Spruce Street, Philadelphia.

MRS MARTHA COLLINS.
730 Russell Street, above Fitzwater,

Begs leave to inform her friends and the public generally, that she has opened an INFANT SCHOOL, for Boys and Girls, to whom she will pay special attention to Teaching the primary departments of Reading, Writing and Arithmetic, also Singing, upon the most reasonable and accommodating terms. She does not hesitate to say that she will be able to please all who may give her a trial.

MRS S SHORTER HAWKINS'
DRY GOODS, HOSIERRY, AND TRIMMING STORE.
No 618 Lombard Street, Philadelphia

Mrs H calls the attention of her friends and patrons to a new stock of Fall and Winter Goods, consisting of Delaines, Calicoes, Flannels, Muslins, Drills, Shawls, Bareges, and Hoop Skirts

N B. Regalia and Dress Trimmings still on hand All will be sold as near the old prices as possible. Call and see

WM H LONGFELLOW.
SURGEON DENTIST.
No. 1126 Rodman Street.
Between 11th and 12th, and Lombard and South Sts.,
PHILADELPHIA

Every department of Dentistry attended to.
Persons waited on at their residence, if desired
Nov. 17.

Advertisements.

THE DAUGHTERS OF HOPE GRAND UNION Temperance Society met, it being the thirteenth convention, April 10th, 1861. Representatives from Lodges are as follows:—

From Gerrit Union No 4, D. of T.; from Phœnix Union, No. 8, D. of T.; from Northern Union, No 16, D. of T.; Webb's Union, of Chambersburgh, Pa.; from Dr Bias' Union, of Carlisle, Pa.; from Mount Olive Union, No. 18, D. of T.; from Vanbrackle Union, No. 15, D. of T., of Norristown, Pa

Officers installed to their several positions are as follows:—

Grand P., Sister Bennet; Grand Associate, Sister Barrett; Grand Treasurer, Sister Fawcett; Grand Conductress, C. Thompson; Grand Sentinel, A. E. Dukhart; Grand Chaplain Sister Hall

G P P, Sister E. Roberts, G P P Sister Anderson,
" " E. Bowles, " " J. J. Bland,
" " M. H. Dennis, " " E. A. Cease,
" " S. Newman, " " White,
" " S. Davis, " " S. Hall.

THE DAUGHTERS OF CORNISH SOCIETY.

The States Quarterly Meetings of this Society are held on the first Wednesdays of February, May, August, and November.

The meeting of the Board are held on the Wednesday previous to the regular stated meetings of the society.

Mrs. Sarah Carter, President.
Mr. L. R. Seymour, Sec'y.

THE BOOK DEPOSITORY
OF THE
AFRICAN M. E. CHURCH,
No. 619 Pine Street,
PHILADELPHIA.

We keep on hand, in connexion with our other books Sabbath school books of various kinds; Question Books, Catechisms, Nos. 1, 2, and 3. We have a good assortment of such books as are generally used in the Public Schools Also, Stationery, Inks, Pens, Paper, Envelopes and Blank Books.

THE DEATH-BED OF THE REV. JOHN WESLEY.

Wanted Canvassing Agents for this splendid large engraving, each should be in every house of all denomes of that great and good man The most liberal inducements offered to those selling this print Send for Catalogue and instructions

WM SMITH Publisher,
103 South Third Street, Philadelphia.

WANTED,—The charge of a Public School Reference as to ability can be given. Apply to
J. W. A., 1011 Belmont St.

ONE-PRICE CLOTHING.
OF THE LATEST STYLES,

Made in the Best Manner, expressly for RETAIL SALES. Lowest Selling Prices marked in Plain Figures. All Goods made to order warranted satisfactory That One-Price System is strictly adhered to. All are thereby treated alike.
JONES & CO.,
Dec20-1y 604 Market Street

GOOD NEWS

To Tailors, Dress makers, and to those wishing to be such. Also, to owners of sewing machines, store-keepers, and large families,—for in one day by printed directions which each Instrument has, you can cut out 24 perfectly Ladies Dresses, Vests and Men's Pants. Vests, Jackets, Sack and Over-coats

Local and Travelling Agents Wanted.

Address REV WM BRADLEY,
Carversville, Bucks Co., Pa

Or, apply to Mrs Mary C. Weaver, (office of the Police of this paper) 619 Pine St., Philada., Pa. Jan1-1y

JAMES DOWNS,
DEALER IN
NEW AND SECOND HAND
CLOTHING,
No 225 South Second Street.
No 17—3mo. PHILADELPHIA

WILLIAM STILL'S
STOVE STORE,
107 NORTH FIFTH STREET, PHILADELPHIA

The subscriber would respectfully inform his friends and all in want of good stoves, that he has now on hand a general variety of excellent PARLOR, COOK and CHAMBER STOVES, including Gas burning, as well as other patterns, which he is selling at very low rates. He buys entirely for cash, of the best wholesale foundries, and of course can sell much cheaper than those buying on the usual credit system. At any rate his friends are invited to give him a call and examine for themselves before purchasing elsewhere, as he feels that they would be convinced that it would be to their interest to give him their patronage. Coal orders constantly on hand. WM STILL.

JOSEPH H. COLE,
CONTINENTAL RESTAURANT,
NO. 717 LOMBARD STREET, PHILA,
(Above Seventh St., under Philadelphia Institute.)

Where he continues to keep always on hand the very best assortment of OYSTERS and other refreshments—hoping that all his friends and the public in general will favor him with their patronage

☞ Meals served at all hours. Families supplied with Oysters of the best quality and flavor at the shortest notice.

☞ Also, public and private waiting done on the most reasonable terms. 1y

"UNION COTTAGE,"
ATLANTIC CITY, NEAR THE INLET.

The subscriber will always be happy to welcome her numerous friends, and the public in general.

TERMS.

Board per week, ... $6 00
" " day, ... 1 25
Single meals, ... 50

S. H. WALLS, Proprietress

BOARDING
IN BROOKLYN

MRS. E. PLANT (formerly Richardson) respectfully announces that she has opened a first-class BOARDING & LODGING HOUSE at No 97 HIGH STREET, Brooklyn, where she is prepared to accommodate the public on the most reasonable terms.

Her house being located in a very pleasant part of the city, and within five minutes' walk of Fulton Ferry, is made thus a very desirable and convenient place.

BOARDING

Mrs. AMIA WILLIAM, of Cape May, will open the Banker House for the season, for the accommodation of all who wish to spend the season there, and she will spare no pains to make all comfortable. Those wishing to spend one, two, or three days, will find the Banker House the right spot. Prices very reasonable. 1sep4

COAL, STOVES, &c., &c.

The subscriber respectfully informs his friends and the public generally, that he has taken the store,

NO. 107 NORTH FIFTH STREET,

formerly occupied as the Anti-Slavery Office, (where he has been engaged for the last fourteen years,) to occupy it henceforth as a place of business for the sale of

COAL, STOVES, &C.

Having made arrangements with one of the first Coal Dealers in the city, to furnish the best qualities of Lehigh, Schuylkill, &c., at the lowest Cash prices, he hopes to give full satisfaction in this branch of his business

He will also keep constantly on hand a general assortment of good NEW and SECOND-HAND STOVES, FURNACES, &c

Persons wishing Stoves taken down, stored away, put up, or cleaned, can be promptly accommodated by applying as above.

He hopes by energy and strict attention to business to obtain a fair share of patronage.

WM. STILL,
107 North Fifth Street, Philadelphia

REFERENCES.

J M M'Kim, Dr Caspar Wister,
Samuel Emlen, James Mott,
Dillwyn Parrish, Thomas Williamson,
Prof C D Cleveland W H Furness

WANTED,

One or two respectable colored men in a quiet and respectable family to lodge, where they can secure all the comforts of a home, with a furnished room.

INQUIRE,
No 424 South 7th St., Phila.

A few respectable men can be accommodated with board or lodging, on reasonable terms, at 1622 Lombard Street
N B.—Also rooms to let. 1mo.

REV. LEWIS S. LEWIS'
FAMILY LINIMENT
IS PREPARED WITH GREAT CARE,
EXPRESSLY FOR FAMILY USE.

Its composition is very simple, containing nothing that is injurious in any form, and there is no danger in its use from exposure to the weather. No family should be without it. Having a wish to benefit mankind in general, and those afflicted in particular—and having had recourse to the article in several cases of rheumatism, bunions, chilblains, and other lameness, it proving to be a remedy in every case—I therefore recommend it to the public.

CERTIFICATES

Providence, R. I., Nov 27, 1861

Rev L. S. Lewis—Dear Sir: I have been afflicted with the rheumatism eleven years, during which time I tried almost everything, but received no sure relief For the last four months my limbs and joints were so swollen that at times I could not walk or use my fingers I procured a bottle of your Liniment, and at the first application was instantly relieved After using one or two bottles, I was enabled to enjoy the free use of my limbs. Rev. GEORGE A. RUE.

Newport, R I, October 29, 1861.

Rev L S Lewis—Dear Sir: I have been affected for a number of years, more or less, with a pain and weakness in my chest, arising from some cause unknown to me. I made two applications of your Liniment, and was relieved. I was attacked with the diphtheria, and was cured by using your Liniment its worth has proved itself ten times its cost. ANTHONY RANDOLPH.

Newport, R I., Nov. 19, 1861.

Rev. L S Lewis—Dear Sir: I have been cured of stiffening in my joints by using your Liniment. I recommend it to all who are thus troubled RICHARD WHITE.

Newport, R. I., Nov. 17, 1861.

Rev. Mr. Lewis—Your Liniment is, truly, all that it is recommended to be. I have tried it, and it has successfully cured my bunions. SOPHIA TAYLOR.

Newport, R. I., Oct. 7, 1861.

Mr. Lewis—Dear Sir: I have had a pain and stiffness in my neck and back for some time. I procured a bottle of your Liniment, and applied it twice, which effected a cure. I recommend it to the public Mrs EVELINA DEMOND.

Providence, Dec 10, 1861

Rev. L. S Lewis—Dear Sir: For upwards of three years I have been very lame at times, arising from a sprain. I have tried a great many things, without any definite results. I procured a bottle of your Liniment, and was effectually relieved. Mrs. PHEBE A. MORSE.

Newport, R. I., Oct. 10, 1861.

Rev Mr. Lewis—I have been afflicted with the rheumatism for some time. I used your Liniment, which has removed it successfully. It has also cured my swollen joints. Mrs. ELIZABETH THOROUGHGOOD.

Newport, R. I., Nov. 20, 1861,

Rev. Mr. Lewis—My boy was troubled with the chilblain I applied your Liniment a few times, and it cured him. Mrs. ADELINE JONES.

Stearns Ferry, Sept. 3, 1861.

Rev. Mr Lewis—I have used your Liniment for rheumatic pains of long standing—also, lameness in the feet, &c. It is a perfect remedy where other things have failed Miss SUSAN GARDINER.

Providence, Rhode Island, Aug. 19

SYRIAN SKETCHES.

The Syrians are more nearly allied in color and in their general features to Europeans than to Africans, notwithstanding the general impression that exists in the minds of some to the contrary. Whatever we may say of their character we cannot say that their skin is black. In fact, those inhabiting the cities are of a very fair complexion. The mountaineers and the sons of the Desert are however of a more tawny hue. This we would naturally anticipate from their constant exposure to the scorching rays of the sun.

The men generally shave their heads as bare as your hand. Their reasons for so doing I need not mention. As a substitute for nature's covering, they wear the tarbush. This is a kind of small red skull cap which is seldom if ever removed from the head night or day, in the house or in the street, excepting while the operation of shaving is being performed, in short while it is decidedly polite to enter a drawing room with bare feet, it would be a gross insult to uncover the head on doing so, particularly in the presence of a superior. Europeans in the East are not required however to conform to this custom, indeed they rather consider it a mark of respect for them to uncover their heads on entering a room.

It is customary for the young men to shave their faces as well as their heads, with the exception of the upper lip, nor is it surprising that the down on this part of the youthful face is allowed to remain untouched, for without this appendage so indicative of masculine prowess—so some folks nearer home seem to think—the manly youths would be considered a band of women, an indignity that their proud spirits could not brook for a single moment, even though the fair sex were more highly esteemed among them than they are.

There have been women in Syria for many long years; and lest some of my fair friends should feel piqued if their sex is passed by in silence, allow me to say a word or two about them. Like women in many other parts of the world, some of them are old, some are not old, some of them are pretty and some are not pretty, some of them can scold, and I would fain say that some cannot scold, could I do so without endangering my veracity. But unlike the women in some other parts of the world, they can scarcely be said to have any social position. The wife is the slave and not the companion of the husband; his word is law, and his will must be her pleasure. If he laughs, she is expected to laugh too; if he is in trouble, she must at least feign to be in trouble also. But if he takes upon himself to chastise her she must be mute, though I can't say that this is always the case. The wife must not sit down in the presence of her husband until permission is granted by him. Every woman is expected to know how to fill a pipe and clean her husband's shoes before she becomes a bride. The former, particularly, is an indispensable accomplishment. They know nothing of what we call social or domestic enjoyment. The husband seldom speaks to his wife excepting in the imperative mood, and if seen walking the street with her the finger of scorn is immediately pointed at him. If he should meet his wife on the street, he will not recognise her. If they happen to be walking in the same direction, she must keep fifty or a hundred yards behind him.

That some husbands have an affection for their wives no cannot doubt. But should even one of this affectionate class be absent from his home and accidentally meet an acquaintance, he makes many inquiries about the concerns of his house; as to the condition of his children, servants, cattle, sheep, mules, asses, &c., yet one never once mentions the name of his wife. All that the custom of the country allows, under such circumstances, to the most devoted husband, is to say, Rief hal baite? How is my house or household? which of course includes his wife. If he writes a letter to his wife, he directs it to his eldest son, though an infant. If, however, he is so unfortunate as to have no son, he directs his communication to an imaginary one whose name the father bears; the full import of which the wife understands, and feels at liberty to break the seal. He would feel degraded to direct a letter even to a woman that he loved.

Once when paying a friendly visit to a Druse Sheik on Lebanon, I asked him in the course of our conversation how many children he had? His reply was, "Three." But, said I, are not all those children in the room, yours? There are more than three here. "Yes," said he, "they are all my children," but, he continued, pointing to two in one corner, "These are girls, they don't count."

Notwithstanding the contempt in which females are held in the East, a man without a wife after he has seen 18 or 20 summers is scarcely considered worthy of being called a man. He need not look for the sympathy or even the respect due from his friends, and he can never take a high position in society until he has conformed to this fundamental law. This, however, does not apply with equal force to foreigners living among them, for they are aware that in more civilized countries, a jolly old bachelor occupies rather an enviable position.

Though the poor girls have little to gain by the change, yet, actuated by a spirit of pure benevolence, they are willing to make any reasonable sacrifice to elevate the lords of creation to their proper position. The eagerness which they manifest to enter the married state—purely an Oriental characteristic of course—when we consider their motives, is truly refreshing. The anxiety of each to become an arusse being equalled only by her desire in due time to present her beloved spouse with a son. Marriage contracts are generally negotiated by the parents, and it is often the case that the parties most interested in the affair have never seen each other, and they seldom have any knowledge of what is going on till the whole matter is settled. Though it may seem rather incongruous, the bridegroom is required to pay a dowry to the father of the bride, which of course varies according to the circumstances of the parties, but is sometimes as high as £500, the whole of which must be paid before the marriage ceremony is performed.

Espousals often take place at what may be considered as a very tender age. I was once present at a ceremony of this kind in Damascus where the bridegroom had reached the mature age of nine years and the bride seven. I only know one lady, however, that was married under ten years of age.

If the first-born be a son, it brings joy and gladness to the house. The father is no longer called by his own name. He immediately receives the name of Abu Ibnihu. For example, If the son is named Gurges, the fond parent is called Abu Gurges, that is, the father of George.

But should the unfortunate wife be like Rachel or Hannah, or should she present her lord with a fine little daughter, the neighbors flock in to condole with the ill-treated husband, and out of commiseration for his forlorn condition, they give him the name of some imaginary son, by which he is ever afterwards known.

It is not uncommon, however, for a man to receive his name from some peculiar or prominent object about him; for example, a man with a long beard is called Abu Duckan; a man with a peculiar kind of coat, Abu Cabbie, and so on. Now as the tarbush, which is universally worn in the east, is a small red cap fitting closely to the head, the most noticeable object about an Englishman is his black hat, which unfortunately very much resembles one of their principal cooking utensils, so that I have frequently been scandalized by hearing my countrymen called Abu Tangora, that is, the father of a big Pot, which, however, considering an Englishman's love for a good dinner was not so very far astray, after all

Yours, EL HAKEEM.

Perdiccas asked Alexander what he reserved for himself before setting out on his eastward march—having given away, with lavish prodigality, estates and dominions. His only reply was—Hope—the secret of his sublime career.

FLYING FOXES OF CEYLON.

The singular inhabitants of Ceylon trees—the flying foxes—hang from them like fruit. The flight of these creatures is directed by means of a membrane attached to the inner side of each of the hind legs, and kept distended at the lower extremity by a projecting bone, just as a fore and aft sail is distended by a "gaff." Over the entire surface of the thin membrane of which they are formed, sentient nerves of the utmost delicacy are distributed, by means of which the animal is enabled during the darkness to direct his motions with security, avoiding objects against contact with which, at such time, its eyes, and other senses would be insufficient to protect it." By day they suspend themselves from the highest branches of the silk-cotton trees, hanging by the claws of the hind legs, with the head turned upward, and pressing the chin against the breast. At sunset, taking wing, they hover, with a murmuring sound, occasioned by the beating of their broad, membranous wings, around the fruit-trees, on which they feed till morning, when they resume their pensile attitude as before. They hang in such prodigious numbers, that the branches often give way beneath their accumulated weight. They fly in clouds as thick as bees or midges. "When at rest or asleep, the disposition of the limbs of the flying fox is most curious. At such times it suspends itself by one foot only, bringing the other close to his side, and thus it is enabled to wrap itself in the ample folds of its wings, which envelop it like a mantle, leaving only its upturned head uncovered. Its fur is thus protected from damp and rain, and to some extent its body is sheltered from the sun. As it collects its food by means of its mouth, either when on the wing, or when suspended within reach of it, the flying fox is always more or less liable to have the spoil wrested from it by its intrusive companions, before it can make good its way to some secure retreat in which to devour it unmolested. In such conflicts they bite viciously, tear each other with their hooks, and scream incessantly, till, taking to flight, the persecuted one reaches some place of safety, where he hangs by one foot, and grasping the fruit he has secured in the claws and opposite thumb of the other, he hastily reduces it to lumps, with which he stuffs his cheek-pouches till they become distended like those of a monkey, then, suspended in safety, he commences to chew and suck the juices, rejecting the refuse with his tongue."

THE FAITHFUL WIFE.

In 1793, M. de Talleyrand was in Boston. One day, whilst crossing the market place, he was compelled to stop by a long row of wagons, all loaded with vegetables. The wily courtier, generally as dead to emotion, could not but look with a kind of pleasure at these wagons, and the little waggoners, who, by-the-by, were young and pretty countrywomen. Suddenly the vehicles came to a stand, and the eyes of M de Talleyrand chanced to rest upon one of the young women who appeared more lovely and graceful than the others. An exclamation escaped from his lips. It at once attracted the attention of the fair one, whose country dress and large hat bespoke daily visits to the market. As she beheld the astonished Talleyrand, whom she recognised immediately, she burst out laughing.

"What! is it you?" exclaimed she.

"Yes, indeed, it is I. But you, what are you doing here?"

"I," said the young woman; "I am waiting for my turn to pass on. I am going to sell my greens and vegetables at the market."

At that moment the wagons began to move along; she of the straw hat applied the whip to the horse, told M. de Talleyrand the name of the village where she was living, requesting him earnestly to come and see her, disappeared and left him as if riveted to the spot by this strange apparition.

Who was this young market-woman? Madame la Comtesse de la Tour-du-pin (Mademoiselle de Dillon,) the most elegant among the ladies of the court of Louis the Sixteenth, King of France, and whose moral and intellectual worth had shone with so dazzling a lustre in the society of her numerous friends and admirers. At the time when the French nobility emigrated, she was young, lovely, endowed with the most remarkable talents, and, like all the ladies who held a rank at the court, had only had time to attend to such duties as belonged to her highly fashionable courtly life.

Let any one fancy the sufferings and agony of that woman, born in the lap of wealth, and who had breathed nothing but perfumes under the gilded ceilings of the royal palace at Versailles, when all at once she found herself surrounded with blood and massacres, and saw every kind of danger besetting her young and beloved husband and her infant child.

They succeeded in flying from France. It was their good fortune to escape from the bloody land where Robespierre and his associates were busy at the work of death. Alas! in those times of terror the poor children themselves abandoned with joy the parental roof, for no hiding-place was secure against the vigilant eye of those monsters who thirsted for innocent blood.

The fugitives landed in America, and first went to Boston, where they found a retreat. But what a change for the young, pretty, and fashionable lady, spoiled from her infancy by loud and continual praises of her beauty and talents!

Mons de la Tour-du-Pin was extravagantly fond of his wife. At the court of France he had seen her, with the proud eye of a husband, the object of general admiration. Indeed, her conduct had always been virtuous and exemplary. But now in a foreign land, and among unsophisticated republicans (1793,) what was the use of courtly refinement?

Happy as he was in seeing her escape from all the perils he had dreaded on her own account, still he could not but deplore the future lot of the wife of his bosom. However, with the prudent foresight of a good father and a kind husband, he secured himself against despair, and exerted himself to render their condition less miserable than that of many emigrants who were starving when the little money they had brought over with them had been exhausted. Not a word of English did he know; but his wife spoke it fluently, and admirably well.

They boarded at Mrs. Muller's, a good-natured, notable woman, who on every occasion evinced the greatest respect and admiration for her fair boarder; yet M. de la Tour-du-Pin was in constant dread lest the conversation of that good, plain, and well-meaning woman might be the cause of great ennui to his lady. What a contrast to the society of such gentlemen as M. de Narbonne, M. de Talleyrand, and the high-minded and polished nobility of France! Whenever he was thinking of this transition (particularly when absent from his wife, and ruling the garden of the cottage which they were going to inhabit,) he felt such pangs and heart-throbbings as to make him apprehensive on his return to Mrs. Muller to meet the looks of his beloved wife, whom he expected to see bathed in tears. Meanwhile the good hostess would give him a hearty shake of the hand and repeat to him, "Happy husband! Happy husband!"

At last came the day when the fugitive family left the boarding-house of Mrs. Muller to go and inhabit their little cottage, when they were to be at last exempt from want, with an only servant, a negro, a kind of Jack-o'-all-trades—viz., gardener, footman, and cook. The last function M de la Tour-du-Pin dreaded most of all to see him undertake.

It was almost dinner-time. The poor emigrant went into his little garden to gather some fruit, and carried as long as possible the intelligence home, his wife was absent; looking for her, he entered the kitchen, and saw a young country-woman, who, with her back to the door, was kneading dough; her arms of snowy whiteness were bare to the elbows. M de la Tour-du-Pin started; the young woman turned round. It was his beloved wife, who had exchanged her muslin and silk for a country dress, not as for a fancy ball, but to play the part of a real farmer's wife. At the sight of her husband, her cheeks crimsoned, and she joined her hands, in a supplicating manner. "Oh! my love," she said, "do not laugh at me. I am no expert as Mrs. Muller."

Too full of emotion to speak, he clasps her to his bosom, and kisses her fervently. From his inquiries, he learns that when he thought her given up to despair, she had employed her time in re-useful y for their future happiness. She had taken lessons from Mrs Muller and the servants, and, after six months, had become sharing in the culinary art, a thorough housekeeper, discovering her angelic nature and admirable fortitude.

"Dearest," continued she, "if you knew how easy it is! We in a moment understand what would cost a country-woman sometimes one or two years. Now we shall be happy—you will no longer be afraid of ennui for me, nor I of doubts about my abilities, of which I will give you many proofs," said she, looking with a bewitching smile at him. "Come, come, you promised us a salad, and I am going to bake for to morrow; the oven is hot. To-day the bread of the town will do—but oh!—henceforth leave it to me."

From that moment, Madame de la Tour-du-Pin kept her word; she insisted on going herself to Boston to sell her vegetables and cream-cheese. It was on such an errand to town that M de Talleyrand met her. The day after he went to pay her a visit, and found her in the poultry-yard, surrounded by a host of fowls, hungry chicks and pigeons.

She was all that she had promised to be. Besides, her health had been so much benefited, that she seemed less fatigued by the hous work, than if she had attended the balls of the winter. Her beauty, which had been remarkable in the gorgeous palace of Versailles, was dazzling in her cottage in the New World. M. de Talleyrand said so to her.

"Indeed!" replied she with naiveté, "indeed, do you think so? I am delighted to hear it. A woman is always and everywhere proud of her personal attraction."

At that moment the black servant bolted into the drawing-room, holding in his hands his jacket with a long rent in the back. "Missus, him jacket torn; please mend him." She immediately took a needle, repaired Gulliah's jacket, and continued the conversation with a charming simplicity.

This little adventure left a deep impression on the mind of M. de Talleyrand, who used to relate it with that tone of voice peculiar to his narrations.

A SLAVE'S LEGACY TO HISTORY.

Some years ago an aged African, who had been liberated from slavery in the Southern states, spent a year in New York, and had frequent interviews with a gentleman to whom he communicated a long account of his life, with a request that he would publish it.

He was from a country about three hundred miles east of Sierra Leone, had been educated for a Mohammedan teacher, and had been an instructor of youth many years before his captivity, which occurred when he was about forty.

During the subsequent thirty years, or thereabouts, when he was a slave in South Caroline, Alabama, and elsewhere, he bore a high character for integrity, as well as intelligence, and while awaiting in New York an opportunity to return to Africa, he gained the entire confidence of those who became acquainted with him. He expressed a strong desire that good men in America should become acquainted with his countrymen, of whom, he said, the greatest ignorance prevailed among us. When encouraged, therefore, to expect that his communications would some time be published, he devoted much time and labor to the task of communicating his recollections orally, writing occasionally in Arabic, (which he still was able to do,) recalling events and circumstances, and answering questions, with great care and patience. The notes which were written during each interview have been preserved, and, after much study of authorities, compiled into a volume. The writer has hitherto never found it convenient to publish them, but they contain many things which would be interesting and useful at the present time

Footah, the native country of the aged African, is one inhabited by a powerful Mohammedan nation, who have been for ages in a state of society corresponding with the principles of the Koran, and are far above the savage and barbarous condition which many people ignorantly imagine to be universal in Africa. Peculiar causes have thus far prevented foreigners from visiting that country, except in its northern extremity, where Park, Caillee, the Landers, and several other travellers have crossed it, on their way to the Niger and Timbuktu.

CULTIVATION OF CRANBERRIES ON UPLAND.

In answer to a letter of inquiry, relative to the upland cultivation of cranberries, Mr. J. C. Young of Lakeland, Long Island, writes as follows: —

The first attempt at the upland cultivation of the cranberry was made in the spring of 1854 by setting out some 12 or 5 feet square, with the cranberry; these vines produced in the fall of that year about one pint of very dark colored fruit. The vines then set out, without the least further attention to their cultivation, have continued to bear fruit each year, and are now in a perfectly healthy condition

In 1856 I planted out 14,400 square feet of land, walks included, less than the third of an acre, from which I gathered to the fall of 1859, twenty-five bushels of cranberries. In 1860 I gathered from the above piece forty-two bushels, an increase of some 78 per cent. on the crop of 1859.

I now have two-thirds of an acre in my garden appropriated to the growth of the cranberry. My success has induced many persons in this vicinity and elsewhere, to commence the cultivation of the fruit.

For successful cultivation, the land should be thoroughly broken up, all foul stuff removed, carefully raked, and brought as near level as can be; then laid out in lines 30, 36 or 48 inches apart—distance to be regulated by the system which may be afterwards adopted in the cultivation. Open the earth with a spade about six inches wide, and insert single plants at twelve inches distance from each other, drawing back the earth to the roots, carefully packing with the hand. The ground should be kept free from weeds. The vines have a great tendency to cover the space between the drills; but as most lands, unless frequently broken up, become foul, continued cultivation becomes necessary; cultivation, also, evidently adds largely to the high quality of the fruit. When cultivating, lift the runners covering the ground, and place them beside the drills, where they will gradually throw out rootlets and become part of the drill. My vines were set in drills at thirty inches apart. I use no manure, and have never irrigated.

The vines do best by being set out after the vernal season has fairly commenced. With spring or early summer warmth the vines grow vigorously, throwing out long runners the first season; the runners produce uprights the second season; each year the included fruit is produced, gradually increasing to the fourth year, including the planting season, when an abundant return may be anticipated.

My observations extend over several years, from 1851 to the present time. I have yet to witness any injury to the cranberry vine from drought; my vines are 51 feet above any water, have to depend for moisture upon the rains from heaven-ward and the dews of Long Island, from one or the other of which they have thus far been copiously supplied. They were taken from swamps and marshes, and put upon soil apparently unnatural to them, yet they thrive. I believe the lands of Long Island, (a spur of land projected 120 miles into the ocean,) to be peculiarly adapted to the cultivation of this fruit. Neither must I let the occasion pass without recording my thorough conviction that the soil in the middle of the Island, for a great extent to length, is equally well adapted to the growth of olives, the cereals, garden vegetables, and fruit. Skill, care and energy are all that is wanted.

Ploughman

Parents—all of you—rich and poor, do teach your children politeness. It is too much neglected.

NEWBURGH, AND WASHINGTON'S HEAD QUARTERS

BY BENSON J. LOSSING

Sixteen miles below Poughkeepsie, on the same side of the Hudson, is the small village of Fishkill Landing having for a back-ground, in a view of it from the river, the lofty range of the Fishkill Mountains, which form a portion of the High lands proper, through which the Hudson flows a few miles below. Here is the Fishkill and Newburgh railway-station, and a long wharf that stretches over the shallow bed of the river to the deep channel far in the direction of Newburgh. That large town lies upon the steep slope on the western shore, and presents a beautiful appearance to the traveller by railway or steamboat, especially when it is lighted up by the morning sun. Around that old town, the site of the oldest permanent settlement in Orange co., are clustered many associations of the war for independence, for near there the Continental Army encamped, there it was disbanded, and in a house yet standing, and well preserved, Washington had his headquarters for a long time.

The first European settlement at Newburgh was commenced in 1709, by some Palatines, who went up from New York for the purpose, and seated themselves a little above Quassaic (some call it called Chambers') Creek, where the Quassaic Indians resided, and laid the foundation of "Newburgh." They obtained a patent from Queen Anne in 1719, but becoming dissatisfied, they went some to Pennsylvania, and some to the Mohawk Valley. English, Irish, New England, and Huguenot settlers supplied their places. New Windsor (two miles below) and other places were settled, and a flourishing little commonwealth was commenced. New Windsor, upon the shores of a sheltered bay near the mouth of the Quassaic, was for some time the rival of Newburgh. They were included in the "Highland Precinct" until 1768, when they were divided into separate municipalities, and so remained until they were organized into towns in 1788.

The house occupied by Washington was built by Jonathan Hasbrouck in 17—, and is known by the respective names of "Hasbrouck House," and "Washington's Headquarters." It has been the property of the State for several years, and a sufficient annual appropriation from the State treasury is made to keep it, with the grounds around it, in good order. Within it are collected many relics of the Revolution, the war of 1812-15, and war with Mexico.

In connexion with this house, as the headquarters of the army, occurred one of the most interesting events in the life of Washington, to which allusion has already been made. It was in the spring of 1783. Peace had been declared; a preliminary treaty had been signed by Great Britain and the United States, and the Continental Army were soon to be disbanded. The civil confederacy was weak. For a long time the Congress had been unable to pay the army, and officers and soldiers were likely to be sent home penniless, large pecuniary creditors of the country whose independence they had achieved. Secret consultations were held among a few of the officers. They had lost faith in the Congress, and began to doubt the feasibility of republican government; and they indirectly offered the power and title of king to Washington. He spurned the proposition with indignation. Then an appeal to the officers of the army was written, and secretly disseminated, in which grievances were set forth, and they were advised to take matters into their own hands, and in effect, form a military despotism if the Congress should not speedily provide for their pay. Washington was informed of the movement. He resolved to control, without seeming to oppose it. He called a meeting of the officers, and the suspected ringleader of the movement was asked to preside. When all were assembled, Washington stepped forward and read to them a powerful appeal to their patriotism. His first words, before unfolding the paper, touched every heart. "You see, gentlemen," he said, as he placed his spectacles before his eyes, "that I have grown not only gray, but blind, in your service." His address, as usual, was short, pointed, convincing, and most persuasive. All eyes were filled with tears. The spirit of mutiny and revolt shrunk abashed, and the assembly resolved unanimously, "That the officers of the American army view with abhorrence, and reject with disdain, the infamous propositions contained in a late anonymous address to the officers of the army." The scene did not occur at headquarters, but in a large temporary building a few miles in the interior, near where the army lay at that time

In the centre of the Hasbrouck House, or Headquarters, is a large hall, having on one side an enormous fire-place, and containing seven doors, but only one window. Here Washington received his friends; here large companies dined; and here, from time to time, some of the most distinguished characters of the Revolution, civil and military, were assembled. Colonel Nicholas Fish of the Continental Army, used to relate an interesting fact connected with this room. He was in Paris a short time before the death of the Marquis de Lafayette, who had lodged many nights in both the rear of the "Hasbrouck House." Colonel Fish was invited, with the American minister on one occasion, to sup at the house of the distinguished Marbois, who was the French Secretary of Legation during the Revolution. Lafayette was one of the guests. At the supper-hour the company were shown into a room which contrasted quite oddly with the Parisian elegance of the other apartments, where they had spent the evening. A low, boarded, painted ceiling, with large beams, a single small uncurtained window, with numerous small doors, gave, at first, the idea of the kitchen, or largest room, of a Dutch or Belgian farm-house. On a long, rough table, was a repast, just as little in keeping with the refined cuisines of Paris, as the room was with its architecture. It consisted of a large dish of meat, uncouth-looking pastry, and wines in decanters and bottles, not unlocked by glasses and silver mugs, such as indicated other habits and tastes than those of modern Paris. "Do you know where we now are?" said Marbois to Lafayette and his American companions. They paused in surprise for a few minutes. They had seen something like it before, but when? and where?" "Ah! the seven doors and one window," exclaimed Lafayette, "and the silver camp-gold in, such as the marshals of France used in my youth! We are at Washington's Headquarters on the Hudson, fifty years ago!"—London Art Journal

DON'T BE TOO POSITIVE.

Always allow other people their opinions, and do not be too sure you are right. Remember, if you are right in one particular, you may be wrong in others. Do not be defiant, or boldly contradict; but calmly express your reasons, and patiently bear with those whose understanding is less clear, or whose reason is disturbed by passion. Rather than "It is" and "It isn't," "You did" and "You didn't," say "It seems to me," or "I think it is," or "If I mistake not." Avoid all rude and ill-natured expressions; as calling one fool ish, obstinate, or provokingly stupid. Our aim should be to advance the truth, not ourselves. It often happens that much time is wasted and temper lost in matters of insignificance, one party says the beam is hard, another says it is not—and there is a fuss. Jane and Susan go down into the street, but Mary declares it was somebody else, and then a difference ensues. All this shows a wrong spirit, and causes much bitterness, both in words and feelings. While in all cases concerning duty and happiness we are faithful to the right, let us remember to hold to the truth in meekness.

SUPERABUNDANCE OF MEN

There is according to the census, an excess of 733,258 males over females in the United States. This fact is noteworthy, and ought to quiet the apprehensions of those who feared the war would cause an undue preponderance of women after peace was declared. No matter how bloody the war may be, or long it lasts, it cannot make way with three quarters of a million of lives. The waste of life may make the ... but even then we shall be better off than England, where the females are in excess by nearly a million, and the social problem of the day is how to provide them with husbands or occupations.

GIVING AWAY THE BABY.

A MOTHER'S STORY.

"It was the third day after my husband's funeral," said the widow, "and I was so stunned by his sudden death that I could do nothing but sit and think over it, and try to realise how it could be so. Only the Sabbath before, he had been sitting with me, watching the baby, as he sat in the sunshine, laughing and clapping his little hands, as the shadows of the trees were flung across the bare floor, and moved by the passing breeze. Now the child was sitting in the same spot, the warm October sun streaming in on his bright curls, and making him look so pretty—so like a picture, that the father was gone from us forever.

"It seemed to me I must see his dear face once more—that he would surely lift the latch and come in, and take our child up, and say, as he often did—'Mother, what would you take for this little brother?'

"Even the baby missed him, and would come and stand at my knee, calling 'Papa! papa!' until I thought my poor heart would break. The oldest two children were at school; the rest were out playing, so that I was quite alone. By and by the baby was tired of his play, and came and got up into my lap.

"'Mamma cry? Mamma musn't;' he lisped out, and wiped my wet face with his little chubby hands; but I could only hold him closer to me, and then cry more bitterly.

Just then Mr. and Mrs. Lorrimer drove up in their handsome carriage. They lived not far off, and were our richest neighbors. When I had invited them in, and had dried my tears a little, they seemed at a loss how to begin the conversation, but Charlie had slid away from my side and went and stood at the lady's knee, and pointing to her heavy gold bracelet, said—'Pretty, pretty!' in his childish way. She took it off, and gave it to him, saying—

"'Won't you come to be my little boy, Charlie?'

"My mother's heart took fright at once. They had no children, and I seemed to feel as plainly as if they had told me, that they had come to ask me for one of mine.

"'No, no; mother could not spare him,' I said, quickly snatching him away, almost rudely, I fear.

"'My dear woman,' began Mr. Lorrimer, 'have you thought seriously of the impossibility of your getting along with five children, under twelve years of age? It has required all your husband's efforts to make a living for you—how can you hope to do it without him?'

"'We offer,' joined in his wife, 'to take the most helpless of your little ones—to give him all the advantages we would our own child; and surely you must see that God's hand is in it—that through us he intends to help you.'

"I need not tell you how long I withstood all their arguments. But at last, overcome by their entreaties, I consented to consider the matter. In two days they came for my answer. I never mentioned their visit to any of the children, and I had changed my mind almost every hour since I had seen them. At last convinced that it was for the child's good, I consented to give him up. When I went to dress him to go, my resolution almost failed me. I lingered over every article I put on him, and made every dear curl over and over before I could get it to please me; and I kissed the little white shoulders until they were all rosy. But at length he was ready, and I thought he never looked so pretty. He was full of animation, for he was old enough to know what it meant to 'go riding,' and he clapped his hands, and laughed aloud at the horses, as they were driven up. I handed him to his new mother, (the children supposed that he was to come back soon,) and he never even looked at me. Oh, how jealous my aching heart grew!

"When I came back into the house, the first thing my eye fell on was his cradle. I could only throw myself on it, and sob aloud. Then came the trial of telling the whole truth to the children. None of them seemed reconciled, and I felt that the worst was to come when the oldest two should return from school. I almost dreaded to meet them, especially Willie; he was like his father, so quiet and calm, outwardly, but hiding beneath his apparent coldness the strongest, deepest feelings. But the others went to meet them as they came home, and I was pleasantly disappointed in the way the oldest took it. He seemed to feel that I had done it for the best, and that he must hide his own sorrow for my sake. He was more thoughtful for my comfort, gentler than ever, only very still and grave.

"The day ended as the longest will at last, and it came time to go to bed. I had taken Willie to sleep down stairs near me. Since his father's death, the other children slept just above us. Well, when I came to lie down, there was the empty pillow! Baby had always laid his little rosy face so close to mine as he could get it, and slept with one little warm hand on my neck. All my grief broke out afresh when I thought of him. Willie raised up at last and said, earnestly—

"'Mother, it's Charlie you are crying for, isn't it?'

"'Yes,' I answered, 'I know it's for the best; but oh! it's so hard to give him up.'

"'Mother,' continued the child, 'when father died, we knew it was all for the best, because God took him from us; but I have been thinking ever since we laid down how poor little Charlie must be crying for you, and how God gave him to us, to love him and keep him; and now you have given him away. If he had meant him to be Mr and Mrs. Lorrimer's baby, wouldn't he have given him to them at first?'

"The child's words carried more weight with them than all the arguments of my rich neighbors. After considering a moment, I said impulsively—

"'Oh, if I only had him back, he should never go away again, no matter how poor we might be.'

"The moon was shining so brightly that it was almost as light as day, and presently Willie said—

"'Mother, it's only half a mile across the fields, and they won't go to bed for a long time at Mr Lorrimer's; let us go and get Charlie. Why, mother, I seem to hear him crying now.'

"Urged by the child's entreaties and the food prompting of my own heart, I consented. I think I never walked half a mile so quickly in my life, and neither of us spoke until we reached the mansion. Then we stopped a moment for breath, and sure enough, we could hear baby screaming at the top of his voice. We went round to the sitting-room door and knocked. They seemed half frightened when they saw who it was, but asked us in politely. A hired nurse was walking with the child up and down the floor, trying to pacify it. Mrs Lorrimer had wearied herself out, and was lying on a lounge.

"'Come to mother,' Willie said, and he brought the little fellow to me at once.

"He clung to me, still sobbing, yet smiling all the while to find himself in my arms.

"'I cannot give him up,' I said at last, when I could get my voice clear. 'You must let me take him home.'

"They evidently thought me the silliest of women; but their cold words only made me the more determined, and we started back in less than half an hour after we came, I carrying the baby; Willie offered to help me, but I felt as though I could carry him in my arms forever.

"When I had laid him in bed, now fast asleep, but still sobbing, and reaching out his little hands, to feel if I was there, I said, 'God helping me, come what will, I will never part with one of my living children again,' and I never did.

"I need not tell you how wild with joy the rest of the children were when they found baby in bed next morning; they almost fought over the little fellow, and from that day forth it was their greatest pleasure to amuse Charlie and have him with them.

"When the affair came to be known, many blamed me, and many fevers that my rich neighbors might have done me they withheld, I think, for my folly, as they called it. But a few poor women, like myself, that had always nursed their own children, said I did right. We had many trials, and then comforts and blessings to share together, but our hardships only bound us more closely together.

"All my children proved comforts and blessings to me. [illegible] Willie said, we know that was for the best. The rest married in the course of time, and left me; but the prop of my old days, the one whose industry and management gave me this plentiful and comfortable home, has never left me since the day I gave him away.—Little Pilgrim.

Advertisements.

TO THE READERS OF THE CHRISTIAN INSTRUCTOR.

A CARD.

It having been said by an impossibility, heretofore, to obtain CLOTHING MADE OF FASHIONABLE MATERIAL, FIRST-RATE MAKE AND FIT, at MODERATE PRICES, we beg leading that many gentlemen could prefer their clothing MADE TO ORDER if they could secure at the same time EQUALLY STYLISH, CLASSY AND FIT AND AT REASONABLE PRICES we have, at the earnest solicitation of our patrons organized, in connection with our extensive Ready Made Salesrooms, a complete CUSTOMER DEPARTMENT, in which the prominent features are,

1st. Fine and Medium Materials made up in First Class Styles.
2d. Unexceptionable Fitting Garments.
3d. PRICES FAR LOWER THAN HAS BEEN CUSTOMARY.
4th. A corps of the most talented cutters in this country.
An extensive assortment of the choicest imported and domestic fabrics from the New York and Philadelphia markets, suitable for Coats, Pants, and Vests, always on hand.

In our Ready Made Salesrooms can always be found every variety and [illegible] made in the most fashionable clothing. Spring stock now ready. PRICES MODERATE.

Call and see what is doing.

WANAMAKER & BROWN,
MERCHANT TAILORS AND CLOTHIERS,
"OAK HALL."
S. E. Corner SIXTH AND MARKET STREETS
ap 25-6m JAMES PRINGLE, Salesman

ESTABLISHED IN 1796.

McALLISTER AND BROTHER,
OPTICIANS,
No. 728 Chestnut Street,
PHILADELPHIA,
Nearly Opposite Masonic Hall,

(Lately removed from the old stand, Chestnut st. above Second.) Spectacles, Mathematical Instruments, Spy Glasses, Philosophical Apparatus, Opera Glasses, Thermometers, Microscopes, and Microscopic Objects, Tape Measures, Plating Powder, Magic Lanterns, Stereoscopes and Stereoscopic Pictures. By Wholesale and Retail.

Other priced and Illustrated Catalogue furnished on application, and sent by Mail, Free of Charge. 1y

PURE WHOLESOME BREAD

THE UNFERMENTED BREAD

Is the most pure, wholesome and nutritious BREAD that can be used.

Its superior quality is certified by several hundred of our most [illegible]

Family supplied in all parts of the city, and the Bread is kept by all prominent grocers.

W. F. ANDREWS, Manufacturer
42 —1y. Corner of Broad and Buttonwood Sts

PIANOS & MELODEONS.

The largest, most elegant, and cheapest stock in America [illegible]
All instruments sold subject to approval, guaranteed for ten years. J. E. GOULD,
7th and Chestnut Sts., Philadelphia.

KURTZ'S CHURCH HISTORY, NOW COMPLETE.

LINDSAY & BLAKISTON, PHILADELPHIA,

A TEXT BOOK OF CHURCH HISTORY,
By John Henry Kurtz,
Professor of Theology in the University of Dorpat
COMPLETE IN TWO VOLUMES
VOLUME I—To the Reformation. VOLUME II—From the Reformation

PRICE $3 00

"It is perhaps the best manual extant on this subject, in any language; and better adapted than any other to the wants and habits of mind of American students. It is faithful, learned, graphic, and is contained within moderate limits."—Methodist Quarterly Review.

"It is an admirable work of reference. The history is extremely well told, and a vast amount of information is given in the fewest possible words. It is particularly full in accounts of the development of theological doctrines, and of the operation of political influences on the history of the Church. The classifications and arrangements are excellent, the references to authorities are everywhere abundant, and the leading outlines of the history are presented with great clearness."—New Englander

L. & P. also publish

KURTZ'S MANUAL OF SACRED HISTORY; a Guide to the Divine Plan of Salvation, according to the Biblical Development. Seventh American edition. In one vol. Price $1 25

The admirable Manual of Sacred History, translated by Dr Schaeffer, consisting of a continuation of the theological literature it has been favorably received by Christians of all denominations.

KURTZ'S BIBLE AND ASTRONOMY. An Exposition of Biblical Cosmology and its relation to Natural Science. In one volume, [illegible] Price $ 25

KURTZ'S HISTORY OF THE OLD COVENANT. 3 vols. [illegible] Price $ 00

HERZOG'S ENCYCLOPEDIA OF PROTESTANT THEOLOGICAL AND ECCLESIASTICAL LITERATURE. In two vols. Royal Octavo, [illegible] Price $ 00

LINDSAY & BLAKISTON, Publishers,
25 South Sixth St., above Chestnut, Philadelphia
ap18

SABBATH SCHOOL LIBRARIES

BEAUTIFUL, NEW AND SAFE BOOKS,
AT LOW PRICES,
RECENTLY PUBLISHED FOR LIBRARIES
PICTURAL CATALOGUES MAILED FREE TO SUPERINTENDENTS AND OTHERS

These books are filled with the most interesting matter, written with a real aim, and beautifully illustrated. Out-lasted not simply to amuse, but to instruct and interest the children that they may become children of God.

Also, a choice selection of highly beautifully bound in flexible covers, for the ARMY AND NAVY.

A [illegible] Society, instituted at Boston in 1814, may be found at

ALL THE PROMINENT BOOK-STORES IN PHILADELPHIA

Also at JOHN G. BROUGHTON'S,
13 North Ninth, Near Race Street.
NICHOLSON BROUGHTON, Jr.
Depository at Presbyterian Board's

JOHN COCHRAN & CO.,

Importers and Jobbers of
Hosiery, Gloves and Fancy Dry Goods,
NO. 12 NORTH FOURTH ST., ABOVE MARKET,
PHILADELPHIA.
Ribbons and White Goods, Undershirts and Drawers, Embroideries and Handkerchiefs, Watches and Jewelry, Combs, Brushes, &c.

DR. J. GOODWILLIE,

DENTIST
206 South Eleventh Street, below Spruce,
PHILADELPHIA.

SUPERIOR FRENCH CONFECTIONS.

[illegible]
Put up neatly in ½, 1, and 5 pound boxes, without extra charge. Holiday presents. A fine selection of Fancy and Choice constantly on hand.
A. TILLMAN, 1852 Chestnut St.
[illegible]

1862. 1862

THE PENNSYLVANIA CENTRAL RAILROAD

THE GREAT DOUBLE TRACK ROUTE

THE CAPACITY OF THE ROAD IS NOW EQUAL TO ANY IN THE COUNTRY.

THE GREAT SHORT LINE TO THE WEST

The Express now Daily. Mail and Fast Line, Sabbath excepted

Main Train leaves Philadelphia at [illegible] 11.30 A M
Fast Line " [illegible] 10.45 P M
Express Train " [illegible] 7.30 P M
Parkesburg Accommodation leaves Philadelphia at [illegible] 12 30 P M
Day Express " [illegible] 2 30 P M
Lancaster " [illegible] 4 30 P M

Trains for West

No. 50

first sheet missing.

THE RESURRECTION NOT SEEN BY MAN.

It is a remarkable fact, that the actual scene of the resurrection of our Lord, not only was not witnessed by any human eye, but is not recorded by any of the evangelists. This is a striking fact, the significance of which is commonly overlooked. Indeed the fact itself has not been noticed, and yet it is a fact of no small interest. They record the closed grave, the watch, and the seal, on the evening of the sixth day. They then record the open and empty grave on the morning of the first day, but that mysterious and stupendous event by which the grave was emptied is not recorded. It is announced immediately by the angels as having taken place, and afterwards established by the most unanswerable evidence; but its actual occurrence is not recorded by any of the sacred writers. The omission is a very remarkable one, considering the momentous importance of the occurrence itself. Had three writers been inventing a fiction, such an omission would have been incredible. This fact being the main fact of the story, it would have been narrated with details of time and attending circumstance in the most careful manner, so that all cavil should be excluded. But inasmuch as there was really no eye-witness to the fact itself, in its actual occurrence, with a strict and scrupulous regard to historical accuracy that is very striking; and that is one of those minute marks of absolute verity that would never occur to an inventor, but which, when brought to our notice, illustrates the conscientious and careful truthfulness of the writers in the most convincing manner.

The nearest approach to such a record is in the words of Matthew above, but this only records the opening of the grave by the angel, an event of which there were eye-witnesses in the keepers, but not the actual rising from the dead and coming forth from the grave, of which there was no eye-witness. It is obvious from the record, that the resurrection must have taken place about the dawning of the day, and was perhaps coincident with the rolling away of the stone by the angel; but this fact is matter of inference and not of record. Hence, to attempt a description of this sublime and stupendous scene, would be to attempt what the evangelists have not attempted, and to supplement the records of inspiration. A veil of deep mystery and awe is hung over the actual event, which it were presumption in us to endeavour to remove.

But the question may naturally be asked, Why was it thus left? Why were the death and the ascension made to occur in the presence of witnesses, whilst the resurrection, an event that is declared to lie at the foundation of the whole system of Christianity, was witnessed by none? Why did not Christ rise in the presence of a crowd, as he had died, and thus compel their belief in his divine mission, and their recognition of his claims as Messiah?

It might be sufficient to reply, that it is no part of the scheme of redemption to compel belief, and that we have no right to either expect or demand more than sufficient evidence to warrant belief. And there were reasons of fitness that doubtless required that this august and awful scene should take place, not in the presence of a clamorous crowd, but in the sublime solitude of that silent dawn, when the keepers were as dead men. But there is another reason usually overlooked, that has no small force. Whether it was so arranged for this special purpose we will not affirm. But it is obvious that, by this arrangement, this fundamental fact of the Christian system, in which all have exactly the same interest, comes to all with exactly the same proof. To the first disciples, with the doubtful exception of Mary Magdalene, it was brought as it is to us, a matter of testimony supported by subsequent proof. The women were called to believe it on the testimony of the angels, the disciples on the testimony of the women, and the world on the testimony of the disciples. The women had subsequent corroboration of the testimony of the angels, the disciples of theirs, and we of the disciples; but in each case, the first demand to believe is on the same ground, the testimony of competent witnesses, and not ocular demonstration. The subsequent proofs in the case of the women and disciples include this ocular demonstration; but they were required first to believe on the testimony of competent and credible witnesses, just as we are, and not on the evidence of their own senses. Hence it is apparent that to this fundamental fact, all are placed on the same level; and the only question that can be raised is whether we possess corroborating proof of the testimony handed down to us, that ought to satisfy us, and that by the ordinary laws of human belief warrant and require an assent. This will be discussed when we reach the testimony.

We have here then the dawn of the great morning, the rising of the Sun of righteousness with healing in his wings. And like all the great facts that lie at the foundation of our hopes, it is so arranged as to be matter of faith corroborated by reason, supported by sufficient and unanswerable proof; but, after all presented to us as a thing to be believed because it is true, and not because we can prove it to be true. The measure of our ability to establish the true faith is demanded of men as a duty, and not requested as a favour, and unbelief is a damning sin. When the day has dawned, the light is its own evidence to the open eye.

Last Days of Jesus.

OUR DIVINE INTERCESSOR.

There are individuals upon earth for whom no one feels inclined to pray, because they are too depraved. There are those who even dare not pray for themselves, because their consciences testify that such worthless creatures as they are, cannot reckon upon being heard. What a prospect is here opened to people of this description! Ah! if no heart beats for them on earth, the heart of the King of kings may still feel for them. If amongst their friends, not one is found to intercede for them, yet possibly, the Lord of Glory is not ashamed of bearing their names before His Father's throne. Oh! what hope beams on Calvary for a sinful world! And if the great Intercessor appears there for a transgressor, how does His intercession succeed! Though a whole world should protest against it, His prayer saves whom He will. His voice penetrates the heart of the Eternal Father with irresistible power. His entreaties are commands. Mountains of sin vanish before his intercession. How highly characteristic and deeply significant is the fact that the Lord, with this prayer, commences the seven expressions He uttered on the cross. The words, "Forgive them!" show us not merely the heaven of loving-kindness which He carries in His bosom, but it also darts like a flash of lightning through the gloom of the entire night of suffering and despair, the mysterious position which the holy One of Israel here occupies as Surety, Mediator, and High Priest.—Krummacher.

LOOK UP.

We are told that Sir Edward Parry and his party, in one of their Arctic expeditions, were going straight toward the North Pole, travelling at the rate of ten miles a day. But the ice over which they travelled was drifting straight toward the equator at the rate of twelve miles a day; and yet no man among them would have known that they were making two miles a day backward unless he had raised his eyes from the track in which he was plodding.

Just so in human life; men start off in a Christian course with firm step and high resolve. The prospect flows beyond truths contained in the canon, and they move on with thoughts fixed on heaven. But they forget that the currents of earth are all against them; that the ice floes of worldly business and the hot streams of pleasure are alike drifting them away from the haven of their hopes. With eyes prone to the ground, they are unconscious of their backward motion, and talk of progress, it may be, while they are floating down with the current and tide to their ruin.

It was only when they looked up and saw the North Star gradually sinking towards the horizon, that Parry and his men became aware that they were going wrong. So the Christian must keep his eyes lifted from the earth above, if he would know which way he is travelling, and when he sees the Sun of Righteousness growing low and dim in the heavens, he may be sure that—he is drifting downward and away, and that darkness and danger await him.

PERVERSION OF THE MARCHIONESS OF QUEENSBERRY.

The following paragraph lately went the round of the newspapers;—"Extraordinary Flight of the Marchioness of Queensberry.—The Globe of Friday, August 20th, contains the following announcement:—We have authority to state that the Marchioness of Queensberry, who has so lately become a Roman Catholic, left her residence near Weybridge, last week, clandestinely, taking with her the three youngest of her six fatherless children and leaving no clue to her place of hiding. There is no doubt that the guardian and the nearest relatives of the late Marquis have the power to trace her ladyship's flight, and through the strong arm of English law to rescue the children and make them wards to Chancery." Thus another victim amongst the higher ranks has been added to the recent triumphs of Rome. This case is in many respects most instructive. The Dowager Marchioness of Queensberry was, we understand, not long ago a high church Episcopalian. She then fell into the hands of the Plymouth Brethren, and imbibed their peculiar tenets. Separating herself from all visible churches, she affected to find the true unity of the Church in no outward organization. Setting thus at defiance the lessons of the Bible in one important particular, she still professed to be zealous in promoting revivals of religion and social improvement. At Edinburgh she did a good deal in this way, but evidently without being firmly rooted in any fixed principles of Divine truth, and without the blessed influence of the regular ministrations of the sanctuary. By and by she seems to have gone to Weybridge, in the immediate neighborhood of the French priests, and, no doubt, of a very of Jesuit priests, who know so well how to deal with sensitive and defenceless females. In England she would discover that the so called unity of the Plymouth Brethren had broken out into an open rupture between the Newtonites and the Darbyites, whilst she seems to have been attracted at the same time with the specious social efforts of the Popish Sisters of Charity, and the shallow pretences of unity in the Church of Rome. To a friend in Edinburgh her Ladyship wrote some time ago, that the efforts of these so called Sisters of Charity were by no means to be appreciated. At present, probably, she was just entering the Roman trap, and now, in all likelihood, she has been removed to some Popish country until she be steeped in Romanism beyond recall. There is one striking fact connected with these recent perversions, that Rome seldom again loses her victims. Like the evil woman in the Divine word, "None that go unto her return again, neither take they hold on the paths of life." Many rivers run into this dead sea of Rome, but they are generally swallowed up there, and none return.—Some of those born in the Church of Rome, no doubt, escape, and more yet will, we trust, be brought out of that house of bondage when the cry resounds throughout the world, "Come out of her, my people;" but it seems to be a special judgment on those who wilfully and recklessly go from the pure light of the Gospel back into the darkness of Romanism, that God says of them, "They are joined to their idols, let them alone."

Amidst such striking illustrations, however, of the power, earnestness, and cunning of this mysterious system, are we still to be coolly told that there is no danger, and that Rome is making no progress? Are we still to be told that those ministers of the Gospel are doing their duty and are more spiritual, forsooth, than others, who ridicule the anxiety of better men, conceal the truth from their people, and cry, Peace, peace, when there is no peace? It is high time that such sinful conduct were spoken of in terms of just denunciation.—Bulwark.

PRINCE EUGENE'S PRAYER

Prince Eugene, says the Presbyterian, was one of the greatest generals of modern times, worthy of being ranked with Napoleon or Wellington, with Marlborough or Frederick the Great. He was a Savoy prince, of the same race as the present Victor Emanuel.

Prince Eugene's Prayer, which all the officers of the Duke of Marlborough's Army knew by heart or memory

I believe in thee, O my God, do thou strengthen my faith; I hope in thee, confirm my hopes; I love thee, influence my love more and more; I repent me of my sins, but do thou increase my repentance. As my first beginning I worship thee; as my last end I long for thee; as my eternal benefactor I praise thee; and as my supreme benefactor I pray to thee, that it may please thee, O Lord, to guide and lead me by thy providence, to keep me in my obedience by thy justice, to comfort me by thy mercy, and protect me by thy Almighty power. I submit to thee all my thoughts, words, and actions, as well as my afflictions, pains, and sufferings, and I desire to have thee always in my mind, to do all my works in thy name, and for thy sake to bear all adversity with patience. I desire to will what thou will, O God, because it is agreeable to thee. O give me grace that I may be attentive in my prayers, temperate in my diet, vigilant in my conduct, and immoveable in all good purposes. Grant, most merciful Lord, that I may be true and faithful to those who have intrusted me with their secrets, that I may be kind and courteous toward all men, and that both in my words and actions I may show unto them a good example. Dispose my heart to admire and praise thy goodness, to hate all error and evil works, to love my neighbor and despise the world. Assist me, good Lord, in subduing lust by mortification, covetousness by liberality, anger by mildness, and lukewarmness by zeal and fervency. Enable me to conduct myself with prudence in all transactions, and show courage in danger, patience in adversity, and in prosperity an humble mind. Let thy grace illumine my understanding, direct my will, sanctify my body, and bless my soul. Make me diligent in curing all irregular affections, zealous in employing thy grace, careful in keeping thy commandments, and constant in working out my salvation. Finally, O God make me sensible how little is the world, how great are the heavens, how short is time, and how long a blessed eternity. O that I may well prepare myself for death, that I may dread thy judgments, that I may avoid the torments of hell, and obtain of thee, O God eternal life, through the merits of Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

PRINCIPLE COMMANDS RESPECT.

Dr. Goodell states that during his missionary journey to Aleppo, he and his companions were obliged to spend a night at a Turkish café, where they were surrounded by a noisy set of natives. In the morning, when the question arose whether it was best to have prayers together, Dr. Goodell said that a Mussulman never hesitated to say his prayers in public, and why should they? He accordingly opened his Bible, read a chapter, and knelt to pray. He had hardly begun, when he noticed that the Turks had ceased their talking, and were intensely watching their proceedings. He at once passed from the English to the Turkish language, in which he continued his prayer, till when he closed, his "Amen" was echoed from the Mussulmans on all sides of the café. When they rose from their knees, the Turks clustered around them, and inquired who and what they were.

"Are you Protestants?" said they.

Yankee-like, Dr Goodell asked, "What are Protestants?"

"Those who do not tell lies," said one.

"Those who do not cheat," said another.

"Those who believe only in the Bible, and try to live as it tells them," said another.

"Yes," said Dr. Goodell, "we are Protestants."

INSANITY—RELIGION.—Dr. Ray, in the report of the Butler Hospital for the Insane in Rhode Island, says:

I believe—and it is in some measure the result of considerable observation of psychological states—that in this age of fast living nothing can be relied upon more surely for preserving the healthy balance of the mental faculties than an earnest, practical conviction of the great truths of Christianity.

Domestic Items.

Southern Items.—The Savannah Republican says: "Large quantities of provisions passed up the road [Georgia Central Railroad] on Monday and Tuesday, and contributed sixty thousand (60,000) pounds to the movement, and that the Confederate Government will issue receipts for all leaden pipes and other fixtures, and binds itself to replace them at the end of the war.

At Columbus, Georgia, Liverpool salt sells for $4 20 per sack; Virginia sides, $65 & 70 per hundred; bacon sides, 50 c. per pound; hams, 60 c.; flour, $20 per barrel; checked pants, $30; red blankets, $60."

Religious Newspapers.—The following paper has been adopted within the last week by a Convention of the Proprietors and Publishers of the principal religious papers of New York and Boston:

1. That in consequence of the price of paper having risen to 100 per cent.—has made it an imperative necessity on the part of publishers of newspapers to augment their issues, or to raise the terms of subscription, or to diminish the size of their sheets. The proprietors of religious newspapers in Boston and New York, having met in convention, and carefully considered the whole subject, have resolved:

1. That it is just and necessary that the price of their several journals should be raised on the opening of another year, or the size of the papers reduced, to cover the increased cost of production.

2. That whatever advertising rates are offered by the respective papers should be more rigidly adhered to, and that notices of marriages and deaths, obituaries and resolutions, and appeals by all societies and institutions soliciting funds from the public, should be paid for as advertisements.

3. That the law of the last session of Congress, levying a heavy tax on the materials of our business, and on the advertisements, and finally on the income of the publisher, is peculiarly oppressive upon newspapers, the circulation of which ought to be stimulated, and not curtailed during the war.

4. That the religious press, in the management of its business, in carrying its circulation and increasing its advertising patronage, ought to be governed, not only by the laws of trade, but by the highest Christian and [illegible] principles.

5. That we are impressed with a deep sense of the injustice on the part of those benevolent institutions which furnish newspapers at less than cost, supplying the deficiency from the funds contributed by the Christian public for another and specific object, while the religious newspapers would cheerfully publish all the necessary intelligence contained in them, and leave all the funds so appropriated to those cheap papers applied to the great objects of Christian benevolence.

6. That the Chairman and Secretary of this Convention be a Committee to transmit the third resolution to the President of the United States, to each member of the Cabinet, and to the Chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means in Congress.

The War in Mississippi.—SKIRMISHING BETWEEN THE UNION AND THE RETREATING REBEL FORCES.—Cairo, Dec. 8.—News from Oxford, Miss., to Thursday last, says that the rebels under General Jackson, who was in command of their rear guard, had a skirmish that morning with the Union advance near that town. The main body of the Rebel army, numbering 40,000 strong, had passed that way. Only a few hours before. The number of their sick and wounded was said to be very large. Oxford, where the skirmish above referred to occurred, is on the railroad between Grand Junction and Grenada, and forty-seven miles north of the latter place. Jackson's retreat by that line would seem to be cut off by General Hovey, who was at Grenada at the last accounts.

Cairo, Dec. 9th.—A special dispatch from Oxford, Miss., dated the 7th instant, says Colonel Dickey's cavalry had a two hours' engagement with the Rebels near Coffeeville, on Friday night.

The Rebels are said to have had 5000 infantry, cavalry and artillery. The Union loss was nine killed, fifty wounded and sixty missing, while that of the Rebels was three hundred in killed and wounded.

[Coffeeville is only ten miles north of Grenada. Col. Dickey's Cavalry is probably part of Gen. Hovey's army.]

Battle-Field Near Fayetteville.—Cairo, Dec. 8.—General Herron's forces, en route to reinforce General Blunt, met the enemy yesterday, on Crawford's Prairie, ten miles south of Fayetteville, and had a decided victory.

The Rebels were 24,000 strong, in four divisions, under Parsons, Marmaduke, Frost, and Rains, and all under General Hindman, embracing the flower of the Rebel army.

General Herron's forces consisted of about 6500 to 7000 men and twenty-four pieces of artillery.

The battle raged from 10 A. M., until dark, and was desperately fought.

About 4 o'clock General Blunt arrived from Cane Hill, with 5000 men and a strong force of artillery and attacked the Rebels in the rear.

We hold the whole field at dark, and before nine o'clock the entire Rebel force was in full retreat over Boston Mountain.

From the Upper Potomac.—WILLIAMSPORT, Md., via Hagerstown, Dec. 6th.—General Kenley, formerly of the First Maryland, and taken prisoner at Front Royal by Ewell's rebel division during the Banks' "skedaddle" from the Shenandoah Valley, is now commanding a division of four regiments Maryland regiments composed largely of Pennsylvanians, at this point. There has been no rebel demonstration either here or above, for ten days past. Our forces communicate by a continuous line with those of General Kelley at Hancock, Cumberland and New Creek.

There have been no active demonstrations of any consequence above us on the Potomac since General Kelley routed Col. Imboden's command near Papaw Tunnel.

No repairs will be made upon the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad westward from Martinsburgh until the heart of the rebellion is crushed on the Rappahannock or at Richmond, as that portion of the road has been three times destroyed.

Martinsburgh is alternately held by our cavalry and those of the enemy. Sharp skirmishing often takes place up the Valley toward Berryville and Winchester, but there is no definite result. The forces attacking the rear [illegible] are from General Geary's command at Harper's Ferry. There are large numbers of Union refugees to this part of Maryland, who dare not return, after repeated and lengthy absences from home.

The Virginia Legislature.—WHEELING, Va., Dec. 6th.—The Senate to-day passed a preamble and resolution, setting forth that United States Senator Carlisle had violated the instructions of the body that elected him, in failing to sustain the legitimate efforts of the government to suppress the insurrection; in opposing by his votes and speeches, both in and out of the United States Senate, measures which were absolutely necessary to the preservation of the Union and the enforcement of the laws, and in opposing the admission of Western Virginia as a new State into the Union. The resolution requests Mr. Carlisle to resign his seat in the United States Senate. It will come up in the House on Monday, and pass by a large majority.

In the House, to-day, a resolution was offered requesting the United States House of Representatives to pass the new State bill now pending before it, without alteration or amendment. It will also come up on Monday and pass by nearly a unanimous vote.

The Governor's message, which was sent in to the Legislature to-day, endorses the emancipation policy of the President.

Army of the Shenandoah.—GEN. GEARY'S OPERATIONS WITH HARPER'S FERRY.—New York, Dec. 7th.—Special Harper's Ferry dispatches state that General Geary, with 4,500 infantry, 12 pieces of artillery, and 500 cavalry marched upon Winchester, on the 3d instant, and demanded its surrender, which was complied with—the people exhibiting many signs of joy at his arrival. He reports to General Slocum, having left Harper's Ferry on the 1st, met the enemy's cavalry, under White, Henderson, and Blythe, at Charlestown, routing them with much loss in wounded. He marched into Berryville the same evening, again met the enemy, drew them into a trap, killed five and wounded eighteen. The same evening he marched [illegible] miles beyond Berryville. The next day he advanced beyond the Opequaun, skirmishing with the rebel cavalry and infantry, and hunsacked in Ash Hollow, between Berryville and Winchester.

Our troops captured 100 horses and mules, and several wagon loads of flour belonging to the rebel army. At Winchester, 125 rebels unable to escape, were paroled; 75 rebel conscripts claimed protection, which was granted, and 5 Union prisoners were released.

The Secretary of the Treasury reviews the controversy [illegible] in his report, basing in the establishment of a uniform national currency, to be furnished by Government in banking associations, and by them issued, upon the pledge of Federal security. This is preferred to a permanent circulation of United States treasury notes, the further issue of which is regarded only as a temporary alternative to meet the immediate necessities of the Government, and to facilitate the sale of the national loan, and the gradual substitution of the present circulation of the banks for that furnished by the Government. In urging this proposition, the Secretary disclaims any unfriendly feeling towards our banks, and gracefully acknowledges the patriotic and uniform support given by them to the government in the darkest periods of its financial history. But, while recognising their liberal devotion to the maintenance of the public credit, he refers to the privilege they enjoy, as makers of currency, and very justly concludes that, while other species of valuable property are taxed, a small tax upon their present circulation can be deemed neither unfair nor unreasonable. The amount of this tax is left for Congress to determine.

A very interesting part of the report is that which [illegible] the present condition of gold. Unscrupulous financiers are in the habit of saying that the present high price of gold is owing to the large issues of Government currency, and that this amount is a virtual depreciation of Treasury notes. The Secretary explains and [illegible] this error. The advance in gold is attributed to the fact that, on the suspension of specie payments, gold became an article of merchandize, and ceased to be used as currency. Taking advantage of this, together with the fear of foreign holders of American securities, and our own timid and nervous people, speculators produced an unnatural and factitious advance, which has been steadily receding since October 15th, when it reached its highest point. It is shown that the rise is not entirely attributable to an increase in the issues of paper currencies by a very cogent recapitulation of facts. On November 1st, 1861, the total currency, including United States notes, bank circulation, and coin, was $435,140,000; and on the same date in 1862 the aggregate currency of the country, the coin having been withdrawn from circulation—was $577,101,000—a very slight increase compared with the increased "demands of payments," growing out of the gigantic operations of the war. Moreover, trade which, at the former date, had not recovered from the first depression occasioned by the outbreak of hostilities, had revived, and a period of remarkable and almost unprecedented activity had succeeded to the deeper stagnation, thus really increasing the demand for a circulating medium wherewith to conduct exchanges. That there has been no material depreciation in the currency may be inferred from the fact that the prices of many [illegible] articles of home production and consumption have not materially advanced in price. In other words, the Secretary shows, by quotations from the market reports, that a Government dollar will buy as much wheat or pork and [illegible] as it would buy before the [illegible] other conclusive argument against the theory of great redundancy of circulation is the decline in the price of gold since October last, in the face of a very considerable increase in the amount of legal-tender notes.

Colored Emigration.—The recently published foreign correspondence shows that our Government proposed to a [illegible] American Congress that free colored people of African descent in the British colonies, but Earl Russell declined the proposition.

Gen. Wool.—Major-General Wool has been assigned to the command of the military district of Eastern Virginia, and will have his headquarters at Fortress Monroe. He succeeds General Dix, who has been assigned to the command of the Department of the Susquehanna, with headquarters at Baltimore

HOW THE BOYS MADE A NEWS PAPER

"When will your paper be out, Clarence?" asked Robert Morris, "the boys are all waiting for the first number, and we expect that the subscribers for the large weeklies will stop their papers when yours is published."

"You needn't make fun of us, Rob; nor do I want to brag; but when The Monitor appears, you will open your eyes, and to some purpose, too When you want us to publish an article for you, we'll think about it."

"I will be your war correspondent. You must put at the head of my articles, in black letters 'From our Special,' 'All quiet on the Potomac,' 'Stonewall Jackson not captured,' 'Washington safe.' Ah, you'll be glad to publish them."

Clarence Morris' father was a printer in a news paper office, and had promised to teach his son during the winter evenings, after he was through with his lessons, how to set type; and Clarence proposed to take John Fox as a partner, and start a paper. The boys all agreed to subscribe for it, and the new firm was anxious to commence business

As Clarence came running into the house one afternoon, he ran against a heavy box in the hall; and after rubbing his bruised shin, he looked at the box and saw the names Morris & Fox on the cover. He ran as quickly as he came in, to tell John that the type had come

"Hurrah!" said John, "suppose we advertise that The Monitor will be out next week"

"I wish we could; but I guess you forget that we must set all the type ourselves. Father says that we must start as Franklin did. So get up early every morning, and come to my house, and I will teach you what I learned the night before, and we shall get along bravely."

That night, after supper, Mr Morris said:

"Now, my son, when you have learned your lessons, I will give you a new lesson to learn; but you must not let your paper interfere with your studies, for if you are going to be an editor and printer, you will have need to study hard."

I think it took Clarence a little longer to learn his lessons that night; his thoughts went from his geography to what would appear in the first number of the paper, but finally he announced himself ready for type-setting.

"Let us bring in the box then, and we'll commence operations. Here's a jumbled up mess for you," said Mr. Morris, as he lifted the cover off "When type is in this shape, printers call it pi Here are letters, figures, spaces, and quadrats with a few et-ceteras, which I will explain as we have occasion to use them; this is all we shall need for The Monitor, but in printing-offices they require many other things. We have four styles of letters—the bourgeois for your editorial articles, brevier for stories, nonpareil for the advertisements, and the great primer for the head-lines of the advertisements; but I suppose you will not need the advertising type."

"Oh, yes, I will. Mr. James, the dry-goods merchant, has promised to take a column, and will pay five cents a line."

"Good! you are starting well, my son, for it costs money to print a newspaper, although some persons seem to think otherwise. But I overlooked the boxes. All this type must be assorted and placed in these little square cells or boxes—this is called distributing; place then two cases so that they will slope forward, one behind the other; the upper case is for the capital letters. You see there are fifty-two boxes or cells, and as there are twenty-six letters in the alphabet, there are just twice that number of boxes, intended to hold large and small capitals, side by side—the large ones on the left, and the small ones on the right. The lower-case contains boxes of a variety of sizes; those most central and convenient to the hand are largest, and in those we will put the letters to be most used."

This explanation takes less time than Mr Morris was engaged in distributing the type, and, after finishing, he asked Clarence if he would remember all that he had said

"Try me, father. If the boys knew how hard this is, I think they would pay their subscriptions in advance, and not wait (as they say) until I have published six numbers"

"You must have patience, son It took a number of men a great many years to place this art where we find it. Now suppose we try to set up the words, 'Patronize the Printer.' These are words you are particularly interested in, as you are about to start a paper. We will write them out, and put the copy before us. Printers say you must follow copy, if it goes out the window. Take this little iron tray, called a composing stick, in your left hand. What letter do you want?"

"A capital P," said Clarence, looking through the boxes of the Lower case

"Are you trying to remember, sir?—if so, try again!"

"Oh, yes! the upper case is the one for capitals Well, here it is What is this little nick or notch in the type for?"

"The nicks are made on the side of every type, a little from the bottom of the letter, and the type must be placed with these little notches from you Set the letter P at the left-hand corner of the stick. Here is 'a.' Now watch me closely, and I will slowly set up the sentences. It is done Now practise on this all the evening, and to-morrow night I will see how you progress."

John came to the house next morning, and Clarence told him all he could remember of what his father had said. After he had studied over the case some time, he asked, "Shall we advertise that The Monitor will be out next week?"

When Mr. Morris came home the next day, he brought a can of printer's ink, paper, a composition roller, which is made of glue and molasses, and a proof planer, which is a block of wood with a level surface, and with a piece of cloth drawn tight over it. At eight o'clock Clarence was ready, after studying hard on his grammar, to take another lesson.

"Now," said his father, "let us see what you have done;" and taking the type which made the sentence "Patronize the Printer," he set it in a small iron frame called a chase, and made it fast by putting in bits of wood called quoins, inked it with the roller, dampened a piece of paper, placed it on the type, and took the planer and applied the mallet. This made an impression on the paper, and is called taking a proof. "But see, it reads, 'Patronise the Printer;' you have not put in your spaces. There was once a barber who had on his sign,

What do you think
I will shave you for nothing
And give you something to drink

A man went in on the supposed invitation, and after he was shaved, asked for something to drink

"'No,' said the barber, 'you do not read my sign right. I say, What! do you think I will shave you for nothing, and give you something to drink?'"

Clarence laughed, and said he now saw the use of punctuation better than he ever did before.

"Not only punctuation," said the father, "but in printing, as in writing, you must have spaces between each word."

After about four weeks the paper was all set up, and there appeared in it editorial articles, stories, and poetry, all written by the boys and girls of Newton, and one article by Robert Mervin. Mr J. Rathbone thought it a good enough medium to give the publishers his advertisement of SKATES AND SKATING FOR BOYS and paid the same price that Mr. James did.

So the boys succeeded finely with their newspaper—getting new subscribers and new advertisements every week. We hope they will not stagger like their greater brethren of the press, under the present high price of paper

---

A young needle-woman named Emeline Courtois, residing in the Rue de la Butte aux Cailles on returning home from delivering some work, was surprised to find a key in her door, and a strange, new-looking man in the room, engaged in making up all her [illegible]. Without pausing to inquire her presence of mind, the young woman asked, "Is Mad lle Emeline Courtois at home?" "Ah, my niece, you say," the fellow replied with the utmost coolness, "she's gone to an errand Call again in an hour." The young woman went down stairs in all haste, [illegible] immediately with a policeman, and the thief was taken to the police office.

ODE

OF THE UNION PARTY IN CHARLESTON IN 1832

In the following ode breathes a spirit which must commend itself to every patriotic citizen. It was written by the Rev. Dr. Gilman, of Charleston, and was sung at the Fourth of July Celebration, in 1832, by the Union party of that city. I had the satisfaction to be present, and to assist in the choir. The procession had moved to the Baptist church, to listen to an oration by Colonel Drayton, one of the influential men of the Unionists, while the Nullifiers were headed by the great Haynes, by Hamilton and others:

[illegible]
Hail, our spreading kindred here!
Hail, thou banner not yet torn,
Waving o'er the free!
While this day, in festal throng,
Millions swell the patriot's song,
Shall not we the notes prolong!
[illegible]

[illegible]
Who would draw the insidious line!
Though by birth one spot be mine,
Dear in all the rest—
[illegible]
Dear the central mountain band,
Dear [illegible]
Dear the prairie West!

By our ties entire and free,
By our law's deep-rooted tree,
By the past's proud memory,
By our Washington—
[illegible]
By our hopes—bright, buoyant, young,
By the tie of country strung,
We will still be one

Fathers! have ye bled in vain!
Ages, must ye droop again!
Maker, shall we rashly stain
Blessings sent by Thee!
[illegible]
While before thy throne we bow,
Ever to maintain, as now,
"Union—Liberty!"

Choir, and organ, and harmony, were drowned by the wild ejaculations; but it started feelings not unsuited to the sacredness of the place of meeting, and the light of the uplifted eye had to struggle through tears, and there was not a man present who would not, at that moment, have cheerfully sacrificed life, fortune, and position to "Union—Liberty!"

N Y Journal of Com

THE SPREAD EAGLE STYLE

The editor of the Methodist Protestant, Baltimore, in answer to a correspondent, thus gives his view of the spread eagle style of pulpit performance:

Young Flowery has a pretty good delivery, and if he would always be natural and not try to be theatrical, he would please. There is not much practical sense in him, for the reason that he has not cared to supply his mind with facts, and the information that belongs to them, which are always the basis of strong common sense He has a natural love for the beautiful, but it is uncultivated, and he too often mistakes a daub of flashy coloring for a finished picture Unfortunately he has fallen into the error of supposing that he has a towering imagination This is a sad misfortune. It is bad enough for a young preacher to have a towering imagination; and if any one of our readers is in possession of such a faculty, the sooner he gets rid of it the better. But with Young Flowery it is only a mistaken fancy; and the result is, he supposes himself not unfrequently to be towering, when he is only floundering. In such moments some of his critical friends are wont to say, "Young Flowery is now soaring in the spread eagle style;" but they, of course, speak ironically, and mean not to degrade the spread eagle by any such reference

The other day Young Flowery was making a temperance speech. Incidentally he referred to the physical effects of intoxication. This opened the way for a regular spread on the wondrous machinery of our physical organism; the fact that "we are fearfully and wonderfully made," was exhibited with an energy and passion rarely heard. By the time he had gotten through with his eloquent description, the people had pretty well forgotten that they were listening to a temperance lecture, and it required no great stretch of imagination to fancy the brother a lecturer on minute anatomy.

After a while some allusion was made to the superiority of mind over matter. Instantly Young Flowery began to soar. Mountains, forests, rivers, lakes, oceans, cataracts, whirlwinds and volcanoes, passed like a rapid panorama before the audience. Everything was as still as death. The earnestness of the speaker was startling. But the temperance cause was almost forgotten. It required a coming down to get himself and his audience back again to the subject under consideration

Presently he touched upon the national effects of the vice. Here was a very fine opportunity for assuring the audience that a profound patriotism pervaded his bosom. The early history of the country suggested the name of George Washington, and Washington suggested the Revolutionary War, and the war suggested the Star Spangled Banner, and the banner suggested the American Eagle, and what with them all, as they one after another awakened bursts of oratory, the people were quite carried away; but the temperance cause was far in the rear, and half the audience momentarily supposed the Fourth of July had come this year in the month of March

We notice one peculiarity in Young Flowery which is very apt to be found in "spread eagle orators." He is very fond of employing scientific terms; unfortunately he does not use them with a clear perception of what they mean. He almost invariably says strata for stratum and phenomena for phenomenon. This only exposes his ignorance to a few, however; the majority think he is learned, and so it passes off very well.

The writer of this was somewhat inclined to the spread eagle style in his boyhood, and can therefore sympathize with those who have a leaning that way. But he has lived to learn the folly of it, and is exceedingly anxious to induce others to avoid it Use a plain but forcible vocabulary; and be more solicitous to enforce your theme than to ornament it. Ornament is a good thing in its way; but it requires no little judgment to use it in its proper proportions

FARM HOUSES

A correspondent of the New Hampshire Journal of Agriculture says:—"In passing through [illegible] when [illegible] the only appearance of the farmers' premises. Bleak, barren, and unsightly, with hardly a tree, shrub, or flower to [illegible] who would wonder if such were to be his dwelling [illegible] out, and try his fortunes in some more lucrative business? Contentment in such a place would prove him something more or less than human

---

Cows eat Peas [illegible] more nourishing, as food for cattle than one hundred pounds of hay, and twenty-five pounds of peas are equal to double the weight of oats

---

It is said that in some of the agricultural districts the tax levied by the Federal Government will not pay for the collecting of it

MAJOR GENERALS OF VOLUNTEERS.

WHERE BORN, AND FROM WHAT STATES APPOINTED.

New York, directly and indirectly, gives eleven Major Generals to the war Of these, Major-Generals Henry W. Slocum, John J. Peck, Geo W. Morell, Schuyler Hamilton and George Granger, were born in and appointed from the State John A. Dix was born in New Hampshire, and Edwin D. Morgan and Edwin V Sumner, in Massachusetts, though all were appointed from New York Samuel R Curtis, born in New York, was appointed from Iowa

Massachusetts gives seven Major-Generals to the war, of whom only one was born in and from [illegible] Nathaniel P Banks. Major General B. F. [illegible] New Hampshire Darius M Couch, in New York, while Edwin D. Morgan and Edwin V. Sumner were appointed from New York, Erasmus D Keyes, from Maine, and gallant old "fighting Joe" Hooker, from California

Ohio is prolific in Major Generals, and literally swarms with Brigadiers, owing to the activity of Mr Chase on behalf of his friends. Ohio has nine Major-Generals, of whom Irvin M'Dowell, W T Sherman, A McD McCook, R C Schenck, Wm. S Rosecrans and S B M'Pherson are natives of her soil. U S Grant (Ohio born) was appointed from Illinois, and Don Carlos Buell, from Indiana. J. D. Cox, appointed from Ohio, was born in Canada.

Illinois has five Major Generals, of whom not one was born on her soil. David Hunter was born in the District of Columbia, John Pope and John A M'Clernand in Kentucky, U S Grant, in Ohio, and Stephen A Hurlbut, (brother to William H. Hurlbut, of The Times,) in South Carolina.

Missouri has two Major-Generals.—Ethan A Hitchcock, born in Vermont, and Franz Sigel, born in Germany

Rhode Island has one Major-General,—Ambrose E Burnside, born in Indiana (Banks, Burnside, McClellan, and Rosecrans, were all, previously to the war, attached to the Illinois Central Railroad.)

Indiana has three double-starred officers,—Lewis Wallace, Thomas A Morris, born in it, and Don Carlos Buell, appointed from it, though born in Ohio.

Iowa has one Major General,—Sam R Curtis, [illegible] New York

Kentucky gives birth to six Major Generals, and appoints three, to wit:—Cassius M Clay, William Nelson (deceased,) and Thomas L Crittenden. Astronomer General Ormsby M Mitchell was [illegible] New York, and [illegible] and M Cook[illegible] from Ireland [illegible] only and both.

Virginia gives two Major-Generals, and appoints one,—George H. Thomas The other Virginian, Jesse L. Reno, ("dead on the field of honor,") was appointed from Pennsylvania.

Pennsylvania gives birth to four Major-Generals, and appoints five. George Cadwalader, John G. Parke, S P Heintzelman, (that "grim veteran,") and Wm B Franklin, were born in and appointed from the "Keystone." Jesse L Reno was of Virginian birth.

New Hampshire has four Major-Generals in service, of whom but one, John G Foster, was appointed from her. General Dix was appointed from New York, B F Butler, from Massachusetts, and Fitz John Porter, (a New Englander, with strong Southern proclivities of old,) from the District of Columbia

The District of Columbia, by the way, appoints two Major-Generals,—Edward O C. Ord, born in Maryland, and Fitz John Porter, in New Hampshire. General Hunter, born in it, was appointed from Illinois.

Maine appoints one Major-General,—Erasmus D Keyes, born in Massachusetts.

New Jersey has no Major-General. The only one she ever had,—Philip Kearney, ("Philip, my King,") also "dead on the field of honor," was born in New York.

California is, of course, too much in her infancy to have given birth to any Major General. But in the selection of Joseph Hooker, born in Massachusetts, to be her standard bearer, she evinces a taste and judgment entitling her to become the mother of Generals immediately

Michigan appoints one Major General, but he is not a Michigander. Israel B. Richardson was born in Vermont.

Vermont's only native born Major General is William F. Smith Ethan A Hitchcock (the Herald's "Julius Cæsar Hitchcock,") was appointed from Missouri, and Israel B. Richardson, from Michigan

Connecticut (thrifty State!) thinks Major-Generals [illegible] Halleck, and so gives her own two to her two, John Sedgwick and Horatio Wright

South Carolina comes last on the list, [illegible] proudly taking the responsible duty of appointing one of the "still-necked Princetia generation" in the person of Stephen A Hurlbut, an officer who, though not devoid of faults, bears a deservedly high reputation for gallantry, coolness, and the qualities which most adorn a commander.

Why Wisconsin is not represented on the list, we are at a loss to imagine She is, of course, too young to have sons in the highest positions of command, but surely there are soldiers in her ranks deserving promotion Is there no Jersey [illegible] gallant Kearney's death? Even little Delaware might put forth a claim, basing it on the brilliant services of the Admiral she has given us—S F Dupont—an officer whose superior does not exist in any navy of the world. Maryland and Kansas are also without Major-Generals; although, doubtless, General James H. Lane would have no objections to the pay and handsome emoluments of the office; while, possibly, Brigadier General Emory might be attached more warmly to our service by the addition of another star to each shoulder-strap. Minnesota does not treat Brigadier General Shields well in neglecting to demand his promotion; while Oregon would have had a noble representative among our Major Generals had not death, on the field of battle, cut off the brilliant career of Gen. Isaac J. Stevens.

ODDS AND ENDS.

GRAMMATICAL ADVICE.

When man and wife at odds fall out,
Let Syntax be your tutor;
'Twixt masculine and feminine,
What should one be but neuter.

As daylight can be seen through the smallest holes, so the most trifling things show a person's character.

A German prince, when introduced to an Englishman, by the way of appropriately commencing the conversation, observed, "It is bad weather to-day." The Englishman shrugged his shoulders and replied, "Yes—but it is better than none."

When ex-Senator Truman Smith, of Connecticut, returned to Washington with his youthful, accomplished and handsome Alabama wife, some one asked how many slaves she had "Only one!" said Mr. S., placing his hand upon his heart

Teacher: "What part of speech is the word egg?" Boy: "Noun, sir" "What is its gender?" "Can't tell, sir." "Is it masculine, feminine or neuter?" "Can't say, sir, till it's hatched." "Well, then, my lad, you can't tell me the case" "Oh, yes, the shell, sir"

A lady at sea, full of apprehension in a gale of wind, [illegible] among other [illegible] questions, "We shall go to the bottom—how my head swims." "Madam, never fear," said one of the sailors, "you can never go to the bottom while your head swims"

"Well, what next?" said Mrs Partington, as she interrupted Ike, who was reading the war news.—"The pickets were driven in five miles? That will make a strong fence, indeed! I suppose they had to be driven in deep, to keep the [illegible] from digging [illegible]

A celebrated painter of animals states that a race horse will clear from twenty to twenty four feet at a bound; and from the impression left on the turf, he infers that a horse, at full gallop, [illegible] and the mode is one, two, three, four, and then the bound

A person was recently called into court for the purpose of proving the correctness of a doctor's bill, and asked by the lawyer whether "the doctor did not make several visits after the patient was out of danger?" "No," replied the witness, "I considered the patient in danger as long as the doctor continued his visits."

A TIMELY SCRUBBING.

"Abigail! water—soap—towels—quick!—a brush—get me his tooth-brush, nail brush, scrubber, anything! Hurry, quick—the brown soap, anything! Oh! fill his mouth—plaster it in—the nasty, [illegible] stuff! Hold him, James! hold his mouth open, head back—fast, James!" and all this in a perfect tempest of excitement; and hastily throwing a towel around the boy, and rolling up her sleeves, she enters upon the cleansing operation.

"Good gracious! Mrs. Osborne, what is the matter? You're goin' on dreffal," said Abigail, hardly knowing whether to laugh or cry at the [illegible]

"Has he hurt himself, Mrs. Osborne?" ventured to inquire James, holding the struggling boy in his firm grasp "Has he got the toothache? What ails you, Willie?"

"Tobacco! James, tobacco!" eagerly resumed Mrs. Osborne. "Our boy, our Willie, chewing pig tail!—had his mouth full—teeth all black—tongue all dirty—breath—ah! pah! shall I ever get it clean?" And in went the soap and the dripping brush, until the child's mouth looked like a shaving-pot, and he was nearly strangled in his efforts to resist the offensive application

"Hold still, child, hold still," she exclaimed, "soap's clean, but tobacco isn't! Ah! the dirty, poison stuff! Hold still; I'll scrub it off if I can There, now, rinse your mouth; rinse it well, gargle the water in your throat;" and the mother, suffering the flurry to subside, sank into a chair The three witnesses stood by amazed.

"If ever I need such a time!" said Miss Abigail, as she returned, laughing, to her cooking-stove

"Soap's healthy, they say it cures bile," remarked James, dryly, as he proceeded to his ordinary routine of business; "but I declare 'tain't so pleasant to have it chucked down your throat [illegible]

"Rinse it well, Willie," said his mother; "take plenty of water. Three, four, a dozen times"

There was no need of that exhortation, for more [illegible] and purges [illegible] were [illegible] that stubborn case soap out of the poor child's mouth. At last, after gasping and swallowings innumerable, he recovered his speech, while tears of anger, fright, surprise, or shame, or perhaps all together, flowed freely down his cheeks.

"You're too bad, mother; you 'most killed me 'Twan't pigtail at all—'twas honey-dew."

"'Twas tobacco, child, tobacco; that's what it was, and that's enough. No matter what the name is, no matter how much they honey and sweeten it up, 'twas tobacco, the filthy, poisonous weed in my Willie's mouth. What do you think father 'll say?"

That was an unanswerable question. Willie didn't like even to think about it So his mother, who, by this time, had resumed her usual tranquility, wiped the boy's face, and leading him back to the sitting-room, answered it for him

"He'll say, Willie, that he is ashamed, mortified, that a child of his should do such a coarse, vulgar, dirty thing. He'll say that he is grieved that you, knowing what his opinion and practice are about the use of tobacco, should go contrary to his wishes, and disobey and dishonor him by chewing it. He'll be surprised, perfectly astonished, that, after what was said upon the subject only the other night, you should slyly and deceitfully commit such a fault. Willie, he'll understand now, and so shall I, why you did not join the society in school, and why you were not willing to remain and hear your teacher's lecture. O Willie! my son, my dear child, I would not have believed it possible that you should have acted so wickedly" The mother was silent, and her face was red. Willie stood looking earnestly into the fire, the big tears rolling down his cheeks.

The Boy's Champion.

SOMNAMBULISM EXTRAORDINARY

The Courrier de l'Isere relates an extraordinary instance of somnambulism in a young workman at Grenoble. Two nights ago, while fast asleep, he left his house, descended towards the Quai de Saint Laurent, now in course of construction, and after walking about on that the stones and rubbish, went to board a boat at most [illegible] point, and then proceeded on the narrow planks which served for carrying the material to the landing place He afterwards, proceeded to the suspension bridge, and jumping lightly on one of the iron wire cables, effected the perilous ascent to the top of one of the lofty constructions on which the wires are drawn He there sat for a few minutes, turning his head right and left, as though looking at the number of persons who, in breathless anxiety, were watching his movements. He afterwards descended by [illegible] walked along the parapet of the quay, and returning to his lodgings, entered his bed in safety.

FAREWELL TO THE MILKMAID

Every one knows the charming part the milk maid has borne in all English pastoral writings Poet and novelist alike have written of her simple charms; but if all accounts are true, a recent Yankee invention will banish the milkmaid into the limbo of wooden ships and other obsolete matters. It appears that a milking machine, which had not previously excited any great attention in our own country, was on exhibition at the great London Fair Every day at eleven o'clock, the inventor milked a cow, to the admiration of a multitude of spectators. It is done by the application of a set of pump by which the four teats are all milked at once. Orders began to come in for it, and the inventor sold his right for $2[illegible] with a per centage on each sale. It is said that enough have already been sold to cover the first cost.

Journal of Agriculture.

SWALLOWED A HOLE.

The other day Charlie, five years old, found one of those curious bone-rimmed circles, which I believe ladies have named eyelets, and while playing in the garden swallowed it. The family were in the house busily engaged on a work of entomology, when Charlie ran in with mouth wide open, and eyes distended to their utmost capacity.

His mother caught him by the arm, and trembling with that deep anxiety which only a mother can feel inspired—

"What is the matter? What has happened?" The urchin, all agape, managed to articulate: "Water!"

It was brought him, when, after drinking [illegible]

"Oh! mother, I swallowed a hole!"

"Swallowed a hole?"

"Yes, mother, swallowed a hole with a piece of ivory around it!"

INCHES IN A BUSHEL

The American bushel contains 2150[illegible] cubic inches [illegible] English Winchester bushel. The new English Imperial bushel has 2218 1–5th inches, (or exactly 2218 192.) A box one foot square, inside measure, requires to be very nearly 7¼ inches high inside to hold half a bushel, or about 15 inches high to hold a bushel, (exactly 14 95 inches.) A box 18 inches square, and 9¼ inches deep holds very nearly a bushel The exact depth is 9 55 inches. A box containing 56 cubic feet holds 45 bushels of grain. To get the bushel contents of a box: multiply its inside length, breadth, and height together; multiply the product by 45, and divide this by 56. To get the size of a box holding [illegible] by 56, and divide the product by 45, and you have the number of feet required The height will depend upon the length and width. Example:—For 100 bushels, multiplying 100 by 56, and dividing by 45, gives about 124⅘ for the feet required This is almost exactly 5 feet every way.—American

Family Circle.

For the Christian Recorder.

LETTER FROM UNCLE JEREMY.

Sober Cottage December 10th, 1861.

DEAR LITTLE FRIENDS:—I am only going to write to about half of you to-day. You will all read my letter, I hope, but I only intend it for my boy readers Some day again I hope to say something to the girls, when the boys will be, not forgotten, but passed over My little boys, do you not begin to fear the cold weather has made Uncle Jeremy a little cross and that he is now going to scold? No, I guess not, for you know I am not in the habit of scolding much, preferring to influence you rather by kind and gentle means. I want to give you some advice respecting your treatment of your sisters I am moved to do this from having on one or two occasions seen some little boys behave very rudely towards their sisters, who I know loved them with all their hearts. Nearly all of you have sisters. Some of you, unfortunately, have not. Some of you [illegible] who have, I desire to say, first, speak kindly and pleasantly to them. O, it is no offensive to me to hear a boy speak in a cross, angry tone to his little [illegible] impatient [illegible] ish. How much better is it to say, "Yes, dear sister," than a harsh "Yes, it is!" Does it not sound better to say, "No, thank you, sister," than to eject an ugly "naw" from your mouth? I have heard boys speaking to their sisters do it in such style as this: "You go away—I don't like you" "Nau, I won't" "There now, I told you so." "Yes, I did, and I don't care for you either." "I will, and I don't think it is any [illegible] If you [illegible] of you be so rude—not to say wicked? If so, will you not quit it immediately? And again, not tenderly towards your sisters. Remember they are not strong as you are, and cannot bear so much When you go to Sabbath School some of these mornings in the country, do not forget to carry your sister's book for her, and help her over the fences, and take her hand when you come to a muddy place on the road. Or, if you be in the city, do not start and run off from her, but walk prettily by her side Will not she feel much happier for that? Will not you? I [illegible] from a sister whom God took, but who have one or more left Little boy, do you recollect how you felt when that little sister was sick? Did you not promise to yourself, and to God, that if she would get well, you would always treat her well? I think you did Now, then, be kind to those who remain, for they may not be always with you. Your sister, little boy, is one of the very best friends you have I will not put her before your father and mother, but beside them Love her, do all you can to make her happy When you [illegible] her love How careful she will be that your clothes are well made and well kept! How she [illegible] chiefs! I can recollect how my sister helped to fit me out when I started to college. She saw that every button was on tightly, and every button-hole securely sewed. She got me a little box, into which she put some extra buttons, some needles and thread, a needle case, pin-cushion, etc. One thing I must tell you about the pin cushion. When she was putting the pins into it she arranged some of them so as to form the initials of her name—A. H J. Those pins I have never removed yet, though the box and cushion have been carried around many hundred miles. Still there is the A H J. of pin heads Perhaps the pins are rusting—I never pulled one out to see. I do not think I would remove them though they were the last pins in the universe. I have looked at those pins sometimes silently spelling [illegible] eyes while I thought how poorly her love had been requited Now, my little friends, when you are starting from home some day your sister will do just in the same way for you, hence be kind to your sister. And when you are far away among strangers, all the time enjoying the conveniences your sister has provided, you will not then have to mourn your thoughtlessness and folly

UNCLE JEREMY.

ALL ABOUT A KITE

"You can't come, now, that settles the matter. You broke my kite this morning, and I told you I would pay you for it."

"But I didn't intend to do it, Sam, and I am very sorry; besides, grandma told you to take me," and little Bob brushed a tear away from his cheek "Do take me, and I'll make you a new one when I get big"

"No, sir; mend your manners first;" and Sam went quickly off in the direction of his grandfather's

Mrs Wilson soon after found little Bob sobbing piteously; and with childlike simplicity he told his mother all his trouble, how he had trodden on Sam's kite in the morning accidentally, and broken it, and that his brother would not forgive him, but had left him at home to punish him for it "And you know, mother," he added, "I wouldn't do it on purpose"

"Samuel," replied the mother, "has acted very unjustly. He should have instantly forgiven you for the trifling harm you did him Come with me into the house," she said, lifting the little fellow in her arms, "and we will await your brother's return; I am afraid he has not yet prayed. Forgive us our debts as we forgive our debtors,"

"Are all these for me, mother? Two, four, six apples—and such fine fellows. O, what beauties! Don't I wish Sam was here! Shall I save them until he comes, and then we will have a 'gay old time?'" Little Bob soon forgot all his sorrows, and was ready to meet his brother and share with him the pretty apples his mother had given him. Soon Sam came home He did not look as if his trip had improved his temper

"You have returned early, Samuel," said his mother, not raising her eyes from off her knitting

"Yes, ma'am; they were all too cross for me over at grandpa's this afternoon, so I didn't stay"

"That is not usual," suggested his mother.

"No; but grandma said she knew something was up or Bob would have been with me, and she scolded so for not bringing him, that I am angry at every body"

Little Bob looked slyly across the room at Sam He scarcely knew whether to venture to speak "Sam, I am not angry at you for leaving me Come over here, look at these apples, all our own; ma gave them to us, and when I get big I'll make you a fine kite; won't I, mother?"

Mrs. Wilson made no reply. Sam seeing the large, beautiful fruit, joined his brother, and soon chatted away as merrily as if nothing had happened. The mother, however, was thinking seriously over the little accident to the kite

Sam was on his knees at prayer at the side of his little bed. Bob was already covered up with the clothes, and fast asleep. "Forgive us our debts as we forgive our debtors, and lead us—"

"That's right, ma"

"Yes, my son, the words are; but why do you pray that petition, and act as you have done with your brother to-day? Is God to forgive you as [illegible] was a slight one; but the punishment you inflicted severe. You know his delight when he accompanies you. Try and learn to do as you would be done by It will prove a golden rule"

"I will try, ma; for I have felt so badly ever since I acted so to Bob, and he is such a forgiving little fellow himself"

"Ah, I am glad you have noticed that Take a lesson from him, my son Now finish your prayers, kiss your brother, and pray to be blessed with a kind, forgiving disposition, then I will never hear you saying again, 'I am angry with every body,' and you may have reason to hope your Father in heaven will forgive you"

Sam may live to be an old man, but he will never forget "All about that kite."

Advertisements.

TO THE READERS OF THE CHRISTIAN IN [illegible]

A CARD

[illegible] CUSTOMER MADE CLOTHING AT MODERATE PRICES, and finding that many gentlemen would prefer their clothing MADE THEMSELVES if they only could at the same time REALLY FIRST CLASS STYLES, and at REALLY REASONABLE PRICES, we have, at the earnest solicitation of our patrons, organized, in connection with our extensive Ready Made Clothing Establishment, a CUSTOMER DEPARTMENT, in which the prominent features are, The Fine and Medium Makes! is made up in First Class Style in [illegible]

M PRICES FAR LOWER THAN HAS BEEN CUSTOMARY 4th. A corps of the most celebrated cutters in this country An extensive assortment of the choicest imported and domestic fabrics from the New York and Philadelphia markets, suitable for [illegible] Coats, and Vests, always on hand

In our Ready Made Sales Rooms can always be found every variety and style of well made fashionable clothing Spring stock now [illegible]

☞ A visit is solicited

WANAMAKER & BROWN,
[illegible]
"OAK HALL."
[illegible] SOUTH SIXTH AND MARKET STREETS

[illegible]
McALLISTER AND BROTHER,
OPTICIANS,
[illegible]
Nearly Opposite Masonic Hall,
(Lately removed from the old stand, Chestnut St. above Second)
Spectacles, Mathematical Instruments, Spy Glasses, Philosophical Apparatus, Opera Glasses, Thermometers Microscopes, and Microscopic Objects, Time Measures, Pocket [illegible]
Compasses Levels &c. Wholesale and Retail.
☞ Our priced and illustrated catalogue furnished on [illegible]

PURE WHOLESOME BREAD
[illegible]
To the most pure, wholesome and nutritious BREAD that can be [illegible]
[illegible]
to all [illegible]
48 1y [illegible] W E CAMP & Co.

PIANOS & MELODEONS
The largest most elegant, and cheapest stock in America and at the most reduced prices. All instruments sold are fully warranted
[illegible]
Nos. 18 and 20 South Second St. Philadelphia

KURTZ'S CHURCH HISTORY,
NOW [illegible]
[illegible]
A TEXT-BOOK OF CHURCH HISTORY,
[illegible]
COMPLETE IN TWO VOLUMES
VOLUME I—To the Reformation. VOLUME II—From the Reformation
PRICE $3 00
"It is perhaps the best manual extant on this subject, in any language, and better adapted than any other to the tastes and habits of students of theology in our hosts. It is faithful, terse, graphic and is enriched with a modern [illegible] Standard
"It is an admirable work of reference. The history is extremely condensed, and a vast amount of information is given in the fewest possible words. It is particularly full in accounts of the doctrinal development of theological questions, and of the operation of political influences on the history of the Church. The classifications, and arrangements are excellent, the references to authorities are everywhere abundant, and the leading outlines of the history are presented with great clearness."—New Englander
L & B ALSO PUBLISH
[illegible] MANUAL [illegible] Designed chiefly as a guide to the Divine Plan of Salvation, according to the Historical Development. Seventh American edition. In one vol. Price $1 25
The admirable Manual of Kurtz [illegible] translated by Dr [illegible], constitutes an [illegible] contribution to our theological literature It has been [illegible] received by Christians of all denominations [illegible]
[illegible] Price 1 00
KURTZ'S HISTORY OF THE OLD COVENANT. 2 vols. [illegible] Price 3 00
[illegible] Royal Octavo. [illegible] Price 6 00
LINDSAY & BLAKISTON Publishers,
sub16 25 South Sixth St. above Chestnut, Philadelphia

SABBATH SCHOOL LIBRARIES
[illegible] NEW AND [illegible]
[illegible]
RECENTLY PUBLISHED FOR LIBRARIES
PICTORIAL CATALOGUES MAILED FREE TO [illegible]
These books are also filled with the most interesting matter, written with great care, and beautifully illustrated. Calculated not simply to amuse, but to be instructive and improve the children that they may become children of God
ALSO, a choice selection of books, beautifully bound in [illegible] covers, for the ARMY AND NAVY
All the publications of the American Tract Society, instituted at Boston in 1814, may be found at
[illegible]
JOHN O. BROUGHTON'S,
and
NICHOLSON BROUGHTON, Jr.

JOHN COCHRAN & CO.,
Importers and Jobbers of
Hosiery, Gloves and Fancy Dry Goods,
NO. 18 NORTH FOURTH ST., ABOVE MARKET,
PHILADELPHIA.
Ribbons and White Goods, Undershirts and Drawers, Embroideries and Handkerchiefs, Watches and Jewelry, Combs, Brushes, &c.

DR. J. GOODWILLIE,
DENTIST.
[illegible]
PHILADELPHIA

SUPERIOR FRENCH CONFECTIONS.
[illegible]
Put up neatly in 1, 2 and 5 pound boxes, with or extra charge Also, A LARGE VARIETY OF HOME MANUFACTURE suited to [illegible] Holiday presents A fine selection of Fruits and Nuts constantly on hand A MILLER, 1012 Chestnut St.

1862. 1862.
[illegible]
THE CAPACITY OF THE ROAD IS NOW EQUAL TO ANY IN THE COUNTRY.
[illegible]
The Express mail Day Mail and Fast Line Sabbath excepted
Mail Train leaves Philadelphia at [illegible] 8 00 A M
Fast Line " " [illegible] 11 30 A M
Express Train " " [illegible] 10 45 P M
Parkesburg Accommodation leaves Philadelphia at [illegible] 12 00 M
Harrisburg " " [illegible] 2 20 P M
Lancaster " " [illegible] 6 00 P M
Trains for West Chester at 8 A M, 3 45 P M, and 6 P M
Passengers for Northern Pennsylvania, Elmira, Buffalo, Niagara Falls and intermediate points, leaving Philadelphia at 8 A M and 3 30 P M, go directly through
For further information apply at the Passenger Station, S E cor of Fourteenth and Market Streets

PITTSBURG, FORT WAYNE & CHICAGO RAILWAY,
TO ALL POINTS IN THE WEST NORTH WEST AND [illegible]
In direct connection with the Pennsylvania Central Railroad
SUMMER ARRANGEMENT,
TIME TO CINCINNATI AND QUICK AND TO INDIANAPOLIS, St. Louis and Chicago shorter, than by any other route

	Fast Line	Mail	Express
Leave Philadelphia	12 00 M	3 30 A M	10 00 P M
" Columbia	2 [illegible] P M	5 [illegible] A M	12 [illegible] P M
" Pittsburg	7 [illegible] P M	10 [illegible] A M	5 [illegible] P M
Arrive at Crestline	9 [illegible] P M		7 [illegible] A M
" Chicago			2 [illegible] A M
Leave Crestline,	8 [illegible] A M	7 [illegible] P M	8 [illegible] P M
Arrive at Indianapolis,	12 [illegible] M	10 [illegible] P M	11 [illegible] A M
Leave Crestline,	8 [illegible] A M		8 [illegible] P M
Arrive at Chicago,	6 [illegible] P M		6 [illegible] A M

All Trains the night to Chicago without change of cars.
N B The time to Chicago is the same as by Steamboat Route
Tickets to the principal points of the West and Northwest, can be had at the Ticket Office of the Company, at the Depot, corner of Market and Twenty-fourth streets, Philadelphia.
PACIFIC TRAINS

	Mail	Fast Line	Express
Leave Chicago	10 [illegible] A M		7 [illegible] P M
" Fort Wayne	11 [illegible] P M		5 [illegible] A M
Arrive at Cr

No. 51

first sheet missing.

...ty to the truth revealed of God. There are also serious differences of opinion in regard to the time, the mode, the nature, and the purpose of this coming. [illegible] separate the wisest and best men in every branch of the visible church. It would be aside from our present purpose even to express an opinion in regard to these disputed points, and hence we allude to them only for a specific reason.

Why is so important an event declared in such a way, that for ages, if not from the beginning, there have been differences of opinion as to its time and manner? Why are not these things as explicitly revealed as the event itself? For the very reason, that the event is to be the great load star of the church's future in every age. Were it revealed with such absolute clearness as to time, circumstances, and manner, that its chronology could be calculated, it could never be what it was designed to be, the great awakener of the militant church. It is to be to the collective body of Christians, what the close of life is to the individual Christian, the great spur and stimulus to activity. Hence, like it, the event is certain, the time and manner uncertain; that the certainty might cause men to work because the night cometh, and that the uncertainty might cause us to work while it is called to-day. Hence, to each age this event stands at once a near and a remote event: near, if measured by the standard of heaven, remote, if by that of earth; but in either case the great, decisive event of the future, that for which the church in the wilderness below, and the souls beneath the altar above, have been crying, "How long, O Lord?" and for which a groaning and travailing creation has been waiting for the glorious manifestation of the sons of God.

This only we need know, that "this same Jesus" shall so come in like manner as he was seen to go into heaven. This same Jesus, who having loved his own, loved them to the end; who, having loved them on earth, will continue to love them in heaven. He shall so come as he was seen to go into heaven; not figuratively, but literally; not spiritually, but bodily; not to the eye of faith alone, but visibly; not in the presence of a few angels and a handful of disciples, but with "the ten thousand times ten thousand;" when every eye shall see him, and all the kindreds of the earth shall wail because of him. He shall come to make that "restitution of all things spoken of by the mouth of all the holy prophets since the world began." He shall come "to judge the world in righteousness," and "render to every man accord ing to his deeds;" to them who by patient continuance in well-doing, seek for glory, honor, and immortality, eternal life: but unto them that are contentious, and do not obey the truth, but obey unrighteousness, indignation and wrath, tribulation and anguish, upon every soul of man that doeth evil." He shall come to say to those on his right hand, "Come, ye blessed of my Father, inherit the kingdom prepared for you from the foundation of the world."

Hence this great event is the goal of the church's race; the triumphal end of her long warfare; the welcome home of her weary pilgrimage; the termination of her life militant; the beginning of her life triumphant. We can thus readily see why it is called "a glorious hope," and why it hung gleaming in the horizon of the church's hope in the days of her early struggles, as the bright Epiphany whose full appearance would compensate for all the sore struggling of the sorrowful and darkened past and present.

To the individual Christian it comes also with the same high power to comfort and arouse. It is true that to him death is nearer, in all human probability, than this great day, but death itself has all its dread or glad significance from its connexion with this great appearing. To us all, practically, the coming of death is the coming of judgment, for what is left undone at the one event, shall be found undone at the other. Hence for the same reason that the church is called to wait and to watch, in hope, in activity, and in submission, the individual Christian also is called to wait and to watch, that whenever the great messenger Death shall come, he may be found ready to go into the presence of the great Master with joy, and not with grief.

Hence, as the disciples returned to Jerusalem from Olivet with great joy, and waited for the promise of the Lord, in prayer, in faith, and in the discharge of duty, so should it be with the individual Christian after every visit to Olivet; after every opening of heaven to admit an ascending spirit; after every season of instruction, of discipline, or of trial. He should gird himself afresh for the duties and difficulties of the present, by the hope that he has of the glorious revelations of the future. Thus let each one strive to live more constantly in the light of the great Epiphany of the future—

> "The bright appearance of the Lord,
> While faith stands leaning on his word."
>
> —Last Days of Jesus.

"WILL YE ALSO GO AWAY?"

"Will ye also go away?" said the Saviour to His disciples. "Lord, to whom shall we go?" asked Peter; "thou hast the words of eternal life." To what teacher should they repair, that would be better qualified to instruct them? To what Jewish party should they apply, that they might better learn the way to heaven? To what sect of philosophers should they go, that they might find more consolation in the ills of life, be better supported in its trials, and find a more satisfactory answer to those questions which their very nature prompted them to ask? Difficulties there might be in the Christian religion, but where could they find fewer? Mysteries there might be, but where could they go where there were none?

And where will a man go now to find a system that is better fitted to meet the evils of the present world? This is a fair question, and one which it becomes every man to answer for himself. Can sinful, suffering, and dying man find a system that will better meet his condition? Will he go to heathenism? to the ancient philosophers? to the modern infidel? Do they propose a better way by which a guilty conscience may become calm, by which life's sorrows may be borne, and by which the pangs of death may be more patiently or triumphantly endured?

Oh, what is this world when we have turned away from the cross of Christ, and from the instruction which God has given us in His word? Man is seen upon the earth a strange being, playing a strange part, and encircled by mysteries. He has been created he knows not by whom, or when, or for what purpose. He begins to sin as soon as he begins to act, but he knows not why. He finds himself prone to evil by some mysterious law for which there is no explanation. He suffers, he knows not why. He lives, he knows not for what end; and when he dies, he goes into another world, he knows not whither nor why. He can do nothing to stay the progress of the plague which sweeps away the race, and he can only stand and weep over the grave which he digs with his pale brother, and which he himself must soon enter. Revealed religion comes and tells him who made him, and why; explains the way in which the race sank into this melancholy condition, and how it may be recovered, [illegible] him as an immortal being; reveals a brighter world, and explains to him how it may be his own. It originates no new form of disease, dips the arrow of death in no new poison, creates no new darkness around the grave, robs the suffe er of no consolations, and creates no new danger. Then why [illegible] why should [illegible]

[illegible] Way of Salvation.

GRACE BEFORE MEAT

A correspondent sends us several inquiri[illegible] ard to the authority of this practice, the best mode of observing it, and the benefits resulting.

As to the authority for this usage, such sentences of inspiration as "in everything give thanks," "Whatsoever ye do, whether ye eat or drink, do all to the glory of God," seem amply sufficient — [illegible] [illegible] [illegible]

GENERAL MITCHELL.

The following pathetic poem, we are told by the Editor of Brownlow Mitchell, the wife of the unfortunate, appeared in the New York Evening Post.

"OLD STARS"

"Hung be the heavens with black"

I.

His mighty life was hurried away
By Carnoma's mighty sun,
The pestilence that walks by day
Smote him before his canvas seemed done.

II.

The Constellations (Lyre, sky
The Pleiades, the Southern Cross,
Looked sadly down to see him die,
Across a canvas not yet done.

III.

"Send him to us," the stars might cry—
"You do not feel his worth below;
Your petty great men do not try
The measure of human to know

IV.

"Send him to us. This is his place,
Not your puny jealousies;
You sacrificed him in your race
Of envies, strifes, and policies.

V.

"His eye could pierce our vast expanse,
His ear could hear our morning songs,
His mind, amid our mystic dance,
Could follow all our myriad throngs.

VI.

"Send him to us! no martyr's soul,
No hero slain in righteous wars,
No raptured saint could e'er control
A holier welcome from the stars."

VII.

Take him, ye stars! take him on high,
To your vast realms of boundless space.
But once be turned from you to try
His name on martial scrolls to trace.

VIII

That once was when his country's call
Said danger to her flag was nigh,
And then her banner's stars dimmed all
The radiant lights which gemmed the sky.

IX.

Take him, loved orbs! His country's life—
Freedom for all—for these he wars;
For these he welcomed bloody strife,
And followed in the wake of Mars.

THE SOCIAL CONDITION OF THE JEWS IN EUROPE.

In a former number we depicted the political condition of the Jews in Europe. We now present an interesting account of their social condition:

In Austria, which, next to Russia, has the largest Jewish population of any of the European states, the Jews wield a great influence. Several of their prominent bankers have been raised to the rank of nobles, and one of them, Baron von Rothschild, has been called by the Emperor into the senate of the empire. A large number of Jews have been elected members of town-councils and provincial diets, and the province of Upper Austria has sent two Jews to the lower house of the Legislature. The Czechs, of Bohemia, who, like all the Sclavi, have been noted as fanatical persecutors of the Jews, have now made the full equality of Jews and Christians a part of their programme. In Gallicia, where, until 1848, the Jews had to pay a disgraceful "Jew's tax," amounting to over a million thalers annually, the leaders of the National party have boldly opposed the strong national prejudice against the Jews, and three of the latter have been elected members of the Gallician Diet. Strange to say, Hungary alone has been more slow than any other portion of Austria in meeting the just demands of the Jews, although Teleky, Pulsky, Klapka, Eotvos, Deak, and other leading patriots, warmly espoused their cause. In 1861, a Jew was for the first time appointed ordinary professor at an Austrian university (Dr. Wesley at Prague,) and another (Dr. Eciscl) was appointed extraordinary professor at the University at Vienna.

In Prussia, a Jew, (Dr. Veit) was a prominent and influential member of the House of Deputies. The Minister of Justice decided, in 1861, that Jews could be appointed as Judges.

In Bavaria, an intolerant law, which restricted the setting of Jews to a number of places, was unanimously abolished by the three chambers, and the rights of the Jews warmly advocated by the Archbishop of Munich, the Bishop of Augsburg, and the Protestant Supreme Consistory.

In England, there are now five Israelites in the House of Commons. A Jewish mayor was elected at Rochester, and a Jewish high sheriff for Bucks. The Jewish Board of Deputies, under the presidency of Sir Moses Montefiore, continues to display a great activity in behalf of the general interests of Judaism.

In France, a considerable number of Jews are professors of universities and colleges, and their influence on literature is great. They have, for a population of only about eighty thousand souls, four weekly and monthly papers, all of which are well edited. A society established in Paris in 1860, under the name of "Alliance Israelite Universelle," bids fair to become, to a higher degree than any other association, a centre for the common interests of Judaism. The able Jewish financier, M. Fould, to whom the Emperor in his financial embarrassments, has been compelled to apply for help, has been appointed Minister of Finances.

In Holland, nearly every office of importance is filled by an Israelite.

In the First National Parliament of Italy, which country has a Jewish population of only forty thousand souls, there are six Jewish members; and two Jews have been appointed, in 1861, ordinary professors at the universities of Bologna and Pisa.

In the kingdom of Poland, where formerly the Jews were more bitterly hated than in any other country of Europe, the national movement seems to have put an end to all mutual animosity. The Jews have actively taken part in the patriotic demonstrations, and very recently seven Jewish students were exiled, together with eight Christians to Siberia. On the one hand, the merchants and manufacturers of Warsaw adopted, by acclamation, a resolution which abolishes all distinction between Jews and Christians; and the Archbishop of Warsaw, in a circular, enjoins toleration towards the Jews.

In the Mohammedan countries of Northern Africa, the Jews show themselves much more accessible to the Christian civilization than the Mohammedans, and their progress is likely to facilitate the success of Christian missions. In Morocco, where they were cruelly persecuted shortly before the war with Spain, they now number about one hundred and twenty thousand, and the Emperor has recently given strict orders to protect the Jews in future from any attacks of the populace. In Tunis, the Bey has appointed a Jewish brigadier-general, and the Italian residents have elected a Jew their President. Jewish Record

INFLUENCE OF DEVOTION.

If we know that an ordinary man is on intimate terms with God, that fact tends to give us confidence in him. Something within tells us that the praying person is one who will not injure us, and one whom we can safely trust. It was upon this principle that an infidel who was travelling, and who was overtaken by nightfall in a lonely and dangerous place, confessed that he was relieved of his fears of being assassinated when the owner of the cabin where he had taken shelter led the family in prayer before retiring to rest. The infidel slept soundly after such a manifestation. The cabin roofed and walled by prayer was, to him, an unsafe place, he thought. We have authority for another pleasing incident illustrating the same point. In exercising hospitality to a clergymen who arrived at a dwelling late in the evening, the heads of the house surrendered to him their own chamber. Their little daughter, three years of age, was asleep in the crib, and they concluded not to disturb her. Quite early in the morning she awoke, and looking toward the bed usually occupied by her parents, saw a stranger there. At first she was startled, and covered her head with the counterpane. Soon, however, she peeped out and said, "Man, do you pray to God?" "Yes," was the answer. "I love God, and pray to Him every day." The satisfied little head was then quietly pulled, turned over, and dropped asleep.—Child at Home

THE NEW DOME ON THE NATIONAL CAPITOL

The National Intelligencer says: "The magnificent dome of the Capitol, designed by Thomas U. Walter, and now in course of construction under his direction, is rapidly progressing to completion. The principal frame of the structure has been completed, the ribs of the cupola have been put in place, and the plates which constitute the outer covering are being set, and will be finished before the close of next month. After this shall have been done, nothing will be left to complete the exterior of the dome but the construction of the lantern, and the placing of the ornaments on the upper wood-work around the spring of the [illegible]. These ornamental ones now being cast, and [illegible] representing a heavy cornice, have been placed in position, and presents a very handsome appearance. The castings for the inner dome are in course of preparation, and will soon be ready.

"The present height of the work above the base-line of the Capitol is two hundred and fifteen feet, and the height of the portion yet to be constructed, including the crowning statue, is about seventy feet. About two hundred and seven thousand pounds of iron have been received during the past year, and to the same period about one million one hundred and eighty-two thousand pounds of the same material have been put on. The whole quantity of iron received from the beginning of the work up to the present time was about seven and a half millions of pounds, and, according to the estimates of the architect, about eight hundred thousand pounds more will be needed to complete the work.

"The dome will be crowned with Crawford's gigantic and imposing statue of Freedom, which is nineteen and a half feet high, and weighs about fifteen thousand pounds. This statue is made entirely of bronze, and is composed of five cents, the weight of the heaviest of which is about fifteen thousand pounds. It may now be seen on a temporary pedestal in the east grounds of the Capitol. The screw-bolts which now blemish it will be removed when it is put in place, and a rich and uniform bronze tint will be imparted to it. The entire cost of the statue was about twenty-five thousand dollars. The sum of seven hundred thousand dollars has been appropriated by Congress for the dome, the most of which has been expended. The original estimate of the cost of the dome was nine hundred and forty-five thousand dollars ($945,000)—but the distinguished architect, by rigid economy and a reduction of the weight of the structure, has been enabled to bring down the whole cost, including that of the crowning statue, to about nine hundred thousand dollars.

THE McDOWELL COURT OF INQUIRY

TESTIMONY OF GEN. McCLELLAN

Washington, Dec. 10, 1862

The Court met at 11 o'clock this morning.

The examination of General McCLELLAN was resumed

The following questions were put by General McDowell, and answered by General McClellan:—

Question.—What communication from the President, through General Franklin, or otherwise, did you receive as to the separation of General McDowell's corps from your army? Please state fully what you know concerning that separation so far as it relates to General McDowell, and what communication, if any, you made to the President concerning him in that action?

Answer.—The substance of the communication through General Franklin, from the President was, that the President assumed the responsibility of the change of destination of Gen. McDowell's corps, as necessary for the defence of Washington, although the troops actually left in Washington and in front of it, dispensable for its defence, were rather more than the garrison used by the engineer and artillery officers, and considerably more than the largest number recommended by any of the corps commanders to be left in the vicinity of Washington. I do not at present recall any communication made to the President in regard to the separation of General McDowell's corps. It would be necessary for me to consult my papers before I could answer the question definitely.

Question.—Do you recollect having received any telegram from General Franklin, prior to his joining you on the Peninsula, concerning General McDowell, and in connexion with the separation of the corps of the latter from your army?

Answer.—Yes, I remember merely the general tenor of the despatch, which was, that General Franklin's opinion, from his knowledge of the case, was that General McDowell had nothing to do with the separation of his corps from the army of the Potomac.

Question.—What was General Franklin's official position with respect to General McDowell, at the time of that despatch?

Answer.—He commanded a division in the corps of General McDowell.

Question.—Please examine the copy of the New York Herald, of Oct 31st, containing a speech of Hon. J. B. Haskins, at Tarrytown, New York, and state if the following remarks, attributed to you, to wit: "I have been unfortunate in not taking Richmond, in consequence of my plan not being carried out, because General McDowell did not reinforce me as he could have done, and as it was agreed upon he should have done," are true in their letter and spirit so far as relates to Gen. McDowell, and is not true in this, wherein are they not so?

Answer (smilingly.)—The incident related in the speech is entirely new to me. I never received any despatch informing me that General Halleck was made Commander-in-Chief, and am very sure that I never made the remark attributed to me in connexion as stated. I have no doubt said, for it has ever been my opinion, that the Army of the Potomac would have taken Richmond, had not the corps of General McDowell been separated from it. It is also my opinion, had the command of General McDowell joined the Army of the Potomac, to the month of May, by way of Hanover Court House, from Fredericksburg, that we would have had Richmond within a week after the junction. I do not hold General McDowell responsible in my own mind, for the failures to join me on either occasion.

The Court met at 11 o'clock, and the examination of General McClellan was resumed

The question propounded yesterday by the Court, and which was laid over at the request of General McClellan, was again read to the witness, as follows:—

You have stated that the troops were retained for the defence of Washington. Did these plans provide for a force to be retained from the troops then under your command, and if so, how large was the force to be retained, and what troops were to compose it?

Answer.—The troops to be retained for the defence of Washington were almost entirely from [illegible] gave from memory alone, an accurate statement of their position and strength. On the last of April I wrote a letter of instructions to General Banks, for his guidance in posting the troops in front of Washington, which letter would be a more full answer to the question than the general one I have given, which I will also submit to the Court if they desire it.

Question.—Gen. McDowell having made known to the Court that in his opinion it was safe and proper for him to proceed to co-operate with you against Richmond, and having yielded his purpose so as to do only in obedience to higher orders, you will state your judgment as to the soundness of that opinion, and of the military propriety of that purpose on the part of General McDowell [illegible]

Answer.—I cannot confine my judgment to what, in your judgment, was the object of Jackson's movement against Banks, on or about the 24th of May, and what were the probabilities of the success, if left unaided by the forces of the enemy at Richmond, and if Richmond was at the time additionally threatened by General McDowell's proposed co-operation with you, what force had the enemy to spare at that time to aid Jackson or otherwise to threaten Washington? What were the probabilities of the forces disposed of to attack Washington and, in what time and in what manner?

Answer.—I think that General McDowell was correct in his opinion that if Washington [illegible] I think that immediately after the reception of Hanover Court House by a portion of the Army of the Potomac, there was no relief force of any consequence between Hanover Court House and General McDowell; I think that the main object of Jackson's movement against Gen. Banks, was to prevent reinforcements being sent to the Army of the Potomac, and expressed that opinion in a telegram to the President, within a day of the time I received information of the movement of Jackson.

I think, that if General McDowell had moved direct upon Hanover Court House, instead of in the direction of Front Royal, Jackson would have rapidly retraced his steps to join the main Rebel army at Richmond. With a strong army [illegible] own in the vicinity of Richmond and threatening it, I do think the rebels would have detached a sufficient forces to seriously endanger the safety of Washington.

NOTES AND QUERIES.

DAYS MARKED WITH A WHITE STONE.—Applied to days of pleasure and happiness, which are treasured in the memory. Origin; The Romans used a white stone, or Cretan chalk to mark their lucky days on the calendar; and charcoal, to mark those considered unlucky.

In the heathen mythology the Muses were nine in number, namely—Clio, the Muse of History; Calliope, the Epic Muse; Melpomene, the Tragic Muse; Thalia, the Comic Muse; Euterpe, who presided over Music; Terpsichore, over Dancing; Erato, the Muse of Elegy and Amatory Song; Polyhymnia, the Muse of Sacred Song; Urania, the Muse of Astronomy.

CRISPIN.—A name applied to a shoemaker. Origin; Saint Crispin was a shoemaker; and consequently was chosen by the craft as their patron saint. It is related that he came from Rome to preach at Soissons, in France, towards the middle of the third century, and that it was his practice, after occupying the day in preaching, to work during the night by making shoes.

SHIP OF THE DESERT.—A figurative appellation for the camel. Origin. The excellent use of the camel as a beast of burden the number of miles it can journey without fatigue, the fewness of its wants, and the long period it can exist without nourishment justify the poetical idea of regarding camels as ships; the long tracts of desert, they traverse being figuratively termed seas.

CARTE-BLANCHE.—An unlimited authority, or a general instruction to a person to act to the best of his ability. Thus a general is said to have a carte-blanche from his sovereign when he is empowered to carry on a campaign at his own discretion. Origin; This is a French term, signifying literally "blank card," or paper." Such papers were formerly used in France as unconditional warrants for the apprehension of suspected persons, the conditions being afterwards filled in by the persons to whom they were delivered for execution.

NARCOTICS

The North American Review for October contains a valuable article on Narcotics. We shall do our readers a service by presenting some of its most important facts in a popular form. The use of narcotics is universal. Every people—from the savage, sunk in the lowest depths of pagan barbarism, to the highly enlightened Christian—has its favorite weed or gum, which is chewed or smoked for the purpose of producing that dreamy state in which worldly cares may be temporarily forgotten, and visions of happiness enjoyed. The Eastern nations have opium, hemp, and the betelnut. The North American Indian, and the European with him, next after the necessities of existence, cherish their beloved tobacco. Other tribes seek excitement from the cocoa and the stramonium; and the poor Siberian and Kamschatkan, in their frozen homes, out of reach of these luxuries, find in a fungus which grows upon the steppes, the means of soothing the irritation of the nervous system. We use them in our daily food. It is the narcotic principle which has made tea and coffee the standard beverages of civilized countries; and it is not unlikely that if lettuce were deprived of its opiatic juices, it would cease to be a favorite dish upon our dinner and tea-tables.

The use of narcotics is as ancient as it is universal. The seeds of the poppy, indeed, were first used as food, being ground in the same manner as wheat. This flour is said to have been quite nutritious. At the present day, a great deal of what is sold as olive oil is made from poppy seeds. Making so common use of this plant, mankind were not long in discovering that a state of delightful unconsciousness could be produced by tasting the juices of the capsule. Herodotus relates that the Scythians were accustomed to produce intoxication by the vapors of the hemp. It has been suggested by some one that the Lotophagi of Homer was the Indian hemp. If not this, it must have been opium. Drugs of this kind might have produced the vapor which inspired the Pythia at the oracle at Delphi. The author of the Heathen Antiquities, judging from his own experience, thinks that the [illegible] and [illegible] of the Egyptian philosophy were the fruits of narcotic intoxication.

A LOVING CHILD

A lady in New York was recently acquainted in a family in which there was a sweet bright little boy, of some five years, between [illegible] friendship. One day she said to him

"Willie, do you love me?"

"Yes, indeed!" he replied, with a clinging kiss [illegible]

"Why, I love you—I love you—up to the sky."

Just then his eye fell on his mother. Flinging his arms about her, and kissing her passionately,

"But, mamma, I love you way up to God!"

FATTENING SWINE.

[illegible] article on the subject, from which we make a few [illegible]

"On every hand there are some articles which may be useful in fattening swine, if taken to some, but which if not so taken, will be totally lost. Of these we may mention summer squashes, summer [illegible] of late kinds. Later in the season, pumpkins may be [illegible]

"Summer squashes, if cooked, will fatten hogs very fast. Many people who have used them for this purpose consider them, when cooked, as profitable a crop for summer and early autumn feeding as can be grown.

"In regard to apples, much has been said of their value as food for animals, especially for fattening swine. Various experiments indicate that [illegible] as much as potatoes for this purpose. Hogs will eat ripe, palatable apples raw, in considerable quantities; but they will not eat those which are hard—especially acid ones—to much extent. It is somewhat so with the human family. If we eat apples or pears raw, we want them fully ripe and mellow; but for baking or cooking in other ways we frequently use those which are not fully ripe. Hence, apples which are too hard to be fed to swine raw, may be given to them in a cooked state with advantage. It would probably be an object to save in this way many of the winter apples which are now falling from the trees. Most New England farmers are in the practice of cooking potatoes for hogs, and the same apparatus which is used for this purpose will answer for apples and other articles."

SURFACE APPLICATION OF MANURE.

From the results of various trials, Professor Voelcker seems to lean to the opinion that the spreading of farm yard manure on the surface of the soil, for even a considerable period before it is ploughed in is by no means an injurious a practice as we have hitherto been led to suppose. He says, "that on all soils with a moderate proportion of clay, no feat need be entertained of valuable fertilizing substance becoming wasted, if the manure cannot be ploughed in at once. Fresh and even well rotted dung, contains very little free ammonia, and since active fermentation, and with it the further evolution of free ammonia, is stopped by spreading out the manure on the field, valuable manuring matters cannot escape into the air by adopting this plan."

THE HAPPINESS OF CHILDREN.

The right of children to be happy, and the duty of parents to promote the happiness of their children, are matters that seem to be little considered. I may not be the person to do it, but somebody should call the attention of the readers of The Independent to this important subject. All the characteristics and surroundings of childhood mark it as a season that should be sacred to light-hearted enjoyment. It is as natural for a healthy child to be happy as it is for the birds to sing or the rosebuds to burst into bloom under the genial influence of the sunshine and the dew. Why should not the first eight or ten years of a child's life be a bright and joyous play spell, over which untimely cares and griefs cast none of their dark shadows? Surely we need not grudge our children this season of mirthful recreation, for the stern, cold realities of life will certainly overtake them full early. There are, I am aware, wise and good men who take an entirely different view of this subject. They seem all the while afraid that the children will be too happy, and set their faces against childish enjoyments as if they were deadly sins. Mr. Wesley, who was certainly a wise and good man, blundered most egregiously in this matter. Speaking of his famous Kingswood School, he says: "We have no play-days—the school being taught every day in the year but Sabbath; neither do we allow any time for play on any day." In justification of this preposterous and inhuman treatment of boys from six to fifteen years of age, he quotes what he calls "a wise German proverb: "He that plays when he is a boy will play when he is a man." Who the sapient German was who first uttered the second nonsense we have no means of knowing; probably some stale and unsavory fogy, destitute of pleasant memories of childhood, and utterly incapable of sympathising with its joys or sorrows. We do not allow ourselves to take pleasure in the future of any child we cannot endeavor to degrade. Mr. Wesley was influenced by the purest motives in establishing the school at Kingswood; yet we confess to some satisfaction in reading what he says of the results of his experiment, after it has been continued through a quarter of a century. "The school," he says, "does not in any wise answer the design of the institution, either with regard to religion or learning. The children are not religious; neither do they improve in learning better than at other schools, nor yet so well." Of course not. Who would expect boys who are taught that all play is wicked to improve in anything that is good? But in spite of cast iron rules and grim and austere masters, boys will be boys.

Mr. Wesley is grieved that they will not be old men in the nursery and says: "They ought never to play, but they do every day; yea, even in school." Good for the boys, say we. It is their inalienable right to have their fun and frolic somewhere—if not on the playground, in the school room; and as long as grass grows and water runs, may they claim and enjoy their privilege. Parents should know that it is much easier to control children when they are happy, than when they are miserable. Men are only enlarged editions of childhood, and not always improved editions at that. If you want to influence a man for his good, or secure from him a favor, you do not make your application when the wind is from the east, and his business affairs all confused and going wrong. You call on him on a genial day, when his surroundings are pleasant, and, if possible, soon after he has enjoyed a good dinner. I know families of children that are always exposed to an east wind, and houses in which there is provision enough, but never an enjoyable meal. There are other residences so located that the south wind always blows softly around them, and so arranged that every room from basement to attic is flooded with a mellow and golden light. Surely no arguments are needed to show in which class of houses it is least difficult to maintain a wholesome family discipline. Common humanity requires that children should be governed tenderly, and without any needless sacrifice of their enjoyments. It is a pleasant thing to see a noble animal like Rarey's Cossack trained and controlled so as to be led about by a single straw, and that without any resort to the savage beatings that were once regarded as indispensable in the management of horses.

Your boy, dear reader, is of more value than all the horses in the world, and has a right to every indulgence and all the happiness not inconsistent with his best interests. The families in which smiles and laughter are abundant, and where harsh and bitter words are seldom heard, are the ones that are most easily governed. There is great wisdom in the apostolic injunction, "Fathers, provoke not your children to anger: lest they be discouraged." When the spirits of children are embittered by the selfishness or tyranny of parents, they become discouraged, and grow reckless. Let them once feel that their parents are kind, considerate, loving and sympathizing, and they will be [illegible] to them forever. Oh, that all parents were wise! that they understood that to this matter the mother brings a double responsibility. She it is who stamps the coin of character, and makes the being who would be a savage, but for her gentle cares, [illegible]

The injustice and downright meanness of any needless interference with the happiness of children is apparent when we consider how much joy [illegible] by such things. What [illegible] cut off from outward sources of enjoyment, he has internal resources upon which he can draw and be happy. With children the case is different. The world in which they live is small, and chiefly external. [illegible] their vision is so narrow that a single cloud not bigger than a man's hand suffices to darken all their skies. We are too apt to forget it, but the sufferings and enjoyments of childhood are not only real, but intense. Your little girl has often to mourn friends. For days and weeks her heart has been full and brimming over with joyful anticipations. For the time being her journey leads her right through the land of Beulah, under sun bright skies, and where the songs of the birds never cease. But something occurs, and she is told that she must forego the anticipated pleasure. [illegible] you hardly make an effort to sooth her feelings, or reconcile her to the disappointment. Oh, if you had not wandered far from the blessed days of your own childhood, you would know how [illegible] are as real as any that you are to bear. Or your generous warm hearted boy has been led into some act of disobedience, and you call him up for reproof and punishment. You are excited—angry, perhaps—and at your first reproof his eyes are blinded with tears, and his emotions so choke him that he is unable to make any reply to your upbraiding words. You suppose him to be in a passion, or obstinate, and after correcting him, order him immediately out of your presence. But in truth he is grieved, not angry; and his tears are wrung from a loving and manly heart. The iron has entered his soul because he is treated with injustice. His own father misunderstands him, and will not allow him an opportunity to make explanations. He could make it all right if you would allow him to throw himself into your arms and tell you how sorry he is for his fault, and how anxious he is to be a good boy, and deserve your confidence and love. You may have suffered many times during your life from the "rash judgment and severity of selfish men." The treachery of professed friends may have cut you to the very quick of the soul, but none of these wounds are deeper or more painful than those you have inflicted in the heart of your noble boy by your blundering folly. There is a sacred and holy eloquence in the tears of children, and I never see them but my heart grows softer at the sight. They come not from the moral, but from what is spiritual and divine in human nature. The instinct which will warn and help us but for a moment weep. You may lay hold on a swine, and plunge a knife in its throat, and there is a strange and an outcry, but no tears. "I would not enter on my list of friends" the man who does not sympathize and sympathize with the sorrows of children.

I close this article, already reaching beyond my purpose that the time is short in which they can do anything to promote the happiness of their children. If you are taken from them, you desire to have a place in their pleasant and grateful remembrances. Or if you live and are required to lay your children in the grave, it will soothe your heart to remember that you did what you could to render their journey through life bright and beautiful. I shall never forget an incident that once occurred as I sat by the bedside of a dying boy. A servant in the family, a warm-hearted Irish girl, came into the room, looked at the poor suffering boy, and called him by name, but he was too sick to recognise or answer her. She struggled for a moment with her emotions, burst into tears and exclaimed, "Poor little Willie! Can't you speak to me once more? Oh, if you could only live, I would never speak a cross word to you again!" It was the expression of a feeling that thousands carry in their hearts, when they are losing or have lost friends. It is well for us to think of this when we are tempted to be impatient with our children. The Master may have need of them, and take them to himself. The rare of your boy may be soon run, and you compelled from the side of his coffin to review your conduct during the years that you have guided and governed him. And it will be a bitter and grievous thing to you, if to that hour conscience upbraids you with having caused him a single hour of needless sorrow.

The dear little girl whose presence fills all your house with light and melody, may soon be sleeping in her grave. Full well do I know that such a blow will almost break your heart. You will need then the comfort that comes from the remembrance that you always treated the dear child tenderly, and led her by gentle methods into the green pastures and beside the still waters. May the blessing of him who took the children in his arms and blessed them, be upon as many as remember and act upon his words. "Take heed that ye despise not one of these little ones: for I say unto you that in heaven their angels do always behold the face of my Father which is in heaven."

—Rev. R. M. Hatfield.

OLD FATHER MORRIS

Old Father Morris sometimes used his illustrative talent to very good purpose in the way of rebuke. He had on his farm a fine orchard of peaches, from which some of the ten or twelve-year-old gentlemen helped themselves more liberally than even the old man's kindness thought expedient. Accordingly he took occasion to introduce into his sermon one Sabbath, in his little parish, on account of a journey he took, and how he saw a fine orchard of peaches which made his mouth water to look at them.

"So," says he, "I came up to the fence, and looked all around, for I would not have touched one of them without leave for all the world. At last I espied a man, and says I, 'Mister, won't you give me some of your peaches?' So the man came and gave me nigh about a bushel. And while I stood there eating I said, 'Mister, how do you manage to keep your peaches?'"

"Keep them!" said he, and he stared at me. "What do you mean?"

"Yes, sir," said I. "Don't the boys steal them?"

"Boys steal them!" said he. "No, indeed!"

"Why, sir," said I, "I have a whole lot full of peaches, and I cannot get half of them"—here the old man's voice became tremulous—"because the boys in my parish steal them so."

"Why," said he, "don't their parents teach them not to steal?"

And I grew all over in a cold sweat, and I told him "I was afraid they didn't."

"Why how you talk!" says the man. "Do tell me where you live?"

"Then," said Father Morris, the tears running over, "I was obliged to tell him I lived in the town of G."

After this, Father Morris kept his peaches.—Mrs. Stowe.

BE HONEST WITH GOD.

"Who conducted the prayer meeting?" said Mr. Gates, who had been kept at home by business, to his neighbor, Mr. Ransom, who stopped in on his way home from the meeting.

"The minister," was the reply.

"Who offered prayer?"

"Mr Eldridge, for one."

"I never heard him pray."

"I didn't like his prayer. He told the Lord a great many things which he don't know. A man ought to be honest with God."

"We must not judge our brethren."

"We may if we judge righteous judgment. Charity does not require us to see things as they are not—to put error for truth; Charity rejoiceth in the truth."

Men should be honest with their fellow-men; much more should they be honest with God. They should be honest in their confessions of sin. Some use language in confession which seems to express their feelings. They call themselves sinners, and say they do not so regard themselves. If those who hear them were to take them at their word, they would be greatly offended. Is it a small matter to make to God statements respecting ourselves which we do not believe?

Men should be honest in their prayers. They should not ask for things which they do not desire. Many do this. One asks for the [illegible] earnestly that to the world. Another asks for the spirit of self-denial. Men pray for things which it is usual to pray for, when in reality they do not desire them. That is not being honest with God.

Men should be honest with God in regard to their professions. One may say, "I give myself, soul and body to thy service," when no such consecration is made. Perhaps the real state of mind was a desire thus to consecrate oneself, or a sense of obligation to do so. The language used about [illegible] the true state of the soul. "Be not deceived; God is not mocked."

[illegible]

[illegible] On the fly leaf [illegible] found the following:

Manifestly what I am,
And mine the eternal salvation,

[illegible] note of the [illegible]

Advertisements.

TO THE READERS OF THE CHRISTIAN INSTRUCTOR

A CARD.

It having been said to an impossibility, heretofore, to obtain CUSTOMERS MADE CLOTHING AT MODERATE PRICES, and [illegible] WANAMAKER & BROWN, [illegible] OAK HALL, [illegible] SIXTH and MARKET Streets, [illegible] Philadelphia, [illegible] CLOTHING [illegible] CASH [illegible] BUSINESS [illegible] PRICES [illegible] GOODS [illegible] MADE [illegible] WORK [illegible] GUARANTEED [illegible] PERFECT [illegible] FIT [illegible] GOODS [illegible] MARKED [illegible] PLAIN [illegible] FIGURES [illegible] ONE [illegible] PRICE [illegible] ONLY [illegible] ESTABLISHED [illegible] 1861, [illegible] with the [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] 4th A corps of the most [illegible] [illegible] in the country [illegible] [illegible] [illegible]

THE CHRISTIAN RECORDER.

Published by the African Methodist Episcopal Church in the United States, for the Dissemination of Religion, Morality, Literature and Science.

Rev. Elisha Weaver, Editor. PHILADELPHIA, DECEMBER 27, 1862. Vol. II.—No. 52.—New Series. Whole No. 104.

THE CHRISTIAN RECORDER

Is published every Saturday on behalf of the

AFRICAN METHODIST EPISCOPAL CHURCH,

BY

REV. ELISHA WEAVER,

General Book Steward,

No 619 Pine Street, Philadelphia.

Notice.—All letters and matters pertaining to the Book Concern subscribers, ads of papers, and all moneys belonging to Book Concern or for paper, must be directed to Rev. Elisha Weaver, Box No. 810, Philadelphia; and all matters sent by express, and in our city, must be directed to E. Weaver, No. 619 Pine St.

All articles or matter for the Christian Recorder, must be directed to E. Weaver, Box No. 810, Philadelphia.

TERMS.

Two Dollars a year, payable in advance. Single copies, five cents.

ADVERTISEMENTS.

We solicit Advertisements of all descriptions, suitable for a religious newspaper, which will be published as follows:—

Cards or Advertisements, inserted for one year, provided they do not exceed eight lines, ten dollars, paper included; or, eight dollars without the paper,—six months, for six dollars, paper included,—three months, four dollars,—one month, $1.50, paper in each case included.

CORRESPONDING EDITORS OF CHRISTIAN RECORDER.

Rev. J. P. CAMPBELL, Rev. A. W. WAYMAN,
" J. M. WILLIAMS, " E. T. WILLIAMS,
" G. H. GRAHAM, " C. BURCH,
Rev. L. ROSS.

Poetry.

For the Christian Recorder.

THE WORLD OF BLISS.

There is a world where Jesus holds
The mansion he prepared for souls;
'Tis far above this earth, we know,
And God's own people to it go.

Here they remain in sweet repose,
Relieved from sicknesses and woes.
Well might they, ever happy, say,
Our pleasures never pass away.

Sure they were sinners once like us,
They dwelt on earth, then turned to dust;
But now their voices blend above,
In anthems of redeeming love.

Oh! we who still with hope are blest,
And conscious of this perfect rest,
Must fight, if we expect to reign
With those who love the Saviour's name.

Then let us worship him aright,
Who changed our darkness into light;
And when our work is done below,
With him to that bright world we'll go.

H. BAKER.

Ashmun Institute, Dec. 15, 1862.

For the Christian Recorder.

BRO. WEAVER:—The scene is still changing. Every day brings its own current events. The Committees heresbouts have been variously interested since my last. New York has been favored with something novel and interesting in the debut of Madam Louise de Mortie of Boston. "Reading the classics" to a colored audience. It is truly refreshing to have such occurrences to relieve the mind and drive away the ennui consequent upon a continual round of Concerts, Promenades, Mental feasts, and Prizes, for "the best-looking colored gentlemen and ladies in the room." To have true genius, learning, study, research, and thought, brought out and encouraged; to listen to true eloquence from the lips of high-toned woman, to have every cord touched with delicate fingers—tuned in symphony with the higher, the immortal life is surely exhilarating. How pleasant to ascend in thought, from the low, the grovelling, the mere animal of life, to revel in a world of ideas. To catch the inspiration of the Poets, and with them, far from the influence of terrestrial things, hie on in pursuit of the good, the gentle, and the lovely. Madam Mortie is a good reader, makes a fine appearance, very commanding in manner, and gave general satisfaction to her audience. She will doubtless be heard from again.

Great preparations are being made to celebrate the great jubilee of freedom on the first of Jan., in anticipation of the proclamation of emancipation, in Cooper Institute Hall, by the citizens of New York and Brooklyn. Many distinguished speakers are invited, and it is expected that there will be a great gathering on that evening among the elite of the "Twin sister" cities. Prominent among all things of great interest, is the gracious work of a revival of religion in Brooklyn. The Triune God has been pleased to visit his Zion here in copious showers of salvation, and brought many to reconciliation with himself. The means employed demonstrate the truth of the gospel promise, "Not by might nor by the power of man, but by my Spirit will I work, saith the Lord." Some months ago, a few faithful women of the Baptist Church began to hold prayer-meetings among themselves, desiring God to graciously look upon the languishing church, and restore unto it the joys of his salvation. The church was without a stated pastor; many years have passed since they have had a revival; dissensions and bickerings had been prominent in their midst; many had gone from their first love;—no Shepherd to guide, they turned to Christ, the Chief Shepherd of their souls. For weeks prayer-meetings were held at their houses in the afternoon of each day, and at church at night, until He, whose property is to have mercy, came down and blessed their labors. Many have been converted, and some fifty added to the church, mostly young persons connected with the Sunday School.

Thus the church is prospering, and will continue to do so as long as they confine themselves to the legitimate work of preaching the gospel, not stopping to quarrel with their neighbors about "modes of Baptism," and the essentiality of immersion; the seeds of degeneracy which bring forth their fruit of bitterness, and the sure precursor of decay and weakness. Rev. Barnett, formerly of your city, is their present supply; young and full of zeal, he may be successful in doing much good under Divine guidance, following the injunction of the aged Paul to his son Timothy, 1 Tim. vi. 20, 21, and vi. 3—6. God speed him.

The good work has not stopped yet, it is still progressing in Bridge Street Church, Rev. R. H. Cain pastor. For some weeks I learn there have been prayer-meetings held in that church with increasing interest; preaching and exhortation have been employed, and a revival is the result. Many have been converted, and many more are inquiring the way of salvation. Elder J. A. Williams is on a visit to his family, and has preached several able discourses during these meetings. I think his powerful logic has had much to do with awakening many sinners. I do not think that the present pastor would get up a revival in ten years; he is a "formal lecturer, half Presbyterian and Methodist preacher," yet he is considered by many to be a very nice man. Your correspondent thinks that he displayed very little wisdom in having a protracted meeting and a Fair at the same time; but it is illustrative of his character as above described, "A nice man." Yet with all these incongruities, the work is going on. I stopped into the fair one evening this week, and found a large gathering of people there, a piano in full blast, and all enjoying themselves well. I heard an unusual blending of sounds, music, singing, and shouting; on inquiry I learned that there was a meeting up stairs. I found my way up, by passing through a winding stairway, and to my astonishment, found some seventy or one hundred persons in the upper part of the church; I will not soon forget the scene: at the mourners' bench were seven women kneeling in prayer. On the floor lay two more, still, as if in the iron grasp of death, others crying in deep agony of soul, "God have mercy on me, and save my soul, or I perish!" Many were weeping through the congregation. The members who are faithfully attending these meetings, are truly gifted in prayer, and seem to have great faith. There is a great work in progress, and many have been added to the church. Still the work goes on, meeting and fair, and no collision; both are well attended.

I learn that the circumstances were so pressing on the Trustees, that the fair could not be postponed, as their obligations are due on the 18th of January, 1863.

The Christian Recorder has become a very welcome visitor to many who have been taking it for this last year. Though the price has been raised many say they cannot do without it. The hardness of times has compelled some to stop the paper for a time, but, say they will renew soon. The Recorder is pronounced the best paper among us, and if it lives through this crisis, we may hope the future will bring greater prosperity, and more subscribers, and a wider circulation. Keep it alive till the proclamation is issued, and the army and navy shall protect all persons who shall seek to maintain their liberty against any claim or claims of their former masters, and all officers shall see this proclamation enforced in all the seceded states of the Union; then we will extend our Christian conquests to Louisiana, recapture our eighteen hundred members in New Orleans, and extend our BETHEL from sea to sea; filling the land with songs of praise, for the wonderful works of the Lord our God, when the rider and his horse shall be overthrown, and the people are free. More anon. JUNIUS.

For the Christian Recorder.

WE KNOW NOT THE GOOD WE CAN DO.

BY REV. JAMES LYNCH.

BALTIMORE, Md.

A few years ago there lived in one of the Districts of Baltimore city, a lady of deep piety and fervent zeal, which led her to feel solicitous for the spiritual welfare of all around her, irrespective of color. She had been for many years connected with a white Presbyterian church, to which she became attached very early in life, and thus formed the acquaintance of some of the leading working Christians of the city. The District in which she lived, had but few colored residents, while the whites were numerous and in a state of great spiritual destitution; their children would throng the corners on the Sabbath day, and indulge in every kind of mischief, while the parents would look on and give license by their manifest approbation. This lady's house and her children suffered by the riotous conduct of the juveniles, and she determined to break it up by invoking the strong arm, not of the law, but of God. An idea struck her; one Sunday afternoon after returning from church, she remarked to her husband, "Mr. M—— has a very large basement, and I know he would be glad to rent it. It might be gotten for a Sunday School, and I will see Mr. T—— and Mrs. S——, and get them to establish one. I know the L—— family, and the B—— family, and many others will send their children." Mr. M—— was seen: his objections and prejudices, (for he was a man who cared little for religion,) were all overcome. The persons designated to establish the school, were seen—they took hold of the enterprise; in a few months the basement was crowded; in less than four years a church was built, within a few yards of the basement where the school was first held. Many of the children were converted to Christ; their mothers and fathers also; and young men of position to-day were reared in that neighborhood and in that school, who prior to its establishment bid fair for vagrancy.

But before the above mentioned enterprise grew so strong, the ever watchful Methodists planted a mission school in close propinquity. They grew and outstripped the former. They soon built a church, and their mighty revivals shook the neighborhood again and again, until in scores of families the living God was revered and adored.

The colored lady has long since removed from Baltimore; few know of her connexion with the great religious movement, which has blessed the neighborhood, and the wonderful change which is the wonder of all; but when the records of churches, of societies, and individuals are read in the brilliant light of the judgment day—this deed of this lady, though done for a people who despise us, will be approved by millions, and honored by the many who have been saved by its instrumentality.

For the Christian Recorder.

WASHINGTON CORRESPONDENT.

MR. EDITOR:—The most important news in Washington at the time, is the various comments on the retreat of General Burnside. Some supposing he was flogged by the rebels, and others, regarding it as a glorious retreat. From the looks of the morning papers, it appears that some frail freak has been discovered in the President's cabinet. God save the nation, is all that I can say, for the aspect of things never looked more gloomy, than they do this morning. When I am so conclusively led to the conviction, that this nation is endeavoring to raise us up from thraldom and degradation, and still see the angry cataracts, which pour so violently around the trembling threshold of her safety, falling often like peals of dissolving thunder, from the rugged clouds of an enraged sky, my most hearty commiseration throbs languidly for her. I sometimes hear these hateful politicians speaking so contemptibly of the negro, that all sympathy for the time being leaves me. But when my sober senses begin the work again, I find my affections lingering around the land of my birth, and thus voluntarily, or involuntarily, as the case may be, I find myself saying, God save the nation. But let us turn to something else.

Last Monday we had the pleasure of being in Baltimore, and to our great surprise, we learned that the Rev. John Wesley Brown, of the Sharp street M. E Church was dead. At three o'clock, P. M. we went to Sharp street church, where the funeral solemnities were to be held. Here we found about 2500 persons convened in, and around the church. Going into the basement we discovered some 50 ministers, including all denominations, in mourning attire, who marched two by two into the upper part of the church, where the congregation were so densely packed, that you might have imagined the girders of the church inadequate to the weight. And here I am at last, for I took down the contents of the funeral services, but have mislaid my report. So far as my memory serves me, the Rev. Mr. Peak prayed a most effective prayer, and Rev. Mr. Spridle delivered the discourse. Brother Spridle's remarks were very sublime till towards the close, when he gave vent to the spirit, and spoke though powerfully, yet somewhat at random. Rev. Mr. Bowser made the closing remarks, in which he wielded a pathos, that held in glorious check the entire audience. Brother Brown was one of the ablest ministers, belonging to the M. E. Church, in Baltimore. His death was peaceful. His last breathings were calm.

Rev. C. C. Leigh, the principal agent of the Freedmen's Association, in New York, preached in Israel Church last Sabbath evening, and it was one of the grandest discourses that I have heard from a white man in an age. He tore into atoms that lazy trifling spirit, that keeps too many of our people from the study of the natural sciences. He told them that the study of science alone gives strength and sinew to the mind. Unless they could grapple with science, they could never grapple with politics.

After which, the Rev. Mr. French spoke of his travels along the coast of South Carolina and Florida, and of the triumph of negro regiments. His remarks were so pleasing to the audience, that they forgot they were in the church, and went to clapping hands, stomping feet. Rev. Mr. Denison rose up and stated that he had just received a despatch that Gen. Burnside had been victorious, which created such a stir that the pastor dismissed them.

Rev. John M. Brown was there to-day, and brought from his all-honored congregation some two barrels and a box, consisting of 250 pieces of clothing for the contrabands. Ebenezer Church, of Baltimore, of which the ever active and industrious brother Brown is pastor, is made up of some of the most noble-hearted people belonging to the A. M. E. Church, and Big Bethel had better watch her.

The convention hitherto meeting at Union Bethel Church, met last Thursday at Israel. Your correspondent, being somewhat mortified in the commencement of the proceedings, did not take them down systematically as he intended. However, I was convinced that our people possessed the power of legislation. The house was densely crowded, and among the audience I noticed several congressmen and reporters, with any quantity of ladies and gentlemen, of all grades and classes.

Mr. John Thos. Johnson, Secretary, read one of the most intelligent reports of the previous meeting, to which I thought I ever listened.

Several motions were offered, and discussed with great dignity and strength of mind. Mr. William Slade, President, governed the association so very parliamentary, that Judge DAY, who made some remarks toward the close of the meeting, said: "That the House of Representatives ought to adjourn and come here, to learn parliamentary decorum." They adjourned, however, on a motion considering the propriety of each member of the association advancing five dollars, as the basis of an operation in the erection of a hospital.

Rev. A. W. Wayman passed through here to-day, on his way to Alexandria, for the purpose of delivering a scientific lecture.

Mr. Solomon G. Brown, who is really the colored philosopher of the United States, delivers a lecture on Geology, before the Israel Lyceum, on Monday evening next. H. M. T.

Washington, Dec. 20th, 1862.

For the Christian Recorder.

THE WAR.

MR. EDITOR:—This crisis deserves the attention of all thinking beings. Our country is torn asunder by what they call a civil war. Our government is turned upside down, and there is no chance of restoring it, as long as so many traitors remain in the North. We have men in our city that sympathize with the South, and they are allowed to speak in favor of the South. Let a man South speak in favor of the North, and they would take his head off. Give the South the advantage the North has, and they would have gained the victory long ago. The guns of the North are far superior to those of the South, and their means and support better. The above mentioned is one of the grand reasons why this war does not progress.

A great many of the head leaders North are traitors; look at Buell, McClellan, and others I could mention were it necessary. Look at some of the congressmen, Mr. Cox for one. We need no worse rebel than he is. He has been communicating with some of the head leaders of rebeldom, that want to creep back in congress with a union cloak of pretence; and he would gladly receive them were it in his power. Can we wonder at the confusion of our country? I think not. Look at the defeat of the Northern army. Why is it in a great many instances? It is because the head commanders are traitors, and do not do their duty. We see tokens of this every day, more or less. I hope the Lord may set the North right, and then they can whip the South right; there must be a renovation in the North before this thing can progress; the Union is divided, and people of the North sub divided. The great drawback is, what they will do with negroes when freed. Let them free them and they will take care of themselves, as they have taken care of the white people of the South. As for the free people of the North, I am sure they can take care of themselves. Give us the rights it was intended we should have, that is all we ask of them. The government has proposed the voluntary colonization of Americans of African descent in the British Colonies, but Mr. Russell declined the proposition. Gen. Webb, Minister to Brazil, has been exerting himself to effect a treaty, by which all the negroes of this country will be transplanted to the region of the Amazon, at the expense of the United States, and there endowed with land gratuitously by Brazil, and at the expiration of a term of years become citizens of Brazil. When I get ready I will colonise

Yours, J. C. MAXWELL.

BUBBLES.

I.

I stood on the brink in childhood,
And watched the bubbles go
From the rock-fretted sunny ripple
To the smoother lymph below;

And over the white creek-bottom,
Under them every one,
Went golden stars in the water,
All luminous in the sun.

But the bubbles brake on the surface,
And under, the stars of gold
Broke, and the hurrying water
Flowed onward, swift and cold.

II.

I stood on the brink in manhood,
And it came to my weary heart,—
In my breast so dull and heavy,
After the years of smart,—

That every hollowest bubble
Which over my life had passed
Still into its deeper current
Some sky-sweet gleam had cast;

That, however I mocked it gayly,
And guessed at its hollowness,
Still shone, with each bursting bubble,
One star in my soul the less.

—Atlantic Monthly.

DO YOU READ YOUR RELIGIOUS PAPER?

Must everything be spiced with war news or war speculations in order to be read by ministers and Christians? We hope not, for the safety of our country, we think, depends much upon the maintenance of the spirit of prayer and piety. The medium through which we receive even the intelligence of the day is very important in its unconscious influence upon us. The reading of exciting, often unreliable intelligence, is most disastrous in its effect upon the mind and heart. We can know very much about individuals and families simply by knowing what papers they read most thoroughly. Shall then the papers that are most religious in their influence and aim be only casually read, or neglected altogether?

Boston Recorder.

SUDDEN DEATH.

We sometimes prepare surprise-parties for the very sake of pleasure. Distant friends are secretly gathered. Those whom the daily thoughts long for are brought into the house, and the parlor is filled. The unconscious one for whom all this is prepared, walking on some housekeeper's errand, by chance opens the door, when, with overwhelming surprise, she stands in the very midst of parents, brothers, sisters, companions, friends! And so to thousands is the privilege of sudden death. It is like the opening of a door. At one step they are within the charmed circle of everlasting love!

It is not sudden death that men have need to fear, but that unpreparedness for dying which sudden death lays open. He who is always prepared to die need see nothing terrible in sudden dying, but many things that are good, and some that are glorious!

Independent.

In the Austrian war budget, now under consideration, there is one item to which rats and mice are especially interested, as a sum of 2500 f. is demanded for the feeding of cats to be kept in the victualling magazines of the army.

THE DYING YEAR.

The dirge of the year will soon be sung,
The knell of his death is already rung,
He lies outstretched on his icy bier,
Around his brow is a simplet sere,
And Time, the sexton, with hurried tread
Prepares the turf for his narrow bed.

But now are the funeral rites are done,
The mourners are greeting his youthful son,
Forgetting the sire so lately dead,
With garlands they deck the infant's head;
As if in a bridal hall they trod,
Their footsteps trip o'er the new-laid sod.

Yet what hath the old man done, that he
Should suffer such gross indignity?
What foul misdeed has his lifetime shown,
For which, in his grave, he should thus atone?
Alas! I fear that the revelling throng
Have done to his ashes grievous wrong.

His life was a mingled tissue, like ours,
Of sorrow and gladness, sun and showers,
Of the leafless wood, and the blooming vale,
The breeze of Spring, and the Winter gale;
Like mists that fled at the dawn of day,
Or the breaking waves—it passed away.

'Tis said that he kept a secret scroll,
A record true of the human soul,
Wherein he graved with impartial pen,
The actions, feelings, and thoughts of men;
And few there are but would fain efface
Some lines his hand has been known to trace.

And therefore in idle mirth they tread
The turf that covers his lowly head,
And quaff, with shouts of innocent joy,
Rich goblets filled to the blooming boy!
Just so, when his aged sire was young,
Around his cradle they danced and sung.

But long ere the youth's bright locks are gray
Or the bloom on his cheek shall pass away,
Hearts joyous now shall be sad with fears,
And eyes now bright shall be dim with tears,
Hopes, blighted for ever—affections, crost,
Companions never'd, and friendships lost.

So let us live, that time's onward flow
May leave as it passes, no pang of woe;
That whether our lot be dark or bright,
The heart within may be true and right,
And its future records exhibit not
A single line we could wish to blot. W. B.

"HE IS MY CHRIST."

On a very hot day in July, I visited, as usual, one of the hospitals in Baltimore, where among fifty wounded soldiers recently exchanged and sent on from Richmond, I found one young man who interested me deeply. He was only nineteen, and had a father and mother living on a farm in one of the valleys of Pennsylvania. He was free to converse—an expression of patient resignation lighting up his soft brown eyes as he answered my inquiries, and listened to my expressions of sympathy.

At the battle of Gaines' Mills he was wounded, and taken as a prisoner to a rude building used as a hospital, where his right arm was amputated. While this was done he was perfectly conscious, the surgeon's supply of chloroform having failed. When I asked him how he was able to bear this, he said, "When I saw others suffering so much more, I could not think of myself." His food at this hospital was simply flour and water, boiled together. Soon after, they were removed to an old tobacco warehouse in Richmond, where they suffered greatly until exchanged.

I gave him a little book, and that beautiful tract, "A True Story of Lucknow." A smile passed over his face as he said, "I have read that," but he lent it to his comrade on the next cot. When I bade him good by, he said, "I shall see you soon, won't I? You'll be in every day, almost?" He hoped soon to walk around and see our city. He spoke of writing home, and I promised to write for him, and left him.

The next day he said he had not slept well, which he attributed to a fever he had had before he left Richmond.

Two days after, I visited him a third time, and a kind friend having brought some ice-cream for the wounded, a fellow soldier raised him in the bed, and fed him slowly, for he seemed weaker, and I noticed how pale and sunken his cheeks were. The next few days were fearfully hot, and circumstances prevented my seeing him. I thought him in no danger; but on my next visit, to my surprise I found that he was not living—his little cot was already tenanted by another.

"S. is dead," said the next patient, "he sank very fast, but he died happy.—Many a time I've seen his lips move in prayer when he was not able to speak; and he was a good Christian, too: you may be sure all is well with him. His brother came to take him home, and when informed that he could not live, you never saw a more distressed man than that brother. They were all expecting him home, and he himself had expected to go; but he said he was very happy and resigned."

He had asked the chaplain to pray with him—which he did, asking him how he felt.

"Happy," he said, "God is near me, and when I pray I feel that he blesses me; I feel it in my heart."

"How thankful you ought to be to have Christ near you, and with you."

"A smile of heavenly radiance lighted up the wan face, lending unearthly brightness to those beautiful eyes which neither I nor his mother or loved ones at home were ever to see again; and from those fast closing lips came precious words—to those who had loved him from his infancy and childish years, more precious now than anything that earth can give: 'HE IS MY CHRIST! HE IS MY CHRIST! PRAISE HIM!' That," said the chaplain, "was all he seemed able to say; but it was enough."

About a year before the breaking out of this wicked rebellion, he had united with the church in his native place. He was among the first nobly to respond to the call of his country, and in the true spirit of patriotism left a happy home to join the ranks as a private soldier. He went as a Christian. Wherever he was, Christ was with him. Many are led away by the influences of camp life, and neglect prayer; but it was not so with him. The testimony of those who knew him was that "he lived up to all he professed." And when he felt that death was approaching he said to those around him, "I am going to a better world."

From his wounded comrades, who had been with him in all his sufferings, I learned many little particulars concerning his consistent life. In the Libby warehouse at Richmond he often talked of home, and his great desire was to see his friends once more. I found that in every place he had been he had prayed openly and fearlessly. In the hospital, surrounded by hundreds of older and irreligious companions, he was not afraid, but lifted up his voice in prayer to God as his reconciled Father in Christ, not merely night and morning, but often through the day. One who was with him the night before his death, told me that through its long and lonely hours, when he was unable to speak, his lips constantly moved in silent prayer. This was his comfort in his dying hour; God was with him; he "felt in his heart that He blessed him, and that He was his Christ." Precious words, thrice precious possession!—Am. Mess.

A HOMELESS PRIESTHOOD.

It can require no argument to show that the very worst consequences might be expected to flow from any scheme which placed the weaker sex entirely at the mercy of the stronger; which aimed at the extirpation of all natural affection; and which, obliterating from the language the sacred word, HOME, annihilated, with the word, all the blessings of which home is the fountain. If there is any process by which a nation can be brutified, if there is any machinery by which a just constitution can be subverted, and a thriving people precipitated into the abyss of anarchy and carnage, it must be this. The policy of every wise government is, to throw all possible guards around the HOMES of its citizens; to make them sanctuaries where they may find a shelter in times of public disaster—garden-spots, where the affections may be nurtured into strength and beauty—schools, where men may be trained for their social and civil duties under a tutelage by no much better than any other, as it is marked in a higher degree by the union of authority and love. To debase the homes of a nation, is like poisoning the streams of which they drink. And to take away their homes altogether, (for this is what is contemplated,) to crucify their natural affections, and deprive them of the powerful stimulus to virtue and industry supplied by a specific personal interest in the walls of their own intelligence and labor—is no less to cut up their patriotism by the roots, than their fellow-feeling. What will men, thus reared, care for the country they inhabit? It is not their country. They have none of the ties which bind men so firmly to their native land. They have no stake in the soil. Still less are they knit to it by the hallowed associations which connect every thought of public calamity with objects enshrined in the deepest recesses of the heart. If the state falls, it must fall; they can take care of themselves, and this is all that concerns them.

In truth, the most effective way to destroy all patriotism, or rather to preclude it, among a body of men, is, to isolate them from the rest of the population, organize them into a distinct community, prohibit them from forming domestic alliances, and deny them the rights and privileges, the joys and the sorrows, which enter essentially into the proper conception of home. It matters little, as to the result, whether you impose upon them the intolerable yoke of a constrained celibacy, or indulge them in a licensed sensuality; in either case they are deprived of the talismanic power of home. Can a class of men, or, if you will, a society, thus situated, feel that love of country which throbs in the heart of every husband and father here? Look, by way of illustration, at the example which comes nearest to the case described among the existing institutions of Christendom. The Church of Rome is a very wise church; the experience of a thousand years has not been thrown away upon her. Her object is to subjugate the world to her dominion. All of her complicated and systematic mechanism—all her plans and movements, are framed and prosecuted with a reference to this end. It was deemed a prime necessity, that her priests of every grade should be held to an inflexible obedience to the Papal See; that all their interests, affections, sympathies, should be absorbed in the church. How has this been accomplished? Simply by forbidding them to have a HOME. They are not allowed to marry. If they were, their affections might be divided between their families and the church. Their allegiance might be divided between the foreign potentate they serve, and their country. They could not fail to become attached to the land which sheltered and nurtured their heart's best earthly treasures; and this attachment might, on emergency, conflict with their vows of ecclesiastical obedience. I cite the case by way of illustration, and am dealing with the principles it involves, not with persons. Doubtless, if the sacerdotal corps appertaining to the Romish Church in the United States, could be polled, there would be a universal protestation of attachment to our country and its institutions. But is it, in the nature of things, possible that they should feel on this subject as our citizens generally feel? Let any man ask himself the question, "What objects are the first to rush across my thoughts—upon what do my affections and my anxieties most promptly and most tenderly fasten—when my country is threatened with war, pestilence, famine, disunion, or any other catastrophe?" You have all answered this question before it could be fairly propounded. It is that HOME that rises up before you; those venerable parents, that beloved husband or wife, those budding olive-plants around your table, those brothers and sisters whose fellowship is a perpetual feast to you; these are the objects you think of, when you see a black cloud preparing to discharge its elements of destruction upon your country; and there is not one of you who will not say, that if, instead of being entangled in this golden net-work of affection, and bound to the soil by cords as strong as those which bind you to life, you were perfectly isolated from home and its endearments, while you might still desire the prosperity of your country, you could see that cloud rising with far greater composure, and anticipate the catastrophe of which it was to be the instrument, with comparative equanimity. This is what is meant when it is alleged that the Papal See, by cutting off her priesthood from a home, and coercing them, by her fiercest anathemas, into the cruel mortification of their best affections, or, as the necessary alternative, the secret indulgence of their sensual appetites, has unavoidably, and, we are warranted in saying, purposely enervated, if not precluded, their local and national attachments, and made patriotism in certain contingencies (as where the policy of their adopted country might be thought to conflict with the welfare of their church) an impracticable virtue to them.

The Bible in the Family.

OLD MAIDS.

Characters of this description are interspersed, through every community. It is pleasant to know, that if they are to be found among the class with whom we have to do at present, the fraternity also supplies very many examples of an opposite kind. Every one will recall, on the mention of the subject, the names of single women who are as free from selfishness as any human beings can expect to be. Instead of being engrossed with themselves, they illustrate the hint dropped a moment ago, and keep up a cordial interest in persons and things around them. They enjoy and reciprocate the affection of their relatives, and are ever on the alert to perform a kind office for any one who may require it. Perhaps, if society were explored for the purpose of finding the best personification of disinterested kindness, one of the readiest specimens would come up in the guise of a Maiden Sister and Aunt. You have all seen such a one. I shall not err much if I describe her as a lady of middle age, of easy and graceful manners, intelligent and self-possessed, with a heart full of the milk of human kindness. She has seen much of the world, and seen it to some purpose—for she is none of those people who go through life with their eyes and ears shut, and who know no more of men and things to-day than they did twenty years ago. Without being infallible in judgment, and, in truth a little predisposed to distrust persons on their first introduction, she has a great knowledge of character, and her estimate of a new visitor is usually pronounced with authority, and listened to with merited respect. She is the more entitled to form an opinion in these cases, that the responsibility of entertaining company is often devolved upon her, especially when they call at unreasonable hours. For it is one of the fundamental articles of the domestic creed that she is never engaged: all the other constituents of the household may be busy as often and as much as they choose; but she is at liberty to answer every call and to look after every interest which may demand attention. Let it be added to her honor, that she is as much at home in the parlor as to any other department, and entertains as agreeably as though that were her only function. In theory, as just intimated, it may be her only function; but in fact, her functions are somewhat multifarious. It would not comport with the place and the occasion to describe them in detail. Let it suffice to say that, having nothing in particular to do, she is expected to do everything by turns. Her sphere is neither the drawing-room nor the dining room, neither the library nor the nursery, neither the kitchen nor the laundry, neither the conservatory nor the garden, but all of these combined. The head of the family often confides to her his books and papers to be arranged, and money for the household expenses. Her sister (or sister-in-law, as the case may be) relies upon her to supply her own lack of service in all the branches of housewifery. The children look to her to assist them in their lessons, to do their trivial but oft-recurring mending, to choose their presents, and, when no one else can go, to accompany them in their rides and walks. Her hands are always free to bind up their bruised finger, and her lap to receive the infant. In sickness, she knows what to do, and has the gentleness and the fortitude to do it as it should be done. She watches night after night without complaining, gives the physicians calm and discriminating reports of the progress of the disease, and goes through the daily routine of her anxious ministrations, with all the tact and more than the tenderness she would have displayed had nursing been the business of her life. If the house is to undergo its semi-annual renovation, one at least of the laboring sons will be in her hand. If there is a journey, she must superintend the packing. If there is a wedding, the honor and burden of the preparation devolve on her. And, to crown all, she is the wise and faithful counsellor of the youthful group around her. She guards their morals, inquires about every new associate, lodges in their ears many a wholesome caution, encourages them to study the Scriptures, keeps them to a due observance of the Sabbath, and commends religion to them by exemplifying in her own character its benign influence upon the temper and the life. Is not this a woman to be honored and loved? A woman who lives for others, and finds her own happiness in promoting theirs? And are we not warranted, with such examples on the right hand and on the left, to saying that society supplies no finer exhibitions of the unselfish spirit than those which are frequently to be found among the unmarried females?—Ib.

QUESTIONS TO THOSE WHO NEGLECT PRAYER-MEETINGS.

1. Are you always better employed? If not, can it be right in you to absent yourself?

2. Do you get more good to your own soul, and do more good to others, by staying away? If not, can you be acting wisely?

3. Does your own conscience justify you, or have you not sometimes a difficulty in keeping it quiet on the subject?

4. Will a death-bed commend your present course, or will you then look upon your neglect of prayer-meetings with pleasure, think you?

5. Does not your pastor suffer by your neglect? Does it not hurt his feelings, cool his zeal, and hinder his usefulness?

6. Are not your fellow-members in the Church discouraged by you, and may you not thus offend Christ's little ones?

7. Is not your own family injured by your neglect? What will your children think of prayer-meetings, seeing you habitually neglect them? Is it surprising if they despise them?

8. Is there no reason to fear that unconverted sinners may be both hindered and led to think lightly of prayer, by your conduct?

9. Can you have a proper concern for the prosperity of the Church, the spread of Christ's cause, and the conversion of sinners, if you never meet to pray for them?

10. Are you sure that you fulfil your duty as a church-member, while you neglect prayer-meetings? If you think so, can you prove it?

11. Is there no selfishness, or pride, or worldly-mindedness, at the root of your neglect? If so, ought such things to be encouraged?

12. Would it be right to give up the prayer-meetings? Do you think this would please God, or improve the cause? But if all the members did as you do, must they not be given up? Could not the rest find excuses for staying away, think you, as well as you? Do you not think they would, if their hearts were as worldly, or as cold, or as indifferent about the prosperity of the cause as you appear to be?—United Methodist Magazine.

RELIGIOUS INTEREST IN A HOSPITAL.

A speaker in the Fulton street meeting, in a recent address, said there was considerable religious interest in the hospital on David's Island, in the neighborhood of New York city. He gives the following account:

"There had been a rising religious interest among these men for some time past. He had witnessed its commencement and progress. It had been most manifestly a moving of the Holy Spirit upon the minds of these men, and no human influence.—"You know," continued the speaker, "there are from two thousand five hundred to three thousand men upon this island in the hospital, and that this is a government institution, and intended to be permanent.

"I was there last evening. The meeting was exceedingly solemn and affecting. As soon as we entered the place of prayer, it was manifest that we were in the presence of earnest men.

"The meeting was conducted in the usual way, opening with singing, and reading of the Scriptures, and prayer. Then opportunity was offered for persons to speak who wished to do so. More than a score improved the opportunity offered, some telling of the good work of grace which the Lord had begun in their hearts, and some asking for the prayers of Christians, and some expressing the joy which they experienced in the confidence of their hearts that Christ had been revealed as a Savior, and that their sins had been blotted out. More than twenty persons sought permission to speak and could not obtain it.

"In order to allow all to express their desires, the leader said, 'We cannot prolong this meeting, for the hour has come for closing it; and as many have tried to speak and could not, as many asked for prayer among those who have spoken, and as many perhaps desire to ask for prayer, all who wish to be thus remembered at the throne of heavenly grace may rise.'

"To our astonishment, more than four hundred arose. It was an affecting sight. Most of those were young men. Some had been sick and were now convalescent. Some were wounded and were now getting well. Some came hobbling in on crutches, and some had to be brought in, being assisted by those who were able to help them.

"But in one thing all were alike. All were anxious on the subject of religion. All were concerned about their salvation."

OUR RELATION TO GOD.

Do you suppose a man to know himself, that he comes into this world on an other errand but to rise out of the vanities of time, into the riches of eternity? Do you suppose him to govern his inward thought and outward actions by this view of himself, and then to him every day has lost all its evil? Prosperity and adversity have no difference, because he receives and uses them both in the same spirit; life and death are equally welcome, because equally parts of his way to eternity. For poor and miserable as this life is, we have all of us free access to it that is great, and good, and happy, and carry within ourselves a key to all the treasures that heaven has to bestow upon us. We starve in the midst of plenty; groan under infirmities, with the remedy in our own hand; live and die without knowing or feeling anything of the One, only good, while we have it in our power to know and enjoy it in as great a reality as we know and feel the power of this world over us; for heaven is as near to our souls as this world is to our bodies; and we are created, we are redeemed, to have our conversation in it. God, the only good of all intelligent natures, is not an absent or distant God, but is more present in and to our souls, than to our own bodies; and we are strangers to heaven, and without God in the world, for this only reason, because we are void of that spirit of prayer which alone can, and never fails to unite us with the One, only good, to open heaven and the kingdom of God within us.

A root set in the finest soil; in the best climate, and blessed with all that sun, air and rain can do for it, is not in so sure a way of its growth to perfection, as every man may be whose spirit aspires after all that which God is ready and infinitely desirous to give him. For the sun meets not the stringing bud that stretches toward him with half that sympathy as God, the source of all good, communicates himself to the soul that longs to partake of him. We are all of us by birth the offspring of God, more nearly related to Him than we are to one another; for in Him we live, and move, and have our being.—William Law.

PRAYER IS THE SOUL OF CHRISTIAN WORK.

"Praying men may not always have been judicious; there may be some plausible foundation for separating the working from the praying man; foolish and impracticable things have been attempted by well-meaning and unwise people. Prayer, moreover, has its own sphere, and is not to encroach upon another; it is not to usurp the place of work. But neither is it to be divorced from work, nor is it less real and needful; and to say that the praying man is to be kept distinct from the working man is practically to close the common energies of life against the intrusion of prayer. Those who say it have a vague impression, that a man who lays stress upon prayer is deficient in practical wisdom; that the devotional element of character tends to remove a man from the region of common sense to the borders of the fairyland of sentiment; that he becomes a dreamer of dreams, that will never fit in the plain, rough order of the world. If that were true it would be worth considering. Any element of character existing in excess will disturb a man's balance. But if the inevitable tendency of a prayerful spirit were to thwart a man's activity and usefulness, it would be incompatible with Bible teaching and Christian principle. There is no need to deny any inevitable tendency of the kind. The Bible, which exhorts to prayer, is the most practical of all books; devout men are at least as practical as their neighbors; and if they were not, it would be because they have not rightly understood the Bible doctrine, or of some strong natural fault. If the men were singled out who laid almost extravagant stress upon prayer, whose belief in it would startle many modern Christians, they would be Augustine, and Bernard, and Luther, yet the men of the most various temperaments, and men of the rarest practical gifts and insight. For the greatest workers will always be the foremost in communion with God, and communion with God is the very heart of prayer."

"And so it happens, that in our own generation there is a singular group of men who, somewhat about the same time and without the least knowledge of one another, in very different spheres, took for their watchword, 'ora et labora.' They are men who maintain that God exercises some direct influence in the affairs of the world, who therefore appeal to him in any puzzle or difficulty, who expect his help, and as they believe that he has the hearts of all men in his hand, do not know any special circle or class of men, or any special type of actions within which that help must be limited. They distinctly believe in God as their Father, and never care to realize him as a pure, infinite Intelligence, or as an eternal Law. They believe, also, that prayer is not an arbitrary provision for temporary circumstances, but that it is fixed in the ways of God, and in harmony with the settled relations of the world and the laws of human conduct. And they believe, that if in God's name they begin a fitting work, God will establish it, answer their prayers regarding it, enable them to deal wisely, righteously, and prosperously by it, and that behind every other means to its success, and

The Christian Recorder.

Philadelphia, December 27, 1862.

REPORT.

Look here, brethren, read this; and remember it, too!—

The meeting of the Executive Committee, and their appeal to the ministers having the charge of circuits and stations, and to the members of the A. M. E. Church, is as follows:

Dear Brethren and Friends:—According to the authority vested in our Editor and General Book Steward, he called together the Executive Committee of the Book Concern on the 13th of November, at which time we had a very pleasant interview together in relation to the present flattering condition of the Book Concern, and the wants of the Church.

Brethren, let us tell you for once that the Book Concern is really in a prosperous condition—and how it is that our Editor and General Book Steward has so managed to keep the Book Concern and paper in the hopeful condition in which we find it, and with such scant means, we confess we are at a loss to know—and more especially in times like these, when many a firm and paper, with a much larger capital, have succumbed. But, brethren, in order to hold this position, and to keep up a growing interest throughout the connexion, there are means needed—first, there is a very great demand for hymn-books in every direction in the connexion, and our Editor and General Book Steward has informed us there is only seven or eight in the store, and he has no more to bind up. Therefore, the Committee deem it advisable, in view of such a demand for our hymn-books, and especially in the Western country, to advise our General Book Steward to get out another edition, so that our people may be supplied. To do this, brethren, it will require about $500. This should be done without delay. We therefore recommend each elder, deacon, and preacher to properly lay this vital matter before their congregations, and to take up a free-will collection, and to forward the same to the General Book Steward and Editor, so that it may be in his hands by the 18th of December, or 20th, at the farthest—and he will give each credit through this paper. Now we ask our brethren, shall the Book Steward have the amount? We will answer for the Philadelphia district—our portion will be forthcoming. We also recommend to our Bishops, while travelling around, to speak of this matter.

WILLIAM MOORE,
W. H. WATERS,
STEPHEN SMITH,
W. D. W. SCHUREMAN,
ELISHA WEAVER, Ch'n.

TO OUR BRETHREN WHO TAKE THE PAPER BY THE WEEK.

That, as the new year comes in, we must make a new arrangement with them, too; and that is, they must send us the avails of the papers they sell, either at the end of every week or every two weeks.

THE BLACK MAN.

We have received a copy of a very neatly gotten up book, by Mr. William Wells Brown. We have not as yet had time to peruse it entirely, but read the preface with a great deal of interest; and from all we have seen, as yet, consider it the climax of the work, and that alone would pay any one to read it. In relation to the names selected as the only great black men in this country, is a question upon which we may comment in the future, after we shall have given it a more thorough examination. Mr. Brown shows from his book the positive ability of black men as authors, &c. The book can be had for sale at our office, or at the store of Wm. Still, of Philadelphia, of Mr. Thos. Hamilton, of New York, the publisher, and at Boston, Mass., of R. F. Wallcut.

NOTICE TO OUR CITY SUBSCRIBERS.

Dear Patrons: The good Lord permitting, we shall be on hand on New Year's day. Will you be kind enough to have your $3,25 ready by the time we get there? and should we not get there on the first day, look for us on the second; and not only be ready yourself, but pay your neighbors a visit, and tell them to have it ready. Let Philadelphia show to the world, that she appreciates the services of the Christian Recorder these two years past, by subscribing to the amount of $500 to help to sustain the paper.

QUARTERLY MEETINGS.

ON THE FRANKFORD CIRCUIT, JAN. 1863.

Quarterly conference in Bristol Church, on the 3d of January, 1863, at 2 o'clock, P. M., and on the 3d and 4th, Quarterly Meeting in Bristol.

On the 10th and 11th, on Harrisburg Hill.

On the 24th and 25th, in Bensalem; and on the 31st of January and the first day of February, in Frankford.

REV. HENDERSON DAVIS, Trav. Min.
REV. HENRY DAVIS, Elder in Charge.

Quarterly Meeting in the A. M. E. Union Church, in Philadelphia, on the 17th and 18th of January, 1863. Also, on the evening of the 19th, at 7 o'clock, love feast in the above named church. REV. H. DAVIS, Elder.

FAIR.

The Ladies of the Sinking Fund of St. Thomas' Episcopal Church are holding a Fair for the sale of useful and fancy articles, for the benefit of the Church. It opens on Christmas eve, and will continue during the holidays, under the supervision of Mrs. Sebastian, Mrs. Miller, and Mrs. Reddin. The patronage of the public is earnestly solicited. The young ladies attending the tables will be found attentive, agreeable, and obliging. W. P. P.

ACKNOWLEDGMENTS.

It is a pleasure to us to say to the whole world of mankind, that out of all this broad connexion, the Rev. Theodore Gould, of Princeton, is the only minister of God, so far, who has respected the call of the General Conference Committee, to aid in getting out another edition of our hymn-book. He has sent us for that purpose, $2,40. God bless him and his people. Also, on account for papers, $1,00.

THEFT.

Some good-for-nothing thief slipped into our house and stole our overcoat some time last Wednesday, or at night, from out of the hall. We hope that it may do him good, though we are sorry to have to go without it this cold weather.

QUARTERLY AND PROTRACTED MEETINGS.

Last Sabbath was Rev. Peter Gardiner's Quarterly Meeting, in Macedonia Church, Camden, New Jersey. As was noticed, the Rev. Henry Davis preached in the morning; we did not hear him, but were told he preached a very fine discourse. Rev. S. Smith preached at 3 o'clock, A. M., from the text: "Seek ye Lord while he may be found, call ye upon him while he is near." Brother Smith gave one of his warm discourses on the occasion. The stewards and members made a hard struggle to raise their minister's salary. At night we preached for Elder Gardiner, and had a very good time. The Camden people seem to be alive to their duty. We also got two new subscribers for the year, whose name will appear on the first of the year.

Elder Shureman has been holding a protracted meeting for nearly three weeks, in Zion's Mission. May the Lord bless the work.

Elder Davis of the A. M. E., Union Bethel, is also carrying on a protracted meeting: the interest manifested seems to be good.

The Lombard Street Presbyterian Church has been holding a Fair for the benefit of their church, which was very well attended. St. Thomas' Church, and some others, will hold one during the holidays. The Black Swan and others, gave a concert last Tuesday, in the Rev. Williams' Church, Big Wesley, Lombard Street, Phila.

OUR DEBTORS.

We have in the mildest terms, more or less, given those of our brethren to understand that their indebtedness to the Book Store was greatly needed. We don't want to call these brethren's names and the amount. We have over four hundred dollars of out-standing debts. Now how on earth does brethren expect us to live at all with a small capital, if brethren do not send to us the avails of books and papers? However, if all the brethren would send in subscribers accompanied with the cash, we could make out better.

THE WAR.

The war seems to be at a stand-point just now, though men don't know to-day what to-morrow will bring forth. General Burnside was defeated, by the Rebels; and yet after a due consideration, it can hardly be considered a defeat, for through some traitors, false to the obligations taken upon them, by some means gave the rebels the plans, which seem to have been agreed upon by the President, General Halleck and Burnside. But Burnside, seeing his plans had been betrayed by some hidden enemy, at once, like a good general, shifted the position of his men, in order to flank the foe in a direction they looked not for, and came very near proving successful. All we have to say is that when General Burnside attacks them again they may make their prayers.

And now, in relation to the President's proclamation, we hope and believe, that for the salvation of his country, he will enforce it to the very letter, though we can sympathize with the President in the great pressure brought around him by the border State men and others.

THE DESTINY OF THE A. M. E. CHURCH.

THE LOCAL PREACHERS, EXHORTERS, AND THE ENTIRE MEMBERSHIP.

CONTINUED.

In our last article we said the entire laity makes up the largest bulk of the Church. This is evidently true. We have also shown the connecting link down to the laity as it should be. In order that there may be perpetuity and unity, from the head to the foot, in the A. M. E. Church, it now becomes the imperative duty of the local preachers, exhorters, stewards, class leaders, trustees, and the entire membership to respect, with an eye single to the glory of God, all the laws and regulations of the A. M. E. Church. Well, how is this to be done? Let the local preachers, exhorters, and class leaders see that they do nothing that would in the least obstruct or impede any of the laws, rules, and regulations of the Church, since the link of union, of concord, and of reverence for all her laws has been kept sacred by the Bishops, elders, and deacons. When they joined this branch of the Christian Church, they did it from a matter of choice, they said, by way of pledging themselves to subscribe to all the doctrines, laws, rules, and regulations of the Church; and in view of said obligation, the strictest regard and respect should be entertained for them. The locality, we say, should be agreed and a unit. They should encourage every rule of the Church: they should have a love for all her regulations, such as our class meetings, prayer meetings, and love-feast meetings. They should look suspiciously upon those who would seek to trample under foot these tenets of our church. Again, they should have a profound respect for the Sabbath Schools—attend them on all occasions when circumstances will admit. They should also be teachers in our Sabbath schools, if capable, and their services are needed; for they help to make up the destiny of the A. M. E. Church. If they are not capable of teaching in the Sabbath School, this is a greater reason why they should attend, and become pupils of it; as they claim to be called to teach in the pulpit, so that they will be better enabled to teach; for if they have no love for the Sabbath School, and are incapable of teaching there, or will not attend to receive instructions, why, it is clear that they would be incapable of teaching adults, or even the children in a few months of the Sabbath school.

Again, they should encourage the literature of the Church, in all of its ramifications, because they came forward to join the church, that they subscribed most fully to all these things. They should countenance all the decrees of the Church. Thus, for instance; in order to inform themselves of the regulations of the Church, they should take our weekly papers. "Well, but," says one, "I can't read." Very well, you should have it in your family, and let them read it. "But," says he, none of my family can read." Well, then, get some one to read it for you, so that you may, to some degree, keep pace with the wants and prosperity of the Church. Mark when you cause to receive license to preach, how would you have felt if the elder had said to you, Well, John or William, you can't read, we don't want you? Is it not clear that your name would not have come under the category of preachers? Most assuredly it is.

Hence, the propriety of taking the organ of the church, whether it is a weekly or monthly paper. As a general thing, every local preacher, and exhorters should take the paper. The Christian Recorder, for instance, should be taken in the families of the locality, and exhorters in the church. They cannot be half as well informed of the movements of the Church, as they would most unquestionably be were they to take it. To do this, not only shows your obligation to the Church, but a oneness of action and link in the church. This evidently helps to make up the destiny of the A. M. E. Church.

Again, they should also take our monthly periodicals or quarterlies as the case may be. They should set good examples before the people: and how are they to do this unless they take themselves the literature of the Church. Now it is clearly to be seen by all clear-sighted persons that this is the next highly important course to be pursued by these lights of the Church for its destiny.

CONCLUSION NEXT WEEK.

CHRISTIAN RECORDER.

We notify our friends and patrons, that their subscription ends by the first of the year, and we shall look for all persons who have taken our paper during the last year, to renew their subscription, by forwarding to us by mail, the small sum of two dollars and twenty-five cents, ($2,25,) which shall entitle you to the CHRISTIAN RECORDER for the year 1863. We also ask, not only to take it yourselves, but do not cease, until you can get your neighbor to take it. You need not have any fears about your not getting your paper, for we have proved to you, the last two years, that a paper can be kept in the field to the credit of all.

Now, let every true preacher and minister in our church, as well as others, turn over a new leaf, and say, "I will be responsible for twenty new readers of the RECORDER." In my charge, where they are small, and those who have large stations, say, "I know that I can be responsible for one, two, or three hundred lovers of literature, who will read the CHRISTIAN RECORDER for the year 1863." We know that there are a number of brethren who have done nothing for the paper and book concern; but we will look over all of that, if they will resolve to do better for the future. Why, brethren, on the first day of January we ought to have not less than one thousand dollars to come to our office, and what would that be with a connexion so large as ours? not a quarter of a cent apiece. In our next, for the New Year, we shall say more.

THE REPORT OF THE EXHIBITION AND CONCERT COMMITTEE.

We, the committee appointed by this board of "Sunday School" teachers to make arrangements for an exhibition and concert, have performed our duty in that direction.

It took place on the 4th of the present month in the presence of a large audience, and judging from expressions of suppressed joy uttered on that occasion after the conclusion of "Selections, Dialogues," &c., every one appeared to be gratified with the exercises of the evening.

From the time of creating the said committee until the specified time for it to take place, there was not exhibited that Christian unity of action and feeling among us in regard to that concert and exhibition as there should have been, but amidst all the opposition and obstacles that were thrown across our path to impede our progress, we have been enabled by the beneficent hand of the "Preserver of all good things" to surmount them all, and to accomplish successfully, the purpose for which we were appointed: furthermore, we can say that we have realized a handsome sum, a sum that we feel somewhat proud to mention. We have met our demands without resorting to the treasurer of the "Union Sunday School," and now we submit the following report to the consideration of the body.

The amount of money received,	$47 98
" " " expended,	20.50
Balance in hand,	$27.48

The report was received and a vote of thanks was extended to the committee for having discharged their duty so faithfully.

MR. EDITOR:—You must excuse us for intruding upon the columns of your paper, and for being so lengthy in our remarks. Sir, we have never served upon a committee where there were so much union and Christian feeling manifested as upon this. Permit me to remark to the Superintendent and Teacher:

"O do not be discouraged,
For Jesus is your friend,
And if you lack for knowledge,
He'll not refuse to lend."

Let us push forward with renewed courage and with an unshaken confidence in the Lord, knowing that our labor will be remunerated at the right hand of the Majesty on high, if we faint not in well doing. Teachers, young and old, trim your lamps afresh, rekindle your expiring zeal and persevere in every good and noble work, remembering that if your object is good and you are pursuing it by lawful means, you will be sure to attain it by looking upwards for assistance from the "Author and Finisher of our faith." "Then go forth with courage bold, with lamp and pitcher in your hand, bear with ignorance and superstition, until you have gained the desired end."

The committee of arrangements.

Mr. Jas. S. Thompson, Pres.
" Wm. T. Simpson, Sec.
Mrs. Rebecca Valentine,
Mrs. Maria T. Hollowell,
Mrs. —— Young,
Miss Esther Potter,
Miss Rebecca Redwood,
Miss Rebecca Washington.

For the Christian Recorder.

DONATION VISIT.

There was a donation visit given at the A. M. E. Church, Georgetown, D. C., for the benefit of the pastor. It was given by Mr. Richard Newton, a gentleman from Chenango Co., N. Y., who was recently united in the bonds of matrimony to one of the most respected females of Georgetown, D. C., Mrs. Matilda Barker.

Mr. Newton was assisted by a committee of ladies, consisting of Mrs. Newton, Miss Sarah Pryor, Marion J. Curry, Sarah H. Cooksey, Olivia Curry and Marion Lee.

The Committee (with one exception, Miss Lee, Methodist,) were some of the first class ladies, members of the Catholic church. These ladies appeared to comprehend the true meaning of the Apostle Peter's vision on the house-top, which the Apostle was bold in declaring at the house of Cornelius: Acts x. When these ladies were asked by Mr. Newton to assist him in the donation for the pastor, they were ready and willing, thereby showing that they were all friends of Christ and his ministers, believing that "there is neither Jew nor Greek, bond nor free, there is neither male nor female; for we are all one in Christ Jesus:" Gal. iii. 28. Mr. Newton furnished the table with the best that the season affords, at a cost of about $30, which was returned to him out of the money that was collected by the committee. Many persons said that they never enjoyed themselves better at any entertainment in the church.

Mr. Editor, you would have been pleased to have been there, to have seen the ladies and gentlemen enjoying themselves.

I was never more delighted. The next day, I had about $14 worth of provisions brought to my house, and a sum of money given me. Among the contributors were a few of my members, Sister M. J. Dove, E. Cooksey, A. Parker, B. Diggs; also Mrs. Brown, a member of my congregation, and Mrs. Carroll, a member of H. M. Turner's congregation. I trust that I may never forget the charity of Mr. Newton and those ladies. May the path of those ladies be illuminated with the Sun of Righteousness, and may the flowers of Divine grace continue to bud and blossom in their souls, until they shall be numbered with the saints in glory. And may Mr. Newton not only be a well-wisher, but may he become a faithful member of the church of Christ.

H. J. R.

Washington, D. C.

ABSTRACT OF A LETTER.

This letter was sent by the Executive Committee of Jamaica, to Mr. W. W. Bayley of New York, and to S. Huntington Jones of Philadelphia.

GENTLEMEN:—We trouble you with this communication, as our fellow-citizens, Messrs. Herschell and Orgill, have acquainted us of your readiness and desire to aid the scheme of the immigration of the colored population into Jamaica.

The English mail, for the arrival of which, we detained the steamer to New York for a day, has brought from the Secretary of State for the Colonies in London, a despatch, in which he desires that any who may have been sent to the United States for this purpose, should be enjoined to govern themselves implicitly by the directions of the British Minister at Washington.

We are thus urgent, relying on your co-operation in the matter, as we are aware that the colonies have already sent persons charged with a similar mission to the United States; and we do not desire that Jamaica should be left behind in the movements likely to be made in the matter of this immigration. The Governor of Jamaica has kindly addressed Lord Lyons, the Ambassador of England, to your Government, and acquainted him that you will probably apply to him for instructions.

We have, also, to enclose you a copy of the Governor's speech, on the opening of our Legislature, and also 120 copies of the report of our Land and Immigration Committee, with statement of owners and number of acres of land proposed, and the rates at which they are to be sold or leased to immigrants, which information, you will please circulate, in the mode which you deem best suited to aid in the movement.

We beg to observe, that besides these offers, the local committees of some of our parishes have not yet sent in the offers which they have received. We assure you, that there is every facility for the acquirement of large tracts of country in Jamaica.

A bill will be immediately introduced into the Legislature, to enable the Governor and Executive Committee, to provide funds for the purposes of this immigration, the general scope of which, has been already made known to the American Government through their Consul at Kingston.

For the Christian Recorder.

OBITUARY.

Departed this life in the blissful hope of immortality, on the 18th inst. between the hours of four and five o'clock, P. M., CATHERINE GARRISON, consort of Thomas Garrison. She became the subject of serious impressions from the startling intelligence of the sudden demise of that good and faithful minister of Christ, the Rev. Samuel Williams, who died at his post, battling against the powers of darkness in this city, on the 1st of December, 1860, whose sudden death seemed to electrify with sorrow and sadness this community. "O the depth of the riches both of the wisdom and knowledge of God! how unsearchable his judgments and his ways "past finding out." Sister Garrison's impressions soon led to pungent convictions of sin, which terminated in a happy conversion to God; and, when going around, telling what a dear Saviour she had found. With tears of joy and sorrow streaming from her eyes, she said the idea of her sinning and dancing her soul to hell, while that good and faithful minister's body was dying and his spirit flying to heaven, so haunted and tormented her, that she could find no rest until she found rest in the wounds of a crucified Redeemer. From her conversion till her death, her life was that of a consistent Christian, and during her long and severe illness, which lasted four months, she bore up with Christian fortitude, and many excellent things were expressed by her during her illness. In the morning before she died, she had such a manifestation of the presence of her Lord, that she rejoiced and clapped her hands for joy, and with her hands clasped and her face radiant with a heavenly smile, she said to her mother, "O what a blessed thing it is to love and serve the Lord! All is well with me." At one o'clock, she called the family around her bedside and bade them adieu; afterwards she reached out her hand, clasped the hand of her husband, and said to him, "Soon we must part." Soon after, she took a sinking spell, and between the hours of four and five o'clock in the afternoon, her spirit took its flight to join the blood-washed in the better land. JOHN TIMUS.

Cleveland, Dec. 19th, 1862.

CONTRIBUTION OF CLOTHES FOR THE CONTRABANDS.

The committee appointed by the Executive Committee of the Social, Civil, and Statistical Association of the colored people of Pennsylvania to bring the wants of the suffering contrabands in and around Washington before the colored public of Philadelphia, respectfully acknowledge the receipts of clothing from the following parties:

S. Sewell, Mrs S. S. Hawkins, White, (2,) S. M. Douglass, C. B. Miller, Clayton Miller, Ellen Gordon, Clara Jones, R. B. Cutchin, Dr. Wilson, Mrs. Stokely, A. Gray, Joshua Brown, James P. Clay, Mrs. Robinson, Mr. Bascom, Miss Gale, Anderson, C. H. Bastill, Henry Harmon, S. M. Smith, S. Steward, Emily F. Davis, Elijah J. Davis, Lucy Taylor, Robert Adger, Rebecca Kelley, E. J. Peet, Moses Wheeler, Miss Abigail Goodwin, and others. Union Baptist Church, 2 boxes; Pearl Street Baptist Church, 2 barrels; Zoar Church, Sarah Saunders, Annis Spicer, Maria Clark, Patience E. Thomas, Jane Turpin, Rhoda Jones, W. H. Thomas, Mrs. Steward, Mrs. Emma Farbeaux, Miss Martha Farbeaux, C. B. Gardon, Rev. Peter Gardner, Mrs. Clayton Miller St. G. R. Taylor, C. B. Colly, H. White, Mrs. Catharine Johnson, Vasri Locke, C. S. Nelson, Peter Cline, Hiram Fry, and others.

The thanks of the committee are especially due to Mrs. Hill, Mrs. H. Johnson, Mrs. C. Johnson, and others, for rendering valuable services in making up new garments; likewise the praiseworthy exertions put forth by friends in Reading under the management of Messrs Nelson, Cline, Fry, and others, in procuring to a short space of time over two large boxes of clothing, proved that their sympathies and intentions may be relied upon.

As goods have been forwarded from time to time to the National Freedmen's Relief Society, we have had frequent letters from its officers informing us of their welcome reception by the contrabands, and of what were still needed; and we will here take the liberty to make a brief extract or two for the benefit of all our friends.

Extract of a letter from the President of the N. F. Relief Society to the Cor. Secretary.

I thank you, and we all thank you for these contributions of clothing. A distribution will be made to-morrow among the suffering poor at Alexandria, under the direction of our committee; also one box and a barrel from Josiah Hankinson. His address is not plainly written, and if you know him, please acknowledge the receipt of them for me. Allow me to say, that we are in great want of children's clothing for Alexandria. The poor little creatures are almost naked. You mention sending new shoes. No more acceptable gift could be made.

Extract of a letter from the Matron, Miss Patton.

DEAR FRIEND:—We received, Nov. 28th, seven boxes and two barrels of clothing, &c., from Philadelphia for the contrabands. Two of the large boxes came from the Union Baptist Church. They contained papers to that effect.

It was cheering to our hearts to see once more the needful coming forth, for our greatly afflicted people. Their eyes danced for joy at beholding them. You, sir, and those who have assisted in gathering together these things, have our warmest gratitude.

W. STILL,
JONATHAN C. GIBBS,
J. C. WHITE,
} Committee.

For the Christian Recorder.

Cleveland, Dec. 19, 1862.

MR. EDITOR:—The Ohio Lodge, 1188, of the Grand United Order of Odd Fellows, gave a festival for the benefit of the contrabands. We cleared $38.60, which we sent to Cairo to assist in the great work of benevolence among the contrabands, which is much needed. The West is doing her duty in that direction.

Yours fraternally, D. H. C.

THE WHEREABOUTS.

Can any person give me any information of my three children, namely: Richard Christian, Rebecca Christian and Rachel Christian, who came from Winchester in General Banks' division? Any information in relation to the above three persons, who are my children, will be thankfully received.

(Signed) HENRY CHRISTIAN,
No. 624 Barclay St., Philada.

P. S.—Ministers will please announce to their congregations.

EPITAPH ON PIZARRO.

FOR A COLUMN AT TRUXILLE.

"Pizarro here was born, a greater name,
The lists of Glory boast not. Toil and Pain,
Famine and hostile elements, and hosts
Embattled, failed to check him in his course,
Not to be wearied, not to be deterred,
Not to be overcome. A mighty realm
He overran, and with relentless arm
Slew or enslaved its unoffending sons,
And wealth, and power, and fame were his rewards.
There is another world, beyond the grave,
According to their deeds where men are judged.
O reader! if thy daily bread be earned
By daily labor,—yea, however low,
However wretched, be thy lot assigned,
Thank thou, with deepest gratitude, the God
Who made thee, that thou art not such as he."

SOUTHEY.

FASHIONS.

The last bulletin of fashion contains the following passage which we would particularly commend to the attention of our lady readers:

It should be borne in mind, in giving orders for the length of the skirt of an out-door dress, that it has been decided in Paris that long trailing dresses are not to be worn in the street during the coming winter. For evening, or grandes toilettes, the dresses are all made with a train; but no such thing is to be seen worn by people of good taste when on foot. We welcome this news with delight, as the fashion of allowing a dress to sweep the streets was anything but a cleanly one.

WHAT IS PRAYER?

About twenty years ago, a little boy was put to bed at dark by his sister. He knelt down by a chair to say his prayers. A young lady, a visitor, was present, and listened whilst he repeated them. He knew that she was observing him; and, as he said them in a very careful manner, with his eyes raised to heaven, and his hands clasped, "How sweetly he prays!" whispered the lady. This was all she said, but he heard it, and his heart was filled with gratified pride. He had scarcely thought of God in his prayers, yet he went to bed glad and happy—not that he had pleased God, but because he himself had been praised! Was this prayer? I will tell you what he did afterwards, and then you can judge. One day he made a kite, but it would not fly, but turned round and round. After trying awhile to make it rise in the air, he became angry, and dashed it to the ground and stamped upon it with his feet. No one was near, and he cursed the kite—not loud, but softly, lest somebody should hear him. He did it with the same tongue which the young lady said had "prayed so sweetly." He forgot God when he cursed, as well as when he said his prayers. Had he prayed?

A few years passed away. He was now eight years old, and he often felt much trouble when he thought of his sins. There were no simple, instructive books published at the time, to teach young children the way to be saved. He knew that he ought to pray; but he did not rightly understand how Jesus Christ was Saviour. It is true that he often heard the minister and his mother speak of him, but no one explained to him, in a manner that he could understand, that he should love and trust the Saviour just as he would confide in his father. To quiet his conscience when it was uneasy, he resolved to say three prayers secretly every day. This plan he followed for a time; he then grew careless, and forgot to pray until something alarmed him, when he began again, and, to make up for lost time, he counted up the days in which he had forgotten his devotions, and remained on his knees until he had repeated three prayers for each neglected day. But it was very tiresome to stay so long on his knees, and he therefore hastened over them, as rapidly as his tongue could move, little feeling that something more was needed than the mere repeating of words. Was this prayer?

Many years more passed away, and he became a man. His father and mother died, and many of his friends beside. There were very few left in the world to love him, and he wandered to another city. He was sad and lonely; he felt that everything worldly was vain and unsatisfying. He had no true happiness here, and had no hope in looking to the life to come. He knew that God was not his friend; God could not be pleased with sinners; and he felt that he was a sinner. One Sabbath he went into a church and there heard of Christ in such a way as he never before heard. Overcome with sorrow, he went to his bed-room, and, in an agony of his soul, he threw himself upon the floor, and asked the Lord to have mercy on him. He felt that he could not rest himself down low enough before his Maker. He repented that he had sinned so long and so much against the good and holy God, and resolved, by the help of the Holy Spirit, to do so no more. He became a Christian; and then experienced that one moment's enjoyment of the love and favor of the Lord was worth ten thousand worlds. This was prayer.

English Magazine.

☞ Correspondents will please send their communications in before Tuesday.

DANGERS FROM WORKS OF FICTION.

There is also a danger to be guarded against, in young persons especially, of an over-indulgence of imagination in reading works of fiction, and in what is called "castle building." Not that such an exercise of the imagination is to be condemned as an evil in itself, supposing, of course, that we avoid immoral books; but an excess in the perusal of fictions is apt to disqualify any one for real life, by creating a distaste and disgust for actual every-day scenes and humble practical duties, which do not equal in brilliancy the ideal scenes and imaginary transactions of fiction. The heart may even become hardened against real objects of compassion, from our having been too much occupied in dwelling on the elegant and poetical pictures of ideal distress which tales and poems exhibit. For, in these, a flowing excitement being all that is aimed at, there is, of course, a studied exclusion of all those homely and sometimes disgusting circumstances which often accompany real distresses, such as we are called upon to sympathize with and to relieve.

And there is also a danger of our becoming dissatisfied with estimable friends, because they do not come up to the standard of the heroes and heroines of romances. And what are usually reckoned as moral tales, and are written with a good design, are sometimes the most hurtful in this way; for they commonly represent the good characters as perfect, and bad ones as fiends, being both quite unlike what we meet with in real life, and therefore serving to engender false notions. It is allowable, indeed, and right, to bestow cultivation on the flower-gardens of your mind, only they must not be allowed to take the place of the plain but necessary corn-fields, or lead you to neglect their cultivation.—Extracts from Whately's Lesson on Mind.

WHISKY AND NEWSPAPERS.

A glass of whisky is manufactured from perhaps a dozen grains of corn, the value of which is too small to be estimated. A pint of this mixture sells for one shilling, and if, of a good brand, is considered well worth the money. It is drunk in a minute or two—it fires the brain, sharpens the appetite, deranges and weakens the physical system. On the same sideboard upon which this pernicious beverage is served lies a newspaper. It is covered with half a million of types—it brings intelligence from the four quarters of the globe. The newspaper costs less than the glass of grog—the juice of a few grains of corn; but it is no less strange than true that there is a large portion of the community who think corn juice cheap and the newspaper dear.—Leicestown Democrat.

WIFE vs. LADY.

It is certainly not in good taste for a gentleman to speak of his wife as his "lady," or to register their names upon the books of a hotel as "John Smith and lady," or to ask a friend "How is your lady?" This is all fashionable vulgarity, and invariably betrays a lack of cultivation. The term wife is far more beautiful and appropriate, and refined, whatever may be said to the contrary. Suppose a lady were to say, instead of "my husband," "my gentleman," or suppose we were to speak of "Mrs. Fitz Maurice and her gentleman." The thing would be absolutely ludicrous, and its obverse is none the less so, if rightly considered. A man's wife is his wife, and not his lady: and we marvel this latter term is not absolutely tabooed in such a connexion, at least by intelligent and educated people.—Providence Post.

LETTER FROM TENNESSEE.

LEBANON, Nov. 26th, 1862.

DR. EDDY:—I have been an itinerant for several years, and have seen and heard a few things, but my experience within a month past "beats all." Starting from Camp Peoria, Peoria, Ill., a continuous railroad and steamboat ride of fifty hours brought us to Bolivar, Tenn. 'Twas late at night when we arrived, and as soon as I could get "Charley," my horse, out of the car, I tied him to one side of the depot platform, and lay down under his nose to sleep. That sleep was delicious and refreshing, albeit there was an apparent upward pressure of the plank I lay on which made my bones ache before daylight. By the way, doctor, a campaign in the South would be good for you. You would think it no hardship to rise early after passing a cold night, with one blanket, on a railroad platform! You would acknowledge the old-fashioned Methodist rule, in regard to rising at four, a decidedly good one—under such circumstances.

Morning came—the first Sabbath morning of November. The sky was clear, I think, and the sun shone brightly, I believe, but "I didn't see it." All around were the smoking camp-fires of an immense army; almost every foot of soil was ground to finest dust, inches deep; and the continual tramp of men, and trot of mules, and gallop of horses, filled the air with an unbroken cloud of dust, which mingled with the smoke of the camp-fires, obscured the sky, shut out the beauty of the sunlight, and—gave men of all colors a sandy complexion. All day we waited impatiently for an order to go into camp, expecting it every moment. Just at night it came, and before we got our tents pitched, we were ordered to move at four o'clock next morning.

THE FORWARD MOVEMENT

Of Gen. Grant's Army of the Tennessee, then commenced. The scene was a grand one. Cavalry, infantry, artillery, rolling in from all directions, and forming in one immense column, with firm, upright steps, facing the South. What a difference in the size of the old and new regiments, and what painful thoughts that difference suggests! "Look at that new regiment, boys," says a scarred veteran, as we pass; "it looks like a brigade!" "And yours, old fellow," we think, but don't say, "looks like a mere company." Many of these noble old regiments have been cut down by battle and disease until they can muster only about one-third of their original strength.

Two days' marching, made oppressively hard by the abundance of dust and the scarcity of water, brought us to Lagrange, Tenn., within half a mile of the northern boundary of Mississippi. There was much of interest to notice on the way. White men were rarely seen, although the country is well settled, and has been in a tolerable state of cultivation. The men have gone South, taking many of the able-bodied male slaves with them. Most of the women and children remain at home, keeping with them the female slaves and their children. Near where we camped the first night, our men found the bodies of two negro men and one woman who had been murdered a day or two before, while trying to escape to the Federal lines. The inevitable little bundle, which the runaway negro always carries, lay by each of them. 'Twas a sad spectacle, and yet it was only a very small specimen of "the great evil of slavery," and the blood of these murdered ones is but a drop in that sea of human gore which slavery causes to inundate the land.

The contrabands come in by droves. The government employs hundreds of them on the railroad, in handling army stores. They work with a will, apparently perfectly satisfied if they can get in return crackers and pork enough for themselves and their families.

HOW HE LOOKED AT IT.

An elderly man, who gave his name as "Dick," came into our camp and was employed by an officer. He is a quiet, but intelligent and moral old fellow, and gave me an account of his leaving "home."

"Why did you leave, uncle?" said I.

"Well, massa," he replied, "old missus too hard on me, 'tirely, an' when I couldn't stan's no longer, I jis lef."

"In the day time, was it?"

"Oh, no, sah! 'bout 'leven 'clock at night, and got to Bolivah 'fore mornin'; 'bout twenty miles."

"That was a pretty good walk," said I.

"I didn't walk it, sah, I rode hoss-back."

"Rode! do you own a horse?"

"Well—yes—no, sah—not 'xactly—reckon I do now—I took one!"

"Took one from your mistress?"

"Yes, massa."

"Don't you think you did very wrong, Dick, to take your mistress' horse?"

"Well, I do' know, sah; I didn't take the bes' one. She had three; two of 'em fuss-rate horses, but the one I took is ole, an' not berry fast, an' I offe'd to sell him fo' eight dolla's, sah."

"But, Dick, you took at least a thousand dollars from your mistress, besides the horse."

"How, sah?"

"Why, you were worth a thousand dollars, and you should have been satisfied with that much, without taking the poor woman's horse," said I, gravely.

The contraband scratched his woolly head, rolled up his eyes at me, and replied with emphasis:

"I don't look at it jis dat way, massa. I wo'ked ha'd fo' missus mo'n thirty yea's, an' I reckon in dat time I 'bout pay fo' myself. An' dis yea' missus gav me leave to raise a patch o' 'bacey fo' my own. Well, I wo'ked nights, an' Sabbaths, an' spar' times, an' raised a big patch (way prices is, wuff two hun'red dolla's, I reckon) o' 'bacey; an' when I got it tooken ear' of dis fall, ole missus took it 'way from me; give some to de neighbors; keep some fo' he' own use; an' sell some, an' keep de money, an' I reckon dat pay fo' de ole hoss!"

Failing to find any conscience in the darkey, I gave up the argument.

SECESH CHURCH AFFAIRS.

Since coming to Lagrange, I have attended services once at the Episcopal church, and once at the Presbyterian. Not a man was in attendance at the Episcopal church, except three or four Federal soldiers. A number of children and a few ladies, a number of them in deep mourning, were present. At the Presbyterian church there were about half-a-dozen men, beside those furnished by our army. Even in church, the younger portion of the secesh tried, in various ways, to show their hatred of the Union officers and soldiers who were present. The preacher, Rev. Dr. Waddell, prayed for "our rulers," leaving the people, if not the Lord, to guess who he meant. The sermon was an eloquent, but extremely Calvinistic one, on Regeneration. The Methodist church, under the pastoral care of another D. D., whose name I have forgotten, has been closed for some time, the said D. D. being in attendance upon what appears to be a long session of conference at Grenada, Miss. If he does not soon return, my congregation, which now worships out of doors, will probably take possession of his church, and give me a call to his pulpit. The Presbyterians here have a respectable college building, and formerly had a flourishing school, but secession has killed it, and its classic halls are now used as a military prison. The Methodists, too, have a female college, a splendid building, on beautiful ground, now put to the good and patriotic use of sheltering Union soldiers. W. S. PEMBROOK.

The Northwestern Christian Advocate.

THE CLOSING YEAR.

BY GEO. D. PRENTICE.

'Tis midnight's holy hour—and silence now
Is brooding, like a gentle spirit, o'er
The still and peaceless world. Hark! on the winds
The bell's deep tones are swelling; 'tis the knell
Of the departed year. No funeral train
Is sweeping past: yet on the stream and wood,
With melancholy light, the moonbeams rest,
Like a pale, spotless shroud; the air is stirred,
As by a mourner's sigh, and on you cloud,
That floats so still and placidly through heaven,
The spirits of the seasons seem to stand,
Young Spring, bright Summer, Autumn solemn,
And Winter with his aged locks, and breathe
In mournful cadences, that come abroad
Like the far wind-harp's wild and touching wail,
A melancholy dirge o'er the dead year,
Gone from the earth forever. 'Tis a time
For memory and for tears. Within the deep
Still chambers of the heart, a spectre dim,
Whose tones are like the wizard voice of Time,
Heard from the tomb of ages, points its cold
And solemn finger to the beautiful
And holy visions that have passed away,
And left no shadow of their loveliness
On the dead waste of life. The spectre lifts
The coffin-lid of hope, and joy, and love,
And, bending mournfully above the pale
Sweet forms that slumber there, scatters dead flowers
O'er what has passed to nothingness. The year
Has gone, and with it many a glorious throng
Of happy dreams. Its mark is on each brow,
Its shadow in each heart. In its swift course,
It waved its sceptre o'er the beautiful,
And they are not. It laid its pallid hand
Upon the strong man, and the haughty form
Is fallen, and the flashing eye is dim.
It trod the hall of revelry, where thronged
The bold and joyous, and the tearful wail
Of stricken ones is heard, where erst the song
And reckless shout resounded. I passed o'er
The battle-plain, where sword and spear and shield
Flash'd in the light of mid-day—and the strength
Of serried hosts is shivered, and the grass,
Green from the soil of carnage, waves above
The crushed and moulder'ing skeleton. It came
And faded like a wreath of mist at eve;
Yet, ere it melted in the viewless air,
It breathed its millions to their home
In the dim land of dreams. Remorseless Time—
Fierce spirit of the glass and scythe—what power
Can stay him in his silent course, or melt
His iron heart to pity? On, still on
He presses, and forever

...K THEOLOGICAL SEMINARY. ...rse of this institution, shows ...y-nine students, who are dis... Senior class, 28. Middle ...ss, 19. The faculty is com... William H. Campbell, D. D., ...of Biblical Literature; Rev. ...bridge, D. D., Professor of Pas... ...nd Ecclesiastical, and Rev. Jo... D. D., Professor of Didactic and ...ology.

...their success is the barometer for ... harvest to ...eight of religious influence of ... in which they are held. Once ...standard, no matter how arbitrary, and it becomes the Procrustean bed to which everything must be measured. To determine a meeting to be successful, or otherwise, and the church to be in a state of revival or depression, as penitents appear, or fail to appear, or the "mourners' bench," is to constitute ourselves arbiters of the operations of the Spirit; not recognizing its possible working at all, unless it be in the way in which we are looking for it. Many may be under the influence of the Spirit at these meetings, but the Spirit may not indicate to them the "mourners' bench" as the way in which it designs to lead them to Christ.

To measure success from the apparent results of protracted meetings, has a tendency to discourage the Church when there is no real cause for it. God's work may be progressing, as the seed concealed from observation germinates in silence, when we conclude from what is apparent, that it is at a pause or in a state of retrogression.

As respects time, to make revivals and protracted meetings synonymous, is to postpone effort and afford a plea for idleness and carelessness during a great part of the year. It makes earnest prayer and labor and sacrifice of time in Christian enterprise periodical; whereas, this necessity should be ever present, ever felt. Many persons manifest seeming spiritual life during revivals, who relapse into inactivity, when the season has passed. These efforts are like the spasmodic twitchings of a corpse when plied by the galvanic battery to the steady, powerful action of a body continually animated by the living spirit.

Almost every Church, in inquiring for a minister, wants "a peculiar man," and "a smart man;" one that will "draw." The Rev. Dr. Snell, who was settled at North Brookfield, Mass., nearly sixty-four years, "had no marked talent," we are told in his biography, and yet he maintained his position, and was a most useful pastor, and stood high in the ranks of the ministry. When the committee-men, to procure a pastor for the Brookfield Church, called on Dr. Backus, who instructed many students, he remained with him over night. Dr. Backus called on all his students to lead in family devotions on the occasion, and when the deputy heard Mr. Snell pray, he said to Dr. Backus, "That is the man whom I want you to send as a candidate."

BISHOP POLK.—Bishop Polk (though still girded with the sword) on a late special occasion ordained Mr. Alexander Gordon Bakewell, who has since become a chaplain in the rebel army. Rev. Mr. Bakewell is a near relative, it is said, of a former clergyman of that name belonging to the diocese of Western New York.—Cor. of The Gospel Messenger.

NEW ORLEANS CLERGY.—The Church Journal speaks of the motions entertained by the New Orleans clergy as not quite what it holds itself. Would it not be more candid for our contemporary to inform its readers that those clergymen entertain that they have left the Episcopal Church altogether, and have joined another "church?" It is only by this hypothesis that their course, in turning the liturgy upside down, can at all be defended. They have formed an independent church, as much as did the Methodists, and shall be ... are entitled in ... as far more ...tion we would ...y: Is the commu... and his associates ... "the Church," or a ...order.

...The Methodist, in an ar... ...rm," thus speaks of the

...a desirable office in our ...e people pay its salary ... a few appointments the ...the pulpit than the ... in not a few he has little import... ...ical business, scarcely any that the ... not think could be done as well with... ...th him; and many appointments be... ...dge him their quarterly assessment toward his salary as a useless burden, some as so onerous in... ...convenience to their own scarcely manageable finances. Whether just or not, these are prevalent objections, and it cannot be denied that quite a general relief would be felt if the office could be so far modified as to deliver the churches from these alleged burdens."

UNITARIANS.—NEW ENGLAND UNITARIANS.—The Boston Review says that "as a whole it is obvious that New England U... is neither increasing nor aggressive, an... its foun... head, may be quoted as ...ponent of ... its quality and power, it has l... ...ring the last thirty years. Instead of ... city as formerly, it has been compelled ... its grasp, ... behold evangelical elements ... and maintain a power more than quadrupled in the number of its churches, members and influence.

REFORMED DUTCH.—A LIVE CHURCH.—The church on the Heights, Brooklyn, first organized twelve years ago under the pastoral care of the late Rev. Dr. Bethune, has just furnished a striking instance of church liberality. There has been from the first a mortgage resting on the property, amounting to sixteen thousand dollars, which was given for the cost of the ground. For several years previous to the installation of the present pastor (Rev. Dr. Eells,) the expenses outran the income, and there had accumulated from this deficiency an additional debt of over six thousand dollars, making a total encumbrance of $22,076.24. Before the war broke out, some desire had ...essed to remove this incubus upon the prosperity of the congregation; but during the depression which has been experienced since, all had felt that such an effort would be hopeless of success. Within a few months the congregation had evidently become more and more consolidated, and strongly imbued to their new pastor, and given various signs of increasing vitality. About ten days ago something was said among a few of the members about removing this debt; and although the allusion to the subject was at first incidental, the idea seemed to take a strong hold upon the people. All felt that a successful effort at such a time to present a church dedicated to God and free from every form of incumbrance, would not only strengthen their own association, but would encourage good men everywhere to renewed energy and zeal. On Sabbath a notice was read inviting the members of the congregation who were desirous of assisting in such an undertaking, to meet on Tuesday evening for this purpose. Last night the meeting was held, and although the weather was inauspicious, about fifty persons were present. A committee was appointed, who announced the total to be $22,076.24, was subscribed, payable Monday, the first day of December. Before the subscription closed, one of the elders stated that a wealthy gentleman of New York, learning of the object, had very liberally offered to give one hundred dollars toward the amount to be raised; but half a dozen members sprang to their feet at once to object, stating their preference to give the sum themselves, rather than to call upon any one outside of the congregation. The number of the subscribers was just fifty, making an average of $441.—Journal of Commerce.

CHRIST died because God was merciful; not to make him so, but to make channels through which a stream of salvation might flow to guilty sinners.

SUSPENSION OF THE CHEROKEE MISSION.—We call attention to the interesting statement of the Rev. G. Bishop, found on our first page. He has written it at our request. It gives a clear insight into the existing state of the Cherokee Mission.

As he refers to the extracts from former letters of his published in our columns, we will here give a brief recapitulation of the course of events, so that his communication may be properly understood.

The Cherokee Nation is divided; a part holds to the South, the other part to the Federal Union. In the beginning of September last, the Federal Cherokees made a raid upon the Moravian Mission at Spring Place and the neighborhood. At that time the following missionaries were engaged in the Nation: Rev. G. Bishop and wife, from the North, and the Assistants, James Ward and wife, half Cherokees, at Spring Place; and Rev. E. J. Mack and wife, from Salem, N. C., at Canaan. In this raid Br. Ward lost his life; Br. Bishop was carried off by the Federal Cherokees, and finally brought to Fort Scott, in Kansas; and Mrs. Bishop and Mrs. Ward with their families fled to Arkansas. After a long detention, Br. Bishop rejoined his family, and with the same succeeded in leaving the country and reaching Bethlehem in safety. Br. Mack and his family, and Mrs. Ward and her children, remain in the neighborhood of Maysville, Arkansas. Br. Bishop considers it impossible to continue the Mission until the return of better times.

We respond to his invitation, and call upon all our churches to present the case of the missionaries now in Arkansas, with earnest intercessions to the Lord.—Moravian.

M. E. CHURCH SOUTH.—Parson Brownlow, in a late letter from Tennessee, discourseth of this church as follows:

"The Methodist Annual Conferences was held at Athens, in East Tennessee, a few weeks ago, as I am told by gentlemen just from there, Bishop Earle presiding. As I anticipated, by one sweeping act, carried out in the same infernal spirit that originated the rebellion, the conference suspended the Union preachers from the exercise of their ministerial functions. They have, in effect, issued a new Gospel Commission, which runs thus: "Go ye into all the South and preach Jeff. Davis to every creature; he that believeth and is baptised shall be damned; he that believeth not shall be saved.' Let all men who wish for happiness after death, live and die in unbelief of this, 'another gospel.' The churches in the South have about played out, and there is but little left in any of them to induce an honorable and law-abiding man to remain in their fellowship.

"So far as I am individually concerned, I am so thoroughly convinced of the corruptions and profligacy of a majority of the ministers of my own church (Methodist,) that I would scorn to be associated with them in church relations. But I purpose, God willing, upon my return to East Tennessee, to call a convention of the Union-loving and law-abiding ministers and members of our church, at which we shall declare ourselves the church, and claim the church property, confident that we can hold it under the courts of the United States. We shall go further—we will expel the rebels from the church, under that chapter in the Wesleyan Discipline, which requires obedience to the 'powers that be,' and a ready and cheerful obedience to the laws of the land."

THE ORTHODOX FRIENDS have educated their youth for many years past at Westtown and Haverford Colleges. The Hicksite Friends, probably as numerous and as wealthy as the other branch, have had under consideration a project to establish an institution of learning similar to that at Haverford. The enterprise was originated some time since, and has received the encouragement of the yearly meetings of Philadelphia, New York and Baltimore. The proposed association is composed of shares of stock which are subscribed for at $250 each. Each share of stock is to be entitled to one vote in the management of affairs. The project has gradually gained ground, and is now advanced far enough to warrant confidence in its final success. A general conference of subscribers to the stock was held in Race street meeting-house, in Philadelphia, last week, which was largely attended. It was resolved to proceed at once with the work, enough means having been contributed for the purpose. The institution is intended to afford a thorough education to young persons of both sexes, at a low cost—the preference being given, of course, to members of the Society.

Special provisions are made for the benefit of young people of limited means, who will be enabled to procure an education upon very liberal terms. The general management of the concern is placed in the hands of twenty Friends—members of Philadelphia Yearly Meeting. Simon Gilman and Pierson Mitchell, of Middletown are representatives from Bucks county. At the meeting recently held considerable interest was shown and a fair amount of subscriptions were received. The minimum amount of capital stock is fifty thousand dollars, which is not to be increased over two hundred thousand dollars.

It is as yet undecided whether the college will be located in the city or suburbs. Offers of ground have been made, seated at Darby, Chestnut Hill, and other places. Another meeting will shortly be held for the purpose of perfecting arrangements.

JEWISH.—BAPTISM OF A JEW IN MONTREAL.—The Toronto Christian Guardian says:—An interesting ceremony was performed by the Rev. Dr. Freshman, on Monday evening, the 1st inst., in the Great James street Wesleyan church, Montreal. It was the baptism of Mr. David Hurwitz, who has recently been converted from Judaism to Christianity. About six weeks ago his attention was arrested while reading in Hebrew the sublime vision recorded in the 6th chapter of Isaiah; and he was particularly awakened by the 5th verse, —"Wo is me! for I am undone; for I am a man of unclean lips, and I dwell in the midst of a people of unclean lips; for my eyes have seen the King, the Lord of hosts!" These words led to a train of reflections which greatly alarmed his conscience, and caused him anxiously to read the books of Moses, hoping to find in the ancient system of sacrifice some relief for his soul. But he found none. He was encouraged to look to Christ as his Saviour by Brother Joseph Tomski, a Prussian Jew, who had been led to salvation by the instrective of the Rev. Dr. Freshman, and on the occasion of our beloved Brother Freshman's visit to Montreal, this anxious and troubled soul sought him out, and was led by him to venture his soul on Christ, and his answers were very pleasing to all that heard them.

Personal.

The Death of Gen. Ward.—Advices by the China mail fully confirm the reports previously received respecting the death of Gen. Ward. The event was deeply lamented, and much speculation prevailed in regard to its effect on the Imperial cause, which he had so heartily espoused.

Gen. F. T. Ward was born in Salem, Mass., November, 1831, and was the son of a well-known merchant of this city. His career was remarkably adventurous. He participated in all the important scenes of the Chinese war, and in July, 1860, sailed from New York, taking the California route to China. After making an engagement with the Tautai of Shanghai, he proceeded to organize a body of native soldiers, and in six weeks captured five large cities. He has since brought into the field 12,000 thoroughly drilled Chinamen, fought not less than 50 different battles, and received fifteen severe wounds. In his whole career he was regarded but twice, so that the Chinamen regarded him as almost invincible, and impervious to bullets. On the 20th of last September, however, he fell, mortally wounded, in an attempt to recapture the city of Tsechee.

Daniel Drew intends to purchase ground in Carmel, Putnam county, N. Y., for the purpose of establishing a college there. He purposes to endow it with five hundred thousand dollars.

Garibaldi.—News has reached us from Pisa, whence Dr. Zanetti writes that he has extracted the ball from Garibaldi's ankle, with the best results and success.

The grandson of Benedict Arnold, and only living male heir, is Rev. Edward Arnold, rector of a church in Hertfordshire, about twenty miles west of London. His age is 33 years.

Domestic Items.

The Cabinet and the Senate.—Washington, Dec. 21.—Last Tuesday the Republican members of the Senate met in caucus, and, after a session of four hours, during which several senators made fierce attacks upon Secretary Seward, making him responsible for our defeats, and declaring that the country was tired of the present conduct of the war. A resolution was offered by Senator Grimes, of Iowa, declaring a want of confidence in Secretary Seward, and requesting the President to remove him. This was passed by a vote of thirteen yeas to eleven nays. A long discussion was entered into; Senator Sumner making a lengthy speech, attacking the Foreign diplomacy of Secretary Seward. Others were made by Senators Sherman, Trumbull, Wade, &c. It was charged that Seward's policy was a Fabian one—that of delay; that he had encouraged McClellan in his delays; that his idea of surrounding the Rebels was a delusion; that he was responsible for sending the Banks Expedition away to the Gulf instead of the James river. They then adjourned over to Wednesday, when after the adjournment of the Senate, they resumed their consultations.

Senator Harris amended the resolution to read:—"That, in the judgment of the Senate, a reconstruction of the Cabinet would increase the confidence of the country."

Senator Sherman objected, because this was too broad; that Secretary Chase would resign at once if that was passed.

Senator Fessenden then amended it to read:—"A partial reconstruction," and upon that the resolution passed, and a committee of seven was formed. Afterwards Senators Howard and Harris were added, making it nine.

On Thursday, Senator King informed Mr. Seward of the action of the Senate, and he and Assistant Secretary Seward at once sent to the President their resignations. On Thursday evening the Committee of Nine waited on the President and laid the matter before him. No result was arrived at, but speeches were made by the enemies of Mr. Seward, in which he was denounced in unmeasured terms.

The Committee retired and left the matter in the hands of the President, believing that it was all right. The Committee from the Senatorial Caucus were invited by the President to meet him at the White House on Friday evening. On their arrival, they found the whole Cabinet there, excepting Secretary Seward.

The President introduced the subject and stated the object of the Committee.

Secretary Chase at once stated that he did not come there to be arraigned by Senators.

Senator Fessenden said he did not come there to arraign any one.

The President said they were all there on an equality, and invited an interchange of opinion.

Senator Harris stated that he was not a personal friend of Secretary Seward, though formerly a law partner, and thought there were a large number of Republicans who would rejoice at his leaving the Cabinet, while an equally large number were in favor of his remaining. He thought it would be impolitic and uncalled for—because he quietly opposed any changes.

Secretary Stanton said that the resolution was evidently aimed at some one else besides Secretary Seward. If any one supposed he was responsible for the disaster that had occurred they were mistaken; that all the charges made against him were false; that the President knew that the charge that he was responsible for the movement upon Fredericksburg was groundless; that neither he nor General Halleck were responsible.

Senator Grimes made a fierce onslaught upon Mr. Seward.

Mr. Fessenden was firm, but determined.

The meeting lasted until a late hour, and adjourned without any result being accomplished. Secretary Chase, however, tendered his resignation to the President, in order to place him in a position to use his own pleasure.

Postmaster Blair, who is, next to Mr. Seward, the most objectionable man, refused to resign. In all the interviews the President defended Mr. Seward warmly, denying that he has actively interfered with military movements, or that his policy has been detrimental to the conduct of the war. He expressed the most unbounded confidence in Secretaries Stanton and Chase; and thought Secretary Welles has done all that could be done.

He will not remove any member, and unless they resign and insist upon their resignations being accepted, there will be no change. The Senators have taken this step, considering it necessary for the successful prosecution of the war. They are still of that belief, and though the matter may be smothered over to-morrow, it will only be to burst forth again with renewed fury before long.

The excitement about the Cabinet is somewhat allayed to-night, Secretary Seward having signified his intention to withdraw his resignation, and the President having solicited Mr. Chase to withdraw his. Mr. Chase has concluded to give an answer to-morrow, and he has been waited upon to-night by several Senators to induce him to do so. No attack was made upon him, and his course has always given entire satisfaction.

The Committee from the Senate consisted of Senator Collamer (Chairman) and Senators Fessenden, Harris, Sumner, Wade, Trumbull, Grimes, Howard and Pomeroy. Of the Senators, Harris is the only one not in favor of any change. It is distinctly understood by the Senators that none of them will accept any position in the Cabinet, should a recast be made.

Report of the Committee on the Conduct of the War.—The Committee on the Conduct of the War returned this morning from the army, where they have been for four days investigating the late disaster. The testimony before them makes the number of killed and wounded less than ten thousand; one-half of the latter will be able to return to their regiments in a short time. General Burnside does not take such a sad view of the affair as do some others, and contends that had Franklin's Division maintained their position when gained on the left, he could have carried their whole line the next day and destroyed their army. He takes upon himself the responsibility of the assault; but a council of war, including his Generals, on Saturday night, were not in favor of continuing the attack, and he could only withdraw to this side. It was his plan to change the base from Warrenton to Acquia, and the fatal blunder appears to be in not having pontoons there to meet him. When Generals Halleck and Meigs were in consultation with him the plans were arranged, and the next day they were approved by the President, and he was ordered to go on. He was to have pontoons sent there, and he accordingly ordered General Sumner to march down and cross, but the boats did not come until ten days after his arrival there. When General Sumner arrived there to ford it, it would have required the men to have waded it in four feet of water, which Gen. Sumner thought he could not do. General Woodbury, Chief of Engineers, says the delay was in not getting the pontoons started in time. The committee were in session all night, at Mr. Covode's rooms, for several hours.

The testimony will make three pages of The Inquirer. It was taken down by Mr. Lord, the celebrated stenographer, and is nearly written out. The testimony of Generals Halleck and Meigs will be taken to-morrow, and the Committee will be ready to report to Congress on Tuesday.

General Hooit is exonerated from all blame in not having the railroad to Falmouth done in time. The President and Secretary Stanton are exonerated from all blame in the matter.

All the moves made are military ones, by military men, and this time as has always been the case, no civilian has interfered.

Delay in paying Soldiers.—In reply to an inquiry of the House why "grievous delays" happened in the payment of the soldiers, the Secretary of the Treasury, on Wednesday, replied:

"I beg leave to state that the requisitions of the Secretary of War for money for the payment of troops have always been promptly met at the Treasury, when absolute want of means did not prevent. Since the first of July, the sum of $90,554,281,64 have been paid in such requisitions, as follows:

For bounties on enlistment, .	$7,500,000,00
Recruiting, collecting, drilling and organizing, ...	10,172,390,41
Ordinary pay, ...	43,881,921,23

"The amount of requisitions of this description now in the Treasury Department unpaid is $28,780,000. These unpaid requisitions are about equal to the amount required for pay during one bi-monthly period. A portion of them represent pay which fell due before the commencement of the last bi-monthly period of September and October, while about equal amounts have been supplied for pay which has become due since its commencement. Precise information on these points can only be obtained from the books of the War Department.

"When the resources of the Treasury became inadequate to all the demands upon it, the Secretary of the Treasury communicated the fact to the Secretary of War and of the Navy, and requested them to designate the particular requisitions which they regarded as most urgent, to the amount of about $1,000,000 daily. To this extent requisitions are now daily met from customs, from internal revenue, from the proceeds of conversions, from temporary loans, and from new issues of United States notes. These resources, though large, are, as the Congress has been already informed, inadequate.

"No one can feel deeper regret than the Secretary, that a single American soldier lacks a single dollar of his pay, and no effort of his has been wanting to prevent such a condition. It is not in his power, however, to arrest the accumulation of demands upon the Treasury, beyond the possibilities of provision for them under existing legislation. In his annual report he has laid before Congress the measures which, in his judgment, will enable him to provide for the ultimate wants of the public service. If in this judgment he is fortunate enough to have their concurrence, he entertains the hope that all grounds of complaint because of delays of payment may be soon removed."

Official Report of General Foster.—WASHINGTON, Dec. 28.—The following has just been received at the Head-quarters of the Army of the United States:—

HEAD-QUARTERS OF THE DEPARTMENT OF NORTH CAROLINA, KINGSTON, December 14, 1862.—Major-General Halleck, Commanding the Army of the United States—General:—I have the honor to inform you that I left Newbern for this place on the 11th inst., but that, owing to the bad roads and consequent delays to the trains, &c., I did not reach S. W. Creek, five miles from this town, till the afternoon of the 13th. The enemy were posted there, but by a heavy artillery fire in front and a vigorous infantry attack on either flank, I succeeded in forcing a passage, and without much loss.

This morning I advanced on this town, and found the enemy strongly posted at a defile through a marsh bordering a creek. We succeeded, after five hours' hard fighting, in driving the enemy from their position.

The enemy retreated precipitately by the Goldsboro' and Pikeville roads. Their force was about six thousand men, with about twenty pieces of artillery. The result is that we have taken Kingston, captured eleven pieces of artillery, taken four to five hundred prisoners, and found a large amount of quartermaster's and commissary stores. Our loss will not probably exceed two hundred killed and wounded.

I am, General, with great respect, your obedient servant,

J. G. FOSTER,
Major-General Commanding.

Foreign Summary.

A Revolution in Japan.—SAN FRANCISCO, Dec. 13th.—Commercial Circulars from Japan of the 25th of October, say that a revolution has broken out there, but of what character the published reports do not make clear.

The power of the Tycoon has been greatly restricted, and a policy adopted adverse to foreign interests.

Mr. Richardson, a prominent English merchant, had been assassinated by the servants of a Japanese Prince.

British Statistics.—In the first three-quarters of the present year the excess of births over deaths in Great Britain has been 248,537. Although marriages have decreased in England this year, the marriage-rate has been maintained in Scotland, apparently indicating that the general prosperity of that part of the kingdom has not been as seriously affected by the war in America. The marriage-rate in Scotland, however, is always greatly below that of England—a remarkable difference between countries so closely allied; nevertheless, the proportion of legitimate births to the population is as high in Scotland as in England, Scottish marriages being more fruitful than English. There has been an unusual proportion of male births in Scotland this year, rising in the third quarter to 107 boys to every 100 girls. Scotland has also differed this year from England in another respect; the mortality, low in England, has in Scotland been high throughout the year, owing to the unfavorable effect of the damp, cold, rainy weather in that northern clime.

Italy.—A letter from Lucca, in the Opinione of Turin says:—"We have a revolution here; but it is neither on account of Garibaldi nor of Mazzini: quite the contrary. It is because the Minister of Public Instruction has ventured to appoint a Protestant lady, Mrs. Burbidge, to a Professorship in the Normal School for females at Lucca. She had been teaching for two years in the Normal School of Rubigna, where she was held in the highest esteem. But Lucca could not brook the idea of allowing history and geography to be taught by a Protestant. All the priests and fanatics set to work, and got up such an agitation that the prefect had to despatch a counsellor in all haste to Turin to inform the Minister that he could not answer for the public peace unless Mrs. Burbidge were removed; and, to crown all, the Gonfaloniere, M. Simbaldi, who is also a deputy, has written to the minister, threatening to resign if the obnoxious appointment be maintained. What will the Minister do?

The Greek question remains unchanged. It is rumored that some of the Greeks will ask for the son of Lord Derby, in case they fail to obtain Prince Alfred as King.

It was rumored that Signor Pasolini was trying to form an Italian ministry.

A squadron of lancers recently mutinied at Petersburg.

The cotton famine distress in France was increasing in severity.

From Havana and Mexico.—NEW YORK, Dec. 11.—Midnight.—The steamer Eagle, from Havana the 6th inst., arrived to-night.

Vera Cruz dates of the 1st inst. had been received, but there was no mail, owing to the stringent enforcement of the prohibition of any communication with Vera Cruz.

The last American courier was fired on, and his two attendants killed. He was himself wounded, but succeeded in making his escape.

The despatches for Washington have gone via Acapulco, and will reach their destination by way of Panama.

The Minister to Washington from Chili, was unable to get further than Jalapa.

Mr. Russell, bearer of American despatches, and a Mexican Colonel, arrived from Vera Cruz and are passengers by the steamer Eagle.

The position of the French forces at Vera Cruz and Orizaba is represented as very critical, having no fodder for their cattle and no fresh food for their troops, who suffer from the dysentery.

The forts at Jalapa has been cut off from supplies from Vera Cruz, by the Mexicans retaking Puente Nacional, a part of which has been destroyed.

The Mexicans are actively fortifying Puebla and the city of Mexico, and the roads between them, and announce their determination to flood the whole valley by opening the sluices and taking down the walls of the lakes, rendering the city of Mexico impossible to be reached except by the turnpike, which will be defended.

The mate and steward of the barque Betty Williams are on board the Eagle in irons, charged with poisoning three Captains of the vessel, viz:—Captains Coffin, Hood and Bunts.

The new Captain-General of Cuba was daily expected at Havana.

Six of the crew of the rebel steamer California, which was wrecked near Sisal, have arrived at Havana.

Married.

By Elder J. H. Smith, on the 19th, Mr. THOMAS C. SMALL to Miss SARAH E. JONES, all of Mount Holly, New Jersey.

In the city of Detroit, Nov. 30th, 1862, by the Rev. H. J. Young, Mr. JOHN A. TATE, of Alabama, to Miss ELIZABETH WARREN, the adopted daughter of the Rev. John A. Warren.

[We notice this again, because it got mislaid, and the names of the parties could not be recollected.]

At Washington, D. C., Dec. 11th, 1862, by Rev. H. J. Rhodes, Mr. JAMES PLANT to Miss AMELIA JERICK, both of Georgetown, D. C.

At Georgetown, D. C., by the same, Dec. 16th, 1862, Mr. FREDERICK JONES, of Virginia, to Miss MARY BROWN, of Maryland.

At Georgetown, D. C., by the same, Dec. 16th, 1862, Mr. WILLIAM LEE to Miss ELIZABETH SMALL, both of Georgetown, D. C.

ADVERTISEMENTS.

MRS. MARTHA COLLINS,
730 Russell Street, above Fitzwater,

Begs leave to inform her friends and the public generally, that she has opened an INFANT SCHOOL for Boys and Girls, to whom she will pay special attention in teaching the primary departments of Reading, Writing, and Arithmetic, also Singing, upon the most reasonable and accommodating terms. She does not hesitate to say that she will be able to please all who may give her a trial.

MRS. S. SHORTER HAWKINS'
DRY GOODS, HOSIERY, AND TRIMMING STORE,

No. 615 Lombard Street, Philadelphia.

Mrs. H. calls the attention of her friends and patrons to a new stock of Fall and Winter Goods, consisting of Delaines, Calicoes, Flannels, Muslins, Drills, Shawls, Balmorals, and Hoop-Skirts.

N. B. Regalia and Dress Trimmings still on hand. All will be sold as near the old prices as possible. Call and see.

A few respectable men can be accommodated with board or lodging, on reasonable terms, at 1627 Lombard Street.

N. B.—Also a room to let. 3mo.

Advertisements.

THE DAUGHTERS OF HOPE GRAND UNION Temperance Society met, it being the thirteenth convention, April 10th, 1861. Representatives from Lodges are as follows:—

From Garnet Union No. 4, D. of T.; from Phœnix Union, No. 8, D. of T.; from Northern Union, No. 16, D. of T.; Webb's Union, of Chambersburgh, Pa.; from Dr. Bias' Union, of Carlisle, Pa.; from Mount Olive Union, No. 19, D. of T.; from Vanbrachle Union, No. 15, of T., of Norristown, Pa.

Officers installed to their several positions are as follows:—

Grand P., Sister Bennet; Grand Associate, Sister Burris; Grand Treasurer, Sister Fawcett; Grand Conductress, C. Thompson; Grand Sentinel, A. E. Dukhart; Grand Chaplain, Sister Hall.

G. P. P., Sister E. Rossers,		G. P. P. Sister Anderson,
" " " E. Bowie,	"	" J. F. Black,	"
" " " M. H. Jersey,	"	" E. A. Clark,	"
" " " S. Newman,	"	" White,	"
" " " S. Davis,	"	" S. Hall.

THE DAUGHTERS OF CORNISH SOCIETY.

THE STATED QUARTERLY MEETINGS of this Society are held on the first Wednesdays of February, May August, and November.

The meeting of the Board are held on the Wednesday previous to the regular stated meetings of the Society.

Mrs. SARAH CARTER,
President.
Mr. L. R. SEYMOUR, Sec'y.

THE BOOK DEPOSITORY
OF THE
AFRICAN M. E. CHURCH,
No. 619 Pine Street,
PHILADELPHIA.

We keep on hand, in connexion with our other books Sabbath school books of various kinds; Question Books; Catechisms, Nos. 1, 2, and 3. We have a good assortment of such books as are generally used in the Public Schools. Also, Stationery, Inks, Pens, Paper, Envelopes and Blank Books.

THE DEATH-BED OF THE REV. JOHN WESLEY.

Wanted Canvassing Agents for this splendid large engraving, which should be in every house of all admirers of that great and good man. The most liberal inducements offered to those selling their prints. Send for Catalogue and instructions.

WM. SMITH, Publisher,
702 South Third Street, Philadelphia.

WANTED.—The charge of a Public School. Reference as to ability can be given. Apply to
J. W. A., 1641 Helmuth St.

ONE-PRICE CLOTHING,
OF THE LATEST STYLES,

Made in the Best Manner, expressly for RETAIL SALES. Lowest Selling Prices marked in Plain Figures. All Goods made to order warranted satisfactory. Our One-Price System is strictly adhered to. All are thereby treated alike.

JONES & CO.,
904 MARKET STREET.
Dec23-1y

GOOD NEWS

To Tailors, Dress makers, and to those wishing to be such. Also, to owners of sewing machines, first-keepers, and large families.—So to one day (by printed directions which each Dollmaker has) you can learn to cut and fit perfectly, Ladies' Dresses, Boys' and Men's Pants, Vests, Jackets, Sack and Over-coats.

Local and Travelling Agents Wanted.

Address REV. WM. BRADLEY,
Carnegieville, Bucks Co., Pa.

Or, apply to Mrs. Mary C. Warner, (wife of the Editor of this paper,) 619 Pine St., Philada., Pa. Jan15—1y

JAMES DOWNS,
DEALER IN
NEW AND SECOND HAND
CLOTHING,
No. 225 South Second Street,
No. 17—3mo. PHILADELPHIA.

WILLIAM STILL'S
STOVE STORE,
107 NORTH FIFTH STREET, PHILADELPHIA.

The subscriber would respectfully inform his friends and all in want of good stoves, that he has now on hand a general variety of excellent PARLOR, COOK and CHAMBER STOVES, including Gas-burning, as well as other patterns, which he is selling at very low rates. He buys entirely for cash, of the best wholesale founders, and of course can sell much cheaper than those buying on the usual credit system. At any rate his friends are invited to give him a call and examine for themselves before purchasing elsewhere, as he feels that they would be convinced that it would be to their interest to give him their patronage. Coal orders constantly on hand. WM. STILL.

JOSEPH H. COLE,
CONTINENTAL RESTAURANT,
NO. 717 LOMBARD STREET, PHILA.,
(Above Seventh St., under Philadelphia Institute,)

Where he continues to keep always on hand the very best assortment of OYSTERS and other refreshments—hoping that all his friends and the public in general will favor him with their patronage.

☞ Meals served at all hours. Families supplied with Oysters of the best quality and flavor at the shortest notice.

☞ Also, public and private waiting done on the most reasonable terms. 1y

"UNION COTTAGE,"
ATLANTIC CITY, NEAR THE INLET.

The subscriber will always be happy to welcome her numerous friends, and the public in general.

TERMS:

Board per week, ...	$6 00
" " day, ...	1 25
Single meals, ...	50

S. H. WAILES, Proprietress.

BOARDING
IN BROOKLYN.

MRS. S. PLANT (formerly Richardson) respectfully announces that she has opened a first-class BOARDING & LODGING HOUSE at No. 97 HIGH STREET, Brooklyn—where she is prepared to accommodate the public on the most reasonable terms.

Her house being located in a very pleasant part of the city, and within five minutes' walk of Fulton Ferry, is made thus a very desirable and convenient place.

BOARDING.

Mrs. AMIA WILLIAM, of Cape May, will open the Banker House for the season, for the accommodation of all who wish to spend the season there, and she will spare no pains to make all comfortable. Those wishing to spend one, two, or three days, will find the Banker House the right spot. Prices very reasonable. 1my4

COAL, STOVES, &c., &c.

The subscriber respectfully informs his friends and the public generally, that he has taken the store,

NO. 107 NORTH FIFTH STREET,

formerly occupied as the Anti-Slavery Office, (where he has been engaged for the last fourteen years,) to occupy it henceforth as a place of business for the sale of

COAL, STOVES, &c.

Having made arrangements with one of the first Coal Dealers in the city, to furnish the best qualities of Lehigh, Schuylkill, &c., at the lowest Cash prices, he hopes to give full satisfaction in this branch of his business.

He will also keep constantly on hand a general assortment of good NEW and SECOND-HAND STOVES, FURNACES, &c.

Persons wishing Stoves taken down, stored away, put up, or cleaned, can be promptly accommodated by applying as above.

He hopes by energy and strict attention to business to obtain a fair share of patronage.

WM. STILL,
107 North Fifth Street, Philadelphia

REFERENCES.

J. M. M'Kim,	Dr. Caspar Wistar,
Samuel Rhoads,	James Mott,
Dillwyn Parrish,	Thomas Williamson,
Prof. C. D. Cleveland.	W. H. Furness.

WANTED,

One or two respectable colored men in a quiet and respectable family to lodge, where they can secure all the comforts of a home, with a furnished room.

INQUIRE,
No. 424 South 7th St., Phila.

WM. H. LONGFELLOW,
SURGEON DENTIST,
No. 1126 Rodman Street,
Between 11th and 12th, and Lombard and South Sts.,
PHILADELPHIA.

Every department of Dentistry attended to.
Persons called on at their residence, if desired.
Nov 17

REV. LEWIS S. LEWIS'
FAMILY LINIMENT
IS PREPARED WITH GREAT CARE,
EXPRESSLY FOR FAMILY USE.

Its composition is very simple, containing nothing that is injurious in any form, and there is no danger to its use from exposure to the weather. No family should be without it. Having a wish to benefit mankind in general, and those afflicted in particular—and having had recourse to the article in several cases of rheumatism, bunions, chilblains, and other lameness, it proving to be a remedy in every case—I therefore recommend it to the public.

CERTIFICATES.

PROVIDENCE, R. I., Nov. 27, 1861.

Rev. L. S. LEWIS—Dear Sir: I have been afflicted with the rheumatism eleven years, during which time I tried almost everything, but received no sure relief. For the last four months my limbs and joints were so swollen, that at times I could not walk or use my slippers. I procured a bottle of your Liniment, and at the first application was instantly relieved. After using one or two bottles, I was enabled to enjoy the free use of my limbs.

Rev. GEORGE A. RUE.

NEWPORT, R. I., October 29, 1861.

Rev. L. S. LEWIS—Dear Sir: I have been afflicted for a number of years, more or less, with a pain and weakness in my chest, arising from some cause unknown to me. I made two applications of your Liniment, and was relieved. I was attacked with the diphtheria, and was cured by using your Liniment. Its worth has proved itself ten times its cost. ANTHONY RANDOLPH.

NEWPORT, R. I., Nov. 19, 1861.

Rev. L. S. LEWIS—Dear Sir: I have been cured of stiffening in my joints by using your Liniment. I recommend it to all who are thus troubled.

RICHARD WHITE.

NEWPORT, R. I., Nov. 17, 1861.

Rev. Mr. LEWIS—Your Liniment is, truly, all that it is recommended to be. I have tried it, and it has successfully cured my bunions. SOPHIA TAYLOR.

NEWPORT, R. I., Oct. 7, 1861.

Mr. LEWIS—Dear Sir: I have had a pain and stiffness in my neck and back for some time. I procured a bottle of your Liniment, and applied it twice, which effected a cure. I recommend it to the public.

Mrs. EVELINA DEMOND.

PROVIDENCE, Dec. 10, 1861.

Rev. L. S. LEWIS—Dear Sir: For upwards of three years I have been very lame at times, arising from a sprain. I have tried a great many things, without any definite results. I procured a bottle of your Liniment, and was effectually relieved. Mrs. PHŒBE A. MORSE.

NEWPORT, R. I., Oct. 10, 1861.

Rev. Mr. LEWIS—I have been afflicted with the rheumatism for some time. I used your Liniment, which has removed it successfully. It has also cured my swelled joints. Mrs. ELIZABETH THOROUGHGOOD.

NEWPORT, R. I., Nov. 20, 1861.

Rev. Mr. LEWIS—My boy was troubled with the chilblain. I applied your Liniment a few times, and it cured him. Mrs. ADELINE JONES.

STEAMER PERRY, Sept. 3, 1861.

Rev. Mr. LEWIS—I have used your Liniment for rheumatic pains of long standing—also, lameness in the feet, &c. It is a perfect remedy where other things have failed. Mrs. SUSAN GARDINER.

PROVIDENCE, RHODE ISLAND, Aug. 19, 1861.

Rev. L. S. LEWIS—I have been afflicted for upwards of seven years with swelled joints. I have tried almost everything, without the desired effect. At last I obtained a bottle of your Liniment, which relieved me successfully. Mrs. MARY A. JEWITT.

PROVIDENCE, Nov., 1861.

Mr. L. S. Lewis—I had a very severe attack of rheumatism last fall, during which time I tried almost everything—but nothing so effectual as your Family Liniment. I would not be without it.

Mrs. LUCY WATERMAN.

MANUFACTURED BY
REV. LEWIS S. LEWIS

LAST WORDS OF EMMETT.

"Let no man write my epitaph—for as no man who knows my motives dare now vindicate them, so let no prejudice or ignorance asperse them. Let me repose in obscurity and peace until other times and other men can do justice to my character; when my country takes her place among the nations of the earth, then—and not till then—let my epitaph be written."

He stood before the assembled crowd,
And not a glance had quailed;
Nor his lofty heart in high resolves
Had for an instant failed:
The haughty souls of bitterest foes
Within their bosom shook,
As he bent his clear eye proudly round,
With such a fearful look.

And these were the high words he spoke—
"Are not these lips as free
To bear their witness to the cause
Of glorious liberty—
As free to speak the sacred words
Which only tyrants fear,
As those which coldly break the rights
Of injured freedom here!

And they will speak—the fires that glow
Within this breast of mine,
Were kindled at the holy blaze
Of freedom's hallowed shrine;
And till the heart itself be dead,
Its beatings throb no more,
Its pulses still to freedom true,
Will tremble as before.

Ye have the power, if not the right
To crush this feeble frame,
But the spirit's fiery zeal
It is not yours to tame.
And while ye dare to brand with crime
That never stained my brow,
I too may dare to brave the power,
To which I will not bow.

Yes, do your worst—ye may spread your pall
To darken round my name,
But the fearless spirit ye cannot bend—
That still remains the same—
And for that name I would not stoop
To ask one memory,
Till every rock and blade of grass
Upon this soil is free.

Let not my martyr's fate be read
While Erin wears her chains;
I would not ask one friendly hand
To wipe away the stains:
And o'er the pillow of my rest
One tear must not be shed,
Till the holy cross of freedom may
Be placed above the dead."

MISCELLANY.

RAISING THE SUNKEN SHIPS.—The work of raising the sunken war vessels at Norfolk, Hampton Roads, etc., is actively and successfully progressing. The frigate United States was raised a few days since, pumped out, and towed to the Gosport Navy Yard. Work has also been commenced on the line-of-battle-ships Delaware and Columbus, and they will probably be raised, whole, in a few days. Preparations for raising the Cumberland, Congress, and Merrimac, are also actively in progress. The contractor, Mr. T. F. Wells, of Boston, is confident of his ability to raise the whole fleet—comprising thirteen war vessels—by the early part of next spring. A very large force of divers and machinery are employed on the work, and an investment of upward of $70,000 has been made in the enterprise.

AN OLD SOLDIER.—Thomas Stewart, aged 92 years, of East Newton, Ohio, was a private in the One Hundred and First Ohio Regiment, and took part in the battle of Perryville, where he was complimented for his bravery and soldierly bearing. He has four sons, two grandsons, and three sons-in-law at present in the army. He was born in 1770, at Litchfield, Conn., where his father now resides, aged 122 years.

PICKET GUARDS.—You read in the papers about "picket firing," about "capturing pickets," "driving in pickets," and so on. Perhaps you would like to know what the pickets of an army are. They are its sentinels, its watchmen, its look-outs, to give it early notice of danger. When an army encamps, the soldiers are tired and want to sleep. But if they should all lie down and go to sleep, an enemy might come and surprise and capture them. Hence, some are "detailed" from every company, and placed in charge of an officer, called the "officer of the guard." He takes them out from a quarter to half a mile, and places them where they can watch for the enemy without being seen. He is careful, also, to place them where they can readily run together and help each other if there is danger, or can send an alarm back, from one to another, to the officer or into camp. This is calling putting the guards in supporting distance. When the picket is posted by the officer, he is told to keep a constant look-out in every direction, and to listen for all unusual sounds. If a single man approaches, he is to challenge him, and if he cannot give the countersign, the picket is to call for the officer of the guard, and to keep the man at the point of the bayonet until the officer comes. If the man when challenged tries to run away, the picket is to shoot him, for he is probably a spy. If the picket sees or hears a large body of men approaching, he does not wait to challenge them, but fires his gun to give the alarm, and runs back. The other picket hearing his alarm falls back too, and form together under the officer of the guard. If the body of men coming seems to be more numerous than they, the guards fall back to the camp and rouse the whole army to resist an attack. This is called driving in the pickets. If a picket sleeps on his post, the enemy may capture him, and surprise the whole army. For this reason, sleeping while on guard is a great crime, according to the military law, and is punished with death. An army without pickets would be like a man blind and deaf on a railroad track. It would not know when danger was near, though liable to be overtaken by it at any moment.—Christian Herald.

THE MODEL OF MILAN CATHEDRAL.—A modest carpenter of Lecc, being, as every good Lombard must be, a great admirer of the cathedral, tried to copy some parts of it on a small scale. The work of pastime soon became the work of love, and after twenty years of constant toil he produced the complete model, which now adorns the Italian department of the International Exhibition. People of all classes flock around it every day; but, above all, it excites the wonder of the working man, who better understands what trials of patience and ingenuity it must have cost.

A FOREST OF NUTMEG-TREES.—Intelligence has been received by the Dutch Government, that Dr. Burstain while undertaking a scientific expedition to the Moluccs Islands and New Guinea, made an important discovery in the Island of Batjan. In his ascent of the chain of mountains known by the name of the Sahoolat range, which, it appears, had never been scientifically examined by any other European previously—he discovered, at a elevation of from 2,000 to 3,800 feet above the level of the sea, a very extensive forest of nutmeg-trees, laden with fruit of unusual size and excellent quality—in fact, far superior to any hitherto seen in the European markets. In consequence of the favorable nature of Dr. Burnstein's official communication, reporting that this nutmeg-tree forest extends over a very large tract of country, orders have been sent out from Holland to the governor-general to obtain a few picals of this produce as a sample, and send it to Holland, where its value will be practically tested by the price it fetches in the usual spice sales of the Netherlands Trading Company.

TREATMENT OF CROUP.

[illegible] an inflammation of the inner surface [illegible]pipe. Inflammation implies heat, and [illegible] must be subdued, or the patient will inevitably die. If prompt efforts are made to cool the parts in case of an attack of croup, relief will be as prompt as it is surprising and delightful. All know that hot water applied to a hot skin cools it, but all do not as well know and understand that cold water applied to an inflamed skin [illegible] certainly cool it off. Hence the application [illegible] water with linen cloths, or of almost boiling [illegible]ish woolen flannel are very efficient in [illegible] two or three pieces of [illegible] enough to cover

SEA-SICKNESS.

The July number of Silliman's Journal contains an article by R. M. Bache, of the United States Coast Survey, on the "Physiology of Sea Sickness." Prof. Bache asserts the theory that this distressing malady is not a disease of the stomach, but of the brain, and arises from the fact of the mind not being able to understand the varying motions of the boat as rapidly as the senses feel them, thus causing a conflict of impressions, and a consequent affection of the brain, which in turn deranges the nervous system and produces nausea.

The smell of food, close air, and similar matters, may aggravate the disease, but are not the primary cause of it. As soon as the mind is educated up to a point that enables it to conceive the idea of each motion as soon as it is felt, sea-sickness ceases.

Prof. Bache recommends persons going on board a vessel to eat an ordinary meal, and while on board to conform as closely as possible to their habits while on land. The deck is the best place to remain during sea-sickness, as the sight can there be best educated to the movements, and the fresh air has also a good effect. A steady gaze at the horizon enables the sufferer to quickly estimate the movements of the ship. If possible, choose a position amidships on deck, spread a mattress, lie down and look out at the horizon, and then all has been done that can be done to prevent or cure sea-sickness.

SALT FOR THE THROAT.

In these days, when diseases of the throat are so prevalent, and so many cases fatal, we feel it our duty to say a word in behalf of a simple, and what has been with us a most effective preventive, if not a positive cure for sore throat. For many years past, indeed we may say during the whole of a life of over forty years, we have been subject to a sore throat, and more particularly to a dry, hacking cough, which was not only distressing to ourselves, but to our friends and those with whom we were brought into business contact. Last fall we were induced to try what virtue there was in common salt. We commenced using it three times a day, morning, noon and night. We dissolved a large tablespoonful of pure table salt in about half a small tumbler full of cold water. With this we gargled the throat most thoroughly just before meal time. The result has been that during the winter we were not only free from the usual coughs and colds to which, as far as our memory extends, we have always been subject, but the dry, hacking cough has entirely disappeared. We attribute these satisfactory results to the salt gargle, and do most cordially recommend a trial of it to those of our readers who are subject to diseases of the throat. Many persons who have never tried the salt gargle have an impression that it is unpleasant. Such is not the case. On the contrary, it is pleasant, and after a few days' use, no person who loves a nice, clean mouth, and a first rate sharpener of the appetite, will abandon it.—Farmer and Gardener.

AN INSECT SAMSON.

Every one who has taken the common beetle in his hand knows that its limbs, if not remarkable for agility, are very powerful; but I was not prepared for so Samsonian a feat as that I have just witnessed. When the insect was brought to me, having no box immediately at hand, I was at a loss to know where to put it until I could kill it; but a quart bottle full of milk being on the table, I placed the beetle for the present under that, the hollow at the bottom allowing him room to stand upright. Presently to my surprise, the bottle began to move slowly, and glide along the smooth table, propelled by the muscular power of the imprisoned insect, and continued for some time to perambulate the surface, to the astonishment of all who witnessed it. The weight of the bottle and its contents could not have been less than three pounds and a half, while that of the beetle was about half an ounce; so that it readily moved a weight one hundred and twelve times exceeding its own. A better notion than figures can convey will be obtained of this fact by supposing a lad of fifteen to be imprisoned under the great bell of St. Paul's, which weighs 15,000 pounds, and to move it to and fro upon a smooth pavement by pushing within.—Prof. Goss.

WHY WASHINGTON IRVING DID NOT MARRY.

IT was while engaged in writing his "History of New York," that Irving, then a young man of twenty-six, was called to mourn the somewhat sudden death of Matilda Hoffman, whom he had hoped to call his wife. This young lady was the second daughter of Josiah Hoffman, and the sister of those two talented men, Chas. Fenno Hoffman, the poet, and Ogden Hoffman, the eloquent jurist. In her father's office, Washington Irving had essayed to study law, and with every prospect, if industrious and studious, of a partnership with Mr. Hoffman, as well as a matrimonial alliance with Matilda. These high hopes were disappointed by the decease of the young lady on the 20th of April, 1809, in the eighteenth year of her age.

There is a pathos about Irving's recital of the circumstances of her death, and of his own feelings, that is truly painful and tear-impelling. He says: "She was taken ill with a cold. Nothing was thought of it at first; but she grew rapidly worse, and fell into a consumption. I cannot tell you what I suffered. . . . I saw her fade rapidly away: beautiful and more beautiful and more angelic to the very last. I was often by her bedside; and in her wandering state of mind she would talk to me with a sweet, natural, and affecting eloquence, that was overpowering. I saw more of the beauty of her mind in that delirious state than I had ever known before. Her malady was rapid in its career, and hurried her off in two months. Her dying struggles were painful and protracted.

"For three days and nights I did not leave the house, and scarcely slept. I was by her when she died; all the family were assembled round her, some praying, others weeping, for she was adored by them all. I was the last one she looked upon. . . . I cannot tell you what a horrid state of mind I was in for a long time. I seemed to care for nothing; the world was a blank to me. I abandoned all thoughts of the law. I went into the country, but could not bear solitude, yet could not enjoy society. There was a dismal horror continually in my mind, that made me fear to be alone. I had often to get up in the night and seek the bed room of my brother, as if the having a human being by me would relieve me from the frightful gloom of my own thoughts.

"Months elapsed before my mind would resume any tone; but the despondency I had suffered for a long time in the course of this attachment, and the anguish that attended its catastrophe, seemed to give a turn to my whole character, and throw some clouds into my disposition, which have ever since hung about it. . . . I seemed to drift about without aim or object, at the mercy of every breeze; my heart wanted anchorage. I was naturally susceptible, and tried to form other attachments, but my heart would not hold on; it would continually recur to what it had lost; and whenever there was a pause in the hurry of novelty and excitement, I would sink into dismal dejection. For years I could not talk on the subject of this hopeless regret; I could not even mention her name, but her image was continually before me, and I dreamt of her incessantly."

Such was the language in which Irving poured forth his sorrows and sad memories, in a letter written many years ago to a lady who wondered at his celibacy, and expressed the wish to know why he had never married. Thirty years after her death, Irving was visiting Mr. Hoffman, and a grand-daughter in drawing out some sheets of music to be performed upon the piano, accidentally brought with them a piece of embroidery, which dropped upon the floor. "Washington," said Mr Hoffman, "this is a piece of poor Matilda's workmanship." His biographer describes the effect as electric. "He had been conversing in the sprightliest mood before," says Pierre M. Irving, "and he sank at once into utter silence, and in a few moments got up and left the house."—Boston Post.

POISONOUS COFFEE FOR SOLDIERS.

A friend writes from Vermont that the "Prepared Coffee," which is furnished extensively to the army, is a fruitful source of the sore sicknesses which are carrying so many thousands of strong men to the grave. He says that soldiers who have been in camp not over two months, and who were always healthy before, but then were taken down with typhoid fever, declare that it was the prepared coffee which produced the sickness. We name the matter in hopes that some skilful and humane surgeon or chemist in the army will look into it, and if the facts are so, take measures to have a stop put to this wholesale murder, and have the guilty punished.

GLIMPSES OF THE DUTCH.

THE DUTCHMAN'S PARADISE.

The paradise of a Dutchman is Brück. This is a village of about seven hundred inhabitants, an hour's journey or so north of Amsterdam. Cross the ferry in a short steamer, proceed for half an hour along the great Helder canal in a Trekschuit—a mode of conveyance, by the way, delightfully national in its order and peace—then hire a carriage, for which you must pay what is asked, or want it, and proceed leisurely along the banks of the canal for three or four miles, until you reach Brück. The peep one gets from the road across the country gives a perfect idea of Holland, which looks like the flat bottom of a boundless sea drained or draining off; the cattle in the fields, the scattered villages with their steeples, and tall trees here and there, with storks studying in earnest meditation on the margin of long ditches, all assure you that, in the mean time, the land has got the best of it. Yet it is impossible not to have damp, uneasy feelings, lest by some unnoticed power of evil—an unstopped leakage, dry rot in a sluice gate, or some mistake or other to which all things mundane are subject—a dyke should burst, and the whole Zuyder Zee pour itself like a deluge over the country, leaving you and your carriage out of sight of land.

Brück is well worth a peep. The only thing I had ever heard about it in history was the high state of its cleanliness, which had gone so far that the tails of the cows were suspended by cords lest they should be soiled by contact with the ground, and afterward be used to switch the pure and dappled sides of their possessors at any moment when the said possessors were suddenly thrown off their guard by the bite of some unmannerly insect.

I can certify to the reality of this caudal arrangement. It seemed, however, to be more cleanly than comfortable. The most ordinary sympathy with suffering caused an irritation in one's skin, as he saw the tail suddenly checked by the string, just when about to descend upon and sweep away a huge fly busy breakfasting about the backbone or shoulder-blade.

A model village preserved in a glass case could not be more free from dust, life, or human interest than this Brück. A small lake with innumerable small canals so interlace the cottages and streets, that it looks as if built upon a series of islands connected by bridges. The streets are all paved to the water's edge with small bricks. Each tree is bricked round to the trunk. Bricks keep down earth, grass, and damp, and are so thoroughly scoured and spotless that it is impossible to walk without an uneasy feeling of leaving a stain from some adhering dust of mother earth. The inhabitants (if there are any) seem to have resigned the town to sight-seekers. I am quite serious when I assure the reader that three travellers, at eleven o'clock in a fine summer forenoon, watched from a spot near the centre of the village, and did not for at least ten minutes see a living thing, except a cat stealing slowly towards a bird, which seemed to share the general repose. You ask, very naturally, What were the inhabitants about? I put this question at the time in a half-whisper, but there was no one to answer. All experienced, I think, a sort of superstitious awe from the unbroken quiet, so that the striking of a clock made us start. We visited the church-yard (naturally,) and found everything arranged with the same regard to order. There are no graves; but rows of small black wooden pegs driven into the ground, rising six inches above the grass, with a number on each, a little larger than those used for marking flowers, indicate the place where the late burghers of this Sleepy Hollow finally repose. I have never seen so prosaic and statistical a graveyard. Contrast with this the unfenced spot in a highland glen, its green grass mingling with the bracken and heather, and its well-marked mound, beside which the sheep and her lamb recline except when roused by the weeping mourner! To live in Brück, and be known after death, only as a number in its church-yard, would seem to be the perfection of order and the genius of contentment. To be mentioned by widow and children like an old account, a small sum, an item less from the total of the whole—as "our poor 46," or "our dear departed 154!" What an in memoriam! The intensity of the prose becomes pleasing to the fancy. I am not sure how far it would be unadvisable to send a colony of Irish peasantry and pigs to improve Brück!

CLEANLINESS OF THE DUTCH.

We cannot fail being struck by some features common to all Dutch cities. One, of course, is the cleanliness and order everywhere visible. The streets, with their small red brick pavement, are scrubbed like an in-door floor; and the fronts of the houses are all subjected to a constant watering from syringe pumps, like those used by our gardeners. The vessels in the canals are equally clean. They are ranged, as if by a theodolite, in straight lines, and what is wanting in elegance or variety of form—for they are all the same in rotundity of build, looking so like drawing-lessons—is made up in perfect cleanliness. Every bit of brass is beautifully scoured and polished. The sailors are constantly washing the oars or scrubbing the decks. At the stern may be seen small windows two feet square or so, with their white curtains tied up with ribbon, and probably a few small pots of flowers; and there live the whole family of the worthy masters of the Vrow Catherina. Most people are annoyed by the cleanliness of the Dutch. Scotchmen are always so. They cower, at least, praise it, but either express a mere sense of wonder at such a fuss being made about it, deplore the precious time wasted in scouring it, or detract from the supposed virtue, giving "no thanks" because of the abundance of water close at hand. I heard a Scotchman say, when treading carefully over a scrubbed street, "Did any one ever see the like of this? I do believe that the heaviest punishment which you could inflict upon these towns, would be to shake off the dust from your shoes and leave it with them!" This was pure envy. We must admit that Scotland and Ireland contain the filthiest villages in the world. "But that is the climate." No; look at Holland. Pray, my dear countryman, do not excuse such habits, but whenever you can, lecture your village neighbors on the blessings of water and the beauty of soap, and tell them about the cleanly Dutch.

A good story is told of Gottschalk during his late professional tour in Canada. At his concert in Montreal loud calls were made for "Dixie" as soon as he took his seat. For a moment the pianist was confused, but, soon collecting himself, he faced his audience and sat in silence for a few moments with folded arms. When the tumult ceased, he turned to his piano, and, as one of his companions says, played "Hail Columbia," the "Star-spangled Banner," and "Yankee Doodle," as they were never before played on that instrument. The audience were completely shamed, and, acknowledging the rebuke, were liberal in their applause during the rest of the evening. It may not be generally known that Gottschalk is a native of New Orleans, and for this exhibition of his patriotism he should have full credit.

THE BIBLE IN FORMING CHARACTER.

An English barrister, who was accustomed to train students for the practice of law, and who was not himself a religious man, was once asked why he put students, from the very first, to the study and analysis of the most difficult parts of the sacred Scriptures? "Because," said he, "there is nothing like it, in any language, for the development of mind and character."

ITEMS.

A living male gorilla has been brought to Liverpool. He appears quite docile, and amuses himself by dancing around the room at Mr. Newby's, the eminent naturalist, and attempting to sew pieces of blankets together. His skin is of an olive color, and as he is yet very young, only slightly covered with hair. He is remarkably fond of good living. Young Mr. Gorilla is about three feet and a half in height, very broad and thick across the chest, while his arms and legs are long and sinewy, displaying great strength. He has a great habit of putting his feet into any stray boots or shoes which may be lying about, and when he is discovered in his freaks, he invariably runs for protection to any lady who may be present. His face, unlike the generally entertained opinion, is not fierce or repulsive-looking, although the jaws are both broad and heavy.

THE question, "What becomes of all the pins?" is partly answered by one of the papers in Birmingham, England. An old sewer in that city, just opened for repairs for the first time in many years, was found to be paved with a deposit of millions of pins, compacted into a mass as hard as the slag from the blast-furnace. Every sewered town would probably furnish a similar spectacle.

LONDON will be riddled by pneumatic pipes shortly, as well as underground railways. The first pipe for blowing along letters at the rate of fourteen miles an hour is laid on between the North-Western railway terminus and the district post-office of that locality. It will be at work within a month, and then will be continued to the General Post-office, doubtless spreading with rapidity all over London.

A very happy comment on the annihilation of time and space by locomotive means of travel was made by a little girl who had ridden fifty miles in a railroad train, thus took a coach to her uncle's house, some five miles farther, and was asked on her arrival if she came by the cars. "We came a little way in the cars, and then all the rest of the way in a carriage."

IT is said that Rossini is busy with a composition which is to reproduce all the hideous noises with which he is plagued by the railway that passes close by his villa at Passy. The roaring, puffing, snorting, whistling, of the engines, the ringing of the bells, the shrieking of the conductors and passengers—in short, the whole chorivari of the iron rail is embodied in it, as Paris papers say, with great humor.

Family Circle.

NELLIE.

Our Nellie is a remarkably interesting child. Strangers call her beautiful, because she has red lips, pink cheeks, the most laughing blue eyes you ever saw, shaded by long dark lashes, and her hair is just a profusion of sunny curls. To me children are always the most interesting beings in the world, and there is nothing that I would not do for a sweet-faced, gentle little girl:—I say sweet-faced, for I think that children's faces are an index of the heart, and an unselfish little soul is sure to leave an impress of itself upon the face. So when Nellie is loving and generous, she is a priceless household treasure, and it is our delight to watch the unfoldings of the blossom which God has given us, and to guard and shield it from chilling, wintry winds. Still she is the cause of many a heartache, for she is a faulty little specimen of humanity, and there have been times when it seemed that our only hope of Nellie lay in that God had made the hearts of children naturally plastic, and susceptible to teaching and impression. Besides, we have noted, and with gladness, that whenever Nellie has been able herself to achieve a victory over some naughty little propensity, it always leaves a good and lasting impression. It has led me to believe with Thomas De Quincey, that children have "a specific power of contemplating the truth," and it is clear to me as to him, that in those paths "which require no knowledge of the world to unravel, they tread more firmly than men." I am going to tell you, now something about Nellie:—a little thing is itself, but quite a great thing for a five year-old girl.

One day, Nellie was sitting in the window stringing beads. She had a box full of them, and such treasures in the way of beads do not fall to the lot of many little girls. There were huge milk-white ones, that I verily believe were carved from a cow's horn, while others were pure and delicate as a pearl. There were black ones of every imaginable shape and size, some of which I knew to be "real jets;" then there were amber-hued circlets, chased miniature globes of emerald green, tiny gilded beads, so small that they looked like a heap of golden mustard-seed; azure-colored ones of various kinds, some as rarely blue as Nellie's eyes; others were as red as rubies, and as precious; besides piles of purple ones, yellow, and orange, and stone colour, and gray—in short, you would have thought that everything that ever was invented in the shape of a bead was represented in Nellie's box.

If you had seen her as she looked that afternoon, sitting in the sunlighted window, her face wrought into an earnest intent upon her work, you would have thought it a pleasant picture to look upon. The oft-quoted line of Keats came into my mind: "A thing of beauty is a joy forever;" and at the same time I remembered that a "thing of beauty" is not a "joy," when there is anything ugly or evil to mar or blemish it. And yet I thought she never looked so sweetly nor seemed so dear, as when, in a moment afterwards, she held up to my view a string upon which she had enshrined a ruby-colored bead in the midst of amber and gold colored ones of gradated sizes.

"I am making mamma a bracelet," she whispered, impressively, "but you must be very private about it, for it is to be a Christmas present," and down went the curly head again, and away flew the busy little fingers.

"Nellie," said I, "Mary Atkins is coming in to see you."

Mary is the only child of her mother, and she a widow. Our pleasant mansion upon the top of the hill, and Mrs. Atkins' tenement at the foot, are the only dwellings in sight of each other, so the two children are thrown much together. But Mary is different from Nellie. She is pale-faced, and, although she owns a pair of great wondering eyes, she is undemonstrative in her ways, and this afternoon she wore a calico dress, which, although clean, looked cold and meager by the side of Nellie's warm-colored wool-delaine. She did just what you would have thought—sat down by Nellie in her quiet way, and, without speaking, watched the bead-stringing with evident interest.

"Where did you get them?" she asked at last.

"My uncle sent them to me from New York," replied Nellie, with a toss of her curls. "He is a wholesale bead-merchant there, and has the monopoly of the trade."

Nellie had heard some one say this before: besides, she has a proclivity for the use of long words whenever she feels in a haughty humor.

"What will you ever do with so many?" asked Mary again.

"Oh, I shall find sufficient use for them," was the reply, with another toss of the head.

Her mother, who had come in, probably thought it a suitable time to break in upon Nellie's selfishness, for she selected a needle and thread from her work-basket, and said to Mary, "Here is a needle and thread for you, Nellie has so many beads that she will be glad to give you some; and you can have a nice time together."

But Mary hesitated, for a strange light came into Nellie's eyes, and her face was working like a small thunder cloud.

"Nellie!" said her mother, in a tone of both surprise and reproof.

Like a flash, the box of beads was thrown violently into Mary's lap, whence they rolled, hither and thither, over the carpet.

"She may have them all!" screamed Nellie. "Every one of my beautiful beads that Uncle James sent me from New York!" and stamping and screaming in her wrath, Nellie hid her face in the corner, while Mary's eyes only looked the more wondering, as with characteristic quietness she gathered up the various colored beauties, and deliberately walked home.

When Nellie's paroxysm had subsided, her mother took her, still sobbing, into her lap.

"Poor Nellie!" she said, "I do not wonder she sobs. Mamma is ready to cry too."

This took the child's attention! it was a phenomenon she never yet had witnessed.

"Mamma is ready to cry because she is so sorry and so very much ashamed. Mary has no uncle to send her pretty things from New York, and I know Uncle James would be sadly shocked if he knew Nellie was so selfish that she could not use a little self-denial, enough to make another little girl happy."

That night, when Nellie was being undressed, she looked up into my face, and in a little earnest way, that both charmed and surprised me, said, "What is self-denial?"

"Self-denial," said I, "is when a little girl gives up her own pleasure for the sake of making another happy."

"Would to be self-denial," she asked, "for me to give all my beads to Mary Atkins?"

"No, I don't think Mary would be any happier to take them all. I do not think Mary is selfish enough for that."

"Would it be self-denial to give her half?"

"Do you think it would?" said I.

She did not reply to my question, but looked up in her witching way, and said, "Do you use self-denial?"

"Yes," said I, "very often."

"Well, but did you when you were a little girl?"

"I am not sure;—I cannot remember."

"I guess you didn't," said she, "unless they made you do it."

About midnight I was awakened by Nellie, who said, "You know I've got eight rubies; would two be enough to give Mary Atkins for self-denial?"

"I think it would," said I.

"That would be enough for two bracelets, you know."

"Yes," said I, "I think it would be enough to give Mary; but I would go to sleep now, and not think of it until morning."

In the morning she awoke, happy as ever, until the sight of the box on the mantel shelf brought back the weighty subject.

"Oh dear," said she, impatiently, "I've got to use self-denial, and give some of my beads to Mary Atkins!"

"I should think you would do so, by all means," said her mother. "I do not see how you can atone for your behaviour yesterday in any other way."

Not long afterwards, I heard her in another room talking to herself in this way:

"Oh, you beautiful, beautiful beads. I do not want to give you away one bit! But you have so many," she continued in a tone as if another person was speaking. "I know it, and I suppose I can get more from Uncle James; but then I don't admire self-denial!"

Then all was silent; and when I went in where she was, she had assorted the beads, taking two of the "rubies," and about the same proportion of others she thought most valuable, and stood regarding them with quivering lip and chin. This was the crisis, the trial of victory, and I came to the rescue.

"That is enough," said I, "I don't think you can spare any more. I will do them up for you, and you may get your new hood and go and carry them to her."

She obeyed, without hesitation, and I saw her walking down the hill with the air of one relieved of a burden. It was not long, however, before she came back, flushed and excited.

"Mary Atkins," said she, "would not let me use self-denial! She said I had no business to get so angry, and she did not want my old beads. I guess she did, though!" continued Nellie. "I guess she told her mother, and her mother wouldn't let her!"

"Do you want her to have them?" said Nellie's mother.

"Why, yes, mamma: I want to give them to her."

"Shall I send for Mary to come up here?"

"Oh yes," said Nellie, evidently delighted at the prospect of a playmate.

A servant was despatched for Mary, who soon made her appearance; and the children spent one of the happiest of days, and exhausted the whole bead vocabulary in the manufacture of bracelets, necklaces, and ear-rings, without number. This happened three months ago, and that Nellie has not yet forgotten her lesson of self-denial is evident from the lectures she delivers upon the subject daily. If her dolls and kitten are not self-denying in their relations to each other, it is not from any lack of teaching from Nellie.—Independent.

HOPE.

Where is last summer? It is gone, and if a man were now to go North, every single latitude that he trod would be a latitude toward winter and toward death apparently. Where is the grass that a thousand cattle browsed upon, on as many hills? It is withered and faded. Where are the million flowers that grow in gardens, that twine along hedges, and that fill the very woods themselves with sweet odors? Not one is to be found. Where are the fruits, the nuts, and the myriad forms of growth in which the whole North abounded? They are all gone. In summer dead, then? Summer is not dead, nor hurt. Is vegetation dead? No, that is not dead: it sleepeth. The roots are safe enough. Have the leaves forsaken the branch? They have fallen, wavering in the air; but before they fell, did not every leaf hang out the colors of hope? Did they not for weeks say, "I go in glory to return in victory?" Come, then, winter! Let January and February do their worst. It will not be long before March will thunder the notes of triumph. It is as certain that there will be a spring as that there has been an autumn. And in this everlasting conflict, year in and year out, through all our latitudes, have we not, if we could read it, a great moral exemplar in the fact that autumn consumes, and spring recreates; and that though every year seems to come to death, every year is victorious? Grass and flower and leaf rise up from the grave of winter.

Beecher in Independent.

"PHILOPENA" IN GERMANY.

When a couple meet after having eaten philopena together, no advantage is taken of the other, until one of them pronounces the word "philopena." This is the warning that now the sport is to begin. Let us suppose that a gentleman calls upon a lady: she invites him to walk in, and at the same time speaks the talismanic word. If he accepts the offer to walk in, he is lost, unless she removes the ban by telling him to go away.

If she tells him to take off his hat, he must resolutely keep it on; if to be seated, he must stand; or if at the table she should hand him any article which he accepts, she wins the forfeit. At the same time he is watching to get her off her guard—for the first acceptance of any offer from the other ends the game. Both are constantly exercising their wits to prevent being caught, and the sports often goes on all the evening.

Perhaps the gentleman brings a little present and says:

"Knowing that I shall lose my philopena, have brought it along. Here it is."

If she is caught off her guard by this smooth speech, she loses—for he immediately claims forfeit. If neither wins at the first meeting, the sport is continued on the second; and it may happen that half a dozen parties meet at the same time, all anxious to win of their philopena partners, so that the scene often becomes ludicrous and amusing.

Advertisements

TO THE READERS OF THE [illegible] STRUCTO[illegible]

A CAR[illegible]

It having been said to an impossibility [illegible] CUSTOMER-MADE CLOTHING AT MOD[illegible] finding that many gentlemen would prefer [illegible] TO ORDER, if they could secure at the same time CLASS STYLES, and at REALLY REASONA[illegible] have, at the earnest solicitation of our patrons, org[illegible] section with our extensive Ready-Made Sales-Rooms, a complete CUSTOMER DEPARTMENT, in which the prominent features are, 1st. Fine and Medium Material in making in First Class Styles; 2d. Unexceptionable Fitting Garments; 3d. PRICES FAR LOWER THAN HAS BEEN CUSTOMARY; 4th. A corps of the most talented cutters in this country. An extensive assortment of the choicest imported and domestic fabrics from the New York and Philadelphia markets, suitable for Coats, Pants, and Vests, always on hand.

In our Ready Made Sales-Rooms can always be found every variety and style of well made fashionable clothing. Spring stock now ready. PRICES MODERATE.

☞ A visit is solicited.

WANAMAKER & BROWN,
MERCHANT TAILORS AND CLOTHIERS,
"OAK HALL,"
S. E. Corner SIXTH AND MARKET STREETS.
ap. 23-6m JAMES FERGUSON, Salesman.

☞ ESTABLISHED IN 1796. ☜
McALLISTER AND BROTHER,
OPTICIANS,
No. 728 Chestnut Street,
PHILADELPHIA,
Nearly Opposite Masonic Hall,
(Lately removed from the Old Stand, Chestnut St., above Second.)
Spectacles, Mathematical Instruments, Spy-Glasses, Philosophical Apparatus, Opera Glasses, Thermometers, Microscopes, and Microscopic Objects, Tape Measures, Platina Points, Magic Lanterns, Stereoscopes and Stereoscopic Pictures. By Wholesale and Retail.
☞ Our priced and illustrated Catalogue furnished on application, and sent by Mail, Free of Charge. 9yr

PURE WHOLESOME BREAD.
THE UNFERMENTED BREAD
is the most pure, wholesome and nutritious BREAD that can be used.
Its superior quality is certified by several hundred of our most prominent physicians, who use it exclusively.
Families supplied in all parts of the city, and the Bread is kept by all prominent grocers.
W. R. CAMP, Exclusive Manufacturer,
Corner of Broad and Buttonwood Sts.
6m—1y.

PIANOS & MELODEONS.
The largest, most elegant, and cheapest stock in America, and on the most favorable terms.
All instruments sold subject to approval—guaranteed for ten years.
J. E. GOULD,
7th and Chestnut Sts., Philadelphia.

KURTZ'S CHURCH HISTORY,
NOW COMPLETE.
LINDSAY & BLAKISTON, PHILADELPHIA,
HAVE NOW READY
A TEXT-BOOK OF CHURCH HISTORY,
By John Henry Kurtz,
Professor of Theology in the University of Dorpat.
COMPLETE IN TWO VOLUMES:
VOLUME I—To the Reformation. VOLUME II—From the Reformation.
PRICE $3.00.
"It is perhaps the best manual extant on this subject, in any language; and better adapted than any other to the tastes and habits of mind of American students. It is faithful, terse, graphic, and is contained within moderate limits."—Baltimore Amer.
"It is an admirable work of reference. The history is extremely condensed, and a vast amount of information is given in the fewest possible words. It is particularly full in accounts of the development of theological doctrines, and of the operation of political influences on the history of the Church. The classification and arrangements are excellent, the reference to authorities are everywhere abundant, and the leading outlines of the history are presented with great clearness."—New Englander.
L. & B. ALSO PUBLISH
KURTZ'S MANUAL OF SACRED HISTORY. A Guide to the Divine Plan of Salvation, according to its Historical Development. Seventh American edition. In one vol. Price $1.25
This admirable Manual of Sacred History, translated by Dr. Schaeffer, constitutes a rich contribution to our theological literature. It has been favorably received by Christians of all denominations.
KURTZ'S BIBLE AND ASTRONOMY. An Exposition of Biblical Cosmology and its relation to Natural Science. Second edition,.....Price $1.25
KURTZ'S HISTORY OF THE OLD COVENANT. 2 vols., octavo,.....Price 3.00
HERZOG'S ENCYCLOPEDIA OF PROTESTANT THEOLOGICAL AND ECCLESIASTICAL LITERATURE. In two vols. Royal Octavo,.....Price 6.00
LINDSAY & BLAKISTON, Publishers,
25 South Sixth St., above Chestnut, Philadelphia.
ob15

SABBATH-SCHOOL LIBRARIES.
BEAUTIFUL, NEW AND SAFE BOOKS
AT LOW PRICES,
RECENTLY PUBLISHED FOR LIBRARIES.
PICTORIAL CATALOGUES MAILED FREE TO SUPERINTENDENTS AND OTHERS.
These books are filled with the most interesting matter, written with great care, and beautifully illustrated. Calculated not simply to amuse, but so to instruct and interest the children that they may become children of God.
ALSO, a choice selection of books, beautifully bound in Scarlet covers, for the ARMY AND NAVY.
All the publications of the American Tract Society, instituted at Boston in 1816, may be found at
ALL THE PROMINENT BOOK-STORES IN PHILADELPHIA
AND AT
JOHN O. BROUGHTON'S,
13 Bible House, New York City.
NICHOLSON BROUGHTON, Jr.,
Depository, 28 Cornhill, Boston
Jan22-9mo

JOHN COCHRAN & CO.,
Importers and Jobbers of
Hosiery, Gloves and Fancy Dry Goods,
No. 12 NORTH FOURTH ST., ABOVE MARKET,
PHILADELPHIA.
Ribbons and White Goods, Undershirts and Drawers, Embroideries and Handkerchiefs, Watches and Jewelry, Combs, Brushes, &c.

Dr. J. GOODWILLIE,
DENTIST,
316 South Eleventh Street, below Spruce,
PHILADELPHIA.

1862. 1862.
THE PENNSYLVANIA CENTRAL RAILROAD.
THE GREAT DOUBLE TRACK ROUTE.
THE CAPACITY OF THE ROAD IS NOW EQUAL TO ANY IN THE COUNTRY.
THE GREAT SHORT LINE TO THE WEST.
The Express mail Daily. Mail and Fast Line, Sabbath excepted.
Mail Train leaves Philadelphia at.....8.00 A. M.
Fast Line " " .....11.30 A. M.
Harrisburg Train " " .....10.45 P. M.
Parkesburg Accommodation leaves Philadelphia at.....12.30 P. M.
Harrisburg " " " .....2.20 P. M.
Lancaster " " " .....4.00 P. M.
Trains for West Chester at 9 A. M., at 12.30 noon, and at 4 P. M.
Passengers for Sunbury, Williamsport, Elmira, Buffalo, Niagara Falls, and Intermediate points, leaving Philadelphia at 9 A. M. and 2.20 P. M., go directly through.
For further information, apply at the Passenger Station, S. E. cor. of Kensington and Market Streets.

PITTSBURG, FORT WAYNE & CHICAGO RAILWAY,
TO ALL POINTS IN THE WEST, SOUTH-WEST, AND NORTH-WEST,
In direct connection with the Pennsylvania Central Railroad.
SUMMER ARRANGEMENT,
Commencing May 5th, 1862.
TIME TO CINCINNATI AS QUICK,